BLACKSBURG, Va. — Still grieving and increasingly wary of the media spotlight, Virginia Tech students returned to their beleaguered campus Sunday, preparing to salvage the final weeks of a semester eclipsed by violence.

The scene on campus resembled move-in day in late summer, with parents helping their children carry suitcases into dormitories. There were tears and hugs goodbye. But instead of excitement for the year ahead, there was simply determination to endure and regroup in the fall.

When classes resume Monday, the university will give students three choices: They can continue their studies through the end of the semester next week, take a grade based on what they have done so far, or withdraw from a course without penalty.

"I want to go back. It's just really strange to just stop going," said Paul Deyerle, a sophomore from Roanoke who was helping a friend move belongings from the dormitory where another close friend, Ryan Clark, was among those killed in the worst shooting massacre in modern U.S. history.

A number of students living in West Ambler Johnston Hall have asked to be relocated elsewhere.

"I need to keep going back," Deyerle said, struggling for words. "It seems like every other facet of my life is different now, so I have to."

A number of students said they had been drawn to the comforts of home immediately after the shooting, but now were drawn back to the tight-knit Virginia Tech community.

"When we hit Route 460 and we could see the campus, we both started crying," said sophomore Ashleigh Shifflett, eating a picnic lunch with her sister Regan near memorials to the victims on the central campus lawn. "I was happy to see my family, but I felt like I needed to be here, and when I came back here, it was like I'm home."

Virginia Tech officials say their top priority is the victims' families, and they have given each of them a private e-mail address and direct phone number for President Charles Steger.

Virginia Tech University President Charles Steger gestures while talking with students on the campus in Blacksburg, Va., yesterday. Today is the first day classes resume after a student opened fire and killed 32 people last Monday.

Many students returned to the Virginia Tech campus this weekend to visit memorials to the victims and sign posters of remembrance.

Administrators have canceled big events such as the spring football game and postponed a fund-raising campaign. The goal is to begin restarting academic life but without pushing the university's 26,000 students too hard.

"I don't know what else you could do," said John Rossi, chairman of the math department. "A student, I don't know how much they're going to be able to learn at this point. Maybe some can. But I think some students are just not going to be able to come, so why would you penalize them? There's going to be some faculty dealing with that, too."

Freshman Brittany Gambardella, who was asleep on the sixth floor of West Ambler Johnston when the rampage began two floors below, was not sure what, if any, work she would be doing the rest of the year. But that wasn't why she returned to campus from her home in Midlothian.

"I want to be back this week even if I don't take my exams, just to be with people," Gambardella said. "Then you go home, and you end the year on a good note."

Many returning students stopped by the campus lawn to visit memorials to the victims and sign posters of remembrance.

A number attended religious services and were seen heading in and out of counseling centers.

State police plan to maintain a security presence on campus at least through Monday.

Students say they welcome the outpouring of support they have received, but they have grown noticeably weary of the news media. The Student Government Association asked reporters to leave by 5 a.m. Monday, before classes begin.

"Our students are ready to start moving forward, and the best we can do that is to get the campus back to normal," Liz Hart, director of public relations for the SGA, said in a telephone interview. Students don't want "anything external remind to us it will be a difficult road. We know that."

There are other tough decisions sleepless university officials have not had time to consider, such as what to do with Norris Hall, the blood-soaked building where 31 people died, including Cho.

There is also the question of how many students will return next fall. Officials acknowledge they have received some inquiries about transferring, but it's unclear how many will do so. They are urging students not to rush into decisions.

Students interviewed by The Associated Press on campus in recent days say they and everyone they know intends to return.

"This is the best school around," said Steven Mason, a senior from Appomattox. "As far I'm concerned, they did everything they could."

Said Cheryl Gambardella, Brittany Gambardella's mother, as she helped her daughter unload the car: "We love this school. You always have concerns, but not because it's Virginia Tech. It could happen in a shopping mall."

Ed Spencer, the associate vice president of student affairs and husband of the admissions director, said the university was heartened that one alumnus showed up at the admissions office before it opened last Tuesday to hand deliver the $400 deposit for his son to enroll next fall.

Hart, the student government official, said she expected few to leave.

"We're not leaving," she said. "This is where we want to be. There's a greater sense of loyalty. There's more Hokie pride than ever."

Get Ready to Celebrate!
Israel Independence Day 2007
Amherst Town Common

Rail Location: Amherst High school
Monday, Apr. 23, 2007
5-8 pm
Large free concert
Israeli food with a student discount
Bedouin Tent with hookahs and backgammon
Raffle Prizes including first prize FREE flight to Israel
...and much more!

THIS EVENT IS MADE POSSIBLE IN PART BY A GRANT FROM COMBINED JEWISH PHILANTHROPIES IACT INITIATIVE
MAJOR FUNDING IS PROVIDED BY THE JEWISH ENDOWMENT FOUNDATION OF WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS, A COMMITTEE OF THE JEWISH FEDERATION OF WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS
SPONSORED IN PART BY ISRAEL ON CAMPUS COALITION ISRAEL ACTION GRANT PROJECT AND SUPPORTED BY THE AVI CHAI FOUNDATION, THE CHARLES AND LYNN SCHUSTERMAN FAMILY FOUNDATION AND MORRIS B. SQUIRE
The Upper Pioneer Valley Yom Ha'atzmaut Committee includes representatives from Hadassah, UMass Hillel, Smith College Hillel, Amherst College Hillel, Mt. Holyoke College Jewish Student Union, Hampshire College Hillel, UMass Student Alliance for Israel, UMass Jewish Student Union, Hemagentaim, Congregation B'nai Israel, Congregation Sons of Zion, Jewish Community of Amherst, Temple Israel, Congregation Rodphey Sholom, Beit Ahavah, Lander-Grinspoon Academy, Chabad and Jewish Philanthropies of Jewish Federation of Western Massachusetts

Virginia Tech school newspaper focuses on victims, not shooter around the nation sent various things to the school expressing their concern. Currently, Planet Blacksburg features a photo gallery containing shots from various vigils held at different colleges and universities around the nation.

MEDIA from page 1

The Web site lists over 200 universities in the United States and Canada that have formally expressed their sympathy to Virginia Tech – including UMass. Chancellor John Lombardi sent a letter to the VT community offering the thoughts and prayers of the UMass student body, faculty and administration on April 18.

The most touching display found on the Web site was that from the University of Virginia. The school put aside the regional rivalry to support its fellow Virginia school. A slideshow depicts several candlelight vigils held by UVA students and students painting a bridge on their Charlottesville, Va., campus maroon and orange to honor the VT students.

Thomas commented that the student body was somewhat displeased with the initial reaction of the school's administration, but also said she would hesitate to print any pieces criticizing the university for its response.

The staff at Planet Blacksburg did, however, choose to publish a letter from the sister of the shooter. In the letter, she issues an apology to the students at Virginia Tech and the families of the victims. Seventeen students and faculty commented on the Web site accepting her apologies.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

Five Colleges and community run for cancer patients where everyone gathers in a moment of silence along the track to remember those who were lost to cancer.

RFL from page 1

The support for Relay For Life has catapulted the charity into one of the most successful and prominent organizations in the country. This year alone Relay For Life will hold 5,000 events in communities across the United States – 206 in New England alone. The money raised from the events will benefit programs sponsored by the American Cancer Society, such as Road to Recovery, which provides free transportation to cancer treatment for patients; Reach to Recovery, which match newly diagnosed breast cancer patients with survivors for knowledge and support; and Look Good, Feel Better, which helps patients overcome the side effects that treatment can have on their appearance.

Relay For Life also sponsors summer camps for children with cancer, and has helped develop a research program that has added to nearly every cancer breakthrough from which 38 Nobel Prize winners were birthed. With such a great cause it's no wonder members of the Amherst community were all too happy to participate in the event.

They helped raise the total of the charity's donations to $142,379.

Relay For Life offers the opportunity for communities to unite and celebrate life, working together towards a cancer free future. People were all too willing to volunteer and donate funds for efforts to help the American Cancer Society, hoping for better opportunities for those affected by cancer and a positive outlook for a future without the destructive disease.

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu.

Suicide Prevention Conference to be held fessional staff of 15 mental health care providers is included in the division, ready to help the needs of students while maintaining confidentiality.

UHS from page 1

Mental Health Services also hopes that students who know a friend or classmate with depression issues will contact UHS.

"If a student has a significant concern about a friend or other student there are a variety of options," said Rockland-Miller. "First would be to attempt to talk with them about it in a respectful and open manner. If the student does not want to follow-up with mental health or other support service that is their right; sometimes such a talk can still be helpful in starting a process of thinking about future possibilities."

Rockland-Miller also notes that residence life staff and other university staff are available to discuss situations for students living on and off campus. And in the worst case, if there remains a significant concern about an individual, students can discuss the issue with a clinician at the mental health department for options for response.

For students who feel they're undergoing depression or have friends they feel need help, the Massachusetts Department of Public Health and the Massachusetts Department of Mental Health will be hosting the 6th Annual Massachusetts Suicide Prevention Conference, Building Resiliency: Suicide Prevention Across the Life Span.

This two-day conference, to be held at the Sturbridge Hotel and Conference Center on May 15 and May 16, is sponsored by the Suicide Prevention Resource Center (SPRC). The conference will consist of over 30 suicide prevention workshops designed to assist a broad range of components, including public and mental health professionals, community organizations, school personnel, law enforcement and special populations advocates.

The conference will also feature a full day of workshops focused on suicide prevention and mental health promotion in college and university settings, during which three campus grantees will present on the process of developing suicide prevention programs on campus. The schools chosen are Massachusetts Maritime Academy, Worcester Polytechnic Institute and UMass.

Depression, as a wide-spread illness that can invade anyone of any age, is a treatable disorder. With the right options of help, someone who feels depressed can help themselves and prevent any future dangerous situations.

For more information on UMass Mental Health Services, go to http://www.umass.edu/uhs/mentalhealth/services/#0 or call 413-545-2337.

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury@student.umass.edu

Professor discusses future of Social Security accounts according to the net income of individuals.

POLLIN from page 1

But the president's plan backfired because of the issue of transition. New private accounts would neglect the current retired population and the government would have to borrow more money to care for them – one way higher payroll taxes would affect the public. The only way for the government to replenish the lack of funds is through taxing and bonds.

The current Social Security system has been favored since its creation, and there seems to be no desire among the American people to change it. It was meant to assist the nation's elders and has successfully kept families out of poverty.

"The basic idea and track record of the program has been incredibly successful," explained Pollin.

Pollin said that in order to consider the options to prevent this deficit, we must first address how serious the problem is.

Job creation is the first step to relieving the demand for higher Social Security taxes, Pollin said. Since 40 percent of new jobs require at least a bachelor's degree and outsourcing is becoming more popular with the growth of globalization, the expansion of the job market would supply a great deal of employment opportunity.

"People are not the problem," said Pollin.

Immigration also has a major impact on the Social Security issue. Widening the American workforce through immigration would keep payroll tax rates down.

"A relatively small increase in the population would even out the ratio of retirees to employees," said Pollin. "With this slight increase in population there will be no need to increase payroll taxes and workers will be able to keep more of their money."

But Americans are divided on the immigration issue. Some want them gone but many need them to stay. But according to Pollin, immigrants contribute so much to the nation's economy that finding and deporting them would do more harm than good.

Job creation has been a struggle in finding the solution to the Social Security deficit the nation is anticipating. While outsourcing is increasing and will someday affect between 28-42 million imperswal service jobs (jobs that don't require face-to-face contact with consumers), there are ways to even out the employment gap.

"Employment creation [needs to] become a fundamental centerpiece of public policy of the U.S," said Pollin. "Focusing on environmental concerns could lead to the job creation that our country needs."

Pollin explained that our country needs to begin with the promotion of more high-quality service jobs. "Supporting union organizing and allied political efforts to convert what are now low-quality personal service jobs (such as hotel restaurant airport jobs) into decent and remunerative ones [will help the economy]."

"We need to work equally aggressively to end our dependence on fossil fuels as an energy supply," Pollin said. "The transformation to a renewable energy-based economy can become a formidable force for job creation." He explained that jobs like industrial research or design, manufacturing, construction and transportation would surface in the attempt to find alternatives to fossil fuels.

"There are some obvious examples of major job creation projects in the area of energy conservation," explained Pollin, "like creating light-rail systems in urban areas, improving home insulation systems, and the transformation of our existing housing stock from single-home to community-based heating-and-cooling systems."

Pollin believes that addressing these concerns will not only greatly benefit the environment, but they can also decrease the deficit in Social Security and prevent a payroll tax increase.

Lauren Modisette can be reached at lmodisett@student.umass.edu.

Georgia school holds first integrated prom

BY GREG BLUESTEIN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ASHBURN, Ga. — For the first time, the faces of students at the Turner County High School prom were both white and black.

Each year, in spite of integration, the school's white students had raised money for their own unofficial prom and black students did the same to throw their own separate party, an annual ritual that divided the southern Georgia peanut-farming county anew each spring.

That all changed Saturday as horse-drawn carriages and stretch limousines carried young couples around the downtown streets to a single prom.

"I couldn't be more proud of these young people," said Ray Jordan, the county's school superintendent. "The changes needed to come from the student body."

Stone spent $5,000 of his discretionary fund to put together the county's first school-sponsored prom. Another $5,000 came from supporters after news stories about the plan spread across the nation.

"Tonight, it's a fresh start," said James Hall, the black senior class president who led the charge for the integrated prom.

The rural county seat of 4,000 people has been in need of uplifting news. Although a candy packaging plant employs hundreds, as does the up-and-down peanut industry, many of the better paying jobs are in larger towns in the region. The high school is one of the few things that give Ashburn a sense of community.

UMass alumni panel to speak on career successes, experiences of several disasters including Hurricane Katrina.

SERIES from page 1

The panel also includes Aaron Saykin, a 2001 graduate working as a consumer reporter for WTAE Channel 4 Action News out of Pittsburgh. Saykin has received multiple Associated Press and best of Gannett Awards for his reporting, such as the 2002 AP award for feature reporting while working in North Carolina. Recently Saykin's profile of "J-Mac," the Rochester, N.Y., high-school student with autism who scored 20 points in four minutes after being allowed to play for his school's varsity basketball team received him a 2006 Emmy Award.

The last member of the panel, Maria Sacchetti '91, has been working as an education reporter for the Boston Globe since October 2004. During her undergraduate studies at UMass, Sacchetti wrote for The Daily Collegian and continued on to earn a master's degree in Latin American studies from the University of Texas, Austin. Sacchetti's experience prior to working for the Globe includes reporting out of Orange Country, Calif., Puerto Rico, Costa Rica, and Colombia.

The journalism department's Lecture Series is funded by David '79, and Teena Kantor. The event is free and open to the public.

Vincent Capone can be reached at vcapone@student.umass.edu

GIVE BLOOD TODAY AND RECEIVE A FREE MOVIE PASS!

Tuesday April 24th
American Red Cross
Campus Center Room 174
10 AM - 4 PM
Kennedy Dorm in Southwest
12th floor lounge
2 PM - 8 PM
*POSITIVE ID REQUIRED COLLEGE ID ACCEPTED

As a special Thank you each presenting donor will receive a
FREE Cinemark Theaters MOVIE PASS
to the Hadley Cinemark

Appointments are encouraged and can be made online at www.givelife.org
or by calling
1-800-GIVE LIFE
Kennedy residents can also sign up in the cluster office

Guest Chef Series
Chef Iliana de la Vega presents...
Regional Mexican Oaxaca Cuisine

Chefowner of El Naranjo, a highly acclaimed restaurant in the city of Oaxaca in southern Mexico

You don't have to head south of the border to enjoy great Mexican food.

MENU
Botanas (Appetizers):
Quesadillas de papa con chile poblano
Salsa verde con aguacate
Roasted tomato, jalapeno salsa
Tacos de pollo (fritos)

Sopas (Soup):
Crema de elote y pobllanos

Fuertes (Entrees):
Mole Manchamanteles
Felete de pescado ala veracruzana
Lomo de cardo en adobo, chile ancho

Postres (Dessert):
Flan de coco
Pastel de tres leches

Tuesday, April 24th
Berkshire DC
From 5 to 9 pm

DINING SERVICES
UMass/Amherst
umass.edu/diningservices

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, APRIL 23, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Students First'?

Police state harvests fear and distrust, but not community

Caroline Moretti

On the lawn across from Cashin, there's a huge banner unfurled and proudly proclaiming to all that drive by: "UMass Amherst Students First." I can't help but be struck by the total irony of this sign, not only in its visibility from Sylvan – a notoriously stifling place to live – but in its total falsity. It's evident to anybody who lives on campus that this University couldn't care less about putting students first. This is painfully demonstrated by the consistent placement of undercover police officers within our residences.

Yes, the University continues to see fit to allow plain-clothed officers to walk through dorms unannounced. The presence of these officers is absurd, but their disguises are sillier. These masters of disguise wear Red Sox t-shirts over their aging paunches, and attempt to cover their painfully-receding hairlines with baseball caps. I don't know who gets fooled by these guys, especially when they audaciously claim they're kids from Van Meter (a recently transmogrified all-freshmen residence) while clearly looking their obvious middle age. When they're not randomly wandering through the building I call home, these charming fellows like to hang out outside my dorm and ask kids where they can buy pot.

These officers also do their best to breed an atmosphere of distrust amongst the student community. If you have the misfortune to be caught by one of these officers, as one of my friends recently did when he let them into his room, they will interrogate you and threaten you in your dorm room. Then, with a sudden change of heart, they will offer you the deal of a lifetime: you can get off Scott-free, if you give them information about other students. This generous offer turns student against student, and hampers the ability of undergraduates to freely and openly associate with each other.

The worst part of all is the effect this police strong-arming has on the University's image.

More than ever, dorms are becoming a place of isolation for students. Really, these intrusive officers, who harass and manipulate the student body, are just icing on a cake of community destruction. Now, even if you're lucky enough not to be displaced by Epoch, you'll still have to fight for the opportunity to stay in your dorm. The elimination of same-room reservation makes it easier to boot you out in favor of a frosh. It also makes it harder for floor groups to stay intact, separating people from their friends. Now, your best hope is crossing your fingers and wishing that you'll land in the same building as your buddies.

I wish they'd just skip all this passive-aggressive manipulation, all the unwarranted big brother BS, and just come out and say "get out, move off campus, and make way for freshmen."

It's hard enough already trying to make new friends on campus without the negative effects of this secretive policing. You become embedded in a group of people as freshmen, and it's often difficult to step outside of that group and meet new friends as an upperclassmen. The awkwardness of attempting to meet new people is only solidified by dorm communities where people keep their doors shut. Communities that were once vivacious social places have been supplanted by a surging freshman population and an atmosphere of fear. I suppose I can't really complain though. I'm just as guilty as everybody else of keeping my door conspicuously shut. Maybe I just don't like the idea of a police officer being able to peer into my room anytime he wants.

The worst part of all is the effect this police strong arming has on the University's image. UMass has always been seen as a party school – it comes with the territory when you have 20,000 undergrads in a rural community. The recent series of arrests on campus is all part of the attempt to rework this alcohol-fueled reputation, going hand-in-hand with the posters that boast that "2 out of 3 students usually just get slightly hammered when they party." However, these lengthy arrest reports that arise from busting students for petty drug offenses only makes our school look more dangerous to parents of prospective students. Would you rather send your child to a party school, or a party school that has mass arrests of its student population? If we're trying to look less like the most dangerous campus ever, or whatever bogus title a nighttime news mag labeled us, why spend so much energy expanding our police reports with frivolous undercover student surveillance.

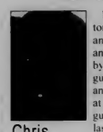
"Students First" is a slogan unparalleled in its falsehood. If this administration cared at all about putting students first, they wouldn't be putting so much effort into destroying the community life in our dormitories. They wouldn't turn our residences into police states, and they wouldn't put us against each other.

I guess I'll conclude this by admitting defeat.

Congratulations, faceless administrative higher-ups, you've officially made me disgusted with living on campus. I can't put up with the idiots in baseball caps or the intimidating drug dogs patrolling the halls of my home anymore. You won, you've driven me away, this upperclassman won't be hogging any more space in the dorms. I hope the 20 freshmen you've got to take my place are happier here.

Caroline Moretti can be reached at cmoretti@student.umass.edu

Gun laws: change of times yields reform



Chris Eckel

Now is a critical juncture in history, a time when American people and politicians have an opportunity and a duty to end further bloodshed by banning semi-automatic handguns. Any lesser response would be an insult to those whose deaths can at least be partially blamed on lax gun laws, including those who died last week at Virginia Tech.

In seeking change, we should not bow to those who will condemn us for "attempting to create policy out of tragedy." That is a morally reprehensible and intellectually indefensible argument, designed to stifle the legitimate actions of those who would seek to end the cycle of violence. It is a pathetic attempt by pro-gun lobbyists to protect their own twisted logic from inevitable defeat at the hands of common sense. The arguments of those who seek the free distribution of such weapons are as hollow as the emptiness that can be found in the hearts of 33 sets of families and friends.

The first justification for refusing to control the distribution of these weapons is: "Guns do not kill people, people kill people." That is pure tripe. People and guns together kill people. Technically, bullets kill people. Guns do not aim or fire themselves. It is true that people can kill people without guns. However, guns – particularly, semiautomatic guns – enable people to kill prolifically. Show me a person who can kill 32 people in one day without the use of an automated weapon and I'll show you the words "Marvel Comics" somewhere nearby.

Many people will cry out that law abiding gun owners are the natural opposition to those who would commit acts of violence with an illegally registered weapon. Those people are certifiably incorrect. In fact, according to a recent Harvard study done by University of Sydney professor Philip Alpers, of the 14 deadliest mass shootings committed in wealthy nations in the period between 1966 and 2002, 79 percent of the victims were shot with legally owned guns, and 86 percent of the perpetrators were registered gun owners.

The problem is that once you give someone a gun, there is no way on Earth to regulate what he or she does with it.

The problem is that once you give someone a gun, there is no way on Earth to regulate what he or she does with it. In a country like America, where millions have voted (twice) to elect a man who attempts to solve his problems with assault rifles and smart bombs, it is quite clear that some of the populace is far too bloodthirsty for us to expect anything other than that passing out more guns would lead to more bloodshed. We cannot cut out the person, but we can cut out the guns.

Of course, in order to do so, we would have to put up with whining about the Second Amendment. In its entirety, the Second Amendment reads: "A well regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the People to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed." That was written at a time when the standing army had been disbanded because people did not trust the power it would give to whoever controlled the armed forces (looks like they were onto something). Militias were essential because the peace with the British and other countries was fragile, at best.

However, since then, we have raised a standing army, and in addition, have created the Marines, the Air Force, the Navy, the Coast Guard and the Reserves. Combined, there are about three million brave women and men protecting the security of a free state. The entire climate has changed; there is no need for militias, not even in the least. The Constitution was intentionally crafted to be flexible so that lawmakers could change it according to the needs of society. In fact, we've done so before – 27 times.

As we consider changing it again, it would be instructive to examine what has happened to another country, much like ours, that recently banned handguns. They did so despite cries from many that stricter gun control laws wouldn't prevent crime because "bad guys" would get and use guns anyhow. In 1997, Great Britain passed the Firearms (Amendment) Acts which banned the possession of handguns. Several years later, the results were dramatically clear. An annual report released by the Home Office showed that for the year 2005-2006, there were only 50 homicides involving firearms in the entire country.

According to the United States government, for the year 2004, there were 11,334 murders involving firearms (mostly handguns) in this country. Granted, the U.S. population is roughly five times greater than that of Britain, but had roughly 227 times as many handgun murders in one year. Anyone who suggests that such a disparity is merely a coincidence is living in a dream world.

The time has come to ban automatic handguns in the U.S. There is quite simply no purpose for a gun that can fire massive amounts of bullets in a short span of time other than to intimidate, maim, or kill. If some wish to kill animals with a rifle, or to defend their home with a shotgun, then that is their prerogative. Automatic weapons are simply an abominable creation that must be criminalized before they are again used to end promising young lives.

Chris Eckel can be reached at ceckel@student.umass.edu

This strategy is not-so-PHENOM-enal

Michael Araujo

The missing link to the goals of PHENOM (Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts) is recognizing how the fiscal realities that face the Commonwealth's budget process (namely, structural deficits) and how polls consistently show strong voter disapproval for higher taxes are critical elements standing in the way of their stated goals.

The new Governor is to be congratulated for trying to entice lawmakers on Beacon Hill to close corporate loopholes in the state's tax structure. Indeed the Commonwealth is in need of tax revenues any way it can grab them. Alas, the House Speaker and the vast liberal bastion of Democratic lawmakers on the Hill were not emboldened by the Governor's attempt to tax the one entity most liberals should agree to tax more: corporations. The answer was a firm "no" as reflected in House 1. How does PHENOM react to this? It asked supporters to send postcards to Beacon Hill in support of the tax increases that are nowhere to be found in House 1. In addition, a bus is leaving to Boston from Holyoke Community College with supporters on its designated Lobby Day (April 25) to support the Governor's plan to close the tax loopholes. "It all boils down to funding," remarked Mishy Leiblum, a student trustee at UMass[1]. in The Springfield Republican. I totally agree with her statement, but disagree with this strategy.

Public higher education is a crucial ingredient in the state's economic future, but the Commonwealth has no mandatory funding laws with regards to its public higher education system, like Medicaid and K-12 education reform. Add to this fiscal reality the new budget that will begin July 1, which is projected to be in deficit by about $1.3 Billion[2]. The problem is a structural deficit, which means expenditures for current programs are higher than the tax collections under our current tax structure.

Sadly, state spending on health care, K-12 education requirements, and non-reimbursed federal mandates will continue to push the Commonwealth's expenditures upward with no new reenue streams to offset their costs. From recent history, this almost certainly guarantees either "level funding" or even more budget cuts to public higher education, not increases to it. In order for higher education to be fully funded by the Commonwealth, tax revenues need to be increased. Then again, funding any new initiatives will compete with increasing higher education funding if and when that happens. Tax increases are controversial[3] since voters approved an income tax cut in 2000 to lower the income tax to 5 percent. After the national recession, the Commonwealth faced severe budget shortfalls in 2002 and 2003. Since Romney couldn't cut services mandated by law like Medicaid, he simply gutted the public higher education system and numerous human service programs to balance the budget. (It should be noted that Medicaid spending increased by over $352,000 in the same year.[4]) The Legislature let Romney do the dirty work. Lawmakers stopped the voter-approved income tax reduction at 5.3 percent for darn good fiscal reasons and offered few overrides of the Romney cuts. However, lawmakers offered sympathy to constituents with regards to the cuts. Without mumbling the word "taxes," what else could the Legislature offer?

Lawmakers face budgetary priorities, some of which are beyond their control.

Of course, the entire public higher education system could also be looked upon as a "revenue center" since it has the ability (and authority) to raise revenues (through various fees) to support its operations. For lawmakers, the issue is not about supporting the purposes of public higher education in the Commonwealth. I've never met any candidate – Libertarians excluded – who does not support the goals of our public higher education system, nor do I believe any lawmaker doubts the economic relevance of funding public higher education. The budget is still tight despite improvements in the Commonwealth's economy since 2003. Lawmakers face budgetary priorities, some of which are beyond their control. Many people believe that the Legislature has only one choice, namely, government spending. Their choice is really two-fold: tax policy and government expenditure policy.

PHENOM has groups of motivated citizens who are willing to accept a higher state income tax liability, along with everyone else, in order to support public higher education. However, in a recent UNH poll published in the Boston Globe, over 70 percent of Massachusetts voters supported cuts in government spending to balance out the projected $1 billion deficit for 2007[6]. This does not bode well for PHENOM's stated goal of increased funding. The Legislature's choice is really about whether to let the higher education fee-generating revenue machines continue to suck money from the pockets of students and their families, in the form of a targeted user-based tax; or to support public higher education with meaningful tax reform that will increase tax revenues from all citizens and businesses based upon their ability to pay taxes in order to correct the Commonwealth's ongoing structural budget problems.

In sum, PHENOM needs to rethink their strategy with a focus on what matters most to the Legislature: balancing a budget full of competing spending interests with fewer tax dollars coming in. Most of these competing interests are worthwhile. Who can argue with fully funding Kindergarten or expanding preschool, but where is the money to support it? With House 1 killing the Governor's proposed tax increases, I feel that it's going to be a long bus ride home for PHENOM.

Michael Araujo is an Associate Professor of Business at Quinsigamond Community College, in Worcester. He can be reached at maraujo@qcc.mass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

ON ABORTION

The Supreme Court's decision to uphold a ban on so-called partial birth abortions is a disgraceful and deadly infringement of a woman's right to her life and liberty. Neither Congress nor the Supreme Court has any business determining what procedures are medically appropriate in performing abortions. Doctors, not politicians or judges, should make this determination, and women should be free to consider and accept their doctors' advice. An individual's right to life and liberty includes a woman's right to end her pregnancy – and to do it by whatever medical procedure she believes will lessen the risks to her health and her life. The precedent set by this Supreme Court's decision has established that the right of a woman to an abortion is not absolute, even if her health is at risk. And that violation of individual rights is a very, very dangerous precedent.

David Holcberg
Ayn Rand Institute
Irvine, Calif.

UNETHICAL JOURNALISM?

This letter is in response to the opinion piece titled "Unethical Sponsorship" by Greg Collins, which appeared in the Collegian on Thursday, April 12th. Please note how Mr. Collins has not once directly mentioned anything that Professor Norman Finkelstein said during his talk at UMass. Not once has he quoted anything from any of Finkelstein's books or articles, which are easily and widely accessible. Anyone who attended professor Finkelstein's lecture on Wednesday would know that he used very credible and well-known sources for everything that he said. He used mostly statistics published by Human Rights organizations like Amnesty International, Human Rights Watch, the works of well-known Israeli historians among others, as well as United Nations reports and resolutions to back up his arguments.

Had Greg Collins quoted even one sentence that professor Finkelstein uttered on Wednesday, I could have commented on it, but he didn't. Collins says that "Muslim terrorist organizations specifically target innocent Jews because of their religion, while Jews do not intentionally target innocent Muslims because of their religion." Leaving aside the racism inherent in this sentence (the selective use of the word "terrorist"), this sentence makes me wonder whether Mr. Collins actually attended the lecture, or if he did, whether he was actually listening to what professor Finkelstein was saying or not because professor Finkelstein specifically discussed the inaccuracy and inappropriateness of this claim that is made by many.

As for professor Finkelstein "[making] money off of universities and students in an unethical manner," would Mr. Collins mind clarifying what exactly he means by that? Did you, Mr. Collins, make any effort to find out what professor Finkelstein "charged" for the lecture? Try naming a few intellectuals as well-known as professor Finkelstein who would be willing to speak to an audience for nothing more than the cost of travel and lodging – you won't need more than five fingertips to do that. The very meager honorarium that the organizers paid him was out of respect for his tireless work and his willingness to come and speak at UMass despite his hectic schedule.

Before accusing someone of having "extreme views" and a "dubious background," the least one can do is read some of his work. With very little effort, one can find not only Finkelstein's work but also that of his critics, which, no doubt, are many, owing to his criticism of the Israeli government's policies towards Palestinians. Mr. Collins provides no facts, no quotes, nothing to back up his points. Anyone who attended professor Finkelstein's lecture will tell you that he did anything but that.

Sofia Checa
UMass Grad Student

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, APRIL 23, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Dave rips up Mullins with ease

Matthews touches on light and heavy issues between songs

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

Although he's never been known as the shy type while on stage, Dave Matthews took extra advantage of the intimate setting Saturday night at the University of Massachusetts Amherst's Mullins Center to share his thoughts on a variety of topics with the crowd.

Matthews and guest, Tim Reynolds, played a mostly acoustic 26-song set to a packed Mullins. The entire venue was open despite the original belief that it was going to be split down the middle – similar to when it hosts theater performances. The show was an opportunity for fans to witness the wide array of talents both Matthews and Reynolds possess.

Recurring themes of Matthews' between-song stories included "dazzling" the crowd with guitar changes, his train ride from Boston and more somber topics such as the War in Iraq.

The pair touched on just about every studio album Matthews and his full-time band, Dave Matthews Band, has released while also featuring tracks from his 2003 solo release, "Some Devil."

They took the stage shortly after 8 p.m. as most of the crowd was still filing in and, with Matthews seated and Reynolds standing to his right, played "Bartender" as the opener. That came as little shock because the song was the opener in 12 of 14 shows they played on tour last month in Europe.

Before getting into his first story, Matthews promptly thanked the crowd for coming out, which is per usual at his shows. Then Matthews informed the crowd that he'd eaten Indian or Thai food for dinner, he couldn't remember which it was, and warned he'd probably burp throughout the concert.

He then played two songs back-to-back, "Dodo" and "Stay or Leave," from "Some Devil." The former is the disc's lead track while the latter is a fan-favorite and the crowd acknowledged it with loud cheers as Matthews played the opening chords.

Love is the theme of many DMB recordings with one of the most popular being Saturday's fourth song, "Crush." It was also the first time in the evening that Reynolds displayed his superb guitar playing. The end of "Crush" is usually a full-band jam, but Reynolds filled the space nicely with a solo using a guitar slide on his left hand to distort the guitar's sound by making it whine.

With the most audible shouting coming from the men in the stands ("We love you Dave," was a favorite), Matthews launched into his feelings on the "man voice." He said the "fellas" in attendance were just expressing their emotions and told the crowd, "Don't be mad at the fellas," which was met with roaring laughter.

He then explained the next song. "Old Dirt Hill (Bring Beat Back)" – the only song played off DMB's latest album, 2005's "Stand Up" – was about growing up and having to act older.

After playing a nice rendition of "Grace is Gone," the steady stream of "Some Devil" tracks continued with "So Damn Lucky" and "Gravedigger."

Being an interesting character anyway, Matthews was in rare form Saturday, explaining he wasn't himself because he had a fever, though he admittedly hadn't officially taken his temperature yet.

"I have a temperature, don't judge me," he said to widespread laughter just before "So Damn Lucky."

But the concert turned on a serious note before "Gravedigger" when Matthews shared something that was bothering him. It was a story about a wounded soldier in Iraq who was discharged from the military without a pension because it was discovered he had depression problems. Matthews then became visibly angry when some audience members began shouting during the somber story.

Matthews' mood seemed to change after the story, as he kept going back to it, but it was hard to tell if it was for the worse because he and Reynolds continued the stellar performance for another two hours.

Overall the set was very similar to the Friday night's affair in Boston, but one song did make a surprise appearance in Amherst. "The Stone" was only played one time during DMB's 2006 Summer Tour and, sensing the rarity of hearing it, the crowd erupted when Matthews and Reynolds began playing.

The next few songs included two from his solo release, "Lie in Our Graves" from DMB's most popular album, "Crash," and the unreleased "Sister." Matthews has said at previous shows that "Sister" is about his own sibling, Jane, because she helped him get over writer's block by telling him to just write some lyrics.

It's not the only song dedicated to Matthews' sister. DMB also has one track titled, "The Song that Jane Likes," simply because Jane likes the song.

Matthews then left the stage, giving way to an amazing Reynolds guitar solo entitled, "Stream." The crowd stood and cheered as Reynolds played for nearly 10 minutes with little time to breath. The noise was compounded when he broke in an interpolation of Led Zeppelin's classic, "Kashmir." At the end, Reynolds got down on both knees and bowed to deafening applause from the crowd.

Numerous times throughout the show, Matthews expressed the fact he was honored to share the stage with his good friend. Reynolds and Matthews have known each other since DMB's inception in the early '90s. Since the two haven't toured together since 1999, it was believed there was a falling out of sorts, but the recent Europe tour and this mini U.S. tour have effectively disbanded that notion.

After "Cornbread," the next two songs were met with tremendous approval from the audience and the discussions between featured funny ramblings courtesy of Matthews. Before playing Neil Young's "Down by the River," Matthews said he liked the song because it was "weird."

"It's a gangster song, but it's not, but it is," he said – the song is about a man who shoots his lover.

He then continued his recent trend of playing some cover songs mixed in with his own – seven covers were played by DMB during a two-night stop in Las Vegas

See DAVE MATTHEWS on page 6

Dave Matthews was joined by Tim Reynolds at Saturday night's concert at the Mullins Center. Matthews played many songs from his album, "Some Devil."

In between songs Matthews was light hearted and cracked jokes, but also touched on serious issues like the war in Iraq.

A day of baking in the Amherst sun

By Matthew Cadwallader
Collegian Staff

As students poured out of the dorms to enjoy the gorgeous weather this weekend, they may have noticed something different in the air: a funny smell. The copious amounts of marijuana smoked over the weekend, here on campus and around the world, would certainly be to blame.

The weekend was one for the pot heads, starting with the stoner holiday of 4-20 on Friday and continuing with the Cannabis Reform Coalition's (CRC) 16th annual Extravaganja on Saturday. According to organizers, the latter event, hosted on the Amherst town common, drew over 2,000 people from around the Pioneer Valley for a celebration of all things marijuana.

By 2 p.m. the common was packed with participants and observers. A few people came prepared with lawn chairs and coolers but most simply brought blankets, and for those that didn't bring anything, the moist ground was good enough.

The majority of people were seated in over a dozen smoking circles strewn out over the grass. Towards the back, people tossed around Frisbees and played Hacky Sack and Bongo drums and hookahs weren't the least bit out of place. It was one of the few events in which you might see a guy use a pet snake to pick up girls instead of, say, a dog.

While the majority of the participants were students, there was a pretty diverse showing of people from around the area. Kids ran around carefree while parents sat and enjoyed the good weather and music. The presence of such innocence was not lost on anyone.

"Only in the town of Amherst would you find an event like this," observed University of Massachusetts student Will Constantine. "There are all these students smoking, yet families are still walking around without a problem."

See GANJA on page 6

'Run Hill' a success

By S.P. Sullivan
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students amassed themselves on the hill beside Van Meter for various reasons this past Friday, many of them arriving long before the Central Student Government and American Airlines presented Run for the Hill, featuring Apollo Sunshine. Though some suggest the show was not what motivated many Centralites to flock to the hill at precisely 4:20 p.m., most were excited to see experimental roots-rockers Apollo Sunshine as well as four other acts perform.

Deadspin, the first of the day's performances, took the stage at 6 p.m., just as flocks of UMass students returned from various dining commons' after being rendered hungry by the day's festivities. The upbeat, reggae-influenced music of Deadspin, a four-piece band from Boston, Mass. formed in June of last year, mirrored the sudden emergence of clement weather as they jammed in front of the late-afternoon sun.

Festivities changed gears a bit as Holyoke punk band Five Across the Eyes took the stage, grabbing the attention of a respectable chunk of the crowd with their high-energy rock and buzzing guitars. At this point in time, however, the vast majority of spectators concentrated themselves higher-up on the hill, with only a few brave souls clustered around the stage.

The Corner Boys, a folk trio, faired better than preceding band Five Across the Eyes with the show's mellow audience, and before long had drawn a significant portion of the crowd front and center to dance to their traditional tunes. The trio proved to be able multi-instrumentalists, employing throughout their show an acoustic guitar, banjo, mandolin and accordion, as well as various woodwinds.

Though most of the Corner Boy's set list was comprised of traditional American and Irish folk songs, the trio also indulged in some more recognizable covers, performing Steve Goodman's "The City of New Orleans" and the Grateful Dead's "Friend of the Devil," before bringing their set to a close with a fast-paced jig that had dozens of spectators, coaxed down from the top of the hill, jigging in front of the stage.

Melodeego, a self-described "Soul N Roll" band from Boston, mounted the stage after the Corner Boys, taking off where the folk band left off and delivering high energy, well-composed rock with what Metronome Magazine has referred to as a "curiously tight, familiar soul sound." their

See RUN HILL on page 6

'Hot Fuzz' flaunts U.K. humor and homo-erotic machismo

By Kate Bauer
Collegian Staff

Hot Fuzz's Sergeant Nicholas Angel (Simon Pegg) is the ultimate cop. Expert in hand-to-hand combat, armed response, high-speed pursuits, efficient at paperwork and a 400 percent higher arrest rate than his fellow police mates. He's the ultimate cop.

The problem? He's too good. So good that, as his Chief Inspector puts it, "you've been making us all look bad." So he's relocated to Sanford, a quaint picturesque town in the country. Everyone knows everyone here in this friendly little town, and the Neighborhood Watch group isn't as interested in protecting the village as it is in a chance to gossip about the new officer. According to Sergeant Angel, he's just entered Horesville.

Back in 2004 Shaun of the Dead was released to U.S. audiences with huge critical acclaim, and proved Brits could carry their humor worldwide. Director Edgar Wright and actor Simon Pegg had created a script that combined both "humor and no-holds barred horror."

This time they've taken on the world of the buddy-cop flick, mixing odes to everything from Lethal Weapon, Hard to Kill, Robocop and Bad Boys II to Point Break and The Naked Gun. But, as Pegg was quick to point out in one magazine interview, Fuzz, and Shaun as well, aren't spoofs. Consider them more of a praise to the genres they love.

The humor isn't as spot on as Shaun of the Dead, but what it lacks in word play wit it makes up for in its characters. While Angel is everything a cop should be, his new partner Danny Butterman (Nick Frost) is not. Clueless, fat and drunk, Butterman spends his time daydreaming about exciting car chases and shootouts reminiscent of his favorite cop films. Timothy Dalton is especially entertaining as a smarmy, big-headed owner of a supermarket who's comments of "I'd like to smash your head in and see what secrets come out," lead the audience to believe he may be the primary suspect.

But don't jump to conclusions too soon. As the trailer suggests, this sweet little town isn't exactly all it seems. Only a few days into Sergeant Angel's service bodies start showing up – lots

See FUZZ on page 6

This quirky British cop flick borrows a little from Lethal Weapon, Shaun of the Dead and others while showcasing over-the-top characters and lacking in witty humor.

Dave does UMass

DAVE MATTHEWS from page 5

in late March — with his version of "The Maker." Matthews described it as a "quiet song" and a "hymn."

The energy brought on by Reynolds' solo returned for the show's stretch run as the crowd really got into old favorites "Jimi Thing," "Don't Drink the Water," "#41" and "Dancing Nancies."

Again Matthews had the crowd in stitches with a story just before "Don't Drink the Water." He shared his views on farting in such public places as the gym. Matthews said it infuriated him when people farted during the rare occasions he works out. He then described his bulldog's flatulence as sounding like "a pack of lions."

Seeing as though "Don't Drink the Water" is a serious song about the taking over of Native American lands by the United States in the 19th century, Matthews said he needed to pause after telling the funny fart story. That proved easier said than done as someone across the arena informed the more than 8,000 in attendance that he just farted.

"If I can smell that all the way down here I will have nothing but admiration for you," Matthews joked.

After leaving the stage briefly, just Matthews returned for the start of the encore. Then for the only time all night he picked up an electric guitar and played a short quiet jam before performing the title track from "Some Devil."

Reynolds returned for "Little Thing," "Where Are You Going" and another old favorite, "Two Step."

The Mullins Center concourse was buzzing after the show with many people expressing nothing but amazement of the show's quality. For those who witnessed a Dave and Tim show for the first time Saturday night, it was definitely something they want to experience again in the future.

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu.

KRISTIAN GOMEZ/COLLEGIAN

Matthews' and Reynolds' set left the crowd satisfied and in good spirits after Saturday night's show at the Mullins Center thanks to Matthews' charismatic stage presence.

'Run' fills hill at Van Meter

RUN HILL from page 5

onstage antics were complimented by the appearance of Peaches the Sexy Chicken, who, during the more soulful, intense parts of the performance, could be seen writhing onstage to the music. Melodeego closed their set with original song "Fill Me Up," which front man Peter Malagodi prefaced by saying, "We've got one more; it's amazing." The song proved to be a wise choice of closer, a soulful piece that the band drew out to Springsteen-like extents.

For the other bands that performed Friday night, Run for the Hill might have meant a two-hour drive from Boston or another local show, but for Apollo Sunshine it was a return home. "I don't know if you know this," they told the crowd during the extended period of time it took them to set up their various instruments, "but we used to live a mile and a half from here."

The band opened with "Magnolia," a folk-heavy tune employing just about anything on hand as a means for percussion. Apollo Sunshine then played a few of their more guitar-heavy originals, perhaps warming up for their Jimi Hendrix cover, Electric Lady Land's "Crosstown Traffic." Later in the show was an extended version of their already-sizable "Lord," which included an all-band drum solo, and "Hip," which opened their 2003 self-titled album. Before breaking into an extended version of "Today is the Day," the band's final number, Apollo Sunshine requested of their audience "Let's hear everybody scream, even that guy in the sweatshirt!"

The 2007 Run for the Hill provided UMass students with a diverse soundtrack to their Friday-night festivities; regardless of whether or not they were in attendance, the concert could be heard throughout Central. Apollo Sunshine, the Corner Boys, and the rest of the artists who performed at the Central Area Government-sponsored event on April 20, put on a show. UMass students won't soon forget — provided they remember it in the first place.

S P Sullivan can be reached at Spsulliva@student.umass.edu

'Fuzz' is fair

FUZZ from page 5

of bodies. While the town believes it's just a series of accidents, Angel suspects otherwise. There's just something about this perfect little town that doesn't seem right. Left to his own devises, Angel sets out to uncover the mystery.

This time around Director Wright has managed to collect a huge number of Hollywood cameos. Steve Coogan, Martin Freeman, and Bill Nighy (who also appeared in Shaun) are three stuffy police captains responsible for relocating Angel, while Paddy Considine and Jim Broadbent are members of Sanford's force. See if you can spot Cate Blanchett and Peter Jackson in disguised roles. Robert Rodriguez even wrote some of the score for Fuzz (coincidentally Wright did the Don't trailer for Grindhouse).

Fuzz's humor probably won't quite transcend as well as it has in the UK ($40 million and counting), but the duo's action packed parody isn't without its laughs (though it was sometimes hard to hear them through their accents). Fan boys of the shoot em' up, action-driven, buddy-cop flicks may not appreciate the humor, especially the homoerotic tensions between its two leads, but other audience members can appreciate the jests.

Kate Bauer can be reached at Kbauers@student.umass.edu.

Advice on how to tackle that looming little summer bikini

By Veronica Garrett
Collegian Columnist

It's true. There are benefits and nutritional value to eating chocolate. According to Cheryl Koch, M.S., R.D., this sometimes-forbidden indulgence may now be on the "healthy" list along with your fruits and vegetables. This addition to daily nutrition is given through the discovery that chocolate contains the same flavonoids found in red wine, apples, onions and grapes.

The American Dietetic Association recognizes chocolate as a part of a heart-healthy diet. However, something so tasty becomes hard to eat in moderation, especially during the holiday season when those bulky, warm sweaters cover it all up. It's through these feats of being healthy that problems with our spring and summertime bathing suits arise. A few extra pounds are the undeniable reason so many of us are insecure when the calendar rolls to April, and it's been that way since the French invented the bikini in 1946 and has since evolved into the $500 Dolce and Gabbana bathing suit at Neiman Marcus.

It's hard to tell where to turn when the weather is gorgeous and you're yearning for a body that will stand the heat of that sexy two-piece you have your eye on. This got me thinking, it's an incredibly ridiculous cycle of events that women are put through, just for a bathing suit. Simplified, it's just two-to-three yards of material, with sewn edges.

Though so uncomplicated, this market has sustainable profit annually with Worldwide profits in bathing attire generating $12.65 billion, according to Dow Fiber Solutions, a unit of Dow Chemical. The money and lengths we go through to feel good about ourselves on the beach or just hanging out with friends is ridiculous, and if you're not doing it for yourself, why bother feeding the vicious cycle?

The motivation to be in shape is sprung from many aspects of today's society. When handling these pressures of the impossible standards of beauty, attention is brought to the tedious-endeavor of the gym membership. Some, like one of my friends, finds motivation in the low cost of membership, and that alone is enough motivation to get up and go. While others, such as myself and my roommate, find comfort in a completely free run and do it yourself abdominal work right on the floor of the dorm.

Someone wrote in for fitness advice this week, saying that Boyden gym on campus is "really intimidating." To that I say, you have three options. The first is to not go to the gym, and put together your very own work out routine, without the fancy equipment. The next would be to brave the intimidation and learn your way around on your own, and third following closely would be to ask a good friend to acquaint you or to learn with you. It is much easier to stay motivated when you have a good friend with a leaner body.

Some people do not realize this, but a very important part of motivation and exercise is to be comfortable with what you're doing. Do not force yourself into a sport or some crazy yoga routine if you are not relaxed doing it. For shopping or going out, you find the right shoes and outfit, right? Well, exercising requires no less; the right shoes, the right attire, finding the right attitude and sleeping a good 6-8 hours a night are all just as important as the activities you pursue. Eating sensibly should go without saying, and usually for someone young, simply not eating after 6:30 p.m. is dramatic enough to show results. Drink as much water as you can, and stretch for warming up and cooling down. These things seem miniscule, but in actuality are the basics to fitness and are often the reasons for failure.

Mixing your routine up a little here and there is a good way to stay motivated, just the way you don't work the same move every time with sex or dancing. Once you find the pattern, break it, or it will get boring, this is true with most things I've found. Lastly, set a goal for yourself, remembering the key is to stay motivated, not derail yourself by taking on something nothing too drastic. For example, aim to lose the love handles when you wear jeans. Less is more.

Today, weight loss and appearance are so key to confidence and success that some of New York City's own Broadway dancers are teaching a studio class created by Stiletto designers to get sexy, lean spring legs. This class is on DVD, and it's BYOH — bring your own heels! A workout routine where strutting confidently in four-inch heels is the objective. Women are asked to come in with the shoes they stare at and can't wait to wear, and come in their sexiest work attire, ready to sculpt their legs with a syllabus taught by Victor Chu. If you are interested, the class is called Legwork: The Secret to Sexy Heel-Wearing and Fitness.

Feeling sexy and confident is important, but remembering to have boundaries is as equally crucial. Being a super skinny girl doesn't make you beautiful, it just makes you smaller. Always remember to be sure that with every choice you make, you're making the best choice for you. No one has the perfect body, just an ideal body, and we always want what we can't have. What's important is how you feel. So approach any work out regimen with realistic intentions, and you won't disappoint yourself, but only improve yourself.

Veronica Garrett can be

Extravaganja shines with vibes

GANJA from page 5

Lots of people brought their dogs out which was a welcome addition, except that when you are partaking in illicit drug use in a public area, it can be disconcerting to encounter a German Sheppard or Pit bull. Older hippies watched their generational counterparts while handing out leaflets for various causes.

Lining the edge of the common were businesses and organizations that had set up tents or tables to push their wares or causes. Some were obvious (a wide selection of hand-blown glass pipes) some were a little puzzling (like the Libertarian party) and others, like the guy selling psilocybin mushroom spores, only added to the atmosphere of total disregard for drug laws.

The live music was generally well done with a cross section of stoner-friendly tunes including a bass-heavy jam band, a couple reggae acts and other rock bands. In between sets local performers did their act for the crowd. Norman B had the crowd going with his one man poetry show, Deviations From the Norm, "War on drugs? If they were on drugs, they wouldn't be going to war!" Then Motown performed some slightly modified old R&B hits.

The CRC also repeatedly addressed the crowd about their ongoing battle in the decriminalization of marijuana. Guest speakers spoke of the importance of bills currently in the Massachusetts Congress. Senate bill 944 would legalize marijuana for medical uses and protect carcgivers from prosecution for giving marijuana to those who need it medically. Senate Bill 1011 would decriminalize marijuana and make possession of under an ounce punishable by a $100-$500 fine or community service. This would make possession akin to a speeding ticket (i.e. it doesn't go on anyone's criminal record). Cards expressing support for the cause were passed out for people to fill in and have sent to their congressional representative.

According to the organizer, at least one person was arrested for possession of marijuana early in the day but reports of others weren't confirmed. Still, visible police presence in the area was minimal. Uniformed officers mostly kept off the common, while some bike officers hid behind parked minivans watching. Officers in plain clothes were present but mostly passive.

"They're looking for things like open containers and drug-dealing," according to Sawyer. The CRC meets with the Police Chief each year to agree on proper security measures. "This is a peaceful protest and they know that." The CRC does its own security and when the police notice something they don't like, they bring it up with the club's security team before they arrest.

Extravaganja seemed to be a big success, the turnout was great and the atmosphere was positive. The band played, the sun shone, the people baked and everyone was happy.

Matthew Cadwallader can be reached at Mcadwall@student.umass.edu

BEFORE GRADUATION PARTY ANIMAL

AFTER GRADUATION FAT GUY

Find a job before you outstay your welcome.

Post-grad careers, part-time jobs and internships.
Go online or text "CBcampus" to 68247.*

CBCAmpus.com

*Standard text messaging rates may apply

Write for Arts and Living
E-mail Collegianarts@gmail.com or
Arts@dailycollegian.com

Minuteman rally falls short

M. LAX from page 10

be disappointed, but not discouraged because the effort's there."

Georgetown (9-2, 5-0 ECAC) entered the final period of play up two goals, but UMass' previous two scores seized the momentum for the Minutemen.

After the period went scoreless for some three minutes, Andrew Recchione brought the Minutemen within one on an assist from fellow midfielder, Brian Jacovina. It was Jacovina's third assist on the afternoon, but it was not his last.

He set up Garber's tying goal five minutes later, hitting a streaking Brett Garber in the middle of the box between several Georgetown defenders. Garber caught the ball, cradled once and beat Kass top shelf. The assist gave Jacovina a career-high four helpers in the game.

But, as said before, it wasn't meant to be for the Minutemen. With Bobby Hayes penalized for holding, Craig Dowd scored what proved to be the game-winner for the Hoyas on the extra-man opportunity. The play was very similar to Garber's score 30 seconds prior. Dowd received the ball in the middle of the box and fired a high shot.

Then it was defenseman Sean Krygier who was flagged for a slash – a one-minute major, but it may have been what the Hoyas did before Krygier went off that really silenced the Minuteman rally. The call was delayed so they proceeded to work the ball around the box, killing at least two minutes off the clock. Physically drained, UMass' efforts to knock the ball free proved futile.

"It was a little frustrating, but [we] figured they'd do that at that point of the game," Garber said. "It kind of just goes back to the opportunities we had at the beginning of the game and that could have never happened."

Dowd then scored his second consecutive man-up goal to give the Hoyas some insurance, something they needed. Denis Whelan followed with 47 seconds left, setting up the most important half-minute of UMass' season.

Hayes lost the ensuing faceoff, but the Minutemen gained control of the ball deep in the defensive end and began working back up the other side with about 10 seconds remaining. They couldn't convert, however, as the ball was knocked loose just as time expired on the game, and ultimately, UMass' season.

After two quick scores in the game's first three minutes, one for each side, UMass took a 2-1 lead into the second quarter on Tim Balise's 14th goal of the season.

The play was a glimpse of what the Minutemen are capable of when they all work as one. Georgetown's Andrew Brancaccio fired a shot from the left side that Schneider saved. The sophomore then led the clear up the opposite end of the field giving the ball off to Jacovina.

He then brought it into the restraining box and fed Balise on the left side. Balise took the pass and fired the shot that put the Minutemen up for the final time on the afternoon.

Georgetown then dominated the second quarter, outscoring the Minutemen, 4-0, on 11 shots — UMass had seven tries in the second period. All the Hoyas' second-quarter goals were unassisted efforts, including two from Brendan Cannon and one each from Cullen Molinari, and Andrew Baird.

"The difference in the game," Cannella said of the game's lopsided second quarter. "I think their shots went. I thought we lost our composure a little bit. This is a game where you cannot lose your composure. I think we did it more than once."

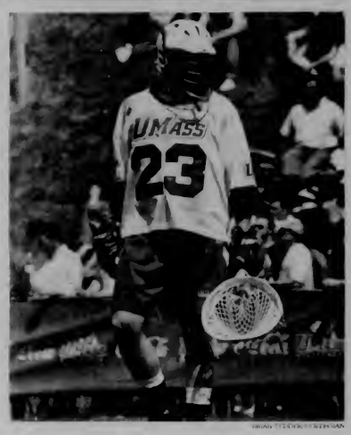
It was more of the same when the two teams came out of the locker rooms from halftime Georgetown made it five straight when Garrett Wilson netted his sixth goal of the season 44 seconds into the third quarter.

He controlled the ball on the left side of the box, spun and shot, putting the Hoyas up by three goals.

Attackman Evan Blum and the Minutemen finally put a stop to the Hoyas' streak with a four-goal run of their own that began with Blum's sixth of the season with 13 minutes left in the period. The goal was unassisted, coming directly in front of Georgetown goalie, Miles Kass (eight saves).

Then senior Brett Garber netted his team-high 22nd of the season less than a minute after Blum's goal. Jacovina fed Garber at the top of the box and the midfielder fired a sidearm lefty shot that beat Kass by his midsection.

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu. Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at www.dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.



Sophomore goaltender Doc Schneider made 11 saves and allowed eight goals against Georgetown this Saturday. His record is 5-6.

UMass wins two of three over La Salle

BASEBALL from page 10

allowing just one unearned run. He allowed five hits and five walks in his seven and two-thirds innings of work, pitching in and out of trouble throughout the game — but registering key outs at crucial times as the Explorers stranded 11 base runners. Cassidy had to work for his fourth win, throwing 120 pitches on the afternoon.

Smith made things a bit interesting in the ninth — allowing two singles and bringing the tying run to the plate — but he induced team-leading hitter John Rickards to look at strike three to end the game and pick up his fifth save of the season. Elkind was the hard-luck loser, allowing just three hits and one earned run in seven innings.

Much like in game two, UMass scored more runs (6) than it had hits (4) on Friday, but still came out with the victory. La Salle starter Dan Waters pitched fairly well in his six innings, but took the loss after he was charged with six unearned runs. Senior Chris Lloyd recorded his third win of the year, allowing five runs in six innings.

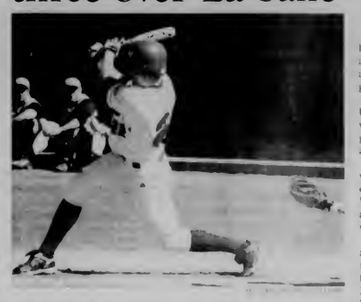
The star of the game — both at the plate and one the mound — was Bryan Adamski. His sacrifice fly in the first inning gave UMass the 1-0 lead, and his two-run blast in the fourth increased the lead to 4-0. Adamski also registered his second save, pitching three innings while only allowing one hit. Minutemen pitchers were helped out by some terrific glove work, especially by second baseman Adam Tempesta and third baseman Ryan Franczek.

After wasting strong pitching performances in both previous games, La Salle finally took advantage of a stellar outing from its starter — this time from junior Craig Muschko — when it touched up UMass starter Jared Freni for four runs in the third inning.

After cruising through the first two and one-third innings, Freni suddenly lost command of the strike zone, as the Explorers quickly loaded the bases with a walk, single and hit batsmen. Freni then walked in two runs, and balked in another — ultimately getting knocked out after Mike Dertouzos drove in the game's fourth run with a single to left.

"It was a struggle all day long on the mound," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "And eventually it's going to catch up to you. The struggles on the mound made it very difficult for us.

"Plus we didn't hit," he added. "We played pretty good defense, but we didn't have the same life and energy we had the past few days — which we can't afford not to have. That was pretty much the story [yesterday]."



Senior Bill Rankin went 3-for-10 with a walk and two runs scored in UMass' three games with La Salle this past weekend.

Muschko worked six shutout innings for the Explorers, allowing just three hits and two walks, while striking four. He navigated through some trouble, but remained unscathed as the Minutemen left 11 runners on base.

"We had basc runners almost every inning, but we kept making the last out on hard-hit balls somewhere," Garrity said. "We just couldn't get anything to fall for us. If a couple of those fell for us, that's two or three runs right there, and it's a different ballgame all the sudden. It just didn't fall our way today."

Gerard Breslin picked up his seventh save, pitching three innings and allowing just one run (unearned) when Lou Proietti stole home on a double steal in the seventh. Freni was charged with loss, his third on the season.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu

Loss to Hoyas makes playoff chances slim

PLAYOFFS from page 10

looked panicky on the offensive end, and made some ill-advised passes at some ill-advised times during the game.

"We lost our composure a little bit," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "We warned the guys about that. This is a game where you can't lose composure and we lost it more than once."

"Frustrating' was the word of the weekend. UMass had a legitimate opportunity to take the game from the No. 6 team in the nation. Sophomore attack Jim Connolly led off the game with a goal 1:30 into the contest.

GU responded with a goal just over a minute later and it was a back-and-forth show until about 3 p.m. when the final buzzer sounded. UMass took a 2-1 lead with a fast-break goal by Tim Balise with 2:51 left in the first frame, but Georgetown responded with a five-goal run that ended at the beginning of the third quarter.

Of course, UMass answered with a four-goal run of its own to tie the game at 6-all after Brian Jacovina flipped a pass to a streaking Garber just outside the crease on the left side of the goal and Garber put it past GU goalie Miles Kass.

But GU had the answer to every UMass challenge and scored on a man-up goal about 30 seconds later to take the lead for good. The seventh Hoyas goal gave GU a 7-6 lead with 7:01 remaining in the game, and with 5:40 left on a Hoyas possession, a flag was thrown that would result in a UMass penalty — but not after the Hoyas killed a substantial amount of clock.

GU held on and the Minutemen were helpless as the clock ticked away on their postseason hopes.

It was an aggravating way to spend the final minutes of the biggest game of their season.

"We got close and it's disappointing," Cannella said. "We're taking nothing away from Georgetown. They played a great game."

I ven though an appearance in the postseason has a slim-to-none likelihood, no one was ready to talk about the season yet. Not with more games to play. Goalie Doc Schneider showed some frustration when a reporter asked if the Georgetown game summed up a season of near-misses.

"What sums up the season is that we fight and keep fighting," Schneider said. "We can't talk about the season right now because the season isn't over."

"We just have to get on to our next game," Garber said. "If you look forward too much you lose sight of what your job is."

Cannella's motto of "You can be disappointed but you can't be discouraged" will serve the Minutemen well over the next week. They have Fairfield tomorrow and Syracuse next Saturday.

A let down might lead to two losses if the Minutemen can't recover from Saturday's disappointment.

Rob Givenchi can be reached at rgivenchi@student.umass.edu

Third inning made difference in Game 3

FRENI from page 10

the inning without anymore damage.

It was that wild third inning, however, that made the difference between a series sweep and another lost opportunity for the Maroon and White.

UMass had one of its most successful weekend series of the year against the Explorers. In fact, it marked only the second series win in Atlantic 10 play for the Minutemen, with the first dating back to their two wins against Temple in the first weekend of conference play.

But with only six out of the 14 A-10 teams advancing to the postseason, a sweep would have catapulted UMass from 11th place to a tie for the sixth and final playoff spot in the conference.

"I felt that we should have gotten the sweep if we had played like we did the last couple of days on all aspects," Stone said. "But we kind of backed off a little bit. We just weren't sharp, never getting ahead, always pitching behind [in the count] and didn't have command. You have to have command to pitch successfully in Division I baseball, and we didn't do that."

La Salle scored two more runs in the next six innings, and even though starter Craig Muschko and reliever Gerard Breslin silenced UMass' bats throughout the game, it was Freni's third inning collapse that sends the Minutemen into Wednesday's Beanpot consolation game on a losing note.

Freni, a freshman out of Malden Catholic, dropped his record to 1-3 on the year in the loss, but much has been asked of him as a usual weekend starter. He pitched yesterday's game on 11 days rest, and that extra time off may have been a reason why he had minimal control of his breaking ball, and why he fell behind in the count to most batters.

His catcher believes there's plenty of time for improvement.

"He throws the ball really well, and I think sometimes he might try to overthrow a little bit," Bryan Garrity said. "He's only a freshman, and I think in years, he's going to realize that it's about getting ahead [in the count] and mixing up your pitches, and then going after guys, instead of trying to blow it by him on the first pitch. Right now, he does throw the ball with good velocity, but he needs to do a better job locating his pitches and getting all his pitches to work in the same day."

"He's got a lot of talent, but throughout the season, unfortunately, he's regressed a little bit," Stone said. "He has to get back on track. I thought we were going to get a good pitching performance today, but we didn't get it. And you've got to have that to have a chance to win."

UMass has four more A-10 series left this season. Dayton, Richmond, Saint Louis and Xavier make up for the final 12 conference games, six of which are at home. Richmond and Xavier are in second and third in the A-10, respectively, not making a playoff run any easier for the Minutemen.

And a repeat performance of today's third inning could be costly, come May.

"It's unfortunate because our backs are against the wall right now," Garrity said. "We had a tough couple weeks, and we have to start winning all our games. We can't afford to let one slip like today."

Dann Picard can be reached dpicard@student.umass.edu.

KRISTIAN GOMEZ/COLLEGIAN

Freshman pitcher Jared Freni allowed four runs in 2 2/3 innings against La Salle yesterday. The loss dropped his record to 1-3 on the season.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
is looking for new
Graphic Designers
for the Fall 2007 semester

- Daily Advertising Designers
- Nightly Production Supervisors
- Advertising Production Manager

Any major can apply. Previous design experience not necessary, but encouraged.

Visit our office in the Campus Center Basement from 10am - 4pm for applications.

Navigating the Corporate Environment
Tuesday, April 24, 2007
Memorial Hall, 5:30 p.m.
WITH ALUMNUS GUEST SPEAKER
JAMES PAPPAS '75,
Managing Director, Vice President of Putnam Investments
Gain a better understanding of what is ahead of you, as you prepare to make the transition from student to a member of corporate America. Learn valuable insight on what to expect your first year on the job and how to maximize your potential for future success.
Campus Career PROGRAMS
FREE ADMISSION • FREE PIZZA • FREE REFRESHMENTS
To register, visit the Alumni Association web site at UMassAlumni.com/students.
Sponsored by
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
alumni loan consolidation program
www.UMassAlumni.com/studentloans (800) 936-4975
STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION UMASS AMHERST
For more information, contact Kate Robert at 545-3086 or krobert@admin.umass.edu

Minutewomen win four weekend games

SOFTBALL from page 10

Proctor moved up to second base after a passed ball, and to third on another mistake by a St. Joe's infielder.

Senior designated player Amanda Acampora drove Proctor in with a single. Next batter, sophomore Samantha Salato lined an 0-1 offering into left field, scoring sophomore Whitney Mollica.

The Hawks should have escaped the inning allowing just those two runs. Pitcher Dani Gonzales struck out two batters and drew an easy ground out to the shortstop, but Beka Shumock mishandled the roller and the inning went on. Senior centerfielder Candice Molinari drove in the game-ending eighth run with a fielder's choice.

Molinari stole home in the third inning of the game. On the next pitch, Mollica drove a fastball to right field scoring Proctor Mollica had one of her best days of the year. In Game 1, she went 1-for-2 with a grand slam and five RBIs. The grand slam gives her three home runs on the year, the five RBIs increases her total to 23.

"[Mollica] is on the rise," Sortino said. "It's nice to see her coming together. She really had good swings today. She drove the ball well in all her at-bats. It's nice to see her doing that."

In the first game with Temple, Owls pitcher Ashley Smuda pitched around Cullington four times. The Minutewomen failed to take advantage of the Owls' hesitance to let Cullington beat them. Although they scored five runs, Cullington came around once despite reaching base four times.

UMass left nine runners on base in the game.

Balschmiter held the Owls to one run and three hits while pitching her 22nd complete game of the season. Her two wins on the weekend improve her record to 19-8. She is on a personal 11-game winning streak while the four wins over the weekend improve UMass' winning streak 15 games. The last time UMass lost was March 19 at Florida Atlantic.

Against Temple on Saturday, the Minutewomen took a 7-2 lead into the bottom of the sixth inning. Sanders coaxed a groundball from Temple's Katie Burdeaux, Williams mishandled the ball and Burdeaux reached. A walk and a hit later and Sanders' day was done. Sortino lifted her freshman hurler, bringing in Balschmiter to close out the game.

More poor defense and a passed ball on freshman Jessica Serio, allowed another run to score, but Balschmiter escaped the jam by striking out TU second baseman Natalie Wagner. In the seventh, she retired the side in order for her first save of the season.

Joe Melomi can be reached at jmelomi@student.umass.edu

Men and women finish in fourth

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Correspondent

For the second time in three weeks, the Massachusetts men's and women's track team traveled to Storrs, Conn., for a competition on Saturday.

The men competed in the Husky Spring Invite, while the women competed in the UConn Invitational. The men finished fourth out of seven, with the women finishing fourth out of eight.

The best showing of the day came from UMass distance runner Jesse Regnier, who placed first in the 5,000-meter run with a time of 15 minutes, 21.41 seconds. Teammates Ryan Durkin (15:30.53), and Matt Klypka (15:50.05) earned second and fourth place in the 5k respectively.

The UMass relay teams had a standout day as well. The 4 x 100 team of Manny Harris-Lopes, Nathan Barksdale, Brian Miller and Andrew O'Donnell placed third with a time of 42.41 seconds. The time was good enough to qualify the team for the ICAA championships.

The 4 x 400 relay team, consisting of Manny Harris-Lopes, Patrick Phelan, James Godinho and Nathan Barksdale, had an even better day scoring a second place finish, completing the event in 3:19.31 minutes.

Freshman Brian Miller placed fifth overall in the 100-meter dash with a time of 11.20 seconds.

Miller also managed to score eighth place in the 200-meter dash with a time of 22.12 seconds.

In the 400-meter dash, Andrew O'Donnell scored a ninth place finish (49.87), with teammate Nathan Barksdale finishing right behind him in 10th place (49.97).

Sophomore sprinter Kevin Iaetta came in eighth place in the 110-meter hurdles (15.50) and fifth place in the 400-meter hurdles (56.06).

For the women's team, star distance runner Christina Derosa continued her outstanding streak of performances. She took second in the women's 5,000-meter run, finishing in 17:29.16. Derosa has finished in second place or better in the last four 5k outdoor events the Minutewomen have attended.

Senior Iaryn Trapp gave a solid showing for the Minutewomen in the 3,000-meter steeplechase, clocking in at 11:35.43, good enough for second place in the event. Junior Ashley Davidson followed right behind her, finishing fourth (12:12.94).

In the 100-meter hurdles, graduate student Mary Serdakowski came in fifth with a time of 14.73 seconds. Serdakowski also placed sixth in the 400-meter hurdles, finishing in 1:08.23.

Freshman thrower Lisa Wilson competed in three different throwing events: the discus, the shot put and the hammer throw. She finished in the top 10 in all three events, coming in fourth, sixth and 10th respectively.

In the high jump, senior Katelyn O'Toole placed fourth with her highest leap recorded at five feet, one inch.

The women's relay teams gave a fair showing for the Minutewomen. The 4 x 400 team of Iaryn Trapp, Britt Canfield, Serdakowski and Britanny Bakanowski scored fourth place with a time of 4:07.50. The 4 x 100 team was made up of Brittany Bakanowski, Troyanah Evans, Dionise Miranda and Rosalind Murphy came in fifth place, ending the relay in 49.54 seconds.

Next Saturday the Minutemen and Minutewomen will host their final home meet of the season at the new UMass Track and Field Sports Facility.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

The Journalism Program Lecture Series on Broadcast and the Media

THE ALUMNI ALL-STAR CAREER NIGHT & ICE CREAM SOCIAL

Tuesday, April 24 2007
Ice Cream 5 PM, Panel 5:30-7 PM
THE BRUWAVE CAMPUS CENTER

Steve Buckley '79, Sports Columnist, The Boston Herald
Sandy Lish '87, Founder, The Castle Group
Maria Sacchetti '91, Reporter, The Boston Globe
Aaron Saykin '01, Reporter, The Pittsburgh Channel
Audie Cornish '01, Correspondent, National Public Radio

DON'T MISS THIS CHANCE TO HEAR ABOUT CAREERS IN JOURNALISM AND PUBLIC RELATIONS FROM SOME OF THE TOP PEOPLE IN THEIR FIELDS

This lecture is part of the Extra Credit Program and is funded by David '79 and Teena Kantor

No playoffs in sight for UM

Maroon and White eliminated from postseason contention

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team dropped a heartbreaker to the top team in the Atlantic 10, St. Bonaventure, 12-11 on Sunday. The Minutewomen played back-to-back road games, going 1-1 over the weekend with a win on Friday against Duquesne, 10-6.

The Minutewomen fall to 6-9 and 1-4 in the conference. They are officially out of the A-10 playoffs with Richmond and Temple earning three wins each. Even if the Minutewomen are able finish, 3-4, they lose the tiebreaker with Richmond and Temple.

St. Bonaventure (8-4, 5-0 A-10) made a second half comeback to maintain perfection in the A-10. Down 9-5, the Bonnies scored seven straight goals and held the Minutewomen scoreless in the final six minutes of the game.

Junior attack Kristina Twichell scored her ninth goal of the season by netting the game's first goal. The Bonnies countered by scoring two straight goals to take an early 2-1 lead. St. Bonaventure sophomore attack Katelyn Faas scored three goals in the first period, giving the Bonnies a 4-3 advantage at the break.

Faas' three goals gives her 45 on the season. She owns the school record when she scored 56 goals as a freshman.

Both teams had trouble finding the net in the first period, but good goaltending kept the scoring low. UMass senior goalkeeper Lauren McCarthy stopped eight shots, while S. Bonaventure junior goalkeeper Eboni Preston stopped six shots in the opening period.

The Minutewomen overpowered the Bonnies to start the second period. Ten seconds into the period, junior Kathleen Typadis scored to tie the game. The Bonnies recovered with a goal in the next minute. With the score 5-4, the Maroon and White scored five unanswered goals.

"We got some production from other people with [midfielder Samantha Sepulveda] and [defensemen] Erica [Shapiro], I think that helped us out," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said about her senior leaders. "They were part of our five-goal run to start the [second] half."

Sepulveda scored the last goal at the 20-minute mark before the Bonnies took over. The Bonnies then took the momentum from the Minutewomen, scoring seven goals over a 12-minute span of dominance.

"They got some huge draw controls," Venechanos said. "They were able to take up a huge chunk of the second half and it kind of took a lot out of us and when we came fighting back we just ran out of gas."

Down, 12-9, with 7:38 to go, Shapiro scored her first goal of the season. Almost a minute later, Typadis scored her 42nd goal of the season to pull within one. With 1:15 left in the game, Typadis took the team's final shot, but Preston saved what could have been the game-tying score.

"The draw is so crucial in a game and if you get the draw, either we or they scored and that was the difference right there," Venechanos said. "A couple of draws here or there and we could have maybe had an opportunity to stop their run, so you have to give them credit for that."

The Bonnies had 15 draw controls, as opposed to UMass' nine.

On Friday, the Minutewomen's defense stopped Duquesne (7-8, 2-2 A-10), allowing a season-low six goals. Sophomore midfielder Meghan Reddy emerged as the game's top point scorer, tallying a career-high five points (two goals, three assists). The Minutewomen took an early 3-1 lead halfway through the first period. Duquesne tied the game, scoring three straight goals, until Typadis tied the game at 4-4.

Staring in the second period, Duquesne took the lead, but the Minutewomen answered every run. Typadis and Twichell scored consecutive goals, giving the Maroon and White a 6-5 lead. The Dukes didn't make it easy on themselves; they committed six penalties (five yellow cards and one red card). The Dukes tied the game at 6-6, however, the Minutewomen had control of the game from then on, scoring the game's final four goals.

The Minutewomen offense controlled the ball in the second period by out-shooting the Dukes, 16-9.

Side Notes

With 11 saves against St. Bonaventure, McCarthy moves past Trish DiBenedetto for second all time in career saves with 430. Typadis scored her 42nd goal of the season. She is one goal short of tying her career high of 43.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu

UM ousted from conference tournament

Temple and Charlotte end season for Spiess and company

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts tennis team both entered and exited this past weekend's Atlantic 10 Tournament as the No. 4 seed.

After disposing of Saint Joseph's and Xavier on Friday, the Minutewomen (13-9, 4-3 Atlantic 10) dropped matches to eventual runner-up Temple and third place Charlotte on Saturday and Sunday, respectively.

Friday morning treated the Minutewomen well, as they defeated the Hawks 5-0.

The team had no trouble gaining the ever important doubles point. Dasa Stanimirovic and Stephanie Gimenez took an 8-0 decision at the second slot, while Maude Lecluyse and Laura Murillo were victors in an 8-2 decision.

Michele Spiess and Masha Pozar were leading 6-4 at the first spot, but many matches this weekend went unfinished due to time constraints for the tournament.

Spiess and Pozar stayed true to form and thoroughly dominated the Hawks' opposition. Spiess defeated Stephania Velazquez, 6-2, in straight sets, and Pozar beat Jen Kedzierski by an identical score.

The two other singles matches that finished came at the four and six positions. Maude Lecluyse shut out Gina DiGiacomo in the first set before closing the door and winning the second set, 6-4. Murillo won her match in impressive fashion as well, by besting Marisa Donelson, 6-2, 6-0.

The victory set up a showdown between UMass and the fifth ranked Xavier Musketeers (16-8) later that day.

UMass continued its success at the doubles point, and it later proved to be the deciding factor in the match.

Similar to the earlier match against St. Joe's, only two of these matches went the distance. Spiess and Pozar took an 8-6 decision over Jackie Vilines and Kara Courtney. Murillo and Lecluyse also teamed up again and scored a 6-3, 4-6, 6-4 victory over the Musketeers' Alicia Papa.

The 4-3 victory gave the Minutewomen a night to rest before their big match with the No. 1-seeded Temple Owls the following day.

Things started out bright for UMass, as it won the doubles point yet again.

Spiess and Pozar continued their winning ways with an 8-5 victory over the Owls' Yuri Kurashima and Christine Clermont. Stanimirovic and Gimenez were unable to net a victory at the middle spot, but Lecluyse and Murillo came up huge with a 9-7 victory over Anastasia Rukavyshnykova and Sharanya Pattabi.

Unfortunately for the Minutewomen, the singles play did not treat them so kindly.

The three through six singles positions were the only ones that were finalized, and UMass lost each one of them.

Lecluyse almost won the second set of her match but eventually ended up dropping it 7-5. Besides that, the other matches were not close.

"We came out flat against Temple in the semis," UMass coach Judy Dixon said. "We had used all of our energy the day before."

After the 4-1 loss, UMass found itself looking at a match for rights to third place against Charlotte.

The 49ers proved to be the toughest match of the weekend for the Minutewomen, as evidenced by the 4-0 loss.

Spiess and Pozar were unable to carry the team as they often do, and the rest of the team struggled.

The duo fell to Ana Spivakovsky and Ali Piacente, 8-5, in the doubles play.

Lecluyse and Murillo did not finish their match, as the point was already won by Charlotte after Koren Fleming and Michelle Alexander defeated Stanimirovic and Gimenez, 8-3.

Spiess fell 6-3, 6-3 to Spivakovsky at the No. 1. Stanimirovic was defeated 6-2, 6-1 in the third spot, and Lecluyse dropped her match 6-3, 6-2 at the fourth position.

Pozar was leading 6-2, 4-4 before her match was called. Gimenez and Murillo were also sharing a degree of success, as they were leading their matches 6-3, 0-5 and 6-1, 4-4, respectively.

Coach Dixon thought at least two of these matches could have been won, and was proud of the way her team performed.

"We just lost to a better team in Charlotte," Dixon said. "I'm really proud of the team and our entire season."

With the loss, UMass finished its season in fourth place. It has now finished in the top four in five consecutive seasons.

"We played the entire tournament without Ellen de Jong [the usual third singles player]," Dixon said. "We had no idea we would do this well."

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

UMass wins 12th straight A-10 Title

Dietz' squad clinches victory over URI in final event of day

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts crew team has done it again. UMass has won its 12th straight Atlantic 10 Title by the final score of 45-44. Even with winning only one event on the Cooper River Saturday, the Maroon and White rowed consistently throughout the day to come out with a win.

The boat that led the charge for the Minutewomen was the Quad, manned by Hannah Brewster, Ellen Maskrey, Haley Fitzgerald and captain Tara Guinan.

The event was won in the final slot of the day, which capped off the afternoon in dramatic fashion because the last event is what enabled UMass to edge out rival Rhode Island for conference supremacy.

UMass coach Jim Dietz was not quick to single out any one rower on the team as a reason for its success.

"Overall I have to be pleased because it was a total team effort," Dietz said. "And that's the main thing about our A-10 championship."

However it should be said that URI did not have as many boats in the competition as UMass. UMass had eight boats and URI had seven.

Throughout the day, UMass and Rhode Island dueled for the lead. In five races out of the eight that UMass boats participated in, URI prevailed, with the Minutewomen finishing second. The only other crew team to win a race was the record-setting Duquesne team that won the Lightweight Four race.

The UMass Lightweight Four made good time in its race, staying 3.4 seconds behind the leader. However, Duquesne set a course record with a first place finishing time of 7:56, a finish that, coupled with its other win in the Novice Four, vaulted it into a third place finish.

The UMass co-captains, Tara Guinan and Gabrielle Papineau, pulled their own weight in their respective races as well. Both women participated in multiple races, Guinan being a part of the gold medal Quad team as well as the Varsity Eight, and Papineau joined her co-captain as a part of the Varsity Eight race which was a mere four seconds behind the boat from Rhode Island. Papineau also participated in the Varsity Four race.

Dietz credited his captains with being emotional leaders that set the tone and the frame of mind that the team needed to be in, in order to be able to win the A-10 championship.

"They really sent a message to the team on what a big deal it is to win the team championship," Dietz said. "We had a lot of happy kids jumping around the boat trailer at the finish line when we were getting our trophy."

Even with the big day that the Minutewomen had, Rhode Island had a few things to boast about as well. URI coach Shelagh Donohoe was named A-10 women's rowing Coach of the Year. Also, Rhode Island took first place in every varsity event, a feat never before accomplished in conference history.

Now with a week to rest and to compose themselves, the Minutewomen will look to build on their current success in two weeks at the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference Championships. UMass will look to defend its title in Worcester on May 5, where it again will face Rhode Island on the road to a sixth straight Metro Cup.

Again, the Maroon and White is currently faced with poor water conditions and may possibly be off the water for an extended period of time. This time cannot be made up and it will force the team to alter its training regimen to compensate for its losses.

Although the Minutewomen are basking in their current success, Dietz has articulated that his squad still has something to prove. He stated in other words that although his team has performed admirably, it has yet to perform to the best of its abilities.

"We still want to demonstrate [that] we're a faster crew than we've been showing," Dietz said.

At last year's ECACs, the Maroon and White beat out 20 other teams en route to a fifth straight ECAC title at that time. The Minutewomen won three races on Lake Quinasigamond. UMass won the Varsity Eight, Second Varsity Eight and Novice Eight races.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

MOVING ON? POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL

Save 10% off your truck or cargo van rental
Coupon must be presented at time of deposit and reservation
Coupon applies to Potter's vehicles only

- Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston and New York
- One Way Rentals
- Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
- Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale

The Economical Way To Move
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

Check out the Daily Collegian Sports Blog at:

www.dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of your favorite UMass teams.

TAKE A PHOTO OF YOURSELF WITH YOUR COMPLETED SUDOKU OR CROSSWORD AND SET YOURSELF COMICS BY:
COLLEGIANCOMICS@YAHOO.COM

Free Delivery to UMass Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

	1		8	3		4
4					2
		2		5	8
	5	9		1	6
8						3
	2	5		3		9
	1	7		3
	6					5
9		5	4		2

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Wild party
5 Shoshones
9 Heroin/kewadling bird
14 Mature
15 Shaker contents
16 Slalom incline
17 Resourceful
19 Uses as a reference
20 Jug or reel
21 Decorates with a raised design
23 ___ and crafts
26 Ilk
27 Distinct parts
31 Knights' chargers
35 Santa ___ winds
36 Seat at a bar
38 Type of drum
39 "Blue Horses" artist
41 Sneaker bottoms
43 Put away cargo
44 Central Florida city
46 Turner and Brown
48 "All About ___"
49 Be present at 51 Shaded
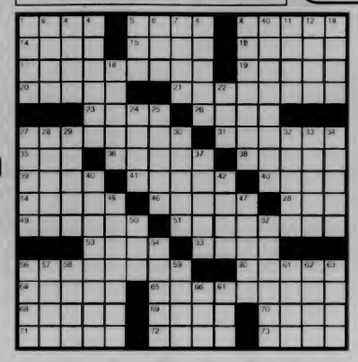
53 Sara and Farrow
55 Jib, e.g.
56 Estimated value for taxes
60 Positive thinking proponent
64 Plainsong
65 Spiral
68 Kemo Sabe's friend
69 "Star Trek: TNG" character
70 Fork point
71 Painter Jan
72 Dune material
73 Give guff to

DOWN
1 Actor Pitt
2 Actress Turturro
3 Duration
4 Cool dude
5 "Born in the ___"
6 Bar bill
7 Glamour rival
8 Parts of pipes
9 Accompanies
10 Shines
11 Goes bad
12 Fencing sword
13 Actress Harper
18 Copley and Garr
22 Derek and Diddley
24 Day-care charges
25 Nose
27 Pago Pago's country
28 Make into law
29 Gem weight
30 Firm
32 Consumed
33 Took the wheel
34 Stitched up
37 Horne and Olin
40 San ___ CA
42 Poet Teasdale
45 "Friends" co-star
47 Omits
50 "___ Kapital"
52 Votes in
54 Offshoot groups
56 Play divisions
57 Injection
58 Rational
59 Mrs. Copperfield
61 Opera song
62 Eye part
63 Rams' mates
66 Gadgeteer Popeil
67 Goat's offspring

DELANO'S
$5 PITCHERS
$2 VODKA WELL DRINKS
GET YOUR BUTT DOWNTOWN!
"The Heart of downtown Amherst"



Continuing & Professional Education
UMass Amherst Summer 2007
Here are a few of the many Gen. Ed. classes offered this summer
Online
• English 132: Man and Woman in Literature
• Psych 350: Child Psychology
On Campus
• Math 131: Calculus I
• Art 104: Basic Studio Drawing
I: June 4 – July 2
II: July 6 – August 22
Register Now!
By visiting us at www.UMassLearn.net.de

Quote of the Day

"I'd rather be bald on top than bald inside."

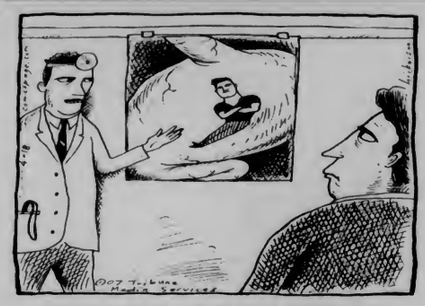
-Joe Garagiola

The Family Monster By Josh Shafer

I demand respect!
First you need dignity
Carry yourself with dignity and others will respect you
Oh, and one more thing
You can't have dignity AND cake

Welcome To Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shafer

The Quigmans By Buddy Hickerson



"This is probably what's been irritating your stomach. At some point, you must have swallowed a miniature Simon Cowell."

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Do us all a favor and get that mildly offensive mole checked out.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
It is highly desirable to be well paid and un-fireable.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Rub Icy Hot all over your errogenous zones for a cool Jamaican breeze.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Buy a pinata for everyday of this week. Your candy cup will runneth over.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Expand your insult prowess by learning to cuss in at least three new languages.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Sometimes it's nice to unplug your life and sit in the light of odiferous candles.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Never get a haircut without fully researching the depth perception of your barber.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
It doesn't matter what (or who) you do today as long as you do it with gumption.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Here is a trick question: How do you do a kickflip?

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
If you digested words as well as you digest food you wouldn't be hungry right now.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
If you need some TLC and your roomy is asleep just find a prostitutional mime.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
It is quite warm so remember to stay hydrated and go commando.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES... LIKE NO OTHER!
Now open for lunch!
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 11am-2am
Thurs-Sat: 11am-3am
Order for DELIVERY or PICK UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Like no other course, Army ROTC Join the wave of your generation's willingness to serve our country No strings attached! Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Apartments for Rent

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1125, 3 bedroom $1425, 4 bedroom $2175 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Employment

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commesurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must call 413-584-4746

Marketers wanted for part time work during school. Earn $15/hr + bonus. Email: rdonaldson@collegepro.com

Need a summer job? College Pro painters is hiring. Work with friends, steady hours, learn a valuable skill. Must be willing to work in the following areas: Milford, Millbury, Grafton, Auburn. Interviewers being held now. Please email collegepronorthbridge@yahoo.com

Employment

Full time positions available in your hometown. Earn $8-12/hour Painting houses with a fun crew. Call 888-277-9787 or www.collegepro.com

Camp Pontiac, a premier co-ed overnight camp in New York, is looking for fun, enthusiastic and mature individuals who can teach and assist in all areas of athletics, aquatics, the arts, or as a general bunk counselor. View our website at www.camppontiac.com. If interested simply fill out the application in the staff section, email Stefanie@camppontiac.com or call Stefanie at 516-626-7668

Brandywine Apts. Needs a certified lifeguard. Full time hours flexible. Must work some weekends. $9.00/hr Call 549-0600 or stop by office.

Employment

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Nights and weekends. Apply at DP Dough. Downtown Amherst.

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Personal

For the coed who met Dr. Ben the speedskater on the bus. Please call 413-256-1589

Room for Rent

Amherst nice house on bus route to all colleges. 2 rooms available immediately. Each 450 mo + electric. Call Ally 413-253-4929 leave message or call 413-626-7491

Roommate Wanted

Cape Cod Seeking summer roommates starting 6/10 Yarmouth, MA near beach. Female only. 617-519-0178

Services

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Legal questions? We have answers. Contact Student Legal Services office 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Wanted

EGG DONORS NEEDED $10,000(Plus expenses) We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1300+ (math+verbal) Physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more information please contact us. Email: Darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

Submit your classified online! just visit www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, APRIL 23, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Hoyas hold on

UMass rally falls short against G'Town

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This season just wasn't meant to be for the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team. All hopes of returning to the NCAA Tournament were likely lost in the Minutemen's 8-7 defeat to Georgetown at Garber Field Saturday.

G'Town	8
UMass	7

A season-high 3,107 fans watched a late UMass (5-6, 3-2 ECAC) rally fall just short of pushing this rivalry's latest edition to overtime.

The Minutemen have three games left on their schedule, including a trip to Fairfield, Conn., tomorrow to take on the Stags at 3 p.m.

Saturday's game was a mirror image of how the season has gone for the Maroon and White: superb efforts from the defense and goaltender Doc Schneider (11 saves) overshadowed by missed opportunities and lack of offense.

UMass coach Greg Cannella said he was disappointed for his players, but said the Minutemen again displayed their inability to put together four quarters of solid lacrosse.

"You get pretty close and that's disappointing," said Cannella of not being able to come all the way back. "I've said it before, you can

See M. LAX on page 7

BRIAN HEDGE/COLLEGIAN

Senior midfielder Brian Jacovina had four assists in UMass' 8-7 loss to Georgetown on Saturday afternoon. Jacovina leads the Minutemen with 15 assists and ranks fourth with 19 points. He has also scored four goals in 11 games this season.

Playoff hopes slim following recent loss

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A wall of blue jerseys stood between the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team and the postseason.

Saturday's 1 p.m. matchup with the Hoyas of Georgetown had all the makings of another Garber Field gem – two rival teams, good crowd, good weather, a season on the line. At least UMass' season was.

The Minutemen had to win Saturday to have a shot to win the ECAC title. UMass entered the weekend with a 3-1 record in conference. The Hoyas were 4-0, and a UMass win would've got the men in maroon a nice hold on first place in the division – an identical 4-1 record with GU, but with the benefit of the sacred tiebreaker.

So there was a lot on the line Saturday, and the game was as good as the California-like weather.

The Minutemen were on the wrong end of an 8-7 final score, courtesy of a tenacious Georgetown defense that out-muscled UMass' front line into one of its lowest offensive outputs of the season.

"You really need to limit your unforced turnovers," said senior captain Brett Garber, who finished the day with two goals and one assist. "[The Hoyas] did an unbelievable job riding us and putting pressure on the ball."

The guys in blue chased the Minutemen all over the green turf of Garber Field and forced 16 turnovers, including two from Garber and three from midfielder Rory Pedrick. UMass

See PLAYOFFS on page 7

Minutemen win two of three

Lloyd and Cassidy pick up wins, but Explorers avoid the sweep

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In three games this weekend against La Salle, the Massachusetts baseball team allowed 44 Explorers to reach base – counting hits, walks and hit batsmen – while only having 21 base runners of its own. In the series, La Salle charged Minutemen pitching with 10 earned runs, compared to just the one they were charged with.

But in the end, the only statistic that truly mattered over the course of the weekend was wins and losses, and the Minutemen got the last laugh in that department – winning two of three from the Explorers, despite losing, 6-1, Sunday afternoon at Earl Lorden Field.

"We need to look at the fact that we did win two out of three," captain Bryan Garrity said. "Our primary goal every weekend is that we want to win the series. But being up two games to nothing going into the last day, we should have taken [game three]. But apparently we just didn't come ready to play."

On Friday, La Salle (14-20, 6-9 Atlantic 10) appeared to be the team not ready to play, committing four errors en route to a 6-5 loss. The Minutemen (11-17, 6-9 A-10) took advantage once again of Explorers miscues a day later, winning 4-1 on Saturday behind a stellar pitching performance from Jim Cassidy.

With the score tied, 1-1, on Saturday, UMass broke the game open in the fourth inning, scoring three unearned runs off of starter Kenny Elkind. The big blow in the inning came when Brian Baudinet stroked a two-out triple down the right-field line, plating two runs and increasing the lead to 4-1.

Cassidy took care of the rest, pitching into the eighth inning and

See BASEBALL on page 7

MS HAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

Chris Lloyd picked up his third win of the season in Friday's 6-5 win over La Salle. U Mass plays in the Beanpot consolation game Wednesday.

Rough third inning ends hope of sweep

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

You've heard it all before. Momentum in baseball is only as good as your next starting pitcher.

The Massachusetts baseball team learned that firsthand yesterday afternoon, falling one win short of its first series sweep of the season in a 6-1 loss to La Salle in the final game of the three-game set at Earl Lorden Field.

UMass won the first two games of the weekend, and was eyeing its first three-game winning streak of the year. That all changed in the third inning.

Freshman Jared Freni made his seventh start of the season on Sunday, but the team's momentum didn't last much longer.

Freni allowed only one hit heading into the third, and suffered from major control issues from there on out. After retiring the first batter of the inning, he loaded the bases on a walk, a single and a hit batsman.

La Salle had a 2-0 lead on two consecutive walks afterwards. Freni then committed a balk that scored the Explorers' third run.

"I just started trying to aim the ball," Freni said. "I was trying to take a little bit off my fastball, and started rushing and leaning forward when I was pitching. I just have to stop doing that. I have good mechanics. I just have to stop thinking about it."

With runners on second and third after the balk, La Salle catcher Mike Dertouzos singled through the left side on a 2-2 pitch that scored the Explorers' fourth run of the inning.

"I just didn't think he was in sync rhythm-wise from the start," UMass coach Mike Stone said on Freni's performance. "His release point was not consistent. Even with his fastball, he wasn't letting the ball come out of his hand."

"I just didn't get the job done," Freni said. "I felt fine. I felt really good. It was the best my arm has felt all year. I just didn't do my job."

Stone pulled Freni after Dertouzos' single in favor of sophomore Mike Dicato, who got the Minutemen out of

See FRENI on page 7

Junior second baseman Stacy Cullington hit two home runs on Saturday, increasing her team-leading total to 10. She reached base safely in all eight of her plate appearances in UMass' two-game sweep of Temple.

Total team effort propels UM

Minutewomen extend win streak to 15 games in Philly

BY JOE MELONE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts softball team proved it is just that this weekend – a team.

The Minutewomen (26-12-1, 12-0 Atlantic 10) received contributions from the entire lineup in winning all four of their games in Philadelphia this weekend.

Yesterday, the Minutewomen swept a doubleheader from Saint Joseph's (22-27, 7-6 A-10), 10-2 and 8-0, after taking both ends of a two-game set from Temple (13-16, 7-5 A-10) on Friday, 5-1, and Saturday, 7-4.

UMass is now off until Wednesday when it welcomes Connecticut to the UMass Softball Complex. This was originally scheduled to be the back end of a home-and-home with the Huskies, but the April 17 game wasn't played due to poor field conditions at UConn.

Freshman Bailey Sanders and sophomore ace Brandice Balschmiter each won two games for the Minutewomen. The pair allowed seven total runs in the four games, only one of which was earned.

"[Sanders] is doing very well, I really couldn't ask for more," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "She's worked harder than any other player for us this year. She's certainly faced adversity and she's kept her head on."

The UMass defense struggled, making five errors in the four games. Freshman shortstop Whitney Williams committed three of the Minutewomen's miscues. Her 13 on the season ties her with her double-play partner – junior second baseman Stacy Cullington – for the team lead.

The pair did more than enough to make amends for its defensive problems. Cullington homered twice in Saturday's game with the Owls, giving her 10 on the season. Williams went 3-for-7 with two RBIs from the nine spot in UMass' batting order. The freshman's batting average rests at .290 after the four games this weekend.

"It was our goal for the year that we would have a potent offense one through nine," Sortino said. "I felt like we had the ability to generate offense throughout our order. I feel like we're making better decisions and swinging at better pitches."

In Sunday's second game against St. Joe's, a three-run top of the fifth inning gave UMass an 8-0 lead, ending the game due to run rule after Sanders struck out the side in bottom of the inning.

St. Joe's aided the three-run rally with shoddy defense and poor decision making. Second baseman Cori Bower booted what looked like an easy play, allowing junior Lauren Proctor to reach first base.

See SOFTBALL on page 8

F.A.Q.

CAN ANYBODY JOIN A FRATERNITY OR SORORITY?

FRATERNITY AND SORORITY MEMBERSHIP IS OPEN TO ALL FULL-TIME UNDERGRADUATE STUDENTS. HOWEVER, SOME CHAPTERS DO HAVE REQUIREMENTS THAT MUST BE MET BEFORE ONE MAY BE CONSIDERED FOR MEMBERSHIP: GRADE POINT AVERAGES, SEMESTER HOURS COMPLETED, AN INTAKE PROCESS, ETC.. BEFORE YOU JOIN, LEARN EVERYTHING YOU CAN ABOUT THE FRATERNITY OR SORORITY THAT INTERESTS YOU, AS IT IS IMPORTANT THAT YOU FEEL COMFORTABLE AND HAPPY WITH THE DECISION YOU MAKE.

IF I JOIN A FRATERNITY OR SORORITY, DO I HAVE TO LIVE IN THE CHAPTER HOUSE?

NOT EVERY CHAPTER ON CAMPUS HAS A FACILITY/HOUSE. FOR THOSE WITH FACILITIES, EACH ONE HAS ITS OWN HOUSING REQUIREMENTS AND PROCESSES. FIRST YEAR STUDENTS ARE NOT ALLOWED TO MOVE INTO A CHAPTER FACILITY (UNIVERSITY POLICY.)

IF I JOIN A CHAPTER, AM I GOING TO GET HAZED?

HAZING IS A VIOLATION OF COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS LAWS AND UNIVERSITY POLICIES. EVERY NATIONAL FRATERNITY AND SORORITY HAS BANNED HAZING, AND EACH CHAPTER IS OBLIGATED TO COMPLY WITH THESE REGULATIONS. MOST CHAPTERS HAVE A NEW MEMBER PROGRAM (A.K.A. PLEDGE PROGRAM) WHERE THE NEW MEMBERS LEARN WHAT IT MEANS TO BE A MEMBER OF THE CHAPTER.

HOW MUCH DOES IT COST TO JOIN A FRATERNITY OR SORORITY?

EACH CHAPTER SETS ITS OWN FEES FOR JOINING AND FOR HOUSING. THERE ARE USUALLY NATIONAL DUES, AN INITIATION FEE, AND LOCAL COSTS WHEN ONE JOINS A CHAPTER. HOUSING COSTS ARE COMPARABLE TO ON-CAMPUS COSTS, AT TIMES EVEN LESS EXPENSIVE. MOST CHAPTERS WILL PROVIDE THIS INFORMATION DURING THE RECRUITMENT PROCESS.

Go Greek!

GREEK WEEK STARTS TODAY!

Questions?
Contact panhel@stuaf.umass.edu·545-2712·www.umass.edu/greek

Social
OUR HIPS DON'T LIE... WE HAVE DATE PARTIES, FORMALS, MIXERS, CRUSH PARTIES, AND AN OVERNIGHT DANCE MARATHON.

Leadership
FRATERNITIES AND SORORITIES OFFER THE OPPORTUNITY FOR LEADERSHIP EXPERIENCES THAT CAN ENRICH A LIFE ON CAMPUS AND BEYOND... ADD THAT TO THE VARIETY OF NETWORKING OPPORTUNITES OFFERED BY GREEK ALUMNI AND YOU'LL BE SET TO WALK THE PATHWAY TO A SUCCESSFUL FUTURE.

Scholarship
WITH OVER 50% OF GREEKS' GPAS AVERAGING ABOVE THE ALL CAMPUS AVERAGE, THE GREEK HONORS SOCIETY, ORDER OF OMEGA, MAINTAINED A CUM GPA OF 3.6 LAST SPRING.

Homestyle Eating
WHETHER IT'S A GREEK BARBECUE, MONTHLY POTLUCK DINNER, OR A HOME COOKED MEAL BY YOUR OWN CHAPTER'S CHEF, WE DON'T EAT THE SAME OLD THING EVERYDAY.

GREEK WEEK

ΑΧΩ · ΑΕΦ · ΧΩ · ΙΓΥ
ΚΚΓ · ΣΑΤ · ΣΚ · ΑΔΦ
ΑΕΠ · ΑΥ · ΛΦΕ · ΦΣΚ · ΠΚΑ
ΠΚΦ · ΣΦΕ · ΣΤΓ · ΘΧ

ΖΒΤ · ΣΨ · ΣΓΡ · ΣΦΒ
ΑΚΑ · ΙΦΘ · ΚΑΨ · ΩΨΦ
ΦΒΣ · ΔΣΘ · ΚΦΛ · ΣΨΖ · ΦΙΑ
ΓΦΣ · ΑΥΛ · ΠΑΨ · ΑΞΦ

2007

NO EXCUSES... PLAY LIKE A CHAMPION.

Athletics
WHETHER ALL GREEK COMPETITIONS INCLUDING DODGEBALL, KICKBALL, VOLLEYBALL, SOFTBALL INTRAMURALS, FLAG FOOTBALL, OR MEETING UP WITH OTHER CHAPTERS AT UMASS SPORTING EVENTS, GREEKS WORK HARD AND PLAY HARD.

Support
A NATIONAL STUDY FOUND THAT THE ACADEMIC MENTORING AND LIFE SUPPORT OFFERED TO MEMBERS BY THEIR FRATERNITY OR SORORITY RESULTS IN GREEKS BEING MORE LIKELY TO STAY IN SCHOOL AND GRADUATE THAN THEIR NON-GREEK PEERS.

Brother & Sisterhood
MEMBERSHIP IN GREEK LIFE OFFERS A "HOME AWAY FROM HOME" FEELING AND LIFELONG FRIENDSHIPS UNPARALLELED BY ANY OTHER STUDENT GROUP.

Helping Hand
GREEKS FORM THE LARGEST NATIONAL NETWORK OF VOLUNTEERS, DONATING ROUGHLY 10 MILLION HOURS OF VOLUNTEER SERVICE PER YEAR IN THE UNITED STATES.

Greek Week Schedule

FRIDAY, APRIL 20, 2007
RELAY FOR LIFE 4:30PM
AMHERST COLLEGE TRACK

SUNDAY, APRIL 22, 2007
LIP SYNC 8:00PM
CAMPUS CENTER AUDITORIUM

MONDAY, APRIL 23, 2007
RELAY RACE 3:00PM
CAMPUS POND

TUESDAY, APRIL 24, 2007
DODGEBALL TOURNEY 4:30PM
SOUTHWEST HORSESHOE
MOVIE NIGHT 8:00PM
MAHAR

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 25, 2007
TUG-O-WAR/BBQ 3:00PM
THETA CHI
TRIVIA 7:00PM
BLUE WALL

THURSDAY, APRIL 26, 2007
OSCAR NIGHT 8:30PM
NEWMAN CENTER CAFÉ

2007

A SPECIAL THANKS TO STUDENT AFFAIRS AND CAMPUS LIFE, OFFICE OF THE VICE CHANCELLOR

"No matter the letter,

Greek Week

Greek Week is a schedule of events planned by the governing councils in which fraternity and sorority teams compete against each other in various activities. At least one major philanthropic event is part of the Greek Week schedule each year. The winning team is announced at the end of the week at the All-Greek Semiformal.

iRelay

Relay for Life

The 5th Annual Relay For Life® of the Five College Area is a fun-filled overnight event designed to bring together those who have been touched by cancer in the Five College Area. It was voted Best Charity Event by the Valley Advocate Readers' Poll for 2005 and 2006.
The largest group to participate was UMass fraternities and sororities.

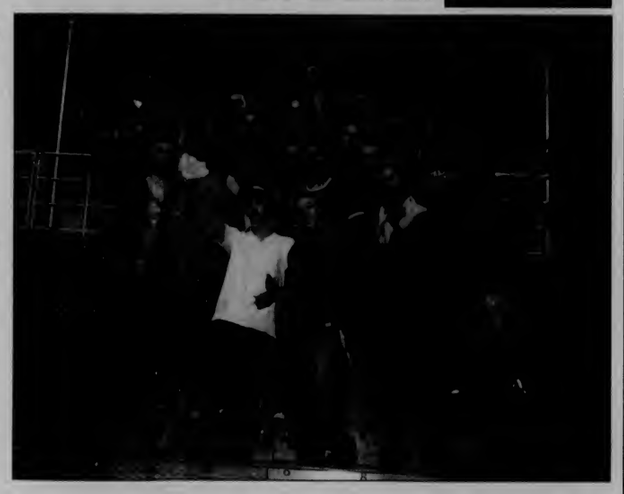
Shelter Sunday

On a Sunday in October, volunteers gather on the Amherst Town Common and collect donations. Last year approximately $26,000 was collected and distributed to organizations that serve our neighbors in need.
The largest group to participate was UMass fraternities and sororities.

UNIVERSITY OF Massachusetts Amherst

UDance

DANCE MARATHON FUNDRAISER TO BENEFIT CHILDREN'S MIRACLE NETWORK



OVER $10,000 RAISED

FOR THE CHILDREN'S MIRACLE NETWORK!

UDance was established to help children with various injuries and illnesses through the Children's Miracle Network. It is a fourteen-hour long dance marathon that blends dancing, music, games, food, and entertainment into an experience where students and the surrounding community raise funds for Baystate Children's Hospital in Springfield, MA.
UDance is put on by the Greek community and other student organizations at the University of Massachusetts Amherst and part of one of the world's largest student-run philanthropies.

Greeks do it better"

UMass attacks Fairfield
Page 10

Check out the OCMP Dining Out Guide in tomorrow's paper!

The Massachusetts

Daily Collegian

New England's Largest College Daily Est 1890

SUNNY : Hi: 71 Lo: 37 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday, April 24, 2007

Amherst celebrates Israel's independence

Nearly 1,000 people filled the Amherst Town Common to commemorate Israel's independence in the Upper Pioneer Valley Yom Haatzmaut Celebration. The event was sponsored by Upper Pioneer Valley and organized by members of UMass Hillel, Student Alliance for Israel and Jewish Student Union. Popular Israeli music group Asaf Amdursky & Band played live music at the celebration.

CRC hosts ganja festival

By Wes Rapin
Collegian Staff

Throngs of people gathered in the Amherst Common Saturday afternoon for the 16th annual Extravaganja. The event, organized by the University of Massachusetts Cannabis Reform Coalition (CRC), is centered on the message that the social cost of the war on drugs outweighs the benefits, and drug laws, specifically those pertaining to marijuana, need to be changed.

"We made the laws, and we can change them," said John Werner, the president of the UMass CRC, to the crowd.

Werner cited some of the problems marijuana laws cause college-aged people. A law in Massachusetts states that if a student has a single narcotics offense on record, he/she is ineligible for financial aid.

"People are being kept out of college for small infractions," Werner said. He said that when people are jailed for marijuana offenses, it's harder to find a job when they're released. In turn, this may cause them to turn to crime.

The laws also take resources away from combating more dangerous drugs.

"I think there are drugs that are dangerous, and marijuana is not one of them," said Werner. "No one has ever

See CRC on page 3

Student promotes Card protest by e-mail

UMass senior gains access to administrative e-mail address

By Eden Unver & Cara Grannemann
Collegian Staff

Before the former White House Chief of Staff Andy Card visited the University of Massachusetts, every member of the English department, including student English majors and professors, opened their e-mail accounts to read a letter promoting a protest to be held at the lecture itself. This mass e-mail was sent from a UMass student.

According to UMass' Office of Information Technologies (OIT), mass emailing to a major is password-protected and for administrator use only. But somehow, two e-mails were sent explaining the protest's details, along with two other e-mails claiming that the previous two were "mistakes."

The first e-mail was sent on Sunday, April 8 at 4:39 p.m. to all English majors and professors by UMass senior Mark Gallagher.

The e-mail stated, "Massive demonstration at Andy Card lecture, Wednesday, April 11, at 11 a.m. in the Student Union Ballroom."

Senior Mark Gallagher promoted a protest against Andy Card, who spoke at UMass on April 11, 2007, by sending out a mass e-mail to everyone in the English department without authorization from the administration.

Another e-mail was sent several minutes later in which Gallagher apologized for the previous message, stating, "Sorry, that message about the Protest planned at the Former Bush White House Chief of Staff Andrew Card was intended for UMass Amherst Students for Peace. Sorry again about the mix-up."

Gallagher then sent another e-mail three days later on Wednesday, April 11, stating something akin to the first, followed by another apology e-mail.

According to OIT, it was impossible for Gallagher to mass email English majors without an administrator password.

"I think you have to be added in from an administrator. An administrator would have to un-moderate you in order for you to send out the mailing list," said a representative at OIT. "The student that sent out the e-mail must have been un-moderated by someone."

Gallagher, however, said that his e-mailing was the result of an accident.

"I meant to send out an e-mail to UMass Students for Peace," he said. "I accidentally sent the announcement about the demonstration to the English major list-serve. The English department has a mailing list to communicate items of interest to students in the major and it is available to all English majors – there's no password involved."

According to Colleen Wetzel of the Undergraduate English department, "Through an oversight, this student was

See EMAIL on page 3

College students say excess video game use not same as addiction

By Michelle Morgan
Mustang Daily (Cal Poly)

SAN LUIS OBISPO, Calif.

Although video game addiction is a disputed form of psychological addiction, the effects of overuse of these games are not. Like almost any substance on earth, too much can hurt a person's life, relationships and career. In small amounts however, gaming is a recreation that many Americans enjoy.

For Cal Poly computer engineering junior Nelson Monterroso, healthy gaming involves using it as an addition to his social life, rather than a crutch.

"It's kind of a social thing; you make friends in games and then end up talking about things outside of the game," Monterroso said.

Monterroso used to be an avid player of the massively multiplayer online game "World of Warcraft," called "WoW" by fans.

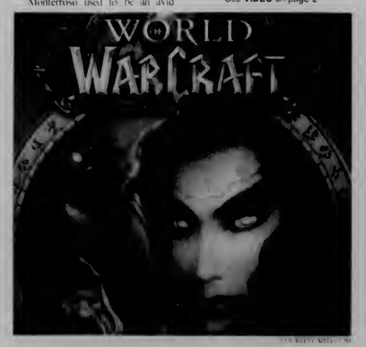
He said he could easily spend several hours playing the game without becoming bored. This factor led him to slightly abuse the game, and he admitted that sometimes he neglected school because he enjoyed the game so much.

"There was an obvious slip in my motivation, and I would skip class sometimes," Monterroso said.

Monterroso pointed out that during this time period he also missed class for reasons other than video gaming, leading him to believe the game wasn't the only cause of his slipping grades.

He said he can definitely see that

See VIDEO on page 2



Students argue that spending hours and skipping classes to play video games shouldn't be considered addiction but rather a social activity.

'Slacking' is a way of life for students

By Stephanie Hodges
The Battalion (Texas A&M)

COLLEGE STATION, Texas

Even before Matthew Broderick rocked the nation with "Ferris Bueller's Day Off," high school and college students have been fascinated with the idea of skipping class.

Fears about grades and professor approval lead to most students limit their skipping to a few times each week. However, for a certain group of students – known to those around them as "slackers" – attending class is not only overrated, but completely unnecessary.

"I skip class at least once a day," said Max Marshall, a freshman chemistry major at Texas A&M University. "I have probably 20 classes a week, and I attend four of those 20 classes. But if someone's struggling in a class, they should go to class. It's obvious that they can't live a lifestyle that some people can, and that's the main thing: recognizing whether you can do that or not."

Ryan Schroeder, a senior engineering technology major, realized later in his college career that he was not suited for this lifestyle.

"Now I pretty much go every day," he said. "When I was a freshman and sophomore, I'd skip probably half of the time at least. My grades didn't do too great, and I learned I couldn't do that for a while. Eventually I learned that I had to start going to class."

Professors agreed some students are capable of attending very infrequently and getting a high grade, while others like Schroeder had to learn the hard way.

"You always have a couple students who are just really smart or really have a good system in place for skipping class the whole semester and still manage to do well," said Denise Jodlowski, a communication graduate instructor. "But I think those are the minority. For the most part, the students who don't show up don't know the material and are reluctant to talk to other people about it because they're embarrassed that they don't show up to class, so they feel bad asking for notes from other people."

For Schroeder, different activities kept him from attending class. He said a busy schedule kept him out of the

See SLACKERS on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
issue 123

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Eric Athas
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sherel Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jaimeson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Adam Stagin
Editorial Editor Tucker Merrick
News Editor Matt Belliveau
Sports Editor Danny Picard
Sports Editor Jon Pelland
Features Editor Melissa D'Amico
Circulation Manager Jeff Pentz
Asst. Business Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Nicole Puddester
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Sydnee Towne
Assistant News Anna Dolianitis
Assistant News Nicole Boonjakuakul
Assistant Editorial Brendan Hall
Assistant Sports Jeremy Rice
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1934 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Belliveau

COPY EDITOR
Jamie Mason

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Tiffany Van Langen

Correction

In the April 23, 2007 issue of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, the story, "VT shooter sparks concern of depression" said about 200 students use Mental Health Services at UHS because of misinformation. The number of students that use these services is actually 2,000.

Emmanuel College professor fired for Va. Tech discussion

BOSTON — An adjunct professor was fired after leading a classroom discussion about the Virginia Tech shootings in which he pointed a marker at some students and said "pow."

The five-minute demonstration at Emmanuel College on Wednesday, two days after a student killed 32 people on the Virginia Tech campus, included a discussion of gun control, whether to respond to violence with violence, and the public's "celebration of victimhood," said the professor, Nicholas Winset.

During the demonstration, Winset pretended to shoot some students. Then one student pretended to shoot Winset to illustrate his point that the gunman might have been stopped had another student or faculty member been armed.

"A classroom is supposed to be a place for academic exploration," Wimset, who taught financial accounting, told the Boston Herald.

He said administrators had asked the faculty to engage students on the issue. But on Friday, he got a letter saying he was fired and ordering him to stay off campus.

Winset, 37, argued that the Catholic liberal arts school was stifling free discussion by firing him, and he said the move would have a "chilling effect" on open debate. He posted an 18-minute video on the online site YouTube defending his action.

The college issued a statement saying: "Emmanuel College has clear standards of classroom and campus conduct, and does not in any way condone the use of discriminatory or obscene language."

Student Junny Lee, 19, told The Boston Globe that most students didn't appear to find Winset's demonstration offensive.

Associated Press

'Girls Gone Wild' founder gets jail time for filming minors

By Melissa Nelson
Associated Press

PANAMA CITY — Blowing his nose and wiping away tears, the multimillionaire founder of the "Girls Gone Wild" video empire pleaded guilty to contempt of court Monday and was sentenced to 35 days in jail.

Joe Francis, who is being sued by seven women who were minors when filmed, apologized to the judge for yelling at the plaintiffs during settlement talks.

"I am sorry for my behavior. It was wrong. I had heard about appeals and things and I was confused. I am sorry, I really am," said Francis, 34.

Francis drew the contempt charge during negotiations to settle the federal lawsuit brought after his production company filmed the women at Panama City Beach in 2003.

Attorneys for the women said Francis, who makes a reported $29 million a year taping topless women for his videos, lost his temper in negotiations and yelled obscenities at them.

U.S. District Judge Richard Smoak ordered Francis to settle the case or go to jail for contempt of court. When talks fell through, Francis lashed out at Smoak in the media, calling him a "judge gone wild" and questioning the judge's authority to order a settlement.

Smoak had ordered Francis to surrender to U.S. marshals by April 5 and begin serving time on the contempt charge. He did not return to Panama City from his California home until April 10, when authorities met him at the airport.

Francis has since reached an undisclosed settlement with the seven women. Francis had told The Associated Press that they wanted $70 million to settle the case.

Francis has said the women lied about their ages.

Joe Francis, the head of the 'Girls Gone Wild' empire.

Girl, 13, is texting champion

By James Hossack
Associated Press

NEW YORK — It's a sport only for the fleet of thumb with a ruthless dedication to punctuation.

And while competitive text messaging may not have quite gained Olympic status, the hundreds of mostly teenagers who took part in the US championships in New York, Saturday, could think of little but the $25 thousand prize money.

Some 250 challengers shunned the warmest day of the year for a dark ballroom where they battled it out for a chance to take on the reigning West Coast champion, 21-year-old Eli Tirosh, for the title of US Texting Champion.

Contestants had to stand with their hands behind their backs until a bell sounded and a message appeared on an overhead screen. The winner was judged on whoever's message – checked for exact punctuation – reached the judges first.

The text tests ranged from "faster than a speeding bullet..." and "what we do in life echoes in eternity" to the less poetic "OMG, nd 2 talk asap," which for those over 30 means "Oh my God, need to talk as soon as possible."

The 250 competitors were quickly whittled down to eight semi finalists, one of whom, Anne Finn, 24, of Allegany, New York, said the pressure was too much.

"It was so nerve wracking. My hands started to shake. I couldn't get my apostrophe," she said.

In the end, 13-year-old Morgan Pozgar faced off against Michael "Cheeser" Nguyen in the east coast final, with Pozgar slipping past her challenger to face west coast champion Tirosh, a law student from Los Angeles.

"I just wasn't fast enough," said Nguyen, a 23-year-old engineer from Pennsylvania. Asked how it felt to take second place, he was clearly disappointed: "I just got beaten by a teenage girl, but you know."

Tirosh, who said she practiced with her friend and trainer Amy, who threw out random words or symbols and even motivational Buddhist quotes, admitted to feeling a certain pressure due to the home side advantage.

Wearing a satin boxing robe before her championship bout against Pozgar, she said success would come down to who could marry lightning speed and accuracy.

"It's all about the thumbwork," she said. "It's about balance." She said she owed her success to relaxation and deep breathing.

So dedicated is she to the art of the text message that Tirosh apparently unwittingly uses abbreviations such as BTW (by the way), TTYL (talk to you later) and LOL (laughing out loud) in her normal speech.

Pozgar said she trained by sending on average 8,000 text messages a month to her friends – an astonishing rate of one every five and a half minutes. She pays 10 dollars a month for an unlimited text package on her cell phone.

In a tense championship final, Tirosh seemed to have won after putting down her phone first, only for judges to rule she had made a $15 thousand typo in the lyrics to Mary Poppins song "Supercalifragilisticexpialidocious."

Pozgar, who says she wants to work in fashion when she's older, had no hesitation about how to spend her prize money – 10,000 dollars for the east coast championship and a further 15,000 dollars for the national award.

She said she was going to hit the stores in New York City.

Her mother Shannon, who had driven five hours into New York from Pennsylvania on Saturday morning for the event, said she would let Morgan spend some of the money but was eyeing the rest for her college fund.

Morgan Pozgar won the LG National Texting Championship by texting, 'Supercalifragilisticexpialidocious! Even though the sound of it is something quite atrocious, if you say it loud enough you'll always sound precocious.'

Video game use is social activity

VIDEO from page 1

certain people become addicted to the game and others simply like it.

"When they are addicted, they hate it but keep on playing it," Monterroso said. "They deny real-life social interaction because they need to play the game."

He said most start for fun, but when they begin to skip meals and choose the game over friends and school, it becomes an unhealthy habit. They play the game because they can't make themselves stop or don't know what else to do, he said.

"My sole reason for playing was to be social, and it sounds ironic because it's a game, but that was why it was fun," Monterroso said.

He recently stopped playing the game because the friends he had made in the game began to leave, and without them it was not nearly as enjoyable.

Monterroso's friend, Jake Andersen, fell on just the other side of the line between avid gamer and addicted.

"My overzealous gaming is somewhat responsible for the fact that I am no longer at Cal Poly, and there were occasions where I wondered if I was missing out on anything with friends," said Andersen, a former electrical engineering major.

He admits that during his freshman year at Cal Poly, he was in the habit of playing anywhere from 50 to 60 hours a week. He found the social interaction within the game was a nice way to escape from his shyness in person. Andersen also agreed that people can become addicted to video games, and said he used to be.

"One can become addicted to video games just as easily as anything else," Andersen said. "The most common definition of addiction I have is simply a need for something you are powerless to control."

Andersen said he used games to get away from his personal unhappiness. In real life, he was a confused student with poor grades, and felt he had no way to change that. He couldn't excel in his current major, and was unable to switch to another.

"I used games to escape from the fact that I didn't know what my purpose was in life," Andersen said.

In the video games he played, he said he felt no restrictions or goals. He could do what he wanted without having to worry about failing.

Since leaving Cal Poly, Andersen has taken steps to control his gaming. He said he still enjoys video games, but plays about 20 hours a week. He uses that time to "hang out" with friends who are far away from him.

For both Andersen and Monterroso, video games are a pleasurable and satisfying hobby. Neither one would consider stopping, although both admit they are careful not to abuse them.

Although addiction is not limited to games like "WoW," that let players connect over the Internet, they seem to be the most often mentioned. Monterroso pointed out that games like "Guitar Hero," that lets players connect in person, are just as addicting.

Both men also agreed that although there are far more people using games in a healthy and recreational manner, addiction gets more notice because it has such a dramatic affect on people's lives.

"I talk to people a lot about what is wrong with becoming addicted, but I can see why people who are having fun can get that way," Monterroso said.

Students choose 'slacker' lifestyle classroom.

SLACKERS from page 1

"I would go to work. I had two jobs," he said. "Sometimes I just felt like going fishing or something, stuff like that. But normally it was because I was working or sleeping." For Marshall, going to class was simply a waste of time, because he said he could be doing other non-academic things.

"I stroll out of bed around 1:30 p.m.," he said. "Maybe play some Halo, probably sleep and just kind of lay around. I've been playing chess a lot and learning magic tricks, which is going to make me sound really nerdy. I just lay around all day. I chose to skip because I can succeed without actually going to class so I figure, 'Why waste my time?'"

As far as his grade expectations go, Marshall could see no negative effects from skipping class. However, he said his grades might have been slightly better had he kept higher attendance.

"I'm sure (in some classes) if I had gone to class, I would have gotten a higher grade, but the difference between that to me is not worth going to class for," Marshall said. "My grades are high enough for me to be satisfied."

Schroeder said some classes were just too uninteresting, so he needed to skip them.

"There were a few introductory classes for my major that just got so boring that even when I went, I fell asleep," he said. "It was kind of useless for me to be there."

The disinterest a student has in a class that leads him or her to skip is beneficial to professors, Jodlowski said. The professor is able to focus more on those who are interested.

"In my larger lectures like the one I'm teaching now, I don't have an attendance policy," Jodlowski said. "And my philosophy is a little different there. I'm really focusing on teaching the students who care and teaching the students who make the effort to show up. If you don't want to show up, that's your own prerogative, and you probably won't do very well in the class, but those are the decisions you have to make and the lessons you have to learn in college."

Jodlowski also said when fewer students attend her big lecture, she feels more at ease in the front of the classroom.

"There is a little bit of stage fright sometimes that comes with teaching a large lecture class," she said. "It's just the impersonality of seeing all of these strange faces out there who you'll never know their name. When they're not there and you're just surrounded by the people who are the regulars, it actually feels a little more comforting because you have your regular people there who are still sticking with you. I don't feel embarrassed at all if people don't show up, but like I said, it hasn't really been a big problem for me. While professors may not personally care whether or not a student attends their classes, they do try to prevent this by making it more difficult for students to attain high grades if they are not present, Jodlowski said.

"It is more difficult for (students who don't attend class) to get the notes because they don't have access to everything I talked about in class unless they talk to a classmate," she said. "But the punishment is really missing out on what happened, and I make sure there are test questions that you really had to be there in class in order to know what the answer is."

However, some students such as Marshall have discovered ways to work around this.

"The key is knowing when the test is and talking to people who are in the class just to get a heads-up and things like that," Marshall said. "I have good study habits. I'm not a dumb person, so if I look at a book, I can teach myself something and then I'm ready for the test."

It may be possible to achieve every college guy's dream of playing Halo all day while still bringing home good grades to parents, but the lifestyle isn't for everyone, Marshall said. It also may involve taking on the title of "slacker."

"Yeah, people call me a slacker, but I'm kind of proud of it so it doesn't matter," Marshall said. "It doesn't make me upset. I can't get mad when someone calls me something that's true."

GIVE BLOOD TODAY AND RECEIVE A FREE MOVIE PASS!

Tuesday April 24th
American Red Cross
Campus Center Room 174
10 AM - 4 PM
Kennedy Dorm in Southwest
12th floor lounge
2 PM - 8 PM
*POSITIVE ID REQUIRED COLLEGE ID ACCEPTED

As a special Thank you each presenting donor will receive a
FREE Cinemark Theaters MOVIE PASS
to the Hadley Cinemark

Appointments are encouraged and can be made online at www.givelife.org
or by calling
1-800-GIVE LIFE
Kennedy residents can also sign up in the cluster office

Cannibis Coalition hosts Extravaganja

CRC from page 1

died from a marijuana overdose."

The CRC is also focused on changing the policies on the UMass campus.

"There's a huge problem with cops in dorms," said Werner. "There's a skyrocketing arrest rate." According to Werner, at UMass any student caught with marijuana is suspended immediately, which severely interrupts academic work and leaves a stain on the individual's record.

Political activists also spoke at the event, including George Phillies, a 2008 presidential candidate under the Libertarian party ticket. He spoke vehemently against the current administration.

"They hate America, they hate our bill of rights. Vote Libertarian and lets clean them out," Phillies, who advocates drug reform, said. He also touched upon the government's ability to listen in on telephone conversations and monitor internet activity.

"If you want to end the war on drugs, people spying on you on the street on your phone and on the computer, vote Libertarian," he said.

Extravaganja was also a memorial for the founder of the UMass CRC, Aaron Wilson, who died last December. Wilson was responsible for starting the first Extravaganja in 1991.

When the first Extravaganja was held, there was conflict with the local police. But this past Saturday the presence of police was low-key, except for an official checking the parking meters. No arrests have ever been made for smoking marijuana on the Common during Extravaganja. But police have arrested those caught distributing marijuana or drinking alcohol during the event.

On Saturday there weren't any problems with this. The weather allowed a successful turnout – full of people dancing to the music and enjoying what various vendors of fabrics, tea and other sundries had to offer.

"We've been plagued with bad weather in the past and have drawn like 300 people," said Werner. "But on a day like today we could draw a 1000, but people come and go so it's hard to say."

Wes Rahn can be reached at wesrwong@hotmail.com

Student says mass e-mail was accident

EMAIL from page 1

able to access the English e-mail list, but this has since been corrected." In mass e-mailing all UMass English majors, Gallagher received some responses from English majors.

"Only a few people were annoyed by my political e-mail, including an undergrad who called me a 'hippy,'" said Gallagher.

Gallagher also received responses from the UMass Assistant Dean of Students.

"I was contacted the day before the demonstration by Dean Eileen Stewart, who wanted to talk about the plans for a protest. I told her mine weren't the only organization planning on protesting, and we weren't in communication with each other about such activities," said Gallagher.

According to Dean Stewart, mass e-mailing can occur based upon request.

"The decision to provide addresses is made by the Registrar in consultation with the Dean of Students, HR Division, Vice Chancellor for A&F, Provost, etc. whichever is the appropriate office," she said. "The list of addressees is determined by the request." Dean Stewart also noted that students are frequently granted access to the mass e-mailing system for various organizations.

"In addition, many groups on campus, like RSOs have list-serves which they can access to send messages," she said.

Gallagher was not punished for the e-mails.

"I let Dean Stewart know that I planned on a peaceful, respectful protest and she let me know that the University's main concern was for everyone's safety. Also, she expressed the University's support for us to exercise our rights and freedom of speech," said Gallagher.

By Eden Oliver & Cara Grunwaldmann ogrunwal@student.umass.edu

Democrats push for Oct. 1 troop withdrawal

By David Espo
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A historic veto showdown assured, Democratic leaders agreed Monday on legislation that requires the first U.S. combat troops to be withdrawn from Iraq by Oct. 1 with a goal of a complete pullout six months later.

"No more will Congress turn a blind eye to the Bush administration's incompetence and dishonesty," Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid (news, bio, voting record) said in a speech in which he accused the president of living in a state of denial about events in Iraq more than four years after the U.S.-led invasion.

Bush, confident of enough votes to sustain his veto, was unambiguous in his response. "I will strongly reject an artificial timetable (for) withdrawal and/or Washington politicians trying to tell those who wear the uniform how to do their job," he told reporters in the Oval Office as he met with his top Iraq commander, Gen. David Petraeus.

Taken together, the day's events marked the quickening of a confrontation that has been building since Democrats took control of Congress in January and promised to change policy in a war has claimed the lives of more than 3,200 U.S. troops.

Congressional negotiators for the House and Senate set a late afternoon meeting to ratify the details of the legislation.

The bill includes more than $90 billion for the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, the withdrawal timetable that Bush finds objectionable and billions of dollars in domestic spending that he also has threatened to veto. Overall, the bill totals $124.2 billion.

Democratic aides said House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (news, bio, voting record) and Reid hope to clear the measure through both houses by Friday and send it to Bush by early next week for his expected veto. The Democratic leaders have not said whether they will attempt to override the veto in what would be a largely symbolic act given the number of Republicans who have said they will back the president.

There is far less certainty about the next steps in the historic wartime confrontation between Congress and commander in chief. Reid and other Democrats have said repeatedly they will not leave the troops without the funds they need, but they have not said whether they will first force Bush to veto at least one more bill before sending him legislation he finds acceptable.

In his remarks, Reid criticized Bush and called Vice President Dick Cheney the president's "chief attack dog," lacking in credibility.

He likened the president to Lyndon Johnson, saying the former president ordered troop escalations in Vietnam in an attempt "to save his political legacy," only to watch U.S. casualties climb steadily.

Bush, he said, "is the only person who fails to face this war's reality – and that failure is devastating not just for Iraq's future, but for ours."

Reid had made similar comments at a White House meeting last week among Bush and top lawmakers, and the president dismissed the comparison with Johnson, according to several participants in the session. This time, Dana Perino, the president's spokeswoman fired back. She said it was Reid who was ignoring reality, not the president.

She said Reid is in denial about the vicious nature of the enemy and about the U.S.-led plan to provide more security in Iraq. "He's also in denial that a surrender date – he thinks it is a good idea. It is not a good idea. It is defeat. It is a death sentence for the millions of Iraqis who voted for a constitution, who voted for a government, who voted for a free and democratic society."

As outlined by Democratic officials, the emerging legislation would require the withdrawal of U.S. forces to begin by Oct. 1, even earlier if Bush cannot certify that the Iraqi government is making progress in disarming militias, reducing sectarian violence and forging political compromises.

Another provision in the measure would withhold foreign aid money if the Iraqi government does not meet those standards.

Also, the Pentagon would be required to adhere to certain standards for the training and equipping of units sent to Iraq, and for their rest at home between deployments. Bush could waive the guidelines if necessary Democrats assume he would, but want him on record as doing so.

Under the non-binding timeline, all combat troops would be withdrawn by April 1, 2008.

After that date, U.S. forces would have a redefined and restricted mission of protecting U.S. personnel and facilities, engaging in counterterrorism activities against al-Qaida and other similar organizations and training and equipping Iraqi forces.

Democrats jettisoned some of the additional domestic spending that Bush has held up to ridicule, including funds for spinach growers and peanut farmers. But Reid, Pelosi and others decided to include money to help farmers hit by natural disasters as well as the victims of Hurricane Katrina.

Reid's speech blended criticism of Bush, an appeal for patience to the anti-war voters who last fall gave Democrats control, and an attempt to shape the post-veto debate.

"I understand the restlessness that some feel. Many who voted for change in November anticipated dramatic and immediate results in January," he said.

"But like it or not, George W. Bush is still the commander in chief – and this is his war," Reid said.

Looking beyond Bush's expected veto, he said, "If the president disagrees, let him come back with an alternative. Instead of sending us back to square one with a veto, some tough talk and nothing more, let him come to the table in the spirit of bipartisanship that Americans demand and deserve."

Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-NV, speaks during a news conference calling for 'a change of course in Iraq.' President Bush has vowed to veto the measure, which will be sent in this week, if it includes a withdrawal timetable.

IT'S ALL ABOUT PEANUTS!

Wednesday, April 25, 2007
All DCs from 5–9 pm

MENU:
Chicken Satay • Vegetable Salad with Peanut Sauce
Fried Tofu with Peanuts • Peanut Butter Cheese Cake
Peanut Butter Power Bar

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices

GRAND PRIZE WINNER '05

National Peanut Board

Guest Chef Series
Chef Iliana de la Vega presents...
Regional Mexican Oaxaca Cuisine

You don't have to head south of the border to enjoy great Mexican food.

MENU

Botanas (Appetizers):
Quesadillas de papa con chile poblano
Salsa verde con aguacate
Roasted tomato, jalapeno salsa
Tacos de polla (fritos)

Sopas (Soup):
Crema de elote y poblanos

Fuertes (Entrees):
Mole Manchamanteles
Felete de pescado ala veracruzana
Lomo de carda en adobo, chile ancho

Postres (Dessert):
Flan de coco
Pastel de tres leches

Chef/owner of El Naranjo, a highly acclaimed restaurant in the city of Oaxaca in southern Mexico

Tuesday, April 24th
Berkshire DC
From 5 to 9 pm

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, APRIL 24, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Five million? Gonzales has explaining to do

Joshua H. Wilder

It looks like President Bush and his administration are back in some serious political hot water, and this recent episode with Attorney General Alberto Gonzales proves that literally anything is possible in this day and age.

The trouble all stems from the controversial firing of eight United States attorneys in November 2006. Countless politicians, both Democrat and Republican, have called for investigations into the firings, and more specifically Gonzales' direct involvement.

During his April 19th testimony to the Senate Judiciary Committee, Gonzales admitted that he approved the firings "without ever looking at (their) performance records." Gonzales' comments are unbelievable. If the public decides to hold the Attorney General to his words, then the statement proves two things. First, such a statement shows that he was uneducated while authorizing the firings and may have made a big mistake. Either that or the firings themselves were not based on performance records at all, but instead something else. Perhaps Gonzales had a political axe to grind.

This scandal could stop here and the tale would still blossom into another black eye on the face of the administration, yet unfortunately this is just the beginning. During the ongoing investigation into these firings, word got out that there were a great number of White House e-mails sent out with extremely valuable information. If investigators got their hands on such e-mails, a new light would shine in on the case.

But here is the catch: they've been deleted!

That's right. Officials for President Bush have publicly admitted that an unknown number of emails that are directly linked to the firings may have been deleted. Apparently the e-mails were sent out on special Republican Party accounts available to about 20 White House officials, including Karl Rove, Bush's top adviser.

Couple this shoddy system with the Republican Party accounts providing easy deleting powers, and we have a whole lot of missing information.

How many e-mails are missing? Well, the administration is unable to give an exact number, however they estimate that the total is somewhere near 5 million. Not a few hundred, but millions of valuable emails have suddenly been deleted. Of all the times to have a complete technology crash, this is the worst. Perhaps 50 years ago the government could say that they "lost information" and the public would have no ability to say otherwise, yet living today in 2007, the majority of Americans use and are familiar with e-mail. Anyone, even someone three sheets to the wind, knows that on any e-mail account there is a way to recover deleted material. The White House account is no different.

Unfortunately, the Republican Party accounts are different, and once e-mails are deleted from the server, they vanish into thin air. Why didn't officials involved in the e-mailing use the official White House accounts? Well, that is the burning question right now, and it lead to the distribution of a report making scathing claims.

Issued by the watchdog group Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington, (CREW), the report indicates that the White House purposely worked to disable a system put in place by President Clinton's administration used to archive e-mails. Instead they used a system that was unable to keep track of the volume of e-mails effectively. Many e-mails were lost as a result.

Couple this shoddy system with the Republican Party accounts providing easy deleting powers, and we have a whole lot of missing information.

CREW's report doesn't just make a few suggestions about the administration's policy; it comes right out and accuses the White House of violating the Presidential Records Act, which requires presidents to preserve all information pertinent to deliberations and policymaking.

Purposely deleting valuable information? Hiding the facts from investigators? These are extremely serious claims being made and it is important not to jump to conclusions.

Whether you are a liberal, conservative or libertarian, look at the facts. Five million documents – e-mails, to be specific – have vanished without a trace, and the Bush Administration had done nothing more than offer a whimpering and insincere "Oops."

Let's try to put the story into a real life perspective. Assume that each e-mail was a page long and that there are only 5 million missing, which gives us 5 million pages. When is the last time any of you have lost as many pages?

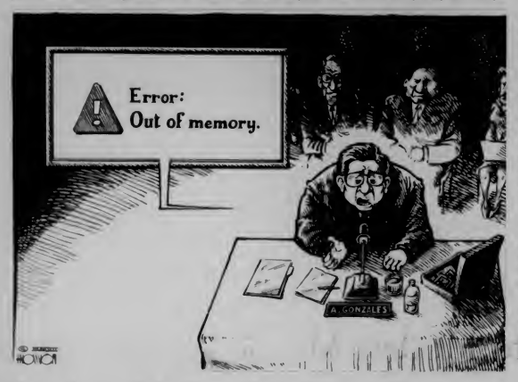
If the e-mails were intentionally deleted, the Bush Administration has hit an all time low for dishonesty and corruption. If so, the American people need to work quickly to hold them accountable. We can no longer sit idly by and continue to become immersed dumbed down popular culture while our government runs rampant.

If the e-mails really were destroyed by a fluke of the system, than it shows that we need to reduce our reliance on technology before other valuable pieces of electronic mediums go missing. As humans we need to realize that while technology is incredibly valuable, back-up plans need to be set in place in case such a debacle happens again.

Here is some advice for President Bush and his cabinet: Try using snail mail. The old fashioned stamped letter. It is a lot more reliable.

Luckily for you, impeachment notices come UPS.

Joshua Wilder can be reached at jhwilder@student.umass.edu.



A great travesty

Lack of commencement speaker reflects indifference of administration

Debbie Friedman

Four years ago, UMass seniors lost an invaluable part of their college experience: a commencement speaker. Since 2003, the University of Massachusetts Amherst has been one of the few schools to deprive their graduating class of a special guest to deliver the important and inspirational commencement speech. And as this year's graduation approaches, many disappointed seniors are wondering why they have to miss out on an element so central to graduation.

Chancellor John Lombardi is the man to blame for this awful decision. According to the Office of News and Information, the Chancellor did away with the commencement address when he came to the University in '03, believing that he was helping reshift the focus of the ceremony back onto students. Unfortunately, this poor decision has had two very negative effects. One, it has robbed UMass graduates of a classic experience that most other college seniors get to enjoy. And two, it has suggested that this administration cares more about saving money than it does about its own student body.

Bringing in a distinguished speaker to deliver an address to graduating seniors has been a tradition for hundreds of years. It is the highlight of any graduation ceremony that generates a sense of excitement and anticipation to an otherwise dull and drawn out event. It is also a valuable moment for seniors who are heading into the real world, because they can gain a lot from the insights and experience of those speaking to them. In essence, the commencement speech is the very heart of a commencement ceremony, and that is why it is disheartening that this University does not deem it necessary to have it any longer. It is even more disheartening when you see all the other Universities around the country who do realize its value, and act accordingly.

This year, students at the University of New Hampshire will be treated to speeches from not one, but two former Presidents of the United States – President George H. Bush, and President Bill Clinton; Southern New Hampshire University will be listening to Presidential hopeful Barak Obama; our sister campus, the University of Massachusetts Boston has Governor Deval Patrick as their speaker; the University of Illinois has booked one of the co-founders of YouTube; Congressman John R. Lewis will address students at the University of Vermont; and journalist Ted Koppel will speak at the University of Southern Californi.

The chancellor did not even put in the effort to connect with the student body before making the choice to eradicate the commencement speaker.

Students at the University of Massachusetts Amherst will hear from the Chancellor, and a member of the senior class. And while I'm sure both of them will have something good to say, their words should be in addition, not in place of a commencement speaker.

No one is asking UMass to spend thousands of dollars booking an A-list celebrity or a former President. Graduation would be just as good if they were to bring in a UMass alum or distinguished local official. Doing so would not cost a lot of money, and require little effort, as there are tons of successful and interesting people with ties to the school. In the past, this University has relied on alumni to come deliver the commencement address, and although it did not produce the same kind of excitement as someone more well known, it did show an effort by the University to give students a proper ceremony.

UMass no longer puts in the effort. In fact, the Chancellor did not even put in the effort to connect with the student body before making the choice to eradicate the commencement speaker. If he did, he would have realized how outraged students and parents are about this decision and re-evaluated his policy. It seems like the chancellor's claim that he is helping to focus the ceremony on us is really just a poorly-constructed facade, hiding the reality of a lazy, money-hungry administration at its worst. After four years of hard work and tens of thousands of dollars put into this school by the class of 2007, providing a speaker (whether they be well-known or not) is the least the administration could give us as a parting gift. The fact that they don't is completely infuriating, and the administration should feel ashamed.

Graduation is the formal way for Universities to celebrate their students' academic accomplishments. It is a milestone in all of our lives, marking the beginning of a new era filled with endless possibilities. But to lack a commencement speaker is to put a significant damper on the celebration.

Sure, we will all still get our faux diplomas, and throw our caps into the air with elation. But come May 26, 2007 something will be missing.

Unfortunately, it is too late now to change the upcoming ceremony for the class of 2007. But I sincerely hope the Chancellor and his administration will take a another look at their decision to cut out one of the most time honored traditions of the commencement ceremony, and give UMass seniors of the future the true, whole hearted graduation they deserve.

Debbie Friedman can be reached at drfriedm@student.umass.edu.

It shouldn't take tragedy to make volunteers

Domenic Poli

The horrific terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, brought out the best of America. Injected with a shot of patriotism after seeing almost 3,000 of their fellow citizens lose their lives at the hands of fundamental extremists, Americans everywhere soon began to help their country, which had suffered one of the worst wounds in history, in any way possible. Countless people took up arms – whether those arms be in the form of an assault rifle upon enlisting in the military, tourniquets before rushing to Ground Zero as an EMT, or charity buckets to raise money to assist in aiding the victims and their families.

Anyone with an ounce of red, white and blue in their hearts died a little when they saw those two magnificent towers disappear into the ground on that terrible day. As horrific and vile as those cowardly attacks were, however, national pride and volunteerism were at a high as a result.

People hurried to their local Red Cross to donate blood. Cash poured in from all over to assist in the relief effort. Memorial lights lit up the night sky on a daily basis so people could pay their respects to the victims. The same overwhelming rush of patriotism that had followed the attack on Pearl Harbor was revived in an instant and soon American flags were seen on every pole, porch and car antenna across the United States.

According to a study done by University of South Florida psychology professor Louis Penner, American volunteerism increased by 350 percent in the weeks following the attacks.

It seems, however, that some of that swelling of national pride may be dwindling away. According to cnn.com, volunteerism in America had dipped for the first time since the 9/11 attacks in 2006.

Though volunteerism is still much higher than it was before the 9/11 attacks, the fact that it has started to decline is concerning.

According to the article, a new report by the Corporation for National and Community Service (an independent federal agency with a board appointed by the president and approved by the Senate) said 26.7 percent of Americans did volunteer work last year, down from the 28.8 percent of the previous year. David Eisner, the Chief Executive Officer of the corporation, said highs in volunteerism seem to rise with the occurrence of tragedy or hardship. "Out of the tragedy of 9/11 and the devastation of hurricanes has come an unmistakable good: a strong interest in volunteering and community involvement," Eisner said.

And though volunteerism is still much higher than it was before the 9/11 attacks, the fact that it has started to decline is concerning. Reports like this reveal an unsettling aspect of our society.

Do we elect to aid our fellow man only when a great tragedy occurs? Are we driven to lend a helping hand only after being inspired by horrifying images we see on TV? I guess it is just easier to feel a patriotic fire lit under your butt when something so terrible happens that it takes up more than 45 seconds on the evening news. It seems that most people get the initiative to help out when they deem the disaster "big enough."

There is a weekly blood drive in the basement of the Campus Center, as well as numerous voluntary charities. Believe it or not, they all except help at any time. So why is it that there is a barrage of volunteerism only after a tragedy has the ability to touch the hearts of people via television sets.

The fact that volunteerism has dipped might be a chilling clue that the awesome surge of patriotism that followed 9/11 may be slowing evaporating amnesia effect of time passed.

Though, perhaps hope still lives for America's college students.

According to the article, the amount of volunteerism from people between the ages of 16 and 19 has nearly doubled since 1989, there is always room for improvement.

There is a weekly blood drive in the basement of the Campus Center and numerous other voluntary charities (like UNICEF) for students on campus.

The options are out there, so don't wait for a tragedy to happen before stepping up to the plate to provide some help to those in need. It should not take a few dozen deaths due to the heinous act of a mentally deranged English major to get people off their couches to assist in some sort of volunteer work. It is not asking for much – just a few hours every now and then when you have the time.

Like 9/11 proved, volunteerism is very American – so practice some patriotism and take some time to help the less fortunate.

Who knows? One day, that less fortunate soul might be you.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

LOBBYING FOR A CAUSE

Contrary to Professor Araujo's critique of PHENOM which appeared in the Collegian on April 23, PHENOM is optimistic but not naive. PHENOM is the new Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts which unites students, faculty, staff, parents, and all who rely on the state's public colleges and universities around five principles to improve the quality of public higher education in Massachusetts. PHENOM is planning a major rally and lobby day at the State House this Wednesday, April 25. We will be bringing many thousands of post cards signed by residents of every legislative district in the state supporting PHENOM's goals of affordability, better funding, accessibility, increased hiring and more democracy.

As best I can understand, Professor Araujo is saying that PHENOM cannot achieve its goals without increased revenues (such as the Governor's proposed closing of corporate tax loopholes) and that demonstrating support for public higher education is useless. But, he says, there is not much support for higher taxes among the public or the legislators, and therefore he sees PHENOM's strategy as flawed. Nowhere in his article does Professor Araujo propose a different strategy. All I see are negativity and hopelessness in his column.

PHENOM, on the other hand, is positive and hopeful. We have a new pro-education governor. We have the ability to reach and mobilize an enormous constituency that has been all-too-quiet until now. We are uniting groups that have in the past been divided. We have excited and mobilized new activists on campuses throughout the state. And we expect to be organizing both on campuses and in the community for a long time. We expect to be making a big splash at the State House this Wednesday, but we're in it for the long haul. And this is an organization that was not even founded until February!

Does the state need more revenue in order to properly fund higher education? Absolutely, and PHENOM supports the Governor's tax program as a meaningful first step. Does the unpopularity of raising taxes mean we should give up, as Prof. Araujo implies? No way! Some of the legislation we are working on costs nothing or actually brings in revenue. Some of it involves getting the legislature to make a long term commitment. We want the legislature to recognize its responsibilities in a state that prides itself on its "knowledge economy."

Our presence at the State House tomorrow is to emphasize the points Prof. Araujo is making and to ask legislators to work with us toward solutions. I hope Prof. Araujo will join PHENOM, both at the State House or at least tell us what he, as a community college professor, is doing to demonstrate support for public higher education.

Ferd Wulkan
PHENOM Organizer

DUCK, DODGE, DIP, DIVE AND DECEIVE

The intramural dodgeball tournament at UMass screwed my team, the Blue Barracudas, over because during pool play (which we dominated) we only signed our roster on the green sheets for each of our three matches, not the official orange one that actually mattered to update our team. The referees failed to crosscheck during pool play, so we didn't find out something was wrong until after pool play. Subsequently, we were unable to update our roster with the three people we had substituted in for no-shows.

After the assistant director of intramurals hung up on our captain while he was trying to tell her that her offer allowing us to play only with a team that had been on paper this entire time and not our real roster on the Saturday play was as unfair as allowing us to play with our roster anyway, we got the idea that our team's lack of deceit and enjoyment of the game doesn't matter to them at all. Apparently they are willing to bend only the rules as they see fit. This arbitrary rule threw us out of a "fun" playground sport that we had hoped to win, and leaves us with a bad taste in our mouth as we graduate from UMass.

Brooke Purinton
UMass Student

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 24, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NEW MUSIC TUESDAY

Carlile shines past expectations

BY SYDNEY TOWNE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Two years ago a brilliant and yet underplayed album was released. Short and sweet it blended tender lyrics with a hypnotic voice all over country/folk melodies. That was Brandi Carlile's first self-titled album with Columbia Records.

Now Carlile has released her second album "The Story" and it outdoes her debut as any good sophomore effort should. With a more solidly defined point of view "The Story" introduces the audience to an adult Carlile. She seems to be claiming her place in the music industry with a self-assuredness that her first album lacked.

The highlight of her debut was "Closer to You." It captured the longing of separated lovers with strong pulse of guitar that caught the attention of the listener. Over that upbeat almost banjo-like rock music there are roaming vocals that show off Carlile's range. She has a richness to her voice that fills her songs with emotion. It isn't forced or contrived; it's simply a quality Carlile seems blessed with.

Carlile, who is from outside Seattle, Wash., has been touring and recording with twins Tim and Phil Hanseroth. They provide both background vocals that blend perfectly with Carlile's lead's on songs like "Josephine" and "Losing Heart" in addition to playing guitar and bass. They are credited with writing either with Carlile or solo five of the 13 songs on the album including the two previously mentioned. Their contributions can only be seen as assets to "The Story."

This album is composed of stripped arrangements which seem deceivingly simple. The use of primarily guitar and bass with some keyboards and cello lends itself nicely to the folk leanings of Carlile's music. That sound is captured by the second half of the CD with songs like "Cannonball" and "Until I Die." It is the kind of background music a moody afternoon begs for. Full of mournful lyrics and Carlile's recognizably lilting voice the sound flows from song to song.

BRANDI CARLILE
"THE STORY"
SONY RECORDS
4/5

This is not to say that the album is entirely peaceful melodies floating innocently along. "The Story" begins with the rock-tinted "Late Morning Lullaby." It has a twang of new Dixie Chick country supporting the harmonies of Carlile and the Hanseroths.

"My Song" is one of the few songs where drums drive the beat. The result is a stand out addition to the album where the music perfectly matches the surprisingly harsh lyrics. She sings, "I'm not sure I can take it, I have nothing strong to hold to, I'm way too old to hate you, My mind is full of razors." The cracking of her voice during the final chorus completes the song's purposefully unpolished attitude.

This album highlights all the things Carlile's first album hinted at. The variety of styles attempted with her debut are narrowed and perfected with this work. Carlile is a grown woman confidently sharing her talents with "The Story." Her vocals give life to the lyrics that capture moments everyone has experienced. For those who favored the softer, more nature inspired, folk side of Carlile "The Story" is a work to savor.

Sydney Towne can be reached at stowne@student.umass.edu

Brandi Carlile's first album had many different song subjects, but her latest album 'The Story' cuts back on the variety and showcases her more dominant material.

SONY RECORDS

Following their major label debut Modest Mouse welcomed former Smiths guitarist Johnny Mar into the band. Unfortunately the addition did little to help the band make an album equal to their previous efforts.

Smiths guitarist adds little flavor to Modest Mouse's latest disc

BY COREY CHARON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In 2004, the last time we heard from Modest Mouse, they had produced a surprise hit with their fourth album, "Good News for People Who Love Bad News." The strong radio play of "Float On," at the time the most happy-sounding song in the band's history, led to the mainstream breakthrough of one of underground rock's most cherished groups.

Three years later lead singer Isaac Brock and company have delivered a disappointing follow-up, mediocre in comparison to the Washington-natives earlier creative outputs.

The album begins promisingly enough, as "March into the Sea," delivers the accustomed Brock-led romp, with his unique style of barking his interesting and thoughtful lyrics over a tight backing band.

Quickly the record hits a low point with the second and third songs "Dashboard," and "Fire It Up," two of the least memorable Modest Mouse songs ever. The repetitive structure of the former's clearly focuses towards massive radio play, much like "Float On."

Unlike it's predecessor, however, "Dashboard," lacks any verse chorus verse structure, rather choosing to be made up mostly of the irritating line, "Well it would've been, could've been worse than you would ever know."

"Fire It Up," creates another dilemma: a Modest Mouse song that is horrible. Some have dubbed it the "stoner anthem of the year," for its cheesy and redundant refrain, "Fire It Up," chanted over and over throughout the song. Perhaps the only way it can be appreciated is while under the influence of some substance, because otherwise it's dreadful.

The rest of the album slowly gets better as it goes on. James Mercer, of The Shins, makes appearances on three tunes, "Florida," "Missed the Boat," and "We've Got Everything." Mercer creates some type of growth from past recordings, as his backing vocals does add something interesting to the songs. However, Isaac Brock's usual quirky and fascinating lyrics are lazy and boring, hindering any true advancement. A throwaway line like, "It was always worth it, that's the part I seem to hide, and the busy ant empire, put the clothes inside," would never stand in an enjoyable Modest Mouse song.

MODEST MOUSE
"WE WERE DEAD BEFORE THE SHIP EVEN SANK"
SONY RECORDS
2.5/5

There are some genuinely good songs on the album, although patience is key in digging through the mess. "Fly Trapped in a Jar," opens with a brief horn intro, with a guitar mimicking a buzz sound from a fly. The track could be the only on the album that Brock sounds sincerely angry, a recipe that almost always leads to a high-quality Modest Mouse tune. The end of the record is easily the better half, with "Spitting Venom," an 8-minute opus that shows both sides of Modest Mouse, from acoustic introspection to heavy melodic guitar rock.

Former Smiths guitarist Johnny Marr doesn't noticeably add much to the Modest Mouse sound, as the band is truly an Isaac Brock project. Considering their old guitarist, Dann Gallucci, claimed he was trying to rip off Marr, the change in guard is barely noticed.

"We Were Dead Before the Ship Even Sank," is incredibly mediocre, especially in comparison to the masterpiece that is "The Moon and Antarctica," or the life-changing, "The Lonesome Crowded West." Although it is hard to compare such great albums, anything this tedious is almost inexcusable. It's nice to see a band become successful that deserves it, a group that's been together since 1993 and have created some of the most memorable records in the past 10 years.

Unfortunately, it's on the heels of their least artistic and unremarkable records to date

Corey Charon can be reached at cchar on@student.umass.edu

WMUA Top Ten April 24, 2007

1. J DILLA "Ruff Draft"
2. VARIOUS ARTISTS "Imagine The Shapes"
3. MODEST MOUSE "We Were Dead Before The Ship Even Sank"
4. STANDING NUDES "Ghost Story"
5. DEERHUNTER "Fluorescent Grey"
6. TINY HAWKS "People Without End"
7. BLACK LIPS "Los Valientes Del Mundo Nuevo"
8. ANTELOPE "Reflector"
9. LCD SOUNDSYSTEM "Sound Of Silver"
10. EL-P "I'll Sleep When You're Dead"

FM 91.1

Warming affects all

Andrew Richmond

Every day, a new headline springs up: the impact of global warming is vast in scale. Climate change encompasses a global realm of ill-effect that stretches far into the future. Pollution is hot, but not. With a problem that seems too big to fully comprehend, many of us are forced to mentally shelve global warming in order to continue with our everyday lives. As a UMass student, one may ask, how can my personal actions possibly make a meaningful contribution towards solving such a massive problem?

One strategy for coming-to-grips with climate change is to shrink the scale down from the global to the local, from the course of a century to the span of a single season. After all, rising temperatures affect New England as well as Sub-Saharan Africa, just in different ways. By coming to grips with these changes to our familiar surroundings, it becomes easier to visualize the immediate impact on ourselves – and the costs scientists say are inherent in inaction.

According to the most recent report released by the United Nations Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC), environmental shifting due to rising temperatures will lead to increased drought across those areas of the earth least able to cope: namely, impoverished nations near the equator (especially those in Africa) whose agricultural systems will slowly be eroded by encroaching desert. Meanwhile, developing nations that escape water shortages will deal with the reverse, as low-lying, densely populated areas like coastal South-East Asia are battered by rising sea levels and increased flooding.

All of these effects are, of course, laden with awful human consequences: conflicts in environmentally destabilized regions, battles for valuable resources (for example, the oil of Africa and the Middle East), and the resulting human rights nightmares, not to mention increased rates of extinction in the natural world. However, while it's important to keep this all-encompassing view in mind, the very enormity of these problems, coupled with the equally vast source – human pollution – threatens to leave the common American citizen feeling a bit overwhelmed. But, by focusing on the local, one can bring the issue down to a manageable size – and feel motivated to act in an environmentally conscious way.

So, what are some of the observable effects of global warming in our area? For starters, there is the influence of temperature variations on an iconic New England crop: maple sugar. As reported Mar. 3 in a New York Times article, this traditional Yankee industry has been facing increasingly variable returns as a 2.8 degree increase in average Northeast winter temperature since 1971 has shifted the sugaring times of maple trees earlier into the winter. This, coupled with a decrease in the amount of time viable sap is available for sugar makers to tap, has led to a significant drop in New England maple sugar production. Case in point: University of New Hampshire Natural Resources Professor Barrett N. Rock, quoted by the Times, says that in the 1960s, almost 80 percent of the world's maple sugar came from the United States, and 20 percent from Canada, while "today it's exactly the opposite." Indeed, climate predictions suggest that within the next century or two, maples will have largely left New England altogether, heading north as the environment heats up. And when the maples go, not only is your sweet-tooth left hungry – the classic New England displays of colorful fall foliage will also be undone.

On top of these economic and aesthetic effects, global warming is beginning to influence the realm of local public health. Two ways in which this particular impact manifests itself are in the spread of disease-carrying vectors and agony-inducing allergens. A prime example of this first factor is the deer tick, and the lyme disease it carries. According to a 2005 "Climate Change Futures" study released by the Harvard Medical School's Center for Health and the Global Environment, warmer winters mean that ticks will continue to expand their home territory to the north, as well as possibly increasing population levels in areas they already inhabit (such as Massachusetts) – leading to greater chances of human-tick interaction, and the subsequent spread of lyme.

In terms of allergens, the plant that everybody loves to hate – the repugnant ragweed – thrives under the conditions created by the increasing carbon dioxide levels accompanying human-induced climate change. In a study conducted once again by the Center for Health and the Global Environment, doubling the amount of carbon dioxide available to laboratory ragweed plants increased pollen production by 40 to 61 percent: potent proof that those suffering hay fever will have even greater cause for tears (not to mention runny noses) if we continue to pollute.

In all, it is important to remember that global warming is a worldwide phenomenon, with consequences for the whole human race. However, by focusing on the local impacts of rising temperatures, it becomes easier for the average American – even a UMass student – to understand how the effects of pollution are already influencing his or her everyday life. Suddenly, simple actions like turning off the computer when leaving the room, or recycling this paper instead of throwing it away, gain new meaning. If taking these steps can help to keep fall foliage and maple sugar in New England, combat the spread of ticks, and put a damper on ragweed, then maybe it's not impossible to fight global warming, after all.

Andrew Richmond can be reached at arichmon@student.umass.edu.

Couric escapes comfort zone for hot seat at CBS evening news

Katie Couric left NBC's 'Today' after feeling the job was no longer a challenge, and wanting to move onto a new position that would challenge her a career into a new direction.

By Phil Rosenthal
Chicago Tribune

NEW YORK – There were times, toward the end, when Katie Couric said she felt she had "outgrown" NBC's "Today" show, its lighter segments on occasion making her feel "more like a game-show host than a journalist."

"I wanted to get out of my comfort zone," Couric said in an interview, more than seven months into her run as anchor of "The CBS Evening News."

People always say it's good to get outside one's comfort zone, that it helps one grow. What's rarely mentioned is that, by definition, this tends to be uncomfortable.

Couric quickly discovered as much in leaving "Today" last year, after more than a decade at No. 1, for the prestige and precedent of solo anchoring a nightly network newscast, albeit one that puts her in the unfamiliar position of third place out of three.

Only in the last couple months, she says, has she begun to "feel more in command" and at ease.

"Evening News," in turn, has become quicker, sharper and punchier, though that also can be attributed to last month's arrival of seasoned veteran Rick Kaplan as executive producer in place of Rome Hartman, who had been encouraged to try a few new ideas but found viewers weren't ready for reform.

In fact, all the heady talk of reinventing the nightly news from CBS boss Leslie Moonves that was a prelude to his hiring Couric away from NBC at a reported $15 million per year has subsided. That's because even subtle changes can rattle the network news audience, which has been getting accustomed to Couric while she gets used to it.

"I don't think I ever felt so uncomfortable to the point it made viewers uncomfortable. I just know internally I feel more relaxed," said Couric, who is bringing her newscast to Chicago on Friday. "I know it sounds so self-helpy, but you do grow when you're facing challenges, and when people are taking shots at you right and left.

"Someone told me recently that someone criticized the way I held my hands when I stood. I mean it's just ridiculous. ... But I've gotten a ton of support, too, and sometimes I think it's important to not be too consumed by this small community of TV writers and people in the business, which doesn't necessarily reflect the views of the public at large."

The public, which swarmed to her debut last September, initially fueling unrealistic expectations about her prospects of quickly lifting CBS out of the cellar, is still eyeing her warily, if Nielsen ratings are to be believed.

"These things build slowly," Couric said, noting she's "kind of circumspect and sanguine about the whole thing."

Season to date, Couric's "Evening News" has averaged 7.4 million viewers, down 4 percent from a year ago, when Bob Schieffer was in the anchor chair. One ray of light for CBS is that her newscast viewership is up 6 percent among women age 18 to 49.

First-place "NBC Nightly News" with Brian Williams is down 6 percent overall, with an average of 9 million viewers. Only ABC's "World News" with Charlie Gibson has added total viewers, up 2 percent, to 8.7 million.

"Nobody is more competitive than I am, and if I thought that at this point in time, the ratings were a reflection of the show we were putting on the air, I would be despondent," CBS News boss Sean McManus said. "I'm not.

"I'm really not focused on the numbers right now. I fixated over them for a while. They are what they are. I do believe that over a period of years they will get better, and I remind myself, and I remind people when they ask me, that it was in Tom Brokaw's 14th season that he became No. 1."

Part of Kaplan's marching orders has been to tighten up "Evening News." There simply isn't the time on a half-hour nightly newscast to do many of the things at which Couric excelled in the multihour format of "Today."

"It's been sort of a group consensus that we can't necessarily reinvent the wheel, that there are certain things this audience wants to hear and needs to hear every night, and that we have to really focus on the news of the day," Couric said.

That said, she and Kaplan bristle at the claims of some critics that Couric's "Evening News" is feature-heavy. With news and information available from so many sources throughout the day, they point out that by dinnertime it's incumbent on them to advance daily news with what once might have been considered follow-up stories.

"All these terms have to be re-examined and redefined, especially in the changing media landscape," Couric said.

Rolling Stone magazine turns 40 as latest issue hits stands

By Jim Farber
New York Daily News

The echoes of the boomer generation reached a new crescendo Friday as Rolling Stone published an issue celebrating 40 loud years of life.

So long a run surprises no one more than owner/founder Jann Wenner. "I had no vision for what the magazine would become," he says. "It was just a slow build."

The climb began back on Nov. 9, 1967, with an issue that splashed John Lennon on its cover. Other magazines had tried to nail the sounds and sights of the boomer generation's rise to power before, including Crawdaddy, which preceded Rolling Stone in the marketplace by more than a year. But only Wenner's publication found the right tone and image for the era.

Everything from Annie Leibovitz's iconic photographs to the probing writings of critics like Paul Nelson and Greil Marcus reflected the shifting values of the emerging culture. As staid and established as the magazine has become since it moved from San Francisco to New York at the end of the '70s, before that it glided on pop culture's cutting edge with unerring grace.

Early on, Rolling Stone became what Wenner calls "a tribal telegraph. We were the ones covering one of the biggest stories of the 20th century, the baby boomers and the emergence of rock 'n' roll and technology from the inside. We were it."

If the magazine is no longer quite "it" as no print magazine can be in the age of the Internet Rolling Stone has still managed to shake off enough of the moss of time to remain culturally on-point and commercially potent.

According to Wenner, that's because "popular culture is ever-changing and renewing. So long as you cover the beat, it's going to continue to be fresh."

Yet to mark the mag's anniversary, there's enough looking back to give some readers whiplash. The new issue, titled "Where We've Been," offers new interviews with all the biggest rock war-horses of the '60s and '70s, from Dylan to Paul McCartney to Mick Jagger. Wenner argues "these artists are still putting out some of their best work. Dylan just put out a brilliant album, and the Stones are still the world's best performing act."

Come this summer, Rolling Stone will offer more rear-view ruminations, starting with a second anniversary issue that commemorates 40 years since the Summer of Love. A DVD box set arrives in September, featuring the first digital archive of everything ever published in the magazine. That will be chased on Nov. 2 by a third anniversary issue that looks to the future to examine "Where We're Going."

If Rolling Stone has to remain committed to the future of pop to retain its audience, Wenner isn't self-conscious about declaring the boomers as the defining influence, and reference point, for everything that happens today. "The changes (this generation) made to society are permanent," he says, "even if there are some reversals during the Bush administration."

As a result, Wenner says, certain core aspects of the magazine's philosophy will never change. "We have a sensibility that stands," he says. "We have very liberal politics, in terms of social justice and sexual freedom, and the idea that peace is better than war."

"Peace and love," he says.

This month marks the 40th anniversary of Rolling Stone magazine, later this year the magazine will issue a DVD containing a digital archive of every issue.

$5 FAST with this coupon ONLY!
CUSTOM PRINTED T's
This coupon not good with any other offer
*White T's ONLY
24 minimum
1 color, 1 sided
Standard Ink
Art/File ready
Screen $20
Your Design or Logo!
Apparel Unlimited
SCREEN PRINTERS
322 Russell Street
Hadley, MA 01035
413-586-7133
www.SunraisePrinting.com
*Exp. 5.29.07
Our 20th ANNIVERSARY

Write for Arts!!
e-mail us at Arts@dailycollegian
or collegianarts@gmail.com

UMass takes on Stags in ECAC action

M. LACROSSE from page 10

Morris' game-tying score with 42 seconds left in the game. Then faceoff specialist Jake Deane netted the game-winner with just over 30 seconds to go – it was the senior's first goal of the season.

UMass had been down, 5-3, entering the fourth quarter, but outscored the Stags, 4-1, in the final period. Current senior Andrew Recchione contributed two goals in the win as well.

Before that game, the last time the Minutemen and Stags played was in a game held in Providence, R.I., during the 2002 tournament. It was never close, and UMass took the lopsided affair, 17-4.

That game is a good example of how this series has played out. UMass has outscored the Stags 76-23 over the course of the five games, which averages out to a final of 15-5 in favor of the Minutemen. The ugliest game was a decade ago, when the Maroon and White destroyed the Stags, 22-3.

After Fairfield enjoyed a strong start to the 2007 season – it was ranked as high as 12th early this season – the Stags have dive-bombed lately. An atrocious 19-2 loss to Loyola this weekend increased their losing streak to five games.

Fairfield barely avoided being shut out during the game's entire first half by scoring its first goal with just 15 seconds left in the second quarter. The Stags' only other goal came at the 7:43 mark of the third period.

Loyola had scoring runs of nine goals to open the game and eight to finish it. Fairfield coach Ted Spencer tried to spark his team by pulling starting goaltender Michael Kruger early into the second quarter, but his replacement, Piet Dudley, was actually less effective.

After Kruger allowed the first seven goals of the game, Dudley stepped in and let 12 shots reach the net over the course of the final 42 minutes.

Surprising, Loyola only had two players with hat tricks – Greg Leonard had four goals and Dan Bauers had three. In all, the Greyhounds had 11 different people record goals Saturday on 16 assists.

Shane Koppens (one goal and five assists) and Leonard (four goals, two assists) each tallied six points on the afternoon, tied for most on Loyola.

The Greyhounds held the advantage in almost every statistical category. They outshot Fairfield (42-24), scooped more groundballs (41-24) and won more faceoffs (16-24).

Loyola also got a huge boost from its man-up unit, converting all five of its extra-man opportunities. That includes scoring three of its first four goals with a Fairfield player in the box – the Stags scored their other two man-up goals in the fourth quarter.

Familiar faces

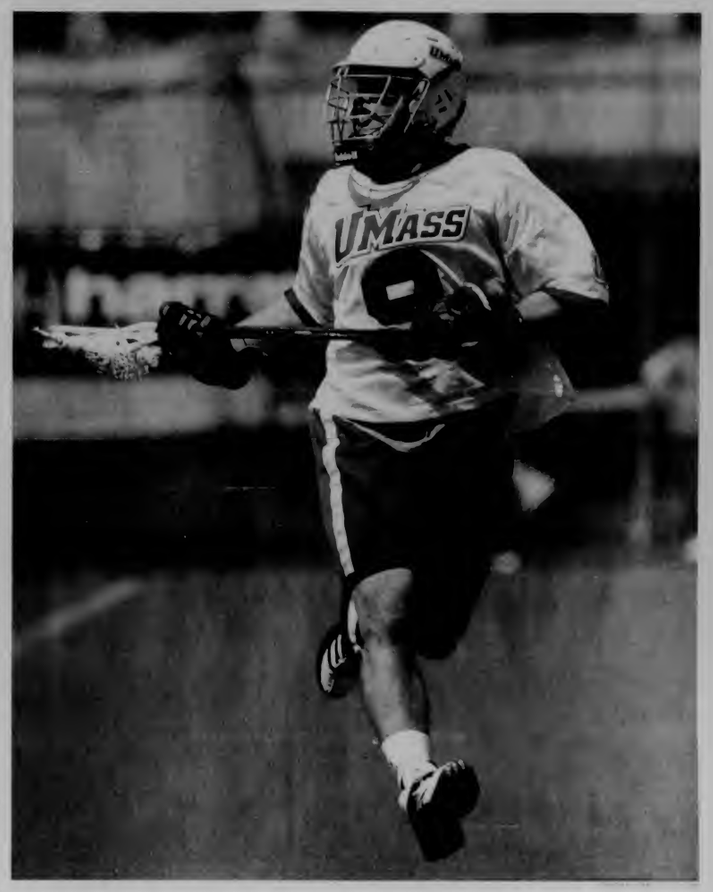
Spencer is no stranger to the UMass lacrosse program. He played for legendary coach, Dick Garber. Spencer played long-stick defense for the Minutemen and graduated in 1985, three years prior to Cannella graduating in 1988.

Happy helper

Jacovina tied his career high of four assists against Georgetown Saturday. He also recorded four during the Minutemen's 10-9 overtime loss to Albany on March 13.

The junior midfielder now has nine helpers in his last three games, giving him a team-leading 15 on the season. Rory Pedrick's 12 are second on the Maroon and White.

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegians-sports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.



Senior midfielder Andrew Recchione and the Minutemen fell out of contention for the top spot in the ECAC with Saturday's loss to Georgetown. However, they are in the midst of a heated race for the No. 2 slot in the conference. UMass squares off against Fairfield today on the road.

Though in a losing effort, Rob Forster scored two goals in Penn State's 8-7 double-overtime loss to Rutgers last Sunday.

Second spot in conference undecided

ECAC LACROSSE from page 10

for the No. 2 team in the nation.

By contrast, the ECAC's leading scorer ranks seventh in the nation in goals per game. Junior Daryl Veltman is averaging 2.73 tallies this season while playing for last place Hobart (4-7, 1-5 ECAC).

Though honoring the sport's best player, the ECAC has only one final nominee for this year's award. And not surprisingly, the player competes for the league's best team: No. 4 Georgetown (9-2, 5-0 ECAC).

Fittingly, one of the leaders of the stout Hoya defense, senior Jerry Lambe, made the final cut and could potentially be honored as the best player in Division I men's lacrosse. Behind Lambe and the rest of the Georgetown defense, the Hoyas rank third in the league in goals-against average, yielding only 8.20 goals per game. The team has held seven opponents to less than nine goals this year.

Though the defensive position lacks adequate statistics to tell the entire story of an individual's play, Lambe has 21 groundballs and three forced turnovers on the season.

But the defender's reputation in the ECAC coincides with his nomination to the list of final nominees. Not only did the league name Lambe a second-team All-ECAC selection in 2006, he was chosen as the ECAC's Preseason Defensive Player of the Year.

However, history does not bode well for Lambe. No defensive player has won the award in the Iewaaraton's six years of existence. The recipients have been evenly split between midfielders and attackmen.

Yet, if Georgetown makes a deep run into the NCAA Tournament or wins a national championship, Lambe would get much more consideration for the honor, since it is awarded after the end of the season.

In five of the six years of the Iewaaraton's existence, the award recipient played for the team that won the title. Last season, senior attackman Matt Ward received the honor after he led his team to the national championship and an undefeated season.

The previous two seasons, the ECAC sported a Iewaaraton finalist. Attackman Sean Morris earned the honor of being one of the final five players in both his junior and senior years at Massachusetts.

Lopsided Win

It's by far the largest margin of victory in a conference game this season. Loyola's 19-2 victory over Fairfield (5-5, 1-4 ECAC) propelled the Greyhounds into second place.

Loyola (6-4, 4-2 ECAC) held the Stags scoreless until the final 15 seconds of the second quarter. At that point, the Greyhounds had a 10-0 lead, which quickly turned into a 17 goal margin of victory by the end of regulation.

However, this was not the first time an ECAC team scored less than three goals this season. St. John's (5-7, 2-4 ECAC) managed only two goals against Drexel (10-4) in March.

The highest number of goals allowed by an ECAC team this season is 22. Syracuse dominated the Rutgers defense en route to a 22-9 victory two weeks ago.

Premature Champions

Barring a monumental collapse, Georgetown will be crowned the 2007 regular season champions of the ECAC. The Hoyas are in full control of their destiny and can clinch the title with a win next weekend.

Along with the regular season championship, the Hoyas will receive the league's automatic bid to the NCAA tournament. Regardless, Georgetown would stand a good chance of receiving an at-large bid, since they are ranked No. 4 in the nation.

The only other team that has a possible chance of finishing first is Rutgers. The Scarlet Knights will need to defeat the Hoyas and win their only other ECAC contest. However, Rutgers will also need Georgetown to fall to Penn State (4-7, 3-3 ECAC) on May 5.

Even though both UMass and Loyola each have only two losses in conference, the Hoyas hold the tie-breaking trump card with head-to-head victories over each school.

As for second place, the current log jam at that position in the standings gives as many as five teams a chance for that spot. Loyola is in the best shape for second, as it owns the second-most wins in the conference.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
is looking for new
Graphic Designers
for the Fall 2007 semester
♦ Daily Advertising Designers
♣ Nightly Production Supervisors
♥ Advertising Production Manager
Any major can apply. Previous design experience not necessary, but encouraged.
Visit our office in the Campus Center Basement from 10am - 4pm for applications.

EXPERIENCE
Gained only through working at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian as a Fall 2007 semester Advertising Representative
If interested please pick up an application at the Daily Collegian Office located in the Campus Center basement or contact Alex Bender at ebender@student.umass.edu

Sophomore Jim Macdonald continues to power the UMass offensive charge. The third baseman leads the team with 19 RBIs and two home runs (tied with Bryan Adamski).

UM heads to CCSU

BASEBALL from page 10

three hits in that contest, and then-freshman Ryan Franczek hit his second-career home run.

CCSU is currently having somewhat of a down season – it's currently ranked fifth in the NEC – especially when you consider it has won three of the past five conference championships, including last season. The Blue Devils are led by coach Charlie Hickey, who in his seven full seasons at the helm has won three NEC Coach of the Year awards – including last year, when his team finished 32-18 overall and 15-7 within the conference.

This season the Blue Devils are undoubtedly powered by their pitching staff, which leads the eight-team NEC with a 3.55 ERA. In just 25 contests, CCSU starting pitchers have gone the distance in almost half of its games – spinning 11 complete games, including two for shutouts this season.

The rotation is paced by the trio of John Tesseyman, Ken Kerski and Evan Scribner, who have combined for an 11-6 record with a 2.73 ERA in 118.2 innings this season. The Big Three have thrown complete games in half of their 16 starts for the Blue Devils.

With a 5.71 team ERA, the Minutemen haven't had as much success on the mound as CCSU, but have pitched better of late – especially this weekend against La Salle in what turned out to be a series victory.

With two impressive – and virtually identical – starts in his last two outings, junior Jim Cassidy has perhaps emerged as the staff ace, pacing the entire team in wins (4) and leading the starting pitchers in opponent's batting average (.235). In his last 15.2 innings on the rubber – both wins – Cassidy has allowed just one earned run on 10 hits, while striking out 10.

The Minutemen staff faces a CCSU team that has hit .281 collectively, compared to the .255 team batting average for UMass. The Blue Devils are led at the plate by their three outfielders – Jak Kidd, Adam Taha and Jay Schillaci – who are among the team leaders in virtually every offensive category. The three have combined to go 73-for-216 at the plate, good for a .338 collective average.

On the defensive side, the Blue Devils have been exceptional in the field, committing just 23 errors in their 25 games. Defense up the middle has been very strong, with just seven errors combined by their primary shortstop, Sean Salvatore, and second baseman, Matt Memoli, combined. UMass has been solid on defense this season, as well, with 40 errors in 28 contests.

UMass is led at the plate by sophomore Adam Tempesta, who leads the team in hitting with his .339 average. The second baseman sports a team-high .392 on-base percentage, and has reached base successfully in 27 consecutive games.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu

Charlotte breaks onto national polls

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

All season long, the Charlotte 49ers have been the class of Atlantic 10 baseball. This week the 49ers were finally recognized as a national powerhouse.

For the first time ever, Charlotte has earned a national ranking in the USA Today/ESPN Baseball Coaches' Top 25 Rankings, coming in at the No. 25 spot.

The 49ers have the best overall record in the conference (32-7) and are tied for the best record in conference play (13-2).

UMass Baseball

Charlotte is one of only three teams in the country that has seven or fewer losses (the others are second-ranked Florida at 37-6, and Minnesota at 27-7).

Charlotte's standout pitching staff is a major reason behind its success. As a team, its ERA is a mere 2.36. They are the only team in the A-10 to throw fewer than 100 walks, throwing 88 so far this season.

The staff is anchored by its ace pitcher Adam Mills, who has been dominant every time he has stepped onto the mound. His ERA is 1.06 – a full run lower than any other pitcher in the A-10. La Salle's Dennis Burge is second at 2.29.

Mills' 111 strikeouts lead the A-10 by a dominating margin – over 35 more strikeouts than anyone else. Coming in a distant second is Rhode Island's Alex Dale with 73.

Charlotte boasts a powerful offense to go along with their pitching staff. The 49ers lead the league in overall batting average (.311), runs batted in (262), slugging percentage (.465), on base percentage (.391) and nearly every other relevant offensive category.

Charlotte is currently the only team in the A-10 to break into the national polls.

Tomorrow, Charlotte hosts Wake Forest in the final game of a four-game home stand. The 49ers are 20-2 at home.

Colonials shoot down Hawks

Last weekend, George Washington (16-23-1, 8-7 A-10) swept Saint Joseph's (6-29, 3-12), winning three straight road games behind an offensive explosion.

The Colonials won the games by scores of 12-5, 20-8 and 13-7. The Colonials scored a combined total of 45 runs in the series, as no Hawks pitchers could find a way to get outs consistently.

George Washington set season highs during the second game for runs scored in a game (20) and hits in a single game (22).

The Colonial offense was led by senior shortstop Michael Parker, who batted .637 (12-19) and scored 12 runs, and freshman designated hitter Curtis Ward, who hit eight straight singles for a new team record.

Senior catcher Kris Rochelle led Charlotte to its first-ever USA Today/ESPN Baseball Coaches' poll ranking with a .406 batting average.

Ward and Parker both received awards for their performance, with Ward winning A-10 Rookie of the Week, and Parker winning A-10 Player of the Week.

The series was the first conference series all season that George Washington has won, but they are on a hot streak, having won five of its last six conference games.

St. Joseph's dropped to last place in A-10 play with the losses. St. Joe's has not won a conference series, or even two consecutive games this season.

Owls outfielder continues hitting streak

Temple (13-24, 5-10) sophomore Sean Barksdale extended his 19-game hitting streak with a single in the Owls' 8-7 win over the Xavier Musketeers (19-21, 12-3).

Barksdale's streak has lasted nearly a month, starting back on March 28 in a game against UMass.

The outfielder extended his personal streak at the perfect time. With the score tied at six apiece and a runner on second, Barksdale drove a single down the right-field line to bat in the go-ahead run. He then managed to score from first base off a double by teammate Dan Brady.

Barksdale's clutch hitting allowed the Owls to avoid a series sweep and handed Xavier its third conference loss of the season.

Barksdale has been on a torrid pace recently, batting .563 (9-for-16) with six RBIs through his last five games. He will look to continue his hitting streak tomorrow when the Owls travel to Radnor Township, Penn., to play the Villanova Wildcats.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

UMass primed for postseason success

MELONI from page 10

noise in the NCAA Tournament with another A-10 Championship in hand.

This season appears to be no different. The Minutewomen are a full game ahead of Fordham in the conference standings and welcome the Rams to the UMass Softball Complex on May 4 and 5. Between now and then, UMass has three non-conference games and a doubleheader with A-10 foe George Washington. The Rams, who just recently lost their second A-10 game to St. Bonaventure, have series with Dayton and Rhode Island remaining.

The series between the A-10 leaders should fall in favor of the Minutewomen, but the Rams do match up well with UMass. Fordham is second in the league in offense with a .306 team batting average and the Ram offense scores nearly six runs per game. UMass' offense isn't much worse – the Minutewomen hit .292 as a team and score 5.2 runs per game.

UMass holds the advantage in the pitching circle, however. Sophomore ace Brandice Balschmiter leads the conference in virtually every pitching category including wins, earned runs and strikeouts.

Complementing her is freshman Bailey Sanders. If Sanders struggles before Fordham arrives in Amherst, look for Balschmiter to get both starts against the Rams. In her last four outings – three starts and one relief appearance – Sanders allowed one earned run in 18 1/3 innings while striking out 18.

Of the 25 teams in last week's poll, UMass played seven of them early in the season. The only one of those seven UMass defeated was DePaul, which wasn't ranked at the time.

Against current No. 5 Texas A&M, the Minutewomen dropped a 3-2 decision in nine innings. The UMass offense managed just four hits against Aggie ace Amanda Scarborough.

Scarborough out-pitched her counterpart, Balschmiter, allowing four hits to Balschmiter's seven. But once again, the advantage in conditioning provided to the Aggies by the Texas weather certainly played a role in their victory. That aside, however, the loss stands as a wasted opportunity for the Minutewomen to prove to those around the country that last season's success was no fluke. They had a chance to defeat a consensus Top 5 team and couldn't capitalize.

UMass squared off with current No. 24 Georgia Tech on Feb. 24 and March 9 – losing both times. Balschmiter suffered two of her nine losses in the two contests with the Yellow Jackets.

Back in March and late February, the Minutewomen were a different team. Senior leadoff hitter Amanda Morin couldn't get on base, Sanders couldn't get anyone out and junior Stacy Cullington had yet to begin her assault on opposing pitchers.

Over the last 15 contests, UMass appeared to find its game. No team managed to get within three runs of the Minutewomen. They've won five games by run rule and shut their opponent out on six separate occasions.

So, as the season's final stretch begins and UMass looks to secure the top spot in the A-10 Tournament, the rest of the A-10 and all of NCAA Division I softball should officially be on notice. You can have your national rankings and your early season victories over a team nowhere near its peak.

In three weeks, Sortino will have her squad right where she wants them. You'd expect that eventually, the Minutewomen would falter. It's impossible to maintain such a high level of play for two whole months, isn't it?

No, it's not. They do it every year and this season will prove no different. You can look for a stat to prove a weakness or recall a game from early March where they blew an early lead. But none of that is important, because it's almost May and almost Tournament Time.

And as always, the Minutewomen are coming.

Joe Meloni is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu

UMass softball coach Elaine Sortino's squad sits just outside the Top 25. Wins against a powerful Fordham team next weekend could change that.

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
PRESIDENTIAL APTS. COLLEGE INN APTS
COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS LANTERN COURT APTS
PERRY APTS MILL HOLLOW
177 N. PLEASANT ST CRESTVIEW APTS.
55 S. PLEASANT ST 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

The Journalism Program Lecture Series on Broadcast and the Media
THE ALUMNI ALL-STAR CAREER NIGHT & ICE CREAM SOCIAL
Tuesday, April 24 2007
Ice Cream 5 PM, Panel 5:30-7 PM
THE BLUE WALL, CAMPUS CENTER
Steve Buckley '79, Sports Columnist, The Boston Herald
Sandy Lish '87, Founder, The Castle Group
Maria Sacchetti '91, Reporter, The Boston Globe
Aaron Saykin '01, Reporter, The Pittsburgh Channel
Audie Cornish '01, Correspondent, National Public Radio
This lecture is part of the Extra Credit Program and is funded by David '79 and Teena Kantor

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

Seven O's
Every Wednesday:
♦ KARAOKE ♦
♦ LIVE BANDS ♦
Thursday, April 26th, 2007:
ON THE ROCKS
Friday, April 27th, 2007:
MARK SNOW
Saturday, April 28th, 2007:
ROCK 201
♦ STUDENT BAND WANTED ♦
NEED A PLACE TO PLAY? COME TO SEVEN O'S!
Route 116 330 Amherst Rd Sunderland, MA 01375 (413) 665-6788
3 PM to 1 AM M-F 1 PM to 1 AM Sat-Sun Next To Cliffside Apts.

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

5		4			6	1	3
				2				9
		9	3		8
6	3			8			5
				3
	9			5			7	3
			1		2	5
4				6
	6	1	5				3	8

ACROSS
1 Ukrainian peninsula
7 Writer's rep
10 Daddy
14 Solitary ones
15 Full theater letters
16 Prophetic sign
17 Time wasters
18 Follow uninvited
20 Essential point
21 Thrifty
23 Clara of silent films
24 Walk pompously
25 Shoulder wrap
26 Al of the '50s Indians
27 Had dinner
28 Sluggish one
31 Confuse
33 A Gershwin
36 Asian temples
38 Noble's domain
40 Mimic
41 Frost over
43 Actress Rigg
44 Spike of films
45 Festive occasions
47 Pastry chef
50 Muslim women's quarters
51 Natl. TV network
54 Expansions
56 Continental currency
57 Norm
58 Squalid
60 Metric wt.
61 Himalayan gazelle
62 Wankel or diesel
63 Head hastily
64 Traveler's stopover
65 Settled in

DOWN
1 Scare
2 Cowlicks
3 Relative by marriage
4 Encounter
5 Be mistaken
6 Plus features
7 Strike with sudden wonder
8 Confer
9 Like a takeout order
10 Well-mannered
11 BFF merger partner
12 Of punishment
13 Viewpoint
19 Dutch capital
22 Create a fold
24 Served in the army
26 Roberto's river
27 King or carte lead-in 28 Mineral spring
29 Snooze
30 Ripen
32 Leave
33 Actress Lupino
34 Director Howard
35 Ducks' group
37 Hole-in-one
39 Fleur-de-
42 Kampala resident
44 Ono's John
46 Diminish
47 Gets some rays
48 Garret
49 Aussie critter
50 Wading bird
51 Financial checkup
52 Pickling agent
53 Encrypted
55 Biblical sages
56 Work units
59 Wee hour

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE HARP
SPECIALS:
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
TONIGHT • Trivia Night
WED • Open Mic Night (all are welcome)
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar
East of the River 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate Readers Poll
OCMP & All Credit Cards Accepted
Free wireless Internet!
163 Sunderland Rd • N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-9000 www.theharp.net

Quote of the Day

"One of the advantages of being disorderly is that one is constantly making exciting discoveries."
- A.A. Milne

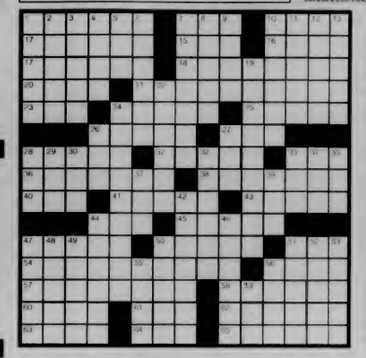
Welcome To Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shalek

Don't you feel like you've sold out?
I work at a park.
A government park.
Look, I made a friend who works at a coffee shop. They give her free-offensive mixers for customers questions.
Stevie never out of a product - they don't currently attack it always free and how are you?
Stevie
Oh and on
I'm punk rock compared to corporate America
Not with that Bumper Pack hat. You're not.

Stan and Dan By Josh Mamoney

The Quigmans By Buddy Hickerson

Fun fact: Before they were perfected, the earliest violins were strung with cats.



BENNIGANS
CAREERS • JOBS
Lenox, MA
Are you spending the Summer in the Berkshires and looking for work?
Full and Part time positions available in a fun and fast paced environment.
Stop by our booth in the campus center on Tues.
Apr.24th
from 10am to 4pm to fill out an application and meet our team.
CAREERS • JOBS

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Chickens are extremely upset by the derogative nature of the term "chicken scratch."

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
One man's junk mail is another man's only contact with the outside world.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Order a taco salad without any actual taco components. Call it "Salad in a Shell."

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
We live on a bi-polar planet.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Be like the highly acclaimed 90's rock band "The Cranberries" and seek salvation.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Out of all George Washingtons, choosy moms choose George Washington Carver.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Society is one big bucket of pudding and you are the tapiocas.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Make your goal in life to have a flavor of Ben and Jerry's named after you.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Water is the nectar or life...or is it? Think about it.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Spend your day throwing water balloons at cars, especially ones with blue lights on top.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Drag a canoe to the top of the nearest mountain and sled down. Wear a helmet.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
I don't care how warm it gets...lib balm is always a stellar idea.

ONE FISH TWO FISH...
WRITE SOME COMICS DAMMIT!
www.dailycollegian.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities

Amherst Golf Club 256-6894. Play golf mon/fri $20.00 All day. Rate with Student ID.

Announcements

CONSERVATION LAW ENFORCEMENT TRAINING PROGRAM SHOWCASE. Campus Center Concourse, Thursday, April 26th 10 am- 4pm talk to the Program Director and Alumni of the National Park Service accredited program, meeting weekends and during Winter and Spring breaks. www.umassulearn.net, click on programs, then professional development.

Like no other course. Army ROTC Our Nurses call the shots! Guaranteed 3 ½ to 2 year Full Tuition Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Apartments for Rent

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1125, 3 bedroom $1425, 4 bedroom $2175 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Employment

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commesurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must call 413-584-4746

Employment

Marketers wanted for part time work during school. Earn $15/hr + bonus. Email: rdonaldson@collegepro.com

Full time positions available in your hometown. Earn $8-12/hour Painting houses with a fun crew. Call 888-277-9787 or www.collegepro.com

Camp Pontiac, a premier co-ed overnight camp in New York, is looking for fun, enthusiastic and mature individuals who can teach and assist in all areas of athletics, aquatics, the arts, or as a general bunk counselor. View our website at www.camppontiac.com. If interested simply fill out the application in the staff section, email Stefanie@camppontiac.com or call Stefanie at 516-626-7668

Employment

Brandywine Apts. Needs a certified lifeguard. Full time hours flexible. Must work some weekends. $9.00/ hr Call 549-0600 or stop by office.

Need a summer job? College Pro painters is hiring. Work with friends, steady hours, learn a valuable skill. Must be willing to work in the following areas: Milford, Millbury, Grafton, Auburn. Interviewers being held now. Please email collegepronorthbridge@yahoo.com

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Nights and weekends. Apply at DP Dough, Downtown Amherst

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Employment

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Personal

For the coed who met Dr. Ben the speedskater on the bus. Please call 413-256-1589

Room for Rent

Amherst nice house on bus route to all colleges. 2 rooms available immediately. Each 450 mo + electric. Call Ally 413-253-4929 leave message or call 413-626-7491

Roommate Wanted

Cape Cod Seeking summer roommates starting 6/10 Yarmouth, MA near beach. Female only 617-519-0178

Services

Do you need help with filling out Immigration forms? If you want legal advise contact the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Wanted

EGG DONORS NEEDED $10,000(Plus expenses) We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1300+ (math+verbal) Physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more information please contact us. Email: Darlene@aperfect-match.com www.aperfect-match.com 1-800-264-8828

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 24, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen attack Fairfield

Defeated by Hoyas, UM looks to rebound

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After having a late-game rally come up just short Saturday against Georgetown, getting back on the field is the best thing for the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team to do.

With its latest loss to the Georgetown Hoyas Saturday at Garber Field, UMass' chances of making the NCAA Tournament darkened significantly. The Minutemen (5-6, 3-2 ECAC) now need a lot of help from the teams playing the Hoyas the rest of the season.

UMass dropped to fifth place within the conference after having a shot at first entering the weekend.

Fairfield is completely out of contention in the ECAC, owning a 1-4 record (5-5 overall). It has yet to make the tournament since receiving the Western Lacrosse League's automatic bid in 2005.

The meeting today will be the second between the teams since the Stags joined the ECAC before last season. UMass has come up victorious all five times it's played Fairfield, including a 7-6 comeback win in Amherst a season ago. The Minutemen needed three goals in the final minute and a half of play to seal the victory – all the goals came in a 29-second stretch.

Midfielder Brian Jacovina brought his team within one with 1:03 remaining followed by Sean

See M. LACROSSE on page 7

KRISTIN WILLIAMSON/COLLEGIAN

Senior Brian Jacovina and UMass visit Fairfield today for a mid-week contest. The midfielder currently ranks fifth for the Minutemen in scoring, with 19 points on four goals and 15 assists.

UMass visits Central Conn. for matinee

With Beanpot looming, Stone and Co. take on Blue Devils

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Before playing at Fenway Park on Wednesday for the 18th annual Beanpot Tournament, the Massachusetts baseball team travels to New Britain, Conn., today to take on Central Connecticut State in a non-conference matchup.

Game time is set for 3 p.m. at Ball-Savin Field.

Today's contest marks the fifth game in six days for the Minutemen (11-17, 6-9 Atlantic 10) and things won't slow down much for the Maroon and White, as it plays in four of the next five days, as well.

The Blue Devils (15-10, 6-6 Northeast Conference) enter Tuesday's action losers of three straight, all against Mount St. Mary's – and all at home. Despite dropping three games on its home field last weekend, CCSU still sports a 9-4 record on Ball-Savin Field this season.

Since 1988, the Minutemen have faced the Blue Devils 26 times, with the Maroon and White taking command in the series – winning 19 of the contests. Last year was no different, as UMass took it to CCSU, 11-1, on May 10 in Amherst.

Junior captain Bryan Garrity had perhaps his best performance in a UMass uniform in that game, going 2-for-5 with five runs batted in. His co-captain this season, Travis Munsey, also enjoyed a nice day at the plate – with two hits, an RBI and a run scored.

But it was the Blue Devils that took the last matchup between the schools that was played in New Britain, Conn., (in 2005) winning 13-9. Senior Bryan Adamski had

See BASEBALL on page 8

KRISTIAN WILLIAMSON/COLLEGIAN

Senior Bryan Adamski is batting .277 for the Minutemen, with two home runs and 11 RBIs this season.

Tewaaraton Trophy list narrowed to

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A simple analogy: the Tewaaraton Trophy is to college lacrosse as the Heisman Trophy is to college football. Similar to honoring the best student athletes to ever grace the gridiron, some of the best men's lacrosse players have earned this prestigious award.

However, the Tewaaraton has neither the history nor the allure of the Heisman and the Downtown Athletic Club, having been conceived only after the 2000 season.

ECAC Lacrosse

The Tewaaraton Award Foundation recently announced the final 17 nominees chosen from a list of over 60 players. The 17 will be whittled down to five finalists before the winner is announced after the season ends.

But as with every other major award, the recipient tends to be a player from one of the nation's top teams. The 2007 collegiate lacrosse season is no different.

Of the nine teams that have players named as final nominees, eight of the teams are ranked one through eight in this week's version of the Nike/IL Top 20 Men's Media Poll.

In fact, both No. 1 Cornell (11-0) and No. 2 Duke (11-2) boast three final nominees, while No. 8 Albany (11-1) has four players of the list. The Great Danes had the distinction of being one of the two undefeated teams in the nation before losing to No. 12 Syracuse (5-6) last weekend.

Only one nominee, Bill Looney of No. 11 Navy (9-3), does not play for a team currently ranked in the top 10.

And the nation's leading scorer, sophomore Matt Girsh, is not represented among the final nominees, despite averaging 3.54 goals per game for Siena (9-4). Though not close to being ranked in the Top 20, the Saints are on pace to make the NCAA Tournament via the automatic bid from the Metro Atlantic Conference.

Interestingly, the nation's second-leading goal scorer, junior Zach Greer of Duke, made the award's first cut. Greer averages nearly 5 goals per game less than Girsh, but the junior has the benefit of playing

See ECAC LACROSSE on page 7

ANGUS MUIR/COLLEGIAN

Georgetown's Brendan Cannon (left) ranks 11th in the nation in assists per game, averaging 1.82. The sophomore leads the Hoyas in scoring with 35 points (15 goals, 20 assists) this season.

Minutewomen still have more to prove

The first checkpoint in the marathon that is the Massachusetts softball team's campaign is the regular season Atlantic 10 Championship. Standing at 12-0 with six conference matchups remaining – all at home – the Minutewomen are likely to earn that distinction and enter the A-10 Tournament as the No. 1 seed.

UMass hasn't lost since March 19 when it fell to Florida Atlantic in the back end of a doubleheader. That was 36 days and 15 games ago. Despite five weeks of perfection, the Minutewomen haven't cracked any national poll since Feb. 21, when they occupied the No. 25 spot in the USA Today/NFCA Top 25.

Joe Meloni

This past weekend, the Minutewomen traveled to Philadelphia and had their way with two more A-10 opponents Temple and Saint Joseph's.

In last week's edition of the rankings, pollsters awarded UMass with five votes. UMass is one of the Top 25 teams in the country and should prove that come NCAA Tournament time. But to this point in the season, the Minutewomen have struggled to justify a spot for themselves in the national rankings.

Early in the season, the opportunity to place themselves among the nation's elite presented itself to UMass. But the Minutewomen failed to take advantage of this chance, losing five of six to teams ranked in the Top 25.

UMass coach Elaine Sortino shied away from making any excuses at the time, but it was obvious that the lack of preparation allowed to them by the New England weather caught up to the Maroon and White.

Teams from the southern and western United States practice outside 12 months a year. They practice fielding on the same surface they play on and take batting practice from an actual pitcher 12 months a year, while the Minutewomen spend the first half of the softball season practicing on a hardwood floor and hitting indoors. To expect UMass to excel against more prepared, better-conditioned teams just isn't practical.

By now, however, the Minutewomen could likely defeat some of the teams they fell to earlier in the season. But since none of those teams appear on UMass' schedule, the Minutewomen must focus on winning the A-10 if they want that chance.

Historically, the A-10 schedule doesn't give the Minutewomen many problems and they exit the tournament poised to make some

See MELONI on page 8

DAN HOUSTON/COLLEGIAN

The Minutewomen have dominated the A-10, coasting to a 12-0 record with two weeks left in the regular season. However, their 1-5 record against ranked opponents has kept them out of the national polls.

Author passes in car crash

Famed history and sportswriter, David Halberstam, died Monday from injuries sustained in a car accident. He was 73.

The exact cause of death was not known, but San Mateo County Coroner Robert Foucrault said it was most likely due to internal injuries. Halberstam was a passenger in a car when it was broadsided in Menlo Park, Calif., just south of San Francisco.

A resident of New York City and Nantucket, Halberstam is the author of 21 books with topics including the Vietnam War generation, civil rights and sports.

One of Halberstam's most renowned works was "Summer of '49" about the pennant chase between Boston Red Sox and the New York Yankees. The book told the story not only through the eyes of the players directly involved, but also through personal accounts of fans in both New England and New York.

He also wrote two other books concerning Massachusetts-based sports figures, "The Teammates: A Portrait of Friendship," and "Bill Belichick: The Education of a Coach." The former is about the bond between Ted Williams, Bobby Doerr, Johnny Pesky and Dom DiMaggio. The latter recounts the life of the New England Patriots' head coach and how his father influenced how he coaches today.

— Jon Pelland

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

UMASS FENDS OFF FAIRFIELD PAGE 10

UMASS MUSICIAN REMINISCES PAGE 6

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 67 LO: 34 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, APRIL 25, 2007

UMass alumna awarded Pulitzer

BY LORAINE BURGER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Natasha Tretheway, a 1995 graduate of the University of Massachusetts and the MFA Program for Poets and Writers, was awarded the 2007 Pulitzer Prize for poetry last week.

Tretheway, who is currently working at Emory University as an associate professor of creative writing, received the award for her work entitled "Native Guard," a collection published last year by Houghton Mifflin about black soldiers who helped protect a fort on Ship Island, just a few miles of the Mississippi coast, during the Civil War.

Tretheway grew up in Gulfport, Miss., and said her personal experience and Southern history helped her to develop "Native Guard." Growing up in the South, she said that she was never told that black soldiers had played such a vital role in the Civil War in her home town.

Tretheway's Pulitzer Prize is one among many distinctions the poet has received in the past.

See PRIZE on page 3

Alumni All-Stars advise young writers

KRISTEN WILLIAMSON/COLLEGIAN

Over sixty students and faculty from the journalism department were present to listen to the experiences and advice of the five alumni panelists, including Boston Herald sports columnist Steve Buckley (left), Maria Sacchetti of the Boston Globe (center), and Aaron Saykin from the Pittsburgh Channel (right).

Panel dissects new journalism

BY VINCENT CAPONE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts journalism department's Alumni All-Star Career Night and Ice Cream Social, part of the Kantor Lecture Series on Broadcast and the Media, was met with a welcoming turnout. Over sixty students and faculty from the journalism department were present to listen to the experiences and advice of the five alumni panelists.

The five panelists provided experience in all aspects of the journalism field. They included Audie Cornish ('01), reporter for National Public Radio; Steve Buckley ('78), sportswriter for the Boston Herald; Maria Sacchetti ('91), a reporter for the Boston Globe; Aaron Saykin, ('01), a consumer reporter for the Pittsburgh Channel; and Sandy Lish ('87), co-founder of the public relations firm The Castle Group.

The panel advised students on the process of keeping up with the ever-increasing changes in technology and the media, and how to network and make yourself known in such a highly selective and competitive field.

Stories of the speakers' personal experiences in rejection and persistence aimed to inspire students to set their own personal goals.

Cornish stressed the importance of gaining experience, recalling her early career working for a PR firm for a bank in Boston. Over time, she came to realize it was not the job for her and is grateful that she was able to gain experience in a different aspect of the field.

Sacchetti encouraged all students to find something they're passionate about and to gather skills and experience. She stressed persistence; that all students should go to as many job fairs as they can and try to sell themselves, by being polite, yet

See PANEL on page 3

UMass' Brito remembered by friends

BY ALANA MELANSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Kyle Brito may be gone, but his memory lives on in the minds of the friends and classmates whose lives have been touched by his bubbly spirit and outgoing personality.

"Kyle was always smiling, always," said Caitlin Bonin, a freshman at UMass Dartmouth who first met Brito in the seventh grade. "He could brighten the day of the most angry, sad person in the world."

"He was the most genuinely happy person I have ever met in my entire life," said freshman Rachel Rosenbloom, who lived with Brito in the Mary Lyon dorm in the Northeast Residential Area. The two of them met at orientation and became friends when they realized they lived in the same building and had three classes together.

"He could always make you smile even if you were severely depressed, whether it be a simple look or a smile, or if he said something stupid and funny to cheer you up," said Rosenbloom.

"He was very outspoken, he would say whatever was on his mind and the thing about it, he did it in a way that was never hurtful, just made you want to laugh," said junior Chaunice Green, who met Brito during the fall semester through a mutual friend.

"He just didn't care about what people thought about him or what he had to say, and he would befriend anyone if they gave him the chance," said sophomore Thomas Berry II, another Mary Lyon resident who lived just a couple doors down from Brito.

Brito, of Onset, Mass., was a freshman animal science major at the University of Massachusetts. He was also a talented dancer and gymnast, which led him to join the UMass Coed Cheerleading Team.

"He was so daring, he learned to do a back flip in two days – most people take years to perfect this skill. He was always willing to try new things and always brought joy to the Coed Cheerleading team," said teammate Kelly Potter, a junior at the University.

"He learned really quickly and never failed to make anyone on the team laugh no matter how the mood of practice was," added sophomore Lindsay Fitzgerald. "His smile could definitely light up the world,

See BRITO on page 3

KRISTEN WILLIAMSON/COLLEGIAN

Kyle Brito, 19, of Onset, Mass, was found dead in his single dorm room on Saturday, April 14.

KRISTEN WILLIAMSON/COLLEGIAN

The Association of Women in Science (AWIS) Massachusetts Chapter Program presents a panel and discussion with faculty and student leaders, last Tuesday in the Isenberg School of Management.

PHENOM rally to take place today

BY WILL MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The mailroom clerks at the State House will certainly earn their pay today as thousands of signed postcards will be delivered to Governor Deval Patrick and the State Legislature by rallying members of the Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts, or PHENOM.

The group's Web site, www.phenomonline.com, stated, "[Tomorrow], PHENOM will take a major step in the long-term effort to improve public higher education in Massachusetts. We expect hundreds of people from every part of the state to come to the State House to deliver a powerful to the Governor and the Legislature."

Since its founding, PHENOM primarily concerned itself with backing legislation that runs parallel to the college student's interest, including funding higher education to make it more accessible to all classes, hiring more teachers and using higher education as a tool that could be invested in to serve the state.

Today is the culmination of months spent speaking to classes, holding rallies and establishing networks on campuses state-wide with a goal to educate students on the current status of education in the Commonwealth. The efforts were designed to inspire students to sign the post cards containing the network's message.

Each card reads: "Public Education is critical to Massachusetts. I ask that you support all legislation that moves us in the direction of the principles endorsed by the Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts: Well Funded, Affordable, Accessible to all, Adequately Staffed, and Democratically Governed."

The card has a space for the signature of any student interested.

In an e-mail to PHENOM members, University of Massachusetts

See PHENOM on page 3

Scientists cautious with discovery of kryptonite

LONDON — Kryptonite, which robbed Superman of his powers, is no longer the stuff of comic books and films.

A mineral found by geologists in Serbia shares virtually the same chemical composition as the fictional kryptonite from outer space, used by the superhero's nemesis Lex Luther to weaken him in the film "Superman Returns."

"We will have to be careful with it – we wouldn't want to deprive Earth of its most famous superhero!" said Dr Chris Stanley, a mineralogist at London's Natural History Museum.

Stanley, who revealed the identity of the mysterious new mineral, discovered the match after searching the Internet for its chemical formula – sodium lithium boron silicate hydroxide.

I was amazed to discover that same scientific name written on a case of rock containing kryptonite stolen by Lex Luther from a museum in the film Superman Returns," he said.

The substance has been confirmed as a new mineral after tests by scientists at the Natural History Museum in London and the National Research Council in Canada.

But instead of the large green crystals in Superman comics, the real thing is a white, powdery substance which contains no fluorine and is non-radioactive.

The mineral, to be named Jadarite, will go on show at the London's Natural History Museum at certain times of the day on Wednesday, April 25, and Sunday, May 13.

—Associated Press

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 124

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3689 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jameson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Adam Stagon
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
FEATURES EDITOR Melissa D'Amico
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
ART DESIGN MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Paddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sidney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dellanzo
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS' FALL/SPRING SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALUE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCRAPBOOK IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik

COPY EDITOR
Joe Meloni

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Dog wins beauty pageant

BY LUKE MEREDITH
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DES MOINES, Iowa — Riggs hardly looks or acts like a beauty king. A 3-year-old male bulldog, Riggs is a drooler with protruding teeth and a penchant for attacking noisy appliances, begging for crumbs and hopping on furniture.

Fortunately for the canine from Prairie City, Iowa, those traits endeared him to judges Monday in the "Beautiful Bulldog" contest, an annual event held to draw attention to the 98th running of the Drake Relays. The relays, one of the nation's oldest and most prestigious track and field events, will attract nearly 8,000 athletes.

Riggs beat out a 50-dog field that included the likes of Sir Grizwald Snorzalot, Napoleon Underbite and Crazy Legs Da Mouse to take the crown. Contest organizers acknowledge the event is more about a winning personality than beauty.

"The last thing you're going to get with a bulldog is beauty," said master of ceremonies Dolph Pulliam. "But bulldogs have character. They have a certain look.

"They're the kind of dog you look at and you get scared. But you know what? These are the friendliest dam bulldogs in the world."

Many thought Riggs' chief competition would be Hank, the offspring of the last two contest winners. Last year's winner, Hannah, gave Riggs a snarl, but he kept his cool, plodding down the runway both gracefully and glacially.

The brown and white dog was dressed in a form-fitting costume in Drake's blue and white colors.

"He's the most beautiful bulldog (with) his attitude and his demeanor. He's just kind of stout, and he's ready to do this," said his owner, Cordell Miller. "He's very excited."

Riggs sits on the throne after being crowned the winner of the 28th Drake Relays Beautiful Bulldog Contest.

Teacher throws urine on students

MUMBAI — Indian teachers sprinkled cow urine on low-caste students to purify them and drive away evil, reports said on Saturday, in a country where millions of people remain oppressed at the bottom of the ancient Hindu caste system.

Upper-caste headteacher Sharad Kaithade ordered the ritual after taking over from a lower-caste predecessor at a school in a remote village in the western state of Maharashtra earlier this month, the Times of India reported.

He told an upper-caste colleague to spray cow urine in a cleansing ceremony as the students were taking an examination, wetting their faces and their answer sheets, the newspaper said.

"She said you'll study well after getting purified," student Rajat Washnik was quoted as saying by the CNN-IBN news channel. Students said they felt humiliated.

Hinduism reveres the cow, and its dung is used in the countryside as both a disinfectant and as fuel. In 2001, Hindu nationalists promoted cow's urine as a cure for ailments ranging from liver disease to obesity and even cancer.

The newspaper said the two teachers were arrested after angry parents complained to police. They have been released on bail.

India's secular constitution bans caste discrimination, but Dalits — those at the bottom of the caste system — are still commonly beaten or killed for using a well or worshipping at a temple reserved for upper castes, especially in rural areas.

Dalits, once known as "untouchables," make up around 160 million of India's billion-plus population.

In February, the New York-based Human Rights Watch group said India is failing to protect its lower-caste citizens, who were condemned to a lifetime of abuse because of their social status.

-Associated Press

New habitable planet discovered outside our galaxy

BY SETH BORENSTEIN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

For the first time astronomers have discovered a planet outside our solar system that is potentially habitable, with Earth-like temperatures, a find researchers described Tuesday as a big step in the search for "life in the universe."

The planet is just the right size, might have water in liquid form, and in galactic terms is relatively nearby at 120 trillion miles away. But the star it closely orbits, known as a "red dwarf," is much smaller, dimmer and cooler than our sun.

There's still a lot that is unknown about the new planet, which could be deemed inhospitable to life once more is known about it. And it's worth noting that scientists' requirements for habitability count Mars in that category: a size relatively similar to Earth's with temperatures that would permit liquid water. However, this is the first outside our solar system that meets those standards.

"It's a significant step on the way to finding possible life in the universe," said University of Geneva astronomer Michel Mayor, one of 11 European scientists on the team that found the planet. "It's a nice discovery. We still have a lot of questions."

The results of the discovery have not been published but have been submitted to the journal Astronomy and Astrophysics.

Alan Boss, who works at the Carnegie Institution of Washington where a U.S. team of astronomers competed in the hunt for an Earth-like planet, called it "a major milestone in this business."

The planet was discovered by the European Southern Observatory's telescope in La Silla, Chile, which has a special instrument that splits light to find wobbles in different wave lengths. Those wobbles can reveal the existence of other worlds.

What they revealed is a planet circling the red dwarf star, Gliese 581. Red dwarfs are low-energy, tiny stars that give off dim red light and last longer than stars like our sun. Until a few years ago, astronomers didn't consider these stars as possible hosts of planets that might sustain life.

The discovery of the new planet, named 581 c, is sure to fuel studies of planets circling similar dim stars. About 80 percent of the stars near Earth are red dwarfs.

The new planet is about five times heavier than Earth. Its discoverers aren't certain if it is rocky like Earth or if it's a frozen ice ball with liquid water on the surface. If it is rocky like Earth, which is what the prevailing theory proposes, it has a diameter about 1 1/2 times bigger than our planet. If it is an iceball, as Mayor suggests, it would be even bigger.

Based on theory, 581 c should have an atmosphere, but what's in that atmosphere is still a mystery and if it's too thick that could make the planet's surface temperature too hot, Mayor said.

However, the research team believes the average temperature to be somewhere between 32 and 104 degrees and that set off celebrations among astronomers.

Until now, all 220 planets astronomers have found outside our solar system have had the "Goldilocks problem." They've been too hot, too cold or just plain too big and gaseous, like uninhabitable Jupiter.

The new planet seems just right — or at least that's what scientists think.

"This could be very important," said NASA astrobiology expert Chris McKay, who was not part of the discovery team. "It doesn't mean there is life, but it means it's an Earth-like planet in terms of potential habitability."

Eventually astronomers will rack up discoveries of dozens, maybe even hundreds of planets considered habitable, the astronomers said. But this one — simply called "c" by its discoverers when they talk among themselves — will go down in cosmic history as No. 1.

Besides having the right temperature, the new planet is probably full of liquid water, hypothesizes Stephane Udry, the discovery team's lead author and another Geneva astronomer. But that is based on theory about how planets form, not on any evidence, he said.

"Liquid water is critical to life as we know it," co-author Xavier Delfosse of Grenoble University in France, said in a statement. "Because of its temperature and relative proximity, this planet will most probably be a very important target of the future space missions dedicated to the search for extraterrestrial life. On the treasure map of the Universe, one would be tempted to mark this planet with an X."

Other astronomers cautioned it's too early to tell whether there is water.

"You need more work to say it's got water or it doesn't have water," said retired NASA astronomer Steve Maran, press officer for the American Astronomical Society. "You wouldn't send a crew there assuming that when you get there, they'll have enough water to get back."

The new planet's star system is a mere 20.5 light years away, making Gliese 581 one of the 100 closest stars to Earth. It's so dim, you can't see it without a telescope, but it's somewhere in the constellation Libra, which is low in the southeastern sky during the midevening in the Northern Hemisphere.

Before you book your extrastellar flight to 581 c, a few caveats about how alien that world probably is: Anyone sitting on the planet would get heavier quickly, and birthdays would add up fast since it orbits its star every 13 days.

Gravity is 1.6 times as strong as Earth's so a 150-pound person would feel like 240 pounds.

But oh, the view. The planet is 14 times closer to the star it orbits. Udry figures the red dwarf star would hang in the sky at a size 20 times larger than our moon. And it's likely, but still not known, that the planet doesn't rotate, so one side would always be sunlit and the other dark.

Rental Office
1040 N. Pleasant St. #410
Amherst, MA 01002
Phone #: (413) 549-0145

NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE

Serving all Your Rental Needs

Now Accepting applications for summer/fall 2007
www.pufftonvillage.com

Native Americans at high risk for rape

WASHINGTON — Native American and Alaskan women are suffering rates of rape and sexual violence nearly three times higher than the U.S. national average, Amnesty says in a new study released Tuesday.

The human rights watchdog said a complex maze of tribal, state and federal jurisdictions often allowed men to rape with impunity, creating a vicious cycle that emboldened rapists and led to more attacks.

The study cited Justice Department figures which indicated that American Indian and Alaska Native women were 2.5 times more likely to be raped or sexually assaulted than women in the United States in general.

The figures said more than one in three Native women would be raped in their lifetime, although that figure may in fact be substantially higher because of a traditional reluctance to report sex crimes.

"Native women are brutalized at an alarming rate, and the United States government, a purported champion of women's rights, is unfortunately contributing to the problem," said Larry Cox, executive director of Amnesty International USA.

"It is disgraceful that such abuse even exists today. Without immediate action, an already abysmal and outrageous situation for women could spiral even further out of control."

The Amnesty report "Maze of Injustice: The Failure to Protect Indigenous Women From Sexual Violence in the USA" said many rape investigations stalled as officers tried to establish who the investigating authority was.

A dearth of trained Sexual Assault Nurse Examiners at Indian Health Service facilities also meant Native Women do not get timely responses from police and sometimes never received basic forensic medical examinations.

Amnesty accused the U.S. government of undermining tribal justice systems by consistent under-funding.

It cited the example of the 2.3 million acre Standing Rock Sioux Reservation spread across North and South Dakota which occasionally has only one police officer on duty to cover the entire region.

Amnesty said women reporting rape or sex crimes in Standing Rock often had to wait hours or days before receiving a response from police.

Alaska was the rape capital of the United States, Amnesty said citing FBI statistics. Between 2000 and 2003, one study found that native Alaskan women in Anchorage were roughly 10 times more likely to be raped than other women in the city.

To tackle the problem, Amnesty called on Congress to increase funding to the Indian Health Service in order to train and employ more nurses qualified to examine victims of sex attacks.

Amnesty also demanded the federal government provide necessary funding for police forces on Indian reservations and in Alaskan Native villages.

-Associated Press

Dancers from various Native American tribes are seen during a Pow-Wow in 2005.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
is looking for new
Graphic Designers
for the Fall 2007 semester
♠ Daily Advertising Designers
♣ Nightly Production Supervisors
♥ Advertising Production Manager
Any major can apply. Previous design perience not necessary, but encouraged.
Visit our office in the Campus Center Basement from 10am - 4pm for applications.

EXPERIENCE
Gained only through working at The Massachusetts
Daily Collegian as a Fall 2007 semester Advertising Representative
If interested please pick up an application at the Daily Collegian Office located in the Campus Center basement or contact Alex Bender at ebender@student.umass.edu

UMass Police log

Student assaults police officer

Wednesday
April 11

4:34 p.m.: Noah S. Stapleton, of 69 South Pleasant St., Amherst, Mass., was placed under arrest for operating an unregistered motor vehicle with a suspended license. A UMPD officer noticed an expired inspection sticker on Stapleton's vehicle as he drove down Massachusetts Ave. and pulled the vehicle over on University Dr. Stapleton was arrested and brought back to the police station. He placed bail the next day.

Thursday
April 12

4:33 p.m.: James Robert Brown Jr., age 20, of 5878 North Rothman Ave., Boise, Idaho and Michael J. Beckerman, age 19, of 30 Woodhaven Dr., New City, N.Y., were placed under arrest for being persons under 21 in possession of liquor. UMPD officers in plain clothes observed the two men loading Bud Light into bags after parking and exiting their vehicle in Parking Lot 22. Brown presented the officers with a false military identification card indicating that he had been born in 1986 and was 21 years of age. He was subsequently charged with the misuse of a liquor identification card. The police officers confiscated both the alcohol and the military identification card.

Friday
April 13

12:46 a.m.: Matthew T. Darnell of 3985 Fruitvale Ave., Oakland, Calif., and Jarrett M. Austin of 31 Boyden RD., Pelham, Mass., were placed under arrest and charged with disorderly conduct and assault and battery on a police officer in Brooks Dormitory in the Central Residence Area. UMPD officers were called to the dormitory after Darnell was observed lying drunk on a hall floor. Darnell was awoken and identified, at which point he became belligerent and began to resist the officers. He shouted obscenities at the officers and as other students began to gather around him struck an officer in the chest with a closed fist. Darnell was subsequently charged with resisting a police officer making a lawful arrest.

Austin had been attempting to assist Darnell and refused when officers directed him to back away from the incident. Austin proceeded to move up and down the hall screaming and banging on doors. As he was being advised to quiet down he pushed a door into an officer leading to the assault and battery charge. After being arrested he was found to be in possession of a pipe containing inside what police suspected to be marijuana resin. Austin was subsequently charged with possession of a class D drug.

Saturday
April 14

6:24 p.m.: Evan J. McCullough, of 110 Danforth St., Framingham, Mass., was placed under arrest for trespassing and resisting a police officer making a lawful arrest during the O.A.R. concert at the Mullins Center. During the concert he was evicted by Mullins Center staff with UMPD officers standing by. He was later observed reentering the event and evicted a second time. McCullough then attempted to regain entrance a third time through the East Entrance and was observed conversing with Mullins Center Staff. He was again denied entry and was confronted by Mullins Center Staff at another exit leading to his arrest for trespassing.

6:24 p.m.: Cali F. Antonellis, of 14 Barque Dr., Hatchville, Mass., was placed under arrest for disorderly conduct and assault and battery on a police officer during the O.A.R. concert at the Mullins Center. He was evicted from the concert by Mullins Center staff and was found back inside the arena one hour later. Antonellis refused to leave after being instructed to do so and argued with UMPD officers. He began to yell and scream and struck a police officer on the chest with his forearm at which time he was placed under arrest.

-Compiled by Derrick Perkins

Ranger alleges Tillman cover-up

BY ERICA WERNER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

An Army Ranger who was with Pat Tillman when the former football star was cut down by friendly fire in Afghanistan said Tuesday a commanding officer had ordered him to keep quiet about what happened.

The military at first portrayed Tillman's death as the result of heroic combat with the enemy. Army Spc. Bryan O'Neal told a congressional hearing that when he got the chance to talk to Tillman's brother, who had been in a nearby convoy on the fateful day, "I was ordered not to tell him what happened."

"You were ordered not to tell him?" repeated Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., chairman of the House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform.

"Roger that, sir," replied O'Neal, dressed in his Army uniform.

The revelation came as committee members questioned whether, and when, top Defense officials and the White House knew that Tillman's death in eastern Afghanistan three years ago was actually a result of gunfire from fellow U.S. soldiers.

The committee also heard from Jessica Lynch, the former Army private who was badly injured when her convoy was ambushed in Iraq in 2003. She was later rescued by American troops from an Iraqi hospital, but the tale of her ambush was changed into a story of heroism on her part.

Still hampered by her injuries, Lynch walked slowly to the witness table, took a seat alongside Tillman's family members and said the heroism belonged to others who fought in Iraq, such as her roommate Lori Piestewa, who died in the same ambush in which Lynch was captured.

"The bottom line is the American people are capable of determining their own ideals of heroes and they don't need to be told elaborate lies," Lynch said.

Tillman's death received worldwide attention because he had walked away from a huge contract with the NFL's Arizona Cardinals to enlist in the Army after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks.

His family was initially misled by the Pentagon and did not learn the truth for more than a month. Tillman was awarded a Silver Star based on fabricated accounts — who fabricated them still isn't clear after several investigations.

"We don't know what the secretary of defense knew, we don't know what the White House knew," Waxman said. "What we do know is these were not a series of accidents, these stories. They were calculatedly put out for a public relations purpose. ... Even now there seems to be a cover-up."

Kevin Tillman was in a convoy behind his older brother, a former NFL star, on April 22, 2004, when Pat Tillman was mistakenly shot by other Army Rangers who had just emerged from a canyon where they'd been fired upon. Kevin Tillman didn't see what happened. O'Neal said he was ordered not to tell him by then-Lt. Col. Jeff Bailey, the battalion commander who oversaw Tillman's platoon.

"He basically just said, sir, that uh, 'Do not let Kevin know, he's probably in a bad place knowing that his brother's dead,'" O'Neal testified. "He made it known that I would get in trouble, sir, if I spoke with Kevin."

O'Neal said he was "quite appalled" by the order.

Bailey's superior officer, then-Col. James C. Nixon, has testified to the Defense Department's inspector general that he ordered that information on the facts of Tillman's death be shared with as few people as possible so that the Tillman family would not learn those facts through news media leaks. That, in turn, shaped Bailey's guidance to his troops.

The Army said initially that Tillman was killed by enemy gunfire while trying to help another group of ambushed soldiers. The family was not told what really happened until May 29, 2004, a delay the Army blamed on procedural mistakes.

Kevin Tillman and Tillman's mother, Mary Tillman, also testified Tuesday but were not in the room when O'Neal spoke.

After the hearing, Mary Tillman approached O'Neal, introduced herself, embraced him and sobbed.

Kevin Tillman, in his testimony, accused the military of "intentional falsehoods" and "deliberate and careful misrepresentations" in the portrayal of his brother's death.

"Revealing that Pat's death was a fratricide would have been yet another political disaster in a month of political disasters ... so the truth needed to be suppressed," the brother said.

"Our family will never be satisfied. We'll never have Pat back," Mary Tillman testified. "Something really awful happened. It's your job to find out what happened to him. That's really important."

Last month the military concluded in a pair of reports that nine high-ranking Army officers, including four generals, made critical errors in reporting Tillman's death but that there was no criminal wrongdoing in his shooting — a conclusion the family has disputed. The Army is reviewing the actions of the officers.

In questioning what the White House knew about Tillman, Rep. Elijah Cummings, D-Md., cited a memo written by a top general seven days after Tillman's death warning it was "highly possible" the Army Ranger was killed by friendly fire and making clear his warning should be conveyed to the president. President Bush made no reference to the way Tillman died in a speech delivered two days after the memo was written.

Mary Tillman, mother of Pat Tillman who was killed in Afghanistan by friendly fire, and her other son Kevin Tillman talk after testifying before a U.S. House committee yesterday, in Washington, DC.

UM alumna awarded Pulitzer

PRIZE from page 1

Among them was the inaugural 1999 Cave Canem Poetry Prize, a 2001 Mississippi Institute of Arts and Letters Book Prize and the 2001 Lillian Smith Award for Poetry, all of which were for her collection "Domestic Work."

Her second collection, "Bellocq's Ophelia," received the 2003 Mississippi Institute of Arts and Letters Book Prize, and was a finalist for both the Academy of American Poets' James Laughlin and Lenore Marshall prizes, and was named a 2003 Notable Book by the American Library Association.

Her work has appeared in books such as The Best American Poetry 2000 and 2003, as well as in journals such as "Agni," "American Poetry Review," "Callaloo," "Gettysburg Review," "Kenyon Review," "New England Review," and "The Southern Review."

Trethewey has taught at several schools, including Auburn University, the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill and Duke University, where she was the 2005-06 Lehman Brady Joint Chair Professor of Documentary and American Studies.

UMass alumni All-Stars advise young journalists relentless.

PANEL from page 1

Buckley stated that students should develop a world view and go outside one's passion to gain a deeper knowledge of what it means to be a good writer.

"I thought it was encouraging to hear about their own struggles with finding jobs, especially Ish and Buckley and how he just fell into journalism," said senior journalism major Kristen Hamill on Buckley's story about how UMass wrestling sparked his career as a journalist.

Changes in technology and the role of the media in the coming years was one of the critical issues on the minds of students attending the event tonight, such as senior journalism major Alana Melanson.

"More and more people are turning to Internet sources with multimedia content for their news and it's necessary for journalists to adapt to this trend in order to continue doing our jobs and keep the public informed," said Melanson.

When asked about how changes in technology are changing the face of journalism, the alumni panelists reaffirmed that these changes will only help to increase the role of the media and that we should not fear them.

Saykin stressed that an online product is as important as on-air or print media and that currently news continues online. She said one doesn't have to wait until the next broadcast to follow up on a breaking story.

Ish reiterated this opinion by telling the audience how technology is changing the role of public relations in all aspects. She mentioned that bloggers are bringing about tremendous change to her field, are becoming increasingly popular amongst her clients, and that she needs to be one step ahead and face new challenges. Overall, the sentiment was that increasing one's knowledge of certain types of technology will give aspiring journalists an edge in the job market after graduation.

"Listening to the panelists speak, I realized that I need to keep myself better updated with the ever-constant changes in technology, and to be able to stay on top of them," said Melanson.

After the question and answer session, the panelists were available to meet and answer personal questions with students.

Vincent Capone can be reached at vcapone@student.umass.edu.

Brito remembered by friends

BRITO from page 1

not just a room."

"Kyle would always be the first on the dance floor with all the girls while the rest of the guys sat on the side saying, 'I wish I could dance like that kid' and were too afraid to get out there," said Jacobi Reid, a Salem State College freshman who met Brito in high school. "Kyle was also the last person off of the dance floor. The dance would be over and he would always ask for one more song. He always had the best sense of humor and even in soccer when we were losing 5-0 he would always come up with comments that would make everyone laugh and keep their spirits up."

An outpouring of support has been shown particularly on Facebook, where Reid created a memorial group for Brito, which currently boasts 270 members.

"I know he's still with each and everyone of us, watching over us, guiding us, protecting us, and just being Kyle. He was a great classmate, dance partner, and most importantly an amazing friend," said My-Lan Chhu, a freshman at Salve Regina University in Newport, R.I., and a friend of Brito for 11 years. "My heart goes out to all those who have been lucky enough to be in Kyle's presence, especially close friends and family. He stole all our hearts and we can only hope to get it back one day when we see him again. May Kyle continue to shine his light to warm the hearts of those around him."

Brito, just 19-years-old at the time of his death, was found dead in his single dorm room around 8:20 p.m. on Saturday, April 14 after a request to check on his well-being.

A vigil in his honor was held at Mary Lyon the following day. Details on the cause of his death have yet to be released.

-Alana Melanson can be reached at amelanson@student.umass.edu

PHENOM rally set for today

PHENOM from page 1

Student Trustee Mishy Feiblum commented, "We will be arguing for our legislative program, and we will be laying the foundation for powerful advocacy for the long term." She continues, "State financial aid averaged $97,441,000 per year between FY 2000 and FY 2003, but only $83,313,000 in the years since then, a decrease of 13.5 percent. In a similar period, tuition and fees increased 85 percent at UMass, 83 percent at state colleges, and 59 percent at community colleges."

The Web site comments, "First to be cut, last to be restored, our state colleges and universities are chronically under-funded by the state. In good times we gain back only a portion of what was lost during budget crises. In the best of times, the system has not been funded at a level for us to achieve our common goal: creating one of the top systems of public higher education."

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com

Guest Chef Series
Chef Iliana de la Vega presents...
Regional Mexican Oaxaca Cuisine

Cheffowner of El Naranjo, a highly acclaimed restaurant in the city of Oaxaca in southern Mexico

You don't have to head south of the border to enjoy great Mexican food.

MENU

Botanas (Appetizers):
Quesadillas de papa con chile poblano
Salsa verde con aguacate
Roasted tomato, jalapeno salsa
Tacos de pollo (fritos)

Sopas (Soup):
Crema de elote y poblanos

Fuertes (Entrees):
Mole Manchamanteles
Filete de pescado ala veracruzana
Lomo de cardo en adobo, chile ancho

Postres (Dessert):
Flan de coco
Pastel de tres leches

Tuesday, April 24th
Berkshire DC
From 5 to 9 pm

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

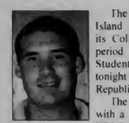
EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 25, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A racist reversal



Ben Duffy

The University of Rhode Island may soon derecognize its College Republicans for a period of one year. The URI Student Senate will meet tonight to determine whether the Republicans will get the axe.

The whole problem started with a simple scholarship. The URI Republicans were offering $100 to one deserving white, heterosexual American male.

The application for the scholarship asked for the applicant's major and grade-point average, and then asked the applicant to certify that he is indeed white, heterosexual, American and male. The remainder of the application was an essay question: "In 100 words or less, what does being a white heterosexual American male mean to you? As a white heterosexual American male, what adversities have you had to deal with and overcome?"

I know what my answer would have been. The adversity I have had to face is that I, the Almighty White Heterosexual American Male, am the scapegoat of every other group. I am blamed for every evil in the history of the world, and prejudice against me is socially acceptable.

The other adversity I have had to deal with is the assumption on the part of others that I am the recipient of some kind of "white privilege." Sorry, but I'm not some blue blood Yale boy like John Kerry. I'm just a regular guy from a regular Western Massachusetts town, paying his way through state school on the GI Bill while delivering pizzas on weekends. I'm the son of a salesman and a teacher. Everything was not handed to me on a silver platter.

The scholarship was entirely satirical, according to URI College Republican Chairman Ryan Bilodeau. They were prohibited by a subcommittee of the Student Senate from actually awarding the scholarship, so their intention was to make a point about the absurdity of political correctness, group rights and identity politics on campus. If minorities can have their scholarships, why can't white guys have theirs? If the answer is because the scholarship is racist, sexist, homophobic and xenophobic, it's rather hard to build the case that other scholarships are not. Off the top of my head, I can name a number of scholarship foundations that wouldn't give me a dime because of my race or gender.

URI itself offers special "opportunities" based on race. According to the school's Web site, "Special Programs for Talent Development at URI was founded in 1968. As a response to the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King, URI decided to provide a special opportunity to students of color and students from disadvantaged backgrounds to attend the University."

Special opportunities? Why didn't they offer equal opportunities to all of their students? That would have been more compatible with Dr. King's message. In any case, this would seem to violate the very same anti-discrimination bylaws that prohibited the College Republicans from distributing their scholarship in the first place. But that's essentially the point – the politically correct administration sees discrimination against white males as "social justice," or some other such silliness. Not only are white males discriminated against, but they are supposed to accept it without protest.

If minorities can have their scholarships, why can't white guys have theirs?

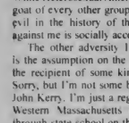
The controversy became particularly embroiled when the URI Republicans ran an advertisement for the scholarship in the school newspaper, the Good 'n' Cent Cigar. The Student Senate contended that even advertising the satirical, fictitious scholarship was a violation of non-discrimination laws, and demanded that the College Republicans submit an apology for publication in the campus newspaper. The URI Republicans are not particularly penitent and have refused to write the apology. They now face getting their recognition revoked. The URI Republicans have one powerful ally in their corner: the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE). FIRE is a legal foundation that goes to bat for university students whose constitutional rights are being violated by power-tripping university officials.

FIRE President Greg Lukianoff has written several letters to the university president, explaining the unconstitutionality of compelling an involuntary apology. URI President Robert Carothers told the Senate to cease their unconstitutional attempts to compel the Republicans to apologize. The Senate has refused. According to FIRE's Greg Lukianoff, "As bad as it may be to tell people what they cannot say, it is still worse to tell them what they must say. The Supreme Court has long recognized that compelled speech is not compatible with free societies. It is stunning that URI's student government would show such contempt for fundamental rights..."

The URI Republicans face a tough battle to keep their club and maintain their constitutional rights in the face of the Student Senate's overzealous abuses. The satirical nature of the scholarship was largely lost on the senators who have reacted in a way that basically proves the point the Republicans were trying to make in the first place. What they were trying to say was that if a White Heterosexual American Male scholarship is discriminatory, then special treatment for other groups is discriminatory as well. I have hope for the survival of the Republicans because FIRE only takes on cases in which a gross violation of a student's liberty has occurred. Freedom at our universities hangs in the balance.

Ben Duffy writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at bduffy@student.umass.edu

Making an honest opinion



Julie Halpin

I support Hillary Clinton and I am not embarrassed to say so. But many of you do not support her. Most of you are men, some of you are women, and I am here to call you all out on your ignorance.

For those of you who dislike the Democratic frontrunner for president and actually have intelligent reasons supporting your distaste, this is not directed towards you. This is directed towards you, you who responds to my support of Hillary Clinton by saying she is "stupid" or "a bitch" or the overwhelmingly popular "slut." You are ignorant and I'll tell you why.

Allow me to begin with the claim that Hillary Clinton is "stupid." Clinton graduated from Wellesley in 1969 and then entered Yale Law School. While there she worked on several childhood welfare projects as well as political campaigns. Interestingly, she volunteered for Republican presidential candidate Barry Goldwater in 1964. After graduating from Yale, she served on the Children's Defense Fund and also became a member of the impeachment inquiry staff for the House Committee on the Judiciary during Watergate. She then became a faculty member at the Fayetteville School of Law. And in 1978, President Jimmy Carter appointed her to the board of the Legal Services Corporation.

I strongly suggest a search of Clinton to truly gain perspective of her accomplishments.

Anything stupid about that?

She became First Lady of Arkansas in 1978 and chaired the Arkansas Educational Standards Committee, the Rural Health Advisory Committee, co-founded the Arkansas Advocates for Children and Families and created the Arkansas' Home Instruction Program for Preschool Youth. In 1983 she was named Arkansas Woman-of-the-Year and in 1984 named Arkansas Mother-of-the-Year. During her 12 years as first lady, she continued to practice law with the Rose Law Firm. In 1988 and 1991 she was named by the National Law Journal as one of the 100 most influential lawyers in America. She also served on the boards of the Arkansas Children's Hospital Legal Services and the Children's Defense Fund.

Stupid? No. Multi-tasker? Yes.

Hillary Clinton's husband became president in 1993 and she became the first First Lady in the history of the United States to hold a post-graduate degree and have her own career. She was immediately appointed the head of the Task Force on National Healthcare Reform. The amount of projects and initiatives Clinton worked on during her eight years as First Lady are far too great to be listed in this piece. But I strongly suggest a search of Clinton to truly gain perspective of her accomplishments.

However, to name a few of her accomplishments while serving the United States as first lady; she helped create the Office on Violence Against Women at the Department of Justice. She was also one of the few who protested the Taliban's treatment of Afghan women. She founded a group called Vital Voices, which promoted political participation of women in their own countries. She was a strong advocate for child welfare, women's rights and healthcare reform, not only during her time as First Lady, but throughout her entire life.

Clinton was sworn in as the junior United States Senator from New York in 2001 and won a second term in 2006. She is now the democratic frontrunner for president, leading Barack Obama by 11.6 percent, according to a recent Fox News poll.

I am positive the term "stupid" can no longer be used to describe Hillary Clinton.

Then there is the ever so popular "bitch" comment. I ask you, if her outspokenness and power were qualities held by a man, would he then be called a "bitch?" The moment a woman possesses any quality which a man is typically supposed to have, she is deemed a bitch. Hillary Clinton is an assertive woman, an assertive woman who happens to be the Democratic frontrunner for president. This is clearly threatening to you, scary even, and forces you to resort to immature defense tactics such as name calling.

So I ask, next time you are tempted to use this word to describe Hillary Clinton, that you pause a moment, pretend she is a man, and ask yourself – what you would call him in the same situation? Firm, confident, and strong perhaps? Or would you call him a bitch, polarizing, and evil? I suspect the former rather than the latter.

"Slut?" She has been married since 1975. There has never been any discretion reported. Stop saying this.

I am going to be voting for Hillary Clinton in the upcoming election and I hope that you all consider it too. Hillary Clinton is not just a woman, she is not stupid, she is not inexperienced, she is not simply a polarizing candidate, and she is certainly not a slut.

She is a lawyer, a politician, a mother, a wife, a children's advocate, a healthcare supporter, a women's rights activist, a moderate liberal and a strong, intelligent, articulate, experienced, well-rounded candidate for president. Women have come too far to be discriminated against at this point in time. So please, if you dislike Hillary Clinton's politics, debate with her supporters, campaign against her, don't vote for her, but at least have a reason.

Julie Halpin can be reached at jhalpin@student.umass.edu.

Presidential candidate Hillary Clinton deserves better than to be judged superficially.

Take the dress to the dry cleaners

Brad Leibowitz

How far is too far? When left to our own measures, men the world over can find themselves in a world of debauchery. For those who are hitched, when it comes to infidelity, what actually constitutes going too far? Where do you draw the line in the sand?

As a single male living in the sexually charged world of college, I have made the art of flirtation my business. From the daily exchange of glances, to small-talk in class, to the occasional dinner date, flirtation has become my third major. As such, flirtation and all that goes with the single life (fantasizing, strip clubs, cybersex and the occasional romp) are all options which I and you may partake in without worry of repercussions.

It's obvious that men are characterized as the sex which cheats the most. However, women set the guidelines for what cheating truly is.

But what about the man in the steady relationship, for him what is off limits? According to a recent survey of the American male, 29 percent of men think fantasizing about other women regularly is cheating. However, although "fantasizing was the least likely behavior to be viewed as cheating, it was also the activity that men were least likely to feel comfortable talking with their wives or girlfriends about." Furthermore, along the same line of thought, 65 percent of men believe cybersex is adultery.

This strikes me as odd. Although fantasy involves thoughts in the individuals head and cybersex involves thoughts sent through cyber space, both are essentially the same thing. Both involve a fantasy played out in the individuals mind while the individual, not another, pleasures him/herself. Is this, the act of self gratification with another in mind, cheating?

Here are some more stats for you: According to the same poll, 32 percent of men consider a lap dance cheating, while 53 percent of men consider paying for phone sex perfidy. Seventy-five percent of men consider receiving a happy ending after a massage treachery, and any act which involved the man's fly to be unzipped was considered faithlessness by over 90 percent.

So I ask again, how far is too far? It's obvious that men are characterized as the sex which cheats the most. However, women set the guidelines for what cheating truly is. This being the case, I began to wonder if there is a general consensus in the female community as to what constitutes infidelity.

From the information which I gathered, the general consensus feel any act in which contact becomes more than mental is unfaithful; once the flirting turns into kissing, we've stepped over the line (oddly enough, although it breaches the physicality gap, women I talked with did not consider getting a lap dance from a stripper disloyalty).

We've all done it, or at least thought about it. After a while, no matter how stupid you know your thoughts are, the crush you have been flirting with can get the best of your good intentions. Now, I'm not recommending that you cheat, however, take it from someone who has crossed the line once before, committing an act of infidelity is exhilarating.

Cheating provides a thrill, which in the heat of the moment, provides the same jolt a rollercoaster ride or getting mugged does. For that moment, you're more alive than you have been since the first time you laid eyes on the one you're currently cheating on. It's the basic idea of the forbidden fruit, which after the fact, never seems worth it.

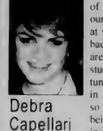
During my high school days, I cheated on a lovely girl. Although she will remain nameless, inside and outside she was, and still is, beautiful. Yet at the time, like most cheaters, I was seeking a thrill which I was not receiving with the aforementioned. I cheated on her with a girl who, in no way, after going through with the act, kept her beauty. It seems, for whatever reason, as initially good as the forbidden fruit appears, once done, the apple turns rotten. If you're wondering, I never got caught. Yet, I believe in some odd way, when we cheat we are expecting and wanting to get caught simply to liven up a lackluster relationship.

I suppose cheating addresses a deeper issue within the male psyche: freedom. Men in a relationship simultaneously lead two different lives. One of those lives evolves around his relationship with his girlfriend/wife. Yet, at the same time, men lead a single life. While away from his girlfriend/wife, men flirt and toy with the thought of infidelity. This is not because we want to hurt you, it simply who we are. Call it evolution or being a mammal who simply has the need to breed… it's our instinctive call for freedom.

In the end, I am not saying that infidelity is a good thing, nor am I saying that it's a bad thing. However, by writing this, I guess I am limiting my chances for a girlfriend. But hey, if that's the case, for the next year, no fruit is forbidden and I will never have to worry about repercussions from flirting or going deeper into the male world of debauchery.

Brad Leibowitz can be reached at bleibowi@student.umass.edu.

The proper decision



Debra Capellari

It would be safe to say that most of us at least recognize – if not pride ourselves – on attending a university at which people of many cultures and backgrounds are well represented. We are also mildly aware that as UMass students, we are afforded the opportunity of an enriched education. One in which we can study whatever we so choose, without worrying about being "mainstream" or simply picking a major because others choose the same one.

On any given day, you can see all types of people walking around campus, whether they're listening to iPods, carrying schoolbooks, riding skateboards or smoking cigarettes and mass consuming coffee, you've seen them. And it's something we count on as students here.

So, as products of such diverse backgrounds, the amount of intolerance displayed in the past few weeks should be appalling to us. Recent events have caused outrages in the mainstream media, and one of the most blatant cases of intolerance was shown by none other than Don Imus and his reference to the Rutgers women's basketball team. On his radio show, Imus referred to the team as "nappy-headed hoes" in referencing its loss in the NCAA finals. His comments spurred action on part of NBC, and Imus was fired from their network.

Imus was well known for making comments that reflected his high level of intolerance toward, not only, the Rutgers team, but so many minority groups. His show was known for its racist, sexist and homophobic opinions. And while NBC had a right to drop his program from their lineup, one should be wondering why he was allowed to stay so long in the first place.

This society has a long-standing history of intolerance among its citizens. In our time, we have alienated members of all different groups based on skin color, religious affiliation, sexual orientation and even primary language spoken. You've at least witnessed – if not participated in – some form of intolerance. So many times I've heard "I wish the person taking my order spoke English," followed by some ridiculous attempt to degrade the person who is just trying to make a living. More and more you hear people say "that's so gay" to denote something stupid or silly, and the word is brushed off as if it does not matter how hurtful it can be.

We should all take a closer look at our behavior and see how tolerant we've all become of the intolerance that occurs in our everyday lives.

We should all take a closer look at our behavior and see how tolerant we've all become of the intolerance that occurs in our everyday lives. There is no excuse for our lack of outrage over occurrences like the one that took place on the Imus show. We have to do better than we are right now, and we have to learn to stick up for the people who need it the most.

NBC dropped Imus only after well-known activists stepped into the public eye and simply declared that what was said was outrageous and should not be tolerated. Both Al Sharpton and Jesse Jackson were quick to denounce Imus and demand that NBC take action against him. Granted, other media outlets had stories about his comments, but none took enough action to publicly denounce his words or ask that action be taken against him.

Perhaps if we all learned to listen more closely, and think our thoughts through for longer periods of time, we could all learn to treat each other just a little bit better. If we stood up for those who need us, we could all feel a little more like a community. We should speak out, we should get angry. We should demand that the people who have jobs where they're broadcasting to a large portion of the population be more open minded and more accepting of those who differ from them.

The truth is that we've just become complacent human beings, who have homework and friends and lives that go on without even thinking about the atrocious behavior of radio hosts. But there shouldn't be any more room for complacency in our lives. Sharpton and Jackson should not be the only ones taking a stand against voices like Imus. We should all raise our voices against people who behave so poorly. We should ask for better representation on our radio stations and news outlets. We're so accustomed to mainstream intolerance that takes place everyday that we do nothing about it. And doing nothing simply isn't enough anymore.

Deb Capellari can be reached at dcapella@student.umass.edu.

Reflections on a tragedy

Don't go too far

Dan Nicastro

"Wendy risked another glance over her shoulder, Jack was on the sixth riser, clinging to the banister much as she was doing herself. He was still grinning, and dark blood oozed slowly through the grin and slipped down the line of his jaw. He bared his teeth at her. 'I'm going to bash your brains in.'"

"To be, or not to be: that is the question:/Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to suffer/The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune,/Or to take arms against a sea of troubles,/And by opposing end them? To die: to sleep;/No more; …"

Stephen King's "The Shining" chronicles the story of a man who goes insane while looking after a hotel. In his insanity, he tries to kill his family. The book is rife with profanity, violence and deeply disturbing images. But Stephen King never killed anyone. In fact, he's a very mild-mannered, well-spoken Red Sox fan.

In the same way, William Shakespeare is considered one of the greatest playwrights in the history of the English language, yet his plays dealt with murder, conspiracy and other disturbing topics. The speech quoted above, which is one of the most recognizable speeches in the English language, is about suicide. Yet we still read Shakespeare, and I'm pretty sure he didn't kill anyone.

Writing (at least to those who enjoy it) is a deeply personal experience. The writer has full control of the characters, the setting, the story and any other aspect of their invented world. It can be an outlet for emotions which cannot be adequately expressed in civilized society and is a very good way to express the pain of everyday life. It is an art form which ultimately asks what it means to be human, and works from people Stephen King and Shakespeare have shown that the human condition is not always bright and cheery.

In the aftermath of the tragedy at Virginia Tech, much has been said about preventing a massacre like this from ever happening again. People have focused on gun control, mental instability, a text-message alert system and finally, creative writing. Several of the articles written about Seung-Hui Cho, including the one entitled "VT Shooter Sparks Concern of Depression" in Monday's Daily Collegian, list the fact that an "English professor took notice of the darkness and wickedness that developed in Cho's creative writing." Is it possible to categorize people based on their creative writing?

It's clear that Seung-Hui Cho had deep psychological issues, but it's impossible and unfair to make this distinction based solely on writing.

It's clear that Seung-Hui Cho had deep psychological issues, but it's impossible and unfair to make this distinction based solely on writing. The teachers who turned him in for his plays were right to do so, but only because they knew how Cho carried himself, and his demeanor made his plays so much more disturbing. The subject matter of his writing was not the reason for his committing these horrific acts, just in the same way these horrific acts were not solely a result of his writing; his writing was a symptom of a much larger problem.

The real question concerns the role of the creative writing teacher. Though many, myself included, think Cho's professors handled the situation correctly, can a clear line be drawn in the sand? Should they turn in any student whose work is deemed "disturbing?" Should they refuse to turn any of their students in because they may be destroying the career of the next Shakespeare? There doesn't seem to be a clear answer here. We can't expect creative writing teachers to become the "thought police" and start turning in anyone who writes something questionable, but we also can't ignore warning signs if we're to prevent something like what happened at Virginia Tech from happening again.

Many are at a loss when it comes to talking about what happened at Virginia Tech. There aren't adequate words to describe the horrible tragedy which took place. Because of this, we can't look for easy answers, like the fact that the gunman wrote profanity-laced and violent plays. Each person's case is unique and we can't slap a label on someone based solely on their writing. Plenty of people write disturbing, profane, obscene things, but most of them don't become killers.

The past few years have brought up numerous questions about the place of the First Amendment in the context of security issues and the creative writing issue is no different. Will we be safer if teachers limit what their students are allowed to express or will overzealous teachers send the next Stephen King away for psychological analysis. There's no good answer and no good solution. All we can do is talk about the issue and keep writing.

Dan Nicastro writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at dnicastro@student.umass.edu.

ENGLAND MAY BEGIN MONITORING CHILDREN FOR SIGNS OF CRIMINAL BEHAVIOUR
OTHER THAN THAT, MRS HARDCASTLE, HE'S A GOOD LAD!
STAYSKAL TRIBUNE MEDIA SERVICES '07

A culture of disconnect

Jackie Hai

Out of all the unrelenting news media coverage of Virginia Tech this past week, one clip above any other moved and resounded deeply with me. The day after the shooting, professor and poet Nikki Giovanni closed the memorial ceremony with an address that was at once heart-wrenching and uplifting; a vast crowd of VT students stood as one and joined voices in the Hokies chant.

It was pure emotion, unscripted, at once visceral and cathartic. It was a powerful showing of solidarity, the way we humans instinctively deal with loss by seeking each other out, supporting one another through the darkest of times. It is our natural response to a world suddenly turned cruel and frightening – on our own we may crumble, but together we find the strength pull through.

The effect would ripple around the nation in the days to come, as it does following every tragedy we've suffered in recent memory. Memorials and candlelight vigils brought friends and strangers together all over the country, united by their grief and a need to make sense of the incomprehensible. An outpouring of sympathy and support flowed to the Hokie community.

We don't understand each other because we aren't listening, and so we allow prejudices to form, hatred to proliferate and violence to blow up.

In this digital age, we bridged our usual disconnect with lightning speed. Reader comments flooded the articles posted online by Planet Blacksburg and other student and local newspapers. One group on Facebook, "A tribute to those who passed at the Virginia Tech Shooting," has over 370,000 members and climbing. Many Facebook members replaced their profile pictures with the symbolic VT logo over a black ribbon, echoing the sentiment, "Today, we are all Hokies."

Meanwhile, public debate rages on over issues of gun control, appropriate response to mental illness and whether or not the Virginia Tech administration did enough. Analysts speculate about the psychology of the gunman and what drove him to do what he did. Finally, there is the nagging question at the root of it all: why are mass shootings so prevalent in this country?

Strip away all the finger-pointing and political bickering and the fundamental answer can be found in one, seemingly innocuous word: Loneliness.

Yes, loneliness. America, for all its high values placed on individual freedoms, individual choice and individual success, is also home to a populace growing increasingly isolated from each other. Front porches are a way of the past; in all but the most close-knit communities, we barely know our neighbors. We don't open up to each other, choosing to obsess over our own troubles instead. We don't understand each other because we aren't listening, and so we allow prejudices to form, hatred to proliferate and violence to blow up.

Martin Seligman, professor of psychology at the University of Pennsylvania, first noted this phenomenon in 1988. Things have only worsened since then.

Our severe disconnect is taking its toll on our collective psyche. In any given year today, depression affects approximately 10 percent of Americans aged 18 and older, with cases increasing at an alarming rate. According to one Harvard Medical Center study, the rate of major depression is doubling every twenty years, and other studies have claimed that 10 times as many people born after 1945 suffer from depression than people born 50 years earlier.

In contrast, an extensive study found that among the Pennsylvania Amish, a society with very strong community ties, the rate of major depression is negligibly low. Likewise, the members of the Kaluli tribe in New Guinea – where group mentality and collective mediation form the backbone of their culture – display no psychological symptoms of depression at all.

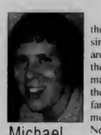
I want to stress that I'm not saying isolation and depression were the only causes of this gunman going on a murderous rampage. Nor am I trying to link mental disorders to outbursts of violence against others. But common sense holds that the greater the number of people there are who feel alienated from society and backed into a corner with no way out, the greater the chances of someone, somewhere, going over the deep end and committing the unspeakable.

As a society, we've demonstrated again and again that we can pull together in times of tremendous grief and trauma. We're more than capable of it. We saw it after the Oklahoma City bombing, Columbine, the 9/11 attacks and now Virginia Tech. So why do we only reach out to each other in the wake of catastrophe? What's stopping us from making it the norm instead of the exception?

The day we solve this puzzling facet of our culture is the day we can truly put an end to senseless violence on our streets, in our homes and across our campuses.

Jackie Hai can be reached at jhai@student.umass.edu.

Media matters



Michael Dennis

In the race to report on the world's pressing issues, simple, overwhelming truths are often lost. In recent times, the mainstream media has mastered the art of changing the subject, and as a result is far from the check on government policy that it should be. News organizations instead find themselves free to ride a wave of sensationalism until it crashes, and they find themselves forced to report on something new. One would think that a society that's subject to constant 24-hour news coverage would become incredibly educated on relevant topics – with a war going on, imagine how many details could be packed into a day's worth of programming. But instead, our apparent collective deficit on attention leaves us pining for something juicier than a budget deficit, and media outlets are more than happy to scratch our itch.

The reigning kings of distraction in the American media today aren't Ann Coulter, Rush Limbaugh or Sean Hannity – they're Fox News, CNN, and MSNBC. Right wing extremists don't speak to anyone except right wing extremists. The real danger is when supposedly credible news organizations follow the lead of such chowder-heads and ignore the political and social realities that we face. They've figured out that undeniable evidence and cold, hard facts don't tend to get the ratings that Anna Nicole Smith does.

They've figured out that undeniable evidence and cold, hard facts don't tend to get the ratings that Anna Nicole Smith does.

The custody battles of dead pseudo-celebrities act as the tempting mistress that constantly threatens our media marriage to the Iraq War. Why put up with the same routine of bombing and carnage, day after day, when we can so easily add some spice on the side? It's an unenviable predicament for the American people to be in, but we're so used to hearing about the "Mess O' Potamia" (as it's been cleverly dubbed by The Daily Show) that it's gotten boring. Visiting a news site and seeing "12 dead in suicide bombing" just doesn't hold the same luster as "Decrepit talk show host says something stupid (again)."

Despite this, the mainstream media has, of late, jumped on the bandwagon of reporting the realities of Iraq, and finally regarding the potential withdrawal of troops as being a realistic possibility (whereas it would have been labeled as extremist as recently as a year ago). This isn't because of any new commitment to reporting the facts, but rather because public opinion has finally shifted to a point where it's overwhelmingly obvious that most think Iraq is (and was) a bad idea.

And that, right there, is the main problem when it comes to reporting on issues that the people want to hear, the mainstream media plays it as safe as possible. Despite 'round the clock coverage of Hurricane Katrina, for example, we were rarely brought up to speed on the inherent racial issues involved with the government's slow response. Rather, whites who broke into stores and took items were "finding" food and blacks who did the same were "looting." As with Iraq, the realities of Katrina came out eventually, but not nearly fast enough. The media likes to wait until it's overwhelmingly safe to broadcast a certain view or angle on a story, budging only because public perception implores it to change course.

And then there are certain issues that are marginalized by simply being outright ignored by the media. Take the genocide in Darfur. Is it inherently an unimportant issue for us, or does it merely seem unimportant because the media chooses not to allow us to contemplate it for more than a few fleeting moments? As the saying goes, out of sight, out of mind. I can just hear it now – "Africans with no oil! What do we need to save them for? Anna Nicole Smith isn't being buried over there, is she?"

The news media in the United States is not far from being indistinguishable from the realm of simple entertainment. It's important for us, as media consumers, to take what the news tells us with a giant grain of salt, and use our inherent sensibilities as humans to realize that maybe widespread murder in Africa is a bit more pressing than one dead… uh…model? Is that what she was? (Fox News, can I get an answer on this?)

It's an unfortunate state of affairs that we rely on an industry with such a bizarre hierarchy of priorities to determine what we deem to be vital issues in the world. Contrary to what some may believe, the news doesn't make the media, the media makes the news. Let's not kid ourselves – there's no such thing as a "natural" news story. There is no inherently bigger story than any other story, because stories by nature are highly constricted and subjective. However, there are certain issues, such as Iraq, global warming, and Darfur, which are inherently more important to us as humans and as citizens. But until the media realizes this, in lieu of reliable, consistent coverage of real issues, we're just going to have to get used to the taste of the soup-of-the-day diversion.

Michael Dennis can be reached at mkdennis@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

GIVING CREDIT WHERE IT'S DUE

Contrary to Lauren Modisette's take on Social Security in Monday's Collegian article "UMass professor talks on future Social Security," Social Security is a much larger dilemma than she leads one to believe and is a problem that can be solved by other means than higher taxes. Modisette fails to give credit to a popular solution – Personal Retirement Accounts (PRA's). This system parallels many of the values taught in college today of being responsible for one's self and taking control of one's own future.

It is estimated that approximately 50 percent of Americans rely on Social Security payments as their primary source of income during their retirement. Just two years ago, 48 million retirees received benefits from Social Security; the system is massive. The Social Security program is out-of-date, and the United States, as one of the most developed and advanced countries in the world should have programs ready for future generations.

Although Professor Pollin believes "the problem is not serious; with minor adjustments [Social Security] would continue to thrive," 13.4 trillion dollars is a bit much. That is $13,400,000,000,000 (11 zeros)! I am appalled that Pollin failed to recognize the massive dilemma of the current system.

An alternative to the current program, aside from increasing taxes to Modisette's projected 11.25 percent payroll taxes to balance the system, would be to implement PRA's where individuals are allowed to manage and are guaranteed the funds they pay into the system. In mentioning a proposed solution of implementing PRA's, Modisette claims that this solution "would neglect the current retired population and the government would have to borrow more money to care for them; the only way for the government to replenish the lack of funds is through taxing and bonds." Many bi-partisan proposals, including those by Kolbe-Boyd and Liebman-MacGuineas-Samwick, include solutions to provide personal accounts, care for those already grandfathered into the system and attain solvency.

As it stands, our retirement funds are based on the decisions of politicians and not accessible to the average American. PRA's allow individuals to invest in stocks, bonds and equities as they wish. Americans have the right to their earned dollars and to control their retirement funds, which are not available under the current system. Despite the inclination of the government to overreach and control our future savings, retirement income is something that should be individually managed.

There is a large contingency of voters who support a reform to the current system, approximately 80 percent according to National Center for Policy Analysis (a non-partisan group in D.C.). I would advise The Collegian to fully report on this issue and not fail to acknowledge the extensive problem of the current Social Security system.

Liz Morgan
Undergrad, Smith College

JUST TO CLARIFY

In S.P. Sullivan's article covering the "Run For the Hill," he states that the event was sponsored by Central Area Government and American Airlines.

Just to clarify, the event was paid for through Central Area Government and the Office of Student Affairs. American Airlines generously donated two airline tickets to be raffled off to support Virginia Tech. We are grateful for their donation in support of our event.

Charles Thebado
Central Area Government

DON'T JUMP THE GUN

In response Chris Eckel's editorial of Monday April 23 entitled "Gun Laws: change of times yields reform," I offer no comment on the state of gun laws in this country. However, I do protest a brazen statement made by Eckel that I feel is dangerous to believe. Eckel wrote: "In seeking change, we should not bow to those who will condemn us for "attempting to create policy out of tragedy." That is a morally reprehensible and intellectually indefensible argument, designed to stifle the legitimate actions of those who would seek to end the cycle of violence."

I am certain that creating policy out of tragedy has a long history in this country, but let's look at some recent examples. The Patriot Act was passed in the weeks after 9/11, sacrificing individual civil rights to privacy and freedom. Very few lawmakers read through the law before voting; its slightly reformed version is still in effect. The War in Iraq was justified to the public and allowed by Congress because we were told Iraq was developing WMDs with the insinuation that Iraq was planning to use them against us. "All options are on the table," President George W. Bush said in 2002, "But one thing I will not allow is a nation such as Iraq to threaten our very future by developing weapons of mass destruction." Believe what you'd like about fighting the war, but we would not have allowed the war to begin if we had been told straight-off that we were merely spreading democracy. The cycle of violence is still going on, Iraqis and Americans are still dying, and American/Muslim relations will suffer for generations. The extra-legal prison in Guantanamo Bay and others like it were given the green light not only to suspend Habeas Corpus, but also to employ certain types of torture and terror techniques on prisoners. To date, very few have had a legal trial.

All of these policies were powered by tragedy. American (and other nations') lives, civil liberties, Habeas Corpus and the Geneva Convention have all fallen victim to these policies. The repercussions are not minor and not harmless and may never be fully repaired.

Maybe gun laws need to be changed, but we must not rest those changes on the horror of Virginia Tech. Fear is powerful, and can easily drive change, but it can also be a thoughtless animal emotion with no sense of direction. With millions of guns on the market and in the streets, time must be taken to understand and undertake the best approach to change. Before urging immediate change, please remember that in a government as big as ours, generations may be required to fix mistakes made in moments of emotion.

Joshua Mason
UMass Amherst Grad Student

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 25, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Alumnus looks back at music career at UMass

Avery Sharpe reflects on music program's legendary professors

BY BRAD FARBERMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

During a Q & A that followed his performance at New Africa House in April, renowned bassist and UMass alumnus Avery Sharpe '76 explained that it's his job "to do something different everyday."

"It's like heaven on earth," said Sharpe.

Originally from Georgia, Sharpe and his family moved to Springfield, Mass., in 1965, when Sharpe was 10. After an ill-fated tryst with the accordion, Sharpe started on bass when he was 16.

"I would always just hear [bass] lines as a kid," said Sharpe. "I could hear the bass lines better than the themes."

There were other reasons, too. "It was because I was trying to get girls," said Sharpe. "I thought girls liked bass players."

On bass, Sharpe played gospel music in church. He performed the music of artists like James Cleveland and Edward Hawkins, and traditional tunes like "Lord I Want To Go," a piece that he included in his set at New Africa House.

In 1972, Sharpe enrolled at UMass as a physical education major (he later switched to the economics major, with a minor in music). He played in a number of bands at the time, including The Dynamic Sex Machine, "a bunch of brothers with afros and daishikis." He helped start a jazz jam at the Blue Wall, and played bass in the Voices of New Africa House, a choir group under the direction of retired UMass professor Dr. Horace Boyer.

It was also during this time that Sharpe studied with a "who's who" of important voices in African-American music, as many of those voices had taken to teaching at UMass.

"It was a fertile ground where things were getting ready to grow," said Sharpe of UMass in the 1970s.

"I learned so much in such a short period of time."

One-time John Coltrane bassist Reggie Workman taught private lessons at the University from 1972-1974, and urged Sharpe to take up double bass (Sharpe had only played electric bass prior to his time at UMass).

"Reggie was a little rough, as they say," said Sharpe. "He was from the old school."

One time, when Sharpe had shown up unprepared for a lesson, Workman told him he was "jiving," and put his head on a desk and went to sleep.

"After that, every time I came to a lesson I had my act together," said Sharpe.

Drummer Max Roach, "one of the fathers of bebop" according to Sharpe, taught full-time from 1973-1978.

"Max taught me how to listen to drummers, how to practice, and how to get my time together," said Sharpe.

Since his studies with Roach, Sharpe has played with any number of acclaimed drummers, including Elvin Jones, Art Taylor, Louis Hayes and Jack DeJohnette. He points to his time with Roach as having prepared him to hang with these players.

Saxophonist and vocalist Archie Shepp taught at UMass from 1971-2001.

"Archie had a big influence on me," said Sharpe. "He gave me a lot of insight, and started using me on regional and local gigs after I graduated."

By the end of the 1970s, however, Shepp had taken Sharpe international. In 1979, Shepp took a big band to Europe, featuring Sharpe on electric and double bass. At a gig in Paris, drummer Art Blakey sat in, and took the bassist's phone number after their performance. Sharpe would tour with Blakey in February and March of 1980, in an edition of the Jazz Messengers that included saxophonist Bobby Watson and pianist James Williams (and a young Wynton Marsalis sitting in on several gigs).

"Music always came first with Art," said Sharpe. "He always gave you a chance to experiment and write tunes. I learned a lot."

Their collaboration was not to last, however. When Sharpe asked for time off to smooth things over at his day job (Sharpe worked as an insurance claims adjuster in Springfield), Blakey wasn't having it.

Consummate pianist and longtime Coltrane collaborator McCoy Tyner was more understanding, and gave Sharpe the time he needed to straighten things out at work.

"He called me, I went to the audition, I gigged with him that weekend," said Sharpe. "The rest, as they say, is history."

The pair first worked together from 1980-1982, and again in 1984 until 2002.

"First of all, he's a nice cat, and that's why we were together for so long," said Sharpe.

An appreciation for Tyner's musicianship was also part of the equation.

"He's such a great player," said Sharpe. "The most consistent player I've ever played with. Every night was just unbelievable."

Since 1981, Sharpe has appeared on more than twenty recordings with Tyner, for labels like Verve, Impulse! and Columbia. Three of these records have won Grammy Awards.

It was also during his early days with Tyner that Sharpe made the decision to quit his day job. When the head of his department sat him down and asked him to choose between music and insurance, the decision was simple, said Sharpe.

After he gave his two-week notice, Sharpe worked harder than he had ever worked before at his job, so as not to leave a mess for his replacement.

"I was always a good employee," said Sharpe. "Why would I not be a good employee now?"

There was backlash from at least one corner, however, after Sharpe left his day gig.

"Art [Blakey] didn't talk to me for about six months afterward," said Sharpe. "He was pissed. He thought I left my day job for McCoy, but not for him."

Hurt feelings aside (they later reconciled), the freedom to pursue music, and only music, has led Sharpe through a varied and fruitful career that has seen, among other things, the creation of his own record label, composing for film and record dates with retired Five College Distinguished Professor of Music Yusef Lateef.

"He's an incredible person," said Sharpe of Lateef. "Very spiritual and cerebral."

Sharpe thinks rather less, however, of some of the popular music of the day, namely "rap music," which he compares to candy. Like candy, said Sharpe, that music is "a quick satisfier, but it has no substance."

Sharpe is not worried about the future of African-American music, however.

"People are going to gravitate to it when they get tired of candy," said Sharpe.

"I'm optimistic," he continued. "I'm just going to do what I do and let the chips fall where they may."

If all goes according to plan, what he does in the near future should include a record date dubbed "Legends and Mentors." On that date, Sharpe plans to record the music of Tyner, Shepp and Lateef. His other immediate plans include a gig with the Springfield Symphony Orchestra on May 19 (premiering an original piece of his commissioned by the orchestra), and another trip to France with Shepp in June. At 52, Sharpe is still doing what he loves, and still doing something different everyday.

"No one could have told me I wasn't going to do this," said Sharpe. "I was going to do it no matter what."

Brad Farberman can be reached at bfarberman@student.umass.edu

Springfield, Mass. native Avery Sharpe attended the University of Massachusetts from 1972 to 1976. Originally enrolled as a Physical Education major, many professors inspired him to change his focus to music.

Beyond the Dining Commons

DC Dish goes to the Blue Heron Restaurant

BY MARY-FRANCES HECK
COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

At the Blue Heron Restaurant, the menu, like the restaurant, is a blend of comfort and sophistication. Open only for dinner, Blue Heron's offerings combine cuisines from many continents. Students will find Blue Heron somewhat pricey, but for fine dining in the Pioneer Valley, the quality cannot be beat.

Deborah Snow and Barbara White found the restaurant business in an unusual way. They met in academia and shared a passion for good food. Soon they began a catering business and played with the idea of opening their own restaurant. After touring the country in an RV looking for the perfect spot to settle, they returned to Massachusetts and opened Blue Heron Restaurant in the Montague Mill. The tiny restaurant flourished, and after six years, Snow and White moved their business to Sunderland. They bought the Old Town Hall and completely renovated the two-story building for modern restaurant standards.

The warm colors and lighting paired with a variety of seating areas allows diners to feel at home in Blue Heron. Whether you are sipping a cocktail next to the fireplace in the Lounge or enjoying several courses upstairs in the formal Great Room, you will be at ease. The historic touches were not lost in the new design. Although the furniture and décor are contemporary, including art by Rob Chirico, the head bartender, patrons are treated to creaky wood floors and high ceilings that remind one of days gone by.

Appetizers priced at $8-$12 are well within the price range of students on a budget and are substantial enough for a light meal. The Pan Seared Scallops with lentils, applewood smoked bacon and cider reduction is to die for. In fact, a recent issue of "Bon Appetit" featured the dish. Pure white scallops are contrasted against the earthy lentils and smoky bacon. A sweet, deeply rich cider reduction brings the dish together flawlessly.

Other appetizers play with flavors from a variety of cultures. Thai Black Bean Cakes and Spicy Shrimp are served with coconut lime sauce and mango banana chutney. Mezze, a Middle-Eastern hors d'oeuvres, includes whipped feta, fava bean hummus, olive and pepper salad, falafel and toasted pita.

For a French twist, try Steamed Mussels Dijonnaise with rustic bread that comes warm and crusty. The Heron always has evening Dim Sum with a variety of Chinese offerings.

Signature cocktails include Blue Heron Sazerac Old Fashioned, Pear Martini and James Bond's favorite the "Vesper," shaken, not stirred. If you are in the mood for something a little more adventurous try the Too Hot to Trotsky, a blend of Absolut Peppar, vermouth and a pickled jalapeno or a Summer Rain made with pomegranate liqueur.

Cocktails come with homegrown olives, reason enough to visit Blue Heron. They are small, but pack a mouthful of sweet, briny flavor, like good extra virgin olive oil, free of any strong salt or vinegar taste.

Snow and White are dedicated to sustainable local agriculture, which means that they purchase as much meat, fish, dairy and produce that comes from organic farmers in the Valley and New England as possible. Commitment to the community comes in many other forms as well. By devoting resources to the Food Bank of Western Massachusetts and Seeds of Solidarity they hope to make a lasting impression on the welfare of the community.

The restaurant hosts special events like cooking classes, live jazz and holiday dinners. During graduation, Blue Heron offers a menu geared especially for students and their families with private rooms available for parties.

No trip to Blue Heron is complete without a taste of dessert. The chef recommends the Pomegranate Custard for $7, which can be imagined as luscious vanilla Crème Brulée, without the brulée, topped with pomegranate curd. It is made similarly to lemon curd, with egg yolks and sugar, but with a pomegranate reduction instead of lemon juice. The curd gives a pink pucker to the sweet custard. Delicious.

If you are in the mood for something richer, give the Chocolate Pot de Crème with housemade cinnamon sugar doughnuts a whirl. For a tropical twist try Grilled Pineapple and Banana Spring Rolls served with coconut ice cream and rum caramel sauce. Whatever you choose, you will go home satisfied. And you will look forward to your next trip to Blue Heron.

Mary-Frances Heck can be reached at mheck@student.umass.edu

Blue Heron Restaurant has a variety of appetizer options perfect for students on a budget.

UMass to host second annual film festival this Thursday

BY TERESA REILLY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The students of the University of Massachusetts and the Five College Consortium will be showing their films at the Second Annual Film Festival on Thursday, April 26 at the Cape Cod Lounge. The festival is free to the general public.

Four narrative films (totaling 1 hour and 30 minutes), two documentaries (30 minutes) and a few experimental films will be shown. UVC-TV received 32 entries which it handed over to judges who decided which films will be shown. The judges will keep the list of films secret until the night of the event, because UVC wants all of the directors to show up.

"Just because [the director's] film isn't in [the show] doesn't mean that they shouldn't come and show respect," said Dustin Devlin, a UVC-TV representative.

At the end of the evening, judges will award prizes in the following categories: Most Outstanding Overall Film, Best Narrative, Best Film by a UMass Undergraduate and Best Short Film. The judges' opinions will be considered, but the majority of the influence will go to the over 60 students who will be voting.

"Ultimately we want the students to decide," said Devlin. "The voters must grade each film on the following: cinematography, clarity, overall judgment and more."

Last year's winners included Searching for Tupac by Joey Carey of Hampshire College in the Best Documentary category.

In last year's contest Hampshire took two of the awards. Best Documentary and Best Experimental Film. UMass students took home the other four awards.

"Last year we had a lot of Hampshire submissions," said Devlin. "We have a lot more UMass submissions this year. We do have one documentary from Smith."

The prizes are uncertain at this point. DV Den in Amherst may donate a free rental to the festival.

"It's just about giving everyone a place to show their stuff," said Devlin, "another outlet."

Teresa Reilly can be reached at treilly@student.umass.edu.

Last year's film festival consisted primarily of Hampshire College students' work. This year's submissions, however, are mostly from UMass students.

Minutemen hang on

M. LACROSSE from page 10

number is one shy of the sophomore goaltender's season-high 15 stops, a mark he set against Penn State on March 31. It was also the seventh time this season that Schneider saved double-digit shots – UMass is 6-1 in those games with the only loss coming Saturday to Georgetown.

Recchione's hat trick was not the only first of the day for the Minutemen. Midfielder Evan Blum also recorded his first two-assist performance while rookie faceoff man Bobby Hayes won a career-best 14-of-19 draws.

The beginning of game was the only point in which the Minutemen trailed yesterday. After Greg Downing scored the first of his two goals, senior midfielder Brett Garber and Recchione answered with back-to-back scores. Garber scored with 8:41 to go in the quarter and Recchione's goal came just before the buzzer at the one-second mark.

Connolly then sandwiched his first and second goals around one by Fairfield's Dan Boudreau. Those first seven scores – four by UMass, three by Fairfield – all came unassisted.

The Minutemen scored two more times before the half ran out, taking a 6-4 lead into the locker room. Denis Whelan and Rory Pedrick scored the goals with the latter coming with just 28 seconds left on the clock.

The back-and-forth play of the first half carried over into the game's final two quarters. Fairfield scored to open third and then each team scored two goals before Recchione finally sealed the win.

Downing scored his second of the game just 1:10 into the half, taking a pass from Boudreau. The Downing goal was the first of two occasions in which the Stags pulled within one, this time 6-5, during the second half. But Fairfield never could completely close the gap.

Senior Brian Jacovina and Connolly answered with a goal each in the next six minutes to give the Minutemen some breathing room, 8-5. Jacovina's score was unassisted while Connolly's came on a pass delivered by Blum.

Then, after being held off the scoreboard for the first three quarters of play by UMass defenseman Sean Krygier, Stags' leading scorer Mike Bocklet scored twice in a row to open the fourth quarter and give his team some hope. Bocklet now has 36 points on the season with 24 goals and 12 assists.

One thing the Minutemen struggled with early in the season was their inability to finish teams off, and that looked as if it might happen again yesterday after Bocklet's goals cut the lead to 8-7.

But Recchione then completed his hat trick with two straight goals, one minute apart, to seal the win for UMass and handed the Stags their sixth straight loss. The midfielder's second goal came with 5:24 to go and the third followed at 4:17.

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu. Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

In 12 games for the Minutemen, sophomore attack Tim Balise is tied for third on the team with 21 points. In yesterday's win against the Stags, Balise was held scoreless.

Holy Cross is UMass' new opponent

BASEBALL from page 10

the Minutemen will take on Holy Cross today at noon, thanks to Ivy League policy.

Harvard must make up a doubleheader against Yale this afternoon. It's a league game for the Crimson Tide, so Ivy League regulation restricts them from playing in the game at Fenway.

"We're fortunate to be able to have Holy Cross available, and they want to play at Fenway, so it worked out well," Stone said.

UMass last played Holy Cross back on April 3 of this year. Junior Jim Cassidy picked up his first win of the season in the Minutemen's 4-3 victory over the Crusaders. He allowed only one run on three hits in seven innings of work.

This time around, it will be sophomore Mike Dicato starting for UMass. The Winthrop native is just one of the Minutemen who will get the opportunity to play in front of the Green Monster.

Senior catcher Frank McPherson will make his third start of the season this afternoon. The usual backup to captain Bryan Garrity hails from Somerville, and stepping in the batter's box at Fenway is something he's dreamed of his whole life.

"I'm very excited," McPherson said. "It's going to be fun to go to Boston in front of my hometown crowd. I'm excited for the opportunity."

"We're going to get as many seniors in to play as possible," Stone said. "Everybody wants to play, but we still have to keep in mind that we want to put a quality lineup in there and some quality pitching so we have a chance to win the ball game."

McPherson has played in four games this season and is 2-for-5 with one run scored in his limited playing time.

While only a consolation game that technically doesn't count in the hattle for a postseason berth in the A-10, the Minutemen have won three of their last four games, and look to keep their winning ways alive against Holy Cross.

"We have a chance to play at Fenway Park, and that's pretty special, so everybody's pretty excited about that," Stone said. "We've been improving our record, and we look forward to every game to have an opportunity to improve even more."

Danny Picard can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu.

The Massachusetts baseball team was originally scheduled to play Harvard in today's Beanpot Consolation Game, but the Crimson pulled out of the tournament and the Minutemen will now face Holy Cross.

Sophomore Mike DiCato could see action in tomorrow's game against Holy Cross. The pitcher ranks fifth on the team with a 5.06 ERA.

Special guest scheduled for season finale

W. LACROSSE from page 10

Minutewomen were up to their old tricks against George Washington. UMass was held scoreless for the final 17 minutes of the second half, surrendering the final four goals of the day in a 10-7 defeat.

UMass suffered the same fate against the Richmond Spiders in Amherst on the following Sunday. The Minutewomen scored the first two goals of the game before watching the Spiders go on an 8-0 run spanning both halves – en route to a 10-4 win.

"It's just a different mindset," Venechanos said about playing with the lead. "It's just going to be a learning experience in playing in different situations. But we want the urgency to be there the entire game..."

UMass has not been a second-half team since the very beginning of the season. But the team still has to play two consequential games – in terms of playoff implications – against Saint Joseph's and La Salle in order to officially bid the disappointing 2007 season farewell. These two games could serve as a lesson to playing better with with lead, in hopes of avoiding second-half blues.

"One of our goals heading into the season was getting into the A-10 Tournament and then obviously winning it," Venechanos said. "I'm very happy with the way we've fought hard in every game this season.

"I'm disappointed but I'm also happy with the way we've played."

STAR ATTRACTION

Plans are in the works to bring Jaclyn Murphy, 12, to Amherst on Sunday for the regular-season finale against La Salle. Murphy, who was diagnosed with a malignant brain tumor in March 2004, was the inspiration for the Friends of Jaclyn Murphy College Lacrosse Challenge played between UMass and Northwestern on March 23. The two-day event raised $38,500, which will go to the Friends of Jaclyn Murphy Foundation to help in assisting in the medical costs for children diagnosed with pediatric brain tumors.

A part of those proceeds was used to purchase a new computer for Lexie Williams, 8, a native of Massachusetts, who was diagnosed with a front left temporal lobe astrocytoma at the age of four. Jaclyn and her family are planned to present the gift to Lexie prior to Sunday's game.

"We're going to officially adopt Lexie into our program and make her the Jaclyn Murphy of UMass," Venechanos said. "The girls on the team have been talking with her and they have been kind of been an outlet for her. We're hoping that every team in the nation has someone like Jaclyn or Lexie because it's a great benefit for these kids who really don't have much to look forward to everyday."

MISSING OFFENSE

After suffering from a ribcage injury her freshman season, sophomore midfielder Holly Drown registered 24 goals in her first 10 games in 2007.

But Drown's goal production has dwindled in the last five games. Drown scored just four times in the last five contests after averaging close to 2.5 goals before the A-10 season commenced. She has not found the back of the net in either of the last two games.

"It was actually a luxury that she was scoring all those goals for us at the beginning of the year," Venechanos said. "I think it's been a combination of teams picking up on her offensive tendencies and other people on our team stepping up and scoring. I think we've been pretty balanced offensively the whole season and people have been making up for it. I'm confident that the more looks [Drown] gets, the more shots she'll put away."

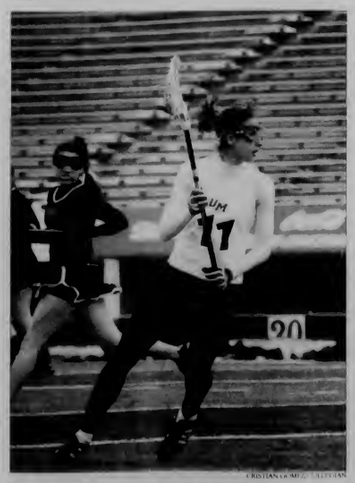
While Drown's offensive numbers have been down as of late, she has still been an integral part of winning possessions for the Minutewomen, and now ranks first all-time in single-season draw control wins with 41. The previous single-season record in draw controls was 39 set by Rachel Ingraffea in 2001.

AT IT AGAIN

Junior attack Kathleen Typadis is gunning for two more records this weekend. Typadis, who has amassed a team-leading 42 goals this year, needs 10 goals to move past Pam Morsl for the all-time single-season lead in goals scored.

The standout attack also needs just one more goal to become third all-time in career goals scored with 122, and is just five tallies shy of moving past Sue Murphy for second on the list. Senior defender Erica Shapiro won't be leaving Amherst without a goal to her credit, after notching her first-career goal Sunday at St. Bonaventure.

Kevin Dooley can be reached at kdooley@student.umass.edu



Julie Papaleo is third on the Minutewomen in groundballs. Her 25 this season are behind Ashley King's 35 and Samantha Sepulveda's 26.

Stephanie Hopkins has 11 points this season on nine goals and two assists in 15 games played.

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE

A grade dispute?

Teacher, roomate or job concerns?

Billing problems?

...or any other University related problems?

THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)

Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community

823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

After struggles, Sanders back on top for UM

SOFTBALL from page 10

ed, and she was pulled from regular duty for the early part of A-10 play.

However, she has come back strong of late, going 4-1 in her last five starts with a 1.11 ERA and 31 strikeouts. In her last four appearances (including one relief outing at Charlotte), her numbers are even better.

Sanders conceded just one run in 18 1/3 innings pitched, averaging a strikeout per inning. In her last appearance Sunday at Saint Joseph's Sanders earned her first-career shutout and a career-high nine strikeouts in a five-inning victory over the rival Hawks.

"I've never seen a kid work harder," Sortino said. "She's very, very talented. She needed to find a way to use her stuff and get it going. I just think she's going to get a little bit better everyday. I'm really glad to see her reap a little bit of the rewards for the kind of work she's put in."

Offensively, junior Stacy Cullington continued her breakout season last weekend with a pair of home runs against Temple on April 21. The second baseman was intentionally walked six times in the two meetings against the Owls. Her only other at-bats were the pair of homers.

"I thought Stacy handled [being walked six times] pretty well," Sortino said. "It was kind of confusing [to figure out] what Temple was trying to do, but when she finally got pitched to, she was ready."

Cullington's 10 home runs lead the Minutewomen and are second only to Temple's Adrienne Repsher (13) in the A-10. Cullington paces the conference with 38 RBIs. Senior Candice Molinari owns the team-lead in batting average, hitting at a .387 clip.

The Huskies enter Amherst on a five-game win streak of their own, though they are much stronger offensively than in the circle. Sophomore Micah Truax set a new school record for home runs in a season, sending three over the wall in a pair of games against Big East rival Rutgers. The conference named her its Player of the Week this week for her three-home run performance.

Sophomore Jillian Ortega leads the team with a .377 batting average, 30 RBIs and nine doubles.

Four different pitchers have made appearances in the circle for the Huskies, including three different starters (compared to just two pitchers for UMass).

The group is anchored by senior hurler Krista Michalczyk, whose 10-7 record is best on the team. She is third with a 4.19 ERA. Freshman Tricia Sullivan is the No. 2 pitcher, with an 8-7 record and a 3.67 ERA.

Sophomore Rachael Crossin has served as a spot-starter for UConn, going 1-3 in four appearances (three starts). However, she leads the Huskies with a 3.57 ERA.

As is usually the case between UMass and UConn, the schools' softball teams have a long and storied rivalry. The Minutewomen hold the all-time series lead by just one game, 42-41-2. However, under Sortino, UMass trails the Huskies by a game, at 39-40-1. A win today for the Minutewomen could even that series for Sortino's bunch.

Today's matchup with the Huskies (20-17, 7-6 Big East), was originally scheduled as the final game of a home-and-home series. The first game, to be played in Storrs, Conn., on April 17, was cancelled due to rain and will not be made up.

Sophomore catcher Emily Wehr, who has missed the last two weeks with a hip injury for UMass, will miss this week's games as well. She is expected to return to practice early next week.

Freshman Jessica Serio – who joined the team as a third baseman has played well defensively in a full-time role, after splitting time with Wehr earlier in the season.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

In 16 appearances this season, freshman pitcher Bailey Sanders has posted a 7-4 record and closed one game out for the Minutewomen. In 74 1/3 innings, she has a 2.90 earned run average and 64 strikeouts.

Fordham drops second A-10 contest

Loss puts the Rams behind conference-leading UMass

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

In most circumstances, having two blemishes on your conference record would equal a successful season. But for the Fordham softball team (32-15, 12-2 Atlantic 10), the pair of A-10 losses puts the Rams in second place and in a difficult position to catch Massachusetts (26-12-1, 12-0 A-10) at the top.

A-10 Softball

Fordham lost its first A-10 game of the season three weeks ago to Saint Joseph's (13-21, 5-9 A-10), ending a 16-game winning streak. After losing the first game of a doubleheader, the Hawks reversed the 1-2 score into their favor. The Rams surrendered three runs in the top of the fourth inning after giving up a series of base hits.

Just last week, Fordham dropped its second conference game, despite receiving a strong pitching performance from Sara Kinney. The senior pitcher allowed the only run of the game in the bottom of the sixth inning, after giving up two hits.

However, the loss immediately followed an 8-0 Fordham win. Kinney pitched seven strong innings in the first game while not allowing a run.

Kinney has been one of the best pitchers in the league this season. Her 2.34 ERA ranks fourth in the league. She also has the third most strikeouts in the A-10, with 142 in 134 innings pitched.

Yet, the Rams can take their fate into their own hands with two games against the Minutewomen in two weeks. Given its current pace, it seems unlikely that UMass will lose a single conference matchup. Therefore, the Rams will most likely need to win their remaining conference games to claim at least a share of the Atlantic 10 regular season title.

The reason for Fordham's success this season can be attributed to its offensive production. The Rams lead the league in batting average and extra-base hits in conference play. The team's power numbers trail only Temple (13-16, 7-5 A-10) by two home runs.

Perhaps more importantly, depending on one's views of the game of softball, getting on base is the priority of the batter regardless of the means. The team leads the A-10 in walks, earning 44 free passes in A-10 play this year.

Sophomore Melissa Andrews has been the team's most productive hitter this season. The outfielder ranks second in the league in hits (21) and first in RBIs with 16. She has also shown a flash of power at the plate this season, driving herself home on four different occasions.

Bottom feeders

Though it has several elite teams, the Atlantic 10 is not without those that cannot compete with the conference's best. Rhode Island and Dayton currently reside at the bottom of the standings, each having won just twice.

Not only are the Rams (8-27, 2-9 A-10) struggling through their A-10 schedule, the team got off to a slow start to begin the season against difficult competition. After winning its first game, URI lost its next seven, while playing in several invitational tournaments.

Similarly, the Rams started slowly to begin the A-10 season in early April. In a very similar pattern to its non-conference schedule, the team lost its next seven games before picking up the second victory.

Things have not been much better for URI's companion in the basement. The Flyers (10-23, 2-9 A-10) began the season by posting a 3-7 record in the Orlando Rebel Games. Though Dayton played against non A-10 teams, its opponents were by no means softball powers who had the benefit of practicing in warm weather. They were instead schools in similar situations from the Northeast, which traveled to the Florida tournament.

However, the Flyers unique schedule allowed the team to boost its record. The team had the luxury of playing four consecutive games against a team with 23 losses. Dayton earned its third and fourth wins against IPFW (5-23) last night with two strong pitching performances … In 13 conference games this season, the La Salle Explorers (13-17, 6-7 A-10) have not been caught stealing once this season. Then again, the team has not attempted to steal a base … The only team batting below .200 in league play this season is Saint Joseph's, with a .199 batting average in 14 games.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

Leading the A-10's best offense, sophomore Melissa Andrews ranks first in the league in RBIs (16) and second in hits (21).

After a spectacular offensive week (13 goals in three games), attack Katelyn Faas earned A-10 Player of the Week honors.

A-10 recognizes Faas' 13-goal week

A-10 W. LACROSSE from page 10

Richmond will finish its regular season with two home games this weekend against St. Bonaventure on Friday and Duquesne on Sunday.

George Washington is 3-1 in the A-10

The Colonials currently hold the third position in the A-10 with a 3-1 record. This past weekend GW took on Saint Joseph's and almost shut them out with a score of 9-1 – the Hawks didn't score for the first 55 minutes of the game.

Junior goalie Caitlin Garman finished the game with 10 saves and one goal allowed, which was the fewest goals ever allowed in a single game in program history.

GW finished above St. Joe's in shots (25-17), ground balls (12-11) and draw controls (9-3) to help them come out victorious.

The Colonials take on Duquesne on Friday. If GW can win its next game, it will clinch a spot in the A-10 Tournament.

Katelyn Faas named A-10 Player of the Week

St. Bonaventure sophomore attack Katelyn Faas was named A-10 Player of the Week. During a week of three wins for St. Bonaventure, Faas scored 13 goals and had two assists. In the April 17 match against Binghamton, Faas registered a season-high nine points, scoring seven goals and adding two assists.

On April 20, Faas helped the Bonnies beat Temple for the first time ever (they were 0-9 previously), notching her seventh hat trick of the season. Faas scored her 100th career goal against Massachusetts on April 22. She was the sixth player to do so in program history. So far in A-10 play, Faas has scored 21 goals in five games – helping the Bonnies to a perfect conference record.

Taylor Donohue is A-10 Rookie of the Week

George Washington's Taylor Donohue was named A-10 Rookie of the Week. On April 22, Donohue set a career high with four goals, leading the Colonials to a 9-1 win over the Hawks. Donohue leads all GW rookies and is tied for fourth on the team for goals at 15. Donohue is also tied for first in the league with three game-winning goals.

Melissa Turtion can be reached at mturtion@student.umass.edu

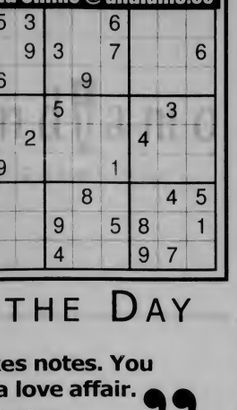
DISCOUNT MATTRESS
FORMERLY SLEEPY HOLLOW
VOTED #1
(413) 253-BEDS (2337) RT. 9 Amherst
SUN-MON: 12-4 TUES-SAT: 10:30-6

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local/National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

Check dailycollegian.com and dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

PINOCCHIOS on the go
Specials of the Week
Buy 2 Calzones GET 1 FREE
5 FREE WINGS With Purchase of any Large Pizza
(413) 256-4110 Call Now!
Sun-Wed Open 'til 1am
Thur Open 'til 2am
Fri-Sat Open 'til 3am

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc



Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"A poet never takes notes. You never take notes in a love affair."
-Robert Frost

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

Publish or Perish
I've always wondered— does that mean for the author or for the characters in the story
What if it's Published on a disposable medium, like a newspaper or online
Is it possible to Publish AND Perish
"Persish" isn't meant literally. You know.
How can you be So Sure

TWO DUDES By Aaron Warner

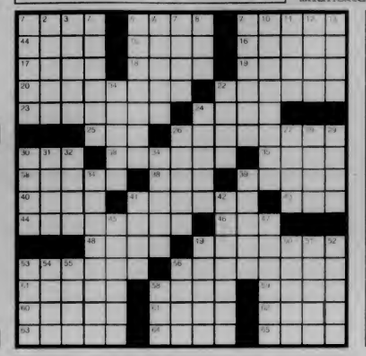
CAN YOU IMAGINE A BALONEY SANDWICH WITHOUT MUSTARD?
...AND DON'T SUGGEST USING CUSTARD. THEY DON'T TASTE NEARLY AS SIMILAR AS THEY SOUND

LABRAT By Richard Martell

ACROSS
1 Garden tools
5 Decomposes
9 Distinctive smell
14 Names of old films
15 Give off
16 Grave risk
17 Graven image
18 Boggy area
19 Sacred song
20 Standing alone
22 Fishing nets
23 Nervous quivers
24 Health resorts
25 Sort or kind
26 Taken aback
30 ___ Alamos, NM
33 High regard
35 Continental cash
36 Aids a criminal
38 Emoter
39 Lot in
40 Actress Sorvino
41 Beginning
43 IBM units
44 Awareness of one's position
46 Medic
48 Wildebeests
49 Tanning-booth light
53 Health-club handouts
56 Pass catcher
57 Slacken
58 Maui tourist destination
59 Landlocked African nation
60 Thesaurus man
61 Throw out
62 Chest protectors
63 Planter's purchases
64 Merriment
65 Lambaste

DOWN
1 Robbery
2 More mature
3 Split to get hitched
4 Deli offering
5 Comments
6 Overlooks
7 Make weary
8 Fr. holy woman
9 Seem
10 Fought back
11 Algerian seaport
12 Distance unit
13 Charity for the poor
21 Drama parts
22 Junk e-mail
24 Flower parts
26 Bleachers, e.g.
27 Amorphous mass
28 Lindros of hockey
29 Periods
30 Gyro meal
31 NYC theater award
32 Evening in Venice
34 Goons
37 Armed at
39 Make amends
41 Burden of responsibility
42 Teach
45 Coastal indentations
47 Scales
49 Sound judgment
50 Be of use to
51 Thin toast
52 Light refractor
53 Old manners
54 Orchestra member
55 Hourly pay
56 Actor Julia
58 Large motorcycle

THE HARP
SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
THURSDAY • COVALENCE
FRIDAY • LLAMA LASAGNA
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar East of the River 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate Readers Poll
AMEX All credit cards accepted
Free wireless Internet!
168 Sunderland Rd - N Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-6000 www.theharp.net



Continuing & Professional Education
UMass Amherst Summer 2007
Get an early start on your summer plans!
• New online offerings!
• Same great faculty!
• Smaller classes
• Two Sessions
I: June 4 – July 2
II: July 6 – August 22
(Annual calendar classes available)
Register now!
By visiting us at www.MassLearn.net

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Dance the crazy dance of a man/woman with a newt or salamander in their undies.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Never place your trust in a three legged dog. They're the least stable of all canines.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
A little person riding a giraffe drinking clam chowder from a Big Gulp. Go!

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Humans receive $10K for their eggs, but we just steal them from chickens. INJUSTICE!

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Next time you're in the bathroom make lots of noise to stimulate people's imaginations.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Tobacco companies are beginning to realize that Nicorette is the new Bubble Yum.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Your body is strong like Wolverine's and will quickly recover from any blow it is dealt.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Use proper protection when studying so as not to become pregnant with knowledge.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Now is the correct time in your life to start a boy band.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
If you plan on doing exorbitant amounts of ogling, sunglasses are a must.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You will drink from the fountain of eternal horniness known as alcohol.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
If you were a giant squid...oh wait...YOU ARE!

Townehouse of Amherst Condominiums
Walk to Campus!
Hurry, Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Amherst Golf Club 256-6894. Play golf mon/fri $20.00 All day. Rate with Student ID.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Street Kung Fu The ultimate in personal safety For class times call 413-325-1322

Like no other course, Army ROTC Learn, Lead and Succeed Be and do something bigger than yourself. Full Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1125, 3 bedroom $1425, 4 bedroom $2175 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Lifeguarrds and aquatics staff wanted The town of Amherst seeks qualified lifeguards, swim instructors, and cashiers for summer employment, June-August. Lifeguards must hold current certifications including: Lifeguard training, First aid, and CPR. Wages start at $8.19/hr. Hours vary. Job is 30-40 hours/week. Work study hours available. Call 413-259-3065 or visit www.lsse.org to apply

Brandywine Apts. Needs a certified lifeguard. Full time hours flexible. Must work some weekends. $9.00/ hr Call 549-0600 or stop by office.

EMPLOYMENT

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commesurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must call 413-584-4746

Marketers wanted for part time work during school. Earn $15/hr + bonus. Email: rdonaldson@collegepro.com

Full time positions available in your hometown. Earn $8-12/hour Painting houses with a fun crew. Call 888-277-9787 or www.collegepro.com

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Need a summer job? College Pro painters is hiring. Work with friends, steady hours, learn a valuable skill. Must be willing to work in the following areas: Milford, Millbury, Grafton, Auburn. Interviewers being held now. Please email collegepronorthbridge@yahoo.com

Camp Pontiac, a premier co-ed overnight camp in New York, is looking for fun, enthusiastic and mature individuals who can teach and assist in all areas of athletics, aquatics, the arts, or as a general bunk counselor. View our website at www.camppontiac.com. If interested simply fill out the application in the staff section, email Stefanie@camppontiac.com or call Stefanie at 516-626-7668

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Nights and weekends. Apply at DP Dough Downtown Amherst.

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

ROOM FOR RENT

Amherst nice house on bus route to all colleges. 2 rooms available immediately. Each 450 mo + electric. Call Ally 413-253-4929 leave message or call 413-626-7491

ROOMMATE WANTED

Cape Cod Seeking summer roommates starting 6/10 Yarmouth, MA near beach. Female only. 617-519-0178

SERVICES

Do you know your rights as a student, tenant, worker & consumer? The student Legal Services office can help with your questions. Stop by at 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

SERVICES

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906. 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED $10,000(Plus expenses) We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1300+ (math+verbal) Physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more information please contact us. Email: Darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 25, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen steer past Stags

With his three goals in Tuesday's 10-7 win over Fairfield, sophomore attack Jim Connolly now has four hat tricks this season and five for his career. His 24 goals lead the team while senior midfielder Brett Garber is second on the Minutemen with 23.

UM puts down late Fairfield rally

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Once again, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team proved the key to victory is scoring in the double-digits. The Minutemen defeated the Fairfield Stags, 10-7, on the road yesterday.

UMass	10
Fairfield	7

UMass (6-6, 4-2 ECAC) has scored at least 10 goals four times this season, recording a win on each occasion. That includes back-to-back games against St. John's and Hobart two weeks ago and the Minutemen's 11-10 win over Harvard in the season's second game.

Next up for the Maroon and White is its annual showdown with Syracuse this Saturday. Game time is set for 3 p.m. at Garber Field as the contest will be broadcast on ESPNU.

After starting the year slowly, Andrew Recchione's offense surged yesterday as he recorded his first hat trick of the season against the Stags. Sophomore attack Jim Connolly also recorded a hat trick yesterday, it was his fourth on the season – two of those came in five-goal games.

Doc Schneider again led the defensive side for UMass, saving 14 of the 28 shots he faced. That

See M. LACROSSE on page 7

All-around play leads to win

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With Fenway Park on the minds of the Massachusetts baseball team, solid defense and aggressive base-running made the difference in UMass' 11-7 non-conference win over Central Connecticut on Tuesday in New Britain, Conn.

UMass	11
CCSU	7

The Minutemen (14-16, 6-9 Atlantic 10) salvaged sloppy pitching by turning five double plays and stealing seven bases. Center fielder Bill Rankin led the way offensively with three of UMass' 12 hits in the game. He went 3-for-5 with two RBIs, two runs scored and a career-high three stolen bases.

"It was an uphill battle throughout the whole game," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "It was a struggle, pitching-wise. But we didn't have any errors, so defensively we played pretty well."

Sophomore Mitchell Eilenberg picked up his first win of the season in a relief effort for senior Rory McDonald. Eilenberg took the mound in the fourth inning, and although allowing four runs on nine hits in 4 1/3 innings, his offense gave him some breathing room by scoring four runs in the seventh to extend UMass' lead to 10-5.

Senior Chris Lloyd came in to pitch a scoreless ninth to close out the win.

Travis Munsey and Lou Proietti were the other two UMass players finishing the day with two hits. Each senior went 2-for-4, with Proietti scoring two runs. Designated hitter Mike Donato went 1-for-5 with two RBIs and a run scored as well.

Third baseman Ryan Franczek was the only UMass starter to go hitless, however, he walked and scored twice.

STIRRING THE BEANPOT

UMass was originally scheduled to play Harvard in today's Beanpot Tournament consolation game at Fenway Park. Instead,

See BASEBALL on page 7

Junior leftfielder Lauren Proctor is second on the team in batting average (.377), runs batted in (32) and on base percentage (.459).

Junior pitcher Jim Cassidy leads the Minutemen in wins (four) and has won four consecutive starts, allowing just five earned runs in his last 28 2/3 innings on the mound.

UMass struggles in the late stages

BY KEVIN DOOLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team's frequent second-half collapses have been dissected, analyzed and asked about since the first game of the 2007 season.

And after Sunday's 12-11 loss to St. Bonaventure, there may only be one thing you need to know about the Bonnies – they're the reason UMass won't be making a trip to the Atlantic 10 Tournament for only the second time in nine seasons.

The Maroon and White (6-9, 1-4 A-10) held a 9-5 edge over St. Bonaventure with just over 20 minutes remaining in the second half. It then took the Bonnies less than 60 seconds to cut the deficit to one goal. St. Bonaventure capped off a 7-0 run with under nine minutes remaining in the second half to improve its record to 5-0 in the A-10. Meanwhile, the Minutewomen dropped to 1-4 in the conference and have now lost seven of their last nine contests.

UMass Lacrosse

"It was a weird game," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said about Sunday's game. "We scored a couple of goals within a minute and they did too. We just didn't have the ball during that minute and you can't do anything without the ball. It's harder to chase a game than it is to control a game and we didn't have any control without possession of the ball."

But UMass' sudden collapse Sunday was not an isolated incident. The inability to protect a lead and prevent teams from going on second-half runs has been one of their running themes during the 2007 campaign.

The first game of Venechanos' career at UMass saw the Minutewomen jump out to a 5-0 lead in the first half against Holy Cross. It took the Crusaders just over 11 minutes to tie the game at 5-5, before going on to tally the last two goals of the game for a 7-6 win.

Then fast forward to the conference opener against Temple on April 6. The Maroon and White were up 7-4 at the 21:20 mark of the second half, before succumbing to another second-half collapse. Temple reeled off the next four goals and held on for an 11-10 win. That game also eliminated the Minutewomen from playoff cotention.

Two days later, the

See W. LACROSSE on page 7

Long homestand for Minutewomen

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts softball team can put away the travel bags and send the bus back to the garage. The Minutewomen begin a three-week stay in Amherst today with their first home game since April 8 against Connecticut.

Today's contest against UConn – slated for a 5 p.m. start – is the first of a nine-game home stand to complete the Minutewomen's regular season.

UMass (26-12-1, 12-0 Atlantic 10) was a perfect 7-0 on its recent road trip, including six wins against A-10 opponents. The Maroon and White enter today's game on a 15-game winnings streak, but it also owns the nation's second-longest home winning streak, currently at 21 games (tied with Alabama).

Three of the team's final nine games come against non-conference opponents, but none will be as significant as the annual renewal of the UMass-UConn rivalry.

"The rivalry between UConn and UMass is one of the biggest games of the year," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "We're looking forward to playing UConn. It's always a great rivalry, a real healthy tradition."

As the Minutewomen start the home stretch of their regular season, one player that is finally producing is the squad's No. 2 pitcher, Bailey Sanders. The freshman's early struggles have been well-document-

See SOFTBALL on page 8

Bonnies lock up Atlantic 10

Richmond completes season in second place

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With one week left in conference play for Atlantic 10 women's lacrosse, St. Bonaventure leads the league, followed by Richmond in second and George Washington in third.

The Bonnies clinched a position in next month's A-10 Tournament after coming from behind for the victory last Sunday against Massachusetts. St. Bonaventure is now 5-0 in conference play, and 8-4 overall on the season. It has won each of its last seven games.

A-10 Lacrosse

In last Sunday's game, the Bonnies led UMass 15-9 in draw controls and held a 31-26 shot advantage. Junior Brenna Houghton finished with a team-high five points, on three goals and two assists.

Junior Kimberly Ross and sophomore Katelyn Faas each recorded hat tricks in the game. Faas became the sixth player in program history to score 100 career goals, accomplishing the feat in just 29 games. Junior Eboni Preston had 10 saves to bring her double-digit save streak to seven. Junior Stephanie Jordan had two goals and a career-high four draw controls.

St. Bonaventure will finish its A-10 regular season next weekend, with games on the road against Richmond and George Washington.

RICHMOND HOLDS SECOND-PLACE POSITION IN A-10

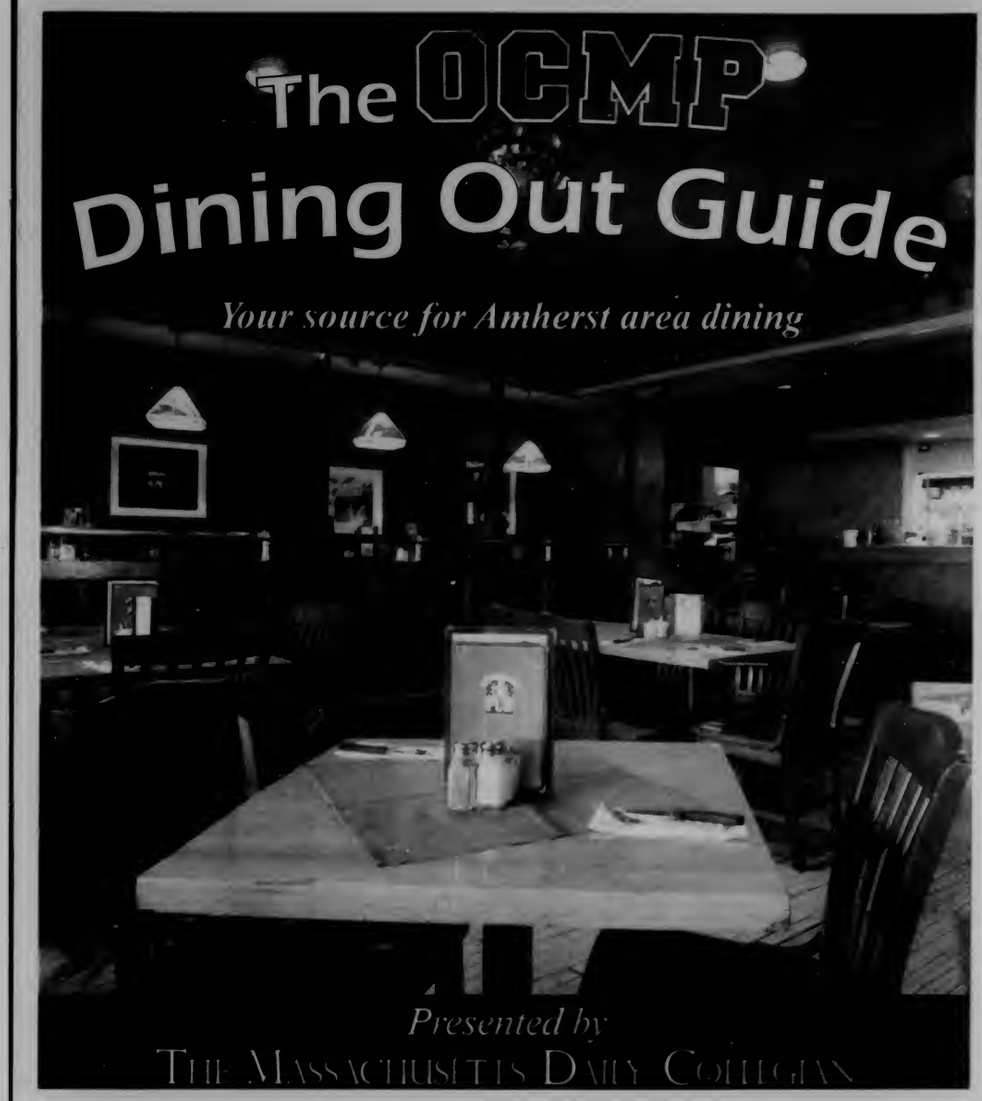
The Spiders beat La Salle 17-5 on Sunday afternoon. This allowed Richmond to stay in its second-place position in A-10 conference play.

Sisters Mandy and Ashley Friend both had hat tricks in the first half of the game, helping the Spiders to finish the half with an 11-0 lead. It was Mandy Friend's ninth hat trick and Ashley's fourth.

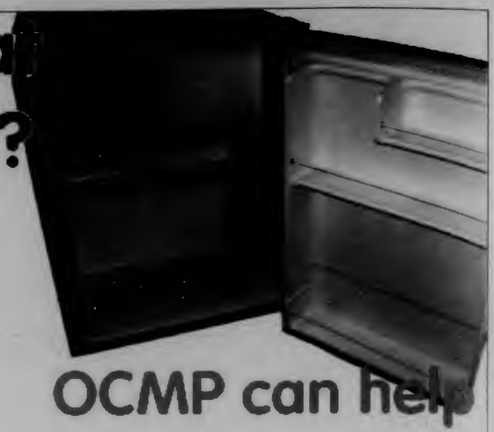
Richmond led La Salle with advantages in draw controls (14-8), groundballs (5-3) and shots (33-16). This helped the Spiders to their second straight conference win.

See A-10 W. LACROSSE on page 8

Junior attackman Kathleen Typadis scored three goals in last Sunday's 12-11 loss to St. Bonaventure. She now leads the Minutewomen with 42 goals and eight assists for 50 points this season.



Roomates ea
all your food?



OFF-CAMPUS OCMP MEAL PLAN

OCMP.com

OCMP can hel

Roomates trick
ou again?

OCMP

order online without saying a word

OCMPonline.com

The United States has made extravagant industries out of food. New and more complicated methods of preparing and presenting food are evolving every day and this diverse industry has made its way into Amherst. There are so many special places around this college town – and everyone has their own little preferences and niches – that it would be impossible to write about all of the local eateries. So we chose some – places that have not been given a proper acknowledgement, places that you might not know about or have not seen. But this space is for my thank yous, so let's get to it. This year's Dining Out Guide would not exist without the tireless efforts of Amanda Allen, our persistent and patient production manager, and Toan Trinh, our photo editor. It also would not have been possible without the efforts of all of the writers who took time out of their busy lives to put together detailed pieces. And it would certainly not exist without the Arts editors – Morgan-Ann Rousseau, Sydney Towne and Tim McCall – who captained this operation. Also, thank you to OCMP for sponsoring our endeavor. This year OCMP is also introducing OCMP Online, a new feature that allows you to place your order directly to your favorite OCMP restaurant via OCMPOnline.com. Enjoy these reviews and venture out from under the DC umbrella one of these days. It'll be worth it.

Thanks for reading,

Rob Greenfield
Managing Editor
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

The OCMP Dining Out Guide

Editor in Chief Eric Athas
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sherd Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jamieson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston

Editorial

Arts Editor Morgan-Ann Rousseau
Assistant Arts Editors Sydney Towne
Tim McCall

Editorial Production Amanda Allen
Photo Editor Toan Trinh
Photo Credits Keith Toffling
Aman Ebteshame
Cristian Gomez
Christopher Mercurio
Michael Phillis
Copy editor Jamie Mason

Business

Advertising Representatives Emily Nichols
Nicole Puddester

Production

Graphic Design Amanda Allen
Advertising Design Molly Eggleston

Featured Restaurants

Lone Wolf	7
Flo's	8
Fresh Side	9
Haymarket	10
Judie's	11
Esselon Café	12
Rafters	13
The Pub	14
Amherst Chinese Food	15
Arigato	16
Paradise of India	17
Goten of Japan	18
Herrell's Ice Cream	19
Sugar Jones Cookies	20

OFF-CAMPUS OCMP MEAL PLAN

The Off-Campus Meal Plan

We Proudly Accept OCMP

888-211-6267 · www.OCMP.com

NEW!

Now you can order food online from select restaurants with OCMPOnline! You don't have to be an OCMP cardholder to use OCMPOnline — OCMPOnline handles all major credit cards and cash payments, so anyone can use it! Go to OCMPOnline.com for more details.

OCMP ONLINE

Restaurant	OCMP online available
All Fired Up! 48 Russell Street
Amherst Brewing Company 24-36 No Pleasant St.
Amherst Market 259 Triangle Street
Andiamo 485 West Street
Antonio's 31 North Pleasant
Athena's Pizza 65 University Dr.
Baku African Restaurant 197 N Pleasant St
Bart's 103 N. Pleasant St.
Ben & Jerry's 19 N Pleasant St
Bertucci's 155 Otis Street
Big Y 175 University Dr
Black Sheep 79 Main Street
Bruegger's Bagels 170 North Pleasant Street
Bruno's 363 Main St.
Bueno Y Sano 1 Boltwood Walk
Burger King 158 College Highway
Chicago Pizza 150 Fearing St.	■
Chili's 426 Russell Street
China Dynasty 351 Northampton Rd.
Cousin's Market 11 E. Pleasant St.
Crazy Noodles Café 36 Main St
Cushman Market & Café 491 A Pine Street

Restaurant	OCMP online available
D.P. Dough 96 North Pleasant Street
Domino's Pizza P.O Box 5
Elijah's Boltwood Tavern at Lord Jeffrey 30 Boltwood Ave
Fitzwilly's (Northampton) 23 Main Street
Fresh Side Café 39 North Pleasant Street
Friendly's 455 Russell St.
Goten of Japan (Sunderland) 104 Old Amherst Road
Ground Round Hampshire Mall
House of Teriyaki 1177 North Pleasant St.
Judie's 51 N. Pleasant St.
KFC Houston Enterprises Inc
La Veracruzana (Noho) 31 Main Street
La Veracruzana- Amherst 63 South Pleasant St.
Lone Wolf Café 63 Main St.
Loose Goose Café 1 East Pleasant St	■
Newman Center 472 N. Pleasant St.
Panda East 103 N. Pleasant St.
Panera Bread 351 Russell Street
Pasta E Basta 26 Main St.
Pete's Drive-In 287 Russell St.
Pho Noodle Soup 41 Boltwood Walk
Pinocchio's 57 N. Pleasant St	■

Restaurant	OCMP online available
Pioneer Valley Pizza 20 Belchertown Road
Pizza Hut 424 Russell Street	OCMP
Pizza Shark 17B Montague Rd	OCMP
Primo Pizza Too 255 Triangle Street
Quiznos 181 D University Drive
Rafters P.O. Box 504
Rao's Coffee-COMING SOON!!! 17 Kellogg St
Rt. 9 Diner 453-11 Russell St
Sbarro Hampshire Mall
Soup 'er' Bowl 96 North Pleasant St.
Subway - Hadley 189 Russell Street
Subway (Uptown Amherst) 4 Main Street
Sugar Jones Cookies 1 East Pleasant Street	■
Thai Corner 31 Boltwood Walk
The Harp 163 Sunderland Rd.
The Pub P.O. Box 483
The Sub and Pizza 33 East Pleasant St.
Toasted Owl (North Hampton) 21 Main St
Union Station (Northampton) 125-A Pleasant Street
Whole Foods Market 327 Russell St
Wings 55 University Dr.
Zhang's Kitchen 460 West St.

Dining out for breakfast at Stables

Stables, a breakfast and lunch restaurant on Route 9 in Hadley, offers a wide variety of items on its menu, and is the most popular place to be on Saturday and Sunday mornings. Stables is open from 6 a.m. to 2 p.m. and is located at 326 Russell St.

Little Red Riding Hood should dine with this Wolf

By Brad Farberman
Collegian Staff

Who's afraid of Lone Wolf? No one with an appetite and no one in the mood for breakfast or lunch at affordable prices.

"We're a high-end breakfast place that hits all fields," said owner and head chef Rob Watson. "We're filling a need here in Amherst that isn't being met in downtown."

Originally from upstate N.Y., Watson, whose specialty is seafood, has "chefed" in the Valley for 20 years at restaurants like Del Ray Bar and Grill in Northampton, North Star Seafood Bar in Northampton, Blue Heron in Sunderland and Black Sheep in Amherst. He purchased Nick's on Main Street from Nick Seamon in 2003 and reopened it as Lone Wolf in 2004.

"The public enjoys a chef-owned operation," said Watson.

They also enjoy the southwest-inspired décor. The walls of the Wolf are lined with ceramic fish and frogs, and framed photos of idyllic southwestern landscapes, courtesy of Amherst College alum David Altschul. A wolf sculpture by Holyoke-based artist Mike Martindell lies in wait towards the back of the room; lizards are emblazoned on the tables.

"I chefed in Santa Fe, N.M. for a couple of years and lived in Colorado for another six," said Watson. "I've always loved the color scheme of the southwest."

It comes as no surprise, then, that his favorite Lone Wolf dish is decidedly southwestern. Chili Rellenos includes two green chilies stuffed with caramelized onions and cheddar cheese, served with sides of seasoned black beans, homemade salsa, green chile and guacamole.

But if you're not shopping for a southwestern staple, you're still in luck. The Wolf caters to a wide variety of tastes and moods.

The breakfast menu's "From The Griddle" section, for instance, offers pancakes, waffles, challah French toast and various crepes. One might enjoy the "sweet crepe," stuffed with granny smith apples and topped with whipped cream, or the "classic crepe," served with lemon wedges and topped with powdered sugar.

Should one desire not to dine from the griddle, there are several omelettes to choose from, like the "Tuscany" omelette (consisting of wild mushrooms, roasted red pepper and asiago cheese) or "Sherwood" omelette (consisting of black forest ham, cheddar and carmelized onion). You can also choose to design your own omelette, starting at $4.75 and add additional vegetable for $.75 each, $1 per cheese and $1.25 for meat (like maple pork sausage, spicy chorizo and applewood smoked bacon).

There are several "New York"-style dishes too (the menu dubs them "From the Old Country"), like cheese blintzes, bagel and lox, latkes (traditional potato pancakes served with homemade applesauce and sour cream) and "lox n' risotto cakes," two artichoke-leek risotto cakes with Nova Scotia salmon, spinach and poached eggs, finished with bearnaise sauce ($8.95).

On the vegan side of things, there is a large pot to select from. Vegan omelettes, vegan pancakes and vegan French toast each fall below the $6 mark and the vegan breakfast burrito, featuring soy cheese and a tofu scramble, is priced at $8.25.

And if a burrito is what you're searching for, there are more to choose from (although the rest are not vegan). The "Guadalupe" burrito involves a large tortilla stuffed with diced homefries, bacon and a "Southwest Scramble," plus green chile, melted cheddar cheese and homemade salsa. The "Breakfast" burrito is stuffed with seasoned black beans, "Southwest Scramble" and topped with salsa, green chile and chipotle crème fraiche. In the southwest department, one might also be tempted to try the "Sante Fe" omelette ($8.25), the huevos rancheros ($7.95) or the chili rellenos ($8.25).

Also, one should not pass on the daily "specials" menu, as it features a "savory crepe of the day" and "special omelette." There are other "special" treats, too, like coconut-almond French toast (with mango coulis and local maple syrup) and mimosa, a drink that combines champagne and orange juice, much like the Lone Wolf combines southwest charm with northeast sensibilities.

"Bring your taste buds and keep your mind open," said Watson. "You'll be pleasantly surprised by the variety we have. You can bring a family and everyone's needs will be met."

MISS FLORENCE DINER

Flo's customers know it's worth the morning drive

By Mandy Thomas
Collegian Correspondent

Always commit to things when you're drunk. And actually stick to it. Always agree to have hangover breakfast with that overly anxious new friend you made at the party the night before. Don't ignore her friendly wake-up call that slams against your ringing headache and vibrating belly. Forget about the relentless rain, the emptiness of your wallet and the smelly clothes you're still wearing. You said you would go. So go. You won't be disappointed.

It may seem like a long drive from campus to Florence, Mass., but Miss Flo's Diner is practically part of Northampton and is guaranteed to make your dozen-beer dehydration fest feel much much better. Or at least all the grease from Flo's truly home fried homefries will help push out what's left of the vodka and tonic toxins still lingering in your lower gut.

The coffee will not stop. So don't worry about that either. And it's always just hot enough. Not too stale, never too fresh. Perfect. The smell of warm buttery pancakes floats over from the silly little kid who is feverishly kicking off his galoshes and florescent yellow rain coat. His laughter mixed with the scent of fluffy, buttery heaven sparks the memory of waking up early on Saturdays to find dad hovering over the griddle and big sister softly laughing at some stupid cartoon.

The waitress, oh man. She's a story all her own. Imagine the most stereotypical late night diner waitress with large curly hair, long eyelashes, a worn-out smile, sweet croaky voice, no-bullshit attitude and a genuine love for people. You've just met the entire wait staff at Miss Flo's.

Pretty glass cases stuffed with cakes and pies lined the small bar that was slowly filling up with old men thumbing through newspapers and wearing little tweed hats. The typical diner stools barely supported their one too many Flo's pies fannies and the water from their shoes dripped quickly and carefree onto the casual black floor and gathered in puddles near the neatly disorganized pile of umbrellas by the door. It was hard to tell if the men were there for the fine food, the even finer company or just to get out of the rain.

My extra eager new friend begins ordering one of many omelet specials on the menu, but quickly complicates the simple egg and veggie creation with special requests like, "Except no mushrooms and add bell peppers, and instead of bacon I want ham. Oh, and no onions. Please."

The waitress doesn't even blink. Or write anything down. She's seen it all before. A picky eater doesn't intimidate her.

So Miss Flo's really is a magical place. A little blip of the 1950s diner subculture squashed in between modern day society's need for instant money and tacky graphics. The parking is not so good and her shiny red booths can fill up pretty fast, but I assure you – it's worth it.

FRESH SIDE CAFÉ

New spot, but same 'fresh' food at re-opened café

By Sydney Towne
Collegian Staff

Fresh Side claims to be "a little eatery and tea place," but it's much more than that. The unassuming Fresh Side sign, simple white letters on a black background, sum up the vibe of the restaurant, clean and refreshing. The restaurant is a lively and yet mellow gathering place for anyone in the five college area who likes delicious food for great prices.

Owners Claudia and Kent Chu moved their growing business into the newly renovated 39 South Pleasant St. location because they were "outgrowing the space" they had occupied for the past 11 years. The new location besides more room gives the restaurant more visibility as it is directly adjacent to the Amherst green. Fresh Side has never advertised and as such depends entirely on word of mouth and the curiosity of anyone who walks by to build business.

The decision to trust entirely in their customers to return and bring new diners with them may seem overly confident, but when a restaurant is based on good food and a community atmosphere it's a gamble that can pay off. For Fresh Side it has done just that as even in the middle of the day there is a steady stream of customers.

Fresh Side prides itself on taking Asian flavors and adding customers' input to create meals in house that suit the tastes of the area. The resulting meals have large portions and clean flavors. The twists on classic Asian foods may leave some customers confused about what to expect, but feel confident that no matter what you order you'll be satisfied.

The menu ranges from tea rolls to soup and pasta. Every meal can and should be complemented by a pot of hot or cold tea prepared to order. There are options for all moods and tastes, from Moroccan Mint to Ginger Honey.

Perhaps the best deal at Fresh Side is the "mix two" tea rolls. For $4 you get two pieces of two different rolls. It's a great way to try more of the menu and come away full. A real treat is the Vietnamese Tea Roll. It has similar flavors to a true Vietnamese roll, but with a distinct Amherst twist that results in a larger roll with cellophane noodles inside the roll rather than being the wrap.

On a chilly spring afternoon when you need a little something to warm up try one of Fresh Side's soups. They're the perfect combination of full bowls and low prices. The soups cost between $3 and $10 and come in small and large sizes. The beef soup, one of the only red meat options on the menu, is a richly seasoned broth packed with large pieces of tender meat, spinach, pea pods and cellophane noodles.

The restaurant's menu has an obvious appreciation of the vegetarian or vegan diner. It doesn't, however, exclude meat eaters as there are plenty of chicken, beef, and seafood salads, soups, rolls, and pastas. The abundance of veggie options makes it an entirely enjoyable experience for non-meat eaters. The usual irritation of finding the one thing on the menu you can eat is at Fresh Side replaced by the excitement of having dozens of choices created specifically for you.

The restaurant's new location has large windows and brightly colored walls. The tables inside the two rooms that make up Fresh Side are usually set up for two or four, but are easily moveable to suit larger groups of people. The lighting is dim, but helps enhance the relaxed mood Fresh Side has cultivated.

Besides being an eatery Fresh Side is also "a tea place." It offers an interesting variety of teas and sunny sidewalk tables to enjoy your cup. Clear tea pots highlight the brews that are infused with herbs.

Fresh Side is a great place for lunch or dinner. Calm and comfortable it would be ideal for a date or for a group of friends to grab a quick bite to eat. The menu is full of clean flavors that suit any diet or taste buds and the Asian inspired dishes are loaded with fresh produce and meat. After eating at Fresh Side, it might be hard not to keep coming back

Noho café provides wide range of coffees and teas

By Kate Nocera

A year ago next fall, the Haymarket Cafe buzzes with an eclectic mix of people. They all come to enjoy the dark atmosphere and the enchanting aroma of coffee and food. Some come to plug in their computers and use the free wireless Internet the café provides. Others arrive with friends in tow to chat and sip warm beverages or fresh juices in a cozy place away from the cold.

The Haymarket has always been a social hub located right in the center of Northampton. It is a place for intellectual conversation on comfy chairs. The cafe expanded a few years ago, adding the restaurant downstairs. The menu has always been vegetarian and it fits perfectly into the new age organic culture that Northampton thrives on. This, along with fairly reasonable prices, has increased the cafe's popularity exponentially. Northampton is about 15 minutes away from Amherst, but the bus usually takes up to 45 minutes. If you plan on taking your own car, the best place to find a parking spot is right behind the café. These are two hour meters (they only take quarters) and watch your time because the meter maids in Northampton are vicious.

They do most of their business in coffee and tea drinks, and full juice bar. Be prepared to be wowed by the coffee, especially if you plan on staying up late.

The walls are eclectically covered in art and various religious iconary, giving the café its bohemian atmosphere. The tables and chairs all look like they are eighty-years-old but gives it a homey, worn-in look. People step out of the back of the café to smoke a cigarette, talk on their cell phones, or just enjoy the benches and people watching that Northampton is famous for.

The Haymarket promotes itself as a "cafe and juice joint." They do most of their business in coffee and tea drinks, and full juice bar. Be prepared to be wowed by the coffee, especially if you plan on staying up late. It's very strong and flavorful. The coffee and espresso drinks are very reasonably priced in comparison to the usual Starbucks fare. The chai latte is not for the weak. It is not the usual chai one might be used to, but a dark brew of black tea and ginger. The prices for smoothies all run from about $4.00-$5.00 depending on the amount of fruit added to them. They all have clever names like "The 911" that has supplements for the immune system, or "The Spanking," which is just fun to order. You can also get fresh squeezed anything, including shots of wheatgrass for the especially daring.

If you are going to order food at the Haymarket, make sure you leave room for dessert. All of the goodies are freshly baked, and some of them are vegan. There is a whole range, from cookies to cakes, and breakfast scones and muffins. The pie is always exquisite, and not only will you be buzzing from the coffee, but have a nice sugar rush as well. A favorite treat is the peanut butter-chocolate- oatmeal bar, which is as good as it sounds.

The key to good service at the Haymarket is to know somebody. The service now leaves something to be desired. There is a lot of work to be done, so don't go in there and expect to be treated nicely unless you are on the in.

The mix and match deal at the Haymarket is the best deal for your dollar. You can mix two of a half sandwich, soup, or house salad for the very decent price of $6.25. It is very filling and great for those of us who simply cannot make up our minds.

The meal, of half a goat cheese and olive tapenade sandwich and a cup of Sambar, a south Indian curry with rice dumplings and coconut chutney, is very good.

The Arroz a la Cubana is an adventurous choice. The dish is made with black beans, garlic, onions, sweet corn and spices. It is served over rice with fried eggs and a fried banana. Surprisingly, the combination goes quite well together. The rice dishes come in small portions for $5.75 and large portions for $7.75. When ordering, keep in mind that the small is actually quite large.

In the upstairs café there is much more chatter, light, and laughter. There is less seating options for the solo eater, but one might feel more at ease here.

If you ever find yourself looking for a place to sit down and get some work done, join the other students at Haymarket. Try a Gruyere grilled cheese sandwich and listen to the comforting clicks of others typing away.

An old favorite continues to please its customers

By Mary-Frances Heck
Collegian Staff

When Judie Teraspulsky, a waitress at the Lord Jeffrey Inn, was approached by two loyal customers about opening her own restaurant, she never dreamed that 30 years later she would be running one of the most popular spots in Amherst.

Judie's inventive menu combined with friendly, impeccable service and a relaxed atmosphere guarantee a dining experience that is sure to please. The average college student might find the prices to be out of their normal dining-out budget, but is the place to go when you feel like splurging. Judie's can still be enjoyed however and students on a budget can always find something delicious and affordable. The restaurant has been perennially voted "Best Place to Take a Date" and "Best Place to Eat When Parents are Paying."

Judie's inventive menu combined with friendly, impeccable service and a relaxed atmosphere guarantee a dining experience that is sure to please.

In catering to the college crowd, Judie's menu features a wide array of items available for both lunch and dinner. If you are trying to avoid a hefty bill try the Souper, which includes a bowl of soup du jour, a huge mixed green salad and a warm popover served with apple butter ($9.95).

Equally satisfying are any of the dozen sandwiches on the menu. Try the Sundried Cherry Chicken Salad ($8.75) served on white, healthy grain French bread, a popover or a double croissant. If you are in the mood to spice it up a bit, order a Buffalo Chicken Sandwich. Stacked inside is tempura-fried chicken breast, tossed in a mildly spicy Buffalo sauce, with grilled tomatoes, sautéed spinach and portabella mushrooms, and is served on French bread with blue cheese dressing and a side of breaded wedge fries ($11.50).

For those nights when splurging is not out of the question, check out the specials menu where one will find appetizers, salads and Judie's signature "small meals." Smaller portions and smaller prices does not mean you will leave hungry. The filet of Basa ($10.95), or Asian catfish, delights the palate with a sweet, delicate texture that blends perfectly with the pool of gumbo sauce. The lightly seasoned couscous served with the fish is perfect for soaking up any bits of sauce left on your plate.

The Judie's experience is not complete without tasting the Lamb Shank ($15.50), which is braised for three and a half hours. According to one customer, the dark, rich and "like chocolate" meat falls right off the bone. Fortunately, there is a crispy potato pancake, made with layers of shredded potatoes, mascarpone mashed potatoes, grilled tomatoes and caramelized onions included in the meal to catch any stray morsels of meat or jus you might have left behind. This dish is plenty for one or can stretch to feed two by ordering an additional lamb shank for just $5.50.

For those patrons over 21 years old, try the Zentini, a refreshing blend of green tea liqueur, rose and cucumber infused gin, and fresh lime ($7.00). If you are in the mood for something more adventurous order Sangria, where Shiraz, Crème de Peche, Bacardi Razz and Limon pack a punch for only $6.95. All of Judie's frozen drinks can be served without alcohol as can the Hot Cider, mulled with cloves and orange.

While meat and fish seem to be the stars of Judie's menu, there are many vegetarian and vegan options to choose from. All of the hamburgers on the menu can be substituted for veggie burgers and a wide array of salads will please any hungry herbivore. The menu also features several vegetarian dishes like Crispy Risotto Primavera and Chai Potato Cakes (both $13.95). If a certain non-vegetarian dish looks good, simply ask your server about substituting grilled vegetables for meat or fish, or how the kitchen can accommodate your dietary needs.

No trip to Judie's is complete without dessert. Whether finishing a delicious meal or popping in for drinks and dessert, you will have trouble deciding on just one sweet creation. While the list of desserts often changes, the menu always includes house favorites like Bananas Foster ($5.95) and Derby Pie ($3.75). If you are sharing with friends, a noble act considering the circumstances, ask your server about trying Fried Ice Cream on top of a Chocolate Decadence. The crisp, fried shell keeps the graham cracker ice cream frozen inside and melts the gooey chocolate of the rich decadence. Amazing!

The staff takes Judie's lead and is open and friendly, making every customer feel at ease. Judie's Restaurant makes eating creative, delicious food on a budget possible for students and tuition-paying parents alike.

A hidden gem in the Pioneer Valley

By Christina Fosa
Collegian Staff

Stepping through the doorway, the soothing aroma of coffee and conversations envelop you. Grab a menu from the stand near the entrance on your way to one of the tables located indoors or on the patio. Welcome to Esselon Cafe.

This relatively new addition to Pioneer Valley – it opened last June – is quickly gaining popularity among local residents. Esselon serves breakfast, brunch and lunch. For breakfast, (served between 7:30 a.m. and 10:30 a.m. Monday through Friday) it has elegant yet simple offerings of the common breakfast dishes. For lunch, (served between 11 a.m. and 3 p.m. Monday through Friday) it has a variety of sandwiches. Brunch (served between 8 a.m. and 3 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday) caters to kids, people on the go and are even vegetarian and vegan-friendly.

On a familiar coffeehouse chalkboard behind the counter, selections of coffee, tea and other beverages are chalked in. At the counter where customers place their orders, there are small sandwiches and pastries some may like to snack on in addition to their hot beverage. Try the heavenly hot chocolate topped with whipped cream and what the staff affectionately calls their "Wicked Good Brownies." Drinks are picked up at the end of the counter and food is brought to the table soon after customers pay for their orders.

Esselon takes pride in its coffee, which is roasted on the premises. A pile of large sacks of coffee beans is even part of the café's décor. It can be seen (and heard) being hand-roasted in a corner of the café. This passion for coffee comes from the founders Denis and Essie Laflamme and co-founder Scott Rao.

The prices range from $5 to $10 per dish. While you should plan to spend at least $10 or more for a meal, a trip to Esselon can merely consist of a simple order of coffee. There's a great blend of a café/restaurant feel that allows for hardy dining or a light bite. You can also enjoy a glass of wine here. Esselon Café draws in a range of customers both young and old.

The rustic floorboards and old-fashioned bronze ceiling mix country and urban tastes. The over-sized mirror, vases and two large communal tables seem to add room. Esselon Café feels as comfortable as enjoying a bowl of soup in your living room. The antiquated chandeliers, sconces and arrangements of various paintings give Esselon a European flair.

The homey atmosphere, friendly environment and relaxed air are what make the place so approachable and ultimately enjoyable. It's a great place to hang out with a group of friends or to sit and read on a lonely afternoon. It's not too packed so that finding a quiet place to sit is a strain or too empty in which an awkward silence looms over the few customers. There's even free wireless Internet for those who need a place to get some work done in a warm atmosphere.

The only down side is Esselon's location and closing times. Closing at 5 p.m. everyday is pretty early considering the nocturnal lives of many college students in the area. The location, 99 Russell St. in Hadley, also poses a slight problem, being a bit inconvenient for those without easy access to a car.

But it's definitely worth checking out this little treasure of Pioneer Valley.

The home of UMass sports fans

By Teresa Reilly
Collegian Staff

Rafters is home to the UMass sports fan. The walls are lined with jerseys and posters promoting all sports, ranging from tennis to biking. And with seven televisions in the dining area alone, there seems to be no better place to watch a game.

Since Rafters is so close to a college campus, the flow of customers to this bar seems to be constant. Simply taking a look around can prove this; UMass hoodies are abundant.

"There's always a big crowd if there's a game on," said Sarah Stevens, a bartender at Rafters for the past three years, "especially during Red Sox season."

On an early evening during the work week you'll probably catch an older crowd of regulars. The restaurant, however, has a steady stream of newcomers. "We've never been here," said diner Shelby Bagdan, "but we've exhausted all other options."

"So far, so good," said patron Sara Perrone-Rinaldi.

The bar, which sits under high ceilings, currently serves 24 different kinds of beer, including the new and popular Opa-Opa Light. "Bud Light is obviously popular," said Stevens. Other featured beers include Stella Artois and Sierra Nevada. The bar is also able to boast of Wednesday night trivia and Thursday karaoke.

One of the staples of all bars is Keno. Rafters is no exception and even has a separate desk to make sure the game runs smoothly.

After downing a couple beers, the arcade may begin to entice you. Three pool tables stand in the middle of the room and arcade games claim the sides. They even have an air hockey table tucked in the corner. The walls are hand painted in the arcade, adding color and personality. The theme is still sports; jerseys are painted on.

Three pool tables stand in the middle of the room and arcade games claim the sides. They even have an air hockey table tucked in the corner.

While Rafters is clearly a sports pub, it is also a restaurant. Instead of making a right when you first walk in, take a left. A smiling hostess will be happy to put you in either one of their many booths or at a table in the center.

Before the meal begins, you are served with a large bowl of popcorn, on the house. If the popcorn runs out before your meal arrives, don't worry, it is free and endless.

For a side order, the French fries ($4.95) are a good choice. One order for the table should be plenty.

The menu varies from wings to salad, wings being the more popular choice. "I come here for the wings and the beer," said Steve Smith, an Amherst resident.

"There have been days where I just got beer," said Derek George, a resident of Amherst, "but there have never been any days where I come here and just get food." The other men at the table nodded in agreement.

The dining area closes at midnight, but the bar is open until 1 a.m.

Next big sporting event, try out Rafters. Grab a pitcher of beer and wings – and kick back.

This pub is a UMass-Amherst hub

By Mary-Frances Heck
Collegian Staff

The Pub is not only a place to dance all night and get drinks, it's a great place to grab a booth with friends and have a satisfying meal.

Since 1968, The Pub has been serving up bar food and drinks to the hungry people of Amherst. Its menu of typical fare including burgers, nachos and salads is complemented by many creative items.

A wide selection of seafood is somewhat surprising for a pub in Western Massachusetts. Calamari, grilled and baked fish and fried shellfish liven up the menu. Seafood is available at lunch and dinner with lunch dishes at about half the price of dinners. According to the menu, Fish 'n Chips are fresh cod pieces, breaded and deep fried, served with French fries, coleslaw and tartar sauce ($8.95).

Fried Scallops come with coleslaw and fries and are a delicious choice ($9.95) Baked Scrod and Baked Scallops are prepared similarly with white wine, butter, lemon and seasoned Ritz crumbs and come with garlic mashed potatoes and vegetables.

The Pub has a wide variety of burgers including a Garden Burger. Hamburgers are piled high with your favorite toppings. The hand-formed patties are juicy and thick and can come with a wide array of cheeses, vegetables and even pulled-pork.

One area in which The Pub exceeds expectations is barbecue. Their house barbecue sauce is perfectly balanced. This sweet-and-spicy stuff smothers chicken, ribs and pork. The pulled-pork sandwich comes on a French roll and comes with fries or potato salad. If you order the BBQ Half Chicken ($10.95), be sure to ask for extra napkins because between the juicy smoked meat and loads of sauce you will have a delicious mess on your hands.

When visiting The Pub for lunch, check out its specials. On the list of many sandwiches, the Tuscan Thai ($8), a grilled chicken breast with Thai peanut sauce on a Tuscan roll with greens, cucumber and carrots, stands out. The Buckingham ($8), roast beef au jus with sautéed onions, mushrooms, provolone cheese and horseradish is also worth trying.

One area in which The Pub exceeds expectations is barbecue. Their house barbecue sauce is perfectly balanced. This sweet-and-spicy stuff smothers chicken, ribs and pork.

Besides a wide array of sandwiches, many served with homemade kettle chips, The Pub lunch specials include some heartier options. Shepherd's Pie ($8) and Baja Steak Chimichanga ($10), a flour tortilla filled with steak, black beans, and Mexican rice, fried and topped with Monterey jack, lettuce, Pico de Gallo salsa and sour cream, will fill you up for the right price. Vegetarians can enjoy a Spinach and Portabella Quesadilla ($8) which, despite the heavy amount of Colby jack cheese, will not leave you weighed down.

The Pub has a huge selection of drinks available all day. Beers on tap include Guinness, Berkshire Brewing Company Steel Rail, Sierra Nevada and Harpoon IPA. If you are in the mood for something a bit stronger try one of many affordable mixed drinks from their full bar ($4- 5.95). Tropical favorites abound like the Rum Runner, a mix of rum, blackberry brandy, banana liquor, lime juice, orange juice and grenadine. Or try a Killer Whale, Bacardi, Mount Gay Eclipse, Chambord, cranberry and orange juices, shaken and topped with Sprite and a float of Grand Marnier. For something simpler but no less refreshing order a Dirty Jersey, Corona with a splash of sloe gin served ice cold.

If you are in the mood for ice cream drinks ($5.95), The Pub is the place to be. Try the Oreo Cookie, made with white creme de cacao, Kahlua, vodka, Oreos and vanilla ice cream. Or the Girl Scout Cookie may be what you are looking for. With a mix of Baileys Irish Cream, creme de menthe, chocolate syrup, Oreos and vanilla ice cream, your cookie craving will be satisfied. Try a Bushwacker, with piña colada, Kahlua, light rum and dark creme de cacao, or a Black Forest, with Chambord, vodka and Island Oasis Black Raspberry, for a fruity twist. The Pub has a full list of margaritas, martinis, and wine as well as coffee and espresso.

Whether you come to The Pub for lunch or dinner you are bound to stay for the wide variety of interesting drinks and the fun, friendly atmosphere.

Lunch specials go for less at this Amherst locale

By Tim McCa...
Collegian Staff

A quick walk from a bus downtown for a convenient meal off campus at any hour, Amherst Chinese Food is unmatched.

During lunch hour Amherst Chinese is at its best. On a nice sunny day the restaurant is lit up with big picture windows on almost of their outside walls. The inside walls are painted white and decorated with the occasional mural of local farms creating a nice mix of Western Mass. and Asian cuisine.

Amherst Chinese grows all of their own vegetables locally, so their vegetables are always fresh and free of excess oil and butter.

Calling their lunch prices fair would be an understatement. The most expensive lunch special is $6.25 and most specials come with a side of rice (brown or white) and a bowl of soup (egg drop soup or hot and sour.) White rice is a compliment to any meal because it does not distract from the taste of the rest of the entree. As for soup, the hot and sour isn't spicy, but it has much more taste than the egg drop.

Amherst Chinese grows all of their own vegetables locally, so their vegetables are always fresh and free of excess oil and butter. Amherst Chinese does not use MSG and all of the sauces are homemade recipes unique to the restaurant.

Another key enjoyment is the precut vegetables and chicken which is easily consumed with chopsticks, gladly provided for you.

One of the stand out lunch specials is the beef rice cakes with vegetables on the side. The sauce from the beef blends flawlessly with the vegetables creating a great taste. The rice cakes are easily the best in town.

Shrimp with white rice is another stand out lunch special. The shrimp are a nice size for for chopsticks, but not too small to lack in taste.

Another benefit of going to Amherst Chinese for lunch is the quick service. On average a party of two will receive their meal in 20 minutes.

At dinner Amherst Chinese becomes more expensive, but the portions get larger with the price. The wait staff does not rush you to order your meal and if you need any recommendations, they are glad to help. Soft drinks come with free refills and water cups are topped off before you even notice.

For 21-plus dinner patrons, Amherst Chinese offers a full bar with drinks ranging from beers to vodka and rum. If alcohol is not your thing or if you're not 21, you should check out the dessert menu complete with ice cream and other specialties.

Amherst Chinese demonstrates the old cliche about not judging a book by its cover.

Sushi is at its best with this Japanese restaurant

By Matthew Solomon
Collegian Correspondent

On a rainy evening, a little sushi at Arigato Japanese Restaurant in uptown Amherst is the perfect recipe to brighten up the mood. The calm atmosphere allows for relaxation and enjoyment of the splendid food to the fullest extent. The restaurant itself is very authentic, a nice change from the average Asian-American restaurant. However the pop music playing quietly in the background slightly took away from the experience.

Despite the high prices, Arigato is a quality establishment. Adding to the atmosphere, the quality of the food they serve only makes the experience better. They start everybody out with three types of appetizers. The first is edamame, a snow pea type vegetable which goes great with a little soy sauce. The second is a plate of small, yet, delicious crab ragoons. Lastly, you are given pickled vegetables.

For all you sushi rookies out there, every table at Arigato's has a display menu with color photos that show what each type of sushi looks like.

The restaurant also serves soup and salad. The Arigato soup is not only delicious, but an artistic creation. The standard miso soup was sweet and smooth. The salad was an assortment of fresh veggies in a tasty sesame ginger dressing.

When dining in an international restaurant, authenticity is an important factor for feeling like you are dining in another country. In this aspect Arigato's passes with flying colors. There are no silverware put out, so chop sticks are a must.

There's also an artistically pleasing sushi bar out in the open so diners can watch as their sushi is prepared. For all you sushi rookies out there, every table at Arigato's has a display menu with color photos that show what each type of sushi looks like. The sushi is served on beautiful wooden trays with little mushrooms and calligraphy painted on the sides.

Some personal favorites are the octopus, which tastes a lot like lobster, the scallops with scallions, cream cheese and fish eggs, and the eel. Other recommendations would be the tuna and California rolls, which are quite tasty as well. They also have very good sake, which is served hot and tastes fruity.

The service was very fast, and there was something to eat on the table at all times. The servers didn't all speak perfect English, so there was a slight language barrier, however, they were all very polite, friendly and helpful in clarifying our questions from the menu. This also added to the authentic Asian cuisine experience.

Arigato's might not be ideal for the college student on a tight budget. However, you usually get what you pay for and in this case, you do. Overall, if you're looking for an authentic and healthy Asian meal, Arigato's is a good choice.

Thai Corner
ไทยคอนเนอร์
Authentic Thai Cuisine
ADVOCATE BEST OF THE VALLEY READERS POLL 2006
Authentic Thai Cuisine
Since 1998
Serving Beer & Wine
BEST THAI RESTAURANT
ADVOCATE BEST 2001
ADVOCATE BEST 2002
ADVOCATE BEST 2003
ADVOCATE BEST 2004
ADVOCATE BEST 2005
~ Appetizers ~
~ Curry Dishes ~
~ Soups ~
~ Salads ~
~ Thai Noodles ~
~ Rice Dishes ~
31 Boltwood Walk, Amherst MA 253-1630 located down the alley from Antonio's Pizza
Tue-Sat 11:30-9:00
All major credit cards accepted

Restaurant offers a change of pace for taste buds

By Morgan-ann Rousseau
Collegian Staff

For those of you whose taste buds are out of character; a little too picky, and much too bored with the casualties of daily meal options in the Amherst area, you needn't look any further than a local ethnic restaurant – Paradise of India.

Paradise is a perfect place for both beginners and connoisseurs of exotic cuisine. The menu offers delicacies ranging from simple, more 'familiar' dishes, such as mild chicken curry (no more than chicken with an Indian gravy, served over rice) to more adventurous dishes like the mixed grill madras Tandoori specialty, which offers an assortment of chicken, Tikka, Boti Kabab, Seekh kabab and Tandoori shrimp.

For those of you who don't know, Tandoori dishes are prepared in a Tandoor pit oven. According to the restaurant's Web site, the Tandoor oven is made from clays and natural binding agents. The oven cooks meat, poultry and seafood that are immersed in special marinades, over a long period, and then skewered and broiled over charcoal.

When first introduced to a Tandoori dish, a feeling of uneasiness may occur. The Tandoori taste is one that's most likely acquired after a few prior experiences with Indian cuisine. An absolutely splendid dish is the mango chicken and shrimp chef specialty, which can be altered (along with any other entree) to suit your spiciness specifications. Try it mild to get a taste of the dish, then over your next few visits venture into the realms of "medium" and "hot." One shouldn't leap right into the "extra hot" territory unless already acclimated with the sensational pain of an extra spicy Indian dish.

To cool any sensory sensitive customer, Paradise offers soothing Raita (a creamy whisked yogurt of chopped cucumbers, potatoes and tomatoes, seasoned with herbs) and a simple yet tasty bread, known as Naan. The bread is affine flour bread that is soft and crispy. Both Raita and Naan compliment any entrée. Traditionally, Indian food is consumed without cutlery and instead is eaten by the fingers. Commonly, Naan, as well as other Indian breads, is a totally acceptable tool for digging into your exotic entree.

Rice is the staple of Indian food, and Paradise offers a modest amount with most meals. Their menu excludes beef, in keeping with Hinduism, but offers something most other restaurants lack – lamb.

Rice is the staple of Indian food, and Paradise offers a modest amount with most meals. Their menu excludes beef, in keeping with Hinduism, but offers something most other restaurants lack – lamb. The lamb in its dishes is served cubed, and full of delicate flavors. For vegetarians, Indian food is a safe facet of dietary options out there. Paradise keeps its menu fresh with opportunity for any flavor-hungry vegetarian. With 14 vegetable curry dishes, ranging from cheese-based dishes to eggplant and black lentils and beans, their non-meat options are sure to thrill even meat lovers.

Then there's the beer. The slightly sweet and light lagers of foreign nations.

For those of you under 21, or just not in the mood for a nice refreshing beer with your Biryani (how could that be?), Paradise offers Lassi, a nearly-too-sweet but refreshing, yogurt drink that's hard to find anywhere else. It also offers Mango juice terrifyingly sweet, but an experience all its own.

Paradise has decor that can be considered lovely. The establishment offers just enough subtle hints of the culture; traditional Indian paintings line the walls and a tasteful Indian style accents the tables. However, considering that the restaurant is one of few to offer traditional Indian food, it's easy to assume customers might crave a more full foreign experience. The lack of Indian music, as well as decoration, such as floor-cushioned seating, isn't much of a setback considering how distractingly delicious its food is. The prices aren't what would be considered cheap, but they're not outlandish either. Each dish averages about $12, and climbs to no higher than $15.95. But the quality of flavor makes the dishes truly worth the slightly higher cost. You'll leave with a delightfully tingling after-taste and a self-proclaimed promise to introduce all your friends to this enchantingly different restaurant.

Local steakhouse takes patrons to Japan's kitchen

By Sydney Towne
Collegian Staff

The table sizzles from a giant metal skillet heated from below. Each table has its own chef mixing their culinary skills with dramatic flair as they cook appetizers and entrees for the hungry patrons sitting with awe enraptured around them. At Sunderland's Goten of Japan, that scene is what greets every person who walks through the heavy wooden door.

Goten is a Japanese steakhouse located just 15 minutes from the heart of UMass. However, it takes anyone who enters a world away as waitresses dressed in Geisha inspired garb take orders and fruity cocktails with Asian-themed names to quench patrons' thirsts. The décor aims for Japanese inspired art rather than authentic design elements, which suits the location.

Goten is organized around a half dozen hibachi tables that 10 people, whether they all came together or not, are seated. There is occasionally a wait for smaller groups as it is a policy of the restaurant to wait until they can fill a table to seat diners. Calling ahead for reservations isn't required, but is, at the very least, strongly encouraged. For groups of 12 or 14 there is a party room with larger tables.

A full bar sits just inside the door of Goten and offers a friendly spot to wait until a table is ready. On the wall at the end of the room there is a list of cocktails that have become house specialties over the years. These mixed drinks feature festive names like the newly created "Yokohana Kiwi" and "Pink Geisha." These cocktails include a multitude of ingredients that can be difficult to put together and therefore are a special treat.

Because of Goten's tightly packed tables and actively worked grills it can get quite loud. The general din of spatulas scraping metal and diners eating – combined with being seated at a table with strangers – can make private conversation almost impossible. This isn't a restaurant designed for romantic dates between couples who want to engage in deep conversation.

It is, however, a perfect place to go with a group of friends that are ready for a fun night. The show put on by the chefs as they prepare meals is enthralling. After cleaning their grills thoroughly with steaming rags the chef thoroughly douses his grill with oil and vodka and sets it ablaze. The flame reaches above his head and threatens to creep towards the diners before it burns out.

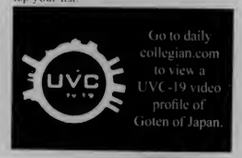
This trick is quickly followed by the preparation of a grilled shrimp appetizer. Beware of the seductive power of perfectly cooked shrimp as Goten seems to have mastered it. After grilling and seasoning the fresh seafood with lemon juice, butter, and soy sauce the chef scouts the table looking for volunteers. With a wrist flick that only practice can perfect he pops the hot shrimp off the grill and into a diner's mouth. It is not always successful, which probably has more to do with the bright blue drinks than the chef, but nevertheless the gesture adds to the lively atmosphere.

The only downside to Goten is the price. Entrée's start at $14 for a vegetarian meal and reach a whopping $38. Generally the hibachi grill meals are priced between $15 and $25 which doesn't seem outrageous unless you consider that for two. A date at Goten could easily reach $50 plus. The thing to consider, however, is that the meals are entirely inclusive. Each one comes with a shrimp appetizer, soup, salad, rice, noodles, vegetables, the meat of your choice, green tea and ice cream. The more expensive "Delight Dinner" options offer filet mignon and lobster and come with complementary sake or plum wine.

[Goten] takes anyone who enters a world away as waitresses dressed in Geisha inspired garb take orders and fruity cocktails with Asian-themed names to quench patrons' thirsts.

The food is all served piping hot, as it comes straight from grill to plate, and the steak is cooked to each diner's specifications. The chef keeps everyone entertained as he moves from shrimp, to noodles, to meat flavoring each with more flair than you can imagine all happening inside a closed kitchen.

Goten is ideal for a long, lively dinner with friends. The lack of windows and constant entertainment are perfect for ignoring time while taking your time. Waitresses, bartenders, hosts and chefs are all pleasant and eager to keep your plate and drink full. Next time you have a special occasion to celebrate or you simply want a five-course meal that comes with bold flavors and a tableside show, Goten of Japan, located right on the Sunderland bus route, should top your list.



Go to dailycollegian.com to view a UVC-19 video profile of Goten of Japan.

All hail Herrell's Ice Cream and its decadent dessert

By Teresa Reilly
Collegian Staff

The flavor variety at Herrell's is extensive. Everything from Cheesecake Blueberry Swirl to typical Mint Chocolate Chip is available. Ice cream, however, is simply the base.

Add shredded coconut, M&M's, Reese's Pieces or more. You may even choose Herrell's famous hot fudge, which comes in the original flavor or peppermint, almond or orange. Jars of Herrell's hot fudge ($6.95) are available at the store and online at herrells.com.

If you're a fan of the "smoosh-in," then it might entice you to know that Herrell's was the first place to grind up Heath bars and put them in ice cream. This innovative idea is now used across the nation and in almost all major ice cream chains.

A large ice cream without mix-ins can be enjoyed for $4.40. If you are looking to mix it up, try the most popular mix-in, peanut butter cup, for $5.05. Add another mix-in for $.20 and a third for just $.50 more.

Herrell's displays its fame with pride. On a wall are color copies of the major newspapers that the ice cream shop has been featured in. The New York Times, The Boston Globe and The Washington Post articles are available for reading in copies of blue, yellows and pinks. Most of the articles do date back to the 1980s, however.

Aquamarine is not a color one might envision for their ice cream shop. Steve Herrell, the owner of Herrell's Ice Cream, disagreed and made splotches on his walls and booths with an unexpected tint of green. But the colors don't stop there. Nothing matches, but at the same time, everything seems to fit.

There are seven booths, and each one has some sort of eye-catching picture above it. One of them is a Peanut's cartoon featuring Snoopy and Charlie Brown. "I don't understand you," says Charlie Brown, "you always order vanilla. They have forty other flavors and you always order vanilla." Snoopy replies, "I'm a purist."

Herrell started his career in Somerville, Mass. when he opened Steve's Ice Cream in 1973. After fours years, Herrell sold his shop and moved out to Western Massachusetts. In 1980, he came back to the industry with Herrell's Ice Cream in Northampton. Since then, Herrell has opened two more stores in the New England area. The company's main store is located in Northampton, and Herrell's is also featured at the ice cream parlor of Lickety Split in Williamstown.

One of the major attractions to Herrell's is that his ice cream is made on the premise.

In all, he's doing something right, which is proved by the steady flow of customers on a cold Friday afternoon. A family of four, a mother and her three children, come in, all bundled up in large winter coats. The kids all know exactly what they want and aren't afraid to scream it out.

"I want chocolate with M&Ms," the smallest girl screams.

After receiving their ice cream, the family retreats to a large booth before layering back up to brave the New England cold.

Herrell's can be found just off Main Street in Northampton on Old South Street. If you are looking for history and personality, Herrell's is the place to go.

Cravings, meet Sugar Jones cookies

By Morgan-Ann Rousseau
Collegian Staff

Sugar Jones Cookies is located downtown and offers a delicious dessert option to top off any meal: cookies. They're served fresh and hot, baked to order and delivered to your door. With 10 different cookie options on their menu, and the same number of Ben & Jerry ice cream options to boot, the Sugar Jones selection leaves little to be desired, and satisfies even the most relentless sweet tooth.

According to operations manager, Nate Cross, the most popular selling cookie is Cinnamon Sugar. However, Nate's personal favorite is Oatmeal Chocolate Walnut.

While single cookies are sold daily at the Loose Goose Café for the individual price of 95 cents, they lack the benefit of being hot and fresh. That's why managers at Sugar Jones feel that it's worth the extra five cents per cookie to buy them nightly, between 6 p.m. and midnight. Cookies ordered from Sugar Jones aren't sold individually, and a minimum of eight cookies per order is required.

There are three popular options for delivery orders. "The Big Fight" offers eight cookies of your choice for a mere $10, the "Sweet Sixteen," which delights with 16 cookies for $16, and then there's the Jurassic Jones, which serves up 128 cookies for $110, surely a bargain at $1.16 per cookie. All cookies are baked upon placing your order, so you're paying for fresh, warm gooey goodness that hasn't been sitting around. If these three packages don't suit your needs, other quantities are available in multiples of eight and 16.

The opportunity to mix ice cream into your night of cookie indulgence is something that just can't compare to the usual side-kick of cool milk, though no one's denying how great it is to wash down the soft remnants of a peanut butter cookie with a swig of 2 percent. Herein is the convenience of Sugar Jones. Not only are you able to sit amongst the glory of your couch and wait for the delicacy of warm, sugary-cooked dough to be delivered to your door, but you can order ice cream and milk as side dishes. Quarts are $2 and gallons run at $5, while pints of Ben & Jerry's ice cream are $4.50 each.

Not only are you able to sit amongst the glory of your couch and wait for the delicacy of warm, sugary-cooked dough to be delivered to your door, but you can order ice cream and milk as side dishes.

While most of us have a little burning for the sweetness inside of us, there is only a rare few who can handle an all out meal of sugary bliss. For you, my friend, try "The Giant Cookie" – a one-and-a-half pound cookie cake with a message of your choice written in butter cream icing. This option goes well as a dessert for a small group, or as a gift for a sweet-and-special someone in your life.

Another ideal gift option is to mail someone a box of freshly homemade cookies. Deliveries can go anywhere in the U.S. You may choose from their combination packages or contact them directly to customize your own unique cookie gift selection. Just remember to allow between two to three days for delivery. If you're in a pinch, and need to get those goodies off the ground sooner rather than later, cough up an additional $20 for express overnight shipping. This charge may seem as steep to you as it does to me, in which case it seems preferable to exercise some patience, and let your loved one wait out the two to three day delivery period. After all, no matter how delicious, they're just cookies!

Shipping orders can be placed any time between 7 a.m. and 5 p.m., Monday through Friday, or between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. on Saturday by calling 413-549-4667. Another convenient option is to send them the order via the internet by e-mailing sugarjonescookies@msn.com. The only real catch is that cookies made for shipping are pricier than regular delivery/pick up cookies. Eighteen assorted cookies will put you back $26.50, 27 of them cost $32.50 and 36 cost $42.50.

So pick up the phone, release the guilt within you, and chow-down on some oh-so-scrumptious cookie delights.

Editor's Picks

In addition to writing about food, Daily Collegian editors also share a passion for eating it. Here are each editor's top five picks for dining in the UMass area.

Morgan-Ann

#1 PARADISE OF INDIA

An exotic little nook of fantastic flavors and good service, this is a favorite place to indulge myself for no reason. It's intimate and cozy with a convenient location downtown that begs me to stop in every few weeks.

#2 INDIA HOUSE, NORTHAMPTON
#3 SPAGHETTI FREDDIE'S, NORTHAMPTON
#4 PASTA E BASTA, AMHERST
#5 PANDA EAST, AMHERST

Tim

#1 MINNO'S

Best pizza in the area, hands down. Huge slices. Perfect for a quick bite to eat before a concert at Pearl Street or a stroll around town.

#2 HAYMARKET, NORTHAMPTON
#3 AMHERST CHINESE FOOD, AMHERST
#4 BLACK SHEEP, AMHERST
#5 WINGS OVER AMHERST, AMHERST

Editor's Picks

Sydney

#1 PASTA E BASTA

The upstairs of Pasta E Basta is my stand-by date spot. It's quieter than downstairs, filled with little tables and fancier food. The fresh pasta with seafood is my all time favorite. With the generous portions and above the street setting they practically beg you to bring someone special to share it all with.

#2 FRESH SIDE, AMHERST

#3 BLACK SHEEP, AMHERST

#4 DONATELLO ITALIAN PASTRY SHOP, AMHERST

#5 THAI GARDEN, NORTHAMPTON

Places that deliver in Amherst

Andiamo	(413) 256.3663	Pioneer Valley Pizza	(413) 253.1011
Athena's Pizza	(413) 549.9900	Pizza Shark	(413) 259.4259
Bruno's Pizza	(413) 256.0222	Primo Pizzeria Too	(413) 658.0101
Bueno Y Sano	(413) 253.4000	Sibies Subs	(413) 256.6100
Chicago Pizzaria	(413) 549.6073	Sugar Jones Cookies	(413) 549.5663
Domino's Pizza	(413) 256.8911	The Sub & Pizza	(413) 549.5160
D.P. Dough	(413) 256.1616	Wings Over Amherst	(413) 549.WING
Pinocchios on the Go	(413) 256.4110	Zhang's Kitchen	(413) 253.0584

Amherst's own little Italy... all in 3 floors
PASTA E BASTA
Casual dining on the third floor
Full Bar...
Options are endless
Casual and sit down dining on the first floor
Hours:
Sun - Thur: 11:00 AM - 10:00 PM
Fri & Sat: 11:00 AM - 11:00 PM
Reservations accepted

We can be exclusively yours.
Celebrate your special occasion with us.
- Weddings
- Parties
- Birthdays
- Graduations

FULL BAR AVAILABLE
WE PROVIDE GLUTEN-FREE FOOD
Panda East
FINE CHINESE & JAPANESE CUISINE

We Bring Chinatown to You!
103 North Pleasant St.
Amherst Ma
Sunday - Thursday 11:30A.M.-10:00P.M.
Friday - Saturday 11:30A.M.-11:00P.M.
Delivery: 413-549-0077
Telephone: 413-256-8923/8924
PANDAEASTAMHERST.COM

THE HARP
Irish Pub
Drop by Amherst's last great neighborhood pub.
Phenomenal Pizza, Our Famous Irish Nachos, Tasty Fish & Chips, Munchies and Pub food
ALL till Midnight 7 days!
Whether it is inside with a round of pool or outside with a cold one and a smoke on our deck or Pavilion, The Harp, has something for everybody.
Live Music Wed - Sat
413 - 548 - 6900
www.theharp.net
Never a Cover
Wireless Internet!!!
Only 3 Minutes from Campus!!!
Rt 116
Sunderland
Rt 63
Post Office
Rt 91
Meadow Rd. (Townhouses)
Campus Drive
Eastman Lane
Rt 116
N. Pleasant St.

ORANGE RETURN TO AMHERST
PAGE 10

BEZANSON WELCOMES JAZZ GREAT
PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

CLOUDY : HI: 69 LO: 44 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | THURSDAY, APRIL 26, 2007

Campus diversity receives 'F'

Institute's study finds lack of diversity on UMass campus

By Jamie Mason
Collegian Staff

The number of minority freshman students on the University of Massachusetts campus went up four percent, from approximately 17 percent in the fall of 2005 to around 21 percent in the fall of 2006, said Kevin Kelly, UMass Director of Admission.

Within this 20.6 percent, 4.8 percent of students are black or African American, 4.6 percent are Hispanic or Latino students and 10.2 percent are Asian or Pacific Islander, according to a report entitled "Race/Ethnicity of Undergraduate Students," which was released by the UMass Office of Institutional Research.

Kelly said the hope of admissions for the next year is to match last year's number of minority students on campus.

"Our expectation is to match the 21 percent from last year...it's too early to begin to tell what the class will be, so much can happen in this month," he said.

In a 2006 report entitled "Engines of Inequality," by Danette Gerald and Kati Haycock, UMass was given an "F" for Minority Access. In order to get this grade, the researchers compared "the percentage of African-American, Latino and Native American freshman enrolled at each of the flagships in the fall of 2004 (UMass had 8.1 percent) to the percentage of these high school graduates in each respective state (Massachusetts has 15.3 percent)," the report said.

The report also stated that progress in Minority Access has gone down.

The report came to this conclusion after comparing "the percentage of minority freshman enrolled at each flagship in 1992 (UMass had 7.9 percent) to the percentage of minority high school graduates in each respective state in 1992 (Massachusetts had 11.3 percent)."

The same process was done for 2004, and the two ratios were compared, said the report. The report concluded the ratio change was -24.4 percent.

According to a national report about minority students in higher education entitled "Minorities in Higher Education Twenty-Second Annual Status Report," released by the American Council on Education in 2006, "students of color made up 27.8 percent of the nearly 17 million students on American's college campuses, up from 21.8 percent in 1993."

The report also stated that college enrollment among African Americans rose by 42.7 percent between 1993 and 2003.

"Hispanic [students] accounted for 41 percent of the new minority students over the past 10 years," said the report.

Associate Chancellor Esther Terry said that the University goes to schools where minority students get the message too, and sends information to high schools and travels to schools to give information to students.

Minority students often have a different opinion of diversity on campus than the administration.

Chinedu Okongwu, a Engineering major, said, "It's a joke. If you talk to the administration they say that diversity is great. But it's a joke.

"I was stopped by a prospective student they other day and was talking to him about the good things in the University, to help out with diversity."

The prospective student said he didn't think there seemed to be much diversity on campus and Okongwu told him there isn't. "You can find diversity in certain places," he told the student.

See DIVERSITY on page 3

FLAGSHIP REPORT CARD

NAME UMass Amherst
DATE 2006

SUBJECT	GRADE
MINORITY ACCESS	F
LOW - INCOME ACCESS	A
MINORITY SUCCESS	B
OVERALL GRADE	C

*For UMass Amherst statistics, please visit www.umass.edu/oir

SGA elections at a standstill in wake of recent no-shows

By Amber L. Amelanczuk
Collegian Staff

The 1,525th regular meeting of the University of Massachusetts Student Government Association (SGA) met last night with 23 senators present, ready to break some ties for area government positions.

The only people who weren't in attendance were those in the ties.

The eight motions involving the ties among both commuter and on-campus area government positions were tabled indefinitely, as suggested by Speaker of the Senate, Peter Barros.

Chancellor of Elections Sarah Morgan expressed great frustration with the situation taking as long as it has.

Only one tie has been broken to date, and only one of the nominees has been present for the vote.

"There are other elections that need to happen," said Morgan. "The Senate should be allowed to be productive for the students at this university, instead of being filled with tabling tie breakers. We need to let the SGA move on," Morgan added.

She also explained that since there was not enough time remaining in the semester for a special election to fill the tied seats, a smaller, special election will take place in the fall semester when senators are elected.

Morgan also announced her resignation from the Chancellor of Elections position.

While she said that she enjoyed working in her position for the past few months, she expressed sentiments that she thought her time would be well-spent elsewhere within the SGA.

She took the opportunity to thank the senators for their support during the last couple months in election matters.

Malcolm Cho, the recently appointed Secretary of Diversity Affairs in President Aaron Buford's cabinet, announced a grant that he, Buford, and Student Trustee Mishy Teiblum are applying for.

See SGA on page 3

Amherst native deemed threat

By Kate Olesin
Collegian Staff

Max Karson, a graduate of Amherst Regional High School and a sophomore at the University of Colorado at Boulder, was arrested last week after making aberrant comments in class about the Virginia Tech shootings.

According to the Colorado Daily News, Karson stated during a class discussion that he could see where the shooter was coming from and understood how someone could become infuriated enough to slay 32 people.

He continued, saying that there were aspects of the University of Colorado that made him angry enough to kill people, and elucidated his point with examples like the unpainted classroom walls and the presence of fluorescent lighting in the classroom.

Students believed that these comments proved threatening, and that Karson was fully capable of taking action. Karson was arrested Tuesday afternoon and has been charged with one count of interference with staff, faculty or students of an educational institution - a misdemeanor - police told the Colorado Daily News.

The Massachusetts native has had run-ins with the issue of free speech by making various off-color comments since he was enrolled at Amherst Regional High School.

See ARREST on page 3

COURTESY DAILY CAMERA/CU

Amherst native and University of Colorado student, Max Karson.

Remembering the lost

Members of the Armenian Student Organization gathered on the steps of the UMass Campus Center for a candlelight vigil to honor those who perished during the Armenian Genocide. April 24 marked the 92nd anniversary of the genocide.

PHENOM lobbies for new, stronger state funding bill

By Jaegun Lee
Collegian Correspondent

Over 200 representatives from 29 Massachusetts state colleges and universities gathered in the State House yesterday to rally and lobby for a stronger state commitment to higher public education.

Students, staff, and faculty from local schools all over Massachusetts rallied and lobbied for a new bill supporting improvement in the public higher education system by delivering over 16,000 postcards gathered from supporters to the governor and state legislative offices.

The rally was organized by the Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts (PHENOM), a group found in response to the discussion held at the University of Massachusetts with Governor Deval Patrick last December.

"We have a really good system of higher education," said Ferd Wulkan, an organizer for PHENOM. "But it is severely under funded."

"Buildings are falling apart," he said.

According to Wulkan, the already insufficient funding is spent to keep the crumbling infrastructure standing rather than in hiring staff, teachers and providing financial aid.

A report issued in 2005 by the Senate Task Force on Public Higher Education of Massachusetts identified a $400 million gap between the state funding and funds required for public higher education.

"We need to see a bill that closes that gap," said Jake Oliveira, President of the Student Advisory Council of the Board of Higher Education. "We need you to fight for this."

PHENOM is currently supporting the passage of six legislations making public higher

See PHENOM on page 3

Students, staff and faculty from Massachusetts colleges and universities lobbied at the Massachusetts State House, yesterday, in hopes of gaining a stronger state commitment to higher public education.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Issue 125

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Eric Athas
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conn
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sherd Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jameson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Adam Szajgin
Editorial Editor Tucker Merrick
News Editor Matt Belliveau
Sports Editor Dennis Picard
Sports Editor Jon Pelland
Features Editor Melissa D'Amico
Circulation Manager Jeff Pentz
Asst. Business Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Nessa Paddester
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Sydnee Towne
Assistant News Anna Dolianitis
Assistant News Nicole Boonyakaukul
Assistant Editorial Brendan Hall
Assistant Sports Jeremy Rue
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semesters. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as a magazine, became the College Signal in 1908, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Daily Collegian in 1956. Published under the current name since 1994. For advertising rates and information, call 413-545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Rob Greenfield

COPY EDITOR
Nicole Boonyakaukul

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Stagnant royalty rates may bring end to Internet radio

By Carlos Miltiante
Spartan Daily (San Jose State U.)

SAN JOSE, Calif. — The death of Internet radio may be upon us.

On April 16, the Copyright Royalty Board refused to reconsider its March 2 decision that Internet radio operators will have to increase the royalty rates to artists whose music they play on their sites by 300 percent and 1,200 percent.

The decision will go into effect on May 15.

"The very large majority of Internet radio stations will go bankrupt," said John Potter, executive director of the Digital Media Association, in an interview with TechNewsWorld.com.

San Jose State University's broadcast radio station 90.5 FM KSJS also live streams on the station's Web site KSJS.org.

According to KSJS Director of Studio Operations and General Manager Nick Martinez, one of the largest Internet radio stations, based in Chicago, will see their annual running fee go from $55,000 a year to about $550,000 a year.

"The reason why it's so bad is it used to be every song you play counts as a play," Martinez said. "The way they do it now for the Internet, every song that you play is times by the number of listeners you have at the moment.

"So if you have 500 listeners at that time that counts as 500 plays and you basically have to pay for each play and that's where it's going to die."

Martinez says that KSJS won't have to worry about this problem unless their listening audience gets bigger, so the station will continue to stream content on the station's Web site.

According to Potter in a TechNewsWorld.com interview, Internet radio provides exposure and royalties for thousands of independent artists and labels that aren't represented in broadcast radio.

Last year, 72 million people tuned in every month, Potter told TechNewsWorld.com.

The Copyright Royalty Board didn't reconsider the decision stating that, "None of the moving parties have made a sufficient showing of new evidence or clear error or manifest injustice that would warrant a rehearing."

Nutrition standards urged for school food, vending machines

By Randolph E. Schmid
Associated Press

The new standards recommended by the Institute of Medicine would limit calories, fat and sugar, while encouraging more nutritious eating.

WASHINGTON — Whole-grain crackers, low-fat yogurt, fruit and water could become the school snacks of the future, driving out fattening fare ces such as cola and fried chips.

The Institute of Medicine on Wednesday recommended new standards for school snacks and foods that sharply would limit calories, fat and sugar while encouraging more nutritious eating.

Concerned about the rise of obesity in young people, Congress asked the institute to develop the standards. Lawmakers now will consider them, as will state and local school officials.

"Making sure that all foods and drinks available in schools meet nutrition standards is one more way schools can help children establish lifelong healthy eating habits," said Virginia A. Stallings, head of the committee that prepared the report.

"Foods and beverages should not be used to reward or to discipline for academic activities or behavior," said Stallings, director of the nutrition center at Children's Hospital of Philadelphia.

Food sold in school cafeterias under federally assisted lunch programs already must meet nutritional standards. The institute's recommendations cover items considered competitive with those foods. Examples include snacks in vending machines and other food and drinks sold at school but not under the federal program.

Selling these foods is a money maker in some communities. Janey Thornton, president of the School Nutrition Association, said she expects complaints about losing this source of money if the recommendations are adopted.

"Shame on us if we try to balance the school budget based on the nutritional health of kids," Thornton said, whose organization represents school food service directors.

The standards would not apply to bag lunches that students bring from home.

Amherst Police log

Woman breaks glass door with heel

Tuesday
April 24

9:28 a.m.

A woman reported a number of bothersome calls she was receiving on her cell phone. The caller was reported to be Yesaq Warren, a man recently released from jail. Warren was contacted and apologized to the reporting party; their cell phone numbers are similar and he had been accidentally calling her.

9:37 a.m.

Residents on Pomeroy Lane reported a disturbance when kids hanging out in the community room began to verbally abuse the reporting party, the apartment manager and her husband. The manager was advised of trespass options.

1:07 p.m.

A female party called to report an assault and battery. The woman's roommate, Charles Palmere, 44, of Amherst, had been verbally and physically abusing her and was summoned for assault and battery, destruction of property ($250 for a destroyed door and frame), and larceny (keys to the house).

3:50 p.m.

A man claimed he was being threatened to fight by a 15-year-old male dressed completely in black, riding a bicycle by his apartment in Brandywine. The man admitted that he had prompted the male's threat, calling him a "dumbass" as he rode by.

10:19 p.m.

An unlocked vehicle parked in the garage on Boltwood Walk was broken into. Two checkbooks, a phone and a backpack – totaling approximately $1,200 – were stolen.

Wednesday
April 25

12:38 a.m.

Caitlin Bourbeau, 21, was summoned for destruction of property at The Pub on East Pleasant Street. Bourbeau and another female were arguing about a spilled drink before a bouncer escorted them out. Bourbeau was being uncooperative and kicked a door with a glass pane with her high heel, shattering the glass, costing approximately $250.

Compiled by Holly Seabury

Study finds female faculty more isolated

By Alan Wheeler
Daily Nebraskan (U. Nebraska)

LINCOLN, Neb. — Some studies have shown that women faculty members generally feel less job satisfaction throughout their career than men do.

Typically, the reasons given are frustrations with salaries, workload and spouses not carrying their share of the domestic work, such as child care and household chores.

A study released last week at the annual meeting of the American Educational Research Association, however, presented a different cause: isolation and alienation on the job.

According to the study, which was based on a survey of 962 full-time faculty members at an unnamed – but selective – university, 48 percent of male faculty members said they were "very happy" with their jobs, but only 35 percent of women gave the same response.

The researchers found that many female faculty members felt less integrated into the university.

Ali Moeller, president of the University of Nebraska-Lincoln Faculty Senate, said she understands how alienation could take place.

"Often men golf together, play cards or have sports in common that creates a sense of community among men that women do not typically share," Moeller wrote in an e-mail.

BRUEGGER'S
BAKED FRESH
DUO
We've never done anything halfway. Until now.
Any Half "Tossed For You" Salad
Any Half Sandwich
Any Cup of Soup
©2007 Brueggers Enterprises
— Choose any two for only $6.29 —
*(Soup & Sandwich, Soup & Salad, Sandwich & Salad)
FREE WiFi!
Amherst
170 N. Pleasant Street
413-253-5713
We accept the OCMP card!
WITH THIS COUPON
$4.99
Bruegger's Classic Breakfast Wrap with a Medium Coffee
PLU 503 One coupon per person. Not valid with any other offer. Only original coupons will be accepted. Prices do not include tax. Valid at all participating locations. Expires 5-31-07.
WITH THIS COUPON
$1.99
For a bagel with cream cheese and a small coffee
PLU 499 One coupon per person. Not valid with any other offer. Only original coupons will be accepted. Prices do not include tax. Valid at all participating locations. Expires 5-31-07.
WITH THIS COUPON
$1.00 OFF
Any Bruegger's DUO
PLU 502 One coupon per person. Not valid with any other offer. Only original coupons will be accepted. Prices do not include tax. Valid at all participating locations. Expires 5-31-07.
WITH THIS COUPON
$4.99 DOZEN
PLU 619 One coupon per person. Not valid with any other offer. Only original coupons will be accepted. Prices do not include tax. Valid at all participating locations. Expires 5-31-07.

MONEY FOR COLLEGE
NOW
Because Aunt Joan needed more Botox®.
She got a facelift, you got the tuition bill.
Not to worry. a Campus Door student loan can cover up to 100% of your education costs, with online approval in less than a minute
All without the painful side effects.
campusdoor.com
CAMPUSDOOR
GREAT FUTURES START HERE®
Like this poster? Download your own printable PDF version at campusdoor.com/posters
All loans are subject to credit approval. Programs, rates, terms and conditions are subject to change without notice. Trade/Servicemarks are the property of Campus Door Inc. and/or its affiliates. Lender is Lehman Brothers Bank, FSB. Rights Reserved. Equal Opportunity Lender.

Group presents 3-point plan

DIVERSITY from page 1

Another student, Yajaira Cotto, a Social Thought and Political Economy major, said, "If I can sit in the class and be the only non-white student, that explains diversity on campus. I have sat in many classes and been the only non-white student. It hinders education."

Karina Martinez, a Political Science major said, "I sit in more than one class where I am the only Latin person of color. I sit and listen to people make assumptions. It's disconcerting. Everyone's education would be better [if there was more diversity]. Racist, ignorant comments pass off as true if I don't feel like talking."

Student Bridges, a student-run organization, is trying to help diversify the University.

They try to accomplish three things in their program.

The first is college preparatory and academic tutoring/mentoring. UMass students can receive academic credit for tutoring middle school students in Holyoke.

The second is community outreach and college awareness. UMass students can do internships with the Student Bridges program where they go to Holyoke Community College to develop and implement college awareness and preparatory workshops.

They also give trips to UMass and other events.

The third thing they work on is policy evaluation and advocacy.

They work with faculty, university departments and schools and community organizations "to evaluate the University's accessibility and outreach in order to advocate for enhanced policies and practices," says the Student Bridges pamphlet.

"It exposes UMass students to know what its like, to see reasons why diversity on campus is so low," said Martinez. Cotto said that students could gain a lot of knowledge from working with surrounding communities.

"If we don't give back it won't change," she said. Martinez said that she is from a Hispanic community in Lawrence, Mass.

"If people put effort to help, the community would change and it would make the hurdles less. Everyone in the community needs an opportunity, not just special bright students," she said.

Kelly said that the University is always competing for students of diverse backgrounds.

"It's an ongoing challenge," he said. "The kinds of students with the qualifications are in demand with a lot of universities. There is competition for students with diverse backgrounds."

"We travel to as many high schools as we can. We go to Holyoke, Springfield, Boston and also rural high schools with less diverse populations. We try to recruit the best students possible," said Kelly.

To be admitted into the University, UMass looks at transcripts, courses, SAT scores, recommendations and personal statements.

"We look at their application and try to put together a picture, see if the student fits here. Race is one of the factors in the folder but not a deciding factor," said Kelly.

"I think one of the reasons students are attracted here is the population. One of the best things about UMass is that there is no typical kind of student, and that is one of the things that attracts students," said Kelly.

Jamie Mason can be reached at jlmason@student.umass.edu.

Amherst man has long history of controversial commentary

ARREST from page 1

There, he published a newsletter known as "The Crux."

"The Crux," which can be found online, has various columns that were distributed to the student body, and addresses issues from petty high school problems to race relations to teenage masturbation.

The administration suspended him multiple times for editions of the newsletter that were deemed racist, inappropriate and offensive.

The series of columns hit a popular streak in 2002 with the resignation of Amherst Regional High principal, Stephen Myers, who according to the Denver News, had made sexual comments toward a student.

"Whether or not they still thought that Uncle Stephen was a saint, it would have been nice if it had occurred to them that maybe high school principal and pedophile weren't the best two jobs for him to be working simultaneously," said Karson in Issue 5 of "The Crux."

In addition, Karson was suspended for articles that attacked the Amherst school system for attempting to address diversity by "dragging everyone to Cambodian New Year celebrations, making everyone read books about slavery, and forcing everyone to listen to African music." His other recorded suspension includes Issue 11 which opens with "I masturbate soooo much. It's starting to get pretty serious."

While attending the University of Colorado, Karson started "The Yeti," a campus newsletter intended to be satirical.

Karson sparked controversy in 2006 with an article speaking to "the myth of the female orgasm," in which, according to the Denver News, he was trying to hassle men whose only concern is their own pleasure and those who want women to simply be sex objects.

However, in response to his attempted satire, most of the student body and administration reacted very negatively to many of Karson's comments, including his assertion that the clitoris has no function and intercourse should ensue without lubrication, "so they can really feel it."

These quotes among others, intended to be satirical, were deemed by many as misogynistic and offensive to many individuals on campus.

"The Yeti," which can be read on the Web site, www.yetipaper.com, is temporarily unavailable saying, "The Yeti will return as soon as possible."

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@student.umass.edu.

SGA discusses plans for 'May Day Rally' in Amherst

SGA from page 1

The College Advising Corps grant would send two senior students from Tufts University to meet with students at Amherst Regional High School.

The students from Tufts would "work full time for one to two years following graduation as advisers to the high school students, to help boost college enrollment rates of high-achieving, low-income high school students," as explained on the Tufts Web site.

Senator Ruth Thompson, the chair of the Ways and Means Committee, reported to the SGA the status of the Registered Student Organizations (RSOs) appeals.

Senator Thompson said that no appeals have been heard yet, but they would be hearing appeals from the International Relations Club, The Women's Club Volleyball Team, Student Valley Productions, as well as The Student Center for Education, Research and Advocacy (SCERA).

Carla Dominguez and Allison Marshall were approved unanimously in a vote of Motion 2007-S57 to be appointed to the Student Legal Services Advisory Committee.

Also approved unanimously were Mike Curtis and former SGA President Elvis Mendez to the Student Bridges Advisory Board in Motion 2007-S58.

The role of an advisory board was described as meeting about once a month to talk about issues within the agency and bring the discussion to the SGA.

Duties also would include convening to vote on changes to the agency's charter and approval of any new hires or job descriptions.

Senator Elizabeth Vargas sponsored a motion calling for the SGA to support the upcoming May Day Rally on May 1.

The motion requested that the "SGA support and endorse the local and national May 1, 2007 May Day Rallies and walkouts and encourage all students to attend."

Senator Vargas and Trustee Leiblum expanded upon the May Day Rallies, explaining that a rally would take place on the steps of the UMass Student Union at 10:30 a.m.

Afterwards, people will walk together to the center of Amherst for a series of simultaneous hunger strikes, which are scheduled to happen at several churches in Amherst, Springfield, and Northampton.

The event will conclude with a march to Northampton, about an eight-mile walk from Amherst.

Amber Vaillancourt can be reached at availlan@student.umass.edu.

UMass students rally for state support education more affordable for Massachusetts residents by closing the $400 million funding gap, cutting textbook costs, creating a loan forgiveness program, providing health insurance to adjunct faculty, passing a bill for repairs and construction, and providing in-state tuition for immigrants without a permanent residency.

PHENOM from page 1

"The trend of not having enough state money coming in allows other problems such as increased corporate presence on campus," said Lindsay McCluskey, a member of the PHENOM Steering Committee.

She said that "students are being pushed aside in order to allow more profitable interest to come in."

According to McCluskey, granting in-state tuition for undocumented immigrants is seen as the most controversial legislation to the representatives and senators.

"It wouldn't cost public higher education anything" said Jemin Patel, a member of Massachusetts Immigrant and Refugee Advocacy Coalition (MIRA), "instead it would bring in more revenue."

According to the Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation, granting in-state tuition for immigrants will bring the state $2.5 million in revenues as public colleges will be receiving tuition payments from students who are currently denied access to college.

Representatives and senators of the state were mostly supportive of PHENOM's propositions said Wulkan. He added that the officials were generally impressed of such mobilization in a short period of time.

"Higher education becomes an ever higher increasing priority in the State House," said Representative Kevin J. Murphy, D-Lowell.

According to Murphy, despite serious concerns regarding revenues in the state, the fiscal year of 2008 will see an additional $54 million increased finding in higher education.

Lobbyists promoting change in the public higher education system in the past were powerless because of the lack of unity and mobilization, said Senator Stanley C. Rosenberg, a democrat from Northampton.

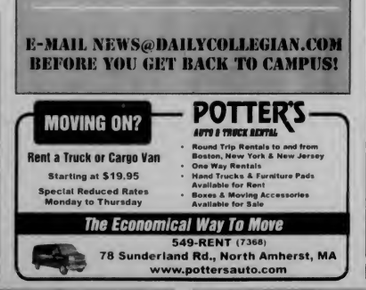
"PHENOM is the beginning of changing that dynamic," he said.

PHENOM is holding a general assembly meeting on June 7 at Framinghan State College in the College Center that is open to anyone interested in supporting affordable public higher education.

Jaegun Lee can be reached at jaegun@student.umass.edu

Senator Ruth Thompson (left) and Student Trustee Mishy Leiblum (right) were among the students lobbying at the State House, yesterday.

WANT TO WRITE FOR NEWS IN THE FALL?
E-MAIL NEWS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM BEFORE YOU GET BACK TO CAMPUS!



MOVING ON?
Rent a Truck or Cargo Van
Starting at $19.95
Special Reduced Rates Monday to Thursday
POTTER'S
AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston, New York & New Jersey
One Way Rentals
Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

To all Stockbridge School of Agriculture students, both freshmen and seniors:

Alumni of Alpha Tau Gamma,
a Stockbridge fraternity on our Amherst campus since 1919
in the days of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, are cleaning the Mass. Highway Dept. visability site
at Route 116 & Hadley
(the west campus entrance).
It is spring removal of winter road debris
and the fertilizing of our 10,000 daffodils
on Saturday, April 28, 2007 at 10:00 a.m.

All Stockbridge students are welcome to assist.
We are ATG. Find out what we have done.
There is much more that we can do. You can help.
Find out about ATG and its dreams for Stockbridge
and the future of the ATG Stockbridge family.
Thanks for reading this ad and for joining us.

ATG will provide beverages and munchies.
Mass. Highway will provide orange vests, gloves and bags.

EXPERIENCE
Gained only through working at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian as a Fall 2007 semester Advertising Representative
If interested please pick up an application at the Daily Collegian Office, located in the Campus Center basement or contact Alex Bender at abender@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
is looking for new
Graphic Designers
for the Fall 2007 semester
♠ Daily Advertising Designers
♠ Nightly Production Supervisors
♥ Advertising Production Manager
Any major can apply. Previous design experience not necessary, but encouraged.
Visit our office in the Campus Center Basement from 10am - 4pm for applications.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, APRIL 26, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

All I ever really need to know I learned in college

Brendan Hall

For those of us who will be donning the cap and gown next month at the commencement ceremony, yawning through the pomp and circumstance, wondering if we've ever actually met the commencement speaker (UMass-Boston gets Obama and Patrick in back-to-back years; UMass-Amherst gets... someone), the days are dwindling – and it's making me feel queasy. Whatever ounce of innocence we've got left hits the skids come May 26.

We'll never get these days back, but memories are what life's all about. Since I'm such a selfless guy, I'm devoting the rest of my column space this semester to you, the graduating senior.

Follow me here.

As the title suggests, all I ever really need to know I learned in college, and I'm pretty sure the same applies to you. Below is a list of axioms, mottos, mantras, phrases to live by, whatever-you-wanna-call-them's I've ascertained based directly on my experiences here at UMass (For example, no classes before 10). My goal is to get the phrases you live by, and use the best ones in my final Collegian column.

Let's call it my own personal senior class gift.

Anyways, email me at bchall@student.umass.edu with some wise words and advice you've lived by these past four years. For now, let's compare and contrast:

• If life gives you lemons on Cinco de Mayo, trade them in for limes.

• When you think you've had enough, you really haven't.

• On most exams, it's not about memorization, it's about strategy unless it's multiple choice.

• If someone asks you if you've heard of any parties tonight, and you don't know, just say "I heard Pufflon, I heard Townhouses, I heard Hobart".

• Don't worry if you fail that class. Do worry, though, if you're stupid enough to take that class again.

• If on the first day, the professor tells you he considers himself "medium-hard", drop the class. If he says he considers himself "easy-going," don't bother showing up unless there's an exam. If they put unreasonable expectations on you from the get-go, stay put and relax – they're just trying to scare kids out of the class.

• The only time you watch TV in college is if it's a sporting event.

• If you want that internship, you go out and get it on your own. Career Services is a waste of time.

• If you need a blow-off class in your schedule, Theater 100 and Women's Studies 187 are your freebies. Use them wisely.

• On the contrary, anyone who tells you Entomology 126 is easy is tricking you, like a care-nothing, do-nothing, pre-major advisor trying to get you out of their office so they can go back to doing, well, nothing.

There's a reason why "Greatest Hits 1974-78" is the only Steve Miller Band album anyone owns.

• Astronomy 100, no. Calculus 127, no.

• Need a minor? History.

• You want the true college experience, you live in Central. Southwest is overrated until the last three weeks of the spring semester.

• Sixty-five percent of the student body on any college campus thinks they're either one of the chicks from Sex and the City, or one of the dudes from Entourage. Stay away from these people.

• Creeped out by a creepy roommate? Suck it up and deal with it. It's only for a semester.

• At night, every set of Ford headlights looks like the Crown Vic model. Think about that the next time you want to drink and drive.

• If someone knocks, always ask who it is. It could be a cop.

• That annoying Jersey kid from the down the hall will probably flunk out or transfer to Rutgers in two semesters, so don't sweat it.

• Those white kids rocking the throwbacks and straight-brims, who try to act all tough and street-wise, they're really from affluent communities. So don't sweat it.

• All UMass people love all UMass people, which is why the frats and sororities here have a hard time pitching the connections angle to potential pledges.

• You haven't lived until you've offered the pizza delivery guy an extra tip to give you a ride to the library.

• You haven't lived until you've aced an exam you purposely didn't study for (see: Theater 100, Women's Studies 187).

• You haven't lived until you've sold back a book that you were supposed to pay for, but the dumb cashier forgot to ring it up – and naturally, you didn't say a word.

• You haven't lived until you've had an unofficial "third roommate" in a two-person dorm, you know, the one who sleeps all day on your futon, seven days a week; has no housing or meal plan whatsoever; and, despite his or her claims, you're not even entirely sure if he or she's actually enrolled.

• There's a reason why "Greatest Hits 1974-78" is the only Steve Miller Band album anyone owns.

• Everyone is afraid to admit they like at least one Hootie song. And it's probably "Time".

• There's at least one good cop on campus.

• Three best places to eat: Antonio's, The Hangar, Bub's.

• Best bar: Amherst Brewing Company.

• If you let a lady pick the bar, she's going to pick McMurphy's. And that place is too damn crowded.

• And finally, last but not least, the most important piece of advice you should take away from this column:

Don't.

Be.

That guy.

Brendan Hall can be reached at bchall@student.umass.edu.

The real way to save Darfur

Greg Collins

It is quite clear that advocates on campus and throughout the U.S. have intensified their efforts to raise awareness for the Darfur crisis. Posters around the UMass campus urge people to support the efforts of the International Criminal Court and human rights organization Amnesty International to end the conflict.

For example, this past Sunday a student-run business on campus held a "Save Darfur Pancake Brunch." The flyer advertising for the event called for the brunch to "raise awareness and funds," with all of the proceeds to be contributed to Amnesty International and the Red Cross. The brunch also allowed people to sign petitions to the United Nations.

Nationwide, including here in Amherst, the fashionable advocacy technique has been to call for divestment of funds from international companies based in Sudan, which makes large profits off its oil resources. China buys a large amount of oil from Sudan, for instance, so the thinking goes that restricting foreign businesses from producing profits in the country will compel Sudan's government and its proxy Janjaweed militia to stop targeting black Africans.

The divestment initiative has been going on for more than two years now, yet inhumane tragedies persist to this day.

The Sudan Divestment Task Force, the group responsible for the nationwide divestment initiative, maintains that Sudan has historically buckled under economic pressure. Yet the task force's insistence that the divestment campaign has had tangible effects on the oppressive Sudanese government belies the fact that the genocide has continued unceasingly.

These aforementioned efforts are made with good intentions. Yet "raising awareness" and "divestment" will have little significance on ending the pillaging and raping. These may be politically convenient terms to justify contemporary mainstream advocacy, but they mean little to emaciated and abducted blacks who continue to suffer atrocities.

The divestment initiative has been going on for more than two years now, yet inhumane tragedies persist to this day. Claiming to want to "help stop" the genocide suggests that advocates do not want to honestly consider the quickest way to end the conflict. This, of course, is military intervention by NATO, the EU, the U.N., and, as it often ends up being the decisive factor in international conflicts, the U.S. military.

But the trouble with the first few international organizations is that they refuse to directly confront the realities of the genocidal atrocities that occur within the country daily. New U.N. Secretary General Ban Ki-moon, for example, is urging the Security Council to try to solve the crisis diplomatically rather than imposing economic and military sanctions now. Amnesty International, the U.N. and the African Union have even refused to call the systematic targeting and deaths of black Africans as genocide. Currently African Union and U.N. peacekeepers struggle to protect black Africans from Janjaweed terrorists.

"Save Darfur" advocates would be better off using their energies to push international and human rights organizations to label the crisis a "genocide" and "raise awareness," not just focus on the atrocities that occur there daily. They should also highlight that these groups are more devoted to end the humanitarian crisis in the most politically palatable fashion rather than in the quickest possible way.

Arguing that the quickest way to save Darfur is through military intervention from a United States-led coalition of forces does not necessarily reflect a neoconservative ideology. This philosophy holds that the U.S. should be actively involved in the world to end humanitarian crises and establish democracy in non-democratic regions. The debate of whether the U.S. should be a baby-sitter for the rest of the world or embrace a more isolationist foreign policy is a completely different issue than debating the fastest way to end the Darfur genocide.

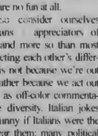
Rather, calling for military force is accepting the fact that "raising awareness" and "divestment" are short term panaceas for a problem with deeper implications and will increase the likelihood that the conflict will persist. The Sudanese government will not stop targeting black Africans merely because it will not be receiving as many profits as before. President Omar al-Bashir will not stop subsidizing terrorism because people are more aware of the conflict. The U.N. will not forcefully intervene because people are signing petitions condemning the violence.

If Darfur advocates were serious about "helping stop" the genocide, they should unequivocally support U.S. military intervention, as well as the militaries of other willing countries, as the primary means to defeat the Janjaweed and Sudanese government. This process would undoubtedly be difficult.

But what is not difficult is recognizing that while advocates continue to push for divestment and awareness from Americans and the international community, real lives are being lost every single day. You can debate whether the U.S. should intervene on the conflict. But there is little argument as to what is the most expedient option to end it.

Greg Collins writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

Things are heating up



Adam McGillen

The stark figure of a man with arms spread in an attempt to hold back the overwhelming pressure of inevitability. He stands in the midst of a bleak gray mushroom cloud chiseled from stone. He is the monument that memorializes the 56 deaths directly caused by the explosion at the Chernobyl Nuclear Power Plant, and the 9,000 (estimate from the Chernobyl Forum) that have died or will die from cancer caused by the radioactive fallout.

Early in the morning 21 years ago today, the power plant at Chernobyl exploded, shaking many Ukrainians from their slumber before spreading a delicate but deadly sheet of radioactive fallout across much of Europe and even reaching across the Atlantic to the eastern coast of North America.

In light of that devastating disaster, our world now stands on a line that places civilization an atom's width away from a dark ending or a bright new beginning.

Nuclear energy, through the fission of a uranium atom, produces 10 million times the amount of energy gained from burning an atom of carbon harvested from coal. This provides what seems to be an obvious answer to the intensifying problem of global warming. Nuclear power plants release no greenhouse gases and can produce much larger amounts of energy more efficiently than the burning of coal – the culprit behind the rising temperatures throughout our planet.

Where one hand tries to push back the effects of global warming, the other struggles to hold back the terrifying problem of nuclear proliferation.

But where one hand tries to push back the effects of global warming, another struggles to hold back the terrifying problem of nuclear proliferation. Either we come to a slow boil, or we face instant incineration. We walk around the skinny edge of the frying pan, arms outstretched in an attempt to balance ourselves between the pan and the fire.

But we must plot our steps carefully.

With the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change's statement that humans are "very likely" the cause of global warming, and that even if all carbon emissions halt, the temperature of the Earth will still rise in the years to come, the pursuit of nuclear energy is vital to our survival.

Though as Chernobyl shows, the pursuit of nuclear energy provides its own risks. Through a combination of mechanical malfunctions and procedural irregularities, the power plant at Chernobyl jumped to 10 times its regular output in a matter of minutes. A rush of steam blew the water reactor open, and the oxygen that rushed in ignited an explosive graphite fire that set the night sky of Ukraine ablaze and rained radioactive fallout over 6.6 million people. Twenty-one years later, meltdowns are the least of our nuclear fears though – nuclear armament and proliferation are the most terrible of all.

It was those fears that inspired Americans to send troops to Iraq. The most efficient source of energy known to man is also the most efficient killer known to man, reaping indescribable destruction in a singular hot flash.

North Korea recently tested a nuclear weapon. Iran is actively pursuing its own nuclear power plant and has the ability to enrich uranium. Neither nation is on America's buddy list. And when America does converse with these nations striving to compete in the nuclear market, there is little more than defiant and angry exchanges where neither party leaves happy.

According to the Natural Resources Defense Council, the U.S. maintains an arsenal of about 10,000 nuclear warheads. By far, we are the leader when it comes to nuclear power. America was the first and only nation to use an atomic bomb against an enemy state, when the military dropped "Little Boy" on Hiroshima and "Fat Man" on Nagasaki to defeat Japan and end World War II.

As both the largest contributor to global warming and the only nation to use a nuclear weapon, America must lead the world out of this seemingly dire predicament. The answer lies not in stifling the ability of other countries to gain nuclear power, but to use diplomacy to gain the trust of other nations and proceed forth with a sense of unity and hope.

After all, everyone faces a planet that is slowly beginning to melt down.

Global warming is real. Nuclear proliferation is real. Humanity seems headed towards a fiery end no matter which route we choose. Ultimately, much of the damage we have reaped through carbon contamination of the atmosphere is irreversible, but we have an opportunity to make use of nuclear energy and, at the very least, slow the trend of warming. Where some of the effects of global warming cannot be reversed, nuclear proliferation is preventable.

Helping other nations like Iran as they strive to conquer energy inefficiencies will help improve America's image around the world. We can no longer pretentiously hold back the incredible advantage of nuclear power. Perhaps the greatest reward gained from being involved in the nuclear empowerment of other nations is that we will gain an inside perspective, allowing the U.S. to make sure that uranium is going to power plants and not missile silos.

Ours is the generation that will face these choices. We can only hold inevitability back for so long.

Will we boil or fry?

Or will we forge a new world together?

Adam McGillen can be reached at amcgille@student.umass.edu.

Offensive is on the defensive

S.P. Sullivan

In the midst of multiple controversies surrounding radio personalities, other celebrities and their alleged bigotry, many ethnic groups and individuals have cried foul of how they've been portrayed. But there's another group being subjugated and silenced in our all-too-PC society, a group of individuals who find humor in almost everything, no matter how tragic, depressing, or offensive. They are the jerks, jackasses and insensitive schmucks to world over, but bigoted they are not.

I should know; I'm one of them.

But in the wake of the Don Imus scandal, similar copy-cat scandals have arisen, and we, the jerks with sick senses of humor everywhere, are in trouble.

Two New York City shock jocks, JV and Elvis from WFNY-FM, have recently been suspended after a prank phone call to a Chinese restaurant during which they ordered "fried lice" and made suggestions that the restaurant employee was a bad driver. The segment was typical shock jock humor, neither particularly original nor incredibly funny. But it certainly wasn't the most offensive thing to find its way to the airwaves.

But an Asian-American advocacy group has demanded their heads and, worse yet, their jobs. Had they requested an apology (rather than the shock jocks' dismissal) for the insensitive remarks it wouldn't have been quite so scary to us, the Bad-Taste Bears, who have been sweating it as more and more of our brood fall victim to our society's PC-fixation.

What I want to know is where the Purveyors of All Things Offensive Union was in all this; where was the call-to-arms on part of those of us who hold our constitutional right to be off-color so dear to their hearts? There are enough of us, hailing from every occupational, cultural and religious background, you just didn't know we were organized.

We are the protectors of free speech and an open discourse; no subject is taboo and no time is "too soon." We are bound by neither time nor distance. We have existed and will always exist among you, and we will make fun of your accent or your religion regardless of whom you are because we don't play favorites with demographics.

We understand the difference between racial humor and actual racism, something these advocacy groups and boycotters do not.

More importantly, we understand the difference between racial humor and actual racism, something these advocacy groups and boycotters do not. Japanese internment was racist; the so-called "War on drugs" is racist; JV and Elvis are just two shock jocks that cracked a bad joke. And, for the record, we are upset with them for that. If they're going to make jokes that put us in hot water, they'd better have us rolling in the aisles.

And we are hurt by the fact that you hold our humor in such contempt that you'd go after our jobs with a torch and pitchfork and that we're often made into scapegoats. We're the ones hanging on the cross for the sin of trying to be funny while real social issues go unaddressed. We would suggest that you concentrate your efforts on the welfare system, the military's don't-ask-don't-tell policy, or Mel Gibson – these are the actual agents of intolerance, not some curmudgeonly old disc jockey or two shock jocks from New York.

As for respect, which is brought up as an element missing in some of the more contentious topical humor, let me go on record in saying that we respect you, whomever you are, apart from color or creed – so long as you can take a joke. We have no respect for people who regard themselves, or whatever group they belong to, with stone-faced solemnity. They are no fun at all.

CBS RADIO FIRES IMUS... WON'T PUT HIM BACK ON AIR
WHAT'S WITH YOU... HAVING A HARD TIME READING THE THREE LETTER WORDS?
CBS
WILL OFFEND ANYBODY FOR FOOD!
STAYSKAL TRIBUNE MEDIA SERVICES 2007

We also consider ourselves humanitarians – appreciators of diversity – and understand more so than most the importance of respecting each other's differences. This, of course, is not because we're out to save the world, but rather because we act out in our own self-interest as off-color commentators. In short, we love diversity. Italian jokes wouldn't be nearly as funny if Italians were the only ones around to hear them; many political satirists would be out of work were it not for the Republican party. We have a stake-d-interest in the so-called "melting pot."

Admittedly, we do get out of hand sometimes – we snap, we screw up. However, we get called out on it and usually see the error of our ways, issuing public apologies, asking forgiveness of the offended. But errors of judgment and slips of the tongue aren't unforgivable, and if you're expecting anything other than a heartfelt apology, you'd better get over yourself.

Finally, we're not going anywhere, and we're not about to let this PC-craze hinder our relentless quest for attention. Racial tensions and inequality don't stem from a Chris Rock stand-up special, and no matter what anyone says, "Did you hear the one about our fellow human being?" will never have quite the same ring to it.

So on behalf of the Purveyors of All Things Offensive, I say: lighten up – we have actual issues to address here.

S.P. Sullivan writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at spsully@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, APRIL 26, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Jazz great plays at UMass

Roscoe Mitchell brings saxophone skills to Bezanson Hall

Roscoe Mitchell has been playing the saxophone, among a variety of other instruments, for over 30 years. Tonight he'll be performing at Bezanson Recital Hall with his Chicago Trio.

By Brad Farberman
Collegian Staff

The 2007 Magic Triangle Jazz Series concludes tonight with a performance by the Roscoe Mitchell Chicago Trio at Bezanson Recital Hall at 8 p.m. Tickets are $12 general admission and $7 for students.

Saxophonist Mitchell, 66, from Chicago, started on clarinet when he was 12. Later, while in the army and stationed in Germany, Mitchell was able to study under the first clarinetist with the Heidelberg Symphony.

In 1961, following his stint in the army, Mitchell returned to Chicago and hooked up with Muhal Richard Abrams' Experimental Band; the band included other future masters like Henry Threadgill, Anthony Braxton and Joseph Jarman.

In 1965, Mitchell helped found the AACM, or Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians, "a collective of musicians and composers dedicated to nurturing, performing, and recording serious, original music," according to AACMChicago.org. Mitchell released the albums "Sound" and "Old/Quartet" in 1966 and 1967 respectively. These records featured trumpeter Lester Bowie and bassist Malachi Favors, musicians who would join Mitchell in the highly-influential Art Ensemble of Chicago along with saxophonist Jarman and percussionist Famoudou Don Moye.

Following a three-year stay in Europe with the Ensemble (1969-1971), Mitchell moved back to Chicago, and has performed and recorded steadily over the past 30 years. His 87 albums have been released by labels like Black Saint and Delmark, and he has taught at the University of Illinois and the California Institute of the Arts. He performs on all the saxophones, in addition to clarinet, oboe, flute and piccolo.

Accompanying Mitchell tonight are bassist Harrison Bankhead and drummer Vincent Davis, both from Chicago. Bankhead has played with saxophone greats Joshua Redman and Billy Harper, and Chicago legends Von Freeman and Fred Anderson (both saxophone greats as well). Davis has recorded with Mitchell, and was a mainstay at Chicago's Velvet Lounge, a bar and free jazz hub opened by Anderson.

Mitchell's performance follows Magic Triangle performances by pianist Michele Roseman in March and guitarist Michael Gregory in February. Magic Triangle will return next Spring for its 19th season.

Brad Farberman can be reached at bfarberman@gmail.com

Don't flatter yourself, try honesty with introductions

Jasmine Monteiro

One of my favorite sayings has recently been, "I'm not like the other guys/girls." It seems to be a popular statement, yet seldom proven true. I also have been guilty of making such accusations without thinking twice, but not anymore.

How would we ever know that we're not like any others of the same sex? Unless we've experienced relationships with both sexes, we really don't know. This isn't to say that people lie to give themselves the upper hand (although that is a theory), but we do tend to overestimate ourselves and underestimate anyone else. Yes, it's true that we're all unique individuals, but if one guy is in fact different than all the others, that would destroy the female theory that all men are the same – because they are you know.

In all fairness, I realize that when we first meet somebody we want to make an impression on them, preferably a good one. No guy in his right mind is going to approach a girl and say, "Hi, I'm just like the rest of them." We all know that is not a positive attribute.

However, if that is a true statement I'd prefer that over the cheating and lying later on in the relationship any day – but that's just me. But nobody is perfect and while not everybody is the same either, how do you determine the real from the really bad?

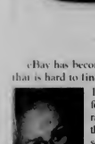
In the beginning the impressions that we give off to somebody will always be to take pride in our individuality. We take risks by saying we wouldn't do what the last girl/guy did, and we're sure of it. Unfortunately, that's what the last guy said, and the guy before that.

So, one lesson to be learned is that confidence is unbelievably attractive when it is seen much more than when it is solely heard. So many people are quick to run their mouth about how much they have to offer or the talents they possess between the sheets. If we were so impressed with talking we wouldn't need so much doing now would we?

Don't get me wrong, presenting something can be a very appealing compliment to an action. In essence, your words should compliment your actions, not replace them. So don't use overused phrases and cheesy pick-up lines to get someone's attention. We've all seen too much "Fresh Prince of Bel-Air" to fall for that. If you really want to get in well with someone bring some truth to the table. And while you're at it, be aware that this tactic is usually only effective with strong, assertive, self-aware men and

See HONESTY on page 6

Try using eBay for hard-to-get fashions



Reece Coppolino

eBay has become a fashionist's best friend offering vintage clothing that is hard to find elsewhere.

There are only a few more embarrassing moments than running into someone wearing the same outfit as you. Some people choose to pretend they don't notice; others jokingly comment on the unavoidable circumstance. The best way to steer clear of looking like a "copy cat" is to shop where unique looks are guaranteed.

eBay is a successful online auction site, which has become increasingly popular since it was founded in 1995. It provides the growing community of over 200 million registered users, a secure place to trade items worldwide. Among the millions of auctions for various goods including collectibles, appliances, vehicles, and furniture, eBay provides access to new, used, and vintage articles of clothing.

We are all familiar with the phrase, "one person's trash is another's treasure." eBay users have been discovering amazing buys everyday. Items that were thought to have dropped off the face of the earth are popping up on eBay for as little a starting price as one cent!

I turn to eBay auctions when I cannot find a specific item in stores. eBay offers a search engine that can narrow one's search down to the desired size, style, material, color and condition of the item. I have won several auctions for vintage boots, handbags, and dresses for just under twenty dollars on eBay. These lucky finds have been pre-owned for over two decades, guaranteeing unrivaled status.

Notable fashion designers, including Jimmy Choo, Proenza Schouler, and Marc Jacobs, have recently linked up with eBay to provide a higher level of access to their seasonal collections. Not only can registered eBay users find one-of-a-kind vintage items, but they can also reach into designer collections before store shoppers can get a handle on their hangers.

According to Maureen Fan of Knight Ridder Newspapers, "eBay is taking its fashion credentials further – it will auction garments straight off the New York runways from hot young design team Proenza Schouler, six months before they hit the stores." Proenza Schouler is the second design team to send their collection straight to eBay. Rosemary Ponzo, a film and TV stylist, calls the online auction site "genius" for its ability to cater to fashionistas who "want things before anyone else."

Once you have become a registered user on eBay, it is quite possible that you will encounter some frustrating situations. There are a few important tips that can help improve your experience when bidding, buying, and selling.

Every registered eBay user has their own 'My eBay' summary page, which displays buying/selling reminders, messages, bidding items, selling items, and watched items. The summary box containing "watched items" is a very important tool. It is similar to window-shopping. When a searched item sparks some interest, an eBayer can click "watch this item," and the link will be saved under the watched items box; no bidding is necessary.

Here, the eBayer will be constantly notified with up-to-date information including the current bid and remaining time left in the auction. An eBayer can choose to not take any further action, or they might pounce on the item at the very last minute. It also provides the option of comparing two or more desirable items in the watched items box. This can assist in the decision-making process prior to bidding.

See EBAY on page 6

Marching for WWII 'comfort women'

Japan's history dealing with abuses is focus of the march

By Kerri DeMello
Collegian Correspondent

During World War II, young Asian women were kidnapped and brought into bonded sexual slavery for Japanese soldiers. The numbers were astronomical: over 200,000 girls from many different countries including the Philippines, Taiwan, Thailand, Vietnam, Singapore, the Dutch East Indies and mostly Korea were forced into such roles. These women are not nameless faces. They are daughters, sisters and friends who unfortunately became known as "comfort women" for Japanese soldiers.

Japan's current Prime Minister Shinzo Abe will make his first visit to the United States to meet with President Bush soon. As a result of his impending visit and a disturbing recent statement about comfort women, there will be a "Five College March of Solidarity with Comfort Women" tomorrow, April 27 at 12 p.m. The march will begin at UMass' Haigis Mall and end at Smith College.

In 1993 Chief Cabinet Secretary Yohei Kono made a statement indicating that the Japanese government was going to admit their involvement in the "comfort stations" and also admit to the evidence of Japan's coercion. Recently, on March 1, 2007, Japan's current Prime Minister Abe made a formal statement denying coercion. This is believed to be the beginning of backing out on the promise to accept the history of comfort women and further educate the country on this unsavory piece of its history to avoid having something as awful as this to happen again.

Congressional Representative Mike Honda recently introduced House Resolution 121. This resolution expresses that the government of Japan needs to formally acknowledge and accept responsibility of its sexual enslavement of comfort women during their occupation in Asia in the first half of the 20th century. There have been previous attempts at similar efforts which were blocked due to belief that this may cause problems with the United States' relations with Tokyo.

Students, faculty and all those would like to get involved and make their voices known are encouraged to join the Five College march. During the march there will be a petition circling in support of House Resolution 121 that will be sent to members of the House of Representatives.

During Prime Minister Abe's visit to the U.S. there will be multiple marches for the same effort across the country. Stephan Figura – the person in charge of the local march – has helped organize another march today in Berkley, Calif. The purpose of these marches is to show solidarity with the women who were forced into sexual slavery during WWII. There is also a desire by organizers and intended marchers to have President Bush, Congress, and Prime Minister Abe recognize this demonstration as a bold statement that the public will not allow the government to condone state-orchestrated and institutionalized rape.

Japan's Prime Minister Shinzo Abe, above, has made controversial comments regarding the "comfort women" of WWII.

Every one of these "comfort women" was someone's daughter, friend or sister. Some may have survived while others were lost. This Friday, April 27 is a chance for those in the Pioneer Valley to show support for them regardless.

Kerri DeMello can be reached at kademell@student.umass.edu

Juniper Festival celebrates new authors

By Mandy Thomas
Collegian Correspondent

The 7th Annual Juniper Literary Festival themed, "Strange Courage – First Books," will be held Friday and Saturday throughout the Amherst area. The festival begins with poetry and fiction reading at 7:30 p.m. Friday at UMass' Memorial Hall. It will feature the works of Timothy Donnelly, Paul Fattaruso, Merril Feitell, Elizabeth Hughey, Anna Moschovakis, Ira Sher, Rachel Shennan and Tony Tost.

Lisa Olstein, director of the festival and Associate Director of the MFA Program and Juniper Initiative, said the theme is dedicated to authors' first books and will focus specifically on issues related to first books.

"This year's festival in particular provides an amazing window into contemporary fiction and poetry," Olstein said. "And myriad opportunities to experience the potentially life-changing effects of hearing stories and poems come alive in the voice of the writer."

Olstein said there will be three readings with a total of 23 authors reading from their first books. In addition, roundtable discussions will consider a range of subjects

See JUNIPER on page 6

Elizabeth Hughey, left, and Timothy Donnelly, right, are two authors who are participating in the 7th Annual Juniper Literary Festival.

First impressions are best when honest, heartfelt women – not to be used with children.

HONESTY from page 5

So with that said, while we all like a compliment here and there, nothing should be more appealing than being told something you didn't exactly want to hear or weren't necessarily expecting to hear. When you do this you can accomplish two things. One, you can separate the children from the adults. And two, when you do this you will then reassure someone that honesty is your best policy. Don't overdo it though – no need to be rude.

Another important thing to do while making an impression is to not leave out important details. I think we should all be intelligent enough to understand what's important for someone to know and what is just minor. As you're getting closer to someone don't be afraid to reveal some skeletons in your closet. It will show the guy/girl that you aren't perfect and that you do make mistakes, but will recognize them and learn from them.

If you wait too long to reveal certain things, they will just be skeptical that you have something more to hide. This doesn't mean you have to dump everything on someone all at once; choose your moments wisely. After a couple of months of seeing someone, "Oh by the way I just broke up with my girlfriend a couple of months ago, and she may be pregnant," doesn't quite cut it.

Overall, be proud of who you are and how far you have come. Now that we are getting older there are things we may have done as teenagers that we're not too proud of. Embrace this and let it be a part of what shapes your future. No one wants to be categorized as "just another girl" or "just another guy." But instead of getting all worked up about being "labeled" why don't you do something about it?

Jasmine Monteiro can be reached at jmonteir@student.umass.edu.

eBay fills online clothing niche for less

EBAY from page 5

When an item is won on eBay, an eBayer must be aware of the payment methods that are accepted by the seller. Some payment methods include money order, cash, credit, personal check, or PayPal. PayPal is a wire transfer site that is owned by eBay. PayPal has become increasingly popular and is now the payment of choice on eBay. I highly suggest using PayPal as your payment method. It's convenient and helps secure your money transfer, whether it's through your credit card or transferring directly from your bank account.

Cash might seem to be the easiest way to go, but it is too hard to trace. I, along with thousands of other eBayers, have encountered the unfortunate situation of sending cash to a seller and never seeing the item that was paid for. There are many fraudulent members out there that you must watch out for. Some have no problem with taking your cash and then deleting their account. eBay can barely help you out with this dispute, unless a hefty amount of cash was lost.

To help safeguard yourself against fraudulent members, pay particular attention to the seller's feedback. After every transaction, it is requested that both the seller and the buyer evaluate each other's experience with one another. A member has a choice of labeling the type of experience as positive, negative, or neutral. The higher the seller's feedback number, the more experience they have buying and/or selling items on eBay.

Even though the amount of experience is an important component to trusting another seller, the type of feedback is more significant. Members are able to check another member's type of feedback by clicking on their feedback number. If a seller's feedback recently or consistently lacks positive feedback, it is suggested to avoid business with that person.

eBay's doors are open 24/7, providing every member with instant access to genuine vintage pieces and never-before-seen designer collections. Skip those long lines at the cash register; the thrill of auction shopping can be experienced in the comfort of your own home.

Reece Coppolino can be reached at rcoppoli@student.umass.edu.

PROENZA SCHOULER

COURTESY PROENZA SCHOULER

Proenza Schouler is using the popularity of Ebay to their advantage. The design duo has decided to provide the auction site with their lines before they are available in stores.

Weekend of literature celebrates with authors, fans relevant to contemporary literature, publishing, and society.

JUNIPER from page 5

"This year's roundtable discussions promise to be especially spirited and relevant, looking at issues affecting all of us individually and as a society," Olstein said. "Some will focus specifically on issues related to first books, others on broader issues affecting us as writers, readers, and citizens, such as politics and new media."

Amy Dickinson, assistant director of the festival, said one of the goals arranging events throughout town is for a greater integration between the festival, university and the local community.

"I think holding festival events at venues in Amherst – the Dickinson Homestead, Amherst Books, the Amherst Cinema Arts Center – as well as on the UMass campus will draw audience members from the local and university community," Dickinson said.

By holding the roundtables in smaller venues, Dickinson hopes the conversations between audience members and panelists will harvest organic discussions about the topics presented and also bridge the divide between audience and presenter. Dickinson noted that each writer has recently had his or her first book published and all are inventive.

"Some of the books are wonderfully strange or fabulous," Dickinson said. "All make me think and puzzle and imagine and feel."

Olstein said she is excited to bring together a diverse group of excellent emerging poets and writers to hear their voices and ideas and to share in the generation of new ideas.

"It's inspiring to come face to face with the incredible range of talent and perspective out there," Olstein said. "It's fascinating to see what happens when people get together to share their work and their thinking."

Each year, Olstein said the audience is made up of a great mix of people ranging from those with a casual interest to those seriously dedicated to the topics at hand.

"There's a great mix of backgrounds, experiences, and interests represented by both participants and audience members, which makes for a lively and important exchange of ideas," Olstein said.

Dickinson also thinks literary community is truly important. "I love readings, love literary festivals, love small presses and love gatherings of book-lovers," Dickinson said. "The air of festivity and excitement surrounding this year's festival is unmatched."

Katie Donohoe, a senior English and Writing Program major, is an undergraduate student working with this year's festival. Donohoe said every event is free and open to the public. Books by some of the readers will be sold at cost at Amherst Books, Donohoe said, and there will also be complimentary wine and cheese served to those of age. Parking for Amherst Books and Amherst Cinema is public, metered parking, while the Memorial Hall parking is at the Haigis Mall and Visitor's center. Donohoe said it is a good idea for people to show up early as seating in some venues is limited.

Mandy Thomas can be reached at mandyrudy@gmail.com

Juniper Literary Festival schedule

FRIDAY APRIL 27

-7:30 P.M. MEMORIAL HALL: Poetry and Fiction Reading – Timothy Donnelly, Paul Fattaruso, Merril Feitell, Elizabeth Hughey, Anna Moschovakis, Ira Sher, Rachel Sherman, Tony Tost

SATURDAY APRIL 28

-12:30 AMHERST CINEMA ARTS CENTER: Poetry and Fiction Reading – Tao Lin, Amanda Nadelberg, Allan Peterson, Dwight Yates
UMass alumni Noria Jablonski and Christopher Janke

-2:15 P.M.
---DICKINSON HOMESTEAD: Weird War: The Politics of Whimpy – Investigating the relationship between world events and various literary responses to them, from the overt championing of a particular cause to the less explicit approaches of the lyric, personal history, and invented parallel worlds

---AMHERST BOOKS: Publishing a First Book: the Basics & Beyond – Exploring the process that begins when a manuscript is complete and the different means by which first books come into the world

-3:30 P.M.
---DICKINSON HOMESTEAD: The Internet & New Literary Criticis – Considering ways in which new media including online journals, blogs, listservs, audio archives, and e-books inform the literary landscape and intersect with traditional media

---AMHERST BOOKS: Chapbook Reading & Discussion –Celebrating the storied tradition and diverse present of chapbooks with readings and discussion

-4:30 PM AMHERST BOOKS: Author Reception & Book-signing

-7:30 PM, MEMORIAL HALL: Poetry & Fiction Reading – Lucy Corin, Alan DeNiro, Julia Johnson, Sabrina Orah Mark, Eugene Oshtashevsky, Imad Rahman, Michael Robins, alum Shauna Scliy

Want to write? Email – arts@dailycollegian.com

1. tank
2. eyewear
3. animal print
4. shorts
5. patent

ZANNA downtown Amherst

To all Stockbridge School of Agriculture students, both freshmen and seniors:

Alumni of Alpha Tau Gamma, a Stockbridge fraternity on our Amherst campus since 1919 in the days of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, are cleaning the Mass. Highway Dept. visability site at Route 116 & Hadley (the west campus entrance). It is spring removal of winter road debris and the fertilizing of our 10,000 daffodils on Saturday, April 28, 2007 at 10:00 a.m.

All Stockbridge students are welcome to assist. We are ATG. Find out what we have done. There is much more that we can do. You can help. Find out about ATG and its dreams for Stockbridge and the future of the ATG/Stockbridge family. Thanks for reading this ad and for joining us.

ATG will provide beverages and munchies. Mass. Highway will provide orange vests, gloves and bags.

Plan Ahead for Next Year

Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.

NOW PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Hey! Feeling overwhelmed about something? Try asking for help.
Veronica Garrett, Daily Collegian Advice Columnist
vgarrett@student.umass.edu

Congratulations Graduates!
Alumni "Fare" For Graduating Seniors
To celebrate your upcoming graduation, your UMass Amherst Alumni Association invites you to Memorial Hall for... a FREE GIFT,
free Career information,
a DEMO of the ALUMNI DIRECTORY,
a chance to win $1000,
and a few SNACKS to get you through exams.
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
Monday, May 7 through Thursday, May 10
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.
You were. You are. UMASS. • UMassAlumni.com

JORDAN MILLER/COLLEGIAN

Junior third baseman Ryan Franczek went 0-for-1 with a walk and a run scored against Holy Cross yesterday in the Beanpot consolation game at Fenway Park. He is hitting .211 on the season with eight RBIs.

Crusaders pull away after UMass rally make it 3-0.

BASEBALL from page 10

"We hurt ourselves again," Stone said. "We gave up three in that one inning. We just hurt ourselves defensively there, and we got ourselves back in but let them score four runs at the end of the game too.

"You think you're in a pretty good position to win the game, and we have a bad inning on defense. We struggled again on the mound."

Sophomore Tim Comiskey came in to pitch an inning and a third of relief in the fifth and let up another run that was credited to Dicato.

UMass got on the board first in the bottom of the fifth, thanks to some heads-up base running from senior Bill Rankin who reached on a leadoff single. Rankin advanced to second on a past ball, and stole second on a pitch in the dirt. He made it a 4-1 ball game by coming home on the second wild pitch of the inning.

Holy Cross' sixth pitcher of the day, Matt Blake, was on the mound for the worst inning, if you want to call it that, of all seven Crusaders pitchers. UMass loaded the bases when Proietti was hit by a pitch to lead off the bottom of the sixth, followed by a Ryan Franczek walk and an error by first baseman Kyle Lister.

Adamski drove in Proietti from third after he hit a high chopper to shortstop Tyler Stampone, who tried to turn the 6-4-3 double play, but Adamski was safe at first when Lister dropped yet another ball.

Blake got a ground ball right back at him from Rankin, and made the force out at second, but was unable to get out of the inning as the throw to first was not in time. As a result, Franczek crossed the plate to cut Holy Cross' lead to 4-3.

Rankin represented the tying run after he stole second, but Andy Tuetken flied out to the infield to end the threat.

Stone thinks his team should have done more damage in that inning.

"We just need people to come through when we have runners in scoring position," Stone said. "We just haven't had much of that. We're always looking to do something and make things happen, and we get in that position and guys don't come through."

Adamski made the switch from first base to make his eighth pitching appearance of the season in the seventh and final inning, but things didn't go so well for him. Holy Cross answered the Minuteman rally by loading the bases with no outs and scoring four more runs to seal the deal on the win.

The game was called after seven innings because it got off to a late start after the umpires pulled a no-show until the third inning. Thankfully for the two teams, UMass assistant coach Matt Reynolds played the role of home plate umpire for the first two innings.

"There was some miscommunication with the fact that Harvard couldn't play," Stone said. "And apparently the umpires thought the game was totally canceled, and it wasn't. At about 11:30, I'm starting to look for the umpires, but I didn't see any sign of them so I tried making a phone call."

Nobody was scheduled because they heard of the change. Harvard was originally scheduled to play UMass, but Ivy League regulations forced it to make up a prior rainout with Yale yesterday instead.

Danny Picard can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu.

Seniors experience magic of Fenway

FENWAY from page 10

"It's great and I'll never forget it," he said. "Everything about it is just incredible. When you wake up in the morning, you just can't wait to play. It's an unbelievable feeling."

Although he didn't register a hit like those other guys, that game was even more special to 6-foot-2 senior catcher Frank McPherson. A native of nearby Somerville and the primary backup to captain Bryan Garrity, McPherson got what was a rare start yesterday, marking just his fifth appearance of the season.

"I mean, it was unbelievable," he said. "Being a senior, last chance, home crowd. I had a lot of family come by, so it was pretty surreal. It was really fun and it was an absolute rush of emotions stepping to the box and catching here."

And as if those increased emotions that came with playing at a legendary ballpark weren't enough to deal with, Munsey had the added bonus of trying to figure out how in the world he should play a fly ball off the Green Monster.

"Well, it definitely takes some getting used to," he said. "The first ball was a lot harder than the second one. It was hit right at me – and I didn't know whether to go back or not and I kind of got caught in the middle."

Those were the only two balls hit to Munsey all afternoon, but the co-captain contributed with his bat when he recorded UMass' third and final hit of the game with two outs in the ninth inning.

Proietti, the shortstop, was the only Minuteman to reach base twice, recording the game's first hit leading off the bottom of the first, and being struck by a pitch in the sixth. Rankin enjoyed the best day of any UMass player, going 1-for-3 at the plate with a run scored, an RBI and a stolen base. The lefty outfielder has surged offensively lately, but once again showed why his glove work is so highly thought of – with four putouts and one outfield assist yesterday.

Both Munsey and Proietti recorded hits in the consolation game at Fenway Park last season, but for Rankin it was his first career hit playing there.

"Unfortunately we weren't able to get much going as a team," Rankin said. "But it was nice to get that hit and score."

The rest of his teammates – seniors or not – agreed that it would have been nice to have put together more offensively. But after the game, upon learning that all three hits for UMass were stroked by seniors, the four seniors mentioned above all really relished that fact.

"I didn't even realize that, actually," Proietti said. "It is special knowing that, especially since us three will probably never be playing here again. It's kind of nice."

"I didn't realize that," Munsey said, much like his shortstop did earlier. "Yeah, it's definitely pretty cool."

"As seniors, and this being our last chance – being able to do that was a good thing," Rankin said. "It's great because it was the last time playing there for us and everyone wants to get out there and get a hit at Fenway."

But once again, it was the local kid who didn't get to join the "senior hit group" or get to play that much in his UMass career – that was the most excited and proud of this little factoid produced by his senior teammates yesterday.

"It was unbelievable," McPherson said. "It was great seeing those guys – Lou and Travis are my roommates – get hits, and especially Billy, also. It was just so good to see those guys do well. I wish the team could have got a win, but it was fun, and we still got to play at Fenway."

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu.

Reynolds wears different hat for Beanpot

Assistant coach plays ump for three innings inside Fenway

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

BOSTON – Harvard had a legitimate reason to no-show for the Beanpot consolation game against the Massachusetts baseball team yesterday afternoon at Fenway Park. The umpires didn't.

Holy Cross replaced the Crimson Tide because Ivy League regulations forced Harvard to make up a rainout with Yale. The umpires, however, didn't have the same excuse when they were nowhere to be found for the first pitch at noon.

After a 42-minute delay, current UMass assistant coach and former third baseman Matt Reynolds took off his maroon and white jersey and played the role of home plate umpire for the first two innings, until the official ump showed up to relieve him of his duties.

"It was interesting," Reynolds said. "It took me a while to get my bearings back after I got out of there. Luckily there were no big plays or anything.

"I was surprisingly calm," he added. "I didn't have a clicker or anything like that, so I had to rely on the scoreboard to keep track of the balls and strikes in case I forgot. But there were no mishaps."

As it turns out, when Harvard dropped out of the game to take care of its conference schedule, the unipires thought the game would be canceled, but that certainly wasn't the case.

Reynolds, who normally handles the team's infield alignment from the dugout, made the calls behind the plate, but it wasn't anything new. In fact, he's called a game or two before yesterday.

"Yeah, for South Boston Little League," Reynolds said about his prior experience with a smirk. "But never at Fenway Park."

Both teams did their best to ensure the game was called on an even keel, as Holy Cross sent one of its assistant coaches out to patrol the infield for the first two innings as well. The first base umpire showed up after the top of the third inning.

"[Matt] did a good job," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "Both of those guys did a good job. They weren't noticed, and that's how umpires are supposed to be. He had a better strike zone than the regular umpires."

NO PLACE LIKE HOME

UMass starter Mike Dicato and Frank McPherson have been to Fenway before, but actually being on the field is a much different experience for the Boston natives. Dicato, a sophomore from Winthrop, got the start in last year's consolation game, but McPherson getting the call to begin things behind home plate was the bigger news.

McPherson grew up in Somerville, and getting the nod from UMass coach Mike Stone to start at Fenway was quite the thrill.

"It was unbelievable," McPherson said. "It was my last chance to play at Fenway. It's a rush of emotions. I can't really describe it. I wish we had picked up a win. That would have been nice, but it was fun. You couldn't ask for anything more."

Jim Cassidy pinch ran for McPherson after he walked in his second at-bat of the game in the fifth inning. Just being able to get on base in front of what usually is the Red Sox dugout made for a special ovation when he came off the field in front of his hometown fans.

"I would have liked to pick up a hit, but it was fun to get on base and do whatever I can to help the team," McPherson said. "It was fun."

Bryan Garrity is the team's usual starting catcher, so seeing McPherson start behind the plate wasn't something you see everyday. Seeing his assistant coach hovering over him was even more unusual.

"I was talking to him about balls and strikes and just letting him know where the zone was," McPherson joked about his conversation with Reynolds behind home plate. "That was a little interesting. I thought [Matt] did a pretty good job, but it was definitely something I hadn't seen in college baseball before."

MUNSEY BEING MUNSEY?

No, there were no untimely bathroom breaks in left field yesterday for senior Travis Munsey. This was his second year in a row patrolling the Green Monster in the Beanpot, and he now has a newfound respect for what Red Sox star Manny Ramirez does in front of the most famous wall in baseball.

"It's not easy, and it definitely takes some getting used to," Munsey said. "Once you're out there a few times, I think you get the hang of it."

Two balls sailed over the head of the team's mainstay outfielder yesterday; one that bounced before the wall in the third, and another that smashed against the W.B. Mason sign in the fifth, which he had no chance of catching.

He did admit to misplaying one of the balls, however.

"The first one was catch-able," Munsey said. "The second one was definitely a double."

I've "The Gator," Mike Greenwell, misplayed balls at Fenway in his prime, but Munsey is still happy to have been able to play more than one game in the most unique left field in the majors.

"It's definitely awesome, but in order to compete, you have to just forget you're at Fenway Park and pretend you're back at your home ballpark," Munsey said. "It's definitely an awesome thing, but we should have got the win."

Danny Picard can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu

BRIAN BELTRAN/COLLEGIAN

Left fielder Travis Munsey got reacquainted with the Green Monster in Fenway's left field, usually occupied by the Red Sox' Manny Ramirez.

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
PRESIDENTIAL APTS
COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
PERRY APTS
177 N. PLEASANT ST.
COLLEGE INN APTS
LANTERN COURT APTS
MILL HOLLOW
CRESTVIEW APTS.
55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

Celebrate Graduation in Style!
Delivery: 413.549.0077
Telephone: 413.256.8923
413.256.8924
Panda East
FINE CHINESE & JAPANESE CUISINE
Featuring:
* Vegetarian Options
* Lunch Specials
* Sushi Bar
* "Light and Healthy" entrees
~ Elegant, Relaxing and Upscale~
We Bring China Town to You!
Monday - Thursday: 11:30am - 10:00pm
Friday & Saturday: 11:00am - 11:00pm
Sunday: 12:00pm - 10:00pm
Visit us at: www.pandaeastamherst.com
103 North Pleasant Street Amherst, MA

Syracuse, UMass renew historic rivalry

M. LACROSSE from page 10

son matchup returns to Garber Field. Cannella and players alike will downplay the rivalry and the significance of the UMass-Syracuse game, but there will be some extra adrenaline in the UMass system come the opening faceoff.

"We've always kind of downplayed that because if you play the name and not the game, you're focusing on the wrong thing," Cannella said. "Get yourself ready to play each and every week and this week should be no different than last week."

Senior captain Brett Garber, who will be playing his last game at Garber Field for Senior Day on Saturday, has been in the trenches when the biggest battles between these two teams were fought.

"It's going to be a great matchup," Garber said. "This is one of the longest and oldest rivalries that UMass has. In the last couple of years, the games have gotten more intense. This game is always so exciting and we're looking forward to it."

With a loss in Saturday's game, Syracuse would fall to two games below .500 and out of playoff contention. The Minutemen don't need any extra motivation when the Orange are involved, but knocking Syracuse out of the playoffs would be a sweet way for the seniors to end their careers at Garber Field.

"This is it," senior long-stick defender Dan Whipple said. "This is a playoff for [Syracuse] too. If they lose they're done, if we lose we're done. Going into this game, this is a must-win for both teams."

Senior midfielder Brian Jacovina succinctly summed up his feelings about the possibility of ending SU's postseason hopes.

"I'd love to do that to them, to be honest with you," he said.

UMass has won three straight games against the Orange at Garber Field but dropped the 12-7 decision on the road last season before the Minutemen sprinted to the national championship game.

These two teams have been strikingly similar over the last six years. The Minutemen are 76-30 since 2001, and Syracuse is 75-30 since 2001. One game in the win column is all that has separated these two programs for the last six-plus seasons.

"Whether we make the tournament or not," Whipple offered, "if we get a win this weekend and knock [Syracuse] out like two years ago when we knocked them out, it would be a plus."

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenf@student.umass.edu.

CHRISTIAN GONZALEZ/COLLEGIAN

Senior captain Dan Whipple leads the Minutemen with 44 groundballs and has forced 11 turnovers. The UMass defense yields just 7.9 goals per game and causes 16.4 turnovers per contest.

CHRISTIAN GONZALEZ/COLLEGIAN

In his final season at UMass, senior midfielder Brett Garber is second on the Minutemen with 28 points on 23 goals and five assists.

Senior Day a special one for class of '07

SENIORS from page 10

like it was forever ago, but at the same time I have only three days left on this field," senior long-stick defender Dan Whipple said. "This is the best place I've ever played at. There are going to be a lot of emotions and a lot of stuff to distract us. We just have to focus on the game."

"I can't believe it is over," said senior midfielder Brian Jacovina. "I've been trying to enjoy it the whole year and I've been telling the other seniors to enjoy it the whole year."

This season has been a trying one for these seniors. Many one-goal and two-goal losses put UMass out of the national picture pretty early, and games that would've gone their way during the magic run to the title a year ago simply didn't mesh with maroon this season.

But now, the Minutemen can make an impact on the national scene, this time in the form of a thorn in SU's side.

So there is always something to play for. And if the Orange weren't in town this weekend, the Minutemen would still be celebrating the tremendous careers of all their seniors – and fighting hard until the final horn.

It's about UMass and its seniors this weekend.

"Senior Day is tough for a lot of people because of the emotions," Cannella said. "Being mentally prepared for that, and the finality of that, but still going out there and playing the best you can is hard for some people mentally."

It's something to overcome – another rung, another speed bump, another hurdle in the seniors' long careers.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenf@student.umass.edu.

Pair of hurlers win A-10 weekly awards

SOFTBALL from page 10

deep if they want to keep their 15-game winning streak – the second highest in the country – alive against the Terriers, who are batting .299 as a team.

BALSCHMITER AND SANDERS HONORED BY A-10

UMass sophomore Brandice Balschmiter was named the A-10 Pitcher of the Week and freshman hurler Bailey Sanders was selected as Rookie of the Week on Monday. For Balschmiter (19-8, 1.41 ERA), this is her fourth Pitcher of the Week award, while this gives Sanders (7-4, 2.90 ERA) her second weekly award (one Pitcher of the Week and one Rookie of the Week).

Balschmiter ended the week 2-0, with an ERA of 0.51. In 13.2 innings pitched, the Newark, N.Y., native gave up three runs (one earned), seven hits and no walks. She fanned 10 opponents and held her opponents to a .159 batting average.

In the April 20 matchup against Temple, she surrendered three hits in a complete-game, 5-1 win. In the follow-up game the next day, the 20-year-old earned her first save of the season, as she came in with one out in the sixth, giving up no runs. The only run that crossed the plate on her watch was a Temple baserunner who scored on a passed ball. Balschmiter delivered a solid 1-2-3 seventh inning to wrap up a 7-4 victory.

She tossed another complete game win on Sunday in the first game of a doubleheader with the Saint Joseph's Hawks. The sophomore struck out two batters, while letting up four hits and two walks in the 10-2 win, which ended in the fifth inning on a run rule.

Sanders also went 2-0 last week – but with a 0.00 ERA. The Durham, Conn., native tossed 10.1 innings while striking out 13. She gave up five hits, five walks and four unearned runs. She also held opponents to a .218 batting average.

In Friday's game against Temple, she navigated her team through 5.1 innings from the circle before being relieved by Balschmiter. Sanders gave up four runs on four walks and three hits allowed.

She threw the first shutout of her collegiate career in an 8-0 blanking of the Hawks in the second game of Sunday's doubleheader. In five innings pitched, she surrendered two hits (both in the bottom of the first) and one base on balls. The 6-foot-2 right-hander also sat down a career-high nine batters by way of strikeout.

After giving up hits to Saint Joseph's Kelsey Moir and Erika Rosenwinkel in the first inning, Sanders got Alyssa Neilson to ground out to shortstop Whitney Williams to get out of a jam with two runners in scoring position. The freshman buckled down after that, retiring 14 of the next 15 hitters. UMass gained six more votes in the NFCA/USA Today Top 25 poll, receiving 11 total votes this week. The Minutewomen were last ranked on Feb. 21 at No. 25. They began the year ranked 23rd in the nation.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

To all Stockbridge School of Agriculture students, both freshmen and seniors:

Alumni of Alpha Tau Gamma, a Stockbridge fraternity on our Amherst campus since 1919 in the days of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, are cleaning the Mass. Highway Dept. visability site at Route 116 & Hadley (the west campus entrance). It is spring removal of winter road debris and the fertilizing of our 10,000 daffodils on Saturday, April 28, 2007 at 10:00 a.m.

All Stockbridge students are welcome to assist. We are ATG. Find out what we have done. There is much more that we can do. You can help. Find out about ATG and its dreams for Stockbridge and the future of the ATG/Stockbridge family. Thanks for reading this ad and for joining us.

ATG will provide beverages and munchies. Mass. Highway will provide orange vests, gloves and bags.

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
333 Russell St., Rt. 9
Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174
Sale date: 4/26/07 - 5/02/07
not responsible for typographical errors

Beer

Bud Light 18 pk cans $13.99*	Amstel Light 12 pk btl $11.99	Corona Cerveza 12 pk btl $13.99*	Killian's Irish Red 12 pk btl $11.99
Keystone Light 18 pk cans $12.99*	Magic Hat 12 pk btl $11.99*	Red Hook Ales 12 pk btl $11.99	J.W Dundee Honey Brown 12 pk btl $8.99
Pabst Blue Ribbon 24 pk btl $12.99*	St. Pauli Girl 12 pk btl $10.99*	Saranac 12 pk btl $9.99*	Steel Reserve 211 Lager 12 pk can $7.99*

Liquor
LIBATION LIQUIDATION
DEEP DISCOUNTS on Discontinued and Closeout Items
SALE 4/26-5/02

Wine
10% off 6 bottles* of wine
EVERYDAY MIX & MATCH
*Regular priced 750 ml bottles of varietal wines

Hours: Monday - Saturday 9am - 11pm Sunday 12pm - 11pm

Great Natural Fiber Spring Clothing!
The Mercantile
11 East Pleasant Street
Amherst, Ma 01002
(413) 549-1396
And
108 Main Street
Northampton, MA 01060
(413) 584-1204

SKYPLEX
SPRINGFIELD'S HOTTEST NIGHTCLUB
3 CLUBS & 3 DJ'S ALL UNDER ONE ROOF!!!
"LA & NYC NIGHTLIFE COMES TO SPRINGFIELD"
Thursday - 18+ College Night "Hot Body Contest"
Friday - 18+ "Underground Electronic Dance Party" Downstairs "Top 40" Upstairs
Saturday - 21+ "Party VIP Style"
WANTED: HIP YOUNG PROMOTERS/HOSTS • Earn $$$$
Calling all DJ's
Do you do campus and house parties? Looking for a chance to work at the HOTTEST Nightclub? Here's your chance to become a Club DJ! Signup online at www.info.skyplex.us
18+ $2.00 off admission before midnight with this ad
21+ FREE admission before midnight with this ad
code:umass
10 Stearns Square Springfield, MA 413-827-9000

Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY:
♦ KARAOKE ♦
♦ LIVE BANDS ♦
THURSDAY, APRIL 26TH, 2007: ON THE ROCKS
FRIDAY, APRIL 27TH, 2007: MARK SNOW
SATURDAY, APRIL 28TH, 2007: ROCK 201
♦ STUDENT BAND WANTED ♦
NEED A PLACE TO PLAY? COME TO SEVEN O'S!
ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-6788
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
NEXT TO CLIFFSIDE APTS.

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

			8
9				4		7	6
	6	2	5			9		3
2	4
		7	1		2	6
							4	7
7		9			5	8	6
3	1		8					5
				7

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Cocaine is God's way of saying that you're making too much money."

-Robin Williams

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

SO, UHMM... THAT EMPLOYEE OF YOURS...
DID SHE, UM, SAY ANYTHING ABOUT ME?
SO IN A COMPLETELY INDIRECT AND UNFLATTERING WAY, YEAH, SHE DID.
ASHLEY. SHE WAS A NAME.
SHE ASKED ABOUT THE SMELL COMING FROM THE CLOSET. FOR WHICH I BLAME YOUR SHOES.
SIGH

HARD KNOCKS By Louis Coppola

HARD KNOCKS
SAMSON, HOW ARE YOU GOING TO LOAN MY FATHER MONEY FROM MODELING WHEN YOU'VE NEVER ACTUALLY MODELED?
SEE, THIS MAKES ME MAD! YOU TALK ABOUT THINGS YOU KNOW NOTHING ABOUT!
HAVE YOU EVER SEEN THIS?!
PERSONS
YOU CALL THIS FAT?
YOU MADE THAT AT THE MALL.
IT'S CALLED AN INVESTMENT!

A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

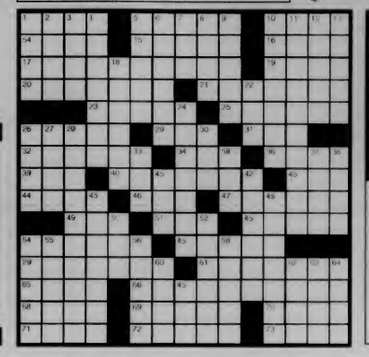
HAVE YOU THOUGHT ABOUT WHAT WE'RE GOING TO DO AFTER I GRADUATE?
OH, YEAH. I'VE THOUGHT ABOUT IT A LOT.
I TRY TO IMAGINE WHAT IT WILL BE LIKE AFTER YOU GRADUATE AND I DON'T KNOW WHAT I'LL DO.
I MIGHT HANG OUT WITH FRIENDS BUT YOUR PARENTS WILL PROBABLY WANT TO GO OUT TO DINNER.

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

ACROSS
1 Ewe offspring
5 Part of a fight
10 Applaud
14 Biblical twin
15 Cringe
16 Foolhardy
17 Special interest report
19 Bologna eight
20 North Carolinian
21 Orange-yellow color
23 Alma
25 Document confirmer
26 Became less intense
29 Lair
31 Auto gear
32 Act divisions
34 Porker's pad
36 Civil unrest
39 Snooo
40 Of the oracle of Apollo
43 Wonder
44 Guitar part
46 Sadness
47 Stroked lightly
49 Quick trip
51 Aged
53 Bank deals
54 Audience loudmouth
57 French textile center
59 Asserts before proof
61 Serengeti hunter
65 Pop choice
66 Nonsense!
68 Unwrap
69 Eucharist plate
70 Persia after 1935
71 Porgy's woman
72 Constellation components
73 Nobleman

DOWN
1 Time of tasting
2 On a cruise
3 Bryn ___ College
4 Outback travelers
5 Taste sensation
6 Dubbed
7 Aardvark snack
8 Cells
9 Aired again
10 Scottish tenant farmer
11 Verdi opera
12 John Jacob or Mary
13 Counterfeit
18 Like some gas or glass
22 Because of
24 Try a new order of letters
26 Sports stn
27 Farm measure
28 Indian Ocean island country
30 Final degree
33 Use needle and thread
35 Little yelp
37 Writer Waller
38 Kennedy and Williams
41 Old card game
42 Orchestral strings
45 Seoul populace
48 Tip of a little piggy
50 Tent stake
52 Comic Phyllis
54 Biblical twin
55 Flee to wed
56 Harvests
58 Property claims
60 Brief quarrel
62 Continental change
63 Cicatrix
64 Dispatch
67 After-sch. grp

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM



Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

the Moan and Dove
wanna hug?
themoananddove.com
460 West St • Rte.116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1 am every day

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Once Gloria Estefan was paralyzed and now she's not...BAM. Conga 4 lyfe.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Apply for a high profile government position that you neither deserve nor desire.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Defend to the bitter end the social relevance of the song "Walking in Memphis."

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
The sole purpose of the timpani on this earth is to celebrate your greatness.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Even if a sponge could suck itself up it wouldn't be as self absorbed as you are.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You have not lived up to the potential of your promising youth as the Karate Kid.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Wrap yourself in giant banana leaves and refer to yourself as "Chiquita Human-a."

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
The rhombus is the most pompous muscle in the human body, yet most underrated.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Reacquaint yourself with your tear ducts by watching Old Yeller and Heavyweights.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Find a blingin' robe, a light saber and a padawan for your interstellar adventures.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
There is no reason why fond memories and fondle memories can't be one in the same.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Remember, you cannot help someone tie their shoes over the phone.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
NOW OPEN FOR LUNCH!
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 11am-2am
Thurs-Sat: 11am-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Amherst Golf Club 256-6894. Play golf mon/fri $20.00 All day. Rate with Student ID.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Street Kung Fu The ultimate in personal safety. For class times call 413-325-1322

Like no other course, Army ROTC Minor in Leadership and get paid for it! Graduate as an Army Officer full time/part time after college www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,900/Mo www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1125, 3 bedroom $1425, 4 bedroom $2175 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

EMPLOYMENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Lifeguards and aquatics staff wanted The town of Amherst seeks qualified lifeguards, swim instructors, and cashiers for summer employment, June-August. Lifeguards must hold current certifications including: Lifeguard training, First aid, and CPR. Wages start at $8.19/hr. Hours vary. Job is 30-40 hours/week. Work study hours available. Call 413-259-3065 or visit www.lsse.org to apply

Marketers wanted for part time work during school. Earn $15/hr + bonus. Email: rdonaldson@collegepro.com

EMPLOYMENT

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must call 413-584-4746

Camp Pontiac, a premier co-ed overnight camp in New York, is looking for fun, enthusiastic and mature individuals who can teach and assist in all areas of athletics, aquatics, the arts, or as a general bunk counselor. View our website at www.camppontiac.com. If interested simply fill out the application in the staff section, email Stefanie@camppontiac.com or call Stefanie at 516-626-7668

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Nights and weekends. Apply at DP Dough. Downtown Amherst.

EMPLOYMENT

Brandywine Apts. Needs a certified lifeguard. Full time hours flexible. Must work some weekends. $9.00/hr Call 549-0600 or stop by office.

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

WORK OUTDOORS THIS SUMMER Full time positions available in your hometown. Earn $8-12/hour Painting houses with a fun crew. Call 888-277-9787 or www.collegepro.com

Bartending $300/day potential No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

HOUSE FOR RENT

Amherst nice house on bus route to all colleges. 2 rooms available immediately. Each 450 mo + electric. Call Ally 413-253-4929 leave message or call 413-626-7491

ROOMMATE WANTED

Cape Cod Seeking summer roommates starting 6/10 Yarmouth, MA near beach. Female only 617-519-0178

SERVICES

Do you know your rights as a student, tenant, worker & consumer? The student Legal Services office can help with your questions. Stop by at 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992 www.tapestryhealth.com

SUMMER SUBLET

Alpine Commons apartment June-August 15th $2050/month includes utilities 413.204.9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED $10,000(Plus expenses) We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1300+ (math+verbal) Physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more information please contact us Email: Darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

www.daily collegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 26, 2007

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen take aim

Syracuse returns to Amherst with post-season fates at stake

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This game needs no introduction. Massachusetts and Syracuse go way back in the men's lacrosse arena. The two teams have had countless memorable games and down-to-the-wire thrillers. There have been upsets and romps, elation and devastation.

And even though these two annual lacrosse juggernauts aren't having the best 2007 seasons – UMass is 6-6 and Syracuse is 5-6 – Saturday's 3 p.m. contest is the newest opportunity for bragging rights.

"[Syracuse is] an outstanding team," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "When you look at their record, it's a little shocking when you look at their last three games and what they've done. They scored 54 goals in three games against No. 1, No. 2 and a really good Rutgers team.

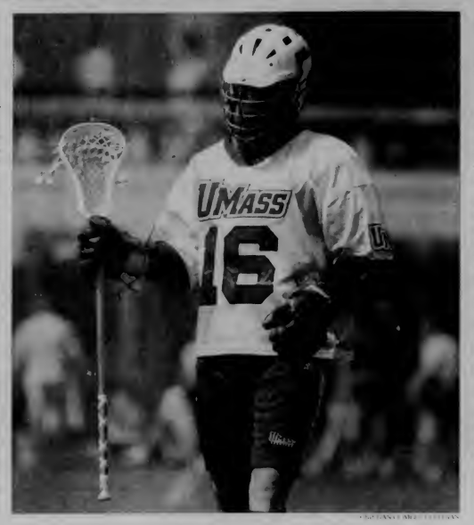
"They're excellent. They're playing very well. We certainly have our hands full."

This rivalry is fresh. The Minutemen stung the Orange in 2005 when – in perhaps the biggest victory in the history of UMass lacrosse – they ended SU's season in the first round of the NCAA Tournament, stopping one of the longest streaks in college sports in its tracks.

The Orange had been to the NCAA Semifinals for 22 straight seasons until their fateful meeting with the Minutemen, and with that win UMass also became the first team to beat the Orange twice in one season since Penn State did it in 1991.

Last season, the Minutemen lost, 12-7, to SU on the road, and this year the annual regular sea-

See M. LACROSSE on page 8



After recording two points in his first three seasons at UMass, senior attack Denis Whelan has notched 10 points through 12 games so far this season. His seven goals are fifth on the team.

Seniors have mixed emotions as final home game approaches

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It is a day that many look forward to and dread at the same time, filled with all sorts of complicated emotions and memories – some good, some bad, all powerful.

It's Senior Day for the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team at Garber Field Saturday against Syracuse. Nine players will graduate at the end of the semester and this weekend will be their last time playing on the familiar Garber turf.

"These guys have been great," UMass coach Greg Cannella said in his office yesterday. "This particular senior class has done a lot of great things here and provided a lot of really good leadership and given everything they have for us. As a coach, that's all you can ask for."

Matt Carroll, Brett Garber, Efosa Guobadia, Brian Jacovina, Pat Larmon, Sam Moody, Andrew Recchione, Denis Whelan and Dan Whipple will put on the white and maroon for the last home game of their careers this weekend.

The Senior Day ceremonies will take place before the game.

See SENIORS on page 8

Today and tomorrow will be the preparation for the Orange, the last couple of days on Garber before the formal goodbye this weekend.

These seniors have been through highs and lows with the UMass lacrosse program. Garber – the grandson of Dick Garber, after which the field is named – has turned in a decorated career for the Minutemen and held the torch high for future lax stars.

His ambivalence about this weekend is understandable, and the balance between remembering a great four years and saying goodbye to them at the same time weighs heavily on the mind and the heart.

"It's definitely going to be emotional but I'm going to have to balance it out and play," Garber said after practice yesterday. "There are going to be a lot of emotions and a lot of mixed feelings in my head but I have to do my best to get past it.

"I think it's going to be a little harder when I actually have to go out there and do it," he added. "I'm trying to put that off. I'm trying to prepare myself in the best way and think about the best way to go about it."

Other seniors will struggle with the same mental chess match.

"My last four years here seems

Senior Bryan Adamski allowed four runs, three earned, in the seventh and final inning yesterday for the Minutemen. At the plate, he went 0-for-3 with a run batted in and reached base after being hit by a pitch.

Blowup at Beanpot

Adamski collapses in seventh after UM pulls within one

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

BOSTON – It took seven different pitchers, but Holy Cross made the best of its first – and last – Beanpot Tournament appearance on Wednesday at Fenway Park.

The Crusaders used a three-run third and a four-run seventh to take an 8-3 win over the Massachusetts baseball team in the Beanpot consolation game. Holy Cross replaced Harvard in a last-ditch effort to get the game in, and it used a different pitcher in each inning to shut down the UMass bats.

HC	8
UMass	3

"They probably just wanted to let everybody have a chance to play," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "It's different. You don't really get settled in, and we didn't do anything offensively."

The Minutemen had only three hits in the game, coming from seniors Lou Proietti, Bill Rankin and Travis Munsey. UMass starter Mike Dicato did not hold the same fortune as Holy Cross' starter-by-committee approach.

Dicato only lasted 4 2/3 innings after allowing three runs in the third. Only two of the runs were earned due to a pair of defensive blunders.

Norm Roth lined a one-hopper off the Green Monster that scored Jamie Aldrich to get things going. Proietti was then charged with an error as he bobbled a ground ball that could have ended the inning. Jake Gorman scored on the play to give Holy Cross a 2-0 lead.

Dicato didn't do himself any favors by throwing an errant pickoff attempt to first that got by the glove of Bryan Adamski, scoring Roth to

See BASEBALL on page 7

Seniors enjoy day at Fenway

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

BOSTON – There was no victory, no consolation prize or any home runs poked around Pesky's Pole for the Massachusetts baseball team yesterday at Fenway Park.

But what did happen on Wednesday seemed fitting – especially for those players who have very little time remaining with maroon and white jerseys on their backs.

The Minutemen managed just three hits in their 8-3 loss to Holy Cross in the Beanpot Consolation game, but each of them came off the bats of elder statesmen – with seniors Travis Munsey, Bill Rankin and Lou Proietti all registering singles in what will likely be their last chance to ever play in front of the Green Monster.

And it's something that none of them will likely ever forget. Well, except possibly for the fifth-year senior center fielder that might have preferred playing somewhere a little bit different. Say, maybe in the House that Ruth Built.

"I'm a Yankees fan," Rankin said with a grin. "But it was great to play at a field like this. It's always fun being here and it's a great ballpark. It doesn't get much better than this."

His fellow outfielder, Munsey, loved the experience as well – but Yankee Stadium couldn't have been any further from his mind.

"Growing up, you love Fenway Park," he said. "It's definitely tough to try and forget you're playing here so you can concentrate and try to win the game. It was an awesome experience, but we definitely should have won."

Perhaps the most excited out of this trio was Proietti, who was nothing but smiles after being asked what it was like to play at the old ballpark.

See FENWAY on page 7

Rivalry on hold for '07 due to rainout

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It was deja vu all over again for the Massachusetts softball team as its 5 p.m. game against Connecticut at the Mass Softball Complex was cancelled due to rain yesterday. The game will not be made up.

UMass Softball

The weather rang a familiar bell for the Minutewomen, whose April 17 game against the Huskies in Storrs, Conn., was also called off because of downpour. That game will also not be rescheduled.

The Maroon and White (26-12-1, 12-0 Atlantic 10) has not been able to get its hands on UConn (20-18, 8-7 Big East) since last season when UMass trumped the Huskies, 11-3, in the May 7 meeting, winning by run rule on Senior Day.

WHO'S NEXT?

The Minutewomen will not have to wait long for some diamond action, as they are set to play Boston University (28-9, 12-2 Big East) today at 5 p.m. UMass is 5-2 all-time against the Terriers and looks to better that record this evening.

Christy Leath is BU's top player. She is tied with the most hits on the squad, having gone 41-for-106, for a team-high .387 batting average so far. She also leads the Terriers with 22 walks.

The sophomore is second on the team in home runs (seven) and total bases (69) this season. Her 23 RBIs also place her third on the team.

Sophomore Melissa Dubay has also been coming up big for the Terriers. Her 37 hits (in 110 at bats) place her third on the team, for a .336 average that is good enough for second on the team.

The infielder is fifth on the team with 21 RBIs and 14 runs scored. The Minutewomen need big years

See SOFTBALL on page 8

Freshman Whitney Williams and the Minutewomen will have to wait until next year to renew their rivalry with UConn. Both meetings with the Huskies – scheduled for yesterday at home and April 17 in Connecticut – were rained out.

MINUTEWOMEN DEFEAT BU
PAGE 10

MOS DEF AT AMHERST COLLEGE
PAGE 6

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

RAIN : HI: 58 LO: 49 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | FRIDAY, APRIL 27, 2007

Alarms sound

Officials evacuate JQA after fire starts

BY ALYSSA MONTALBANO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Let's face it; some students get a kick out of pulling the fire alarm early in the morning as a joke. But on Saturday, April 21, a fire alarm went off at 4 o'clock in the morning in the John Quincy Adams tower in the Southwest residential area. This fire alarm was no joke.

The first people to be notified about the alarm were the Student Force fire fighters of the Amherst area. The Student Force fire fighters run alongside the full time fire force in Amherst. They are located and operate in the North Fire Station. They respond in the Amherst area and North Amherst.

The Fire Force was notified that an alarm went off by a Resident Advisor in the John Quincy Adams tower.

"When the alarm first went off, it was a still alarm that sounded, which triggered the dispatch," Jamie Wellever of the Student Force explained, "but this later turned to a box alarm, which goes off when either smoke or a fire are visible, and as a result contacted all the Amherst Fire Units."

When the box alarms were sounded, all the units came to the sight. Engine 3, consisting of Jamie Wellver, Sean O'Keefe, and Student Chief Shawn McKenna were the first ones to be on the scene. They traveled up to the 10th floor, and hooked the hose line into a stand pipe, which is in every high rise and multi-story building, so that they could operate the hose inside the building.

When the 12th floor door was opened, there was a moderate flame showing and a lot of smoke.

"There was a fire present with heavy smoke conditions," commented Wellver.

Luckily, Engine 3 was able to put out the fire before it was able to spread to any other floors. Smoke

See FIRE on page 3

Grand ole time

The Massachusetts softball team defeated BU, 10–4, yesterday. Junior second baseman Stacy Cullington hit two home runs, including a grand slam, and set a new UMass RBI record in the process with seven. Check page 10 for coverage of yesterday's win.

Campus calls for emergency preparedness

UMass security reconsidered after shootings

BY MELISSA D'AMICO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In the aftermath of the Virginia Tech shooting, many are beginning to wonder if there is a better way for colleges and universities throughout the United States to implement security systems to warn students and faculty of emergencies occurring on campus.

Security experts, professors, and members of college communities have called for universities to pay greater attention to campus security efforts. Campus officials are working towards finding new ways to reach students and faculty.

Members of the University of Massachusetts community have called for greater security measures, and the administration is currently taking steps toward finding and implementing emergency security systems available throughout campus.

Although the campus already has a variety of security systems including night security within residence buildings, e-mail, and Web site notifications, other systems are being considered.

"We already have a number of security systems in place on campus. We have an e-mail system that can reach every student, and we are also able to post emergency alert notifications on the UMass Web page," said Ed Blaguszewski, UMass' Director of News and Information.

"It is not a question of if we have security on campus. How we can be quicker and more efficient is the question that needs to be asked."

Within the next couple of weeks, campus officials will be meeting with a number of companies to see what types of security systems are available, and which ones will be the most effective for UMass.

While finding new forms of security is important, the focus is being placed on taking time to find the most effective system rather than immediately implementing one.

"We are updating our procedures as fast as we can but we need to do the right thing. We need to make sure our money is being invested within the right systems," said Blaguszewski.

See EMAIL on page 3

Campus event celebrates UMass' GLBTQ community

BY CARA GRANNEMANN AND EDEN UNIVER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts Pride Alliance hosted its annual Queerfest on the library lawn, yesterday.

Queerfest is an event to celebrate lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender people on campus and also for "giving away lots of free stuff," according to Pride Alliance treasurer Jaime Corliss.

According to Corliss, the purpose of the event was "to promote visibility for the queer community and a healthy image of queer students."

Corliss addressed the recent supposed homophobic act of violence on campus as another reason for the event.

The event included tables of t-shirt designing, button making, pamphlets on lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender peoples, free cotton candy, snow cones, and condoms.

"I think it's really fun and nice, you can see it from a mile away with the big rainbow," said UMass freshman Alon Rivel.

There was also a table to fill out Massdquality.org postcards to legislators supporting equal rights for same-sex couples.

The campus radio station, WMUA, provided music for the day. The event also included multiple inflatable obstacle courses and activities. The day's activities ran into the night with a comedy show.

According to Pride Alliance officers and students the attendance was very diverse.

Freshman attendee Tyler Dobshinsky said, "At least one person from every organization or group on campus was here."

Pride Alliance President Jess Reusch felt similarly. "There was a lot of diversity out here today, we all hope that it will foster a healthy community and get people [more] aware that there are queer kids on campus and we just want to be here and have fun," she said.

Judging from the number of attendees, the Pride Alliance event was a success.

"They definitely accomplished their goal. I think this is as community as UMass gets," said

PHENOM lobbies at State House

BY ANDREW FREEMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Students, faculty, and staff from public colleges across Massachusetts converged at the State House for Lobby Day this past Wednesday. The event, organized by the Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts (PHENOM) was highlighted by the lobbying of state legislators.

In addition, several politicians and members of PHENOM delivered speeches to the attendees.

Two buses set out from UMass at 7:45 a.m. The passengers were almost evenly divided between students and employees of the University.

Attendees at the event were united by their distress at the state of public higher education in Massachusetts.

Jim Smethurst, professor of African-American studies, cited his "concern with accessibility, having adequate staffing" and maintaining facilities at UMass as reasons for taking part in Lobby Day.

"Public higher education is one of the most pressing issues of our time," said Matt Provencher, a sophomore at UMass and Student Government Association senator, describing why he decided to get involved with PHENOM.

PHENOM was formed in February as a statewide organization to represent the interests of all those involved in public colleges and universities. The group's chief aims are to increase funding for such schools, to make them more affordable and accessible to disadvantaged students, and to hire more teachers and staff.

A principal effort of PHENOM has been to get concerned Massachusetts residents to sign postcards affirming their support for public higher education.

On Wednesday, PHENOM activists delivered a total of 16,000 cards to the State House, and 5,000 cards were sent to Governor Deval Patrick alone. Governor Patrick was not present for the event, though his aides received the cards. The other 11,000 cards were distributed to the signatories' state representatives.

The organization's legislative agenda consists of seven bills. These include Senate Bill 739, which would subsidize campus construction by borrowing three

See PHENOM on page 3

Student Trustee Mishy Leiblum was among the members of SGA who traveled to Boston to rally and lobby state legislators Wednesday.

Faculty Senate speaker to address campus security, future plans

BY EDEN UNIVER AND CARA GRANNEMANN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Stephen Tocco, the chair of the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees, will speak at a meeting of the Faculty Senate on May 3.

According to a UMass press release, Tocco was as executive director of the Massachusetts Port Authority from 1993-1997. He also chaired the state's Board of Higher Education from 1999-2006, was appointed to the University's Board of Trustees in September, and was elected chairman later that month.

In the meeting, Tocco plans to address "faculty enhancement on the Amherst campus, the future of the University, and security issues," according to the press release, as well as the future plans of the Board of Trustees, finances, the Amherst 250 Plan, and any questions from the audience.

He also plans to "talk a little bit about what we're doing regarding the security question" in the wake of the Virginia Tech University murders."

In the press release Tocco said, "It's a fairly new board, and it's developing its vision for the system, what [the] Amherst [campus] means to the system and the state, where we see the University going in the future and the challenges we face getting there," he said.

The meeting will be held in Thompson Hall room 102 at 1:30 p.m.

Marxist activist lectures

BY ALANA MELANSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Marxist activist and journalist Ashley Smith urged University of Massachusetts students and other attendees to organize themselves and take action against capitalist society last night in a lecture titled "The Revolutionary Ideas of Karl Marx."

The ideas of Karl Marx, a German philosopher and political economist who lived and wrote in the 1800s, are still relevant today because they are based on the power of the largest class in existence, the working class, as an agent of revolutionary change, said Smith.

"The struggle between classes," Smith said, "is what shapes history."

Another vital part of Marxist philosophy is the activism it encourages. Socialism is not meant to be a "stale, academic critique" that is merely discussed, said Smith, but is meant to be a call to action. Smith believes this call is being heard by the current generation, whom he says is experiencing a "massive scene change in consciousness" that stems from the Iraq War and inequalities made evident by Hurricane Katrina, all causes of their developing "utter contempt for Bush," whose "administration is decomposing before our eyes."

See LECTURE on page 3

Ashley Smith, Marxist activist and journalist.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 126

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jaimeem Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staggin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Bellivea
SPORTS EDITOR Dunns Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
FEATURES EDITOR Melissa D'Amico
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER David Valade
ASSTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dollanitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALUMNI LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik

COPY EDITOR
Courtney Souza

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Experts offer suggestions for eliminating sleepless nights

Experts from Florida State University cited stress, trauma, worrying, and excessive drug use as the most common causes of sleepless nights.

BY SARAH GWYN
FSView & Florida Flambeau (Florida State U.)

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Many college students have a lot on their mind. Some nights may be harder to sleep than others. It is not uncommon to toss and turn from stress of an exam or a future date.

"A person can have difficulties sleeping at night because they are stressed out, experiencing some types of trauma, are worried, or his excessive drug use," psychology intern at the Florida State University Counseling Center Shamika Hall said.

Here are some tips to help people go to sleep.

"There is a variety of things to do to help someone fall asleep," Hall said. "Something that relaxes a person would be the first step."

Doing something calming is one way to quiet down and get a good night's rest.

"Taking a warm bath helps me fall asleep," FSU sophomore Maggie Robinette said.

Getting a massage can also provide much needed relaxation. Some people find aromatherapy or listening to classical CD helpful.

"I istening to soothing music can help you sleep," FSU freshman Celeste Block.

A person's sleep environment may affect their ability to fall asleep. It could help to have a bedroom dark and quiet. An illuminated bedroom clock is a source of light that can be extremely annoying. A person can try covering it up to block out its light. The room should be not too cold but not too hot — 60 to 65 degrees is a good temperature.

The comfort of a bed can also be a factor. A firm bed will give the entire body the support it needs to really relax. Generally, a mattress should be replaced every 10 years to get the best support and comfort.

The idea of a bed can also hinder a person's ability to sleep. The bed should only be used for sleeping. If it is used for things like doing homework, then the mind won't be able to identify the bed with sleeping.

The position a person sleeps in is also important. Sleeping on the back is the best position for relaxing, and allows all the internal organs to rest properly. If a person must sleep on their side, he/she should do so on the right side, not left. Sleeping on the left side causes a person's lungs, stomach and liver to press against the heart. What a person eats or drinks can have an affect on sleepiness. Drinking a lot of caffeine can hamper sleep. Coffee, tea (black, not herbal), chocolate and cola drinks are high in caffeine. Caffeine hangs around in the body for many hours so the last drink should be by mid-afternoon.

Drinking a glass of warm milk contains calcium, which works directly on jagged nerves to make them relax. Herbal tea can also calm nerves. Try a cup of hot chamomile, catnip or fennel tea. All contain natural ingredients which will help sleep. Most health food stores will also have special blends of herb tea designed to help get people to sleep.

Eating too much can make it difficult to get off to sleep, but going to bed hungry can also be a problem. A small, low-protein, high-carbohydrate bedtime snack eaten about an hour before bedtime can help. Foods with large amounts of the amino acid l-tryptophan may help people sleep better also. These include eggs, cottage cheese, chicken, turkey, and cashews. Don't eat or drink too late at night. Try to have a supper early in the evening rather than late.

If one has had a bad night, it is important to not sleep in the next day. It will make it harder to get off to sleep the next night. In addition, don't nap during the day.

"A steady sleep pattern is good," Hall said. "Going to bed and waking up at the same time everyday."

Arizona students 'walk mile' in women's shoes

BY ANDREA LERCH
Arizona Daily Wildcat (U. Arizona)

TUCSON, Ariz. — University of Arizona men took the phrase "walk a mile in someone else's shoes" literally yesterday by walking a mile around the UA Mall in women's high heels.

"This is like torture," said Diego Lopez, a physiology freshman, as he squeezed his feet into a pair of light blue strappy wedges. "But I look hot."

The third annual Put Yourself in Her Shoes event was hosted by Residence Life's elMundo Diversity Initiatives to raise awareness about violence against women.

"We want people to understand and be aware that sexual assault against women is happening every day," said Katherine Outlaw, elMundo Diversity Initiatives program director and hall director of Manzanita-Mohave Residence Hall.

Walk a Mile in Her Shoes: The International Men's March to Stop Rape, Sexual Assault and Gender Violence was originally founded by Frank Baird in 2001 and many universities like the UA have adopted similar walks to raise awareness about sexual assault.

"I think this gives guys a different perspective," said Brad Rice, hall director for Villa del Puente Residence Hall. "It's placing the shoe on the other foot, so to speak."

Many guys stopped by on their way to class and took just one lap in women's shoes to show their support, while others, including Matt Hall, a mathematics and religious studies junior, walked the full eight laps of the mile.

"Last year, I felt like this was a good way to promote awareness, and I think it's just a good way to make people face this issue again," said Hall, who also participated last year. "My feet are sore. But it's OK."

Andrew Leonard, a mechanical engineering sophomore, said: "I've seen my girlfriend walking around in heels, and she says it's hard and I wanted to see what it's like. And also I think it's really important for people to take a stand against sexual violence. This is my fourth lap and my feet are starting to get used to the pain."

One in five women will be victims of an attempted or completed sexual assault during their lifetimes, according to the Southern Arizona Center Against Sexual Assault. However, fewer than one in two rapes and sexual assaults are ever reported.

"As I was walking around, I was thinking about women walking home at night and feeling afraid and it made me really consider what women go through," said Moe Naqvi, a physiological sciences junior. "I think a lot of guys don't look at women in the same way with regard to power or strength in society."

Granny finds condom inside Happy Meal

A grandmother was alarmed to find a condom in a happy meal gift pack bought for her 7-year-old granddaughter at a McDonald's restaurant in New Zealand, local media reported Thursday.

The condom was discovered Tuesday night in a bag that came with Maia Whittaker's meal, which her grandparents bought at a McDonald's outlet in the city of Wellington.

Grandpa Rowan Hutch told the Dominion Post newspaper it was lucky his wife was first to look inside the small sports bag that came with the meal.

She was aghast when she found the green condom, and its packet inside the bag, he said.

"I was pretty horrified really. The fact my granddaughter was going to look in the bag and find this thing. It would be difficult to explain, she's only seven," said Hutch.

The outlet quickly swapped the happy meal for a hamburger and pencil case, McDonald's is investigating the find.

Associated Press

MARTHA MITCHELL, STUDENT, CITIZEN, AND AND SECOND LIEUTENANT, U.S. ARMY.

STUDENT CITIZEN OFFICER

Graduate Loan-Free

The Army Health Professions Scholarship (HPSP), pays for Medical or Dental School. A few of the Many benefits are: 100% full Tuition, Over $1300.00 per month Stipend, and reimbursement for cost of required books and equipment. If you're in or about to enter a professional school find out how the Army HPSP can help you achieve your career goals.

Contact John Curran at 301 677 7455 or email john.curran@usarec.army.mil

U.S.ARMY

Students to continue seeking change

PHENOM from page 1

billion dollars, and Senate 732, House 1188, which would restore $400 million in funding over 7 years.

In addition, PHENOM has more far-reaching goals.

"Ultimately, we need to provide free higher public education for all qualified residents of Massachusetts," said Mishy Leiblum, UMass student trustee, in a speech to PHENOM activists.

After listening to speeches at a rally and delivering postcards, the PHENOM activists broke off into smaller groups to meet with state legislators. In some cases, they were only able to meet with the representatives' staff members, however Smethurst's group spoke with Representative David Flynn (8th Plymouth - D).

"We are all in these tough times together," said Rep. Flynn, expressing his support for the goals of PHENOM. However, he emphasized the difficulty of providing the necessary funding for public institutions, owing to shortages at the state and federal levels.

"Because of what's going on in Iraq, we all have to suffer," Flynn noted. This point was underscored throughout the day. Representative Kevin Murphy, addressing PHENOM activists in the afternoon, announced that the legislature would provide $54 million, including an additional $4.9 million for scholarships.

"Why only $4.9 million?" asked Charles Wheeler, an adjunct professor from Bunker Hill Community College.

"You are very lucky that you got a funding increase," replied Murphy. "Most state agencies were level-funded or cut."

Others responded differently to the state's economic situation. "Investment in public higher education is one of the best ways to combat the economic difficulties the Commonwealth faces," argued Provencher.

Most viewed the day of lobbying as a success.

"I think it was quite effective, especially when we talked directly [to the Representatives]," said Professor Smethurst. "You could watch their eyes widen," he added, describing the reaction of representatives to the postcards.

"This participation is critically important," said Steve Tocco, chairman of UMass' Board of Trustees, who was optimistic about the prospects for public higher education. "Moving forward, this glass is more than half-full," he said.

Despite the optimism, there were some signs of a divide between legislators and the activists. Rep. Murphy responded archly to a student who questioned the legislature's commitment to funding higher education. "I suggest you take a course in economics," he said. "You had a great year with this budget."

Nevertheless, there is a commitment to continuing the process of lobbying.

"You can't do just the grassroots organizing without also having a legislative presence and agenda," said Leiblum in an interview. "You have to do both."

Among the goals of the lobbyists at the State House was subsidizing campus construction by borrowing $3 billion, and restoring $400 million in funding over 7 years.

Dan Sullivan, staff director for Rep. Flynn, agreeing on the importance of lobbying, said, "If we don't hear from people we're not privy to what's most pertinent to people's minds."

The lobbying campaign has its work cut out. Senator Rosenberg (Amherst-D), one of the chief architects of PHENOM's legislative program, said that an additional $300 million was required to fund public higher education.

"PHENOM has to have an ongoing life," he said. "The yellow shirts [of organizers] and PHENOM have to be in this building at least once a year, forever."

International Socialist Org. sponsors lecture

LECTURE from page 1

"Marxism is coming back with a vengeance," he said.

Invited to speak by the UMass chapter of the International Socialist Organization, Smith explained that the first step toward change nationally and globally is for citizens to "organize our individual struggles into a mass revolutionary workers' party."

"Out of these fights, a new revolutionary alternative will be built," Smith said.

Acknowledging that a movement of the sort wouldn't become a reality overnight, Smith said that educating the public about the abuses of power prevalent in capitalist societies such as that of the United States, and how widely its effects are felt, would inspire people to organize to "pull together a broad left" that will be able to effect change in a collaborative manner.

According to Smith, one of the main ways those in power today keep their control over the public is by further confounding the seemingly inextricable links between actions made by our government and conditions we experience domestically.

"They want it to be disconnected, so that we can't understand the system," Smith said. "There is no way to separate the U.S. occupation of Iraq from the government's handling of Hurricane Katrina – there is a direct connection financially. The money spent on the war in Iraq is directly related to the lack of health insurance being experienced here in the U.S."

When confronted with the notion of changing the current system through a series of reforms, Smith clearly favored revolution. He said that our efforts "ultimately have to be revolutionary to be successful," because reform is an incremental, painstakingly slow process that often is quashed before real changes can be made.

He also made references to how many Europeans are experiencing lowered wages and benefits and increased work hours as their employers attempt to keep up with American productivity levels.

"You cannot have a socialist nation in a sea of capitalism because it will be forced to either die or turn into its opposite," he said, noting that opinion must be changed widely before results of socialist movements can be seen on a large scale.

A member of the International Socialist Organization, Smith is the Northeast region coordinator and works as a researcher for the Center for Economic Research and Social Change (CERSC), a non-profit organization that publishes the International Socialist Review, a bimonthly magazine on whose editorial board he currently serves and for which he has been writing for the past 10 years. Smith has also been with Socialist Worker, the weekly newspaper published by the International Socialist Organization, for 15 years, and many of his articles have been run in left-wing online publications such as Counterpunch, Znet, and Dissident Voice. Smith helped to found the Burlington Anti-War Coalition and also serves as secretary for the Vermont chapter of the National Writers Union. He was the Vermont campaign coordinator for Ralph Nader in the 2004 election.

The lecture was sponsored by International Socialist Organization, a Registered Student Organization on campus, and the International Socialist Review.

Alana Melanson can be reached at amelanso@student.umass.edu.

UMass considers text messaging in emergency cases

EMAIL from page 1

"We can't throw money into a system without knowing it will be efficient. We need to balance moving quickly and moving without errors."

As a generation consumed by advanced technology, many experts are finding ways to use technology including computers and cell phones as a means of reaching students.

UMass officials are considering the use of text messaging and automated voice messaging systems as a security approach. Blaguszewski said that a current study involving UMass students had shown that 97 percent of students have their own cell phone, and therefore is our most available resource for reaching students.

"We have to go where the audience is," said Blaguszewski. "Students have their cell phones with them regardless of where they are or what building they are in on campus."

Many members of the UMass community agree that cell phones are the best way to reach most students. "Two things that almost everyone has on campus are cell phones and instant messenger. So it seems like the most effective approach," said UMass junior Erin Fitzpatrick.

"We have pretty much no security on campus except for after 8 p.m., and this would help us during the day," she added.

Junior Emily Wadsworth is also in favor of a text messaging system.

"If they only use it during emergencies, it is not expensive, and almost everyone has access to a cell phone," said Wadsworth. "Not everyone checks their e-mail, and who would have access to it anyway, if there was an emergency?"

Concerns regarding the use of cell phones as a means of security include the fact that some students do not own cell phones, or have access to text messaging.

In an attempt to reach these students, public address systems could be used.

Mobilizing campus vehicles to spread emergency messages is also being considered.

"Currently, only police cars are equipped with these kinds of systems, and if there is an emergency, police are going to be needed at the scene as law enforcement," said Blaguszewski. "We need to employ other people on staff, who can be associated with the police, allowing them to have access to public address systems within other campus vehicles."

UMass officials will continue to work with experts as well as members of the UMass community to figure out which security systems will work most efficiently for the UMass campus.

Melissa D'Amico can be reached at mdamico@student.umass.edu.

Fire alarm wakes students at 4 a.m.

FIRE from page 1

spread to the upper floors through the ventilation system.

Students in the building were forced to evacuate to the Berkshire Dining Common. They remained in the dining hall from 4 a.m. to 7 a.m.

"The alarm woke me up around 4 a.m., so I went to my friend's room in another building and slept on the floor. But other people were stuck sitting in Berkshire for hours," said freshman Hallie Acton.

When asked what the cause of the fire was, Student Chief Shawn McKenna said, "Unfortunately the fire is still under investigation."

Alyssa Montalbano can be reached at amontalb@student.umass.edu.

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Fri 4/27/07 - Thurs 5/3/07
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Disturbia (PG-13) 1:25 4:25 7:30 9:50
Next (PG-13) 1:45 4:50 7:50 10:15
The Condemned (R) 12:55 4:15 7:35 10:10
The Invisible (PG-13) 1:40 4:30 7:45 10:20
Perfect Stranger (R) 12:50 4:10 7:00 9:45
Blades of Glory (PG-13) 1:30 4:30 7:40 10:00
Are We Done Yet? (PG) 1:20 4:45 7:30 9:55
Meet the Robinsons (PG-13) 1:00 4:00 7:05 9:35
Fracture (R) 1:05 4:30 7:10 10:05
Hot Fuzz (R) 1:15 4:05 7:15 10:30
Grindhouse (R) 1:00 6:00 9:55
Vacancy (R) 1:10 4:40 7:30 9:55
* no passes or supervouchers
• NO PASSES NO SUPERVOUCHERS
Times & showtimes may change • cinemark.com

To all Stockbridge School of Agriculture students, both freshmen and seniors:

Alumni of Alpha Tau Gamma, a Stockbridge fraternity on our Amherst campus since 1919 in the days of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, are cleaning the Mass. Highway Dept. visability site at Route 116 & Hadley (the west campus entrance). It is spring removal of winter road debris and the fertilizing of our 10,000 daffodils on Saturday, April 28, 2007 at 10:00 a.m.

All Stockbridge students are welcome to assist. We are ATG. Find out what we have done. There is much more that we can do. You can help. Find out about ATG and its dreams for Stockbridge and the future of the ATG/Stockbridge family. Thanks for reading this ad and for joining us.

ATG will provide beverages and munchies. Mass. Highway will provide orange vests, gloves and bags.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
is looking for new
Graphic Designers
for the Fall 2007 semester
Daily Advertising Designers
Nightly Production Supervisors
Advertising Production Manager
Major can apply. Previous design experience not necessary, but encouraged.
Visit our office in the Campus Center Basement 10am - 4pm for applications.

At Eastern Mountain Sports we're making it easy to lead a double life. Just show us your college student ID* and you'll get 15% OFF everything* in the store. Because every now and then you need to hit the trail instead of the books, right? Stop by or check us out online at www.ems.com to find a store near you.
eastern mountain sports
EASTERN MOUNTAIN SPORTS
Mountain Farms Mall
351 E Russell Street, Hadley, MA 01035

Everywomen's Center takes back the night

Photos courtesy of Michael Phillis

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

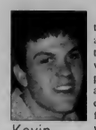
EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, APRIL 27, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Playing the blame game



Kevin Pascucci

In times of tragedy, it seems inevitable that the question of "why?" will arise. People have an inherent need to be able to apply a reason as to why something so horrible could happen. When the shootings took place at Columbine High School, a variety of different things were blamed for the event, be it rock music or video games. With the recent events at Virginia Tech, we are again left asking this question, with many people feeling that they have the answer. The problem is they tend to look in the wrong places, and end up pointing the finger of blame in the wrong direction.

In the wake of the Columbine shootings, numerous people and organized groups began to claim that they knew why Eric Harris and Dylan Klebold committed such a heinous act. Some blamed the killings on the influence of violent video games on the two teenagers, while others found it constructive to accuse musicians like Marilyn Manson for creating music that instilled violent tendencies in the teens. There were also others who looked at the fact that the two of them were severely picked on for most of their lives by their classmates, and it was these people that were closer to finding answers than anyone else.

Eight years later, we are left asking the same questions all over again, this time in the case of Seung-Hui Cho. Undoubtedly disturbed, his profile was immediately analyzed and picked apart by people all over the country in an attempt to understand him. It has been publicly noted that he was very quiet and anti-social, which seems to be a typical characteristic of people that have committed similar crimes in the past. After watching the video that he sent to NBC as well, it becomes abundantly clear that he had a problem with the people around him. Despite this, there are still those that feel there are other influences to be accredited with causing this tragedy.

High-profile attorney and anti-video game activist Jack Thompson went on Fox News days after the Virginia Tech killings and immediately said that violent video games are to blame for what happened. According to him, violent video games gave Cho a place to go and rehearse the shootings before he went out and did it.

Cho was obviously mentally unstable, and I highly doubt that it was video games that got him to that point. Perhaps video games even served as an outlet for his aggression and anger, but it's unlikely that his violent tendencies came from playing shooting games. Not everyone that plays such games goes out and does what Cho did, and it takes an initial disposition in someone's personality to be able to go out and commit the atrocity that he did.

It seems that everyone needs a face on a poster that they can point at and say, "This was your fault."

Similarly, others have begun to argue that violent movies were a contributing cause to the Virginia Tech shootings. Seeing that our film and television culture is saturated with violent images and content, it's obvious that they are to blame, right? Perhaps not. I don't think it's that easy, and to chalk up mental instability to movie content seems like an awfully big cop-out to me. Others even went so far as to blame the rock band Guns n' Roses for provoking him to kill. Again, just because he was a fan of their music does not directly connect them to his actions. He was probably drawn to their sometimes aggressive music by his personality, and his inner issues were likely deeply rooted before he even began listening to their music. Just as Marilyn Manson was blamed for Columbine, it seems that everyone needs a face on a poster that they can point at and say, "This was your fault."

With all of this being said, the question of who is actually to blame remains. At the end of the day, Seung-Hui Cho is to blame. No one told him to go out and do what he did except his inner demons. But where did these inner demons come from in the first place? Can they be traced back to his family or his classmates from his childhood that perhaps picked on him and were mean to him? Perhaps, but it seems counterproductive to run around in circles wondering.

Our culture is fascinated when it comes to looking at the psyche of a killer, usually for no other reason than curiosity. By knowing what makes someone tick, we feel that we can accurately say why exactly that person did what they did. The bottom line is that we will never fully understand what went through his head on April 16, and no amount of scapegoats is going to bring us to a definitive answer. Now is the time to mourn, and honor the lives of the victims that were lost rather than focusing all of our energy on a disturbed individual who made a tragic decision.

Kevin Pascucci can be reached at kpascucc@student.umass.edu.

An issue not to be bumbled

Brad Leibowitz

It was recently reported by London newspaper The Independent and The New York Times that bees across the globe are dying at alarming rates. This might not seem like anything to jump at, but I assure you, it is.

Albert Einstein once stated if bees (pollinating bees i.e. the honeybee) disappear from the face of the Earth, "man would have only four years of life left" to live. Why, you ask? Well, as the world's ecosystems go, there are a handful of different animal species which are the cornerstones of these ecosystems. Example: Insects.

Insects, although minute, number in the billions. As such, they feed a myriad of other bigger animals, who in turn feed other larger animals, so and so fourth. Thus, if the insect were to suddenly disappear, the natural order of their ecosystem would collapse - causing massive detriment to every other life form on the planet. This is where the bee comes into play.

The honey bee, although small, also numbers in the billions. Due to their massive numbers, honey bees have the responsibility of pollinating the plants of the world. As such, if the honey bee becomes extinct, effective pollination ceases; animals which eat plants die and the animals which eat those animals also die.

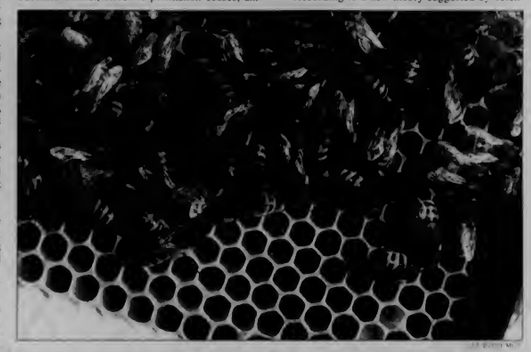
Now, this still might not seem like a big deal. You're probably thinking to yourself, "Well, so what? Some animals are going to die. That doesn't include mankind." Yes it does. Mankind is the top of the food chain, yet that food chain exists because of the actions of the tiniest animals which populate the planet. Stemming from the impact of these tiny animals are the actions of other bigger species, namely eating.

Bottom line: If the bees die, we die. And what is killing off bees in massive numbers, you ask? Us.

In short, if the bees die, the animals which eat pollinated plants die. If the plant eaters die, the animals which eat the plant eaters perish, and so on and so fourth. Eventually - before you know it, bigger mammals such as cows die. If the cows die, along with a multitude of other larger animals, mankind's food source is gone.

Bottom line: If the bees die, we die. And what is killing off bees in massive numbers you ask? Us.

According to a new theory suggested by scientists, "radiation given off by mobile phones and other hi-tech gadgets is a possible answer to...the abrupt disappearance of the bees that pollinate crops." Furthermore, the theory explains, "that radiation from mobile phones interferes with bees' navigation systems, preventing the famously home loving species from finding their way back to their hives." If they can't find a way back to their hives, they have no way to fend for themselves and they simply die.



A recent study suggests that our honey-producing, flower-pollinating friends might "bee" in trouble.

This process is called Colony Collapse Disorder (CCD) and it occurs when the majority of a hive simply disappears, leaving behind the queen and a few worker bees. As of right now the West Coast of the United States is thought to have lost 60 percent of its commercial bee population, with 70 percent missing on the East Coast. To go along with the trend, CCD has also spread to countries such as Germany, Switzerland, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Greece and possibly England.

Although more information is needed to solidify the theory, the statistics are frightening. Adding to cell phones killing massive amounts of bees, global warming is helping to destroy the honeybee as well.

The African Killer Bee (AKB), which is only good at what its name suggests, have been replacing the less aggressive honey bees in all parts of the world for nearly 10-15 years. They have been able to do this because where once the northern hemisphere was too cold for the AKB to survive in, due to increasing global temperatures, much of the northern hemisphere has become a suitable environment for AKB's to thrive and flourish in.

This being the case, with the deadly combination of cell phones and global warming, the bees which provide the basis for our ecosystems and our human diet are running out of buzz and are dropping, pun intended, like flies.

A few nights ago, Bill Maher stated, "If it solved global warming, would you give up the TV remote? If it comes down the cell phone vs. the bee, will we choose to literally blather ourselves to death? Will we continue to tell ourselves, we don't have to solve environmental problems, we can just adapt?"

Well folks, I don't know about you, but I for one am a proponent of the bee. Global warming in its scope is monumental, making us feel like there's nothing an individual can do. Regardless, if this scientific report holds true, we all can individually make the difference. Kill the cell phone to save the world.

So, will we literally blather ourselves to death for the sake of text messaging? Or will we change with the times to protect the future of this planet and our continued existence? I for one, hope so.

Brad Leibowitz can be reached at bleibowi@student.umass.edu.

The movie experience is moot

Cozi Orlen

Movie-goers, listen up. If you've spent your whole life going to the mainstream theaters, the theaters with great big concession stands and a good mix of blockbuster flicks and deep cinema, then you may have seen something new in the last couple of years. Or you might not have noticed.

There has been a change in the pre-movie experience. Perhaps you are stuck in traffic causing you to only be a few minutes early, or maybe you arrive 15 or 20 minutes before the show so that you can grab good seats. You know the ones. Whatever the case, you're sitting in the dark, forced to face forward and stare at that huge screen that you've missed so much. And what's going on during this? Well, let's talk about what used to be going on first.

The new film-clip advertisements that killed the social atmosphere have replaced it with an antisocial atmosphere.

There was always the music. That soft, relaxing music. The kind of music nobody would even think of listening to outside the theater. We could talk to our fellow cinephiles, take some guesses about how excellent or terrible the film would be, remember some reviews we read, or just talk about how our days went, and that light music would fade away into the background.

Then at some point, there were also pictures – those trivia games and ads for local businesses. They gave theater-goers something to look at, and who didn't like a good name-scramble? We would all guess at the answers, and occasionally we'd hear strangers call out guesses that were so completely wrong that we couldn't believe they'd figured out how to make the theater door open. Soon, everyone recognized all the answers, and those games faded away into the background too.

The relaxing music was soon cut. It got switched with something like a radio station for people who lived in the theater – the latest music, pop that was never controversial. It was a little pushier than the nice, light fare of the past, but it got repetitive eventually, too, and faded into the background. In this way, all the previously pushy aural and visual elements had become like ants, unnoticed under our feet.

The pre-movie atmosphere was a social one. If you wanted to chat up a date, reconnect with an old friend, or mock the elderly couple who had already fallen asleep and were snoring like THX, then that was your golden time. Even cell phone-talkers were safe. Then the lights would go out and the sacred previews would come on. Hardly anybody talked during previews, and even the whisperers risked icy glares that would freeze a mugger in their tracks.

This went on for quite a while. Life was good. But all good things must come to an end – even the pre-movie social atmosphere. Its end came in the form of "an interview with...," "a behind-the-scenes look at...," and eight of the most recent car commercials, Coke commercials, and television show commercials. Putting it simply, video killed the pre-movie social atmosphere. Or, to add some nuance, the combination of video and audio.

The new film-clip advertisements that killed the social atmosphere have replaced it with an antisocial atmosphere. How, you ask? Well, that pushy combination of video and audio packs a lot of force. The relentless audio, a combination of music and jingles, sound effects, and those familiar cloying movie star voices, drown out all attempts at conversation. It also grabs and pulls at the audience's attention. Nobody cared about old trivia pictures, but so many people love clips from upcoming films. They're impossible to ignore, and they make it so easy to ignore everybody around you.

And the sad truth is that – because the house lights are dimmed much earlier before going into the theater, will level the evil eye at you!

Movie theaters are providing patrons with fewer and fewer opportunities to socialize.

these new, pre-trailer ads have become part of the preview experience. The silence is oppressive from the moment you walk into the theater. It can't be fought, because, dear god, those icy glares! Even your own friends, people you were just talking to

So go to the movies with a friend, a family member, or go it alone, it won't matter; you'll be alone no matter what happens. The seats are still connected to each other, but the human connections are gone. If you want to talk, you'd better stick to mini-golf, find a coffee shop, go bowling, even – because the movie theater's no place for it.

Cozi Orlen is a UMass student

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

NORTH APARTMENT ENVY

I am writing this letter in response to Anthony Hall's editorial letter to the Collegian from Thursday, April 19, "Down; North Apts." As a student who is living in the North Apartments, I feel slighted to say the least about Mr. Hall's uninvited assumption that "...the best, the brightest, and those whose parents can fully foot the bill." My parents do not help me with my UMass fees; in fact I have a loan and will be paying it off myself. Second, I take offense to your unvoiced opinion that North is only available to those affluent students of the white upper middle class persuasion. My hallway has sixteen people on it and of the sixteen of us, more than half of us are of a different ethnicity than simply white. My hallway is white, black, yellow, brown, and a mix of all of those colors.

All of the arguments about race and class aside, since there are racist and classist attitudes in virtually every city, everyday, you really cannot argue that they are a new and thriving phenomenon at UMass. Lastly, your entire argument, while cleverly disguised as a tirade against the racist, classist, elitist faction of UMass is nothing more than sour grapes. You didn't make it into North Mr. Hall; don't make a mountain out of a molehill.

Sarah MacIntyre
North Resident, UMass Student

North
Residential Area
Undergraduate Apartments

HOLY SMOKES

One reason to re-legalize cannabis (kaneh bosm / marijuana) that doesn't get mentioned (Weeding Out The Facts, April 20, 2007), is because it would be biblically and spiritually correct since Christ God Our Father (The Ecologician) indicates that he created all the seed-bearing plants, saying they are all good, on literally the very first page (Genesis 1:11-12 and 29-30). The only biblical restriction placed on cannabis is that it is to be accepted with thankfulness (1 Timothy 4:1-5).

What kind of government desires to cage responsible adult members of its society for using what God says is good?

Stan White
Dillon, Colorado

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, APRIL 27, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Mos Def to slam Amherst College

Critic, artist performing tonight

BY MORGAN-ANN ROUSSEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Tomorrow night musical artist and poet Mos Def will be performing at LeFrak Gymnasium on the Amherst College campus as headliner of Amherst College's Annual Spring Concert.

Spawned from what many consider to be the "golden-age of hip-hop" of the early 90s, the Brooklyn-born artist's exposure to the old school hip-hop of New York helped nurture his burning talent. Def began rapping and acting at the early age of nine, and by the age of 21 he'd embark on a music career with his sister Ces and brother DCQ. It was 1994 when their group, Thermo Dynamics, released two singles and compiled a debut album called "Manifest Destiny." Unfortunately for the transitory group, their album wasn't released until ten years later.

It was at the age of 23 that Def began to expose himself as a major force in underground hip-hop, working with such alternative rap groups that are still popular like De La Soul as well as Babees and da Bush. His debut solo single, "Universal Magnetic," won Def underground acclaim; it instantly imprinted his art with a social conscience. Since then, Def's music has gone on to twist soul, jazz and funk with edgy Afro centric lyrics.

After collaborating with upcoming University of Massachusetts's Spring Concert headliner, Talib Kweli, the group Black Star was born. In 1998 the duo released a debut full-length album "Mos Def and Talib Kweli are Black Star," before Def released a solo album "Black on Both Sides" (1999). However, it was with Def and Kweli's album that created a controversial stir. "Mos Def and Talib Kweli are Black Star" was released in the wake of slayings of legendary rappers 2Pac and The Notorious B.I.G. Consequently the artists used their album to focus on what they believed to be an ever-growing deceitfulness and violence in the hip-hop world.

With the release of Def's 2004 solo album, "The New Danger," came with a landslide of praise and a Grammy Award nomination for the song "Ghetto Rock." His most recent solo album, "True Magic," emerged in December 2006 to a Grammy nomination for Best Rap Solo Performance for the song "Undeniable."

Def is also an outspoken critic in social and political issues, and was particularly active during the aftermath of 2005's tragic Hurricane Katrina. In September 2005 Def released a single from "True Magic" called "Katrina Clap" to criticize the government's weak response to the disaster. The artist's activism caused a clash with the law after performing the song on a flatbed truck outside of Radio City Music Hall without a permit. The song is now known as "Dollar Day," as it was later renamed for the album.

Adding to Def's artistically urban image is his position as host of HBO's award winning show "Def Poetry," which he's hosted since its launch six seasons ago. The series, also known as "Def Poetry Jam," is a production

See MOS DEF on page 7

Poet and musical artist Mos Def will be performing tomorrow night at Amherst College's Spring Concert. He uses his work not only for entertainment, but to make social statements as well.

Noho's Pearl Street hosts a double-header of rock 'n' roll

BY TIM MCCALL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Austin, Texas natives Spoon are coming to the Pearl Street Ballroom in Northampton tonight. Spoon may not be on mainstream radio or MTV, but the casual music listener has most likely heard of the band before. Not only have they toured extensively across the country numerous times, but their music is deeply rooted in movies and television shows with little label or publisher support.

Since their inception in 1994, the band has been all over the record label highway, starting on independent label Matador Records, then signing with major label Electra Records, was dropped by Electra and then signed to Merge Records.

Throughout the label game, the band has had their music played in numerous television shows and movies, without a publishing deal to their name. Vocalist/guitarist Britt Daniels and drummer Jim Eno, collectively own all the rights to the band's music. Without a publication deal the band has managed to have their music in television shows such as "The O.C." and "Friday Night Lights."

Daniels himself has also appeared on the television screen. While the band was on a break between tours, he appeared on an episode of the television show "Veronica Mars."

Spoon's latest big-screen appearance was in the movie Stranger Than Fiction. The soundtrack contained four Spoon songs and one acoustic song by Daniels' titled "The Book I Write." Daniels and collaborator Brian Reitzell collectively compiled the movie's soundtrack.

What makes Spoon accessible in movies and television is the style of the music they play. They play straight up rock 'n' roll with literary lyrics, sometimes basing their songs on material of bands from the past. Other times the band bases their music on complete fiction. This was more so the case with the band's latest album "Gimme Fiction" which was released in 2005.

Opening for Spoon tonight will be David Vandervelde. Vandervelde compliments Spoon, but has a distinct sound of his own, resulting in a show composed of two distinct bands and not one long, drowned out experience. Vandervelde mixes up his music with soft distortion and acoustic melodies much more then

See PEARL STREET on page 7

The band Spoon, above, is one of many acts that will be filling the Pearl Street Night Club's with amazing sounds tonight. They will be playing in the Ballroom while Dr. Dog entertains the Clubroom.

Dining Commons host guest chefs

Above from left to right, Tony Jung, Iliana de la Vega, and Willie Sng brought their individual foods to the UMass Dining Commons on Tuesday. Each DC was transformed with the food of a different guest chef. Berkshire was treated to the wares of de la Vega who owns the restaurant El Naranjo in Oaxaca, Mexico.

Sylvan Snack Bar offers tasty options

BY OLGA DESHCHENKO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As dinner time approaches on a rainy evening, students reluctantly give in to the demanding growls of their stomachs and set out on an unpleasant walk to the Dining Commons. However, the residents of McNamara have the option of avoiding getting wet and still enjoying a tasty meal by simply heading down to the basement of their building. The bright, soft blue hallway leads students to a small, but cozy eatery, The Sylvan Snack Bar.

In the corner next to the tables, a television set is showing "That 70s Show." For those seeking another form of entertainment while eating or waiting for food, a variety of magazines are also available. Like a successful fusion of a kitchen and a comfortable living room, the Sylvan Snack Bar provides a relaxing and pleasant atmosphere for its customers. And as for the food, to call it a "Snack Bar" is almost misleading; the multiplicity of food choices exceeds this eatery's modest name by far.

"We offer a variety of food including cold cut, veggie and breaded chicken subs, pizza bagels, garlic bread, pretzels, wraps, salads, ice cream and quesadillas," said Co-Manager Stephanie Hovagimian. "Although some of our food comes frozen and fully cooked, we prepare everything on site with our microwave, oven, crock pots and quesadilla makers."

Out of the eight student-run food businesses on campus, the Sylvan Snack Bar is the oldest, having opened its doors to customers in 1971. It is a non-profit business that is entirely student managed and operated. The Sylvan Snack Bar and other student-run businesses on campus have consultants, but they do not have co-manager status. The consultants create the budget and help with finance management, according to Hovagimian.

The Sylvan Snack Bar currently employs 12, full-time UMass undergraduate co-managers who find their involvement with the eatery to be worthwhile and rewarding.

"I love being part of a student-run business. It is such a great experience and has helped me better understand what running a business is all about," said Co-Manager Jenna Ranker. "We each have our roles that contribute to the wellness of the Sylvan Snack Bar, such as marketing committee and purchasing committee, and so much more. We have grown as a business and also as friends," she added.

The Sylvan Snack Bar is a favorite amongst many students who regularly step in for a delicious snack or meal. The employees of this student-run business not only try to satisfy their customers' taste buds, but also strive to offer them a fun place to hang out.

"We really value and try to create a friendly, community-based atmosphere at the Snack Bar," said Hovagimian. "We really want the Snack Bar to be a place where our peers can come not only to eat but to see their friends and relax at the end of the day."

The loyal fans of sandwiches and other snacks are gladly rewarded with promotions, such as the Sub Club Card and the soon arriving Frequent

See SYLVAN on page 7

Spoon, Dr. Dog share Pearl St.

PEARL STREET from page 6

Spoon.

Vandervelde hits the stage at 8:30 p.m. and Spoon should perform by 10 p.m. Tickets cost $21 at the door and $18.50 in advance.

PEARL STREET CLUBROOM –

The Iron Horse Entertainment Group (IHEG) is throwing a double header for music fans tonight. Besides Spoon and David Vandervelde, Pearl Street's Clubroom will be featuring the bands Dr. Dog, The Teeth, Hoots and Hellmouth.

Tickets to both shows are separate. To see most of tonight's act with one ticket, try Bonnaroo this summer.

With Spoon and Vandervelde catering more towards the indie/rock crowd, Dr. Dog and company will be more of a show for the hippie or '60s rock crowd.

Dr. Dog sounds if they were one of the original English bands to come over after the Beatles appeared on the Ed Sullivan Show. In fact they are not from England, they are from Philadelphia, Penn. and the band looks too young to even have seen the Beatles appear live.

At quick glance, their sound may be considered gimmicky, but after hearing any of their songs to completion, the band's sound is true and a breath of fresh air in the emo music world today.

The Teeth and Hoots and Hellmouth also hail from Pennsylvania, with their own twist of '60s rock 'n' roll. Hoots and Hellmouth sound more like a modern twist to the Byrds with a hint of Belle and Sebastian.

Both concerts this evening are going to be enjoyable in their own right. Rock 'n' roll is always alive and well in Northampton and tonight is no exception.

Tim McCall can be reached at tmccall@student.umass.edu.

Hungry McNamera dwellers take advantage of Snack Bar

SYLVAN from page 6

Buyer Card. A suggestion box also has its place next to the magazines where customers can leave a note with their thoughts on the Sylvan Snack Bar.

With the wide array of food items available, new customers might find themselves wondering what to try first. Co-Manager Tal Baron said this eatery is most known for its "world-famous" quesadillas.

"They [quesadillas] range in style from cheese, chicken, vegetable, barbeque or buffalo chicken so there is something for everyone," said Baron. "All quesadillas come with sour cream and salsa."

Always looking for ways to improve and expand the available meal options, the Sylvan Snack Bar is adding Pepperoni Pizza and a Meat Lovers' quesadilla to their menu. The Red-Sox themed Green Monster quesadilla, which will include lettuce, cucumbers, green peppers and jalapeños, is sure to be a hit once it finds its place on the menu.

The Sylvan Snack Bar does not just provide great food alternatives to its customers, but also allows a group of full-time undergraduate students to gain valuable experience in the art of running a small business.

"The major thing that sets us aside from other businesses," said Hovagimian, "is that we all have the same status: co-manager. We don't have a boss; instead, we have the dot-star committee which is responsible for holding co-managers accountable for failing to complete certain tasks or for going above and beyond what was expected of him or her," she explained.

Whether students head down to the Sylvan Snack Bar for the funky lighting, the entertaining reading material or the smell of appetizing food, customers are always welcome to hang out, eat or chat.

The Sylvan Snack Bar is open Sunday through Thursday from 7 p.m. to 1 a.m. It offers a YCMP menu and delivers to the Sylvan and North residential areas.

Olga Deshchenko can be reached at odeshche@student.umass.edu

Sylvan Snack Bar, located in McNamera, offers the students on campus tasty snacks and meals at a more convenient location.

'Iraq in Fragments' film reveals what's concealed in a country engulfed by war

BY MORGAN-ANN ROUSSEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Iraq in Fragments is touching and revealing as it illuminates life conditions of a country torn-apart by what people are considering more and more to be a needless war. The verite style documentary artistically condenses 300 hours of filming on location in Iraq into a sentimental portrait painted with the most striking of cinematography.

James Longley's second documentary feature embraces no scripted narration as it explores the lives of ordinary Iraqi civilians. Separated into three sections, the documentary features eloquent vignettes taken from the lives of 11-year-old Mohammed Haithem, shiite political religious movement of Moqtada Sadr and a family of Iraqi Kurds. Each sequence depicts these people's thoughts, beliefs and aspirations, not to mention their concerns, which all tie together to personally illustrate the larger issues plaguing Iraq today.

The documentary is simultaneously hard to watch and hard to look away from. The severed streets and musky buildings of a devastated Baghdad are among the first images of the film's 'fragmented' scenery. A collage of poverty, pain and injustice; this film succeeds in harnessing every aspect of human compassion.

In 2001 the director traveled to Palestine to embark on his first feature documentary Gaza Strip, which took an intimate gaze at the lives and views of Palestinians in Israeli-occupied Gaza. After being screened to a number of international film festivals (and in numerous U.S. theaters) Gaza Strip was smothered in critical acclaim. The filmmaker traveled to Iraq in 2002 to begin pre-production work for Fragments which was released in 2006.

Longley's documentary captures the experience of Iraq's children with the young, tousled Haithem. The child lives in the mixed Sheik Omar neighborhood in the heart of old Baghdad. With his father missing and his domineering boss verbally abusing him on a regular basis, Haithem's daily life seems unbearable. Caught between school (which he's several years behind in) and working exhaustedly in an auto-body shop for survival, Haithem's situation is indicative of the city itself. Like Baghdad, his budding life is torn between an idealized past, a dangerous present and an uncertain future.

The second part, filmed inside the Shiite political and religious movement of Moqtada Sadr, travels between Naseriyah and the holy city of Najaf. The film allows us to witness the inner workings of Iraqi local politics as tension mounts in the country.

The Sadr movement pushes for regional elections and enforces their interpretation of Islamic law, assuming control over the region. Armed Islamicists overtake open markets and imprison suspected alcohol merchants (the country practices prohibition). To American audiences, viewing authorities further impoverish the families of the detainees as they plead for mercy may strike us with bewilderment, but it's moments like these that the film urges consideration of cultural and religious contexts.

The picturesque landscape of rural Iraq is splashed onto the frame in the third part of Iraq. In this section, the documentary follows Iraqi Kurds as they assert their bid for independence and rebel against the past atrocities of Baghdad rule. The audience views this situation through the eyes of a family of brick makers and their childhood friends; all of whom reside on a farm south of Arbil, Iraq.

At the head of the family is an elderly farmer who reflects on his family, his God and his people while being mindful of the legacy they all share. Throughout this segment we hear voices of independence and nationalism which echo both secular and religious sentiments. Their outlooks reveal a community where politics and faith are both personal, public but more importantly are eternally intertwined.

The film crew's intimate connection to its civilian subjects is evident throughout the entire documentary. Trust is clearly there. The crew's three-year presence formed a solid root for their impressive inside-perspective of Iraq and its people.

Longley's cinematography glows with the dusk of an Iraqi sun, and the poetic rhythm of the film's mosaic scenes captures and releases the eye with each frame. This lively and breathtaking documentary is one not to be missed, so buy it, rent it, Netflix it — and prepare yourself for 94 riveting minutes of real-life in Iraq.

Morgan-ann Rousseau can be reached at Mrousseau@student.umass.edu

Mos Def plays AC

MOS DEF from page 6

of hip-hop legend Russell Simmons, and exhibits poetic spoken-word performances by well known and up-and-coming "slam" poets. In many ways, Def's lyrics are complimentary to the show's poetry, which often surround issues of social injustice and urban life. Kweli has appeared on the show, as well as other well-known musicians like Ani DiFranco, Kanye West, Erykah Badu and Lauryn Hill.

Doors for tomorrow's concert will open at 7 p.m., with opening acts Subliminal and Lyrispect performing at 8 p.m., and Mos Def following. The Amherst College Program Board organized the concert.

According to Amherst College Web site, tickets are free to all Amherst College Students, $15 for Five College students and $25 for the public. Tickets are still available and can be ordered at Ticketfusion.com or by calling (877)548-3237. They may also be picked up at Amherst College's Keefe Campus Center room 107A today between the hours of 9 a.m. and 4 p.m.

Morgan-ann Rousseau can be reached at Mrousseau@student.umass.edu.

SUMMER JOBS

Are you a creative, energetic, and nurturing person? Would you enjoy spending the summer in a beautiful natural environment working with children ages 5-13? YMCA Camp Norwich, just 20 minutes from Northampton, is now hiring Counselors, Lifeguards, and Instructors for Nature Study, Arts & Crafts, Athletics, Boating, Wood Working, Ceramics, and Music.

Call the Camp Registrar or stop by the HRYMCA for a camp brochure and camp staff application.

Hampshire Regional YMCA
286 Prospect Street
Northampton, MA 01060
413-584-7086 • www.hrymca.org

To all Stockbridge School of Agriculture students, both freshmen and seniors:

Alumni of Alpha Tau Gamma,
a Stockbridge fraternity on our Amherst campus since 1919
in the days of the Massachusetts Agricultural College,
are cleaning the Mass. Highway Dept. visability site
at Route 116 & Hadley
(the west campus entrance)
It is spring removal of winter road debris
and the fertilizing of our 10,000 daffodils
on Saturday, April 28, 2007 at 10:00 a.m.

All Stockbridge students are welcome to assist.
We are ATG. Find out what we have done.
There is much more that we can do. You can help.
Find out about ATG and its dreams for Stockbridge
and the future of the ATG/Stockbridge family.
Thanks for reading this ad and for joining us.

ATG will provide beverages and munchies.
Mass. Highway will provide orange vests, gloves and bags

Remember when you felt like this?
Find it again...
UMASS
Haigis Mall bus stop•10:00 am
Amherst College
Converse Hall bus stop
10:20 am
for the FREE
Sunday shuttle
to Dwight Chapel

Dwight Chapel
885 Federal Street Belchertown, MA 01007 • 413 256 8089
www.dwightchapel.org • Pastor Emmanuel Hogg
We're growing in Christ - come grow with us!

EXPERIENCE

Gained only through working at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian as a Fall 2007 semester Advertising Representative

If interested please pick up an application at the Daily Collegian Office located in the Campus Center basement or contact Alex Bender at ebender@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, APRIL 27, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Mos Def to slam Amherst College

Critic, artist performing tonight

BY MORGAN-ANN ROUSSEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Tomorrow night musical artist and poet Mos Def will be performing at LeFrak Gymnasium on the Amherst College campus as headliner of Amherst College's Annual Spring Concert.

Spawned from what many consider to be the "golden-age of hip-hop" of the early 90s, the Brooklyn-born artist's exposure to the old school hip-hop of New York helped nurture his burning talent. Def began rapping and acting at the early age of nine, and by the age of 21 he'd embark on a music career with his sister Ces and brother DCQ. It was 1994 when their group, Thermo Dynamics, released two singles and compiled a debut album called "Manifest Destiny." Unfortunately for the transitory group, their album wasn't released until ten years later.

It was at the age of 23 that Def began to expose himself as a major force in underground hip-hop, working with such alternative rap groups that are still popular like De La Soul as well as Babees and da Bush. His debut solo single, "Universal Magnetic," won Def underground acclaim; it instantly imprinted his art with a social conscience. Since then, Def's music has gone on to twist soul, jazz and funk with edgy Afro centric lyrics.

After collaborating with upcoming University of Massachusetts's Spring Concert headliner, Talib Kweli, the group Black Star was born. In 1998 the duo released a debut full-length album "Mos Def and Talib Kweli are Black Star," before Def released a solo album "Black on Both Sides" (1999). However, it was with Def and Kweli's album that created a controversial stir. "Mos Def and Talib Kweli are Black Star" was released in the wake of slayings of legendary rappers 2Pac and The Notorious B.I.G. Consequently the artists used their album to focus on what they believed to be an ever-growing deceitfulness and violence in the hip-hop world.

With the release of Def's 2004 solo album, "The New Danger," came with a landslide of praise and a Grammy Award nomination for the song "Ghetto Rock." His most recent solo album, "True Magic," emerged in December 2006 to a Grammy nomination for Best Rap Solo Performance for the song "Undeniable."

Def is also an outspoken critic in social and political issues, and was particularly active during the aftermath of 2005's tragic Hurricane Katrina. In September 2005 Def released a single from "True Magic" called "Katrina Clap" to criticize the government's weak response to the disaster. The artist's activism caused a clash with the law after performing the song on a flatbed truck outside of Radio City Music Hall without a permit. The song is now known as "Dollar Day," as it was later renamed for the album.

Adding to Def's artistically urban image is his position as host of HBO's award winning show "Def Poetry," which he's hosted since its launch six seasons ago. The series, also known as "Def Poetry Jam," is a production

See MOS DEF on page 7

Poet and musical artist Mos Def will be performing tomorrow night at Amherst College's Spring Concert. He uses his work not only for entertainment, but to make social statements as well.

Noho's Pearl Street hosts a double-header of rock 'n' roll

BY TIM MCCALL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Austin, Texas natives Spoon are coming to the Pearl Street Ballroom in Northampton tonight. Spoon may not be on mainstream radio or MTV, but the casual music listener has most likely heard of the band before. Not only have they toured extensively across the country numerous times, but their music is deeply rooted in movies and television shows with little label or publisher support.

Since their inception in 1994, the band has been all over the record label highway, starting on independent label Matador Records, then signing with major label Electra Records, was dropped by Electra and then signed to Merge Records.

Throughout the label game, the band has had their music played in numerous television shows and movies, without a publishing deal to their name. Vocalist/guitarist Britt Daniels and drummer Jim Eno, collectively own all the rights to the band's music. Without a publication deal the band has managed to have their music in television shows such as "The O.C." and "Friday Night Lights."

Daniels himself has also appeared on the television screen. While the band was on a break between tours, he appeared on an episode of the television show "Veronica Mars."

Spoon's latest big-screen appearance was in the movie Stranger Than Fiction. The soundtrack contained four Spoon songs and one acoustic song by Daniels' titled "The Book I Write." Daniels and collaborator Brian Reitzell collectively compiled the movie's soundtrack.

What makes Spoon accessible in movies and television is the style of the music they play. They play straight up rock 'n' roll with literary lyrics, sometimes basing their songs on material of bands from the past. Other times the band bases their music on complete fiction. This was more so the case with the band's latest album "Gimme Fiction" which was released in 2005.

Opening for Spoon tonight will be David Vandervelde. Vandervelde compliments Spoon, but has a distinct sound of his own, resulting in a show composed of two distinct bands and not one long, drowned out experience. Vandervelde mixes up his music with soft distortion and acoustic melodies much more then

See PEARL STREET on page 7

The band Spoon, above, is one of many acts that will be filling the Pearl Street Night Club with amazing sounds tonight. They will be playing in the Ballroom while Dr. Dog entertains the Clubroom.

Dining Commons host guest chefs

Above from left to right, Tony Jung, Iliana de la Vega, and Willie Sng brought their individual foods to the UMass Dining Commons on Tuesday. Each DC was transformed with the food of a different guest chef. Berkshire was treated to the wares of de la Vega who owns the restuarant El Naranjo in Oaxaca, Mexico.

Sylvan Snack Bar offers tasty options

BY OLGA DESHCHENKO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As dinner time approaches on a rainy evening, students reluctantly give in to the demanding growls of their stomachs and set out on an unpleasant walk to the Dining Commons. However, the residents of McNamara have the option of avoiding getting wet and still enjoying a tasty meal by simply heading down to the basement of their building. The bright, soft blue hallway leads students to a small, but cozy eatery, The Sylvan Snack Bar.

In the corner next to the tables, a television set is showing "That 70s Show." For those seeking another form of entertainment while eating or waiting for food, a variety of magazines are also available. Like a successful fusion of a kitchen and a comfortable living room, the Sylvan Snack Bar provides a relaxing and pleasant atmosphere for its customers. And as for the food, to call it a "Snack Bar" is almost misleading: the multiplicity of food choices exceeds this eatery's modest name by far.

"We offer a variety of food including cold cut, veggie and breaded chicken subs, pizza bagels, garlic bread, pretzels, wraps, salads, ice cream and quesadillas," said Co-Manager Stephanie Hovagimian. "Although some of our food comes frozen and fully cooked, we prepare everything on site with our microwave, oven, crock pots and quesadilla makers."

Out of the eight student-run food businesses on campus, the Sylvan Snack Bar is the oldest, having opened its doors to customers in 1971. It is a non-profit business that is entirely student managed and operated. The Sylvan Snack Bar and other student-run businesses on campus have consultants, but they do not have co-manager status. The consultants create the budget and help with finance management, according to Hovagimian.

The Sylvan Snack Bar currently employs 12, full-time UMass undergraduate co-managers who find their involvement with the eatery to be worthwhile and rewarding.

"I love being part of a student-run business. It is such a great experience and has helped me better understand what running a business is all about," said Co-Manager Jenna Ranker. "We each have our roles that contribute to the wellness of the Sylvan Snack Bar, such as marketing committee and purchasing committee, and so much more. We have grown as a business and also as friends," she added.

The Sylvan Snack Bar is a favorite amongst many students who regularly step in for a delicious snack or meal. The employees of this student-run business not only try to satisfy their customers' taste buds, but also strive to offer them a fun place to hang out.

"We really value and try to create a friendly, community-based atmosphere at the Snack Bar," said Hovagimian. "We really want the Snack Bar to be a place where our peers can come not only to eat but to see their friends and relax at the end of the day."

The loyal fans of sandwiches and other snacks are gladly rewarded with promotions, such as the Sub Club Card and the soon arriving Frequent

See SYLVAN on page 7

Spoon, Dr. Dog share Pearl St.

PEARL STREET from page 6

Spoon.

Vandervelde hits the stage at 8:30 p.m. and Spoon should perform by 10 p.m. Tickets cost $21 at the door and $18.50 in advance.

PEARL STREET CLUBROOM –

The Iron Horse Entertainment Group (IHEG) is throwing a double header for music fans tonight. Besides Spoon and David Vandervelde, Pearl Street's Clubroom will be featuring the bands Dr. Dog, The Teeth, Hoots and Hellmouth.

Tickets to both shows are separate. To see most of tonight's act with one ticket, try Bonnaroo this summer.

With Spoon and Vandervelde catering more towards the indie/rock crowd, Dr. Dog and company will be more of a show for the hippie or '60s rock crowd.

Dr. Dog sounds if they were one of the original English bands to come over after the Beatles appeared on the Ed Sullivan Show. In fact they are not from England, they are from Philadelphia, Penn. and the band looks too young to even have seen the Beatles appear live.

At quick glance, their sound may be considered gimmicky, but after hearing any of their songs to completion, the band's sound is true and a breath of fresh air in the emo music world today.

The Teeth and Hoots and Hellmouth also hail from Pennsylvania, with their own twist of '60s rock 'n' roll. Hoots and Hellmouth sound more like a modern twist to the Byrds with a hint of Belle and Sebastian.

Both concerts this evening are going to be enjoyable in their own right. Rock 'n' roll is always alive and well in Northampton and tonight is no exception.

Tim McCall can be reached at tmccall@student.umass.edu

Hungry McNamera dwellers take advantage of Snack Bar

SYLVAN from page 6

Buyer Card. A suggestion box also has its place next to the magazines where customers can leave a note with their thoughts on the Sylvan Snack Bar.

With the wide array of food items available, new customers might find themselves wondering what to try first. Co-Manager Tal Baron said this eatery is most known for its "world-famous" quesadillas.

"They [quesadillas] range in style from cheese, chicken, vegetable, barbeque or buffalo chicken so there is something for everyone," said Baron. "All quesadillas come with sour cream and salsa."

Always looking for ways to improve and expand the available meal options, the Sylvan Snack Bar is adding Pepperoni Pizza and a Meat Lovers' quesadilla to their menu. The Red-Sox themed Green Monster quesadilla, which will include lettuce, cucumbers, green peppers and jalapeños, is sure to be a hit once it finds its place on the menu.

The Sylvan Snack Bar does not just provide great food alternatives to its customers, but also allows a group of full-time undergraduate students to gain valuable experience in the art of running a small business.

"The major thing that sets us aside from other businesses," said Hovagimian, "is that we all have the same status: co-manager. We don't have a boss; instead, we have the dot-star committee which is responsible for holding co-managers accountable for failing to complete certain tasks or for going above and beyond what was expected of him or her," she explained.

Whether students head down to the Sylvan Snack Bar for the funky lighting, the entertaining reading material or the smell of appetizing food, customers are always welcome to hang out, eat or chat.

The Sylvan Snack Bar is open Sunday through Thursday from 7 p.m. to 1 a.m. It offers a YCMP menu and delivers to the Sylvan and North residential areas.

Olga Deshchenko can be reached at odeshche@student.umass.edu

Sylvan Snack Bar, located in McNamera, offers the students on campus tasty snacks and meals at a more convenient location.

'Iraq in Fragments' film reveals what's concealed in a country engulfed by war

BY MORGAN-ANN ROUSSEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Iraq in Fragments is touching and revealing as it illuminates life conditions of a country torn-apart by what people are considering more and more to be a needless war. The verité style documentary artistically condenses 300 hours of filming on location in Iraq into a sentimental portrait painted with the most striking of cinematography.

James Longley's second documentary feature embraces no scripted narration as it explores the lives of ordinary Iraqi civilians. Separated into three sections, the documentary features eloquent vignettes taken from the lives of 11-year-old Mohammed Haithem, shiite political-religious movement of Moqtada Sadr and a family of Iraqi Kurds. Each sequence depicts these people's thoughts, beliefs and aspirations, not to mention their concerns, which all tie together to personally illustrate the larger issues plaguing Iraq today.

The documentary is simultaneously hard to watch and hard to look away from. The severed streets and musky buildings of a devastated Baghdad are among the first images of the film's "fragmented" scenery. A collage of poverty, pain and injustice; this film succeeds in harnessing every aspect of human compassion.

In 2001 the director traveled to Palestine to embark on his first feature documentary Gaza Strip, which took an intimate gaze at the lives and views of Palestinians in Israeli-occupied Gaza. After being screened to a number of international film festivals (and in numerous U.S. theaters) Gaza Strip was smothered in critical acclaim. The filmmaker traveled to Iraq in 2002 to begin pre-production work for Fragments which was released in 2006.

Longley's documentary captures the experience of Iraq's children with the young, tousled Haithem. The child lives in the mixed Sheik Omar neighborhood in the heart of old Baghdad. With his father missing and his domineering boss verbally abusing him on a regular basis, Haithem's daily life seems unbearable. Caught between school (which he's several years behind in) and working exhaustedly in an auto-body shop for survival, Haithem's situation is indicative of the city itself. Like Baghdad, his budding life is torn between an idealized past, a dangerous present and an uncertain future.

The second part, filmed inside the Shiite political and religious movement of Moqtada Sadr, travels between Naseriyah and the holy city of Najaf. The film allows us to witness the inner workings of Iraqi local politics as tension mounts in the country.

The Sadr movement pushes for regional elections and enforces their interpretation of Islamic law, assuming control over the region. Armed Islamicists overtake open markets and imprison suspected alcohol merchants (the country practices prohibition). To American audiences, viewing authorities further impoverish the families of the detainees as they plead for mercy may strike us with bewilderment, but it's moments like these that the film urges consideration of cultural and religious contexts.

The picturesque landscape of rural Iraq is splashed onto the frame in the third part of Iraq. In this section, the documentary follows Iraqi Kurds as they assert their bid for independence and rebel against the past atrocities of Baghdad rule. The audience views this situation through the eyes of a family of brick makers and their childhood friends; all of whom reside on a farm south of Arbil, Iraq.

At the head of the family is an elderly farmer who reflects on his family, his God and his people while being mindful of the legacy they all share. Throughout this segment we hear voices of independence and nationalism which echo both secular and religious sentiments. Their outlooks reveal a community where politics and faith are both personal, public but more importantly are eternally intertwined.

The film crew's intimate connection to its civilian subjects is evident throughout the entire documentary. Trust is clearly there. The crew's three-year presence formed a solid root for their impressive inside-perspective of Iraq and its people.

Longley's cinematography glows with the dusk of an Iraqi sun, and the poetic rhythm of the film's mosaic scenes captures and releases the eye with each frame. This lively and breathtaking documentary is one not to be missed, so buy it, rent it, Netflix it – and prepare yourself for 94 riveting minutes of real-life in Iraq.

Morgan-ann Rousseau can be reached at Mrousseau@student.umass.edu.

Mos Def plays AC

MOS DEF from page 6

of hip-hop legend Russell Simmons, and exhibits poetic spoken-word performances by well known and up-and-coming "slam" poets. In many ways, Def's lyrics are complimentary to the show's poetry, which often surround issues of social injustice and urban life. Kweli has appeared on the show, as well as other well-known musicians like Ani DiFranco, Kanye West, Erykah Badu and Lauryn Hill.

Doors for tomorrow's concert will open at 7 p.m., with opening acts Subliminal and Lyrispect performing at 8 p.m., and Mos Def following. The Amherst College Program Board organized the concert.

According to Amherst College Web site, tickets are free to all Amherst College students, $15 for Five College students and $25 for the public. Tickets are still available and can be ordered at Ticketfusion.com or by calling (877)548-3237. They may also be picked up at Amherst College's Keefe Campus Center room 107A today between the hours of 9 a.m. and 4 p.m.

Morgan-ann Rousseau can be reached at Mrousseau@student.umass.edu.

SUMMER JOBS

Are you a creative, energetic, and nurturing person? Would you enjoy spending the summer in a beautiful natural environment working with children ages 5-13? YMCA Camp Norwich, just 20 minutes from Northampton, is now hiring Counselors, Lifeguards, and Instructors for Nature Study, Arts & Crafts, Athletics, Boating, Wood Working, Ceramics, and Music.

Call the Camp Registrar or stop by the HRYMCA for a camp brochure and camp staff application.

Hampshire Regional YMCA
286 Prospect Street
Northampton, MA 01060
413-584-7086 • www.hrymca.org

To all Stockbridge School of Agriculture students, both freshmen and seniors:

Alumni of Alpha Tau Gamma,
a Stockbridge fraternity on our Amherst campus since 1919
in the days of the Massachusetts Agricultural College,
are cleaning the Mass. Highway Dept. visability site
at Route 116 & Hadley
(the west campus entrance).
It is spring removal of winter road debris
and the fertilizing of our 10,000 daffodils
on Saturday, April 28, 2007 at 10:00 a.m.

All Stockbridge students are welcome to assist.
We are ATG. Find out what we have done.
There is much more that we can do. You can help.
Find out about ATG and its dreams for Stockbridge
and the future of the ATG/Stockbridge family
Thanks for reading this ad and for joining us.

ATG will provide beverages and munchies.
Mass. Highway will provide orange vests, gloves and bags

Remember when you felt like this?

Find it again...

UMASS
Haigis Mall bus stop•10:00 am
Amherst College
Converse Hall bus stop
10:20 am
for the FREE
Sunday shuttle
to Dwight Chapel

Dwight Chapel
885 Federal Street Belchertown, MA 01007 • 413 256 8099
www.dwightchapel.org • Prairie Immanuel Liturgy
We're growing in Christ - come grow with us!

EXPERIENCE

Gained only through working at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian as a Fall 2007 semester Advertising Representative

If interested please pick up an application at the Daily Collegian Office located in the Campus Center basement or contact Alex Ben[illegible] at ebender@student.umass.edu

1. dress
2. sunglasses
3. headband
4. bag
5. wedge

ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Cullington sets new UMass RBI record

CULLINGTON from page 10

Terriers left fielder Shayne Lotito paced back to the warning track, then to the wall – keeping her eye on the ball the whole time. Lotito leveraged against the wall and jumped for Cullington's hit. When Lotito's feet hit the ground, the ball was not in her glove – it had sailed mere inches from her reach, and Cullington picked up her second homer of the game (and 12th of the year) on the long pop up.

The Minutewomen exploded off the bench to congratulate their teammate who had just finished her day with a 3-for-4, seven RBI performance.

"I was really surprised. I thought it went a mile in the air. [The wind] probably did [help it]," Cullington said. "It have almost never been so happy."

Senior captain Molinari had a first-class seat for both round-trippers and she says it's great to see one of next year's leaders step up.

"She has been very solid for us this year. She's kept herself in a very good place mentally and she likes being in that spot with the pressure on," Molinari said. "I'm just glad she's in that place right now and I hope she stays there as long as she can."

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

Minutewomen defeat Terriers

SOFTBALL from page 10

cial for the Minutewomen to get going offensively.

"Everyone just goes with the excitement," Cullington said. "Our gears were not in sync yet, and [the fourth inning] helped us get in sync. When the energy happens like that, everything just clicks."

The Minutewomen hit Currier hard early on, but a number of line-outs and fly balls to the warning track stagnated the offense in the first three innings.

"We sent some good balls out there and didn't have anything to show for them," Sortino said. "We had a lot of line drives that went right at people, but I was pretty pleased with our patience at the plate."

The Terriers got one back in the top of the fifth to close the gap to 6-3, when Shayne Lolito sent a line drive into right field. Salato misplayed the ball, and it sailed over her head to the wall, scoring Chiya Louie from second base.

Then the Minutewomen broke it wide open. The bottom of the sixth looks a lot like the fourth on the stat sheet, with Cullington once again homering to left.

Morin and Molinari got into scoring position with one out. Cullington then launched a massive shot just foul down the third base line on a 2-1 pitch. The ball left the entire complex, drawing gasps from the crowd, who thought the junior had hit her 12th home run of the season.

She did not disappoint, however. On the next pitch, she hit a towering shot to left field that – with plenty of help from a strong wind blowing out to left – fell just behind the fence. Cullington is now two long balls short of KJ Kelley's single-season record of 14.

Rachel Moeller replaced Currier in the circle for BU after the home run, but faired no better against the Maroon and White bats. Lauren Proctor – the first batter Moeller faced – blasted a double off the wall in the deep center field.

After another passed ball moved Proctor to third, Whitney Mollica drove her in with a single to right field, making the score 10-3.

The Terriers grabbed one more run in the top of the seventh, but Balschmiter kept a bases-loaded jam from getting out of hand, picking up the win.

Next on the schedule for UMass is George Washington, which comes to town on Sunday for two games against the Minutewomen.

"I think they're going to be tough," Sortino said. "They've got a good coaching staff. I thought they were good last year. They're in the middle of the pack, so they've got to come up here do something."

Morin was 2-for-3 on the day with two singles and two runs scored. BU's Rachel Hebert went 4-for-4 with four singles and an RBI . . . Don Zimmer, former Red Sox manager and grandfather of UMass' Whitney Mollica, was in attendance for yesterday's game.

Jeremy Rice can be reach at Jeremy@student.umass.edu.

UM plans to end on positive note

W. LACROSSE from page 10

as they play against one of the A-10's best offenses. The Explorers average over 10 goals per game and have two of the league's top scorers.

Despite excelling on offense, the team has struggled on the defensive side of the ball. The Explorers allow an average of 13.61 goals per game – far and away the worst figure in the league.

La Salle's atrocious defensive play has certainly caught up to the team and is the primary factor for its current seven-game losing streak. In addition to La Salle's winless conference season, the Explorers have not won a game since March 22 – a non-conference victory against Lafayette (1-15).

The team has also surrendered more than 13 goals on five occasions this season, including a season-high 20 against conference rival George Washington (8-6, 4-1 A-10) two weeks ago.

Even with a quick turnover between games, coach Venechanos is not worried that playing teams with conflicting styles will give her players problems.

"We've been running the gamut this season," she said. "We've played against high transition teams, like Northwestern, and also teams like Dartmouth that like to slow the ball down, so I think we're ready for any style of play."

Two facets of the game that will play an equal role of importance in each contest are draw controls and turnovers.

In their most recent win, the Minutewomen committed only 15 turnovers. UMass also won 11 of 18 draw controls in the 10-6 victory over Duquesne (7-8, 2-3 A-10). With a few exceptions, the Minutewomen have come out on top when they take advantage of their possessions and maximize the amount of time spent on offense.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY / MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior midfielder Samantha Sepulveda has scored 10 goals and tallied three assists in her final season. Her final game is Sunday against La Salle.

Seniors set to say emotional goodbye

Sepulveda, McCarthy and Shapiro bid adieu to UMass

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

This weekend the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will close out another season. For the senior trio of Samantha Sepulveda, Lauren McCarthy and Erica Shapiro, it will be their last.

Sunday afternoon's game is Senior Day and the seniors want to end their UMass career with a win. UMass coach Alexis Venechanos will miss each senior for the leadership they show on and off the field.

"I think all three of them work together well because it brings something else to the program," Venechanos said. "I think each of them has improved since the beginning and they have all been getting better."

Making steps forward this season is the fifth-year goalkeeper McCarthy. She has had the longest tenure of all the players. McCarthy is a four-year starter and ranks second all-time in career saves with 430 saves.

"She's been through a lot personally with her injuries," Venechanos said. "She's seen the development of the program since day one."

McCarthy went through five knee injuries at different times through her career. The injuries have not kept her off the field as she has played in 55 career games.

"I had to sit all fall, it was the first time I had to sit and watch," McCarthy said.

She said it was one of her worst experiences because she felt that it was a setback for her. She also added that it was one of the best things that happened because she was able to see everything from a different perspective.

"I think she brings that mature sense to the team and she has tremendous respect for the program," Venechanos said. "I think a lot of the girls definitely look up to her on and off the field."

Being around for five years, McCarthy will find herself helping the coaching staff with scouting reports and instructing the team in practices. McCarthy started the year as one of the most experienced players on the team and when UMass hired Venechanos she knew she would learn a lot from the former Maryland goalkeeper.

"Having a goalie coach is amazing," McCarthy said. "I didn't really have one at all. Up until last year we did have Jen Nardi (Nardi played goalie for UMass from 1998 to 2001, and is the all-time leader in career saves with 600) come back and she worked with us a little bit, but I've never had one on one coaching goalie sessions every single day working on different things."

The trio will miss their teammates because they have been bonding and hanging out with the same people for almost four years. Day in and day out they practiced and competed.

"You get so used to having 25 girls around, [with] your friends around you every single day," McCarthy said.

McCarthy will continue to coach at lacrosse camps and is starting a new job after graduation in the Washington D.C. area for the Sam Adams Boston Beer Company.

Shapiro has battled back after tearing her ACL last year. The last two games Shapiro played the midfield for the first time in her career. She previously played three and half years as one of the team's top defensemen.

Shapiro has been a model student athlete for the team. Last season she earned a spot on the Atlantic 10 Academic All-Conference Team.

"I'm going to miss being with my best friends everyday at practice or games and seeing them all the time," Shapiro said. "I'm going to miss the competition of games and the excitement of it."

"She brings a lot of passion to the game," Venechanos said. "She definitely wears UMass on her sleeves everyday [and] she does anything for the team."

She scored her first career goal last week against St. Bonaventure. She also recorded a career high with two assists against Duquesne.

"I've had a lot of fun playing midfield because I did score my first goal the other day," Shapiro said. "It's new, once you get to senior year you've been doing it for a long time so things become routine and it's nice to still be learning as you go out."

Shapiro is going to work in a financial development program in North Reading.

Samantha Sepulveda is one of the fastest players on the team. Known to her teammates as Sammy, she is one of the vocal leaders on the team. At midfield Sepulveda ranks third all-time in career draw controls with 76 and is seventh all-time in career ground balls with 92.

As a freshman she was just an average student, but she has progressed as a senior by posting the highest GPA on team.

"She's a spark plug, [she] brings a lot to our team that we don't have, she's really intense, she's fast," Venechanos said about Sepulveda.

Her biggest accomplishment in her career at UMass is the excitement of winning big games. This season, the best win for her was at Boston College. The Minutewomen won in overtime, 10-9. Sepulveda picked up four groundballs in the victory.

Even with all the exciting wins and the competitive games, Sepulveda will miss her teammates the most.

"[I will] definitely [miss] the team and definitely the fact that you go out there every single day and forget about school, forget about every problem, you just step on that field and it's just lacrosse and your teammates around, that's it, that's the only thing that matters," she said.

After graduation Sepulveda is going to take some time off and travel. In September she is going to have a job in business management in New York. She will continue to work in lacrosse, coaching at camps in the summer. She still plays lacrosse in a pick-up games.

The senior trio wants to win the next two games, but not just to win for themselves, they want the success to carry over for next year.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY / MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior defender Erica Shapiro will play the final two games of her UMass career this weekend. She has one goal and four assists on the season.

Men and women host final meet of 2007

TRACK from page 10

jumping crew has done a nice job, especially James Godinho, who is competing in both the long jump and the high jump this week, despite being a 400-meter specialist.

The Minutemen have a solid crew of long distance runners. Sophomore Jesse Regnier finished first in the 5,000-meter run last week. He was the only UMass runner to earn a first place finish.

Freshman Ryan DiOrio set a personal best in the 1,500-meter run. His time was also the fastest time in that event since the 2005 outdoor season.

The Minutewomen look to continue the improvement they have made since the start of the season. The season started off shaky for the Minutewomen, as they finished in fourth place out of five teams in their season opener, and sixth out of nine in the second meet of the season.

According to women's coach Julie LaFreniere, the Minutewomen have been hampered all season long by a string of injuries. Currently they have seven scholarship athletes who are unable to compete this year.

Still, LaFreniere believes the team has shown improvement since the early season. She hopes the fourth place finish of eight teams at the UConn Invitational last week is a sign the team is starting to gel.

"Everyone is stepping up their performances and we are really pulling together," LaFreniere said. "We are trying to get everyone to take the next step, because after this will be the Atlantic 10 meet."

Distance runner Christina DeRosa has been a consistent star for the Minutewomen this season. She has been the top point scorer for the UMass team this season. She has never finished worse than second in the 5k this season.

Usually she competes in both the 1,500- and 5,000-meter events, but this week LaFreniere plans to have her run only the 5k, in an effort to preserve her for the A-10 Championships.

Mary Serdakowski showed significant improvement last week. She placed fifth in the 100-meter hurdles last week, running her fastest time of the season so far. Serdakowski also finished sixth in the 400-meter hurdles, although this was the first time she ran the event in college.

LaFreniere feels the improvements have come largely thanks to a renewed determination in practice.

"I have been very pleased the last the two weeks of practices that we've had with them," LaFreniere said. "And the seriousness and determination they have come to practice with."

The weather report for Saturday is a high of 67 degrees with a 30 percent chance of rain. Both coaches are hoping the weather will be sunny Saturday, believing they deserve a nice day for the final home meet of the season.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

LIVESTOCK CLASS
Annual event put on by the Animal Science department

WHEN: SATURDAY, APRIL 28
TIME: 8-5 PM
WHERE: UMASS HADLEY FARM

ARE YOU UP WITH THE SUN?
Participate in a 21 day sleep research study at Brigham & Women's Hospital!
- Like to wake up early
- Healthy Men and Women
- Not on medications (some birth control okay)
- 18 – 30 years old

Receive up to $4,375
Contact Alana at (617)525-8434
earlybird@rics.bwh.harvard.edu

To all Stockbridge School of Agriculture students, both freshmen and seniors:

Alumni of Alpha Tau Gamma, a Stockbridge fraternity on our Amherst campus since 1919 in the days of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, are cleaning the Mass. Highway Dept. visability site at Route 116 & Hadley (the west campus entrance). It is spring removal of winter road debris and the fertilizing of our 10,000 daffodils on Saturday, April 28, 2007 at 10:00 a.m.

All Stockbridge students are welcome to assist. We are ATG. Find out what we have done. There is much more that we can do. You can help. Find out about ATG and its dreams for Stockbridge and the future of the ATG/Stockbridge family. Thanks for reading this ad and for joining us.

ATG will provide beverages and munchies. Mass. Highway will provide orange vests, gloves and bags.

Check out the Sports Blog at www.dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of your favorite UMass sports.

NOW SHOWING APR. 27-MAY. 3
amherst cinema
VENUS
INTO GREAT SILENCE Fri-Thu 5:15
BEST DOCUMENTARY EUROPEAN FILM AWARDS 2006
THE HOAX
THE LIVES OF OTHERS
Fri-Sat: 4:00, 6:50, 9:30
Sun: 1:20, 4:00, 6:50, 9:30
Mon-Thu: 4:00, 6:50, 9:30
DELIVER US FROM EVIL
Sat April 28: 2:00 Tues. May 1: 7:00
JANUS FILMS Now 35mm Prints!
CLEO FROM 5-7 & ZERO FOR CONDUCT
Sun 4/29 2p
28 AMITY STREET (413) 253-2547
www.AmherstCinema.org

Free Delivery to UMass Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		3			4	8	2
				3			1	6
	6				1
9	8					2		3
			4		6
2		7					6	5
			8				3
6	5			7
	7	4	6			5

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Full of energy
6 Faux
9 Sleuth Sam
14 Fred Astaire's sister
15 Not at home
16 Caroll's land
17 Tear open
18 Raw mineral
19 ___ Ababa
Ethiopia
20 Needlepoint fabric
21 Gun or phone on stage
22 Follow a trail
23 Paper and graper
25 Graduate papers
26 Chart
28 Infuriates
30 Biblical prophet
32 Big ___ CA
33 Actress Moore
37 Hit the skids
39 Oddsmaker
41 Use a stiletto
42 Rim of a cup
44 Soothsayers
45 Find a fit-en for
47 Reddish-brown
48 Ballroom dances
52 Ultimatum phrase
54 Town on the Penobscot
55 Nights before
56 Part of B.A
59 Marching band group
60 Writer Deighton
61 Cyberspace message
62 Critic Roger
63 Bikini piece
64 Metaphysical post
65 Shopping spots
66 Dunderhead
67 Overly full

DOWN
1 Actor Newman
2 Novelist Ferber
3 For each one
4 Ballet movements
5 Cowpoke's assent
6 Less affluent
7 Australs and borealis
8 Slide
9 Mown strips
10 California ballplayer
11 Robert and Alan
12 Clear frost
13 Mississippi quartet?
21 Tiny punctures
24 Disorderly pile
25 Urban porches
26 Tity and Ryan
27 Plenty
29 Chewy treat
31 Something to get done
33 Excavate
34 Frolicsome
35 Actress Sorvino
36 ___ betsy
38 Betting advice
40 Combustible material
43 Wading birds
45 Perches
46 Sites for lights
48 Tribal symbol
49 Island west of Curacao
50 Prized prize
51 Knot on a tree
53 Where Pago Pago is
55 Exile isle
57 Trident feature
58 Huskies pull
61 Begley and Meese

SPOON plus David Vandervelde & The Moon Station House
FRI. APR. 27 • 8:30 PM DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM • BALLROOM
DR. DOG plus The Tenth, Roots and Redmouth
FRI. APR. 27 • 8:30 PM DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM • CLUBROOM
BADFISH
A TRIBUTE TO SUBLIME
plus Scotty Don't, The Primate Fiasco, White Boy Reggae
WED. MAY 2 • 7:00 PM DOORS OPEN 6:00 PM • BALLROOM
ROSE HILL DRIVE
plus Palace In Thunderland, Thrill Pillow
THU. MAY 3 • 8:30 PM DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM • CLUBROOM
Pearl Street Nightclub 10 PEARL ST. NORTHAMPTON
WIN TICKETS!
E-mail your name & favorite band to streetteam@ihop.com
TO PURCHASE TICKETS OR FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL
WWW.IHEG.COM
@413-586-8686

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Time's fun when you're having flies."
-Kermit the Frog

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

I never make it on the cover of National Geographic Don't let it bother you. It's yellow journalism
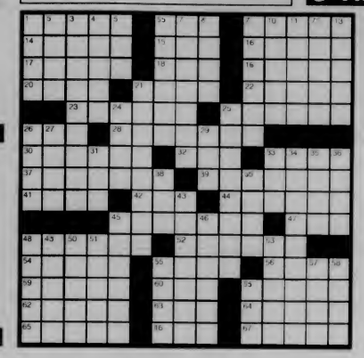
What if I were more endangered? Or if my coat was shinier? My tail sleeker?
Concentrate on your stretching
I should eat the photographer, then install someone sympathetic to me

A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

I GET THE FEELING YOU'RE NOT AS SERIOUS ABOUT THIS RELATIONSHIP AS I AM.
OH, BOY...
I AM SERIOUS. I JUST KNOW THAT AFTER YOU GRADUATE THIS SPRING WE WON'T BE ABLE TO SEE EACH OTHER AS MUCH AND WHO KNOWS.
YOUR LIFE IS JUST BEGINNING.
THEN WHY DOES THIS FEEL LIKE AN ENDING?

THE QUIGMANS By Buddy Hickerson

"Oh, what a treat, everyone! It's the Bluetooth warbler! Note the ruffled plumage — he's probably talking to a creditor!"



Continuing & Professional Education
UMass Amherst Summer 2007
Here are a few of the many Gen Ed. classes offered this summer
Online
- English 132 Man and Woman in Literature
- Psych 430 Child Psychology
On Campus
- Math 131 Calculus I
- Art 104 Basic Studio Drawing
I: June 4 – July 2
II: July 6 – August 22
Register Now!
By visiting us at www.UMassUlearn.net.dc

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Iced tea cannot and never will be made by throwing tea bags into a freezer.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Try as you might, you'll simply never come up with a better idea than beef on a stick.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Your soulmate is a unicycle riding clown with one eye and a vegetable fetish.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You may be allergic to pollen but that's no reason to act like you're allergic to fun.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Your Birkenstocks are almost too original and unique. Go eat some more granola.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Do a good deed by caring for a rabies afflicted animal, possibly a possum.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Install a bar on your ceiling so you can sleep upside down like a fruit bat.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
PDA is completely acceptable as long as both parties are exceptionally good looking.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Make an effort to not be the drunk girl crying in the corner on her phone.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
It is so witty and creative to put the word "pink" on clothes that aren't actually pink.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Build your life around the uncontested fact that Oasis is the best band ever.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
When life hands you alligators, drop the lemonade and run away screaming.

Sean Connery strongly encourages you to submit comics. Strongly.

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Street Kung Fu The ultimate in personal safety. For class times call 413-325-1322

Like no other course, Army ROTC All money going to school and none for the weekend? We pay you to be a student and learn leadership www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Center of town. 1,2,3 bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1125, 3 bedroom $1425, 4 bedroom $2175 Accepting Applications. 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must call 413-584-4746

Marketers wanted for part time work during school. Earn $15/hr + bonus. Email: rdonaldson@collegepro.com

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Nights and weekends. Apply at DP Dough, Downtown Amherst.

EMPLOYMENT

WORK OUTDOORS THIS SUMMER Full time positions available in your hometown. Earn $8-12/hour Painting houses with a fun crew. Call 888-277-9787 or www.collegepro.com

Camp Pontiac, a premier co-ed overnight camp in New York, is looking for fun, enthusiastic and mature individuals who can teach and assist in all areas of athletics, aquatics, the arts, or as a general bunk counselor. View our website at www.camppontiac.com. If interested simply fill out the application in the staff section, email Stefanie@camppontiac.com or call Stefanie at 516-626-7668

Brandywine Apts. Needs a certified lifeguard. Full time hours flexible. Must work some weekends. $9.00/ hr Call 549-0600 or stop by office.

EMPLOYMENT

Need a summer job? College Pro painters is hiring. Work with friends, steady hours, learn a valuable skill. Must be willing to work in the following areas: Milford, Millbury, Grafton, Auburn. Interviewers being held now. Please email collegepronorthbridge@yahoo.com

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

ROOMMATE WANTED

Cape Cod Seeking summer roommates starting 6/10 Yarmouth, MA near beach. Female only. 617-519-0178

SERVICES

Do you have legal Questions? We can help with your problems. Contact Student Legal Services office at 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

Are you getting ready to move off campus? Know you rights and responsibilities before you sign your first lease. Contact the Student Legal Services office at 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St Amherst www.birthright.org

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

SERVICES

Alpine Commons apartment June-August 15th $2050/month includes utilities. 413.204.9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

Amherst Beautiful quiet house great location. Need Car. With nice guy and daughter. Perfect for single/ couple. Rent nego. Call Jonathan for details. 413-253-2535

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED $10,000(Plus expenses) We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1300+ (math+verbal) Physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more information please contact us. Email: Darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, APRIL 27, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen 'slam' BU

Winning streak extended to 16 games in win over Terriers

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Pitching and hitting has always been the mantra of the Massachusetts softball team – plenty of bats, and a great arm in the circle. The pitching wasn't there for the Minutewomen yesterday, but the bats were in full force.

Led by Stacy Cullington's 3-for-4 day, the Minutewomen beat up Boston University's pitching, defeating the Terriers, 10-4, extending its winning streak to 16 games. The Maroon and White has won its last 22 games at the UMass Softball Complex.

UMass	10
BU	4

The Minutewomen (27-12-1, 12-0 Atlantic 10) return to conference action Sunday, when George Washington comes to Amherst for a doubleheader.

Sophomore pitcher Brandice Balschmiter allowed an uncharacteristic four earned runs on seven hits, but held on for her 20th win of the season.

With one out and a run already scored in the seventh inning, Balschmiter got out of a bases-loaded jam to cut a potential rally short. Freshman Megan Currier picked up the loss for BU, dropping her record to 15-3 on the season.

"I was really glad to see Brandice handle [BU] even though it wasn't one of her more stellar performances, in terms of having all her stuff," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "But I thought she handled a good-hitting team well. To beat them with your D-game is a pretty good job."

"I didn't pitch well today," Balschmiter said. "I just came out and did the best I could. I knew the team would be behind me."

The turning point of the game came in the fourth inning, however. After BU jumped out to a two-run lead in the first inning, the Minutewomen brought six players across the plate, and four in a single shot.

After manufacturing two runs on Samantha Salato's RBI double, and a bases-loaded passed ball, Candice Molinari drew a walk to reload the bases, bringing Cullington to the plate.

In her third at-bat of the game, second baseman smashed a 2-1 pitch over the left-field fence for her second grand slam and 11th home run of the season, making the score 6-2. With Balschmiter struggling early on, it was cru-

See SOFTBALL on page 8

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior second baseman Stacy Cullington went 3-for-4 yesterday against BU with two home runs and a new UMass record seven RBIs.

Cullington hits two home runs in win

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts softball team had already tied Boston University at 2-2 when Stacy Cullington stepped up to the plate with the bases loaded in the fourth inning.

Just before shortstop Whitney Williams flew out to center for the inning's second out, freshman Sarah Reeves pinch hit for catcher Jessica Serio, drawing a walk. Amanda Morin was then struck in the arm with a pitch from BU hurler Megan Currier. The bases became juiced when center fielder Candice Molinari worked her way to a full count before looking at ball four.

It was then time for second baseman Stacy Cullington – who had flown out to right in the first and singled to right-center in the third – to make her bat sing.

She strolled to the plate with the game locked in a 2-2 tie and three of her comrades on the basepaths.

"All I could see in the first two at-bats was that she was throwing me inside. I wasn't seeing it very well. I could see it afterward in my head, but I wasn't swinging at it very well. So I just really needed to calm myself down," Cullington said.

She dug in and took her stance.

The junior ran the count to 2-1 and anticipated the next delivery.

"[Coach Sortino] said, 'Slow down and shorten up.' And I just said, 'All right. I need to do something different here.'" Cullington referred to her at-bat. "So, I just came in and was almost thinking 'inside pitch, just the way you've been picturing it. Just the way she's been throwing it.'"

Cullington anticipated well, smashing the 2-1 pitch over the left field fence for a grand slam. It was her 11th home run of the season.

She said she found the bat's sweet spot and knew it was leaving the yard right as she made contact.

"There are some times when it feels really good and you're not quite sure if you're going to make it over. But we have kind of a short fence. It felt really good," she said.

The grand slam put the Maroon and White up 6-2 heading to the fifth.

After the Terriers scored one run in the top of the inning, lightning struck twice for Cullington.

After Morin and Molinari led off the bottom of the frame with singles, Cullington again moseyed to the batter's box.

She got under a 2-2 pitch and sent it high into the air. The heavy wind blowing out made the ball drift back and back.

See CULLINGTON on page 8

UM plans to finish year on positive note

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Regardless of this weekend's outcome, neither the NCAA nor the Atlantic 10 tournaments will be a viable option for the Massachusetts lacrosse team. Though eliminated from postseason play, by no means is the 2007 season over in the minds of the Minutewomen (6-9, 1-4 Atlantic 10).

The coaches and players believe there is still plenty left to play for, foremost the possibility of taking the momentum of a two-game winning streak into the offseason.

"The last month now, we've been right there in terms of getting a win," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "I think we've been improving and I'm excited about the last two games since we have a great opportunity to finish the season with two victories."

The team hosts two of the last place teams in the league – Saint Joseph's (7-7, 1-4 A-10) on Friday afternoon and La Salle (4-9, 0-5 A-10) on Sunday. Both games will take place at McGuirk Stadium.

The Minutewomen's final two home games would have much more meaning if they had defeated St. Bonaventure last Sunday. A birth in the A-10 tournament would have been a possibility with that win and two more this weekend.

Against St. Bonaventure, the Maroon and White lost control of a four-goal lead in the second half by allowing the Bonnies to score seven straight goals over a 10-minute period.

The Minutewomen had a balanced scoring attack in that game, with seven different players registering points. Junior Melynda Zwick scored four goals, tying her career high and adding to her 25 total this season.

"A lot of people have been stepping up [on offense] and trying to be more of a threat," Venechanos said. "Every time a player has the ball, you want to be able to shoot or score. We've been able to put our opportunities away and definitely be more aggressive."

Yet the Saint Joseph's defense should pose a challenge to the Minutewomen. The Hawks own the second-best goals against average in the league, allowing slightly more than nine scores per contest.

"They're really fast, aggressive on the ball and they have a strong goalie," Venechanos said. "Usually with aggressive teams, you play aggressively back at them. It usually works out pretty well. If we just sit back and let them dictate the pace, we're going to have limited opportunities."

Even with the strong play of goalie Suzy Herlihy, finding the back of the net has been Saint Joseph's biggest weakness. The Hawks finally earned their first conference win of the season, with a 14-7 victory over last place La Salle.

Meanwhile, Sunday's game will pose problems for the Minutewomen.

See W. LACROSSE on page 8

Make or break series for Minutemen

UMass Nine travels to Ohio for three-game set with Dayton

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts baseball team and the Dayton Flyers begin a three-game set today at 2:30 p.m. in Dayton, Ohio. It is a series that could make or break either team's chances of reaching next month's Atlantic 10 Tournament.

UMass (12-18, 6-9 A-10) is currently tied with Dayton (17-22, 6-9 A-10) for ninth in the conference standings, and both teams must maneuver their way up to break into the top six needed to reach the tournament.

Today's matchup will mark the first time in over three years the Minutemen have faced the Flyers. In April of 2004, the Maroon and White also traveled to Dayton for a three-game series, splitting the first two games of a doubleheader before losing the final game the next afternoon. Only seniors Travis Munsey and Bill Rankin appeared in that series from the team's current roster.

These conference opponents first met in 1997, and have played a total of 13 times, with the Flyers holding a slim 7-6 lead. It will be imperative for the Minutemen to either take the all-time series lead or at least tie the series this weekend to keep their playoff hopes alive.

Dayton currently holds an 8-7 record at home, playing at Time Warner Cable Stadium. UMass has dropped seven of its 11 games away from home. Last season, Dayton was tough on its home field, winning 16 of 23 overall (11-4 in A-10) en route to a 33-24 record in 2006.

The Flyers enter this weekend with losses in three of their last four games, while the Minutemen have won three of their last five. UMass had played three conference series in a row at home, and will play an A-10 series on the road for the first time since the very end of March.

Dayton is led by its offense, with six hitters in the lineup sporting batting averages above .300. Catcher Myles Swartzel paces the team with a .403 average, but has only 72 at-bats to his credit. Five of his teammates are currently hitting between .312 and .319.

Regular designated hitter Jeff Mercer and outfielder Bobby Getty have powered the Flyers, slugging 11 of the team's 23 home runs. Mercer leads the team in almost every category, including RBIs (33), home runs (7) and slugging percentage (.522).

The Flyers have a knack of reaching base, with an on-base percentage (.380) almost 100 points higher than their .284 team batting average. Their lineup has been patient at the plate, averaging over 3.5 walks per game. The team has been hit by an amazingly high 84 pitches this season, and nine players have been hit by at least six pitches.

With a lot of base runners, Dayton likes to get aggressive on the bases, attempting 54 steals – only 29 successfully – and sacrificing 38 runners over. Opponents have had a field day running on Flyers catchers, only having been caught nine times in 73 attempts. Scott Dunwoody – the primary starting catcher – has thrown out just nine of 60 would-be base stealers.

Dayton holds a slightly better team ERA (5.09) than the Minutemen (5.77) this season. The pitching staff for the Flyers is led by Quinn Haselhorst (2-3, 3.64 ERA) and Chris Rubio (5-4, 4.61 ERA).

For UMass, the starting pitching has improved as the season has gone along, especially for Jim Cassidy, who has won four consecutive starts. He leads the team with four wins and a 3.53 ERA.

On the offensive side, Adam Tempesta is the only player on UMass with an average above .300, hitting at a .330 clip. The Minutemen have hit .253 collectively.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenwa@student.umass.edu.

KRISTIE FELDMAN/COLLEGIAN

Junior Jim Cassidy is 4-0 with 15 strikeouts in 28 2/3 innings in his last four starts. His record this season is 4-1.

KRISTIE FELDMAN/COLLEGIAN

Junior Nik Fischer and the UMass men's and women's track teams host their third and final home meet of the season this weekend. Seven other teams will participate, including Harvard, U Conn and Vermont.

Final home meet on Saturday

Men and women use weekend to prep for A-10 postseason

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's and women's track teams are approaching the home stretch of the season, as they prepare to host their final home meet this Saturday.

Both teams are coming off a fourth place finish at last week's meet at Connecticut. The Maroon and White hopes to give an even better performance in front of a home crowd.

The eight-way meet will feature some difficult opposition, including teams such as Connecticut, Maine, Harvard, New Hampshire, Vermont, Sacred Heart and Stony Brook. These schools will provide some solid competition for UMass, which will use the meet as preparation for the Atlantic 10 Championships next week.

The final meet before a conference meet is usually used as a "tune up" to figure out what event each athlete will perform in. It is also a great way for coaches to gauge the improvement their team has made over the course of the season.

"We are looking forward to that third [home] meet this season, the first couple of meets have been outstanding," UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien said. "Hopefully the improvements between the third meet and our last meet will be just as good as our first meet and our middle meet."

One of the strengths of the men's team in particular has been a deep and talented squad of sprinters. One player O'Brien specifically mentioned was Nathan Barksdale. Barksdale has been a versatile athlete for the Minutemen, having competed in the 100-, 200- and 400-meter sprints, in addition to running for the 4x100 and 4x400 relay teams.

Senior sprinter Manny Harris-Lopes is another sprinter mentioned by O'Brien as an example of his team's depth. Harris-Lopes is the leadoff man for both relay teams and has been a consistent point scorer in the 100- and 200-meter dash.

The consistency of freshman sprinter Brian Miller has been a pleasant surprise for the Minutemen. Last week at UConn, Miller placed fifth in the 100-meter dash and has been a key member of the 4x100 relay team.

"He's been a jumper and sprinter for us, and has had a good, consistent successful season so far," O'Brien said.

According to O'Brien, the

See TRACK on page 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SHOWERS : HI: 67 LO: 40 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, APRIL 30, 2007

MINUTEMEN SWEEP FLYERS PAGE 10 | MOS DEF DELIVERS AT AMHERST COLLEGE PAGE 5

Alpha Tau Gamma alumni hold spring clean up at UMass

BY VINCENT CAPONE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On Saturday morning, Alpha Tau Gamma, a Stockbridge fraternity that has been on the University of Massachusetts campus since 1919, cleaned up their Massachusetts Highway Department visibility site at Route 116 and Hadley Road near the west entrance of the campus.

About a dozen members and alumni volunteered their time and effort. Among the volunteers was Jim Mulcahy, treasurer of Alpha Tau Gamma Inc. and Jim La'Salle, class of '47.

"It was only about a dozen workers, but it was an ample amount because we are all efficient workers," recalls Mulcahy.

During this spring cleanup, their first of the year, Alpha Tau Gamma picked up road debris that had accumulated throughout the winter. After picking up debris, several members helped to clear away overgrown grass with the use of weed whackers. After the lawn was cleared, the fraternity tended to their daffodils.

The daffodils were planted three years ago in the fall of 2004, and will bloom this spring for the third time. Alpha Tau Gamma says they are faced with difficulties maintaining the daffodil bulbs because recently the bulbs have not been blooming in time for spring graduation. In order to prepare for graduation every year, the state provides lawn service to the highway and tends to mow the flowers down in an effort to beautify the areas around the campus. This summer, they plan to shift flower planting to the center of the island on higher ground to avoid state mowing. This summer planting will occur sometime in late August or September.

The state highway department designates this portion of the highway as an Alpha Tau Gamma visibility site, which meets several times a year to pick up trash and beautify the lawns. Alpha Tau Gamma also has a garden in front of the Amherst Police Station on Main Street and a garden in Wellesley in front of the Elm Bank, home of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society.

Mulcahy says he wants to see the organization designate a spot in the center of Boston, and says that the city plans to grant them a spot near recent Big Dig construction. Mulcahy feels this will give UMass Stockbridge students a nice change of scenery.

"It's a fantastic experience for students to learn how to cooperate with urban hindrances that can be fatal to horticulturnl work," Mulcahy said.

Special thanks goes out to Tom Giles '72 who owns the Hadley Garden Center on Route 9, which provides the fertilizer used in these cleanups, and Kane '63 who owns Kane's Flower World in Danvers which often provides the flowers used in the group's beautification efforts.

Vincent Capone can be reached at vcapone@student.umass.edu.

More than a view from the top

New Marriott Center opens on top floor of Campus Center

DAVID HUMPHREYS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A new $6.3 million facility atop the Campus Center of the University of Massachusetts has opened to make hospitality and tourism management students more competitive, the latest evidence of a UMass strategy to increase its national competitiveness by leveraging state funds with private dollars.

The new facility is named the Marriott Center for Hospitality Management after J. Willard and Alice S. Marriott, the late benefactors of their private foundation who awarded $2 million in two separate grants to construct the facility in the space, previously known as the "Top of the Campus." The Marriotts were the founders of the world-wide food service, hotel and hospitality management enterprise that bears their name.

To fund the new facility, the foundation contributed two grants of $1 million each – the first to fund a 200-seat Marriott Dining Room; the second, to help build a state-of-the-art production kitchen and two laboratory-classrooms, according to University officials who held a dedication ceremony last Friday.

The remaining $4.3 million was funded by 20 other beneficiaries including: Mohegan Sun, Ninety-Nine Restaurants, the Massachusetts Lodging Association, the Massachusetts Restaurant Association and Darden Restaurants Foundation.

The new Center now houses all of HTM's food and beverage operations, replacing older facilities that had been split between Chenoweth Laboratory and Skinner Hall. The new kitchen includes some of the most up-to-date culinary equipment, and the classrooms and laboratories contain new equipment, as well.

The result will be a "whole new level of education for students," according to Hospitality and Tourism Management Department Head Rod Warnick.

"We can do things here we would never have been able to in the past," Warnick said.

The Center will be used mainly for Department of Hospitality and Tourism Management classes and events intended to provide students a hands-on working environment. But the Center also can be booked for private events and is open to the public during regular restaurant hours. The Marriott Center also may be used for wedding receptions and conferences.

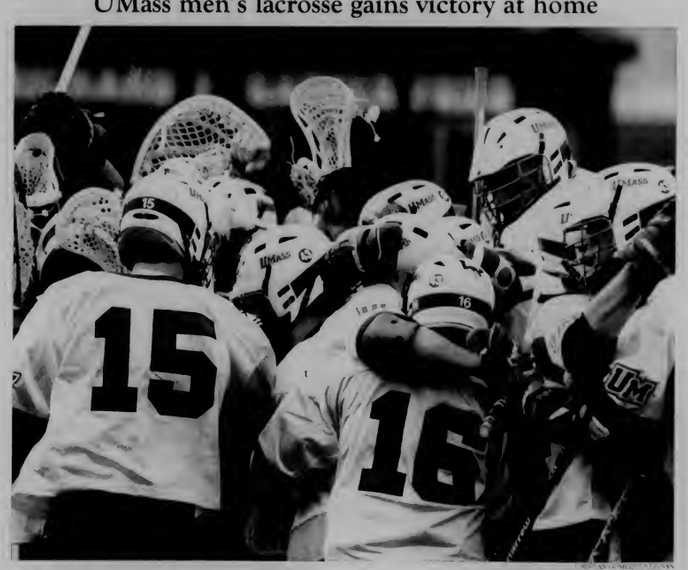
Serving both lunch and dinner during the week, the students working at the restaurant can expect to see between 40 and 70 customers each semester, according to junior Timothy Gould, who spoke at the dedication. Lunch and dinner prepared by students are

See MARRIOTT on page 3

TAN BITZES/COLLEGIAN

The Marriott Center for Hospitality Management, dedicated to the founders of the Marriott enterprise, will be used for HTM classes using up-to-date culinary equipment and can also be rented for wedding receptions and conferences.

UMass men's lacrosse gains victory at home



The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team defeated Syracuse in their annual matchup, 9-7, on Saturday at Garber Field. The Minutemen rode strong showings by sophomore goaltender Doc Schneider with 19 saves, and senior midfielder Brett Garber. More coverage on page 10.

Researcher to speak on effects of mind control experiments

BY JENNIFER HESHION
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This week at the University of Massachusetts, students and faculty are invited to attend a lecture with esteemed clinician, researcher and author Colin A. Ross about the psychological effects of mind control experiments.

Ross will give a talk on Wednesday, May 2, called "CIA Mind Control Experiments by American Psychiatrists: Creation of Multiple Personality Disorder in the Manchurian Candidate Programs."

The founder and president of the Colin A. Ross Institute for Psychological Trauma, Ross is well-known for treating patients for multiple personality disorder and associated trauma disorders, including depression, self-mutilation and suicide at Timberlawn Mental Health System of Dallas, Texas. The Ross Institute bases its programs on the trauma model of psychopathology, which states that trauma is a major risk factor for many types of mental disorders and needs to be addressed in treatment.

Ross' book, "Dissociative Identity Disorder: Diagnosis, Clinical Features and Treatment of Multiple Personality," was published in 1989, and according to the press release is "regarded as one of the most comprehensive and important accounts of the subject ever written."

He is also the author of numerous research papers and books on trauma, including publications in the American Journal of Psychiatry. Ross has also been a reviewer for psychiatry journals and was once president of the International Society for the Study of Dissociation.

According to a press release on April 25, 2007 Ross will discuss "CIA and military mind control experimentation by American psychologists and psychiatrists, including the use of hypnosis, LSD, sensory deprivation and isolation and brain electrode implants and the creation of Manchurian Candidate super spies."

In "Bluebird – Deliberate Creation of Multiple Personality by Psychiatrists," Ross defines the Manchurian Candidate as an unwitting patient with a new identity created deliberately and implanted in the individual by the CIA. In addition, amnesia barriers are created to ensure no memory of the unethical experiments has occurred, and this person is used in simulated or actual operations.

Included in Ross' lecture will be accounts of how some experiments are used on unwitting civilians, even pregnant women and children. Ross' research includes discovery of experimentation on terminal cancer patients, imprisoned drug addicts and sex offenders, psychiatric patients and military personnel.

Ross' lecture will be held at 4 p.m. in 227 Herter Hall at UMass and will include undergraduate research poster presentations on May 3 at 11:30 a.m. in the Tobin-Bartlett breezeway. The lecture is sponsored by UMass's department of psychology and the Psi Chi Honor Society's

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu.

Schools ban iPods to decrease cheating

BY REBECCA BOONE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

MERIDIAN, Idaho — Banning baseball caps during tests was obvious – students were writing the answers under the brim. Then, schools started banning cell phones, realizing students could text message the answers to each other.

Now, schools across the country are targeting digital media players as a potential cheating device. Devices including Apple Inc. iPods and Microsoft Corp. Zunes can be hidden under clothing, with just an earbud and a wire snaking behind an ear and into a shirt collar to give them away, school officials say

"It doesn't take long to get out of the loop with teenagers," said Mountain View High School Principal

See IPOD on page 3

Cardinals reliever Hancock dies in crash

BY R.B. FALLSTROM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. LOUIS — Josh Hancock, a relief pitcher who helped the St. Louis Cardinals win the World Series last season, died early Sunday when his sport utility vehicle slammed into the back of a tow truck.

The Cardinals postponed their home game Sunday night against the Chicago Cubs. It was the second time in less than five years that a St. Louis pitcher died during the season. Darryl Kile was found dead in his hotel room in 2002.

There's a big hole that's going to be there," Cardinals manager Tony La Russa said. "This is brutal to go through."

Police said the 29-year-old Hancock, who was single, was alone in his 2007 Ford Explorer when the SUV struck the rear of a flatbed tow truck at 12:35 a.m. The tow truck was in the left lane with its lights flashing while assisting another car that had crashed, Police Chief Joe Mokwa said.

Hancock died upon impact, Mokwa said. The driver of the tow truck, whose name was not released by police, was

See HANCOCK on page 3

AP

St. Louis Cardinals relief pitcher Josh Hancock, who helped his team win the World Series last season, was killed in a car crash early Sunday.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 127
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NEWS SUPERVISOR Sherel Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jennesen Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPY EDITOR Adam Staigon
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
FEATURES EDITOR Melissa D'Amico
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Dunn
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sidney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolinitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Bae
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Tuan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE [illegible] OF MASSACHUSETTS. [illegible] IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, [illegible] REVENUE FOUNDED IN 1890 AS [illegible] OF MASS LIFE, RENAME THE MASS COLLEGIAN [illegible] THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN [illegible] COLLEGIAN IN 1956. [illegible] THE COLLEGIAN HAS [illegible] SINCE 1904. FOR ADVERTISING [illegible] ALL HOLIDAYS

PRODUCTION CREW
Who staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
[illegible]
COPY EDITOR
Callie [illegible]
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
[illegible]

Fiery crash collapses and melts San Francisco freeway

By Marcus Wohlsen
Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — A heavily traveled section of freeway that funnels traffic off the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge collapsed early Sunday after a gasoline tanker truck overturned and erupted into flames, authorities said.

Flames shot 200 feet in the air and the heat was intense enough to melt part of the freeway and cause the collapse, but the truck's driver walked away from the scene with second-degree burns. No other injuries were reported.

"I've never seen anything like it," Officer Trent Cross of the California Highway Patrol said of the crumpled interchange. "I'm looking at this thinking, 'Wow, no one died – that's amazing.' It's just very fortunate."

Authorities said the damage could take months to repair, and that it would cause the worst disruption for Bay Area commuters since the 1989 Loma Prieta earthquake damaged a section of the Bay Bridge itself.

Nearly 75,000 vehicles use the portion of the road every day. But because the accident occurred where three highways converge, authorities said it could cause commuting problems for hundreds of thousands of people.

Transportation officials said they already had added trains to the Bay Area Rapid Transit light rail system that takes commuters across San Francisco Bay, and were urging people to telecommute if possible.

State officials said motorists who try to take alternate routes Monday instead of relying on public transportation would face nightmarish commutes.

The tanker carrying 8,600 gallons of gasoline ignited around 3:45 a.m. after crashing into a pylon on the interchange, which connects westbound lanes of Interstate 80 to southbound I-880, on the edge of downtown Oakland about half a mile from the Bay Bridge's toll plaza.

A preliminary investigation indicated he may have been speeding on the curving road, Cross said.

The fire melted a second interchange from eastbound I-80 to eastbound I-580 located above the first interchange, causing a 250-yard section of the roadway to collapse onto the roadway below, according to the highway patrol.

Witnesses reported flames from the blaze reached up to 200-feet high.

Late Sunday morning, the charred section of collapsed freeway was draped at a sharp angle onto the highway beneath, exposing a web of twisted metal beneath the concrete.

The Bay Bridge consists of two heavily traveled, double-decked bridges about two miles long straddling San Francisco Bay.

San Francisco Mayor Gavin Newsom said the accident showed how fragile the Bay area's transportation network is, whether to an earthquake or terrorist attack, and has the potential to have a major economic effect on the city.

"It's another giant wakeup call," Newsom told reporters at the California Democratic Party convention in San Diego.

A section of highway lies burned and crumbled in Emeryville, Calif., after a tanker carrying gasoline exploded on Sunday while driving on the freeway that funnels traffic onto the San Francisco–Oakland Bay Bridge.

Saudi tribe holds camel pageant

By Andrew Hammond
Associated Press

GUWEI'IYYA, Saudi Arabia — The legs are long, the eyes are big, the bodies curvaceous.

Contestants in this Saudi-style beauty pageant have all the features you might expect anywhere else in the world, but with one crucial difference – the competitors are camels.

This week, the Qahtani tribe of western Saudi Arabia has been welcoming entrants to its Mazayen al-Ibl competition, a parade of the "most beautiful camels" in the desolate desert region of Guwei'iyya, 120 km (75 miles) west of Riyadh.

"In Lebanon they have Miss Lebanon," jokes Walid, moderator of the competition's Web site. "Here we have Miss Camel."

While tremendous oil wealth has brought rapid modernization to the desert state of Saudi Arabia, the camel remains celebrated as a symbol of the traditional nomadic lifestyle of Bedouin Arabs.

Throughout history camels have served multiple purposes as food, friend, transport and war machine. They were key to the Arab conquests of the Middle East and North Africa nearly 1,400 years ago that brought Islam to the world.

Camels are also big business in a country where strict Islamic laws and tribal customs would make it impossible for women to take part in their own beauty contest.

Delicate females or strapping males who attract the right attention during this week's show could sell for a million or more riyals. Sponsors have provided 10 million riyals ($2.7 million) for the contest, cash that also covers the 72 sports utility vehicles to be will be awarded as prizes.

"Bedouin Arabs are intimately connected to camels and they want to preserve this heritage. The importance of this competition is that it helps preserve the purebreds," said Sheikh Omair, one of the tribe's leaders.

"We have more than 250 owners taking part and more than 1,500 camels," he said inside a huge tent where the final awards ceremony takes place.

Over at the camel pen, the contestants are getting restless as the desert wind howls and whips up swirls of sand in the hot afternoon sun.

Amid a large crowd of Bedouin who have gathered to watch, the head of the judging committee emerges to venture into an enclosure with some two dozen angry braying camels.

Camel-drivers sing songs of praise to their prized possessions as they try to calm the animals down.

"Beautiful, beautiful!" the judge mutters quietly to himself, inspecting the group. Finalists have been decorated with silver bands and body covers.

While tremendous oil wealth has brought rapid modernization to the desert state of Saudi Arabia, the camel remains celebrated as a symbol of the traditional nomadic lifestyle of Bedouin Arabs.

Minorities more likely to be searched during traffic stops

By Michael J. Sniffen
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Black, Hispanic and white drivers are equally likely to be pulled over by police, but blacks and Hispanics are much more likely to be searched and arrested, a federal study found.

Police were much more likely to threaten or use force against blacks and Hispanics than against whites in any encounter, whether at a traffic stop or elsewhere, according to the Justice Department.

The study, released Sunday by the department's Bureau of Justice Statistics, covered police contacts with the public during 2005 and was based on interviews by the Census Bureau with nearly 64,000 people age 16 or over.

"The numbers are very consistent" with those found in a similar study of police-public contacts in 2002, bureau statistician Matthew R. Durose, the report's co-author, said in an interview. "There's some stability in the findings over these three years."

Traffic stops have become a politically volatile issue. Minority groups have complained that many stops and searches are based on race rather than on legitimate suspicions. Blacks in particular have complained of being pulled over for simply "driving while black."

"The available data is sketchy but deeply concerning," said Hilary Shelton, director of the NAACP's Washington bureau. The civil rights organization has done its own surveys of traffic stops, and he said the racial disparities grow larger, the deeper the studies delve.

"It's very important to look at the hit rates for searches – the numbers that actually result in finding a crime," Shelton said. "There's a great deal of racial disparity there." He called for federal legislation that would collect uniform data by race on stops, arrests, use of force, searches and hit rates.

"This report shows there are still disturbing disparities in terms of what happens to people of color after the stop," said Dennis Parker, director of the American Civil Liberties Union's racial justice project. He also said better reporting is needed.

Like the 2002 report, this one contained a warning that the racial disparities uncovered "do not constitute proof that police treat people differently along demographic lines" because the differences could be explained by circumstances not analyzed by the survey. The 2002 report said such circumstances might include driver conduct or whether drugs were in plain view.

Traffic stops are the most frequent way police interact with the public, accounting for 41 percent of all contacts. An estimated 17.8 million drivers were stopped in 2005.

Black, Hispanic and white motorists were equally likely to be pulled over by police – between 8 percent and 9 percent of each group. The slight decline in blacks pulled over – from 9.2 percent in 2002 to 8.1 percent in 2005 – was not statistically significant, Durose said, and could be the result of random differences.

The racial disparities showed up after that point:

–Blacks (9.5 percent) and Hispanics (8.8 percent) were much more likely to be searched than whites (3.6 percent). There were slight but statistically insignificant declines compared with the 2002 report in the percentages of blacks and Hispanics searched.

–Blacks (4.5 percent) were more than twice as likely as whites (2.1 percent) to be arrested. Hispanic drivers were arrested 3.1 percent of the time.

–Among all police-public contacts, force was used 1.6 percent of the time. But blacks (4.4 percent) and Hispanics (2.3 percent) were more likely than whites (1.2 percent) to be subjected to force or the threat of force by police officers.

People interviewed described police hitting, kicking, pushing, grabbing, pointing a gun or spraying pepper spray at them or threatening to do so. More than four of five felt the force used was excessive, but there were no statistically significant racial disparities among the people who felt that way.

Two years ago, the Bush administration's handling of the 2002 report and its finding of racial disparities generated considerable controversy.

Departing from normal practice, the earlier report was simply posted on the statistics bureau's Web site without any press release announcing it.

Write for news!
Come down to the Collegian office or email
news@dailycollegian.com

AN INSIDER EXPOSES PLANS TO DESTROY ISRAEL, HIDE WMDs AND CONTROL THE ARAB WORLD

SADDAM'S SECRETS
HOW AN IRAQI GENERAL DEFIED AND SURVIVED SADDAM HUSSEIN

IRAQI GENERAL
GEORGES SADA
WITH JIM NELSON BLACK

If you thought Saddam Hussein was merely a threat...YOU HAVE NO IDEA!

An insider exposes plans to DESTROY ISRAEL, hide WMD's, and CONTROL THE ARAB WORLD.

Georges Sada, former Iraqi general, current spokesman for Iraqi Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki and director of the Iraqi Institute for Peace to lecture on Saddam's Secrets and the Struggle for Democracy in Iraq. Q&A follwing the lecture.

Tue, May 1st 7:00PM
Bowker Auditorium
(Stockbridge Hall)

Brought you you by the UMass Republicans with generous support from Young America's Foundation

YANKEE CANDLE
a passion for fragrance

At the Yankee Candle Company, Inc. we care about our employees! If you are looking for a full- or part-time summer opportunity where you can be recognized for your hard work, in a friendly and fun environment, then Yankee Candle makes perfect scents!

We make perfect scents.

Seasonal Candlemakers

We offer a competitive salary, free fitness facility, and a generous employee discount!

To apply, visit us online at: www.yankeecandle.com or in person at: 102 Christian Lane, Whately, MA.

EOE/AA

UMass' HTM boosts student competition

MARRIOTT from page 1

served to the public at the facility from Tuesday through Thursday, costs $8 and $10 respectively.

Marriott Vice President of Talent Acquisition and Selection Stephen Bauman, who represented the company at the dedication, said the foundation donated $2 million because it's "invested in educating tomorrow's leaders in hospitality, tourism and management.

"We want technically proficient leaders to perform in our industry, particularly [at] Marriott," Bauman said. He said his company classifies UMass as a "Tier-1" school, to which the company pays "more attention to curriculum, careers and recruiting."

Chancellor John Lombardi called the Center a "remarkable resource for events on campus... [where] students learn how to deal with a high-end facility."

Senator Stan Rosenberg (D-Amherst) said, "[UMass students are] now going to have the best kitchen available to actually work in, compared to what they have been working in for a number a years."

Although there was no state funding in building, the Center there is now a commitment to match the generosity of the Marriott Foundation, Rosenberg said.

A new plan by the UMass Board of Trustees and the Massachusetts Board of Higher Education anticipates providing $4 billion in support for public colleges across the state, Rosenberg said.

"Too much capital expenditure is on the back of the students and that is going to change," Rosenberg said of the plan citing that 25 years ago, the state would be paying for most, if not all, expenditures.

"UMass' campus has an enormous need for renewal and the Commonwealth has been AWOL in the support it needs for facilities," Rosenberg added. If the Legislature passes the plan, UMass' Amherst campus will receive $1.1 - $1.2 billion, he said.

Soren Bisgaard, Dean of the Isenberg School of Management, said, "If we can become the primary supplier [of graduates] to a company like Marriott...we are doing something right."

Senior Katherine Scheffler, another speaker at the dedication, related her experiences of working in the new facility and managing it in her HTM 355: Menu and Quantity Food Production Management Class. In HTM 355, students learn how to manage a working restaurant by hosting meals to real customers.

She said that other than being a state-of-the-art facility, the Marriott Center makes students more competitive in the job market by offering them opportunities they might not have at another less advanced facility.

Bisgaard said UMass has New England's only four-year program in the hospitality field. UMass is the No. 4 ranked HTM school in the country, according to the Gourman Report, part of the Princeton Review.

Dean of SOM Soren Bisgaard believes the new, state-of-the-art Marriott Center will improve competition for UMass students in the job market.

The Marriott Center, which is 14,000 square feet, will offer not only basic culinary and beverage laboratory-classrooms but also a realistic restaurant environment where students will learn how to manage and work in all aspects of the food-service industry.

The facility itself is lined from ceiling to floor in glass walls, windows and chrome, while classrooms contain brand new desks and equipment. Known informally as the "Top of the Campus," the Marriott Center offers a commanding view of the entire UMass campus and surrounding areas.

Lombardi concluding by saying that, with the addition of the Marriott Center, UMass can continue to have a nationally competitive Hospitality and Tourism Management program

David Humphreys can be reached at dhumphre a student.umass.edu.

Cardinals lose second pitcher to death in five years in the truck at the time of the crash but was not injured. Mokwa said the truck driver saw Hancock's SUV swerve just before it hit the tow truck, which weighs about 26,000 pounds.

HANCOCK from page 1

Mokwa said it appeared Hancock was driving at or just above the speed limit, and there were no alcohol containers in his vehicle.

"We may never know what occurred," Mokwa said. "It appears that he just merely didn't see the tow truck."

The medical examiner's office said an autopsy had been scheduled. Services were scheduled for Thursday in Tupelo, Miss., where Hancock's family lives.

"All of baseball today mourns the tragic and untimely death of St. Louis pitcher Josh Hancock," baseball commissioner Bud Selig said. "He was a fine young pitcher who played an important role on last year's World Series championship team."

The Cardinals will wear patches with Hancock's No. 32 on their sleeves for the rest of the season. The team also planned a memorial for the bullpen, which already features a tribute to Kile.

General manager Walt Jocketty said the Cardinals, who are off Thursday, plan to charter a plane to the funeral. The team begins a three-game series in Milwaukee on Tuesday and returns to St. Louis on Friday.

"Obviously, this is very difficult for all of us, especially those of us who were here five years ago when we lost Darryl Kile," said Jocketty, his eyes red. "There's no way we could have played tonight's game."

La Russa met with players shortly before a news conference Sunday afternoon to provide details of the accident and discuss memories of Hancock Late in the afternoon, two Cardinals jogged together in the outfield in a nearly empty Busch Stadium.

News of Hancock's death began to circulate around the majors on Sunday morning. Seattle Mariners pitcher Jeff Weaver, who won the World Series clincher for St. Louis in October, got a call from Cardinals reliever Randy Flores.

"I never really had a phone call like that before. It's kind of mind-boggling. Just a few days ago I had talked to him on the phone, touching base again because we were pretty good friends at the time," Weaver said "We spent a lot of time together. It was just hard to believe."

Weaver said Hancock called him three or four days ago just to chat, and asked if Weaver had received his World Series ring yet.

Hancock was remembered at ballparks around the country. The Cleveland Indians observed a moment of silence before their game against the Baltimore Orioles, with Hancock's picture displayed on a giant scoreboard. There also was a moment of silence for Hancock at Yankee Stadium.

Media players enable cheating

IPOD from page 1

Aaron Maybon. "They come up with new and creative ways to cheat pretty fast."

Mountain View recently enacted a ban on digital media players after school officials realized some students were downloading formulas and other material onto the players.

"A teacher overheard a couple of kids talking about it," said Maybon.

Shana Kemp, spokeswoman for the National Association of Secondary School Principals, said she does not have hard statistics on the phenomenon but said it is not unusual for schools to ban digital media players.

"I think it is becoming a national trend," she said. "We hope that each district will have a policy in place for technology – it keeps a lot of the problems down."

Using the devices to cheat is hardly a new phenomenon, Kemp said. However, sometimes it takes awhile for teachers and administrators, who come from an older generation, to catch on to the various ways the technology can be used.

Some students use iPod-compatible voice recorders to record test answers in advance and them play them back, said 16-year-old Mountain View junior Damir Bazdar.

Others download crib notes onto the music players and hide them in the "lyrics" text files. Even an audio clip of the old "Schoolhouse Rock" take on how a bill makes it through Congress can come in handy during some American government exams.

Kelsey Nelson, a 17-year-old senior at the school, said she used to listen to music after completing her tests – something she can no longer do since the ban. Still, she said, the ban has not stopped some students from using the devices.

"You can just thread the earbud up your sleeve and then hold it to your ear like you're resting your head on your hand," Nelson said. "I think you should still be able to use iPods. People who are going to cheat are still going to cheat, with or without them."

Still, schools around the world are hoping bans will at least stave off some cheaters.

In Idaho, Mountain View High School recently enacted a ban on digital media players since students were caught downloading formulas for exams onto them.

Henry Jones, a teacher at San Gabriel High School in San Gabriel, Calif., confiscated a student's iPod during a class and found the answers to a test, crib notes and a definition list hidden among the teen's music selections. Schools in Seattle, Wash., have also banned the devices.

The practice is not limited to the United States: St. Mary's College, a high school in Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, Canada, banned cell phones and digital medial players this year, while the University of Tasmania in Australia prohibits iPods, electronic dictionaries, CD players and spell-checking devices.

Conversely, Duke University in North Carolina began providing iPods to its students three years ago as part of an experiment to see how the devices could be used to enhance learning.

The music players proved to be invaluable for some courses, including music, engineering and sociology classes, said Tim Dodd, executive director of The Center for Academic Integrity at Duke. At Duke, incidents of cheating have declined over the past 10 years, largely because the community expects its students to have academic integrity, he said.

"Trying to fight the technology without a dialogue on values and expectations is a losing battle," Dodd said. "I think there's kind of a backdoor benefit here. As teachers are thinking about how technology has corrupted, they're also thinking about ways it can be used productively."

Fire crews contain largest wildfire in Georgia's history

WAYCROSS, Ga. — Firefighters have managed to contain about 70 percent of the largest wildfire in Georgia history, which had charred 100 square miles of forest and swampland, officials said Sunday.

A few families remained evacuated from their homes on the opposite side of U.S. Highway 1 from the main blaze, in an area where smaller spot fires started during the weekend, said Georgia Forestry Commission spokeswoman Susan Reisch.

Firefighters patrolled a 16-mile stretch of the highway, which remained closed, and the main body of the wildfire had not spread east across the highway into miles of tinder-dry forest.

Wind gusting to 15 mph and extreme drought conditions with no rain in the forecast mean the fire will continue to rage for at least another week, Reisch said.

The blaze started April 16 near the Okefenokee Swamp, west of U.S. 1, which connects Waycross to Jacksonville, Fla.

Two other wildfires that broke out early Sunday in counties near the main fire – one in Charlton County and one on the line of Brantley and Glynn counties – were not connected with the wildfire near Waycross, Reisch said.

Firefighters were working to contain them as well and at least nine families were evacuated from Charlton County, said Georgia Emergency Management Agency spokesman Buzz Weiss.

Elsewhere, a fire that broke out late Saturday in an Atkinson County peat bog about 30 miles west of Waycross had grown to 3,000 acres, Weiss said.

–Associated Press

Fire roars through a stand of pines near the southern edge of a wildfire that has burned more than 66,000 acres in Ware County, Saturday, in Waycross, Ga. Experts believe the fire will continue to rage for at least another week.

Migraines linked to brain damage

By Maggie Fox
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — People with migraines also may be suffering from some brain damage as brain cells swell and become starved of oxygen – a finding that may help explain why migraine sufferers have a higher risk of stroke, researchers reported on Sunday.

Similar brain damage can occur with concussions and after strokes, the researchers said in this week's issue of the journal Nature Neuroscience.

They said their findings suggest that migraine sufferers should not simply get pain relief but should take drugs that prevent the migraine, which is often preceded by "aura" – a series of visual disturbances that can include flashes of light or black spots.

The research, which was done in mice, also suggests giving oxygen may help reduce the damage, said Takahiro Takano, Maiken Nedergaard and colleagues at the University of Rochester in New York, working with a team at the Danish pharmaceutical group Novo Nordisk.

They studied a process called cortical spreading depression, known as CSD, a wave of changes in cells associated with migraine, stroke and head trauma.

They used a precise two-photon microscopic and oxygen sensor microelectrodes to look at the brains of live mice while they caused this process.

They saw a swelling occur and the brain cells became starved of oxygen. The nerve cells were damaged – specifically the dendrites, the long, thin spikes that stretch from one nerve cell to another.

There are 28 million sufferers in the U.S.

"This observation may have direct clinical implications, as several lines of work support the notion that cortical spreading depression constitutes the neurological basis of migraine with aura, and spontaneous waves of CSD may contribute to secondary injury in stroke and traumatic brain injury," the researchers wrote.

Migraine is a severe and debilitating form of headache, affecting 28 million people in the United States alone.

Two studies, including one published last week in the Archives in Internal Medicine, show that people who have migraines are more likely to have heart attacks.

A 2004 study in the British Medical Journal found that migraine sufferers are twice as likely to suffer a stroke as people who do not have the headaches.

Women are much more likely to suffer the characteristic pain of a migraine.

Usual pain medication often has little effect on migraine but a class of drugs called triptans, also called serotonin agonists, and ergotamine drugs, can be used to prevent the worst effects if patients take them at the first sign.

Giving the mice rich doses of oxygen seemed to shorten the duration of the wave of brain effects seen in CSD, the researchers said. They noted that migraine and cluster headache patients are sometimes treated with high-pressure oxygen.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
is looking for new
Graphic Designers
for the Fall 2007 semester

- Daily Advertising Designers
- Nightly Production Supervisors
- Advertising Production Manager

major can apply. Previous design [illegible] not necessary, but encouraged.

Visit our office in the Campus Center Basement
[illegible] 10am - 4pm for applications.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, APRIL 30, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Flaws in trying to 'Catch a Predator'

Katy Bruck

No doubt, late-night television has gotten increasingly entertaining over the years. That may come as a surprise, what with the relatively limited selection of channels provided here at the University of Massachusetts. Aside from the talk shows and occasional sketchy HBO "documentary" (looks like the University couldn't avoid every evil television has to offer, despite avoiding Showtime and Cinemax), the 24-hour news channels are offering a surprising alternative to the usual midnight-viewing munchies.

I couldn't help but giggle, for some unknown reason, when I stumbled upon a montage of footage from Dateline NBC's investigative report To Catch a Predator late the other night. For those unfamiliar with the show, a series of undercover investigations are being conducted by Dateline, using online decoys to trap and arrest adult men looking to have sex with underage girls and boys via Internet communication. Dateline creates a faux screen name, chats for however long it takes with these men, and then invites them to a house to meet with the decoy, confront them with cameras, a seemingly innocuous journalist and, eventually, police officers.

As I sat in my room with a friend of mine, both of us tired and in need of amusement, we found ourselves watching this pathetic display of adult male perversion revealed with what seemed to be an inappropriate humor. Chris Hansen, suit-clad, clean-cut journalist, emerging from that now infamous red curtain with a casual "Hi, why don't you take a seat?" never failed to get a laugh from one of us. And the ensuing struggle of the entrapped man to explain the explicit chat room transcripts, often accompanied by lewd photos, was so pathetic; it was funny. The majority of these guys look like anyone you'd pass on the street, which makes their presence both uncomfortably ironic and terrifying.

Just like People, Dateline seems to be neglecting this potentially even more disturbing aspect to its investigation.

People Magazine featured a story last week that reminded me of my late-night rendezvous with To Catch a Predator. In 2002, Alicia Kozakiewicz, then 13, was kidnapped, tortured and sexually assaulted by a man she'd met on the Internet. Though I don't remember it, (surprisingly, as I was only a year older than her at the time), the story got quite a bit of national coverage. This young girl had been in communication with this sick predator for months before she was kidnapped, and she herself remembers arranging the meeting, and willingly getting into his car. Fortunately, much of her memory after then is foggy or non-existent, but unfortunately, what she may not recall from beforehand still existed even after she was rescued.

According to the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, Kozakiewicz had a Web site at the time of her capture, and had been maintaining it for quite some time before then. This Web site, according to Sally Kalson, contained pictures of 13-year-old Kozakiewicz wet and wrapped in a towel sucking a lollipop, and nude photos of herself as a toddler sprinkled among typically innocent journal postings.

Just like People, Dateline seems to be neglecting this potentially even more disturbing aspect to its investigation. I'm not too old to remember how popular chat rooms and live journals were when I was in middle school, and not so oblivious to know that they're still popular now. Though I certainly have absolutely no sympathy for the men that Hansen and his team expose and embarrass on national television, I also don't understand why nobody is talking about why real girls, not just decoys, decide to act so recklessly and provocatively.

I was 13 myself not too long ago, and my family would be shocked and disgusted to hear some of the stories I heard about my female classmates – not from the boys, but from the girls themselves. Despite whether or not they understood the true meaning of their words, and their apparent actions, these things still happened. And the Internet served, and still serves, as the perfect, supervision-free atmosphere for adolescent and pedophilic fantasies.

Sexual predators and perverts have always existed, and they will continue to exist. It is only right that these people be brought to justice whenever and however possible. But what about these girls? They are victims, yes, but not just of the actions of these men, but of their own misguided, immature fantasies. One psychologist quoted in a Jan. 2002 column by Kalson, suggests that young girls behaving in a prematurely sexual way, and going after older men, stems from a universal need children feel to please adults. Kalson suggests that pop culture icons like Britney Spears may have influence on behavior.

But think about this next time you go into a mall: look at how all these girls are dressed, how they're posturing themselves. Then observe the awkward humbling of their male contemporaries. Why are young girls getting so good at playing Lolita, and apparently, not even for the benefit of their peers? This is a question that Dateline hasn't answered. Parents can learn how to protect their children from predators, but how can they protect them from themselves?

Katy Bruck can be reached at kbruck@student.umass.edu

Time to kick a trend in the 'butt'

Melissa Garber

Most University of Massachusetts students can agree that entering a dormitory means encountering multiple smokers lighting up on the doorsteps.

"Usually when I walk in, I have to bob and weave through groups of people talking and smoking right in the entranceway," sophomore Avery Banfield-Weir attested.

Cigarette smokers account for 1.8 million fulltime college students in the United States, according to the National Center on Addiction and Substance Abuse at Columbia University.

At UMass, like in most of the country, smoking has been banned in buildings all over campus. UMass policy states that smokers must light up at least 20 feet away from the entranceway of all buildings.

Public opinion in the U.S. has shifted dramatically over the past couple of decades; smokers, who could once light up wherever they pleased, are now being banned from public parks and beaches.

Fortunately, for UMass students forced outside to satisfy their vice, benches and trashcans conveniently line the spots where they congregate. So, why do cigarette butts carpet the ground around smokers?

UMass Resident life is pretty lenient when smokers crowd the steps less than 20 feet from the building, and it's safe to say that no matter how much second-hand smoke gets blown in their faces, the average student is not going to file any formal complaints. So, why can't smokers at least throw away their butts?

As disgusting as butts blanketing the grass look, the problem does not lie in aesthetics alone.

Outside of the Baker dormitory alone there are no fewer than four trashcans placed near the entrance at all times. How

MELISSA GARBER/COLLEGIAN

The disposing of cigarette butts at this spot on campus does more to harm the environment besides making an ugly mess on the ground.

is it that the remains of thousands of cigarettes can't find their way into the plethora of trash receiprocals on campus?

"There are trash cans all around the entranceway," Banfield-Weir commented, "and yet there are cigarette butts all over the ground."

According to Keep America Beautiful, a nonprofit organization aimed at waste reduction, two billion cigarettes are littered every single day. That means that approximately 4.5 trillion cigarettes are littered a year. In the U.S. alone, smokers account for over 250 billion cigarette butts.

As disgusting as butts blanketing the grass look, the problem does not lie in aesthetics alone. Cigarette filters are made of plastic cellulose acetate, a material that takes at least 12 years to decompose, but it only takes one hour for butts to leak toxic chemicals like cadmium, lead and arsenic into the water supply.

The effects of littered butts aren't limited to toxic leakage in the water supply alone. CharityGuide.org reported: "In January 2001, a motorist driving along Interstate 8 in San Diego County flicked a cigarette butt onto the center median, sparking a fire that eventually burned more than 10,000 acres, destroyed 16 homes and charred 64 vehicles."

In April 2003, a UMass student died in a fire in her off-campus apartment. The Boston Globe reported that a cigarette was the cause of it.

According to the National Fire Protection Association, "cigarette-caused fires result in more than 1,000 civilian deaths, 3,000 critical injuries (many among firefighters) and $400 million in direct property damage each year."

Cigarette-butt litter is a huge problem. The Philadelphia Daily News reported that at Penn State University, "School officials say landscapers who should be planting flowers and pruning shrubs are spending time instead picking up butts on the 15,000-acre campus: Some 13 landscapers spend 10 hours a week picking up discarded cigarettes at an estimated cost of $150,000."

Last semester at UMass, the Student Health Advisory Board at University Health Services organized a "No Butts About it Day," to educate students about the effects of cigarettes. Student volunteers helped to clear the campus of cigarette butts. But one day of the year is not enough.

The only people who can prevent cigarette-butt litter are the smokers themselves. The UMass custodial staff should not have to clean up after students who are too lazy to toss a butt into a trashcan that is an arm's-length away.

There is no justification for letting a butt hit the ground. Every smoker can take one second away from lighting up their next cigarette to toss out a butt.

Melissa Garber can be reached at mlgarber@student.umass.edu

This celebration has become a powerful cause

Jeff Napolitano

Tomorrow, beginning at 10:30 a.m., hundreds of University of Massachusetts students will rally on the side steps of the Student Union to demonstrate that they believe in rights for immigrant workers, and for workers around the country. Tomorrow, students will firmly say "no" to the recent inhumane raids on workers of color in New Bedford and around the country. Tomorrow, in a tradition of youthful social consciousness, students will come out to rally against bigotry, racism and to affirm the rights of working people.

First, a little history that is unfortunately not well known in this country: May 1 (May Day) is a celebration of the labor movement's push for the eight-hour workday in the United States. Workers around the country united to limit wage slavery and improve working conditions, with some success. One of the events leading to a worldwide cascade of labor actions was the Haymarket Affair, in which thousands of workers assembled in Haymarket Square in Chicago, Ill. to protest ongoing strikes and consequential police brutality. A bomb went off, injuring dozens of police, who then opened fire, killing several protestors and wounding hundreds more. Eight anarchist leaders were arrested, and although no proof of their involvement was made evident, four were hanged. International uproar followed the death of these innocent men, and 1886 was then known as the "Year of the Great Uprising of Labor."

Since 1886, May 1 has been a day celebrated, not just in the U.S., but around the world, as a symbol of workers' resistance to wage slavery and a demand for dignity and equality. The tradition that began in the U.S. has reverberated in every other country, although our own national remembrance of that tradition has largely been lost.

Such racist brutality against people merely wishing to pay the bills, to raise families and to live a life, is unspeakable.

Until last year.

On May 1, 2006, millions of people, particularly workers of color, took to the streets. Businesses across the country were shut down, unable to function. In Amherst, all five colleges met in the Common (UMass' contingent marched there) for a large rally. Jesse Diaz, a prominent organizer on the west coast who visited Amherst this summer, stated that before last year's rally, common right-wing rhetoric claimed that more work would get done and more efficiently if immigrant workers were thrown out of the country.

"After we shut down California, they don't make that claim anymore," said Diaz.

And again this year, people will take to the streets. In perhaps an unfortunate way, we have very good reason to do so: the recent Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) raids. For some time now, and recently in New Bedford, hundreds of ICE agents have flooded into workplaces, arresting and kidnapping those working there, often separating them from their families.

In New Bedford, about 300 ICE agents raided a leather factory and swept up hundreds of employees – mostly women of color – and arrested them. They were taken away and flown to Texas, without any attempt to reconcile the fact that many of them had children at home awaiting their return. This is similar to a form of "extraordinary rendition," the CIA practice of kidnapping "suspected terrorists" and putting them on a plane to be shipped elsewhere. Families were torn apart, and in an embarrassing moment from the supposedly sympathetic Governor Deval Patrick, children were left unaccounted for and hungry.

What was the crime of these workers, for which they needed to be immediately swept up and shipped to Texas to await deportation? The crime was merely this: working a job without appropriate documentation.

Such racist brutality against people merely wishing to pay the bills, to raise families and to live life, is unspeakable. It is the use of a country's resources to victimize the vulnerable, instead of using such resources to lift up people, to feed them, to educate. It is a further shift of our country, engaged in illegal and immoral occupations overseas, engaged in torture, engaged in attacking its own population at home, towards being a punitive and fascistic land. And if people of good will remain silent, our future remains a grim and self-defeating one.

So tomorrow, hundreds of students will make a stand, together, to renew the centuries-old call for dignity and equality for workers, for immigrants and for all people.

Tomorrow, around the country, workers will rise again and insist to be treated humanely.

Jeff Napolitano can be reached at jjnapoli@lrrc.umass.edu.

What mom and pop offer that chains can't

Matt Giancola

America is increasingly being homogenized into one simple strip mall. We have the token department store, token pizza chain, token hotel room. Smaller mom-and-pop stores are bleeding away, receding into the countryside like an endangered species.

The suburbs are filled with familiar stores, because families want the ease of knowing exactly where to go. In today's economy, workers don't keep the same job for life anymore. Now, families may have to move around. What's one suburb from the next? An Office Max in Oregon is the same as an Office Max in Georgia. Life is just a little bit easier. And, in one sense, this may play a positive role. Americans should have a sense of unity with one another – even if it is something as small as shopping at the same stores. All too often regional differences have led to division and misunderstanding. But our shared experiences don't have to be, and shouldn't be, limited to the same six businesses on the main strip.

Independent businesses, shrinking from the forefront as they are, are oftentimes the cultural stewards of America. When you think of Amherst, you think of Atkins Farm, Antonio's or the Amherst bookstores. You don't think of the Dunkin' Donuts on University Drive. Our regional identities don't lie with huge chain stores. They reflect our entrepreneurial and creative spirit, and many times place an emphasis on quality rather than profits.

I don't mean to come off as being against chain stores totally – every so often I'll stop at one if I need something specific – but I'd rather encounter new places, new products and interact with real human beings. I don't want to say "A large number five and a Coke," to someone else and have that be it. It certainly isn't their fault; these business owners just realized that it's quicker to tell someone a number, keep the lines moving and make more profits. Fortunately, if you look hard enough, you can find the real America – the one that isn't focused simply on making a quick buck.

A few weeks ago, a friend and I traveled to a small bookstore in Whately, just 20 minutes from campus. The store was filled with books – so many that you had to shuffle through the aisles just to get by. This was no Barnes and Noble. There were rare ones, cheap ones, old ones, new ones. The owner was passionate in his love of books, and it rubbed off on us. Had we gone to a chain store, I'm sure they could have helped us find what we were looking for, but there would be no passion behind it, nothing to expand our horizons. We then went down the road to the Whately Diner, an old-time diner that makes you think of the 1950s and has the best coffee on the planet. Part of the allure was that we didn't know what to expect. This menu sure wasn't numbered.

I don't want to say "A large number five and a Coke," to someone else and have that be it.

Contrary to what some on the left may say, capitalism isn't evil. But the market is not this holy, god-like omni-benevolent structure, either, as some on the right believe. Our economy must be regulated or else some will choose to further their greed rather than respect for their workers. Here, government must play a role and stick up for the American people and prevent these excesses from occurring. Small businesses tend to treat their employees better for the simple fact that the owners are likely to work right alongside them. They work together for the good of the company, but they also develop personal relationships that go beyond the quest for profit.

Of course, there are exceptions to every paradigm. Chain stores aren't always run by crazed profit-mongers, and small business owners aren't all saints either. But our economy plays a pivotal role in the American experience, and, as citizens in a free country, we must decide how we want it run. We ought to discover and support the lesser-known places, the places that define our cities and towns and are run by those who have a vested interest in the area. When it comes down to it, we should all – whether employers or employees, consumers or produeers – work to better our communities through quality service and mutual respect, not blind greed.

Matt Giancola can be reached at mgiancol@student.umass.edu.

...but I'm missing out on the true dining experience.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, APRIL 30, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Def brings hip-hop

AC Spring Concert delivers rhythm and soul

By Morgan-Ann Rousseau
Collegian Staff

Saturday night's Spring Concert at Amherst College brought the likes of Lyrispect, Subliminal, Hezekiah and 'mos' importantly, Mos Def. The concert was held in LeFrak Gymnasium on the Amherst College campus, and welcomed a relatively small-sized audience in a venue that felt a little bit too much a school dance. But the performances were worth well beyond the modest ticket price.

The college conducted extensive security measures as ticket-holders checked their purses and cameras before entering the venue. The gymnasium was nowhere near filled to capacity, but the concert-goers in attendance wasted no time sardining themselves as close to the pop-up stage as possible.

Up and coming spoken-word poet Lyrispect took the stage first to flaunt her spectacular verbal grace. Her poetry, which focused on social issues, delivered chills as her voice rose and fell, every syllable drenched with feeling. Before the Philadelphia-based poet introduced the first opening musician, Subliminal, who blew the crowd away with his oratory style.

Subliminal beat-boxed, gave great Busta Rhymes and Janet Jackson impressions and had a sing tap-off with a very skilled "Stomp"-style tap dancer Sean Bylield which was electric with aggressive rhythm. Another high point of Subliminal's performance came when he recreated Jimmy Hendrix's famous rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner" only he did it with no more than his mouth and a microphone.

Though these opening artists delivered serious quality performances, the crowd was becoming visibly antsy in anticipation for Mos Def, especially when the second opening musician took the stage, Hezekiah. The preceding act and the one to follow dwarfed this musician's performance. The crowd didn't warm up much to Hezekiah,

See MOS DEF on page 6

ELIZABETH KLEINMAN/COLLEGIAN

On Saturday night Mos Def performed at the LeFrak Gymnasium on the Amherst College campus.

Carlile draws an Iron crowd at Noho show

Sets time aside to mingle with happy fans

FRANCESCA SOLOMON/COLLEGIAN

Brandi Carlile, left, pauses to sign autographs after her Saturday night set at the Iron Horse Music Hall.

UMass student Evan Grabelsky, right, who is also a Sony Music Representative, grabs a quick flick of the camera with Carlile.

By Sydney Towne
Collegian Staff

A crowd of friends greeted Brandi Carlile as she walked on stage Saturday night in Northampton with her perennial band mates "the twins." The singer and her band were almost late due to an appearance on CBS's The Early show, but managed to slip into town just in time for a set of music hugely enjoyed by the sold-out crowd at the Iron Horse Music Hall.

Dressed simply in jeans, a button down shirt and brown boots, Carlile appeared to have rejected any sort of star image in favor of comfort which seemed a theme of her show. The first song, "Cannonball," was performed without a set-up by Carlile. It was the exception to the rule as she chatted with the crowd before almost every other song.

Iron Horse Music Hall seemed the perfect backdrop for the casual Carlile and her band, which seemed entirely comprised of friends. The tables were filled and seats were prized possessions throughout her performance. Despite concerns from Carlile that the music might have been too loud, the sound was enough to fill every nook of the hall.

The hour-and-a-half-long set included highlights from both of Carlile's albums, her 2005 self-titled debut and this month's release "The Story." The rowdy audience, in front of whom Carlile clearly felt at home, demanded particular favorites like the emotional "Josephine" and "Closer to You."

There were also a few covers that showed Carlile to have a range worth paying attention to. Near the end of the night she and her full band declared it was time for country and exploded into a powerful rendition of "Folsom Prison Blues." It was one of the night's highlights as it reached an intensity that few of Carlile's mellow melodies have. Carlile's voice lent itself well to the rough Johnny Cash lyrics. It waned and cracked with emotion at a fevered pitch she rarely hits in her own songs.

The heart of Carlile's music and the reason her fans crowded into the Iron Horse is her raspy vocals. The skilled guitar, bass and cello of her band complement it well, but they are background to the lyrics and voice that define her.

She has a wide range and a beautiful sound, but a rough edge that takes her beyond what is expected and into the world of what is dreamed of. Her voice adds depth to her lyrics. In the live performance, Carlile took the creaks and pain and depth of her sound further than she had on her well-loved albums, and the audience applauded [illegible] effort.

Carlile joked with the audience and her band mates throughout her show. The repertoire amongst the members of her band brought the audience into their world. Humor and hugs passed between them and that relaxed love was felt by the crowd.

Especially delightful to see were "the twins" Tim and Phil Hanseroth. They've been with Carlile for quite some time and wrote extensively on "The Story." From the first song, where only they and Carlile played, to the end of the show they flanked her like a pair of wiry, harmonizing angels.

Phil lounged on stage with what appeared to be a beer and his bass slung low. He seemed to take the appearance for what it was – a gig in a small New England joint – and enjoyed it. Tim on guitar seemed almost his mirror image, exact and yet opposite. He held his guitar higher and played with an electric energy. Phil's relaxed vibe would have been overwhelmed by.

The rest of her band was comprised of a cello player, who brought a symphonic elegance to Carlile's ballads, a drummer and third guitarist, Carlile and Tim being the first two. None of these additional musicians played on every song and the limited use of their talents gave the songs they did play on an edge. They were melancholy with the addition of the classical strings and rock 'n' roll with the drums. The third guitarist was by far the most talented of the three and added a professional edge to the mellow Carlile band.

[illegible] was cool in the boho-[illegible]-coffee-shop, cigarettes at midnight and Chuck Taylor sort of way. It felt like a living-room gathering of friends who love great music and love conversation. Carlile and her band understood where to take that eager music hall and they certainly delivered with smooth country rock.

Carlile will be back in Massachusetts on May 5, at the Avalon in Boston. For fans it might just be worth the trip to see the effortless star play.

Sydney Towne can be reached at stowne@student.umass.edu.

Downtown greets Market return

By Sarah Albert
Collegian Correspondent

We've all been hassled by a merchant somewhere between Zanna and Starbucks while walking through downtown Amherst on a weekend. Long rows of tables are set up on the sidewalks to display knockoff handbags and a large assortment of small trinkets, while the vendors themselves display their somewhat desperate advertising skills.

But for those of you who are sick of being bothered about fake Chanel, there is a new market back in town, with nothing knockoff about it. Amherst welcomed back the Boltwood Marketplace last weekend, and with it came a great selection of locally crafted and grown products.

The Boltwood Market, an annual market set up in town for local vendors, had its grand re-opening on Saturday. The market was set up to support local artisans and farmers, while providing the community with a friendly shopping place with honest workers. Located directly behind Bueno Y Sano, it's convenient enough to visit every weekend without worrying about transportation or the bother of carrying purchased items a long distance.

You'll want to go every weekend because as the coordinator of the market proclaimed, "Every week is a new experience at the Boltwood Marketplace. It's as if you are walking through the streets of Europe with benches to sit on, music in the background and friendly faces."

A range of different goods are sold in individual tents, owned and operated by the creators or growers of the diverse products. From Italian olive oil to hand-sewn baby clothing, the Boltwood Market truly has something for everyone.

The first stand at one of the entrances was manned by John Schaffer, of Schaffer Farms in Vermont. His family-run farm produces about 250 gallons of maple syrup each year and packages it to sell at various stores and shops around New England. It's his first year at the Boltwood Market representing his farm, but he says he already loves

KRISTY AMBERSKI/MAGOON

Every Saturday until the end of October, the Boltwood Market will offer items such as jewelry, produce, clothing and artwork.

the experience. Not only has the market offered him a chance to sell his maple syrup to the Amherst community, but the opportunity to trade with other vendors as well. This syrup comes in many different sizes, so if you are craving a natural sugar fix, be sure to come pick up a bottle that will compliment any waffle or pancake.

In the center of the market there are two rows of tents, starting with Tuck Away Farm. This farm is owned by a couple who lived in Italy, where they owned an olive grove and produced olive oil.

After moving back to New England, they became committed to bringing authentic Italian foods and recipes to their customers, so they decided to import olive oil from their home in Italy. They now have a farm nearby where they grow other produce. Also sold at the table are delicious loaves of bread and types of pastas and even a cookbook. Look for the Tuck Away Farm table if you are seeking local, sustainable foods with an authentic, delicious taste.

The second tent has a beautiful display of jewelry by TK Glass Creations. Each necklace and pair of earrings is handmade and carefully assembled, but sold at an affordable price (ranging from $10 to $30). Along with beaded and sterling silver jewelry, organic lotions and soaps are sold. Mother's Day anyone?

Right next to TK Glass Creations is Red Bird Crafts, a company owned by Emily Neuburger, a local resident of Massachusetts. Her irresistibly cute baby clothes and tote bags are all made from fair trade, organic materials, such as hemp, and are hand-sewn and pre-washed. Her patterns include themed patches with prints, fruits and vegetables, but she also entertains special requests and orders. If you have a baby shower coming up or are looking for a durable, simple yet original tote bag, Red Bird Crafts is your go-to tent.

After having a terrific beginning to its second year running, Boltwood Market is looking forward to a great season of connecting regional workers and buyers. It will be open for the rest of the summer, up until the end of October, so look for all your local produce, jewelry, arts, crafts and paintings every Saturday from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. This is a great place for vendors, and there are available spots for anyone who is interested. Contact the coordinator of Boltwood Market at (413) 253-7879 or info@amherstlincolnrealty.com.

Sarah Albert can be reached at salbert@student.umass.edu.

Annual Take Back the Night spotlights sexual violence

By Solmaaz Yazdha
Collegian Correspondent

One in four women and one in seven men will be sexually assaulted in his or her lifetime. On Thursday, the University of Massachusetts' annual Take Back the Night addressed this frighteningly real fact. Co-organizer of the event and senior Legal and Women's Studies Major Emma McAlary said, "The goal is two-fold – one is to make survivors of sexual assault know that there are resources out there and a community that is willing to embrace them. They are not alone."

Take Back the Night started off with guest speakers Tom Schiff Ed.D., a health educator from University Heath Services, and Brett-Geney Janiczek Beemyn from the Stonewall Center. Schiff illustrated what men can do to end violence.

"I'm honored to be here and at the same time I'm appalled at the need to have this event," said Schiff. One method he proposed is to terminate the use of passive vocabulary, like the ever-so-popular phrases, "I hit that," or "I nailed her." Schiff also said, "We should be approaching rape and sexual abuse as a men's issue."

He pointed out that the majority of sexual perpetrators are male. Member of Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity and freshman History major Kevin Bolduc was an attendee of TBN, along with several of his fraternity brothers.

"The issue of violence against women is an issue that we all need to confront. Men are by far the cause of this violence, and we need to tackle this problem and do all that we can to end it. Hopefully in the future, events like Take Back the Night will not be necessary because sexual violence will have ended," said Bolduc.

In a different light, Beemyn addressed sexual violence from the view point of the LGBT (lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender) community. He pointed out that only nine states have laws protecting transgender people from discrimination in housing, credit, etc., and Massachusetts is not one of them. In the last two months, the Stonewall Center has been vandalized twice.

MELISSA GARBER/COLLEGIAN

On Thursday evening the annual event Take Back the Night offered speakers and a candle lighting ceremony, organized by UMass students.

"It is very difficult to be visibly gender different, to be queer, in this society," said Beemyn, stressing the urgency of progress and policy change at UMass, as well as around the country. He elaborated by saying, "We think of UMass as a progressive, forward-thinking institution, but I'm amazed at the silence around this issue. People need to recognize

See TBN on page 6

Students organize benefit

By Olga Deshchenko,
Collegian Staff

Summer is slowly creeping up on the final weeks of the academic calendar as students finish up the last of their papers and exams. But before freshmen Caroline Koch, Robby Vanasse and Regina Parkinson leave campus this spring, they plan to ignite interest in community service by putting on a benefit concert at Van Meter called Central Cause.

"A bunch of people on the floor were talking about how there are events in our building, but none of them are really for charity," explained Koch. "It seems like it makes sense to have music and charity go together. It is a good way to bring people together and help out."

All the proceeds from Central Cause will go to the Amherst Survival Center (ASC), a local organization that provides food, clothing, household items and other services to those in need. While searching for possible charitable causes online, Koch stumbled upon the ASC and decided to share her idea of the benefit concert with its staff.

"I met with the assistant director, a U-Mass alumna who is such a cool person. Everyone is really excited about the concert; they really like student volunteers," said Koch.

The students did not have to look far to create a lineup for the concert. Scheduled to perform are a variety of acoustic performances, several bands, an MC and the well-known a cappella group The Dynamics.

"We have a bunch of acts from Van Meter. There are just so many musicians in this building," said Koch.

Two of the three organizers of the concert will take the stage as well. Koch and Vanasse, both devout lovers of music and the performing arts, will play guitar and sing.

"People really like performing, getting out there and having a good time," said Vanasse. "And if you could help people at the same time, then that is great."

A booth with details about the ASC, flyers and volunteer information will be set up at the concert to help raise awareness and spread the word about the organization. Attendees are also asked to bring donations of non-perishable food items or clothing in good condition. The event poster encourages students to go through their clothing before they go home for the semester and donate items they may not wear or need anymore.

"I know girls who have way too much clothing," Koch laughingly noted.

On top of student entertainment and an assortment of light snacks, the benefit concert will also have a raffle. Parkinson, who is a dancer, teamed up with Koch and reached out to local businesses for donations that could be used in the raffle. Places like Antonio's Pizza and Loose Goose Cafe donated gift certificates that will be given away to lucky raffle winners at the show.

Koch hopes that the student turn-out will be large enough to help the ASC and is thankful for the support from her friends. The students passed information and flyers on to the building's cluster office, which will spread the word about the concert all over the Central and Orchard Hill area.

"We are just looking to bring charity to the surface," said Vannase. "It is so close and so accessible. I think more people would do it if they knew that it was out there."

The Central Cause benefit concert is this Wednesday, from 8 p.m. to 10:30 p.m. in the Van Meter basement. Admission is $3 and the performances are estimated to last for about two hours. "But with these jam bands in our day, who knows?" Vannase pointed out.

Olga Deshchenko can be reached at Odeshche@student.umass.edu

OLGA DESHCHENKO / COLLEGIAN

UMass students Caroline Koch, Regina Parkinson and Robby Vannasse are pioneers of a new community service benefit called Central Cause, which will take place in the Van Meter basement on Wednesday.

M. WILSON / COLLEGIAN

Central Cause will contribute all proceeds from Wednesday night to the Amherst Survival Center, above, which is a local organization that provides food, clothing and household items to those in need.

'Mormons' documentary airing on PBS

By Hal Boedeker
The Orlando Sentinel

Religion rarely receives any time in prime time. So four hours devoted to Mormonism are going to stand out on the TV landscape.

PBS' "The Mormons" deserves the attention because the documentary takes a thoughtful, probing look at a religion that has angered and mystified millions through U.S. history. History matters as much as religious doctrine in this epic American story of outsiders becoming insiders.

The program premieres as Mormons gain new stature: Harry Reid leads Senate Democrats, and Republican Mitt Romney runs for president. Director Helen Whitney didn't interview either in the program, which airs from 9 p.m. to 11 p.m. tonight and Tuesday night.

But Whitney has found first-rate speakers and assembled the material with style. She achieves balance by interviewing believers and skeptics, church insiders and the excommunicated. Most crucially, she provides respect that has often been denied the religion.

Utah historian Ken Verdoia points to presidential inaugurations to trace the Mormons' rise. In the span of a century, presidents went from decrying the religion to asking the Mormon Tabernacle Choir to sing.

Mormons "were considered a knife at the back of the American experience," Verdoia says. "Now they are, in fact, considered in some ways the very embodiment of what it means to be American. How was that brought about?"

The first half examines the religion's history. Joseph Smith's vision of the angel Moroni led to publication of the Book of Mormon and the church's founding in 1830.

"It was religion made in the USA," author Simon Worrall says. "For the first time, you had a home-grown religion, a home-grown prophet."

And it was a source of controversy immediately, with newspapers and traditional Christians decrying what they saw as blasphemy and fraud. The Mormons faced persecution in Ohio, Missouri and Illinois. Smith's death at the hands of an Illinois mob could have been the end.

But Brigham Young emerged as leader and guided believers to the Valley of the Great Salt Lake in 1847. Whitney recounts that heroic feat in stirring style.

She also explores dark chapters in Mormon history. In 1857, Mormons attacked a wagon train in what became known as the Mountain Meadows Massacre. At least 120 travelers were slain, and a church cover-up began.

"How did these decent, religious men who had sacrificed so much for what they believed in, how did they become mass murderers?" historian Will Bagley asks.

Whitney turns to polygamy without sensationalism. Church leader Young would marry more than 50 women. The program estimates that just 20 percent to 30 percent of Mormons practiced polygamy.

Still, plural marriage would hurt the Mormons' image and stall Utah statehood for nearly 50 years. In 1890, the church renounced polygamy.

The documentary's second half explores the church's growth, mission and determination to control its message. Whitney provides context and discussion rare for a medium driven by sound bites.

Speakers cite family as central to Mormonism's growth and endurance. ("South Park" made the same point in an episode on Mormonism.)

"It's the Mormon fixation on the family as a coherent unit that's so important, says Jon Butler, a Yale professor of religion. "Within Mormonism there is an emphasis on the collective, the collective sense of the family."

Author Terryl Givens says Mormons understand family "not as an entity of social organization but as an organization that has its roots in the pre-mortal world and will persist into the eternal life."

The most moving segment focuses on a family sustained by faith as a 23-year-old daughter deals with a fatal condition. But Whitney also explores why the religion isn't accommodating to intellectuals, feminists, gays and dissenters.

Trevor Southey, an excommunicated gay, says, "There's something terribly tragic that not only Mormonism but most religions have such a hard time with the odd ducks."

For a lot of their history, the Mormons were odd ducks. Savvy public relations helped change that situation.

"One of the major PR tools of the church has been the tabernacle choir," says U.S. Sen. Robert Bennett, R-Utah. "When they got on radio, they became the nation's choir. The tabernacle choir has been an extraordinary ambassador for the church."

To its great credit, "The Mormons" goes beyond public relations to ask important questions in an intelligent way. All religions should be so lucky on television.

COURTESY TIME LIFE PICTURES

The LDS Church cooperated with Whitney, but had nothing to say about the final product.

Mos Def headlines AC Spring Concert

The Amherst College Spring Concert also featured the lyrical workings of Lyrispect, Subliminal and Hezekiah.

MOS DEF from page 5

though there was more than a handful of hip-hop fans enthused to be in the presence of at least some kind of music.

After Hezekiah thanked "Manherst" several times (mistaking the town's name), the stage was left in silence for nearly 30 minutes while the audience waited impatiently for Def's long-awaited performance. It was about 10 p.m. when Def finally took the stage, and instantly the stale time the crowd spent standing on their sore feet was forgiven and forgotten.

Def mostly played songs from his recent album, "True Magic," which was released in December, and selectively inserted a few songs from his 2004 album, "The New Danger." The crowd seemed to be more excited over the "Danger" songs, like "Ghetto Rock" and "The Boogie Man Song." His mostly upbeat set was punctuated by a few occasional a cappella moments, but over all, the lyrical wizard strayed away from keeping it mellow. The set went on for roughly an hour before Def exited the stage, only to return for one final song finale.

Though the Amherst College context in which the spring concert performances were delivered seemed strange considering the content and genre of the music, Five-College fans seemed more than comfortable as they bounced to the hip-hop.

The upcoming spring concert at the University of Massachusetts will feature former Black Star member, Talib Kweli, who created the album "Mos Def and Talib Kweli Are Blackstar" with Def in 1998.

Morgan-ann Rousseau can be reached at Mrousseau@student.umass.edu.

Take Back the Night raises awareness

UMass student Emma McAlary, above, lights a candle in remembrance of victims of sexual abuse at Thursday's TBN event.

TBN from page 5

the importance of justice."

Following the guest speakers, singer/songwriter Robin Lane performed several songs written by sexual-assault victims. The songs entailed sullen stories of abusive fathers and angry boyfriends. Clad in an unevenly buttoned striped blouse, black skirt and combat boots, Lane referred to music as a "magical medium" through which to heal wounds explaining that, "It's all about having a voice."

Afterwards, attendees of TBN had the opportunity to participate in a survivor speak-out. One by one, students and women from the community rose to recount their painful tales and truths that had been so hard at one time to face. Though tears were shed, TBN seemed to have a healing effect for many attendees. "If this event can touch one person's life, it is successful," said McAlary.

"I would like to see more people involved with this event – this being said, I wish people wouldn't shy away from the issue of sexual assault. I hope that it will become more open and publicly spoken about until the day that it no longer is an issue," said McAlary.

The event made clear the necessity that both women and men come together and work as allies against the horrors of sexual assault.

TBN ended with a candlelight vigil and a march around the campus pond.

Salmaaz Yazdha can be reached at Syazdh@student.umass.edu.

MICHAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

Before the TBN march across campus, speakers and victims alike gathered to discuss issues of sexual abuse.

RSOs:
Put Your Advertisement in the Daily Collegian!
RSOs receive a discounted rate for advertising.
Advertise your group's events at low cost.

Seeking Advice?
E-mail our advice columnist Veronica Garrett at:
Vgarrett@student.umass.edu

Write for Arts & Living
*See your writing in print
*Interview artists of all kinds
*Gain resume experience
E-mail Collegianarts@gmail.com or Arts@dailycollegian.com

Clutch goals seal win

M. LACROSSE from page 10

With Syracuse's Jon Jerome sent off for holding, the Minutemen looked for their second man-up goal of the afternoon – senior Brett Garber scored on the extra-man opportunity for UMass' first goal of the day late in the opening quarter.

Attackman Jim Connolly's shot from the right side was saved by goaltender Peter Colucci, but he couldn't control the rebound. The ball deflected directly to Balise who put it in the net from the left side.

Then the Orange came back with two straight goals, one to finish the third and another to open the fourth, to climb within two. Greg Niewieroski was taken out in front of Schneider but still managed to shoot the ball past the goalie, and Dan Hardy scored the middle goal of his hat trick 30 seconds into the fourth.

For a while it looked as if Syracuse had awoken, but then Andrew Recchione stole the momentum back for the home team. He continued his hot scoring streak of late with his 10th goal of the season at the 10:02 mark of the fourth period.

Tim Balise controlled the ball behind the cage and surveyed the field looking for a cutter. Recchione then found a seam in the Syracuse defense and ran to the net from the top left side of the box. He walked in untouched and Balise fed him a perfect pass for the shot in stride.

But the Orange kept fighting back.

Just over a minute later Mike Leveille scored his first of two in a row to tighten the game. His first came off a crucial mistake by the Minutemen at the midfield line. They put the ball on the ground and Syracuse scooped it up.

Matt Abbott picked up the groundball and led the break into the attacking box. He raced all the way to the top-left of Schneider's crease before sending the ball over to Leveille. He caught and shot before Schneider had time to shift over.

Leveille's second score came unassisted. Syracuse worked the ball to Leveille who stationed himself behind the net. He then wrapped around to Schneider's left, turned and fired the shot just as he got out front.

At this point, those in attendance began to sense this was going to be another close finish between these two teams.

Connolly gave the Minutemen some much-needed insurance with the final goal of his own hat trick with just under seven minutes remaining. Midfielder Rory Pedrick sent a pass down to Connolly in the middle of the Syracuse defense. The attackman turned and scored on an underhand shot.

Again, however, the Minutemen could not breathe easy.

Hardy capped his hat trick 1:12 later to again bring the UMass lead to a single goal. He took a hard shot from the left side that ricocheted off the crossbar and rattled around the near post before crossing the goal line.

Tensions began to rise on the UMass sideline as fears of another blown opportunity began to mount, but Garber was there, as he has been all season, to bail the Minutemen out.

He had the ball at the top left and ran in when he saw a break in the defense. Garber slowed when he got about 10 yards from the net, cocked his stick back, held it for a second and unleashed a shot that sailed by Colucci before the goalie could get his stick up.

The home-team's sideline erupted as the final seconds ticked off the clock because this was essentially the culmination of each team's season, but UMass coach Greg Cannella won't admit that.

"There's another week left and we're still going to be fighting for our lives," he said. "I'm psyched to go to practice on Monday."

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu. Log onto the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

Senior Brian Jacovina played a key role in running the UMass offense against Syracuse on Saturday. The speedy midfielder assisted on the first goal of the game and picked up one ground ball.

Goalie makes crucial saves, energizes UM knee to make a stop and other times leaping with the stick in a full extension.

SCHNEIDER from page 10

And the Orange weren't lucky enough to get any rebound goals. Schneider corralled the ball off of an Orange shot and gave UMass an immediate possession, rather than give SU a shot opportunity from close range.

Schneider's effectiveness boosted his team's play, emboldening the UMass defenders into taking some chances that they wouldn't normally take because they have a pretty solid insurance policy standing between the posts.

"Certainly the defense feels very comfortable because they can make a mistake now and then and Doc is going to bail them out," Cannella said. "I'm very proud of him. If somebody scores on him then it's on to the next play. He's trying to get everybody else fired up."

Syracuse scored just 25 seconds into the game when Orange attack Dan Hardy notched the first of his three goals on the day by firing a laser high past Schneider. But 28 minutes passed before the Orange scored again.

SU notched its second goal of the game with 57 seconds left in the second quarter after midfielder Greg Rommel flipped an underhanded shot from the left wing, high to the stick side.

Schneider flung his stick straight up and caught the ball, but his stick went under the crossbar and pushed the net upwards. The referees ruled it a goal, but the television replay on ESPNU said otherwise. The ball never broke the plane.

The Minutemen scored twice in the third before SU added its next goal, and it was 6-3 going into the fourth quarter. In the final frame, SU's Mike Leveille had his way with Schneider and the UMass defense.

Leveille scored at 14:30, 8:41 and 7:48, the latter two on consecutive possessions. But the three goals were mixed in with five saves, two of which Schneider made in a rapid-fire sequence around the 9:00 mark, energizing his teammates and a dormant Garber.

SU's final goal came with over five minutes left in the fourth quarter, cutting UMass' lead down to one at 8-7 before Garber gave the Minutemen a two-goal cushion at 3:26, effectively sealing the victory.

Schneider saved a couple more shots before time ran out on Syracuse, and he could finally exhale once the Orange barrage was over.

"They can run-and-gun better than most teams so we just tried to play a little inside-out, and more or less play a six-on-six game with them," he said. "On offense they can play with the best of them."

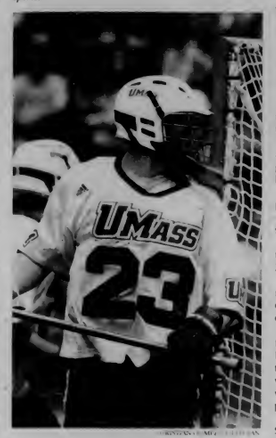
Syracuse coach John Desko had this to say about the UMass goalie: "I have to give credit to their goaltender. We started out shooting on him low and that gave him a lot of confidence because that's his strength. Then we tried moving up on him up top and he adjusted pretty well. He made a lot of big saves for them."

On Senior Day at Garber Field, it was a sophomore who stole the spotlight. To teammates and coaches, Schneider's excellence is never surprising. Schneider has set that standard for himself through his efficiency in the net. But even the highest expectations were too low on Saturday.

"We knew Doc was going to make saves," Cannella said. "We didn't know he was going to make 19."

A pleasant surprise – kind of.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu.



Sophomore Doc Schneider made 19 saves while allowing seven goals in Saturday's win over Syracuse.

Victory over SU highlights up-and-down 2007 campaign

Rob Greenfield

There haven't been many shiny or happy moments for the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team this season.

After the 2006 group put the pedal to the floor and high-tailed it to the national championship game, the 2007 edition was dealt a giant piece of humble pie after a 2-5 start to the season.

It was an unfair situation really, a hard one for players going into their senior season to deal with – to have it be their team, knowing they would struggle to grab the coattails of last year's squad.

But the 2007 Minutemen accomplished something on Saturday that the already-legendary 2006ers didn't: beat Syracuse.

And not only did the Minutemen beat the now-blue Orange, UMass ended SU's run of 24 consecutive playoff appearances with a 9-7 victory over the Construction Cones at Garber Field.

"It's tough to lose here. It's a difficult place to play," SU coach John Desko said about Garber Field. "It's their home field. It's AstroTurf and we practiced on that all week long so we knew what we were getting into. We didn't come as prepared as I thought we were."

These UMass seniors enjoy seeing orange. Since 2005, UMass has beaten Syracuse three-straight times at Garber Field. Players were slipping awkwardly on the field all day and UMass goalie Doc Schneider made an incredible 19 saves. It all equaled some bad times for Syracuse.

"It feels good to beat [Syracuse]," senior attack Denis Whelan said. "[Syracuse has] gotten us in the past history, but it seems like we've got them on this field. There's something about this field that they can't handle."

No one knows that more than senior captain Brett Garber, who had mixed emotions about playing his last game on Garber Field, named after his grandfather, Dick Garber.

But Brett performed to the occasion and played a big role in ending the longest non-non-existent streak in college sports, scoring three goals on four shots. Garber was aware of SU's playoff situation heading into the game, and downplayed the significance of defeating Syracuse in his last game on his home field.

"We were definitely aware of that, and you have to give Syracuse all the credit in the world," Garber said. "They're a great team and they fought hard the whole way down."

Then he addressed SU's streak.

"Yeah, we snapped it," he said. "But we're focusing on our season right now."

And they celebrated the monumental victory after the game with hugs and pictures with families. Every player was wearing a smile underneath the eye-black and one reporter commented, "It's like they won the national championship."

In this season, Saturday was the closest thing to it.

"We worked so hard and we had an up-and-down season," midfielder Rory Pedrick said. "For our seniors, their last chance on this field there's nothing better than to make history and knock Syracuse off for the first time in 24 years. That's big for them."

Garber Field was packed with 4,438 fans (perhaps including some of the spectators watching from Tobin?) and the grass hill looked like the lawn at a sold-out Tweeter Center. The visitor's side of the stands was full with Orange lovers, and the smoke from the Garber grill outside the stadium rose high over the turf.

The parents of UMass seniors sat eagerly in the stands. Some donned maroon and others took it a step further, like Denis Whelan's dad who sported a maroon shirt that said 'Whelan, 16' in white writing on the back.

The game itself was as good as advertised. Syracuse, down 6-2 after sophomore attack Tim Balise put in his only goal of the day at the 11:51 mark of the third quarter, stormed back and made it a game.

Syracuse's Dan Hardy (that trick for the day) pulled his team within one with 5:31 left in the fourth quarter with a spinning shot from the center of the box that zinged past Schneider, hit the top post and went in to make it 8-7.

UMass, in a game plan that I-Mass coach Greg Cannella emphasized in the week of practice before the game, slowed things down and tried to milk as much clock as possible (think handing it off to Steve Baylark in football) before getting a quality shot.

And the Minutemen got the best shot of the day from Garber. He freed himself at the left side of the box and sprinted towards the net untouched. He aimed and crow-hopped – like he was trying to pick someone off at the plate – and fired, placing the ball on the top shelf for I-Mass' ninth goal of the game.

With 3:26 left, there was the possibility of a 'Cuse comeback and a nightmare ending, but an SU turnover at the 2:48 mark finished those thoughts.

It ended, appropriately, with senior Brian Jacovina, heaving the ball into the air as the buzzer sounded the end of SU's long playoff run.

"We worked all week for this," Garber said. "This is a special feeling for everyone on this team. We wanted to end it right."

And they got what they wanted.

Rob Greenfield is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu.

Pitching propels Minutemen

BASEBALL from page 10

allowed three hits and five walks, while striking out four for his second win of the season. Dayton did all of its damage with two outs in the bottom of the ninth on a two-run home run by Frank Tedesco off Adamski.

Saturday's game marked the Flyers' best opportunity this weekend to break through against the Minutemen, but they fell just short. Trailing 4-2 entering the bottom of the ninth, Dayton sparked a rally against Adamski – scoring the third run of the game, while having the tying run reach third base with one out.

Needing a sacrifice fly to tie the game, UD leadoff man Michael Massa fouled out to first for the second out and Adamski closed out the game for his third save, after Scott Dunwoody grounded out to first baseman Andy Tuetken.

Jim Cassidy picked up the win for UMass – his fifth straight victory – allowing two runs in 7 1/3 innings. He surrendered seven hits and two walks, while striking out four. He took the team-lead in wins over Chris Lloyd with five and also leads in strikeouts (27) and earned run average (3.35).

The bottom of the order paced the Minutemen offense, with outfielders Travis Munsey and Bill Rankin combining to go 6-for-6 with one run and two RBIs. Adamski and Tempesta each added two hits.

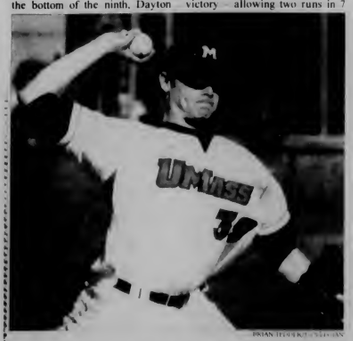
It was a UMass hit parade (14 team hits) on Friday for the Minutemen in their 12-4 victory. Five players enjoyed multi-hit efforts, led by Rankin (4-for-5, four runs scored). Ryan Franczek (3-for-4, two home runs and three RBIs), Proietti (2-for-5, three RBI) and Travis Munsey (2-for-4, three RBIs) Dunwoody was the lone offensive threat for Dayton, going 4-for-5 with two runs scored and two RBIs.

Flyers starter Chris Rubio struggled in his five innings, allowing five runs (four earned) on six hits. The Dayton defense did not help either, committing five errors in the game.

For UMass, Lloyd notched his fourth win of the season – lasting six innings and surrendering four runs. He allowed eight hits, while walking four and striking out three.

Mitchell Eilenberg closed out the final three innings for the Minutemen, picking up his first save of the season.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu.



Senior Chris Lloyd improved his record to 4-3 after picking up the win in Friday's game against Dayton, allowing four runs in six innings.

Check dailycollegian.com for audio from Saturday's win over Syracuse.

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
PRESIDENTIAL APTS
COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
PERRY APTS
177 N. PLEASANT ST.
COLLEGE INN APTS
LANTERN COURT APTS
MILL HOLLOW
CRESTVIEW APTS
55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

Minutewomen ride long ball

SOFTBALL from page 10

UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "They gave us a great battle in the first game. I was a little disappointed that we didn't come up with more timely hitting and break it wide open, but I thought we held our poise and played great defense. And I thought we got a decent enough game out of Brandice."

Candice Molinari went 3-for-3 in the game as the only UMass player with multiple hits.

Bouncing back from a difficult outing against the Terriers last Thursday, Balchunitier gave up two earned runs on seven hits, while striking out seven. Neither pitcher walked a batter in the game.

Most of the offense came in the bottom of the second inning for the Maroon and White. With Jackie Teman running for Amanda Acampora, who singled to left field, Samantha Salato hit her second home run of the season to put the Minutewomen ahead, 2-0.

After squaring to bunt early in the at-bat, Salato drove a 2-1 pitch over the fence in left-center to start things for UMass.

The Minutewomen scored again on a wild throw from third baseman Elana Meyers. With shortstop Whitney Williams on first, Molinari dropped a bunt directly in front of the circle.

With Molinari's speed on the basepaths being no secret, Meyers hurried the throw, which sailed over the first baseman's head and into foul territory up the right side. Williams scored from first, making it 3-0. Molinari wheeled around to third on the play, though the Minutewomen could not bring her home during the inning.

UMass added another run in the third when Salato drove in Proctor on a groundout to third.

The Colonials grabbed a runs in the fourth and seventh. But the team could not build a rally, falling short, 4-2.

Sanders got the nod in the circle for Game 2, but the bats were the story of the rematch with GW.

Cullington hit two more home runs, giving her 14 on the year and tying her with K.J. Kelley for the school's single-season mark. Kelley set the record in 2005, like Cullington, in her junior year.

UMass broke out early in Game 2, scoring four in the first inning. After Proctor drove in Molinari with a single, she scored on a double by Mollica, in which the right fielder bobbled the ball.

Then, with Mollica at second, Acampora hit her first home run of the day to left-center putting the Minutewomen up 4-0.

They added three more in the third to pull away for good. Sortino must have seen something to take advantage of in opposing pitcher Lisa Cohen, because the Minutewomen jumped on pitches early in the count throughout the inning.

Cullington sent the first pitch of the frame over the opposite-field fence, her 13th of the season. Proctor then singled off the first pitch she saw from Cohen and advanced to third on a sacrifice bunt by Mollica. UMass had one run in and a runner on second through three pitches in the inning.

Acampora was next to jump on the first pitch, hitting her second two-run home run of the day, and the second round-tripper of the inning for the Minutewomen, making the score 7-0 after three.

The only run for the Colonials came off the bat of Meyers, who hit a rare home run off of Balschmiter in the fourth. The ball not only left the field, but also flew over the chain-link fence behind it and into the parking lot.

Cullington responded by doing just the same in the bottom of the inning. With two outs, she sent a 2-2 pitch over everything in left field, tying the UMass home run record in the process.

"It felt good," Cullington said. "It felt just like the one [against BU] that was a grand slam."

Sanders' stellar performance in the circle was overshadowed by the offensive display in Game 2. The freshman gave up just one earned run on five hits, striking out four. Her one walk came on the 19th pitch of a tough battle with Carrie Higdon, who fouled off nearly every pitch she faced.

The Minutewomen's current winning streak now sits at 18 games. UMass has also won its last 24 games at the UMass Softball Complex. Both streaks rank second in the nation.

Jeremy Rice can be reach at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

BRIAN TUCKER/COLLEGIAN

With 94-career stolen bases, senior Candice Molinari is 10 shy of breaking the school record of 103, set by Tracey Osier in 1998.

Molinari provides dimension to team

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

In yesterday's doubleheader with George Washington, the Massachusetts softball team combined for five home runs – two each by senior Amanda Acampora and junior Stacy Cullington. But the most impressive offensive performance of the day came from senior Candice Molinari.

In her seven at-bats, the speedy centerfielder collected four hits, scored a run and generally wreaked havoc on the GW defense while on the base paths. While most players do the bulk of their damage with a bat in their hands, Molinari's bat acts as her opening act to the performance the UMass faithful turn out to see.

"I just try to get on base and use my speed," Molinari said. "I try to get on as much as I can so that the girls behind me can hit me in. They've been doing a really good job of that, so I basically just try to get on for them."

After a Whitney Williams single in the second inning of Game 1, Molinari came up hoping to reach base and keep the inning going for the big bats behind her. In typical fashion, Molinari slapped a first-pitch fastball to the left side of the drawn in infield.

GW third baseman Elana Meyers calmly gathered the roller and looked to throw Molinari out. But when Meyers looked up, Molinari was already a step from first base. In haste, Meyers rifled the ball to the covering second baseman. But the ball sailed over her head, ending up in the right-field corner.

Williams scored and Molinari wound up on third base. UMass coach Elaine Sortino thought about waving her captain home, but hesitated because the middle of the order was due up.

Turning a harmless bunt single attempt into a run-scoring triple should be a novelty, but for Molinari it's just another day at the office.

"When [GW] finally got her out, I heard the whole team say 'that's the first time we got her out,'" Sortino said of Molinari. "Getting her out is a victory for them. It's not only her batting average, it's her on-base percentage and the fact that she can move and we don't need to bunt her over makes her nice to have."

Molinari did just that in the fourth inning of Game 1 when she stole second base after yet-another single that didn't get past the pitching circle.

Of her four hits on the day, only one actually reached the outfield. In the top of the first inning, she hit a weak popup that found its way between the second baseman and right fielder. When the right fielder collected the ball to return it to the infield, Molinari was already at second base.

"Our training has made her more aware, but that's just her instincts," Sortino said. "On that double, she didn't even stop. She never even thought about stopping. That's just Candice."

Those instincts allowed Molinari to become one of UMass' most dangerous offensive weapons. A defense really can never rest once Molinari reaches first. Earlier this season, following another single that didn't advance past the pitcher, Molinari realized none of the opposition infielders had an eye on her so she took off for second base while the pitcher was walking back to the mound, sliding into second base without drawing a throw.

That wasn't an isolated incident either; Molinari takes the chance to steal a base in the unconventional way whenever she knows that no eyes are on her.

She isn't a weapon only on offense; she leads UMass outfielders this season with seven assists. Most recently, against Boston University, Molinari put an end to the Terrier threat by throwing out sophomore Christy Leath at home. At that time, the Minutewomen trailed 2-0 – they won the game 10-4.

The assist seemed to send a message to the rest of the Minutewomen who looked flat before Molinari made her presence felt.

As the 2007 season comes to a close, Molinari continues to propel UMass to success. While the Minutewomen will ultimately be judged by their overall team accomplishments, there is one individual distinction that Sortino hopes will fall in favor of Molinari. Coming into the season, Molinari had 77 career stolen bases. She has 17 on the year, putting her nine behind Tracy Osier's 103. Osier played at UMass from 1995-1998.

"I know that I said I don't care about records, but one record I want to see fall is that stolen base record," Sortino said. "I would love to see [Molinari] be able to break it. That's been standing since 1998."

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu

UMass closes season with two victories

By Kevin Dooley
Collegian Staff

If there is any truth to the claim that carrying momentum into the following season is important, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team can rest assured it has plenty to bring into 2008.

UMass closed out the 2007 regular season on a high note this weekend at McGuirk Stadium with a pair of wins against the La Salle Explorers, 19-8, on Senior Day Sunday and the St. Joseph's Hawks, 9-5, Friday.

Despite finishing the season winning three of its last four games, the Minutewomen (8-9, 3-4 Atlantic10) were already eliminated from postseason contention before the first whistle blew Friday.

They finished below the .500 mark for the fourth consecutive season, and this is just the second time in nine years that UMass failed to qualify for the A-10 Tournament.

Junior Kathleen Typadis capped her historical season Sunday by breaking the school's all-time single-season goal record with her 52nd score of the year on her fifth goal of the game at the 11:52 mark of the second half. The record previously belonged to Pam Moryl, who set the benchmark in 1984. Typadis had 10 goals at weekend's end.

But Typadis wasn't the only Minutewoman to get involved in the scoring mayhem Sunday. Nine different players scored for the Minutewomen, including sophomore midfielder Holly Drown, who recorded a career-high five goals. She finished second on the team with 35 goals.

The 19-goal perfonmance is the team's best offensive production in a single game since the 2005 season when UMass defeated Albany, 19-10.

"It was great to get everyone a lot of looks," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "That was kind of the theme the whole entire year. We didn't care who scored the goals as long as they kept on coming."

La Salle (4-11, 0-7 A-10) entered Sunday as the worst defensive unit in the A-10, and it certainly lived up to that reputation.

UMass	19
La Salle	8

After both teams traded possessions for the first six minutes, the Minutewomen went on a 5-0 run ignited by junior midfielder Jeannette Villapaino's second goal of the year at the 24:08 mark.

UMass	9
St. Joe's	5

The Minutewomen scored five more times in the half to build a commanding 10-2 lead heading into the break. Junior attacks Melynda Zwick and Kristina Twichell each had two helpers in the opening 30 minutes.

The Explorers cut the deficit to 10-4 after notching the first two goals of the half, but UMass stormed back to the register the next four. Everyone's attention then shifted to Typadis's pursuit of the record.

UMass' senior class didn't disappoint in their final game either – midfielder Samantha Sepulveda contributed to the scoring onslaught with two goals and two assists while Lauren McCarthy made 10 saves. Defender Erica Shapiro turned in a solid performance with three groundballs and one draw control.

Venechanos had high praise for her three departing players after the game.

"I think the seniors really put their mark on this program," she said. "They definitely left our program in good shape for years to come. They definitely set the foundation for us."

Freshman attack Kaitlin Johnson recorded her first career goal with 34 seconds remaining in the game.

St. Joe's (7-9, 2-5 A-10) had an outside shot of making the postseason prior to Friday's game, but it was the Minutewomen that played like they were the team with a playoff berth at stake.

UMass was in firm control of the first 30 minutes, outscoring St. Joe's, 7-1, and holding a 17-3 edge in shots. The Hawks didn't establish anything remotely resembling an offensive attack and were hindered by an inability to connect on passes upfield.

Once again, Typadis sparked UMass' offense in the first 15 minutes, scoring three of UMass' first four goals against goalie Suzy Helthy. Her size (six-feet) didn't weigh on the Minutewomen's minds entering the game.

"We don't like to get ourselves too nervous about any particular goalie," Typadis said. "She's a lefty so that factored into our approach against her. When we're playing a big goalie, I just try to see the outsides of the net."

UMass scored the first six goals of the game, capped off by Drown's goal at the 9:55 mark. Drown finished with two goals.

A flurry of fouls committed by the Minutewomen led to the Hawks' lone goal of the first half at the 8:20 mark. St. Joe's was awarded eight free-position shots in the first half.

Typadis scored her fourth goal of the half to give the Minutewomen a six-goal lead at intermission.

"I think defensively in the first half we pressured the ball a lot," Venechanos said. "Lauren McCarthy made some great saves and we did a great job of playing team defense."

The Minutewomen failed to establish the same intensity in the second half Friday, a problem which plagued UMass all season.

Typadis launched her final shot into the net on a one-timer at the 23:22 mark to make it 8-1 off a pass from Twichell. UMass had only two goals the remainder of the game and was held scoreless for the final 16 minutes of action. St. Joe's scored four of the last five goals and outshot the Minutewomen, 18-8, in the second half.

"I'm very proud of how we played in the first half and I think we had some opportunities in the second half but not nearly as many as we did in the second half," Venechanos said. "I think we did a good job of stopping St. Joe's momentum [in the second half] but we didn't build from that momentum and that's something we talked about before the game."

McCarthy finished the day with eight saves before she was pulled out of the game at the 7:24 mark for sophomore Jamie Whiteway. St. Joe's scored twice on its first two shots against Whiteway to make the score 9-5 at the 4:36 mark. UMass then called timeout and was able to regain possession and run out the clock.

"Lauren was playing great for us the whole game," Venechanos said. "I think it was one of her best games ever. We just wanted to give Jamie some time in net."

Kevin Dooley can be reached at kdooley@student.umass.edu

Typadis breaks UM goal-scoring record

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

For most athletes, breaking a record means reaching one's goal and establishing a new level of excellence. Playing in the season's final game, junior attack Kathleen Typadis did just that while becoming the new single-season goals record holder for the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team.

The Medfield native broke the mark by a single tally and boosted her season total to 52 with her five-goal performance against conference rival La Salle on Sunday afternoon.

"It was a great feeling," Typadis said in reaction to breaking the record. "My teammates were awesome and very supportive. I didn't want to be a hog today, but it was a great feeling. Everyone played very well and it was a great way to do it."

Coming into this weekend, Typadis needed 10 goals to break the record – a seemingly daunting challenge since the junior had only one previous five-goal game this year. But Typadis proved that she was more than capable, scoring five goals in a victory over Saint Joseph's on Friday in addition to Sunday's performance.

The record had previously stood for 23 seasons. Pam Moryl set the mark at 51 goals during the 1984 season in the early years of the program. In addition to ranking first on the single-season goals list, Typadis' 43-goal performance in 2006 now ranks sixth all-time.

The most recent challenge to the record occurred in the 2004 season, when Tracey Drown and Hope Zehnger scored 47 and 45 goals, respectively.

After finding the back of the net twice in the first half, the La Salle defense held Typadis in check through a stretch of 25 minutes extending into both periods.

Senior midfielder Samantha Sepulveda fed Typadis with a pass in the front of the net in the 14th minute of the period. The attackman launched a shot into the cage to increase her season goal total to 50.

With the game clearly in hand, the junior's teammates attempted to set Typadis up with several scoring opportunities. However, Typadis' final two goals came on plays manufactured by her own effort.

Typadis scored the record-tying goal after obtaining possession of the ball and taking it into the offensive zone. The junior beat several defenders, including La Salle goalkeeper Brittany Friedrich.

Less than one minute later, Typadis scored an unassisted goal to break the record. She won the draw control after her own goal and took the ball down the field for the score. Her 52nd of the year also gave the Minutewomen their largest lead of the game, 17-5.

The key to Typadis' offensive success is her consistency, as she has scored at least three goals in 10 of the team's 17 games this season.

Her performance over La Salle also extended the attack's active goal-scoring streak to 41 games. That streak ranks third in the nation and is also the best in the Atlantic 10. In addition, Typadis has scored at least twice in each of the 17 games this year.

Though she leads the team in scoring, UMass coach Alexis Venechanos acknowledges that Typadis typically looks for teammates in the offensive zone before attempting shots for herself.

"Sometimes she doesn't like taking the shots since she's very unselfish," Venechanos said. "But she puts the team on her back at times and she's really needed to do that this year. I think she cares more about the team and getting the win [than breaking the record]. That was definitely first on her mind and she's very humbled by this."

And in Sunday's game, the junior's teammates returned the favor by helping Typadis reach the milestone.

"My teammates were very good about letting me know how many I needed," Typadis said. "But I'm glad we won and that everyone got to play today – that's what's important."

The team's career-goals record could also be in danger with her one season of eligibility remaining. Her 131 career goals place her second on the list, only 39 away from record holder Pam Moryl.

Not only has Typadis started every game of her collegiate career, but 2007 marks her third 35-plus goal season, including 36 during her freshman campaign and 43 last year.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

EXPERIENCE
Gained only through working at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian as a Fall 2007 semester Advertising Representative
If interested please pick up an application at the Daily Collegian Office located in the Campus Center basement or contact Alex Bender at ebender@student.umass.edu

Scoring five goals for the second consecutive game, junior attack Kathleen Typadis broke the UMass single-season goals record with 52.

MOVING ON?
Rent a Truck or Cargo Van
Starting at $19.95
Special Reduced Rates Monday to Thursday
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston, New York & New Jersey
• One Way Rentals
• Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
• Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

Sudoku...

always a perfect snack for an on the go student Malgosia.

Send more heinous pictures of yourself with a completed crossword or sudoku to:

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Free Delivery to UMass Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

8			7
3			6		5
	9			4
	5	8		9		2	3
	2	3				8	6
	6	1		3		9	5
				5			1
			2		1			6
					4			9

andiamo

ACROSS
1 Reporter's coup
6 Practice punching
10 Gather in
14 Japanese car maker
15 Top drawer
16 Mayberry kid
17 Thespian
18 Bonkers
19 Slack TV role
20 Cheering shout
22 Yucatan uncle
23 Bombard
24 "Nova" network
26 Folds
28 Operators, of a sort
33 ___ Aviv-Jaffa Israel
34 Renter's place
36 Scales of the Zodiac
40 Clean coal
41 Boyfriends
43 Hideaway
44 Struck with a bent leg
46 Observance of ceremonies
48 Unpromising replies
50 Paper records
51 Adjusts gauges beforehand
55 Cool!
56 Bread quantity
57 Comic Romano
59 Hurries
64 Shriek for one
65 Time periods
67 Domestic task
68 Kind of log
69 Bando and Mineo
70 Invigorating medicine
71 Notices
72 Mets stadium
73 Tuckered out

DOWN
1 Persian ruler
2 Chariot of fashion
3 Aware of
4 Smart
5 Fortress wall
6 ___ Clemente, CA
7 Look sullen
8 Bit of tomfoolery
9 La Costa or Tahoe
10 "Welcome Back Kotter" co-star
11 Fencing tools
12 Wedding path
13 Bothersome ones
21 SAT subject
25 Scornful look
27 Slippery fish
28 Baseball base
29 Stratford-___ Avon
30 Garden tool
31 Golf charges
32 Sluggish one
35 Private instructor
37 "Joanie Loves Chachi" star
38 Chance taken
39 Weaponry
42 Sweetener
45 Unknown John
47 Kidnaps
49 Emphasis
51 Stratagems
52 Scamp
53 "Guitar Town" singer Steve
54 Songstress McLachlan
58 Harvard rival
60 Boutique e.g.
61 Make a point
62 Emerald Isle
63 Offshoot group
66 987-65-4321 grp

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

DELANO'S
$5 PITCHERS
$2 VODKA WELL DRINKS
GET YOUR BUTT DOWNTOWN!
"The Heart of downtown Amherst"

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I'm so excited, I'm so excited, I'm so, I'm so... scared!"

-Jessica "Jesse" Spano

PAUL By Brian O'Keefe

MISSION ACCOMPLISHED
WHAT'S WITH THE BANNER?
WELL, I'VE BEEN IN BUSINESS FOR TWO MONTHS NOW, AND THINGS ARE GOING WELL, SO I GOT A BANNER.
TWO MONTHS ISN'T A VERY LONG TIME. ISN'T THIS A BIT PREMATURE?
WHAT ARE YOU, A TRAITOR? YOU WANT ME TO GIVE UP AND LET THE OTHER DOG WALKING BUSINESSES WIN, DON'T YOU?
THAT'S NOT WHAT I MEANT AT ALL.
SHUT UP!! SHUT UP!!
O REALLY, NO?!

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

These fallen leaves are shaped like a mushroom cloud
How auspicious
That's the exact opposite of auspicious. That's ominous, is what it is Okay
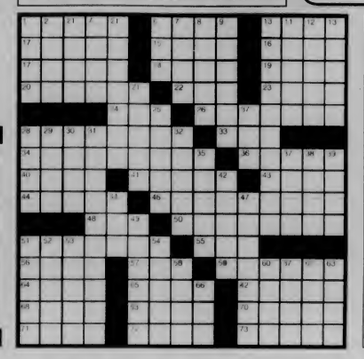
There. Now it's the Virgin Mary!
I don't think you can manufacture auspicious

LABRAT By Richard Martell



Continuing & Professional Education
UMass Amherst Summer 2007
Get an early start on your summer plans!
• New online GenEds
• Same great faculty!
• Smaller classes
• Two Sessions
I: June 4 – July 2
II: July 6 – August 22
(Variable date classes available)
Register now!
By visiting us @
www.UMassLearn.net.de

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Drawing a face on a cucumber and talking to it does not count as friendship.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You are one of the fashion untouchables. You make hat hair work.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Give your friend a back massage using only your feet and lower mandible.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You are kind of a savage. Lucky numbers: 47, 3, 90, 58, 12.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Giraffes may look gangly, unfortunate, sad and feeble but they've got sweet horns.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Keep an ace up your sleeve and a pack of Big League Chew in your pantalones.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Have a pizza delivered to your classroom and adamantly refuse to share.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Set aside time to simply run amuck through a crowd of frightened ducks.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Train your body to effectively digest grass so you never have to grocery shop again.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You are like Vince from "Entourage" because drama follows wherever you go.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You will become as legendary as chicken parmesan.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Go to France. Ok, now don't move. Stay there. GOOD PUPPY!

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
NOW OPEN FOR LUNCH!
HOURS
Sun-Wed 11am-2am
Thurs-Sat 11am-3am
Order by DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Pleasant St.
Next to Pottersauto
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Street Kung Fu The ultimate in personal safety. For class times call 413-325-1322

Like no other course, Army ROTC Join the wave of your generation's willingness to serve our country No strings attached! Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1125, 3 bedroom $1425, 4 bedroom $2175 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must call 413-584-4746

Marketers wanted for part time work during school. Earn $15/hr + bonus. Email rdonaldson@collegepro.com

WORK OUTDOORS THIS SUMMER Full time positions available in your hometown. Earn $8-12/hour Painting houses with a fun crew. Call 888-277-9787 or www.collegepro.com

Brandywine Apts. Needs a certified lifeguard. Full time hours flexible. Must work some weekends. $9.00/ hr Call 549-0600 or stop by office.

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Summer Jobs for the Environment Work with Environment Massachusetts on a campaign to Fight Global Warming and work with great people! Make $400-$600/week. Career oppurtunities and benefits available. Call Mel at 413-256-6434. Visit our website @ www.jobsthatmatter.org

Casting Movers in Athol is looking for summer help to include packing and labor with crews on local and/or long distance household moves. See the country, travel, keep in shape!! Warehouse help also needed for the summer season in our warehouse. Good hourly or daily wages offered. Call Kim Castine at 800-225-8068 x225 or send an email to move@castinemovers.com

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

ROOMMATE WANTED

Cape Cod Seeking summer roommates starting 6/10 Yarmouth, MA near beach. Female only. 617-519-0178

SERVICES

BUY ONE, GET ONE FREE Emergency Contraception (EC), prevents pregnancy up to 5 days after unprotected sex. Affordable and Condifential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992, wwwtapestryhealth.org

Do you have legal Questions? We can help with your problems. Contact Student Legal Services office at 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

SERVICES

Do you know your rights as a student, tenant, worker & consumer? The student Legal Services office can help with your questions. Stop by at 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906. 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright org

SUMMER SUBLET

Alpine Commons apartment June-August 15th $2050/month includes utilities. 413.204.9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

Amherst Beautiful quiet house great location. Need Car. With nice guy and daughter. Perfect for single/ couple. Rent nego. Call Jonathan for details, 413-253-2535

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED $10,000 (Plus expenses) We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1300+ (math+verbal) Physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more information please contact us. Email: Darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

Submit your classifieds online. Just visit www.daily collegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, APRIL 30, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass 9, Syracuse 7

Streak busters

Minuteman win drops Orange from postseason

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

If the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team had a say, it would play Syracuse on Garber Field every year.

UMass' 9-7 victory Saturday gives it four straight wins over the Orange in Amherst. The loss effectively disqualifies Syracuse from the NCAA Tournament for the first time in 24 years.

Saturday's loss also makes it impossible for the Orange to finish with at least a .500 record (5-7 with one game remaining) for the first time in 31 years. Just two years ago the Minutemen's overtime victory over Syracuse ended its 22-year Final Four streak.

"There's been so much pressure on the team every week," Syracuse coach John Desko said. "We've asked these guys to play the best game of their careers week after week after week. I think today there were a lot of things we didn't do well."

This game had a playoff atmosphere as the Minutemen (7-6, 4-2 Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference) will likely be sitting at home when the tournament begins.

"We knew Syracuse was fighting for a playoff spot. It was a playoff atmosphere," UMass goaltender Doc Schneider said. "We just fought together and kept fighting. We've been on the other end of these games and to come out on top is great."

UMass closes out the regular season next weekend in New Brunswick, N.J. in its final ECAC contest against Rutgers. Game time is set for 1 p.m.

The Minutemen dominated much of Saturday's first half and well into the third quarter. UMass led, 6-2, with just under 12 minutes remaining in the third when Tim Balise scored his only goal of the afternoon.

See M. LACROSSE on page 7

Schneider's play keys win, engergizes team

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts goalie Doc Schneider made 19 saves in Saturday's 9-7 win over Syracuse – three more than the total scoring for both teams combined.

Doc was the rock of the UMass effort, and he has been a constant for the Minutemen in a rollercoaster season.

He is the leader of the Minutemen in every way – vocally, by example, off the field, on the field – and the guys rally around him.

"He's an unbelievable competitor," senior captain Brett Garber said. "He's our vocal leader and emotional leader."

"Emotionally, [our players] get a pick-up every time [Schneider] makes a save," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "Fortunately, he has the type of character to play big in a game like today where there's a lot on the line for both teams."

Schneider took the field early Saturday to get some reps in goal before the game. The team emerged from the entrance on the far end of the field without him, walking slowly by the visiting stands and then storming onto the turf by the scorers table. Schneider made his way toward his team, screaming and yelling at his teammates as they ran by him and into their warm-up drills.

When senior Brian Jacovina sent the ball skyward at the final buzzer and the Minutemen claimed the 9-7 win, the players fled from the UMass sideline to celebrate with Schneider, mobbing him in front of the UMass goal as the dejected Orange watched in disbelief.

But Schneider's character is where it starts for the sophomore goalie. The Minutemen benefit mightily from Schneider's performance on the field, especially during a game of Saturday's magnitude.

He was at his best, bouncing around the net, sometimes dropping to one

See SCHNEIDER on page 7

CHRISTIAN GOMEZ/COLLEGIAN

With Saturday's victory, the Minutemen have now won four of the last six games against the Orange dating back to the 2003 season. The win also ended Syracuse's streak of 31 consecutive years with a winning record.

Playoffs in sight for UM with sweep

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

If ever there was a time for a series sweep, it would've been the past weekend for the Massachusetts baseball team.

Three wins and a series sweep later over Dayton this weekend in Ohio, the Minutemen are now serious players in the hunt for one of the final spots in next month's Atlantic 10 Tournament.

UMass (15-18, 9-9 A-10) won easily on Friday, 12-4, but escaped with victories in close games on both Saturday (4-3) and Sunday (4-2).

Nine errors in the series hurt the Flyers (17-15, 6-12 A-10), as they fell into a tie for 11th with La Salle in the conference. The Minutemen moved into a tie for seventh with George Washington, with nine conference games still remaining. The top six teams will advance to the Sunday's game featured a pitching duel between UMass freshman Kyle Travers and Dayton starter Sean Cole, but the Minutemen who made it work first in the sixth inning. A one-out single – scoring three runners altogether on doubles by Ryan Tranczek and Bryan Garrity.

The inning rally started when Projetti reached on a throwing error by 1-D second baseman Cody Hyett. Jim Cassidy's sacrifice moved him to second and Adam Sarapata singled to put runners on first and third with one out. Brian Adamski then reached on a fielder's choice to load the bases. Then, when Tranczek and Garrity hit consecutive doubles to give UMass the 3-0 lead.

Coming off a rough start, Travers was terrific, shutting out the Flyers for 6 1-3 innings of work. He

See BASEBALL on page 7

BRIAN HUTCHINS/COLLEGIAN

Senior Travis Munsey went 5-for-11 with five RBIs this weekend, helping UMass earn a three-game sweep over Dayton.

UMass extends win streak to 18 games

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

You can add two more to the record books after Sunday. That is, two more Atlantic 10 wins for the Massachusetts softball team and another pair of home runs for junior Stacy Cullington, who tied the UMass single-season home-run record yesterday.

The Minutewomen (29-12-1, 14-0 A-10) swept conference-rival George Washington in a doubleheader, blasting five home runs in two games, as they to continue their march toward next weekend's A-10 Tournament.

Brandice Balschmiter (21-8) kept the Colonial bats at bay in Game 1, leading UMass to a 4-2 victory, while Game 2 saw an offensive explosion from the Minutewomen. Freshman pitcher Bailey Sanders (8-4) held GW to a single run, as the Maroon and White ran away with the second round, 9-1, in five innings.

The wins keep UMass atop the A-10, with Fordham (36-16) in second place at 14-2 in conference play. The Rams come to Amherst on Friday and Saturday for a two-game set that will likely decide the conference's regular-season championship.

The Minutewomen's next game is tomorrow against Boston College (16-24). UMass took the first game of the home-and-home series in Chestnut Hill, 7-1 on April 11.

Unlike Thursday's win over Boston University (30-11), the UMass bats struggled to pose a consistent threat to GW hurler Amanda Gabriel, who gave up three earned runs on 10 hits.

"I thought GW was a good team,"

See SOFTBALL on page 8

MAY

FOUR MINUTEMEN REACH NFL
PAGE 8

RAGE GUITARIST FALLS SHORT WITH ALBUM
PAGE 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SUNNY : HI: 66 LO: 40 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | TUESDAY, MAY 1, 2007

A union in cyberspace

Five Colleges connected through new Internet system

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

Administrators of the Five Colleges celebrated alongside Massachusetts government officials in the completion of a 53-mile, $3.6 million fiber optic network that will provide virtually unlimited bandwidth for seven Pioneer Valley communities and the surrounding five campuses.

After five years of extensive construction the new network, which is connected at its center in Springfield, is ready to connect the five campuses and hopes to create new economic development for seven Pioneer Valley communities.

The celebration was held at the Campus Center of University of Massachusetts with state and local officials, collaborators and technicians who helped to develop the network and representatives of the member institutions in attendance.

"Some 40 years ago, the Five Colleges understood the need to provide transportation from campus to campus," said Lorna M. Peterson, executive director of the Five Colleges. "Today they understand the importance of linking our campuses to each other and the rest of

See INTERNET on page 2

CHRISTIANNE MCGRATH/COLLEGIAN

UMass Chancellor John Lombardi commemorates the five-year efforts in creating the new fiber optic network, which links seven Pioneer Valley communities and the Five Colleges through an Internet infrastructure.

Immigration march to be held today

Amherst community to rally for rights of immigrants

By Will McGuinness
Collegian Staff

Today at 10:30 a.m. on the steps of the Student Union, those passionate about immigration reform and those who care about helping the families of illegal workers will join together to rally for a stop to the raids and deportations of immigrant workers.

The rally, titled "May 1st Walk Out," will bring those assembled to Amherst Common where they will meet like-minded students from the community, Amherst College, and Hampshire College for a larger rally during which people will be able to hear the stories of local immigrants.

The event's Facebook page titled, "May 1st Walk-out: Stop the Raids and Deportations," includes the rally's purpose: "No to anti-immigrant legislation and the criminalization of immigrant communities. No to immigrant detention and deportation."

The rally will also broach strong opposition for the guest worker program, employer sanction and "no match" letters.

But those present will also be able to show their support for speedy family reunification, humane immigration laws, labor rights and living wages for all workers, and the education and LGBT immigrant legislation.

"This May 1st, 2007, we are calling on UMass students to WALK OUT, and march with us in support of immigrant worker rights," is also included on the event's Web page.

Many of the speakers have personal connections to immigrant workers, but anyone is welcome to join the march.

"We are getting together to show that the students and community members won't stand for the raiding and deportation of immigrant workers any longer," says President of the Graduate Student Senate Jeff Napolitano.

From the activities in the Common, others will be marching the seven miles to Northampton Common for a 4:00 p.m. solidarity meeting.

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com

North residents fight for better, fairer meal plan

By Will McGuinness
Collegian Staff

Few students can deny the value of a hot, home-cooked meal.

But according to University of Massachusetts sophomores Scott Rossi and Maris Joniec, the value of the newest addition to UMass Housing's North Apartments meal plan is subject to greater debate.

Rossi and Joniec signed up for the North Apartments meal plan, the minimal plan specially catered to North residents.

According to the UMass Dining Services Web site, the North Plan offers 112 meals for each semester (an average of 7 meals per week) and includes three meal exchanges and 15 guest meals.

"Ideal for students looking for the convenience of eating and socializing at any of the dining commons on campus," reads the Web site.

However, Rossi and Joniec prefer to prepare their own meals in the kitchen in which they had already paid a large sum to have.

"We were forced to sign up for the plan, which we did. But, we barely used it in the first part of the year, so we tried to get exemption from it," Rossi said of his first semester experience.

The two each paid the $1100 charge for the 112 meals, but feel that they were getting charged unfairly. They argue that the other meal plans available to the rest of on-campus residents are more reasonable, like the Value Meal Plan, which offers 224 meals each semester (an average of 14 meals per week) and includes seven meal exchanges and 15 guest meals at $1542 per semester, while the Unlimited Meal Plan at $1675 per semester offers an unlimited number of meals, 15 guest meals, and 10 meal exchanges.

"We just feel that we were getting charged too much for the mandatory plan. We pay extra to live in North to have a kitchen. It seems a little steep to pay so much for a plan with so many less meals than the others," Joniec said.

A memo written by Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance, Joyce Hatch, explains the University's stance.

"When meal plans are priced, the cost to operate the dining facilities and the number of meals on a plan are taken into consideration. As with all purchases in bulk, the more meals purchased, the lower the price per meal. As importantly,

See NORTH on page 2

COURTESY MASS.EDU

Scott Rossi and Maris Joniec oppose the required North Apartments meal plan because it is overpriced for the number of meals allotted for students.

Gonorrhea resistant to antibiotics

By Eric Mills
The Daily Vidette (Illinois State U.)

NORMAL, Ill. — Certain strains of the sexually transmitted disease gonorrhea have become drug resistant to some antibiotics currently used to treat it.

New evidence, gathered from 26 cities throughout the nation, has shown that the previously used type of treatment antibiotic is becoming useless to many strains of the disease in certain cities.

That type of antibiotic, fluoroquinolones, is being replaced by a new type of antibiotic treatment called cephalosporins.

While doctors may worry that the strain is more dangerous to possible patients, it should not significantly affect patients when they go in to get treated, Clara Lehan said, a certified resident nurse.

"Just because they changed the type of treatment does not mean that people at ISU were resistant, it was a nationwide change that happened."

In fact, Lehan said she did not believe that it should affect students in any way.

"The only difference between the two medicines is that with the new one, you will either get a stronger pill or a shot, students shouldn't even know the difference."

One student specifically was not concerned with the new strain of gonorrhea.

"People know that if they want to be 100 percent sure they won't get an STD, they shouldn't have sex," Nick Stoyas, a sophomore business education major, said.

"But if you do choose to have sex it is your responsibility to get tested so you aren't hurting anyone else."

Gonorrhea is treatable, however, the symptoms can show up between two days and 30 days after having sexual contact. Whether you have the symptoms or not, you can still transmit the disease to sexual partners.

If left untreated, gonorrhea can cause Pelvic Inflammatory Disease in women, or Epididymitis in men. Pelvic Inflammatory Disease can lead to infertility if untreated. Gonorrhea also puts you at a higher likelihood of acquiring HIV, which is the virus that can lead to AIDS.

More than 700 thousand people are diagnosed with gonorrhea each year and around 75 percent of all reported cases are found in people between the ages of 15 and 29.

MICHAEL PHILLIS/COLLEGIAN

From McGuirk Stadium to the NFL

Running back Steve Baylark signed a free-agent contract with the Arizona Cardinals of the National Football League. Three other UMass seniors signed on with NFL teams, including the New York Giants, the St. Louis Rams and the New York Jets. Read more on page 8.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Issue 128

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Eric Athas
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sherol Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jamieson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Adam Staggin
Editorial Editor Tucker Merrick
News Editor Matt Belliveau
Sports Editor Danny Picard
Sports Editor Jon Pelland
Features Editor Melissa D'Amico
Circulation Manager Jeff Pentz
Ast. Business Manager David Vallade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Nicole Puddester
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Sydney Towne
Assistant News Anna Dobanitis
Assistant News Nicole Boonsakuakul
Assistant Editorial Brendan Hall
Assistant Sports Jeremy Rice
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts Calendar Semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Belliveau

COPY EDITOR
Jamie Mason

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Tiffany Van Langen

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Courtney Love plans to sell Kurt Cobain's belongings

NEW YORK — Courtney Love, widow of Nirvana singer Kurt Cobain, says she plans to sell most of his belongings.

"I'm going to have a Christie's auction," Love, 42, tells AOL music Web site Spinner.com. "(My house) is like a mausoleum."

Love and Cobain wed in 1992 and had a daughter, Frances Bean, that year. Cobain committed suicide in 1994.

"My daughter doesn't need to inherit a giant ... bag full of flannel ... shirts," says Love, former frontwoman of the rock band Hole. "A sweater, a guitar and the lyrics to (Smells Like) Teen Spirit' – that's what my daughter gets. And the rest of it we'll just ... sell."

No date has been set for the auction, AOL publicist Kurt Patat told The Associated Press on Monday.

Love, whose upcoming album is titled, "Nobody's Daughter," says friends support the idea.

"Everyone's been positive and behind me on it," she says. "We'll make a lot of money and give a bunch of it to charity."

She'll have a chance to move on from Cobain, too.

"I still wear his pajamas to bed. How am I ever going to go form another relationship in my lifetime wearing Kurt's pajamas?"

—Associated Press

Cannabis triggers schizophrenia

A man smokes a marijuana joint at Dundas Square in Toronto, April 20, 2007. Brain scans showing how cannabis affects brain function may help explain why heavy consumption of THC leads to psychosis in a small number of people.

By Ben Hirschler
Associated Press

LONDON — Brain scans showing how cannabis affects brain function may help explain why heavy consumption of the drug triggers psychosis and schizophrenia in a small number of people, scientists said on Monday.

Psychiatrists are increasingly concerned about the mental health impact of smoking large amounts of modern super-strength marijuana, or skunk, particularly among young people.

Until now, the mechanism by which cannabis works on the brain has been a mystery but modern scanning techniques mean experts can now detect its impact on brain activity.

Professor Philip McGuire and Zerrin Atakan of London's Institute of Psychiatry said their work using magnetic resonance imaging, or MRI, showed patients given the active cannabis compound tetrahydrocannabinol (THC) had reduced function in the inferior frontal cortex brain region.

This area is associated with controlling inappropriate emotional and behavioral responses to situations.

"What THC seems to be doing is switching off that part of the brain, and that was associated with how paranoid people became," McGuire told reporters.

Their research will be presented at a two-day International Cannabis and Mental Health Conference at the Institute of Psychiatry this week.

Similar findings from other teams also highlight the link between THC dose and the risk of schizophrenia-like symptoms, conference organizer Professor Robin Murray said.

"It's no longer a contentious issue. The expert community, by and large, accepts that cannabis contributes to the onset of psychotic symptoms in general and the severe form of psychosis, schizophrenia," he said.

One reason for the growing problem is thought to be the increasing strength of modern strains of cannabis, which are cultivated to produce the maximum amount of THC.

In recent years, the average THC content of marijuana sold in Britain has doubled to 12 percent from around 6 percent, while in the Netherlands it is about 18 percent, Murray said.

Most users of cannabis still do not have a problem with the drug but a minority, possibly because of genetic factors, are vulnerable to long-term damage from modern skunk – which Murray says is to old-fashioned dope what whisky is to lager.

The rise in THC content is linked with a decline in another active ingredient called cannabidiol (CBD), since the two products compete biochemically inside the cannabis plant.

CBD, which reduces anxiety but does not produce the euphoric high of THC, may help offset some of the paranoid feelings.

Markus Leweke of Cologne University said a clinical trial involving 42 patients showed CBD was as effective as the established medicine amisulpride, sold as Solian by Sanofi-Aventis, in treating patients with psychosis.

"It seems there are good guys and bad guys within cannabis," Leweke said.

Study: Abstinence programs ineffective

By Kelly Pickerel
Daily Kent Stater (Kent State U.)

KENT, Ohio — A recent study ordered by Congress revealed that sexual abstinence programs are ineffective, and those who take part in the programs are just as likely to have sex as those who do not.

The study also showed students involved and not involved with the program first had sex at the same age 14.9 years – according to Mathematica Policy Research Inc.

The American Civil Liberties Union has asked to review the accuracy of abstinence curricula in 31 school districts in Ohio.

Abstinence-only programs are funded by tax dollars, and since 1996, the federal government has spent more than $7 billion on the programs, according to the ACLU, "despite research indicating that many such programs are ineffective."

Dr. Dianna Kerr, associate professor and program coordinator for health education and promotion at Kent State University, said abstinence programs receiving federal funds follow a strict curriculum. They push the practice of abstaining until marriage and cannot teach about contraceptives but can release the failure rates of contraceptives.

ACLU looks to stop funding for the programs entirely.

In addition, Kerr said abstinence-only programs should not be receiving tax-payers' money.

"The funded programs are very sex-negative," she said. "They scare the kids into not having sex. There are comprehensive sexuality programs that do work, and they talk about safer sex instead of the failures of contraceptives."

"Schools should abandon abstinence-only programs," said Nicole Haney, senior fine arts major. "They need to teach safe-sex instead."

Emily McMahon, senior fine arts major, said she agrees safe-sex should be taught more in schools than abstinence-only programs.

"There's no way to fool kids into not doing it," she said. "They need knowledge of STDs and other diseases. Even if they're in a relationship, or might one day be in one, they need to know how to protect themselves. It's good to start young with this information."

In March, Gov. Ted Strickland took a big step and removed $1 million in state aid for abstinence-only programs.

Kerr said she agrees with Strickland's decision.

"There's no evidence that the programs work," she said. "Abstinence will still be taught in schools - just not abstinence-only (programs)."

Internet connects Pioneer Valley

INTERNET from page 1

the world through an electronic highway that gives faculty and students ease of access to 21st century communications."

UMass Chancellor John Lombardi said the new network has jokingly been named by university officials as the campus' new "lollipop" because, "It's so sweet."

Lombardi used the celebration as an opportunity to extend his thanks to Donna Baron, the director of information technology for the Five Colleges, as well as the board of directors of the Five Colleges, composed of the presidents of the four colleges – Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith.

"Five years ago when we began to envision solutions for our networking needs, we never imagined we would be donning construction hats and building a network ourselves," Baron said. "But given the economic downturn in the telecommunications industry, and the lack of existing infrastructure in our rural area, it proved financially more favorable for us to build the infrastructure," Baron added.

Gov. Deval Patrick, in a letter to the consortium, said, "I commend the Five Colleges and their business partners for taking the initiative to bring fiber optic Internet to Western Massachusetts. This partnership is an excellent example of the great strides communities and educational institutions can take together to improve their neighborhoods."

The fiber runs through seven municipalities: Northampton, Amherst, Hadley, South Hadley, Granby, Chicopee and Springfield.

Northampton Mayor Ellen Story said the network should give the cities and towns an opportunity to gain access to much-needed infrastructure that can boost regional economic development and education.

"This network will serve as a new type of infrastructure for our surrounding communities, acting as a new road of development," said Story. "It should help lead our communities into the 21st century, and for some, the 20th."

The cost of the entire project is $3.6 million, but the network is expected to pay for itself within approximately seven years.

Installation of the fiber optic cable is complete, and Amherst, Smith and Mount Holyoke colleges are using some of its capabilities, with Hampshire expected to follow shortly.

Detailed tests of the network are under way, and Baron said she expects the network to be fully operational this summer. The Five Colleges will work with the cities and towns in the coming months as they decide how to make best use of the donated fiber.

Matt Belliveau can be reached at mbbeliv@student.umass.edu.

Students oppose meal plan

NORTH from page 1

this requirement insures that freshmen and sophomores eat nutritionally balanced meal and encourages participation in the campus community," wrote Hatch.

Rossi replied, "We were told that it [the meal plan] was required to make sure we are eating nutritiously, but anyone with a plan can walk in and eat pizza, fries, and burgers everyday."

Part of the exemption process requires a meeting before the Appeals Board. The board asked if the two had problems with nutrition or if they had any serious financial problems. Not wanting to lie, they denied both and were denied exemption.

"We went to the Appeals Board, and that's where they admitted that we had a case but could not do anything about it because they are subject to audit. They said that we should get in touch with the chancellor or even the Board of Trustees," Joniec and Rossi said.

"The board fee for freshmen and sophomores living the North Apartments is the lowest cost of the three meals plans available to freshmen and sophomores. The North Apartment meal plan was developed in order to accommodate the small population of freshmen and sophomores living in living in the North Apartments and simultaneously maintain the integrity of the dining trustee policy... In [financial year] '08, the North Apartments annual meal plan costs $1,048 (or 32%) less than the next available meal plan," wrote Hatch.

Rossi and Joniec, who do not plan on living in North next semester add, "We started this [exemption] process in February and have been running around ever since. We are less concerned with getting our money back this semester than we are about informing people about what's going on.

"We are paying twice as much money for 1/3 the meals on-top of the additional charge of $1088 per semester that we pay to have a kitchen. Also, we still need to cook in order to eat more than one meal a day with the $1100.00 meal plan. This plan is simply unfair," they said.

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com.

$5 FAST with this coupon ONLY!
CUSTOM PRINTED T's
This coupon not good with any other offer
*White T's ONLY
24 minimum
1 color, 1 sided
Standard Ink
Art/File ready
Screen $20
Your Design or Logo!
Apparel Unlimited
SCREEN PRINTERS
322 Russell Street
Hadley, MA 01035
413-586-7133
www.SunraiseePrinting.com
*Exp. 5.29.07
Our 20th Anniversary

EXPERIENCE
Gained only through working at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian as a Fall 2007 semester Advertising Representative
If interested please pick up an application at the Daily Collegian Office located in the Campus Center basement or contact Alex Bender at ebender@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
is looking for new
Graphic Designers
for the Fall 2007 semester
♠ Daily Advertising Designers
♠ Nightly Production Supervisors
♥ Advertising Production Manager
Any major can apply. Previous design experience not necessary, but encouraged.
Visit our office in the Campus Center Basement from 10am - 4pm for applications.

Editorial Opinion

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" Voltaire

We're getting screwed

Debbie Friedman

In this country's current state of skyrocketing college tuition, and economic hardship amongst the average American family, it is unfortunate enough that students must endure thousands of dollars in debt to obtain a college degree, which has become essential to future success. However, what is more unfortunate is the alarming information that has been coming out of New York State Attorney Andrew Cuomo's investigation of the student loan industry. In recent weeks, the investigation has exposed several University administrators, government officials and student loan employees who have engaged in unethical practices surrounding the student loan process.

Cuomo launched this investigation back in January, seeking to examine a process that has faced almost no scrutiny over the past six years. Cuomo's main aim has been to make sure that the conditions in which schools recommend lending companies are as fair a process as possible – not rooted in unethical bribes and questionable business partnerships. Unfortunately, in the past few weeks, more and more unethical practices have been revealed, resulting in a major re-assessment of the industry and proposed reforms to the college loan process.

Yet even with these changes, it is not enough to undo the damage.

According to a April 6, CBS News article, the main issue exposed thus far by Cuomo has been a practice called "revenue-sharing agreement-whereby a lender pays back a school a fixed percentage at the net value of loans steered its way." This process results in schools referring their students to loan companies based on what company gives administrators the best perks, instead of what company offers students the most competitive and fair loan plans.

So far several people have been implicated in this practice. Federal Education official Matt Fontana was suspended after a subpoena was issued to the nation's largest lender, Sallie Mae. It has been reported that he was given tens of thousands of stock shares from certain lending companies, with attainable profits of up to $100,000. Colombia University, University of Texas-Austin, Johns Hopkins University and the University of Southern California have also suspended their financial aid directors for allegedly owning large amounts of stock with student loan companies during their tenure. In addition, subpoenas have been issued to loan companies Citibank, Sallie Mae and Student Loan Express seeking the release of more information on employees like these.

As far as UMass Amherst goes, Financial Aid Director Ken Burnham has assured students these kinds of practices do not happen here, since most of the Departments student loans are worked out through the government, and not private loan companies. And according to a March 1 Collegian article, this University was not sent an investigation inquiry.

Many loan companies and Universities have agreed to change their practices as a result of this newly shined spotlight focused on the dishonorable practices that have been in the dark for so long. Recently, NYU and UPenn agreed to put more than one million dollars each into a fund that will serve as retribution to those lendees who were referred based on the revenue sharing practice. It is rumored that former lendees will receive up to 500 dollars each in retribution. Moreover, 31 additional schools have adopted a code which prohibits revenue-sharing, requires schools to release how they pick their preferred lenders, and bans financial aid officers from receiving gifts from lenders. Citibank and Sallie Mae, perhaps the two most implicated companies involved in this scandal, have also agreed to these terms.

Yet even with these changes, it is not enough to undo the damage, which is sure to be revealed to a much greater degree in the coming months. These shameful practices are really just the tip of the iceberg, underscoring a much more serious issue – the blatant disregard our society holds for college students. Today, students are simply viewed as dollar signs, a piece of the 84 billion dollar a year pie. And since we have no financial power to assert ourselves as intelligent clientele with rights, we are all continually taken advantage of.

All of us have jumped through hoops to get into college. We've paid a fortune to stay here too. And most of us will endure backbreaking debt for decades of our life just to finance the whole process. As we do this, many corrupt officials and administrations are getting money in their pockets for not doing their jobs. The fact that these infuriating practices are just now coming to light is truly incredible, but sadly, it is not all that surprising.

After all, the U.S. Department of Educational contains many officials who are veterans of large student loan companies. Matt Fontana, the first official to be implicated in this scandal was an employee at Sallie Mae from 1994 to 2001. His boss, Theresa Shaw, who is now the Head of Federal Student Aid, was also a 20-year veteran at Sallie Mae. Therefore, it is clear that there are close-knit relationships between financial aid officers and student loan companies, resulting in a process that completely overlooks the best interests of students. Since this is the case, it is no wonder they have tried to keep this practice under wraps for so long.

But now that we see this flawed process, something must be done to stop it. Those who have turned a blind eye to what students need, for the sake of their own financial gain should be punished. And those like Attorney General Cuomo, who are making it their personal duty to look out for students, deserve much praise.

Debbie Friedman writes on Tuesdays. She can be reached at dfriedm@student.umass.edu.

No more headlines

James Mathews

Two weeks and one day have passed, and the story of the killings at Virginia Tech has left the headlines. Thirty-two students and teachers were killed – their story is nowhere to be found. It is gone from the main page of CNN.com, which 10 days ago was dominated by victim biographies, timelines and tributes. The network news has moved on to developing issues. The New York Times is back to politics. Today, the story is pre-war intelligence. Tomorrow it will be something new.

Two weeks and one day – has anything meaningful been said or done? There have been vigils. There have been speeches. Impromptu memorials have arisen, and Americans across the continent have shown "solidarity." What was once shocking has become a sadly familiar process. first we question, then we mourn, then we bicker, and then we move on. Ten years ago, before the Columbine shootings and the September 11th attacks, we did not know this script. Now, when American blood is spilt, we know which movements to make. Countless school and workplace shootings have fine-tuned our response. We have learned the arts of eulogy and remembrance, but we have failed to honor our dead.

We have learned the arts of eulogy and remembrance, but we have failed to honor our dead.

Over and over, we have glorified murder. On the day of the Virginia Tech killings, headlines everywhere proclaimed the "deadliest mass shooting in U.S. History," as if a body count were something to be proud of. All week, self-portraits of the killer appeared in newspapers and on Web sites and television screens. Online, step-by-step interactive features showed the "unfolding of events" – little blue boxes marked the dead in each classroom. Yet again, we let martyrdom have its way. The face of the shooter is forever in our memory. Its impression on young minds cannot be unmade. Threats of "copycat" attacks have been called in to schools across the country. The cycle has begun again.

We have made a celebrity out of a killer – and why? We are hypnotized by the sight of bloodshed. Our day-to-day lives are mundane – we look to the press for tales of good and evil. When innocent lives are lost, their stories become spectacle. Student or teacher, father or son – none of this matters to the rapt public. We demand heroes and villains. From acts of random violence we forge tales of moral drama. As long as we are fascinated, our hearts and minds are with the victims. Our prayers go out to the families. we say, but these are passing things. Fascination runs its course quickly, and we move on to the next "big thing."

Has the Virginia Tech tragedy been forgotten all too quickly?

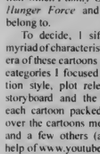
"Moving on," as it were, is not a long-term process. Within hours of the shooting at Virginia Tech, the usual debates had begun. On the New York Times Web site, a thread of more than 300 messages devolved quickly from mournful obituary to no-holds-barred antagonism, with gun control as the central issue. Even in the wake of a mass-murder on a college campus, neither side was ready to surrender any ground. Those who called for gun control were vehement, as were their opponents. The usual idiocies were fired back and forth. A few non-citizens contributed to the discussion, offering a middle-ground point of view: murder is a constant; guns enable the murderous; these things happen much less often where guns are harder to get. Unsurprisingly, such opinions were ignored. At Virginia Tech, the dead had not yet been counted, and doctors were still hard at work, saving what lives they could. In America, the great debate had begun again.

Nearly a decade has passed since the killings at Columbine High school. Over two hundred Americans have died in school and workplace shootings. How high must the body count be before we come together? Until we do, it will continue to rise. Just as with every major loss of life in America, we call these murders "tragic." We do not know our eloquence. A tragedy, in its strictest sense, is an instance of self-inflicted suffering. The audience knows the story beforehand, and the main character, unaware, makes his way towards misery, and often death. Who will be the next Americans to die? In the tragedy of mass murder, who is the unknowing character? What is his tragic flaw?

When the next round of shots rings out, be sure – the characters are everywhere. Their flaw – our flaw – is the failure to compromise or change. Our attention span is two weeks long. Our minds are made up even before we open our mouths. When the headlines proclaim "tragedy," we must not think of it as an empty phrase. The victims – were they not like you and I? Americans all, they had their opinions, and fought them out in the age-old debate of guns, rights and lives. Would they trade such petty quarrels for a second chance? Will we?

James Mathews can be reached at jwmathew@student.umass.edu.

A funny evolution



Brad Leibowitz

Chic a chic ahhhh. Recently, with the help of www.youtube.com and www.yourtvlinks.com, I began to wonder which generation of cartoons is the best; either the generation which Doug, Rug Rats and Ren & Stimpy belong to, or the generation which Family Guy, Aqua Teen Hunger Force and Sealab 2021 belong to.

To decide, I sifted through a myriad of characteristics which each era of these cartoons poses. Of these categories I focused on the animation style, plot relevance, overall storyboard and the humor which each cartoon packed. As I poured over the cartoons mentioned above and a few others (again with the help of www.youtube.com), I began to realize I had picked categories which were too highly selective to the individual. No matter the cartoon, one person could find something funny or visually appealing while another could not. As such, I began to search for another means which would allow me to reach my final conclusion.

After watching hours upon hours of cartoons (you might say I wasted a Saturday afternoon, I disagree), I realized what characteristic of cartoons truly made the difference. Concerning both generations, the one major difference was in the style and the way each cartoon used its jokes. This being true, to determine the better generation, it came down to the issue of subliminal vs. apparent messaging.

Concerning our first generation cartoons, watching them now one can easily see, just as in Disney's animated movies, there are a ton of subliminal messages (Ren & Stimpy and Pinky & The Brain stand alone in this aspect). From sex, to politics, to basic morals – our first generation cartoons are chalk full of messages only adults can see.

On a regular basis, Doug, Rug Rats and The Animaniacs supplied subliminal messages consisting of major drug use to racial tensions while at the same time making kids laugh by using general slap stick humor. Effectively, our first generation of cartoons used slap stick humor to cover up the message, not to exploit it… thus subliminal. In this characteristic alone, our second generation of cartoons stands in complete opposition.

In the latter category the messages being conveyed are not only apparent, they are exploited through the use of coarse humor. The cartoons which show on Cartoon Network's Adult Swim are simply that: adult cartoons which children under the age of 14 have no business watching. From "Peter Griffin" making a crack about a prom night dumpster baby, to "Fryclock" making fun of autistic children, now-a-days we like our cartoons to be profane without covering it up or apologizing. Call it a slap in the face to the p.c. world or selling our first generation cartoons down the river. Cartoons today keep us laughing when we know we shouldn't be.

Shows like Family Guy construct their jokes around putting an issue out in the open for everyone to see.

On an interesting side note, as mentioned above Ren & Stimpy is a cartoon which I believe belongs to our second generation of cartoons; this is due to its nature of using jokes to show apparent, straight forward crude messaging. To this day, I am pretty sure that Ren & Stimpy is wholly about "Ren" trying to receive oral sex from a prostitute named Lumber Jack Bill and "Stimpy" trying to score crack rocks.

Speaking of fellatio and crack rocks, another cartoon from the first generation which belongs in the second is Pinky and the Brain. The next time you get a chance, go online and watch old episodes. Upon doing this, try to tell me they are not all about licking the back of toads to create a mass serum which has the ability to brainwash the worlds population into P & B's eventual world dominance. But I digress.

Back in the day, it used to be that cartoons would make us laugh through using humor which hid the darker underbelly of the joke. Nowhere in Doug or Rug Rats will you ever find a joke constructed to reveal the true message of what the joke is poking fun at. On the other side of the coin, shows like Family Guy construct their jokes around putting an issue out in the open for everyone to see; they do this by employing a technique every stand up comic uses. To get the point across, Family Guy and other second generation cartoons takes crude truthful humor to the extreme. By taking a truth to the extreme it seems funnier because we know it can never happen.

So which is it, 1st generation or 2nd generation? Subliminal vs. apparent messaging? No matter your choice, the important thing is as a generation we are once again watching quality cartoons. Although the animations and jokes may have changed, every time we sit down to watch our choice animation, for the briefest of moments it seems like we haven't gotten any older and the world is still a friendly place like it used to be when Nickelodeon ruled.

Brad Leibowitz can be reached at bleibowi@student.umass.edu

Hip-hop in a new century

Joe Hughes

In rap's origins, the industry dared to be different. It was new; it was unique, and it challenged everything people expected music to be. It was a new art form unlike any before. The origin of the genre is widely debated, but nonetheless stretches back decades.

In the impoverished neighborhoods of 1960s Kingston, Jamaica, musicians would commonly spin reggae records while chanting to the audience during the music. Kool Herc, a future pioneer of hip-hop, grew up in this environment before moving to the Bronx in the early 70s.

In his new neighborhood, Herc would spin records of various genres while creating his own personal twist; he would expand the breaks by spinning multiple copies of identical records. Additionally, Herc began talking to the crowd during the music for lengthier periods as time went on. DJs started to imitate Herc's unique style by rhyming words while hyping up the audience. Soon Herc gave the microphone to others, who would keep the crowd energized with rhymes and chants while he spun the records. This was the birth of hip-hop. Subsequently, the birth of the MC (or rapper) emerged, allegedly originating from "Master of Ceremonies," or "Move the Crowd."

Today, hip-hop has changed into something of almost an entirely different genre.

The early to mid 90s was the golden age of hip-hop, and very arguably one of the great eras of music. With the development and perfection of this new form of music, prominent artists such as Tupac Shakur, Notorious B.I.G., Pharcyde, Dr. Dre, Wu-Tang Clan and Snoop Dogg sculpted hip-hop into becoming what is now a cultural phenomenon.

Today, hip-hop has changed into something of almost an entirely different genre. Turn on MTV, VH1 or BET and most likely a hip-hop music video will be on. A typical video is fairly distinct; the rappers rock their grills and show off their thousands of dollars worth of jewelry while getting a lap dance from some model in their BMW Lamborghini/Escalade. Slow motion video sets in to everyone dancing, while the MCs all rap about how much money they have, how ill their flow is, and how many women they get. Materialism reigns supreme above all else in this new world of rap.

After watching basically the same video over and over and over, you'd think America would get tired of it. But that's part of the business strategy of the videos; it's all about marketing. With everything a typical person craves and aspires to have, why wouldn't this kind of music be popular? It's a proven formula to make money, which is why no one takes chances anymore.

Bill Stephney, an influential former Def Jam producer who helped spawn legendary rap act Public Enemy, has spoken out against the recent developments in hip hop. He was recently quoted on the Web site "Davey D's Hip-Hop Corner" (www.daveyd.com); "There is an over-representation of the criminal aspects of black youth culture (in rap) from the videos and the records. Not all black kids out here are slinging cocaine, crack and heroin, and shooting at one another. What about the black kid who works at Haagen-Dazs in Brooklyn? He or she is not represented. I don't hear their story in any of these records."

With the scarcity of originality, innovativeness and creative poetry that was present in previous decades of rap, it's clear that hip-hop has changed drastically for the worse. This has prompted a massive following to the underground rap movement. Today, the underground movement includes Brother Ali, Atmosphere, Talib Kweli (who will be playing at the UMass Spring concert.) Termanology, and an endless amount of other talented MCs who actually have poetic and thought-provoking things to say. It just goes to show, when art starts to make money, it loses its edge.

Contemporary rapper Common summed up the present day situation of hip-hop nicely in "I Used to Love H.E.R." a track off of his album "Be":

"Now she be in the burbs lickin' rock and dressin' hip
And on some dumb sh*t, when she comes to the city
Talkin' about poppin' glocks servin' rocks and hittin' switches
Now she's a gangsta rollin' with gangsta b*gs
…But ima take her back hopin' that the sh*t stop
Cause who I'm talkin' 'bout y'all is hip-hop"

Joe Hughes can be reached at jhughes@student.umass.edu

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION
E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com
Fax: 413-545-3699
Mail: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MAY 1, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NEW MUSIC TUESDAY

Rage guitarist Morello falls short with debut solo LP

BY STEVE STAFFORD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Tom Morello hardly needs any introduction to the college generation of today. The Night Watchman, on the other hand, is a bit less famous. The solo project of the effect-loving guitarist is a sudden step in an entirely new direction, for which most fans may not be prepared.

"One Man Revolution," his debut album released under this pseudonym, is, as Epic Records refers to it, an album of "songs of bitterness and revenge...a dark response to a world in turmoil." The lyrics cover the unsurprising topics of social justice, left-wing politics, and power-to-the-people, fist-pumping attitude. However, Morello lacks the cleverness, anger and voice of former band-mate Zach de la Rocha which gave their angst-filled sound its power.

The title track is perhaps the strongest, a sincere attempt at a fight song for the working class, and it earns about a five on the Springsteen scale. While it probably won't overthrow the Bush Administration, it amounts to a valiant effort.

"Let Freedom Ring" follows this repetitive song with the same edgy, anxious mood. Lyrically, it suggests parallels between the alleged coming of Communist revolution throughout the world as predicted by Karl Marx with Biblical prophecy. What kind of statement this is supposed to make isn't entirely clear, but the stark images fit the musical backdrop perfectly, with almost all of the second verse's lyrics coming straight from The Book of Revelation. Copyright concerns aside, Morello apes Johnny Cash's weathered growl with this country-fried acoustic guitar-and-piano pseudo-anthem.

The next track, "The Road I Must Travel," takes the form of a folk-Celtic ballad, making it by far the most unique and adventurous song on the entire disc. Morello again gets Biblical with the references it makes in "The Garden of Gethsemane," the next song on the album, taking another stab at storytelling acoustic rebel-country.

The most notable difference between this CD and his previous work is the utter absence of the guitar style that made him famous. This may be difficult to accept for his most devoted fans, most of whom would like another Rage Against the Machine album, but despite how Marx-loving it gets at times, this doesn't come close. This is even less an Audioslave disc; don't buy this expecting anything close to what you've heard before. Some may find this new 1970s Johnny Cash look refreshing, but most of Morello's faithful fans will be disappointed, searching for funky pedal-heavy riffs and finding only simply chords and Tenacious-D's guitar tone.

Perhaps the best representation of this record is its cover. Morello and an acoustic guitar, with "whatever it takes" written on it. These are simple, stripped-down theme songs to his dreams of Communist revolution, but unlike the beloved Rage Against the Machine, they do not have mass appeal. All in all, they lack pop sensibility of any kind: short on hooks, long on preachiness. Morello's voice is boring and so are his predictable tunes which all blend into one. On the other hand, this album does manage to make the listener appreciate and miss Zach de la Rocha more than ever. In his defense, his lyrics are inspiring if you think that Jesus Christ was Black, or if you are in a labor union.

Morello is not a one-man revolution. He is a steel-string troubadour serenading the soldiers of the far Left. Perhaps what makes this 13 song effort so disappointing is the greatness that the man has achieved again and again throughout his career. It doesn't help that he makes it clear that he takes himself much too seriously.

Steven Stafford can be reached at stevenjstafford@gmail.com.

The former Rage Against the Machine guitarist released his new album 'One Man Revolution' under his new pseudonym The Night Watchman. The new disc lacks lyrical creativity and his famous guitar style.

Nine Inch Nails release new album about projected chaos

BY JEREMY FOWLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Its 15 years into the future. The world is on the brink of political turmoil. Censorship and big brother have taken control.

This eerie outlook is the basis of Trent Reznor's newest album "Year Zero."

Recorded on buses over last years tour supporting "With Teeth," Reznor said it was inspiring to be constricted to only a laptop. He is known for having a very different sound focusing on a great deal of computer generated sounds and distortion, and this record is full of Nine Inch Nails signature bleeps and fuzz.

As a pioneer of the Industrial genre, Nine Inch Nails "Year Zero" is a refreshing change from anything that has been released since their last album.

The first single, "Survivalism," is a brooding angry track which poses the question of what our world may look like in 15 years given our current trend of polluting and using our natural resources indiscriminately. It's very interesting to be able to make a song about this issue and the numerous others Reznor tackles on the album, while still sounding cool and fresh. Global warming doesn't sound like a great recipe for a hit single but he does it nicely.

Reznor then focuses his vision on the government which seems to mirror the current state of the nation.

On "The Good Soldier," Reznor takes the stance of a soldier who is trying to find understanding in the war he is fighting. "I am trying to see, I am trying to believe, this is not where I should be, I am trying to believe," feels like a line many of the U.S. troops have muttered as they follow orders into Iraq.

The man over seeing this seemingly hopeless world is addressed in what is undoubtedly an attack on our current commander in chief. In "Capital G," Reznor sings about the entire process of how the ruler was elected and transformed into something ugly. It is by far one of the biggest highlights of the album if only for the sheer lyrics that seems to fit so perfectly and calculated to the nation's current state.

Opening with "I pushed the button and elected him to office, He pushed the button and he dropped the bomb." The entire track continues with hidden comparisons to the conclusion in the chorus of, "Well I used to stand for something, now I'm on my hands and knee's, turning in the god of this war, and he signs his name with a Capital G."

"Year Zero" is a brilliant album in true Nine Inch Nails style. The well crafted songs and calculated lyrics set it well above anything else that is being released right now. It is also exciting to hear something that isn't put together by a television show or following the norm of the industry today. Reznor continues to reinforce why he is one of the greatest artists of the generation. He has no influences and defines the industrial genre all by himself. Hands down the best album of '07, and quite possible the best until Nine Inch Nail's next offering.

Nine Inch Nails is currently on a month long tour of Australia and Japan.

To see their latest music videos and lyrics go to their web site www.nin.com.

Jeremy Fowler can be reached at jrfowler@student.umass.edu

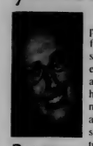
Nine Inch Nails' latest album 'Year Zero' is comprised of exceptional lyrics about a bleak future 15 years from now where Big Brother and censorship have taken over.

WMUA Ten May 1, 2007

1. Love of Diagrams "Mo
2. Animosa "Reflector"
3. Brother Ali "The Undisputed Truth"
4. Standing Nudes "Ghost Story"
5. Neil Young "Live at Massey Hall"
6. Son Volt "The Search"
7. Various Artists "Imagine the Shapes"
8. EL-P "I'll Sleep When You're Dead"
9. The Blow "Poor Aim Love Songs"
10. Dalek "Abandoned Language"

WMUA
FM 91.1

Legendary fashion icons of yesterday inspire modern styles



Reece Coppolino

Over the past 100 years, fashion and personal style have evolved into an art form. Fashion has become the means for ultimate artistic expression, continuously transforming itself as it reflects its time. Many fashion icons have influenced this evolution of style with their own exclusive vision of what is aesthetically pleasing. Some icons contribute to the fashion movement by designing and constructing the looks, while others use their bodies as the canvas.

Coco Chanel, born Gabrielle Bonheur Chanel, had made a profound impact in the fashion industry since the 1920s. Her heightened intuition, determination, and artistic vision in fashion design surfaced at a time when no one expected it. She stirred up stereotypical views of male and female attire and transformed people's perceptions of fashion. She trademarked the term "little black dress" and turned the mournful color into a new stimulating concept.

According to Ingrid Sischy of Time, "She was shrewd, chic, and on the cutting edge. The clothes she created changed the way women looked and how they looked at themselves."

Coco strived to incorporate the power of personality while inventing her own way of personal expression. She possessed an unbelievable knowledge of what women wanted and how to compliment their bodies. Coco Chanel was a revolutionary artist who set the standards in the fashion industry, influencing renowned designers and fashionistas worldwide.

Coco once said, "Fashion is not simply a matter of clothes. Fashion is in the air, born upon the wind. One intuits it. It is in the sky and on the road."

Audrey Hepburn, born Audrey Kathleen Ruston, was an Academy Award winning Belgian actress during the 1950s and 1960s, whose personal style became widely admired and influential in the fashion industry.

She modeled Coco's trademarked "little black dress" with pearls draped around her neck, personifying a balance between chic simplicity and elegance. She gave timeless style power to many pieces we see today in stores, such as flat ballet shoes, high-waist belts, oversized sunglasses, leather handbags, quarter length sleeves and trench coats. She pulled her stylish pieces together effortlessly, a skill that is highly valued by fashionistas.

Described best by her own son, Sean Ferrer, her style "was the extension of an inner beauty held up by a life of discipline, respect for the others and hope in humanity. If the lines were pure and elegant it was because she believed in the power of simplicity. If there was timelessness, it was because she believed in quality, and if she still is an icon of style today it is because once she found her look she stayed with it throughout her life. She didn't go with the trends, didn't reinvent herself every season. She loved fashion, but kept it as a tool to compliment her look."

Audrey took her own steady path towards creating personal style while exemplifying classic elegance. Her acclaimed style has been, and forever will be, recycled over the years, proving Audrey to be a monumental figure in the fashion world.

Twiggy Lawson was a pop icon phenomenon of the 1960s, known for her waiflike features, thick eyelashes, and androgynous mod looks. She was the Queen of Mod. The London born model personified the bold, brash, and innovative look of the sixties with bright hues, large patterns, and extremely high hemlines. The London Daily Express dubbed Twiggy as "the face of 1966." Her face was plastered on Elle and Vogue magazine covers and in the pop-culture mindset of teenagers throughout Britain.

Diana Vreeland, editor-in-chief of Vogue during the 1960s, described her as "both modern and romantic. She was perfect." Twiggy soon traveled over to America where she was praised as a major trendsetter. She embodied an unforeseen fashion that combined powerful modern styles on a physique that was reminiscent of the 1920s. She has forever impacted the popular notion of femininity.

Twiggy's influence is profoundly evident on the fashion runways this year and the styles of this current season. Today, she contributes to the fashion world as an "America's Next Top Model" judge, critiquing the competing models and providing her own valuable insight on the modeling industry.

The fashion world transforms itself every season while the highly respectable style icons of the century provide their superior guidance. Kate Moss, one of today's British supermodels, is continuously compared to Twiggy for her waif-like features and long legs and is claimed to have re-revolutionized modeling.

Ashley Olsen, tween star turned fashion mogul, has stated that she idolizes "old movie stars like Audrey Hepburn and Rita Hayworth — they were so stylish." She has claimed to use classic looks as inspiration. Ashley is currently working on launching her own designer clothing line called, "The Row." With Audrey Hepburn as one of her respected muses, one might expect to see her pieces embodying a sense of simplicity and timelessness. These world renowned fashion icons have provided their own unique sense of style and intuition to contribute towards the preceding and currently developing milestones of the fashion world.

Reece Coppolino can be reached at rcoppolo@student.umass.edu

Known as the Queen of Mod, Twiggy Lawson graced the cover of numerous fashion magazines in the 1960s. This pop icon's unique style still influences the fashion industry of today.

You are cordially invited to attend the
UMass Amherst
Commencement Ball 2007
Enchanted Voyage
Thursday, May 24, 2007 • 9:00 p.m. - 1:00 a.m.
Student Union Complex
Formal Attire - Cash Bar
Light Hors d'oeuvres • Desserts • Dancing • Horse & Carriage Rides
$20 per person
Tickets may be obtained at UMassAlumni.com/students,
Alumni Association Office, Memorial Hall (545-2317), or
Student Alumni Association table on the Campus Center Concourse April 25-26, May 1-3, and May 8-10
Commencement Ball 2007 is supported by:
UMass Amherst Alumni Association • Alumni Student Loan Consolidation Program • Coca-Cola Student Alumni Association • Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life • Auxiliary Services Housing and Residential Life • College of Engineering • College of Social and Behavioral Sciences School of Nursing • College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics • Commonwealth College Isenberg School of Management • Dean of Students Office • College of Humanities and Fine Arts
STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION UMASS AMHERST

UMass sponsors Herbfest to showcase medicinal plants

BY LAUREN MODISETTE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Do you have an interest in herbs, spices, and medicinal plants? Have you ever considered their uses and benefits? You can discover for yourself the uses of a variety of plants at Herbfest.

Herbfest is sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Plants and Soils class — Herbs, Spices and Medicinal Plants. On Tuesday, May 8, head to the Student Union Ballroom in the Campus Center between 11:30 a.m. and 2 p.m. and browse.

Using plants as medicine is becoming more popular these days as antibiotic resistance threatens global health. In fact, most of the prescription medicines people take consist of different plant parts. Products like tinctures, elixirs and essential oils can be used in lieu of prescription medicine and is a more natural way of healing.

Student projects will be on display throughout the room which presents different ways to use plants in everyday life. Students will offer a wide variety of plant products ranging from cookies, soda, tinctures and skin care products. Kryssi Jacobson, UMass Animal Science Senior, is making homemade ginger ale as her project.

"It should be a really good atmosphere filled with people of all ages," says Jacobson, "[there will be] educational information on herbs and different cultures. It should be a lot of fun. Plus people will get free food." She projects that Herbfest will attract somewhere between 500 to 600 people.

Jacobson's project revolves around the medicinal uses of ginger. She says that Chinese herbalists have different beliefs about the uses of ginger as a healer. "Different foods have hot and cold energy. Fish, meats, and other proteins have hot energy while food like vegetables have cold energy. Ginger has a warm energy and helps keep a balance." Jacobson goes on to say that she will have enough of her ginger ale to give samples to about 200 people.

"To make ginger ale you need to make a syrup," says Jacobson. The syrup consists of setivia, ground up ginger, vanilla, lemon juice and seltzer water, she said.

Professor Lyle Craker the teacher of the Herbs, Spices and Medicinal Plants course said, "In the past students have used herbs as dyes, making medicinal kits, designing herb gardens, energy drinks, and even ice cream; it has been very successful."

Craker says UMass students should care about Herbfest. "They should care because everyone is interested in herbs and spices these days. They will have a chance to ask questions to the students and observe beautiful herb plants. Students will have the opportunity to identify them and learn how they can be used medicinally." He goes onto say that students can learn how to make expensive skin care products cheaply and from scratch.

"I took this class first of all to have a good time and to learn a lot about herbs and the ways that they can be used in care products and to flavor foods," says Jacobson. She says the most intriguing aspect of the class was learning about medicinal plants and anticipated the labs to be fun.

All semester these students have been learning the different aspects of using plants as medicine in lecture sessions. In the labs student have the opportunity to grow plants and learn how to identify them. In addition to the growing process they have also been learning how to make massage oils, lip balms, vapor rubs, tinctures, bug repellants, and even learn how to design a domestic garden. They are taking time to show you what they've learned and created from taking this class.

Jacobson has been growing plants like borage, basil, dill weed, lavender and catnip, she said. "The catnip is for my cat Lola. She broke her leg recently from jumping off a roof."

Everyone is invited and encouraged to attend. Take the opportunity to learn about using plants as medicine and other uses without taking a class. Stop in the Student Union between classes and see what you can find. Don't miss out on the opportunity to learn something new and useful.

Lauren Modisette can be reached at lmodiset@student.umass.edu

The benefits of herbs, spices and medical plants will be explored at Herbfest. UMass student projects will be on display to demonstrate the uses.

Wednesday, May 2, 2007
All DCs from 5–9 pm
VOTE FOR YOUR FAVORITE BRAND!
DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices

UM players sign on with NFL franchises

FOOTBALL from page 8

UMass running back Marcel Shipp in the Arizona backfield, and he hopes that Shipp will be able to give him some guidance while they're competing in practice.

"I think it's going to be great," he said. "[Shipp] wore No. 5 and I wore No. 5, and now to go up there and compete against him and be mentored by him is a great thing.

"I'm excited, man," he added. "I'm ready to get it going and to meet up with Marcel Shipp. I want to get up there and get to work."

London will also be joining up with a former UMass player in the form of cornerback RJ. Cobbs, who played in the NFL playoffs last year after receiving scant playing time during the regular season.

London will be playing behind some of the top receivers in the NFL, including Amani Toomer and Plaxico Burress. He hopes to learn from them and, eventually, take the reigns.

"I'm sure I'm going to learn a lot," London said. "If I went to another team I might have come in with younger receivers and maybe I wouldn't have learned as much. But Amani Toomer has been there for a while and Plaxico [Burress] is one my favorite receivers in the league, so hopefully I can come in and shut my mouth and be humble and soak everything in."

London leaves for New York on May 11.

Baylark will join 19 other rookie free agents that the Cardinals signed in the offseason, including Lafayette cornerback Michael Adams, who Baylark played against in his senior season.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu.

UMass has new team member

Eight-year-old cancer patient spends day with Minutewomen

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

Samantha Sepulveda and UMass had a special guest at their game on Sunday, Lexie Williams, who is part of the 'Friends of Jaclyn' Foundation.

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team played to a crowd of 273 on Sunday. In the stands, there was one special little girl. It was eight-year-old Lexie Williams, who was diagnosed with a front left temporal lobe astrocytoma at the age of four.

The Minutewomen have adopted her at UMass in hopes to raise awareness for pediatric brain tumors. Lexie is part of the "Friends of Jaclyn" foundation inspired by Jaclyn Murphy, an 11-year-old who was diagnosed with a malignant brain tumor in 2004.

Lexie, from Lakeville, Mass., came to the game with her mother Alice to support the Minutewomen in their season finale. Lexie met the team the previous day and has developed a lasting friendship with the girls.

"I have 24 sisters now and I'm really happy about it and all of them are so nice to me," Lexie said.

After watching UMass defeat La Salle, 19-8, and star Kathleen Typadis score her record 51st goal, it is inspiring her to play lacrosse and giving her hope to one-day play for UMass.

On Saturday, she was able to hang out with her big sisters at the men's lacrosse game against Syracuse. She brought the men's team luck when they defeated No. 12 Syracuse, 9-7, in front of a national audience.

"We got to go out to the boy's game and I got to sit with them for a while and it was very fun," Lexie said.

She said her favorite part of the weekend was going to the Minutewomen's game on Sunday and watching them win. Before the game Lexie was playing with the players and talking to them on the sidelines. She was extremely excited to be around team.

"I think it's just really special for her to have this opportunity to have such support for what she's been going through for such a long time," Lexie's mother Alice Williams said. "The fact that we are raising pediatric brain tumor awareness is just so great because it's something that we haven't really figured out yet medically, and so these kids are suffering a lot and we need to change that."

The facts about brain tumors are troubling. They are the leading cause of cancer deaths in children under age 20 and five years after being diagnosed of a primary malignant brain tumor, there is only a 32.7% survival rate for males and 31.6% for females, according to www.friendsofjaclyn.org.

"One of the ways to change it is to have more people aware of it," Williams said. "Jaclyn has been such an inspiration for so many of us in terms of her strength and all she's been through. She just wanted to share that so that Lexie could have the same experience."

On March 23, 2007 UMass played Northwestern in the First Annual Friends of Jaclyn Murphy Foundation Benefit Game. It is in honor of Jaclyn Murphy, whose doctors found a brain tumor in March 2004. The game attracted an NCAA women's lacrosse record crowd of 3,075.

The event raised over $38,000 to help pay for treatments for other children that are diagnosed with pediatric brain cancer. Today, Jaclyn is still undergoing treatment to fight the disease, but she has happily returned to her sixth grade classroom.

Making this dream possible for Lexie is Denis Murphy, Jaclyn's father. He helped make a video to get the word out about Lexie. After the video was made, Lexie received a call from UMass saying that they would like to adopt her to the team. Williams is hopeful that other women's lacrosse programs will join the cause.

"I believe this is going to get big," Williams said. "I believe that NCAA teams adopting [children who are victims of] pediatric brain tumor is going to get big. Denis said he's already got two or three other schools that are interested, so I think it could get big."

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

Barksdale, DeRosa take first at home

TRACK AND FIELD from page 8

formed well, finishing with multiple top-10 finishes in the 800-, 1,500- and 5,000-meter runs. In the 800-meter run, junior Ryan Durkin finished in fourth place with a time of 1:54.88 and junior James Bentley finished in 1:57.31, taking ninth place.

The Minutemen dominated the 1,500-meter run with six top-10 finishes. Fortunato took first place, closely followed by Durkin in second (3:57.03) and junior Nils Fischer in third (3:57.73).

Freshman Jonathan Pierce finished in fifth place (4:00.72), while junior Matthew Klypka took seventh (4:02.63), freshman Andrew Mulvaney finished 10th (4:05.51). In the 5,000-meter run Regnier took first followed closely in second by freshman Daniel Barry, with a time of 15:16.37.

In the 110-meter hurdles, freshman Tyler Cotto finished in 15.09 taking second place while sophomore Kevin Ianetta finished in fourth with a time of 15.63. Ianetta also took first in the 400-meter hurdles, while freshman Jason Dwyer took third (57.17) and senior Jonathan Morse took sixth (59.45).

Brian Miller and James Godinho tied for fifth place in the high jump at a height of 6 feet, 1.5 inches. Sophomore Mark Anderson finished in eighth in the high jump with a seasonal best height of 5 feet, 11.25 inches.

Godinho also competed in the long jump and placed second with a distance of 21 feet, 11.75 inches. Tyler Cotto finished in fifth place in the triple jump competition with a jump of 40 feet, 7.5 inches.

The Minutewomen competed against seven teams at Saturday's meet and they came out finishing second overall with four first-place finishes.

The first-place finishes came from freshman Holly Heinricher in the 100-meter dash with a time of 12.78 seconds. Freshman Rosalind Murphy finished first in the 200-meter dash in 26.44 seconds.

Junior Christina DeRosa finished the 5,000-meter run in first with a time of 17:27.14. Graduate student Mary Serdakowski finished first in the 100-meter hurdles with a time of 14.67 seconds. Serdakowski's time also set a new facility record.

The 100-meter dash held three top-10 finishes for the Minutewomen. Heinricher took first, followed by Senior Troyanah Evans in second (12.88) and Murphy in fifth (13.07). In the 200-meter dash Murphy took first and junior Britt Canfield finished seventh with a time of 26.87 seconds. Canfield also took third in the 400-meter dash with a time of 1:00.63.

In the distance events, the Minutewomen had numerous top-10 finishes. In the 1,500-meter run, junior Amanda Bodette finished eighth (4:57.29) and senior Amber Sayer finished 10th (4:59.97). In the 5,000-meter run, DeRosa took first. In the 3,000-meter steeplechase, junior Ashley Davidson finished fourth (12:10.38) and senior Cuisle Kierans finished close behind in fifth place (12:14.54), while senior Erin O'Donnell finished in eighth (13:13.51).

Serdakowski finished fourth in the 400-meter hurdles with a time of 1:05.97 and freshman Brittany Bakanowski finished sixth (1:06.79).

The 4x100 and 4x400 relay teams both finished in the top five. The 4x100 meter relay team of Holly Heinricher, Troyanah Evans, Rosalind Murphy and Dionise Miranda finished in second place with a time of 48.98. The 4x400 meter relay team of Mary Serdakowski, Britt Canfield, Brittany Bakanowski and Nicole Serapiglia finished in their place with a time of 4:04.37.

In the high jump, Katelyn O'Toole finished in second place (5 feet, 3 inches). Freshman Molly Chapin finished fourth in the pole vault at 10 feet, 6 inches. Senior Dawn Cheri Soares finished second in the long jump (16 feet, 7.75 inches) and Troyanah Evans finished fourth (16 feet, 4.5 inches).

Freshman Lisa Wilson finished third in the discus throw (124 feet) and finished 11th in the hammer throw (126 feet, 2 inches).

Next weekend the Maroon and White will be competing in the Atlantic 10 Championships in Charlotte, N.C.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu

New turf makes for slippery surface

M. LACROSSE from page 8

shoulder.

Garber is now second on the team in both goals and points scored behind sophomore attackman Jim Connolly in each category. His 26 goals are one behind Connolly's 27 and Garber's 31 points are three behind Connolly's, 34. Those are all career highs for both players.

"[The seniors] earned it. That's for sure," UMass coach Greg Cannella said of the win over the Orange.

Other contributions from the Minutemen seniors were a goal from Andrew Recchione early in the fourth quarter, an assist for midfielder Brian Jacovina, the team-leader in that category, and outstanding defense on the part of long-stick midfielder Dan Whipple.

Slippery conditions

Players from both sides were slipping all over the Garber AstroTurf on Saturday. It may have been caused by the damp conditions that swept through the Pioneer Valley late last week, but senior midfielder Denis Whelan said it has to do with the turf itself.

The AstroTurf on Garber was replaced late last summer around the same time McGuirk Stadium received Field Turf. Whelan said the seal on the field had yet to completely wear off, causing it to remain a slippery surface, especially when wet.

Although it didn't impact the game in any significant way, it did seem like the players were having a hard time planting and making cuts. Even the members of the peewee scrimmage during halftime were sliding all over the place.

Barely alive

With their win Saturday, the Minutemen broke back into the polls for the first time since Feb. 26. UMass is currently tied for the No. 17 ranking in the Nike/Inside Lacrosse Media Poll, and alone as No. 20 in the coaches' poll.

And according to Ian Power's Computer Ratings, the Minutemen are 18th with a power rating of 92.61. The NCAA Tournament has 16 participants, with Towson occupying that spot in the computer rankings with a 92.89 rating.

While an automatic bid is out of the question, UMass still has a very slight chance to play beyond this Saturday, but needs a lot of help from a lot of teams.

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu

Minutemen ride win streak to Siena innings of work.

BASEBALL from page 8

Out of everything that went well for UMass this past weekend, the performance of its pitching staff was most impressive. Other than the three weekend starters, UMass coach Mike Stone only had to use two different relief pitchers, giving his bullpen some much-needed rest.

Mitchell Eilenberg and Bryan Adamski were the only arms called upon to relieve Lloyd, Cassidy and Freni against Dayton, and all five pitchers combined for only nine runs allowed in three games.

Another bright spot for UMass was the breakout weekend of junior Ryan Franczek. The team's third baseman had been in what seemed like a season-long slump going into the series with the Flyers, but his two home runs in Game 1, and his two-RBIs in Game 3 provided the offensive production UMass had been looking for all season.

Franczek now has 13 RBIs and is hitting .230 on the year.

From honored by A-10

Freshman starter Jared Freni was named the A-10 Rookie of the Week yesterday after throwing six 1/3 innings of scoreless baseball in Sunday's 4-2 win over Dayton.

Freni allowed three hits, five walks and struck out four in improving his record to 2-3 this season. The freshman from Malden Catholic fell apart in the third inning against La Salle over a week ago, but Stone's decision to keep him in the weekend rotation proved successful after his dominating performance on Sunday.

Danny Picard can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu.

Maroon and White goes for 19 in a row

SOFTBALL from page 8

Freshman pitcher Bailey Sanders (8-4) threw against the Eagles the first time around, and while she wouldn't say who would be pitching in today's matchup, she's prepared if her name gets called.

"I threw the first game against BC, but then again Brandice [Balschmiter] is our ace, so you never know," Sanders said.

In that game, Sanders gave up just one earned run on two hits. She walked two and struck out five. Sanders has won her last five starts since a 9-8 loss against Florida Atlantic on March 19.

Thompson started against the Minutewomen in the first meeting between the teams, but poor defensive play behind the senior forced Thompson out in the first inning. She gave up four runs (all unearned) on just one hit in 2/3 innings pitched.

Savana Lloyd got the Eagles through the third inning, but allowed three earned runs, giving UMass the 7-1 lead.

Taylor Penton threw the final four innings of the game and held the Minutewomen scoreless the rest of the game, giving up just two hits. Penton is 2-9 on the season, but her 5.23 ERA is by far the best on the team.

With the Minutewoman offense going up against a pitching staff with a 6.16 ERA, the Eagles will need their bats to come alive to stay with a powerful UMass team.

To do so, however, BC will need to get by either Sanders or Balschmiter, who have a combined 1.90 ERA this season.

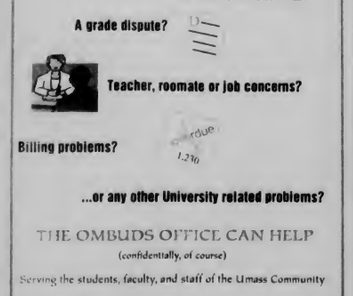
Today's game against BC comes in the midst of the final six games of the A-10 regular season, something that Cullington says is beneficial to the team.

"I love playing these non-conference games," she said. "It's a different feeling. They're always good opponents, and we always have a good game. It shows us what we need to work on. Sometimes they highlight weaknesses that we haven't seen before with other teams."

This will be the last chance for the Minutewomen to work out the chinks in the armor, as the rest of the games are for keeps. The Minutewomen play four more conference games before hosting the A-10 Tournament next weekend.

Jeremy Rice can be reach at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:



THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

YANKEE CANDLE
a passion for fragrance

At the Yankee Candle Company, Inc. we care about our employees! If you are looking for a full- or part-time summer opportunity where you can be recognized for your hard work, in a friendly and fun environment, then Yankee Candle makes perfect scents!

We make perfect scents.

Seasonal Candlemakers

We offer a competitive salary, free fitness facility, and a generous employee discount!

To apply, visit us online at: www.yankeecandle.com or in person at: 102 Christian Lane, Whately, MA.

EOE/AA

RSOs:

Put Your Advertisement in the Daily Collegian!

RSOs receive a discounted rate for advertising.
Advertise your group's events at low cost.

Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY:
♦ KARAOKE ♦
♦ LIVE BANDS ♦
THURSDAY, MAY 3RD, 2007:
DIRTY HIT
SATURDAY, MAY 5TH, 2007:
RUSTLER BAND
♦ STUDENT BAND WANTED ♦
NEED A PLACE TO PLAY?
COME TO SEVEN O'S!
ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD
SUNDERLAND, MA 01375
(413) 665-6788
2 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
NEXT TO CLIFT SIDE APTS.

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

7						6
	2	5	1	8	3
1						9
	5	6		2	9
6						4
	7	9		4	5
5						7
	1	2	6	7	8
2						3

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Decorate anew
5 Made a lap
8 Torn apart
14 First garden
15 Blockhead
16 Away from the coast
17 Chap
18 Chill
19 Red wine of Bordeaux
20 Friendly
22 Singsong mode of speaking
23 Broad satire
24 Joining together
27 Commanded
29 Lower digit
30 Muscular strength
34 Fleur-de-
35 Quote as an authority
36 Sacred service
37 Kilmer poem
39 Weeding implements
40 Tennis great Arthur
41 Operated
42 Feel
43 Hair-styling cream
44 Fortress
47 Lobbed missile
49 Tokyo to Kyoto, e.g.
54 Records
55 Person of great influence
57 Singing fiddler Krauss
58 Ewe's mate
59 In a short time
60 Make a formal retraction
61 Gone by
62 Split apart
63 Supermarket passageways
64 For each
65 Arm and Arg

DOWN
1 Imperial
2 Swelling
3 Jeans material
4 At hand
5 Mariner
6 Move upward
7 Half an African fly?
8 Sumptuous quality
9 Like mosaic pieces
10 Factory
11 Divide into sections
12 Wind dir.
13 Taboo spray's letters
21 Bereft
22 Radioactivity unit
25 Musical units
26 V formation fliers
28 "Mama ..."
30 North Carolina fort
31 Stair piece
32 Sports activities
33 Very small
35 Revolutionist Guevara
37 Three-pronged weapons
38 Hotel charges
42 Smelter's waste
44 Gangster Al
45 Cause injury to
46 Inspire to love
48 Twangy
50 Tree knot
51 Rajah's wife
52 Make amends
53 Patches
56 Coach Parseghian
57 Waikiki garland
58 Séance sound

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE HARP
SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
TONIGHT • Trivia Night
W.I.D. • Open Mic Night (all are welcome)
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar
East of the River 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate Readers Poll
(X) MC & All Credit Cards accepted
Free wireless Internet!
163 Sunderland Rd - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I have this dream where I'm going to die in dark water."
-Natalie Wood

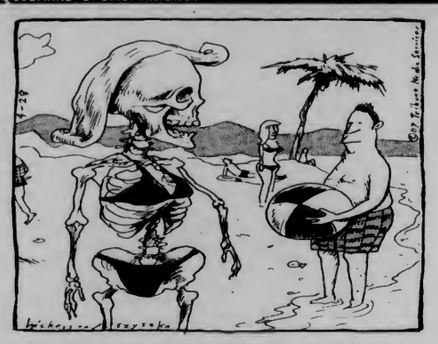
WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shaler

Hi Ranger Dee
I thought I'd do a little landscaping
Survey: You can't plant that grass. It's a non-native species and it requires far too much water to keep alive
What is that nose attached to, anyway?
There's a restaurant about fifty miles that way

RUNNING ON EMPTY By Dan Beadle

AND IS HOW SUMMER ENDED.
SOMETHING TELLS ME THAT I'M GOING TO LEARN ALL THE WRONG LESSONS FROM THIS...
LOVE SUSTAINS NOTHING.
THE FUTURE IS NOT A BETTER PLACE.
IT WASN'T SUDDEN OR DRAMATIC. WE DIDN'T ARGUE OR FIGHT.
WE WERE JUST... DIFFERENT PEOPLE.
THE HAPPINESS I ONCE HAD WOULD MAKE ME—
GHOST, I CAN'T FORGET IT.
I CAN'T FORGET HER.
I STILL LOVE HER.
BAMM!

THE QUIGMANS By Buddy Hickerson



"Does my butt look big to you?"

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Spend a romantic afternoon chasing butterflies as they flutter by.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You truly are not being crochety enough. Be more crochety please. Try scowling.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
When choosing a mate, always get a good look at the gene pool they're swimming in.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Try to sell UMass Amherst on Ebay. Keep the reserve price low to assure a sale.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Nothing goes down easier than a bowl of God's finest bounty: macaroni and cheese.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Mummify yourself in Fruit by the Foot for some delicious and historically accurate fun.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Your breakfast will be a combination of good company and frightful DC food.

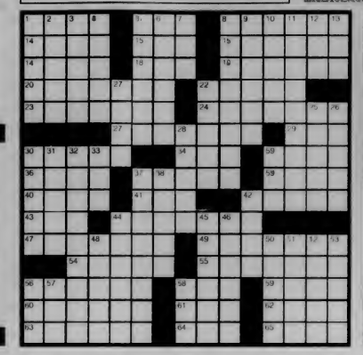
virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
It would be fiscally responsible to spend all your money buying Creepy Crawlers.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You will drink far too much water for that undersized pebble you call a bladder.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
See how many squirrels you can catch and sell as pets before the semester ends.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Show up at fencing team practice wielding a freshly caught swordfish.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Make a "To Do" list and place a member of the Clinton family at the top.



Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

Those who neglect to submit comics will be cursed with inordinate quantities of earwax.

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC Our Nurses call the shots! Guaranteed 3 ½ to 2 year Full Tuition Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,900/Mo www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Handyman, Housecleaner, Landscaper, Now & for summer. $10/hr+ 549-1578

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must call 413-584-4746

Marketers wanted for part time work during school. Earn $15/hr + bonus. Email: rdonaldson@collegepro.com

WORK OUTDOORS THIS SUMMER Full time positions available in your hometown. Earn $8-12/hour Painting houses with a fun crew. Call 888-277-9787 or www.collegepro.com

EMPLOYMENT

Brandywine Apts. Needs a certified lifeguard. Full time hours flexible. Must work some weekends. $9.00/ hr Call 549-0600 or stop by office.

Need a summer job? College Pro painters is hiring. Work with friends, steady hours, learn a valuable skill. Must be willing to work in the following areas: Milford, Millbury, Grafton, Auburn. Interviewers being held now. Please email collegepronorthbridge@yahoo.com

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Jobs for the Environment Work with Environment Massachusetts on a campaign to Fight Global Warming and work with great people! Make $400-$600/week. Career oppurtunities and benefits available. Call Mel at 413-256-6434. Visit our website @ www.jobsthatmatter.org

Castine movers in Athol is looking for summer help to include packing and labor with crews on local and/or long distance household moves. See the country, travel, keep in shape!! Warehouse help also needed for the summer season in our warehouse. Good hourly or daily wages offered. Call Kim Castine at 800-225-8068 x225 or send an email to move@castinemovers.com

HOUSE FOR RENT

3 Bedroom, Nice, recently updated Near Bus stop. Also near Downtown Northampton $1200/month No pets. For June. Skibiski Realty 413-586-1827

ROOMMATE WANTED

Cape Cod Seeking summer roommates starting 6/10 Yarmouth, MA near beach. Female only 617-519-0178

SERVICES

BUY ONE, GET ONE FREE Emergency Contraception (EC), prevents pregnancy up to 5 days after unprotected sex. Affordable and Confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992, wwwtapestry-health.org

SUMMER SUBLET

Alpine Commons apartment June-August 15th $2050/month includes utilities 413.204.9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

Amherst Beautiful quiet house great location. Need Car. With nice guy and daughter. Perfect for single/ couple. Rent nego. Call Jonathan for details. 413-253-2535

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED $10,000(Plus expenses) We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1300+ (math+verbal) Physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more information please contact us. Email: Darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, MAY 1, 2007

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Final home meet a success

Minutemen finish first, women place second

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's and women's track and field teams hosted their third and final home meet of the season on Saturday. The third time was the charm for these two teams, as the men finished in first while the women finished second.

The meet opened with a ceremony honoring seniors on both the men's and women's teams.

The men's team came out on top when they competed against nine other teams at Saturday's home meet at the UMass Track and Field Complex. The Minutemen were able to finish in first place overall due to seven first-place finishes during the meet.

Junior Kevin Murphy finished first in the 800 meters while setting a facility record with a time of 1 minute, 53.04 seconds. Junior Nathan Barksdale took first place in the 100-meter dash in 11.07 seconds. Sophomore Peter Fortunato finished first in the 1,500 meter run with a time of 3:56.86.

In the 5,000-meter run, sophomore Jesse Regnier took first with a time of 15:03.36. Sophomore Kevin Ianetta finished the 400-meter hurdles in 54.68 seconds granting him first place.

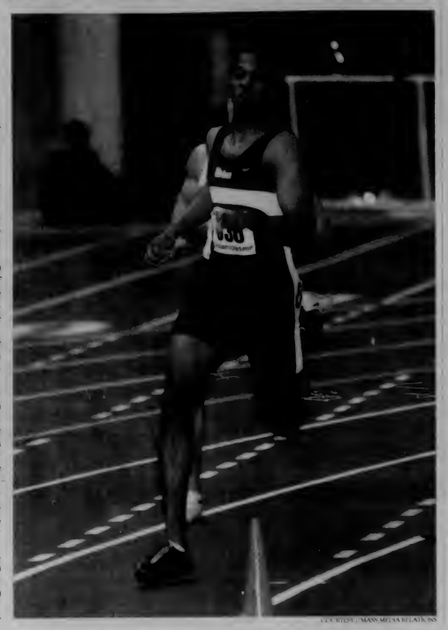
The 4x100-meter relay team of Manny Harris-Lopes, Nathan Barksdale, Ian Hackney and Brian Miller finished in first with a time of 42.53 seconds. The 4x400 meter relay also finished in first place and qualified for the ICAA Championships with a time of 3:17.02. The relay team consists of Manny Harris-Lopes, Andrew O'Donnell, Nathan Barksdale and James Godinho.

In the 100 meters, the Minutemen had four top-10 finishes with first place taken by Barksdale. Freshman Brian Miller finished in fourth place, freshman Andrew O'Donnell took sixth and freshman Ian Hackney took 10th place.

Hackney also finished 10th in the 200 meters. Harris-Lopes finished second in the 400-meter dash with a time of 48.88 seconds closely followed by freshman Patrick Phelan who finished fourth in 50.31 seconds.

In the mid-distance events the Minutemen pre-

See TRACK AND FIELD on page 6



COURTESY - MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior Nathan Barksdale captured first place in the 100-meter dash during the UMass Eight-Way Meet on Saturday. He was also part of the 4x100-meter relay team that finished first.

UMass seniors sign free agent NFL contracts

Baylark, London, Ihedigbo and Thompson reach pros

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

After a trip to the national championship in December, the Massachusetts football team, full of seniors in the 2006 season, will be sending a few to the pros.

Running back Steve Baylark, wide receiver Brandon London and offensive lineman David Thompson were all signed by NFL teams after the draft concluded.

The New York Jets invited UMass safety James Ihedigbo to a Rookie Mini-Camp that will take place next weekend.

Baylark signed a two-year contract with the Arizona Cardinals, London is heading to the New York Giants and Thompson is on board with the St. Louis Rams.

The Giants picked up London hours after the draft ended on Sunday, and had been in contact with the UMass wideout before the draft started. The Giants were debating on whether to take London in the seventh round, as one of their two picks in that round, but decided on Marshall running back Ahmad Bradshaw instead.

London, however, received a phone call from the Giants a few hours after the draft expressing their interest in signing him.

"It's a dream come true," London said in a phone call yesterday. "I was at my grandparents' house in Hampton, Va., when I got the call. We were all sitting around the TV.

"Before Bradshaw was picked, the Giants called me and said, 'You would be our top free agent.'"

Baylark had a similar experience, receiving a phone call from the Cardinals after the draft ended.

"Arizona gave me a call after the draft," Baylark said. "They were the first team to call me and I jumped right on it."

Baylark has been trying to relax over the last couple of months while balancing his football skill-work and conditioning. But Baylark had a sense of what would transpire on Draft Day, or soon thereafter.

"I was somewhat nervous, but I knew that I'd be a second-day guy or a late-rounder or a free agent, so I kind of knew where things would go," he said. "I kind of thought that I would get my name called in the last round or in the sixth round. I did hear from some teams during the draft but it didn't pan out like it was supposed to, but I understand that because it's the business world."

Baylark will be joining former

See FOOTBALL on page 6

Maroon and White stall SU offense

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

One reason the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team was successful against the Syracuse Orange last Saturday was because it executed its game plan to near perfection.

As sophomore goaltender Doc Schneider commented after the game, the Orange play an up-tempo style of lacrosse, similar to a run-and-gun offense in basketball. To counter this, UMass coach Greg Cannella installed a game plan that called for patience in the offensive box.

UMass Lacrosse

When UMass advanced the ball into the box, it proceeded to work it all the way around, carefully looking for an open shot.

"The game plan going in was to slow it down a little bit and get the extra possessions," Cannella said. "It was the game plan all through the week. It's hard to continue to do that. We did a good job of it and we were still able to finish the ball."

As his team made its way to the bus, Syracuse coach John Desko said the tempo of the game really hindered the Orange's offensive production. The seven goals they scored against UMass is way below their season average of 12.08.

Senior savors

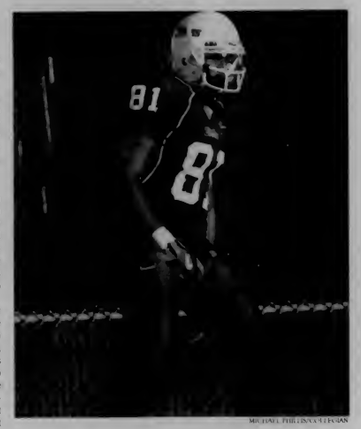
As they have been all season long, the seniors on the Minutemen contributed greatly to the victory over Syracuse. The team honored its nine upperclassmen with a ceremony before the start of the game in which each player joined his family on the field for a photo opportunity.

The biggest senior performer was midfielder Brett Garber. He recorded yet another hat trick with goals coming in the game's first, third and fourth quarters. Garber's final goal effectively put an end to the late Syracuse rally. He had the ball at the top-left of the restraining box and fired a high shot that beat the Orange goalie over his left

See M. LACROSSE on page 6

CHRISTIAN CAMPOS/COLLEGIAN

Playing for the final time on the field named for his late grandfather, senior midfielder Brett Garber netted a hat trick in a 9-7 victory over Syracuse Saturday.



MICHAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

Senior wide receiver Brandon London signed a free agent contract with the New York Giants of the National Football League yesterday.

UM Nine looks for fourth straight win

By Danny Picard
Collegian Staff

Coming off its most impressive weekend of the season, the Massachusetts baseball team travels to Londonville, N.Y., to take on Siena in a non-conference game today at 4 p.m.

UMass (15-18, 9-9 Atlantic 10) recorded its first series sweep of the year by taking three games from the Dayton Flyers this past weekend in Ohio. All three Minuteman starters –Chris Lloyd, Jim Cassidy and Jared Freni – picked up the wins.

The Flyers were outscored 20-9 on the weekend, giving the Minutemen a reason to be optimistic for a potential postseason berth. Only six teams advance to the A-10 Tournament in May, and UMass currently stands in eighth, just a game out of the sixth and final spot.

Siena, however, is not in contention for a spot in the A-10 Tournament as a non-conference team, but today's game will be a chance for the Minutemen to improve upon their longest winning streak of the season, which is currently three.

The Saints (7-27, 5-9 MAAC) have only played seven games at home this season, and are 2-5 in their own ballpark. They are coming off a three-game set against conference rival Fairfield, where they won two of three.

Siena is led by junior first baseman Rick Seltzer. The 6-foot-6-inch, 230-pound lefty leads the team in home runs with six, and RBIs with 24. He ranks third on Siena with a .284 batting average and also leads the team in walks with 20.

Only two Saints everyday starters are hitting over .300. Those players are junior third baseman Jake Willis (.339) and junior shortstop Chris Klepps (.300).

Siena's pitching staff holds a 7.07 team ERA, with only two hurlers above .500. Junior right-hander Ryan King and freshman right-hander Dan Miklas each have a 1-0 record, but they have not had significant playing time this year.

UMass is likely to see one of Siena's relief pitchers make the start today. Andy Wells, Trevor Reid and Corey Muscara have been the mid-week starters for the Saints this season.

Sophomore Tim Comiskey will make his fourth start of the season for the Minutemen. Comiskey holds a 1-3 record in eight appearances. He comes into the game with a 5.40 ERA in 25

See BASEBALL on page 6

Minutewomen go for sweep of Eagles

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team gets one more break from the race for the Atlantic 10 regular season crown.

The Maroon and White square off with non-conference rival Boston College today at the UMass Softball Complex at 5 p.m.

The Minutewomen (29-12-1, 14-0 A-10) defeated the Eagles (11-24, 3-14 Atlantic Coast Conference) in the first round of the home-and-home series on April 11, knocking off their cross-state rivals, 7-1.

UMass finishes its regular season this weekend with four conference games in three days against Fordham and La Salle.

The Maroon and White are coming off a sweep of conference foe George Washington, 4-2 and 9-1, in which the Minutewomen hit five home runs, including four in one game.

Junior Stacy Cullington and senior Amanda Acampora each hit a pair of homers in Game 2 of the doubleheader to propel the Minutewomen to their 18th straight win, and 24th straight win at home.

The Eagles broke an 11-game losing streak in the ACC Sunday with a 9-1 victory of their own against Virginia Tech. They split the doubleheader with the Hokies, falling in the first game, 3-0.

"I'm very excited," Cullington said. "I feel like we always have a good game against BC. They're really a tough opponent, there's kind of a rivalry there."

As two teams that call Massachusetts home, UMass and BC have had very different seasons.

The Minutewomen sit atop the A-10, while the Eagles are second-to-last in their conference, although the conference is the very strong ACC.

After the offensive explosion on Sunday, the Minutewomen moved their collective batting average above .300 for the first time since early in the season.

Candice Molinari continues to pace the Minutewomen with a .398 average after a 4-for-6 performance against the Colonials in which she recorded a single in her first four at-bats of the day.

Cullington leads the Maroon and White in both home runs (14) and RBIs (47), and has pushed her batting average to .316, good enough for third on the team.

The Eagles are currently hitting .268 as a team, but have bloated numbers at the top of the stat sheet.

First baseman/pitcher Britney Thompson is head-and-shoulders above her teammates with a .431 average and 10 home runs.

Her 26 RBIs ties her for the team lead with Jenna Macchi, who is second to Thompson with a .352 average and eight homers.

See SOFTBALL on page 6

BRIAN TEUTSCH/COLLEGIAN

Center fielder Candice Molinari leads the Minutewomen with a .398 batting average this season. She was 4-for-6 against GW on Sunday.

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

AM SHOWERS : HI: 59 LO: 37 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | WEDNESDAY, MAY 2, 2007

MINUTEWOMEN WIN CLOSE CONTEST PAGE 10

BANDS GET READY TO PLAY BONNAROO PAGE 6

Marching for Immigrant Rights

Hundreds of community members, which included graduate and undergraduate UMass students, protested the recent wave of deportations, demanding full legalization reform, family reunification measures, worker protection and full rights for all immigrants workers.

UMass fighting Web fraud

SLSO warns students of e-mail scams

By Derrick Perkins
Collegian Staff

As students begin the search for housing next semester, a new twist on an old con has led the University of Massachusetts to educate both students and local landlords to be weary of online scams.

Thea Costine, the Off-Campus, Graduate and Summer Session Housing Manager at UMass, began receiving complaints starting in January from local landlords who had been receiving e-mails from prospective overseas tenants.

Several of the e-mails were duplicates and all of them requested the landlords deposit checks or money orders, larger than what was required to pay the rent, into their own accounts and refund the balance of the prospective tenant through an immediate transfer of funds to another bank account.

Most of the e-mails had been sent from the United Kingdom or various African nations and several had been addressed from a woman named "Maria," according to Costine.

The scam is a variation on what the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) Web site calls the "check overpayment scam." According to the FTC, the checks are counterfeit, but

See SCAM on page 3

Nobel laureate, Mello to visit UM

COURTESY - MASS.EDU

The 2006 Nobel laureate and medical professor at UMass' medical school in Worcester, Craig Mello (left), will visit UMass Friday.

By Chris Hynes
Collegian Staff

Craig C. Mello, PhD., the 2006 Nobel laureate in medicine or physiology and a professor of molecular medicine at the University of Massachusetts Medical School Worcester, is visiting UMass Friday as the keynote speaker for the inaugural Five Colleges Undergraduate Scientific Research Symposium.

The seminar will take place in Mahar Auditorium at 4 p.m. Friday afternoon and is free and open to the public.

The conference, beginning at 1:30 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium, will allow over 60 undergraduate students from the Five College Community to showcase their interdisciplinary science research.

During their poster presentations, the students will receive feedback from their mentors, peers and Dr. Mello. The presentations will cover a range of life science focuses, including studies of temperature regulation of gene expression in bacteria and work on how environmental toxins disrupt thyroid hormone action.

Mello will also act as an investigator for the Howard Hughes Medical Institute. Mello is currently the Blais Chair in Molecular Medicine at the UMass Medical School, and has been a part of the faculty since 1994. Students may also recognize Mello as the star of recent television ads that describe UMass as "a Nobel Prize-winning University."

Along with Andrew Fire, a professor of genetics at Stanford University, Mello received the Nobel Prize for the discovery of the RNA interference. Their study showed the key role that RNA takes in gene regulation. The RNA Interference (RNAi) can be used as a powerful research tool. Scientists use it to silence genes one by one to determine the effects of each gene on a cell's growth and function. The research was conducted at the UMass Medical School.

Today, RNAi is being tested for its ability to treat respiratory infections, macular degeneration, hepatitis, cancer and many other illnesses.

"It is very unusual for a piece of work to completely revolutionize the whole way we think about biological processes and regulation, but this has opened up a whole new field in biology" Professor Nick Hastie, director of the Medical Research Council's Human Genetics Unit, told the BBC.

The Nobel laureate will speak on "Return to the RNAi World: Rethinking Gene Expression, Evolution and Medicine."

The symposium is being hosted by the Five Colleges Symposium Committee and is sponsored by Howard Hughes Medical Institute Science Education Awards to the UMass campus and to Smith College.

Chris Hynes can be reached at chynes@student.umass.edu

Student speaker named in senior commencement

By Alana Melanson
Collegian Staff

Senior Alison C. Briggs has been selected to be this year's student speaker at the University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Commencement.

"I really never thought I'd get picked," Briggs said about her speech. "I don't quote any great philosophers – I just talk about how I feel."

At the end of the Fall 2006 semester, Briggs, a double major in psychology and sociology from Sharon, Mass., was surfing through pages on the UMass Web site and happened to notice that the school was in search of a student speaker for the 2007 commencement ceremony at the end of May.

Feeling inspired, she wrote a speech over winter break and submitted it in February after returning for the spring semester.

To her surprise, one month later, Briggs was asked by the University to participate in an auditioning process which involved reciting the speech in front of a committee composed of both faculty members and students.

"They said they would call me in a week to let me know," Briggs said, "but they called later on that day."

Briggs wasn't expecting to be granted such an honor, but she is both excited and nervous in anticipation of speaking in front of several thousand graduates, friends and family members on the big day.

"We're all at the same point in our lives, we don't know what's going to happen next," Briggs said about herself and her fellow graduating seniors.

In a time of such uncertainty and transition, she feels that it is important to remind the graduates of how much they've accomplished thus far in order to keep them motivated for future success.

Briggs has been a resident assistant in the Gray/Field cluster in the Orchard Hill residential area for the past two years. She has also worked as co-manager of Sweets N' More, a student-run co-op and non-profit business located in the Field lounge, for her entire four years on campus.

This year, Briggs worked as a research assistant in the psychology department, helping UMass graduate students to run experiments and collect data for a project on motivation overseen by Professor Ronnie Janoff-Bulman.

After graduation, Briggs will be moving to Phoenix, Ariz. During her year off before graduate school, she wants to become involved with social work and hopes to find a job in case management for at-risk youth. She is still deciding between social work and law when it comes to graduate school, but is leaning toward a degree in social work, which she will most likely pursue at Arizona State University. ASU's main Tempe campus is the second-largest American university in terms of student enrollment.

Alana Melanson can be reached at amelanso@student.umass.edu.

Bush places veto on troop withdrawal bill

By Anne Flaherty and Jennifer Loven
Associated Press

WASHINGTON – President Bush vetoed legislation to pull United States troops out of Iraq Tuesday night in a historic showdown with Congress over whether the unpopular and costly war should end or escalate.

It was a day of high political drama, falling on the fourth anniversary of Bush's "Mission Accomplished" speech declaring that major combat operations had ended in Iraq.

In only the second veto of his presidency, Bush rejected legislation pushed by Democratic leaders that would require the first U.S. combat troops to be withdrawn by Oct. 1 with a goal of a complete pullout six months later.

"This is a prescription for chaos and confusion and we must not impose it on our troops," Bush said in a nationally broadcast statement from the White House. He said the bill would "mandate a rigid and artificial deadline" for troop pullouts, and "it makes no sense to tell the enemy when you plan to start withdrawing."

Democrats accused Bush of ignoring Americans' desire to stop the war, which has claimed the lives of more than 3,350 members of the military.

"The president wants a blank check," said House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.), moments after Bush's appearance. "The Congress is not going to give it to him." She said lawmakers would work with him to find common ground but added that there was "great distance" between them on Iraq.

See VETO on page 3

Retired Iraqi general speaks at UMass

By Kate Olsen
Collegian Staff

The Republican Club hosted guest lecturer, Georges Sada, a retired general of the Iraqi Air Force, last night in the Bowker Auditorium. Sada brought a different perspective of the war in Iraq and the War on Terror to the University of Massachusetts campus, with harrowing wartime narratives and praises concerning American intervention in the Middle East.

"The American project in the Middle East is democracy and freedom," exclaimed Sada, an Assyrian and born-again Christian.

The existence of weapons of mass destruction was a top priority in Sada's agenda.

"I want to describe to you one thing: I have seen them [WMDs] with my eyes."

He stated that only a few days before the invasion of Iraq began that the weapons were moved by air and ground to Syria in a quick, but disorderly, manner by Saddam Hussein.

Sada profusely praised the efforts of

See SADA on page 2

Georges Sada, a retired general of the Iraqi Air Force, brought by the UMass Republican Club, spoke in the Bowker Auditorium last night.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 129

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jaimeson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staggin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
FEATURES EDITOR Melissa D'Amico
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolianitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALMA UTI, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN INDEPENDENT SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Eric Athas

COPY EDITOR
Callie Williams

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

Arctic polar caps melting 30 years ahead of forecast

BY DEBORAH ZABARENKO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Arctic ice cap is melting much faster than expected and is now about 30 years ahead of predictions made by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, a United States ice expert said on Tuesday.

This means the ocean at the top of the world could be free or nearly free of summer ice by 2020, three decades sooner than the global panel's gloomiest forecast of 2050.

No ice on the Arctic Ocean during summer would be a major spur to global warming, said Ted Scambos, a glaciologist at the National Snow and Ice Center in Colorado.

"Right now ... the Arctic helps keep the Earth cool," Scambos said in a telephone interview. "Without that Arctic ice, or with much less of it, the Earth will warm much faster."

That is because ice reflects light and heat; when it is gone, the much darker land or sea will absorb more light and heat, making it more difficult for the planet to cool down, even in winter, he said.

Scambos and co-authors of the study, published in the journal Geophysical Research Letters, used satellite data and visual confirmation of Arctic ice to reach their conclusions, a far different picture than that obtained from computer models used by the scientists of the intergovernmental panel.

"The IPCC report was very careful, very thorough and cautious, so they erred on the side of what would certainly occur as opposed to what might occur," Scambos said in a telephone interview.

The wide possibility of what might occur included a much later melt up north, or a much earlier one, Scambos said.

"It appears we're on pace about 30 years earlier than expected to reach a state where we don't have sea ice or at least not very much in late summer in the Arctic Ocean," he said.

He discounted the notion that the sharp warming trend in the Arctic might be due to natural climate cycles. "There aren't many periods in history that are this dramatic in terms of natural variability," Scambos said.

Girl, 19, to graduate college after one year

BLOOMFIELD HILLS, Mich. (AP) — A 19-year-old suburban Detroit resident is on track to graduate from The University of Michigan after just a year of study.

Nicole Matisse, of Bloomfield Hills, is to officially graduate in the summer with a bachelor's degree in psychology.

As a student at Lahser High School, Matisse had exhausted the curriculum by her junior year. Between the exams she passed on eight advanced placement courses and the eight classes she took at Oakland Community College, she had amassed enough credits to enter the university last fall as a junior.

"When I got to U-M, I only took 19 credits, and I was bored and craved more credits," she told The Detroit News for a Wednesday story. "So even when I took 27 credits this semester, I felt I could have added even more."

It's unclear whether any other students have done what Matisse will accomplish this year, but Donna Wessel Walker, assistant director of the honors program, said she's never seen it happen.

"She's taking in one semester the course load that most people take in two," Wessel Walker said. "She is one determined young lady."

Matisse's next step is to start as a first-year student at the Wayne State University law school in Detroit.

— Associated Press

Retired Iraqi general speaks at UM

SADA from page 1

the American military and expressed his extreme sympathy for those invested in the freeing of Iraq.

"I am sure they can manage to do it because my heart is bleeding when I hear that an American has been killed."

Sada, author of his autobiography "Saddam's Secrets: How an Iraqi General Defied & Survived Saddam Hussein," worked closely under Saddam Hussein, "a very difficult man," as a military general and senior counselor to the dictator, attempting on numerous occasions to dissuade Hussein from proposed events, such as invading Kuwait and attacking Israel with chemical weapons.

The former general began his talk with a discussion on the history of the nation.

"Iraq is a country very much deep in history…where we speak in 5,000 and 7,000 years ago," Sada explained. He compared the country's profound history to that of other nations, such as the United States, who can only negotiate in terms of hundreds of years.

Sada explained the demographics of Iraq and how the country drastically differs from the rest of the Islamic world, where most individuals are of Assyrian and Kurdish descent, but Arabs and Turks and other minorities also exist.

While the religion of Islam consists of 80 percent Sunni Muslims and 20 percent Shi'a Muslims, Iraq is distinctive, with a 20 percent Sunni and 60 percent Shi'a population, according to Sada.

During the Iran-Iraq war in 1980 was when Saddam began to increase his power. Sada showed his disapproval, although he was one of the top generals and advisers to Hussein during the war, "[It was] a war that started for nothing and finished for nothing."

Sada officially retired from the service in 1986, but was called back on active duty in 1990 during Hussein's invasion of Kuwait. Sada delved into two compelling narratives about his experiences being back in the ranks as a top general.

Firstly, when asked for advice by Hussein on the wartime situation, Sada said "Our forces should withdraw immediately from Kuwait," to which Hussein replied, "If you say this again your head will be separated from your body."

Sada described his near-death experience on the night of the beginning of the first Gulf War. At 1:30 a.m. on Jan. 17, 1991, Sada and his colleagues were waiting for Hussein in the heavily fortified, main operations room. Everyone was exhausted and Hussein was nowhere to be found. Thus, Sada retired to the supreme commander's apartment, the only bedroom on site. After only one hour, he awoke to feel the earth shaking and got out of bed to see water running rampant through the crack under the door. As he turned around to look back at the bed, he saw that it had been flattened by a slab of concrete from an American attack aimed directly above Hussein's bed: "Some people say that the American intelligence is not very good. I have checked them out, and they are very, very good!" said Sada in response to the American military's attempt to destroy Hussein by knowing exactly where he was sleeping.

In addition to his duties as a senior counselor and adviser to the dictator, Sada was responsible for 45 captured American pilots during the war.

When ordered to initiate the execution of the pilots by a relative and officer of Hussein, Sada explained, "I wanted the prisoners to be treated according to the Geneva convention…and can you imagine that we were under attack from America and I was trying to save Americans from this crazy man."

Sada was imprisoned by his own country and officers in the cell adjacent to the American POWs and discharged from the service.

The remainder of the lecture period was utilized by students and members of the community for a question and answer session where individuals inquired about the political situation in the country, the policies of the United States in Iraq and other Middle Eastern countries, and specific historical events.

"The Americans came in with a very good will," Sada answered. However, he explained to the audience that the job America came to do was a difficult one, but is now almost over: "No American should die for the Iraqi security, [the job] should be done by me and my colleagues…their big job is finished and now is the time to withdraw gradually and for [America] to emerge as winners."

He continued to laud American intervention in Iraq and explained that it was not an easy situation, especially in dealing with the local people.

"You put the American military in the middle of the people and you don't know who your enemy is and who is your friend. Iraqis should take over because they know who this is and who is that."

Sada described that the people do not know how to rule, and that Iraqi people do not know how to "exercise freedom or [know] what democracy is."

Sada took a stance that did not blame the American military or the efforts of Operation Iraqi freedom, something many are not used to hearing on campus, "It is not the Americans' faults my brothers and sisters. It is our faults."

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@student.umass.edu

Shakespeare enters video games

BY MARTIN ROBERTS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

TORONTO (AP) — Children typically spend hours in front of a computer, so a Canadian university has decided to introduce them to Shakespeare with a video game.

While zapping enemy spaceships players have to help recover the stolen text of Romeo and Juliet by memorizing lines from the famous play, learning facts about Shakespeare's life and devising synonyms and homonyms for parts of the text.

"The game is a way to capitalize on the time that kids spend on computers," said Professor Daniel Fischlin who headed the team at the University of Guelph in Ontario that developed the game called "Speare."

"I don't know of another medium that has seven-year-olds spouting Shakespeare," Fischlin added in response to charges the game might trivialize learning.

The game was launched earlier this week to coincide with the anniversary of Shakespeare's death after two years and $50,000 ($44,800) spent developing it.

Fischlin, who tested it on more than 100 grade-six students, plans to publish his findings in an academic journal. The game is currently available online from a company set up by the university.

"Speare" contains a link to a database about Shakespeare called Canadian Adaptations of Shakespeare that was developed by the university as an educational resource.

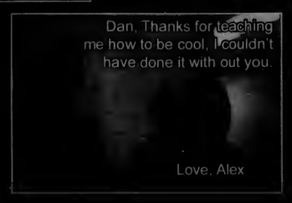
The site has lesson plans for teachers, video interviews and e-books of the Bard's plays. It provided the inspiration for the game when professors realized the site's multimedia features were accessed mainly by young people.

Fischlin, who is applying for a patent, said he knows of no other video game linked to a similar online resource.

Leave your Senior Will
in the Collegian's 2007 UMass Flashback Grad Issue
One last chance for you to leave your mark on UMass.

JUST $15 Per message

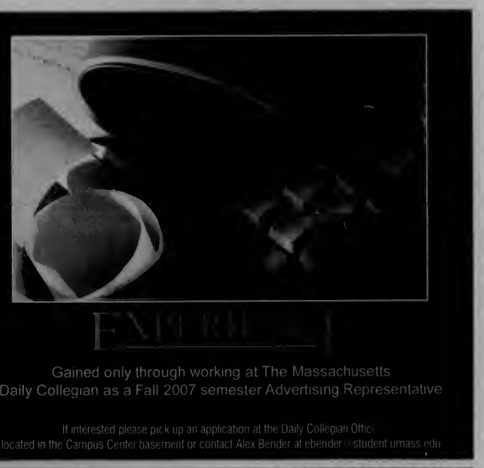
Surprise your friends, Thank a professor,



Actual size of messages 2 x3

or tell your graduating class congratulations.

Send your photo and statement to thecollegian@gmail.com or stop by 113 Campus center for payment info



Gained only through working at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian as a Fall 2007 semester Advertising Representative
If interested please pick up an application at the Daily Collegian Office located in the Campus Center basement or contact Alex Bender at ebender@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
is looking for new
Graphic Designers
for the Fall 2007 semester

- Daily Advertising Designers
- Nightly Production Supervisors
- Advertising Production Manager

major can apply. Previous design nce not necessary, but encouraged.

Visit our office in the Campus Center Basement
10am - 4pm for applications.

UMass warns against Internet scams, fraud of enough quality to fool bank tellers. Once the check bounces, and after the money has been transferred back to the original sender, the victim is left liable for the sum of the funds. In 2004, the FTC issued a consumer alert highlighting the check overpayment scam and its other manifestations, which include offers of fake foreign lottery winnings and the purchase of goods over the Internet with counterfeit forms of payment.

SCAM from page 1

Costine said the number of complaints led the Commuter Services and Housing Resource Center (CSHR) at UMass to post an online alert warning students and landlords alike about the Internet scam.

"It really impacts people who post listings to rent," Costine said. "Some of those folks are students looking to sublet. Most of them are traditional landlords. What [CSHR] can do is have the alert and tell them if they see something that sounds funky to use caution and common sense."

Attorney Charles DiMare, the Director of the Student Legal Service Office (SLSO), has seen several UMass students taken advantage of by online scams over the last couple of years.

"Unfortunately, some of them have gotten themselves into criminal trouble," DiMare said. "Not understanding that they were part of a scam and inadvertently participating and following the instructions they received from the e-mail they got themselves into criminal liability."

According to DiMare, the problem with online scams is not a recent one. He said he had been aware of the issue for at least four or five years in his capacity as the director of SLSO.

The Internet Crime Complaint Center (IC3), a joint operation formed by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the National White Collar Crime Center to investigate online scams, reported that in 2006 counterfeit checking scams had joined hit man and phishing scams in recent levels of high activity. Check frauds amounted to 4.9 percent of all reported scams, up from 2.9 percent in 2005, for an estimated loss of $3,744 on average per victim.

In Massachusetts, the IC3 reported that check fraud amounted to 4.2 percent of all Internet scam complaints received for an average loss of $3,550, higher than auction fraud, non-delivery of payment fraud and credit card fraud. The 26.4 percent of all complaints filed in Massachusetts came from people between the ages of 20 and 29. Only 4.8 percent came from people under the age of 20.

The IC3 estimates that only one in seven incidents of online fraud reach the attention of the proper law enforcement agencies or regulatory organizations.

According to the IC3 Web site, consumers engaged in overseas financial transactions should contact the financial institution that issued the check for verification, inspect cashiers checks for deletions or alterations and to make sure the signature has not been traced.

DiMare cautions students from releasing any of their personal information online and recommends that students delete any e-mails they receive offering easy financial gain.

"If it sounds too good to be true, then it is," he said. "Delete it. It's a scam, it's obviously a scam."

Bush places veto on troop withdrawal bill

VETO from page 1

The legislation amounted to a rare rebuke of a wartime president and an assertion by Democrats that Congress must play a major role in Iraq and the extent of U.S. involvement.

Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid said Bush has an obligation to explain his plan for responsibly ending the war.

"If the president thinks by vetoing this bill, he'll stop us from working to change the direction of the war in Iraq, he is mistaken," Reid said.

Lacking the votes to override the president, Democrats have already signaled they intend to approve a replacement bill stripped of the troop withdrawal timetable. Determined to challenge Bush's policy, they are turning their attention to setting goals for the Iraqi government to meet as it struggles to establish a more secure, democratic society.

The White House and congressional Republicans have also called for so-called benchmarks, but only if they don't mandate a troop withdrawal or some other major change in war policy.

Bush will meet with congressional leaders – Democrats and Republicans alike — on Wednesday to discuss new legislation.

He said Democrats had made a political statement by passing anti-war legislation. "They've sent their message, and now it's time to put politics behind us and support our troops with the funds," the president said.

He said the need to act was urgent because without a war-funding bill, the armed forces will have to consider cutting back on buying or repairing equipment.

"Our troops and their families deserve better, and their elected leaders can do better," Bush said.

"Whatever our differences, surely we can agree that our troops are worthy of this funding and that we have a responsibility to get it to them without further delay," the president said.

Bush signed the veto with a pen given to him by Robert Derga, the father of Marine Corps Reserve Cpl. Dustin Derga, who was killed in Iraq on May 8, 2005. The elder Derga spoke with Bush two weeks ago at a meeting the president had with military families at the White House.

MCT

President Bush vetoed legislation to pull U.S. troops out of Iraq in a historic showdown with Congress over whether the unpopular and costly war should end or escalate, yesterday.

Derga asked Bush to promise to use the pen in his veto. On Tuesday, Derga contacted the White House to remind Bush to use the pen, and so he did. The 24-year-old Dustin Derga served with Lima Company, 3rd Battalion 25th Marines from Columbus, Ohio. The five-year Marine reservist and fire team leader was killed by an armor-piercing round in Anbar Province.

Minutes after Bush vetoed the bill, an anti-war demonstrator stood outside the White House with a bullhorn: "How many more must die? How many more must die?"

Earlier at the Capitol, Democrats held an unusual signing ceremony of the $124.2 billion bill before sending it to the White House.

"The president has put our troops in the middle of a civil war," said Reid. "Reality on the ground proves what we all know: A change of course is needed."

For his part, Bush flew to Florida to meet with military commanders and said the Democratic proposal would turn Iraq into a "cauldron of chaos." With sleeves rolled up, Bush shook hands with troops at MacDill Air Force Base in Tampa, Fla., the headquarters of U.S. Central Command, which oversees military operations in the Middle East, including Iraq. Then Bush returned to the White House to announce his veto just before network news shows.

Democratic leaders refused to discuss their approach to Wednesday's meeting with Bush. Past meetings have not led to any compromises, although members said this time they hoped Bush would signal a willingness to negotiate.

"I don't want to get into a negotiation with myself," Reid said when asked about conversations with Senate Republican leader Mitch McConnell of Kentucky.

Immigration rally turnout lower than '06

BY PETER PRENGAMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Immigration rallies held nationwide Tuesday produced only a fraction of the million-plus protesters who turned out last year, as fear about raids and frustration that the marches haven't pushed Congress to pass reform kept many people at home.

In Los Angeles, where several hundred thousand turned out last year, about 25,000 attended a downtown rally, said police Capt. Andrew Smith, an incident commander. In Chicago, where more than 400,000 swarmed the streets a year earlier, police officials put initial estimates at about 150,000.

Organizers said those who did march felt a sense of urgency to keep immigration reform from getting pushed to the back burner by the 2008 presidential elections.

"There's no reason a pro-immigration bill can't be passed. That's one of the messages being sent today," said Chicago protester Shaun Harkin, 34, of Northern Ireland, who has lived in the United States as a legal resident for 15 years.

Melissa Woo, a 22-year-old American citizen who immigrated from South Korea, carried a Korean flag over her shoulder in Chicago as she criticized politicians for "buckling at the knees."

"Us immigrants aren't pieces of trash, we're human beings," she said.

Protests were mostly peaceful, except for an evening rally at a park in Los Angeles, where some suspected of throwing rocks and bottles at police were arrested. Police fired rubber bullets and used batons to push the crowd out of the street and onto the sidewalk. It was not immediately known if anyone was injured.

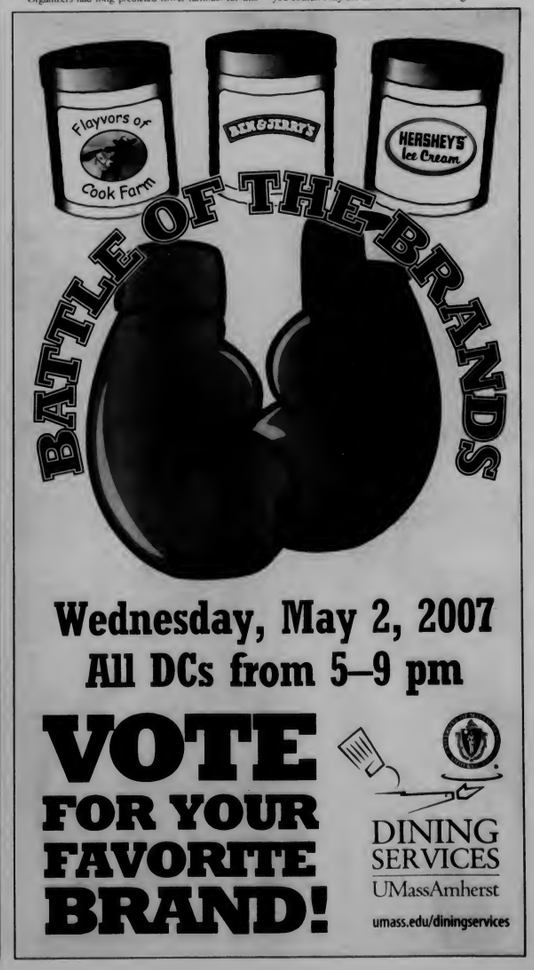
Organizers had long predicted lower turnouts for this year's marches, saying an increase in immigration raids in recent months have left many immigrants afraid to speak out in public. That's a change since rallies in 2006, when some illegal immigrants wore T-shirts saying "I'm illegal. So what?"

Others believe that the marches have not pushed Congress to pass immigration legislation, and many groups are now focusing on citizenship and voter registration drives instead of street demonstrations.

Organizers said smaller crowds do not mean the movement to win a path to citizenship for 12 million illegal immigrants has lost momentum.

"People are saying we need to get together to demonstrate unity," said Joshua Hoyt, executive director of the Illinois Coalition for Immigrant and Refugee Rights. "But with so much happening, and so many concrete victories, you couldn't say the movement is weakening."

MONEY FOR COLLEGE
NOW
Because Aunt Jean needed more Botox®.
She got a facelift, you got the tuition bill.
Not to worry: a Campus Door student loan can cover up to 100% of your education costs, with online approval in less than a minute.
All without the painful side effects.
campusdoor.com
CAMPUSDOOR
GREAT FUTURES START HERE
Like this poster? Download your own printable PDF version at campusdoor.com/posters



A degree of difficulty

Andrew Freeman

In her 2006 book, Marilee Jones, dean of admissions at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology discussed the mentality of many students entering college. She noted the fear of failure that many had:

"Perfectionists fear adversity…The thought of not doing something well prevents them from taking the chances that successful people need to take to reach their greatest potential."

Last Thursday, Jones admitted her own fear. She lacked "the courage to correct [her] resume," which falsely claimed that she had degrees from three colleges in New York, according to her public statement. Jones had attended only one of those institutions – Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute - for two years as a parttime student, and she did not earn a degree. MIT learned about her fabrication from an anonymous phone call to another dean.

Jones worked in the MIT admissions office for 28 years. She started in an entry-level secretarial position, which did not require a college degree, and worked her way up to becoming the dean of admissions. Presumably, if Jones had admitted her distortion at some earlier point in her long career, the university would not have demanded that she resign.

In a bitter irony, the former dean was vocal in her opposition to the parental culture that valued getting into the right college above all else. Her resignation reaffirms the necessity of a college education in the modern workforce. For many, being perceived as college-educated is more essential than actually going to college.

While Jones merely lied on her resume, other individuals go further in their deception of employers.

There is a difference between merely lying about one's credentials and falsifying them.

There is a burgeoning online industry that sells fake diplomas which can be used for fraud. For example, fakedegrees.com advertises diploma of "extremely high quality," which it will produce for those who sign up for a $199 membership. The company claims its products are "intended for novelty purposes only" – for "fun, gags or fooling friends." They undermine this argument by emphasizing the high quality and realistic appearance of the degrees. Furthermore, it is difficult to imagine shelling out hundreds of dollars merely to mislead friends. Such an investment is much more credible when one is trying to mislead an employer.

Fake degrees have cropped up in many fields, perhaps the most disturbing of which is security agencies. In 2003, a worker at the Department of Homeland Security discovered that his boss Laura Callahan, who was boasting of her new PhD, had received it from a fraudulent institution. Callahan, then the deputy chief information officer of the agency, claimed to have Bachelor's, Master's and PhD degrees from Hamilton University, a diploma mill masquerading as an accredited university. These degrees were acquired over a one year period in 2000-01, but she backdated them to 1993, 1995 and 2000 for authenticity. Practically no work was required to acquire the degrees – the PhD required a 2,000-word essay.

This was hardly an isolated incident. As reported in Reason magazine, an investigation by the Government Accountability Office found 463 government employees, including more than 28 senior officials, had fraudulent degrees. Furthermore, these employees were discovered by a study of a mere three of the dozens of diploma mills. There are potentially thousands of federal employees with fake degrees.

There is a difference between merely lying about one's credentials and falsifying them. Marilee Jones was arguably qualified for her position, despite her lack of a college degree, based on her extensive experience in the admissions office. But her deception was an offense against the integrity of MIT. Academic reputations are based on honesty, both for individuals and institutions. Permitting a dean to retain a position on false credentials would be similar to allowing a professor to plagiarize a colleague's paper.

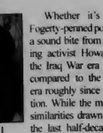
Education is about far more than just showing up and getting a degree. It is about intellectual growth and self-discovery, in addition to the acquisition of skills useful for the workplace. Yet our society reduces everything to the product, as if a piece of paper could symbolize four-plus years of learning (or lack thereof). When education is represented in such a way, outrages like the Jones incident and diploma mills are not merely predictable; they are inevitable.

Unfortunately, as Ms. Jones has illustrated, this mindset is pervasive in academia. Based on her statement, it seems she feared that people would not look beyond her lack of degrees in judging her worthiness for promotion. Lacking the courage to revise her resume, she continued in the fraud, digging herself a deeper figurative grave.

Fear of facing adversity is one factor in this incident, but it is hardly the only one. Jones' deception also points to a broader problem in the way we value education, a problem that she herself, ironically, had seen: the view that education should be a commodity.

Andrew Freeman writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at ajfreema@student.umass.edu.

Not so radical a concept



Michael Cartwright

Whether it's a John Fogerty-penned pop song or a sound bite from left-leaning activist Howard Zinn, the Iraq War era has been compared to the Vietnam era roughly since its inception. While the majority of similarities drawn out over the last half-decade aren't the least bit off-the-mark, one distinct difference is evident: The lack of efficacy and meaningfulness in today's protests. Whether protesting the war, the criminalization of marijuana or whatever it may be, a certain level of effectiveness is noticeably absent from our generation.

Around Amherst, it's not uncommon to notice a pack of protesters holding picket signs in opposition to any of the world's many injustices, especially the Iraq War. I can only experience the Vietnam War through books, lectures, films and old newspaper clippings, but I don't need to have lived in the Vietnam era to know there isn't any 36-hour Berkeley protest in sight, and voices comparable to a younger Norman Mailer and I.F. Stone are nowhere to be found. Nowadays, I see more or less the same people day after day, both on-campus and off. They're saying nothing new and are basically ignored by almost everybody.

A protest is a method of political expression that should only be used to condemn the most insupportable offenses. The concept of idealistic activists uniting to form a cohesive unit is an inspiring and admirable one. Unfortunately, some of these idealistic picket sign wavers fail to realize the more frequently they take to the streets in disapproval, the more ineffective their protests gradually become. A protest itself is supposed to be radical, but if protesters become a constant fixture, aren't they just defeating their own purpose? They eventually become something like a homeless bum, standing on the sidewalk, holding the same cardboard sign day after day. Maybe close attention is paid at first, but after habitually passing the same beggar, one will eventually walk right past him without hesitation, and the story with local protesters is the same.

The more frequently they take to the streets in disapproval, the more ineffective their protests gradually become.

An unremarkable local protest was held at Amherst's "Extravaganja" on April 21. Attendees used the current political climate to argue that hemp is "all we need to make the world a better place." After talking about the world's ignorance to global warming and the iniquities of the Iraq War, a speaker explained that more widespread use of hemp would solve the world's problems. He stood up chanting, "Hemp! Bio-Diesel! Hemp and Bio-Diesel man! That'll stop everything! That's all we need in our lives!" But something tells me we need a little bit more than just hemp in our lives. And something tells me the speaker needs a little bit less hemp in his.

A few of the performances at "Extravaganja" were actually inspiring, but most were exceptionally dull. This included, but was not limited to, the event's spoken-word poet. Now, I appreciate spoken-word poetry, but the artist who graced the Amherst common that Saturday delivered some of the most obnoxious, pointless, pathetic, pseudo-poetical rants I have ever heard. He attempted to entertain the crowd with random word association. It went something like this: / Weed / Pot / Green / Cash / Cash Cow / Cow Tipping / Tipping Point / Gladwell / Happiness / Smiles / Pot Green / Weed / Happy 4/20.

Now should a mumbling poet with a satchel full of Quaaludes really be leading a movement? It left me wondering what happened to articulate yet entertaining minds like Paul Krassner's? And wondering what exactly was this poet smoking? And how could I score some of it for April 20 2008?

I have no qualms about the decriminalization of marijuana or a problem with these kinds of festivals in general. If people wish to spend a weekend listening to music on drugs, that's their prerogative. It only becomes bothersome when certain attendees masquerade around in protest, as if they're actually passionate about a cause, when in reality, they couldn't conceive an argument to support their stance to begin with. Those people should be attending festivals to listen to good music and to have a good time, not to shove uninformed political opinions down someone's throat.

Maybe a smoke-filled field is not the ideal scene for a protest these days. Maybe we need to go about things another way? Look at the innumerable Facebook.com "I Support _____ in '08" and "Legalize Marijuana" groups online. When it only consists of a left-click, this generation has no problem telling people how they actually feel. After the Virginia Tech tragedy struck, what was bigger news, the impromptu candle vigils or the thousands joining various Facebook support groups? In the digital age, the screaming woman on the side of the road with a picket sign almost comes off as unnecessary.

But as long as people like our current president are being elected into office, as long as we want to promote healthy public discourse, we certainly need proper protests. So, let's carefully pick and choose how, when, where, and with whom we protest so it can again become a meaningful political tool and not a complete joke, like last Saturday's thinly veiled demonstration was.

Now, if you disagree with me on this, by all means, please send me an e-mail. If you decide to stand outside my apartment door holding a picket sign in protest, I'll likely walk right by you.

Michael Cartwright can be reached at mcartwri@student.umass.edu.

Perhaps it's time for local protesters to listen up and try new tactics.

Imposing on our space

John Gruenenfelder

The administration has dropped the ball again, this time with regards to the heavens. In mid-January, China destroyed a satellite in Earth orbit with a ground launched missile. This was the first time in over 20 years that any nation has accomplished such a feat. Months later, it has been revealed that the Bush administration knew of the impending test well ahead of its scheduled date but chose to say nothing and let China proceed.

The government issued an understandably stern response after the test occurred. However, as The New York Times reported last week, the administration was aware of the test well before it occurred. Just as we expect the government to exert pressure on other countries when they make aggressive military gestures, so too should they have pressured China to abandon this test. Certainly, the ability to destroy a satellite in orbit is an aggressive move, but it also has serious repercussions for many other nations.

According to the Times article, the United States was aware of two previous tests in 2005 and 2006 which did not impact satellites but said nothing. Such failed tests or near-misses are precisely the time when other nations should be putting pressure on China to stop its activities. We rely on satellites in orbit, more and more and space debris only serve to endanger these very expensive pieces of equipment.

We rely on satellites in orbit, more and more and space debris only serve to endanger these very expensive pieces of equipment.

When debris is at a low altitude, around 100 km, its lifetime is not particularly long and it will likely fall from orbit within about a year. The higher the initial orbit, the longer it will remain in space. In the recent test, the Chinese destroyed an abandoned weather satellite at an altitude of 750 kilometers and in the process created 1600 new pieces of debris. At that height the debris will be around for many years.

Another worry is an event scientists refer to as a debris cascade – an occurrence to do debris reaching a critical density. The idea is that there is only so much room in orbit for space junk to move about without hitting other pieces. After the critical density is passed, eventually a piece of junk will impact another, creating many more pieces of debris which will, in turn, hit more, and so on causing a chain reaction that will litter Earth orbit. Many scientists see this as an eventuality with the big question being – when will it happen?

Clearly, the majority of the fault for the recent test lies with the Chinese government for engaging in what can only be called a show of force, not unlike North Korea's missile launching over the Pacific. At the same time, China has been a vocal proponent of a treaty to ban space weapons. But, given this test, do they really mean it?

Our administration's main excuse seems to be that they did not believe they could stop China from performing the test, and so preferred not to let China know how closely we monitor their military tests. But as in so many other recent cases, this lapse in judgment has come back to bite the government. Not only does China now know that we knew beforehand, but China has also been able to perform its test and add even more litter to space.

Considering how much our own military and private corporations have come to rely on space, it seems natural that the U.S. would also be pushing for such a treaty. Unfortunately, the administration is not, due in part to a lingering hope that they can get the missile defense system up and running. Administration fears of limiting itself go beyond missile defense. Last October, President Bush signed a new National Space Policy document that rejects any future agreements that limit U.S. flexibility in space. That means no treaty banning space weapons with China or anybody else.

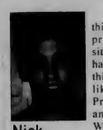
So, the fact that the administration said nothing about the Chinese tests beforehand becomes none too surprising, but still unfortunate. When so many sectors rely on space – military, communications, Earth science, astronomy and a typical stargazer – why is there no concerted effort to protect this common environment which the whole planet shares?

As someone who has helped launch (unsuccessfully) satellites into space, I am perhaps more concerned than the average citizen. It is also true that many satellites which most people make use of, such as TV satellites, are at much higher geosynchronous orbits and away from the growing debris cloud. But even that orbit has a finite size and will eventually feel the pressure of growing debris problems. It's much easier to put something into space than to take it back down and unless our government and others act soon the problem will pose a serious threat to not only satellites but to astronauts as well.

John Gruenenfelder can be reached at jgruenen@student.umass.edu.

POLITICAL INFOCOMPASS
AMAZINGLY ACCURATE IN PREDICTING DAILY WHITE HOUSE JOB PERFORMANCE! JUST CUT OUT POINTER, AND, USING A LARGE THUMBTACK, STICK IN CENTER OF INFOCOMPASS. SPIN UNTIL POINTER STOPS (SEE DIAGRAM).
AVERAGE SCANDAL
UNBELIEVABLY RAUNCHY MULTIPLE SCANDALS
MUCH BIGGER SCANDAL
STRANGE, GARGANTUAN SCANDAL
Thumbtack
Pointer
Infocompass Face

Colleges: stay away from these tests



Nick Milano

When you think of the best private universities the world has to offer, you think of schools like Harvard, Princeton, MIT and Stanford. When you think of the best public institutions around the world, you think of UC Berkeley, UNC-Chapel Hill and the University of Virginia. However, to many a surprise, a report published in late 2006 by the Commission on the Future of Higher Education claims that America's higher education system is at risk for failure.

In response, the Department of Education (DOE) is contemplating forcing colleges to gauge how well colleges teach their students. The creation of national standards would be a terrible mistake and would toll the death knell of the college experience.

This Commission on the Future of Higher Education was created to ensure the future viability of higher education in the United States. Its two major goals were to discover whether colleges are preparing students well enough for their prospective careers and if the opportunity to pursue a degree is open to all students. The Commission published its results after a year of public hearings, research and meetings with a variety of education officials.

College has long been looked at as a time for social growth and experimentation. Students are in the midst of deciding what kind of job they would like to hold for the rest of their lives and the opportunity to take classes in a wide assortment of concentrations enables them to make the wisest choice. This liberal education is designed to stimulate exposure in a broad range of topics, not just hold them accountable for one or two.

With the current design, you can take basically any class of your choosing. Curious about photography? Take an intro photo class. Want to learn about Massachusetts politics? We have just the class for you. Interested in the history of intercollegiate sports? Sign up for that class with Chancellor Lombardi.

In adopting rigorous testing standards in college, the DOE will be introducing a completely new educational structure. Testing students will constrain a school's ability to offer diverse classes as curricula will be nationalized to adhere to standardized tests. As Jack Wilson told Linda Wertheimer of the Boston Globe, "Should everybody be learning the same thing? Should students at MIT be able to learn the same things as students at Williams, at UMass?" He went on to comment that "diversity is one of the great things about higher education. I say, 'Vive la difference.'"

One statistic that particularly alarmed the Commission was how the United States has "slipped to 12th in higher education attainment." The Commission further writes that the exponential rise in the cost of college combined with lack of federal financial aid and an unsteady flow of state funding are to blame. The DOE ignored this statement and decided to place its focus on improving teaching at college so only those who can afford to pay for it can benefit.

In conclusion, the DOE is failing to recognize the true ailments that are plaguing the education system. Students do not obtain college degrees because college is unaffordable for too many. On top of this, testing students will not make college less interesting and it will not convince them that a bachelor's degree is necessary to the advancement of their careers. In creating this Commission on the Future of Higher Education, the DOE demonstrated that it is concerned about the future of this country, but at the same time, the DOE has misinterpreted the results of its own study.

The DOE is failing to recognize the true ailments that are plaguing the education system.

Soon enough, colleges will develop curricula based entirely around a standardized test. Even if a good system was developed, how will it be possible to match up what students at Ivy League schools are learning versus students at lesser schools learn? As Linda Wertheimer writes in her article, "Testing Harvard," "Harvard students – so smart to begin with – likely would progress if professors did nothing."

Implementing testing systems at the college level will prove to be a large scale failure. Like high school and elementary students, college kids will begin to be treated as a statistic instead of a person. Four more years of testing will spawn an educational system devised merely to make students pass a test. Their interests will be cast aside in pursuit of the top test scores. Diversity of classes opens students' eyes to less considered fields, testing will only shut these fields off and diminish what is usually considered to be a person's four favorite years.

Nick Milano can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

POINT COUNTER

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." – Adlai E. Stevenson

Should we stay or should we go

Let's be serious, please

Given that the overwhelming majority of Iraqis, American soldiers and American citizens desire an immediate end to the criminal occupation of Iraq, a column like the following may appear superfluous. Sadly, however, this is not the case. Although people holding determined pro-war views are an insignificant minority on this campus, they are disproportionately represented in the pages of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian. It is in response to these cheerleaders for empire that the following is directed.

Charles T. Peterson

The lies originally used to peddle Washington's latest war on the Iraqi people have been so decisively refuted as to require little space here: the Bush administration's claims about Iraqi weapons of mass destruction and connections between Saddam Hussein's regime and al Qaeda have been shown to be completely without foundation. In the present article, we will focus on the three main lies used by reactionary scribblers to justify the failing occupation today: that the United States is bringing democracy to the region (at the point of a bayonet, no less); that the U.S. is provoking a stabilizing influence in the region; that the anti-war movement does not "support the troops."

The people of Iraq must have the right to determine their own future.

For people who have followed the sordid career of U.S. imperialism, the first assertion is laughable. From the brutal occupation of the Philippines in 1898, to the overthrow of democratically elected President of Iran Mohammed Mossadegh in 1953, to the uncritically enthusiastic backing of Saddam Hussein's Baath Party from 1968 right up until the 1991 war on Iraq, the government of the United States has done everything in its power to subvert and overthrow democratic movements and regimes throughout the world. What is surprising about the claims that the U.S. is bringing democracy to Iraq is not the fact that it is a boldfaced lie, but that the U.S. Empire would assert that it desires democracy in the region.

In real life, since the end of the Second World War, the U.S. has enthusiastically backed a motley army of military dictatorships, Gulf monarchies and semi-feudal theocracies throughout the region. The worst nightmare of the corrupt ruling establishment of this country is the spread of genuine democracy in the Middle East, as this would raise the possibility of the region's vast petroleum resources being extracted, distributed and consumed according to the interests of the popular majority of the region, and not the interests of Wall Street financiers and Texas oilmen.

One final point about democracy deserves mention: democracy is not something to be brought to Iraqis by a ruthless military occupation, but something which ordinary Iraqis strive for everyday. We saw it in their heroic battles against the British occupation, the Baath Party, and other historic oppressors and we see it in their fight to liberate their country from foreign control today. We should do our part here in the U.S. by building a movement to force the U.S. and its British lapdogs to vacate Iraq. Iraq belongs to Iraqis, not Blackwater and Bechtel.

The people of Iraq must have the right to determine their own future; any argument to the contrary implies that they are not capable of determining their own fate, and is simply a pitiful regurgitation of the racist "white man's burden" line. The real "half-devil, half-child" reside within the bowels of the Pentagon. In the history of warfare, no army occupying another nation has provided "stability" for ordinary people.

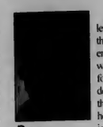
However, the cheerleaders for empire have no shortage of crocodile tears to shed for victims of sectarian violence (the fact that this number is dwarfed by victims of occupation violence appears to be beyond them). However, they fail to acknowledge the criminal role the U.S. has played in all of this. In a cynical divide-and-conquer move, the occupation frequently uses Kurdish and Shia troops in assaults against Sunni neighborhoods (the second siege of Fallujah in November 2004 is one example). To this day, Shia and Kurdish death squads are being armed by the occupation. Therefore little wonder that there are sectarian tensions, given the effort expended by the U.S. to organize it. Despite all this, the U.S. will be driven out; the only question is when, and how many dead Iraqis.

The final point, that the Anti-War Movement does not "support the troops" is equally absurd. Unfortunately for Mr. Duffy, facts are stubborn things. Polls taken among troops in Iraq have shown that over three out of four soldiers wish to come home now. The anti-war movement is being led by troops themselves, organized in groups like Iraq Veterans against the War.

As a colleague of mine in the anti-war movement points out, "someone needs to tell the troops that they are not 'supporting' themselves." In fact, by supporting the demands of the soldiers that they be brought home, the anti-war movement supports the troops in exemplary fashion.

Charles Peterson is a member of the International Socialist Organization.

The wisdom of withdrawal



Ben Duffy

I have no problem arguing about the justification for embarking on the war in Iraq. Now, four years later, I don't believe that the debate about how we got here is irrelevant. Nonetheless, the question as to where we go from here seems even more important as both chambers of the United States Congress consider war spending bills with built-in troop withdrawal dates. Though President Bush has vowed to veto any bill that includes a concrete date for withdrawal from Iraq, the debate over exit timelines is now at the forefront of the national dialogue.

For the more radical members of the so-called anti-war movement, a timeline is not sufficient. Immediate surrender is their goal.

The consequences of such a hasty retreat would be, in my estimation, absolutely catastrophic. Lacking ESP, I cannot say with complete certainty what might follow an American retreat from the battlefield, and no one else can either. I can, however, make some educated guesses based on the situation on the ground today and historical precedents.

One philosophy is that an American retreat from Iraq will actually have a stabilizing effect on the country. This tired old argument is usually some variation of the idea that U.S. troops are "driving the insurgency," that the only reason there is violence in Iraq is because there is a target: U.S. troops. Simply remove the troops and peace will fall on Iraq like rain.

I have never heard of a war being won by retreating, but let's analyze this. If going home now were all we had to do to pacify Iraq, I would support the policy. But are U.S. troops really the only target? Of course not. They aren't even the main target. Iraqis are killing Iraqis in far greater numbers than Iraqis are killing Americans. Removing the Americans will not make the terrorists lay down their arms.

To the contrary, the anarchy that will pursue a precipitous U.S. surrender will result in open season on Iraqi civilians, with only the unsatisfactory Iraqi army and police standing between terrorists and victims. It is for this reason that I resent the dishonest framing of this debate as one between those who want peace and those who want war. The "peace" movement doesn't actually have a plan for peace, only a plan for surrender and an absolute disregard for whatever consequences might follow.

A similar argument was made by a young Vietnam veteran named John Kerry when he appeared on the Dick Cavett Show in 1971 to debate another Vietnam vet named John O'Neill about the wisdom of a hasty withdrawal from Vietnam. Kerry foolishly believed that the end of U.S. involvement in Vietnam was synonymous with the end of violence in Vietnam. "What we say is the killing can stop tomorrow, and it can stop if the President of the United States will set a date certain for the withdrawal for all United States combat and advisory troops from South Vietnam," said Kerry. Kerry's argument from 1971 is essentially the same as we are hearing today: to end the violence, just pack up and go home.

The anarchy that will pursue a precipitous U.S. surrender will result in open season on Iraqi civilians.

Kerry was dead wrong. Don't worry if you don't know much about the aftermath of American retreat from Vietnam. Our history lessons gloss over the subject precisely because Vietnam became the slaughterhouse that war supporters had predicted. Much to the embarrassment of John Kerry, nothing vaguely resembling peace materialized.

After our troops came home, North Vietnam attacked South Vietnam in direct violation of the Paris Peace Accords. One million dissidents were herded into "re-education" camps under deplorable conditions, and some were not released until 1986. The victorious communists executed 65,000 Vietnamese, and that does not include those who died slowly in the "re-education" camps, for which there are no reliable figures. A flood of 800,000 Vietnamese "boat people" fled onto the dangerous high seas, where many drowned. And above all, the power vacuum remaining after American retreat led like night into day to the rise of Pol Pot in Cambodia, and his massacre of 1.7 million people, or about a quarter of the population.

The war supporters' predictions were validated because they understood that such atrocities always follow communist victories. Unfortunately, we allowed ourselves to be worn down by a domestic "anti-war" movement that made victory impossible. The rest is history.

Iraq is not Vietnam, but legitimate parallels can be drawn. If America pulls out now, the blood will flow and a battle royal will erupt between rival factions for control of Iraq. Among those factions are al-Sadr's Mahdi Army, al-Qaeda and the Ba'athists, as well as agents of Syria and Iran. Which group will emerge victorious is anyone's guess, but I don't like any of them. Our choices for the next Iraqi prime minister are Muqtada al-Sadr, Osama bin Laden, a Saddam doppelganger or a puppet of Iran's Mahmoud Ahmadinejad. If you're okay with that, then by all means advocate retreat.

Don't be fooled by the Left's imagery of peace. They would have you believe that going home now will make violence in Iraq disappear, when in fact it is a recipe for disaster.

Ben Duffy writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at bduffy@student.umass.edu.

(Information from "Useful Idiots: How Liberals Got It Wrong in the Cold War and Still Blame America First" by Mona Charen was used in this article.)

BUSH
SURE, I WANT TO GO HOME...
...BUT WE'RE FIGHTING FOR THE FUTURE OF A COUNTRY, THE FORMATION OF A UNITY GOVERNMENT AND AN EQUITABLE SHARING OF POWER...
...I ONLY HOPE PRESIDENT BUSH AND THE DEMOCRATS ARE UP TO IT!

POLL:

Should America immediately withdraw from Iraq?

Yes ☐ No ☐

Go to www.dailycollegian.com to vote!

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

GROSS MISCONCEPTIONS

The comments of University of Massachusetts Economics Professor Robert Pollin, highlighted in Lauren Modisette's April 23 article, "More jobs, more Social Security," are unacceptable and insulting to American youth.

Hiding behind Modisette's absurdly biased attempt at respectable journalism, Pollin criticizes President Bush's proposal to personalize publicly-administered Social Security accounts with illogical arguments that have nothing to do with shoring up the system's long-term deficits.

Pollin begins by noting a $70-billion surplus in Social Security, adding that, "It is good that the government has more than enough money in the Social Security fund to back themselves up for this anticipated crunch." This assertion alone, that "the government" has $70 billion sitting in a trust fund, is naïve.

The surplus in question is held in Treasury bonds, which essentially means that one branch of the government has borrowed money from another branch. This means that in order to redeem the bonds for cash, the government would somehow have to come up with the money – money which it does not currently have. Instead, the federal government will have to choose between a tax increase and further deficit spending. Without this money in the trust fund and with a huge number of baby boomers set to retire next year, the Social Security crunch is upon us now, not in 2017.

Pollin continues his fantasy, asserting that, "The problem is not serious; with minor adjustments [Social Security] would continue to thrive." Even ignoring the unfunded surplus, the 2007 OASDI Trustees Report, released April 23, acknowledges $13.4 trillion in current and future liabilities, meaning that nearly a third of promised benefits are unfunded. This is a serious problem by any measure.

The article also notes that the problem will worsen "as the nation's baby boomers begin to retire around 2030." While it's true that the problem will worsen as they begin to retire, the baby boom generation will begin to retire in 2008, not 2030. Modisette cites that OASDI payroll taxes will "reach as much as 11.25 percent to make up for the lack of funds" in 2030 – despite that the Social Security payroll tax was already 12.4 percent in 2006. These factual discrepancies are incomprehensible.

Professor Pollin's blind support for the Social Security system in more or less its current form and Modisette's unsubstantiated assertion that, "The current Social Security system has been favored since its creation, and there seems to be no desire among the American people to change it," comprise a direct affront to the youth of the United States. A 2005 Harvard IOP poll noted that 52 percent of undergraduate students would support a system of private investment, as opposed to 38 percent favoring the current system.

As the UMass Amherst chapter leader of the increasingly active national organization Students for Saving Social Security (www.secureourfuture.org), I understand that many college students do care about the future of Social Security. I encourage all students who feel strongly about this issue to contact me and to become actively involved in securing our future.

Brian Gwozdz
UMass Student

Most dangerous game

Dan Nicastro

As of right now, we don't really have a strong immigration policy, but a bipartisan committee of United States senators is attempting to draft legislation to remedy this. As of right now, they have not come up with anything, as they are trying to compromise and decide what's best for non-immigrants everywhere. I'm here to help them out. The answer to all of America's immigration problems lies in Guantanamo Bay.

The stories of Gitmo are well known. After Sept. 11, the U.S. started rounding up people of a certain religious background (hint: it rhymes with "Sunshlam") and sending them to Guantanamo Bay. Many people considered this to be an assault on not only the Geneva Conventions, but also on the fundamental civil liberties this country thrives on. When it came time to prosecute, it was clear the government had very little evidence on many of the people being held at Gitmo, exonerating most of the detainees. Wanting to save face, the American government delayed the release of many imprisoned suspects, hoping they could sneak their release behind coverage of Anna Nicole Smith. But unfortunately, they hit a snag.

Eighty-five people have been cleared to leave Gitmo; three have actually left. Many countries don't want these "terror suspects" back within the confines of their own borders because we have repeatedly maintained that those detained were the "worst of the worst." For some crazy reason, these other countries took our warning to heart and now refuse to accept these prisoners into their countries. On top of that, the U.S. and Britain have repeatedly refused to grant political asylum. But here is where immigration and Guantanamo can intersect: we test the kinks in our immigration system by giving these 82 detainees the chance to try and sneak into our country to "win" political asylum.

This may sound insane but hear me out. First, and probably most important, we didn't want to do this; it was pretty much forced on us by the international community's belief that this repatriation issue is not their problem. As John Bellinger, legal advisor to Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice, put it "they think they didn't contribute to Guantanamo, and therefore they don't have to be part of the solution." But if these other countries had agreed to do their part and clean up the unilateral mess we made at Guantanamo, we wouldn't be in this position.

So here's how it works. First, we give each released detainee $10 American and ship them to different locations across Mexico so they can begin testing our immigration policy.

We give each released detainee $10 American and ship them to different locations across Mexico so they can begin testing our immigration policy.

can begin testing our immigration policy in the game of a lifetime, a game to win their freedom. We'll tell the border guards that we're staging this "exercise" but we won't give them names or pictures of the detainees, just to see how effective a security apparatus the guards really are.

And the best part of this whole thing is the free publicity. This is not a reality TV show; it's just reality which will be televised by the media. The media will be all over this story from the moment the inmates are released in Mexico. They'll act indignant and bash the government for allowing this "most dangerous game" to take place, but we all know the 24-hour news stations will not be able to resist crafting flashy graphics and giving live progress reports on the detainees. Really, it's a win-win situation, as the media and the American people get to feign outrage, and also place bets on their favorite "immigrant."

So what happens at the end of this little exercise in immigration policy? Well, if they get through undetected, they can reapply for asylum and it will be granted. However, if they get caught by border patrol, it won't be as pretty. We used to talk about America as the "great melting pot," meaning every person who immigrated to this country would give up part of their culture in order to become an American. Let's screw the metaphorical meaning and create an actual melting pot. Those who are captured while trying to cross the border will be dangled over a giant, bubbling vat of sulfuric acid. While dangling 20 feet above their "cultural assimilation," they will be hooked up to a lie detector and asked a series of questions about terrorist activities they were involved in. Each question they answer correctly will pull them five-feet further away from the acid, while each one they answer incorrectly brings them that much closer to "Americanism."

Many of you will probably see this as cruel, totally immoral and certainly illegal, but it really is the perfect solution. We need to test our immigration policy to see if it works; the people at Guantanamo, who we detained without evidence, need asylum. It really is the perfect solution. And if we do get the kind of media coverage I'm expecting, it could possibly solve our long-term immigration problems as well. If we make this a country which doesn't really care about civil rights or civil liberties, no one will want to come here anyway.

Dan Nicastro writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at dnicastro@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MAY 2, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Bands get ready to play Bonnaroo Festival

Decemberists promise to put politics aside for performance

Frontman Colin Meloy and his band The Decemberists look forward to being a newcomer to the community of Bonnaroo. The concert is an opportunity for the band to bring their music to a new audience.

BY MORGAN-ANN ROUSSEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Two musical acts that will grace the 6th annual Bonnaroo are Ben Harper and The Innocent Criminals and The Decemberists. Colin Meloy, front man of The Decemberists, and Harper are both anticipating a spectacular experience at the upcoming festival venue, which will take place June 14 to June 16 in Manchester, Tenn.

COLIN MELOY KNOCKS OFF HIS "INDIE ROCK SNOBBINESS" FOR BONNAROO

For The Decemberists, this will be their first Bonnaroo ever. Lead singer Meloy has never considered himself to be a "huge fan" of what has become jam music. While this festival started off as more of a jam-based music event, the festival organizers seem to be keen on ensuring a more dynamic musical experience. Meloy said he's lost a lot of his "indie rock snobbiness" and that he appreciates all the work professional musicians put into their music. "I have a profound respect for all musicians," said Meloy.

Meloy credited the sense of community of Bonnaroo as to why he was initially drawn to perform in it. "[It's a] community which I don't think we've necessarily been a part of in the past, though I think more and more, those kind of boundaries are being erased, which I think is inevitably a good thing," said Meloy, who also feels that creative cross-culturalization is a good way to create more interesting ideas in music.

For the Decemberists' set, Meloy said that they've got nothing special planned for Bonnaroo, and that they're just going to perform their regular show. "I imagine that playing this festival is going to potentially open us up to a new audience, to a certain degree, and we just want to kind of be ourselves really," said Meloy.

It's been almost a year since their album "Crane Wife" was released. But the band's hectic touring schedule has left them little time to work on new material. "Unless I'm struck by an amazing amount of creative inspiration in the month between the end of this tour and when we got to Bonnaroo, I have a feeling that we'll be playing songs from our other records," said Meloy.

Since the band will be playing to a new audience at Bonnaroo, Meloy feels that it's best to play songs from their records and "just be themselves." Considering Meloy's reputation as a musical storyteller, one may wonder what kind of story the singer would like to tell after Bonnaroo. He hopes his story doesn't involve any overflowing Port-O-Johns but rather looks forward to meeting a lot of nice people, hearing some good music and hopefully "engender some new ideas and directions."

This festival will ensure a plethora of first-time listeners for the band. Meloy said that they hope to impact them by being themselves, which is how he feels The Decemberists have impacted their fans all-along.

At Bonnaroo, Meloy said that he imagines there will be many people who are "relaxing in the shade as much as possible," but doesn't know what to expect in terms of the crowd's personality.

Considering the band's political activism, Meloy said that he doesn't want their political views to loom in their set or be distracting. "We want to have it be as much a part of the music as possible. I don't know that we'll be spouting political dogma during our Bonnaroo set. I imagine we'll just be trying to put on a good show," said Meloy.

Meloy said that the venue will offer a good opportunity for close proximity with his peers and that he hopes to meet other people and bands that he's crossed paths with on tour but never got to spend time with. Martha Wainwright, Lilly Allen and Spoon are just some of the festival's performers that Meloy is looking forward to seeing.

In regards to playing a large, outdoor show, Meloy feels that it's always a little different and that the band needs to connect to a larger crowd. "It's just, really, a question of being in the right spirit and being willing to reach out to those people and hopefully make an impact," said Meloy, who intends to leave it up to the crowd to decide whether or not their music will translate to an outdoor arena.

See BONNAROO on page 7

It's not easy being green on campus

BY AMY CALANDRELLA
COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

Tree huggers, earthy crunchies, dirty hippies and liberal yahoos, this is the perceived face of the environmental movement. It drives a hybrid (when it doesn't ride a bike), drinks from glass jars and eats organic, locally-produced, all-natural, additive-free produce. In short, the so-called "green revolution" is seen as pretty "green exclusive."

The problem with this is that global consciousness is not going to shift because some people (bless you) are willing to hike in the rain instead of taking a car. In fact, posing this as the solution keeps others from doing simple things like shutting off the lights. The aim is not to water down environmentalism or the extreme systematic changes that must be made, but rather to stress that the movement must learn to cater to those not already eight shades of green.

My thoughts on this subject began not too long ago as I chided my roommate (again) for leaving her computer running over the weekend when she goes home. Yes, the away message reads something like "home for the weekend. Be back Sunday." I tried my best to explain that there is no real reason for her computer to be on all weekend and that, contrary to popular belief, it takes less energy to power it off and back on again than to leave it on for that duration of time. I did this carefully, aware that if I began to sound too green I would soon be tuned out. My roommate listened, and responded that as long as she is not paying the electric bill and will not be around for the long term effects of global warming, there really is no point to shutting the computer down over the weekend. Plus, her dad has forced her to take two-minute showers and conserve energy for the first 18 years of her life, and this is her four-year window to use as much energy as she wants and not have to pay for it. These are difficult arguments to combat without attacking her personally, and so the conversation ended there.

However, the movement (and those involved) must learn how to talk to those like my roommate who aren't had people, but who don't see a use or feel the need to shut the lights off once in a while. So, my question becomes: How can an environmental movement shift so not to alienate its mainstream audience? Where is environmentalism

See STEREOTYPES on page 7

The "green revolution" does not have to be limited to the hippie lifestyle. It can also include environmentally conscious college students.

Rand Theater presents play within a play

'Chalk Circle' stands out among contemporary drama

BY CONOR WHITE-SULLIVAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last Thursday, the University of Massachusetts Theatre department began a two-week run of Berthold Brecht's "The Caucasian Chalk Circle" in the Rand Theatre. The play is deemed by many to be among the most important works of a legendary dramatic figure and is notable for its non-realist set up as a play within a play. This structure is most apparent in justifying the musical structure of the play, which differs strongly from most contemporary musicals.

Instead of overly dramatic outpourings of emotion – monologs with a tune; the songs in this composition held a place closer to that of a big-picture soundtrack. Performed by a quartet of peasant minstrels and a pre-established narrator, each tune both progressed the plot and added immensely to the sense of scene in the production.

The sound could only be associated with a rural folk of old Eastern Europe; and the discrepancies between rich and poor in this setting were broadcast clear as day by the intricate silk robes and coarse dirt colored garbs of the actors onstage.

The gritty, dark construction of the set gave the stage a legitimate connection to the time frame strong enough, that the audience could easily have been watching the "play within a play" in an open field off a dirt road in 15th Century Europe. However, the lengths of this legitimacy only stretched so far.

The audience might believe they were watching a play at another time, but never that it was a true event, due simply to the oversimplification of many of the minor characters, and limited vocal and emotional depth of some of the more primary ones. When characters were developed and real, it was apparent and interesting. When they were stereotyped or without true emotion, they were not interesting.

The first act was not without dramatic action. But if an actor does not make the action as important to both themselves and their characters, and their characters are not as complex as they are, the audience will never care about the characters or the development of the plot.

Too often characters became caricatures. The antagonists became simple manifestations of greed, treachery or worse – simple evil, and failed to develop as interesting characters. Worse still, key moments where the script called for an intense emotional involvement were left bare.

The entire foundation of the plot centered on the love between the heroine and her soldier, and her love for him is reiterated numerous times throughout the play. But their interaction was simply not believable, and the romantic connection non existent. The soldier's delivery barely shifted despite the radically different emotional states one encounters in courtship, proposal,

See CIRCLE on page 7

"The Caucasian Chalk Circle" began its two week stint at the Rand Theater last Thursday. The play is set in 15th century Europe.

Stars reminisce for Brando documentary

BY ROBERT W. BUTLER
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

Al Pacino first saw "On the Waterfront" at a triple feature at the local movie house. The 14-year-old was so blown away that he sat through the two other movies again just so he could experience again the force of nature that was Marlon Brando.

"I related to that movie in a way I'd never related to anything before," Pacino recalls in "Brando," the three-hour, two-part documentary premiering this week on Turner Classic Movies.

Pacino is just one of a dozen big-name actors who testify to Brando's position as the greatest film actor of his or any generation. But this actor was much more.

Though it dabbles in both, the film isn't strictly a conventional biography or an inside look at a show-biz career. Perhaps it should have been called "Why Brando Matters," for its true subject is the impact he had on acting, movies and the greater culture.

For today's young people, who probably don't appreciate just how big a deal Brando was, the film is a revelation. And for those of us who grew up watching him, "Brando" reminds us of just what a potent force he was, not to mention a lightning rod for controversy.

"I worked very hard to never impose my own personal opinion on the documentary," said Leslie Greif, the film's executive producer. "I wanted to bring Brando to the world through his friends, family and colleagues. Instead of having a narrator, I wanted to describe the man through the persons who knew him."

To that end Greif interviewed some of Hollywood's biggest names, as well as Brando's childhood friends from rural Illinois, who describe the kid they knew as "Bud" as "a different type of person."

Brando was different. He grew up torn between a withdrawn, alcoholic mother (his earliest performances were designed to pull her out of depression) and a hypercritical father who had women stashed along his salesman route. Marlon grew up hating all authority figures, as an adult, he routinely made life miserable for his directors.

But what Brando brought to a role an intense, emotionally based "method" that seemed wholly natural and revolutionized acting made him the most in-demand actor in America.

Fellow thespian Henry Silva recalls being in the Broadway audience when Brando made his entrance as Stanley Kowalski in "A Streetcar Named Desire."

"I didn't see an actor. I thought somebody had made a mistake and walked on the stage. But at the same time, my hair was standing up because he was so full of this contained energy."

That intensity translated beautifully to the silver screen. Between 1950 and 1954 Brando starred in "the six greatest films in a row ever made by an actor."

"Movies in the '50s were exhibiting a gritty reality," Greif said, "and Brando had the perfect style to handle that. He stripped away the facade of actor and simply became the man, the character. And by doing so, he let the audience relate what was happening on the screen to their own lives."

"Brando" has too much juicy stuff to enumerate here. But among the highlights:

Brando's screen tests for "Rebel Without a Cause" and, years later, for "The Godfather." He would win an Oscar for playing Don Vito Corleone, but initially Paramount refused to consider him because of his reputation for being difficult. Director Francis Ford Coppola shot the test surreptitiously and showed it to the studio brass, who loved the performance but didn't recognize Brando behind the stuffed jowls. He got the role.

Brando was embarrassed about stardom and hated the accompanying loss of privacy. He saw acting mostly as a way to support his lifestyle, which included owning a private island in Tahiti.

According to his long time agent Jay Kantor: "He never liked to work. It wasn't difficult to get him work. It was difficult to talk him into doing it."

Brando's love of practical jokes and crude humor provide a couple of hysterically funny moments. In one, Robert Duvall and James Caan describe mooning Brando on a New York street while shooting "The Godfather." In another, Johnny Depp talks about using a hidden fart machine so effectively that Brando, alarmed for his friend, offered to call a physician.

He had a voracious sexual appetite. Angie Dickinson describes the young Brando as "a dangerous, dangerous man. Almost irresistible."

Yet with few exceptions, his relationships ended in anger and recriminations. "He had a lot of rage with women," one friend said. "He never let anybody in."

Before Brando, Hollywood was a black-tie town, where people dressed up to dine out. When the star of "The Wild One" began showing up in a T-shirt and perched atop a motorcycle, much of that formality fell by the wayside.

The actor was ridiculed for his support of social causes such as civil rights and the American Indian Movement, but his dedication to these causes was genuine and deep.

Simple solutions lead to big changes

STEREOTYPES from page 6

for the rest of us?

Mainstream environmentalism is already coming into view as more and more magazines publish a "green" issue. In March, Glamour put out an issue with environmental fashion, green eating tips and products such as moisturizers with plant preservatives instead of chemicals. Most importantly, it notes specifically that, "no one in Glamour's beauty department wears Birkenstocks, but they all "green"-lighted these eco-correct products."

Similarly, a recent issue of Newsweek was titled "Save the Planet Or Else" and donned a smiling picture of our favorite Hummer Driving Environmentalist, Arnold Schwarzenegger. This issue included, among other things, an article about Schwarzenegger's push to make global warming a "post-partisan" issue rather than strictly liberal. The article argues to show that "environmentalism and hedonism can co-exist," which is true. We don't need to deprive ourselves of pleasure or the occasional luxury in order to do our part.

Environmentalism for the everyman comes in the form of simple tasks that require no major lifestyle changes. This includes things like shutting the power strip off at night or recycling the weekend's trash bag full of empties. It is important to realize that you can do good things for the earth without ever having to take on a "hippie" image or becoming completely inconvenienced. This way taking care of the earth becomes less of a polar choice between environmentally friendly and wasteful and more of a continuum If you choose to march in Washington for global warming that's great, but making a simple decision to print essay drafts on scrap paper is just as good.

We live in an age where divisions along race, class, gender, social and ethnic lines are drawn and widened daily. Environmentalism must become something that can bring people together rather than create another partition in our lives. While not everyone can do everything, it is true (however aphoristic it may sound) that everyone can do something. My roommate may never understand or care about the connection between her ever-glowing computer monitor and global warming. However, if she can realize that it is also the cause of her viruses, error messages and slow modem then maybe we will be able to get somewhere.

Amy Calandrella can be reached at acalandr a student.umass.edu.

Doing little things, such as using energy efficient light bulbs, reusing paper and conserving water can reduce the pressure on our planet.

Harper is excited to entertain

Ben Harper has become an experienced performer at the Tennessee festival where thousands of fans come out annually. This year will make his third appearance. Whether playing for a large crowd or a small group, Harper anticipates the Southern Hospitality of the event.

BONNAROO from page 6

BEN HARPER GIVES FRONT-ROW NOD TO BONNAROO

Ben Harper is a veteran of the festival scene, and with two Bonnaroo's under his belt already, he expects his third experience with Bonnaroo to be just as crazy as his previous ones.

Southern hospitality keeps Harper coming back to Bonnaroo, "it's in the South and it's some of the best musical Southern hospitality that there is in the States. I'll pretty much go anywhere I'm invited back to," said Harper. When asked how he expects his performance and Bonnaroo to differ from previous years, Harper said he's curious as to how the festival has evolved and changed since it began in 2003.

With a new record tentatively scheduled to come out in August, Bonnaroo might provide an opportunity for old fans and new fans to get a taste of what's to come from Harper, who hopes he'll get a chance to put together some new songs for the festival.

A plus to performing in a massive venue like Bonnaroo is the fact that musicians can touch tens of thousands of people at once. Harper hopes to make his impact at the festival by delivering the strongest show possible. "That's how I approach the stage," said Harper, "with that level of expectation in myself."

Harper plans to incorporate elements of old-time blues and gospel into his show because he still feels passionate about it. "I think it's most important to be sincere to what I'm feeling when I'm on stage that's sure to connect with the root of the music I make," said Harper.

As for the venue size, Harper said the large size of Bonnaroo is irrelevant. "Man, if there's 10 people or 10,000 people, that's the perfect setting for me," he said. "Everyone's going to have their specific area of interest when it comes to how they love to hear music, but there's something really hip about the same group of people ready to hear the Police or String Cheese, White Stripes or what we do."

Harper thinks these types of bands provide people an opportunity to grow in their musical open-mindedness and that the venue is a great opportunity to get their music across. A few of the musicians at the Bonnaroo festival Harper is excited to see are Annette Coleman, Police and Panic.

If Harper were to lend any advice to up-and-coming artists that are performing at Bonnaroo, he'd tell them to give a nod to the front row and "just sort of connect with them straight away," because he's found that energy quickly works its way to the person in the very back.

Morgan-ann Rousseau can be reached at mrousseau a student.umass.edu

Play's love story fails to convince audience

CIRCLE from page 6

separation and reunion.

The slapstick action of crumbling to a fetal position after being struck in the gut by a maid was as uncharacteristic and forced as the final parting kiss. The result of this was a love that was stated but never shown, lending a recurring air of falsity and irrelevance to the first four acts.

The play took a distinct turn up with the beginning of the second half and the introduction of the judge, Azdak. The character of Azdak was already written in as exciting and humorous, but the performance brought in an additional complexity and the all important component of emotional involvement, both aspects that had previously been shown only by certain minor characters and in specific circumstances by the protagonist. This high-voltage charge spread throughout the cast and brought interest and reality to the final acts that resulted in a conclusion that was both happier and better performed than the beginning.

The "Caucasian Chalk Circle" will show again on May 3 and 4 at 8 p.m., and May 5 at 2 p.m. with a special student matinee on May 2 at 10 a.m. Tickets are $12 for adults, $6 for students and seniors, but plan ahead as the play can run for up to and over 3 hours in length.

Conor White-Sullivan can be reached at cwhitesu a student.umass.edu

Write for Arts & Living
*See your writing in print
*Interview artists of all kinds
*Gain resume experience
E-mail Collegianarts@gmail.com or Arts@dailycollegian.com

RSOs:
Put Your Advertisement in the Daily Collegian!
RSOs receive a discounted rate for advertising.
Advertise your group's events at low cost.

FRUSTRATED? PUZZLED? DO YOU HAVE...
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

YANKEE CANDLE
"a passion for fragrance"
At the Yankee Candle Company, Inc we care about our employees! If you are looking for a full- or part-time summer opportunity where you can be recognized for your hard work, in a friendly and fun environment, then Yankee Candle makes perfect scents!
We make perfect scents.
Seasonal Candlemakers
We offer a competitive salary, free fitness facility, and a generous employee discount!
To apply, visit us online at: www.yankeecandle.com or in person at: 102 Christian Lane, Whately, MA.
EOE/AA

CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Loves UMASS
NEW UMASS STUDENT ASSOCIATE MEMBERSHIP
Just $75 allows you to play for half price until the end of next Fall.
Also Don't Miss our Spring Special:
Every Monday and Tuesday, 9 Holes Just $10
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE – JUST MINUTES FROM UMASS
www.cherryhillgolf.org

Where are YOU living next semester?
CHECK OUT PUFFTON VILLAGE!
Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1,2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water and cooking gas
On site Laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis courts.
NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
1040 N. Pleasant St. #410
Amherst, MA 01002
413 549 0145
www.puffton village.com

Minutewomen net victory in tight affair

SOFTBALL from page 10

Morin hit a weak fly-out to BC left fielder Amanda Booth. Candice Molinari then attempted to slap her way on base. Initially, she appeared to be aboard easily, but BC shortstop Jenna Macchi proved why many – including UMass coach Elaine Sortino – regard her as the Eagles best player.

Following the slap attempt from Molinari, Macchi scooped the top-spin groundball and fired a perfect strike to first base. The throw beat Molinari by a half-step for the second out of the inning.

"[Macchi] is just a terrific player. They don't come any better than that," Sortino said. "That's a shortstop you wish for and dream about. She's a great player."

After retiring the first two batters, BC freshman hurler Taylor Peyton still had Stacy Cullington to deal with. UMass' junior second baseman had yet to register an official plate appearance – walking in the first and sacrifice bunting in the fourth – when she came up in the bottom of the sixth.

Cullington went down 1-2 in the count, but managed to work it full for the second time in the game – she did the same in the first before walking. This time, however, she took an outside pitch from Peyton and lined it into the right-field gap. The wind appeared to hold the ball up a little longer than expected, prompting an unsuccessful dive attempt from BC centerfielder Carley McNary. Although the ball did get by McNary and rattle off the wall, the Eagles right fielder Britney Thompson backed the play up and held Cullington to a double.

Sortino decided to pinch run for Cullington, bringing in Teman. In the second inning, senior Michea Holness ran for Whitney Mollica after a double only to get picked off by BC catcher Ashley Obrest after taking a gigantic lead.

Teman also wouldn't be on the bases for that long, as the next batter, Proctor, lined a 2-2 pitch up the middle past the dive of BC second baseman Renee Ramos. Teman scored easily and Proctor moved up to second base on the throw to the plate.

Proctor commented after Sunday's doubleheader sweep of George Washington that she was in somewhat of a slump. In the six games prior to Tuesday's, Proctor was 5-for-17. While most would hardly consider hitting at a .294 clip over a six-game stretch a slump, Proctor entered yesterday's action with a .371 average on the season.

Sophomore Brandice Balschmiter finished off the Eagles in the top of the seventh, but not before they did their best to make things interesting.

After retiring the first two batters, Balschmiter hit Obrest with a 2-2 pitch to give the Eagles life. Then, freshman Dani Weir lined a pitch past Cullington to put the go-ahead run on base.

Blair Destito, the BC designated player, came up looking to extend the game. On an 0-1 pitch, she hit the ball directly in front of home plate. The ball kicked down the third base line. Destito, running all the way, looked to beat the throw out easily, but freshman catcher Jessica Serio pounced out from behind the plate and beat Destito to first to end the game.

"[Serio] is working so hard," Balschmiter said. "And that play proved it. To get out [from behind the plate] and scoop up that ball was great because no one else was near it."

The last time these two teams met, on April 11, UMass rolled over the Eagles 7-1 in Chestnut Hill. BC performed better in every aspect of the game in this meeting, however. The Eagles committed no errors yesterday compared to five in the last meeting. Also, Payton (2-10, 5.08 ERA) had her best start of the season, allowing four hits over six innings to the Minutewomen.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu

Proctor drives in Teman for game-winner

GAME-WINNER from page 10

on the outside of the plate and Cullington swung.

She punched it into the gap in right-center field. After rounding first she saw the ball still in the possession of the outfielder and sprinted safely into second base.

"I kind of got a little too far ahead of it," Cullington said about the pitch she hit. "I slowed myself down. I could see it – 'Wait a second. Hit the ball.' I just tried to stay with it. I felt a little off balance, but I stuck with it."

UMass coach Elaine Sortino pinch ran senior Jackie Teman at second, hoping to spark some offense with the added speed.

This is where Lauren Proctor enters the picture – a key factor to UMass' success this season.

The left fielder maintains a .370 batting average and has accumulated 33 RBIs this season – both marks are second highest on the team.

But lately, the junior has been quiet at the plate. Despite making consistent contact, the hits have not come. She changed that with one swing.

She soon found herself with a 2-2 count.

"I was just trying to think of the game a pitch at a time and make contact with the ball, stay in the inning," Proctor said. "We've worked a lot on working ahead of the count and also behind in the count with two outs."

She put the next pitch into the hole on the right side, and Teman took off from second. Teman raced around third and made for the plate. Proctor made sure the ball got through the infield before rounding first. The throw from the outfield was too high and the Minutewomen went up, 1-0.

Proctor thinks this may just be the boost she needs.

"I would say I've been struggling a little bit lately," she said. "I figured out what I'm doing wrong and that's half the battle."

Proctor realized she was not drawing her hands in and chasing low pitches. Sortino certainly is not worried.

"I don't think she is ever in a slump," she said. I think [Proctor] is just [Proctor]. She shows up, and she's always quiet. Nobody really ever notices her and she hits in the high .300s every year – quietly."

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

Junior outfielder Stacy Cullington sparked the sixth-inning rally with a two-out double to right-center field yesterday afternoon.

Blowout bolsters staff's confidence

BASEBALL from page 10

ing Tempesta who reached on a two-out single. UMass took its 3-0 lead into the top of the fourth, only to face the third of Siena's seven pitchers throughout the game.

The fourth was by far UMass' most productive inning of the game, as it scored five runs on four hits to extend the lead to 8-0. Bill Rankin, Mike Donato and Travis Munsey led the inning off with three consecutive singles to load the bases with no outs.

Shortstop Lou Proietti added the fourth straight hit when he singled to left field on a 2-0 pitch that scored Rankin for the first run of the inning.

Designated hitter Jim Cassidy was hit by a pitch in the very next at-bat, scoring Donato to make it a 5-0 UMass lead. Munsey and Proietti scored on a fielder's choice and a throwing error to add two more, and Tempesta came home for the eighth and final run on a throwing error after Adamski grounded out to third base.

Siena scored its lone run in the bottom of the ninth, but left three men on base to end the game.

UMass returns to Earl Lorden Field this afternoon to host Vermont in a non-conference game at 3 p.m.

Eilenberg – the team's top middle reliever – will make his first start of the season today in what will most likely turn out to be a starter-by-committee approach with the bullpen, because of a big three-game set with Richmond this weekend. Nine of the Minutemen's next 10 games will be at home.

Danny Picard can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu

Pozar primed to replace Spiess year, Pozar looks forward to leading the team in their quest for the Atlantic 10 Championship that eluded them this year.

POZAR from page 10

"This year Michele was a big help because she's a leader in terms of tennis, and everyone looks up to her," she says. "I hope I get to do the same next year. I am looking forward to it. I think it's a great thing and I like my team."

Although Spiess was just one player amongst a team of 12, it's going to be difficult to replace her. Nine of the Minutewomen's matches this year were decided by a score of 4-3, and it's evident that one player can truly sway an entire season one way or the other.

If there's one person who must have confidence in the team, it's the coach, and Dixon seems to have just that.

"Next year she's going to play No. 1 and she knows it," Dixon says of Pozar. "We have the best recruiting class we've ever had coming in, but she's going to be the team leader as one of the captains. She can do this. When we thought about recruiting, we thought, 'Do we move her up, or do we recruit for a new Michele?'

"I think Masha has played in Michele's shadow for her three years here, and clearly she's ready to step up and step out on her own," Dixon added.

As far as next season goes, Pozar expects the team to have superior depth, in large part due to the highly-touted incoming recruiting class Dixon mentioned.

"I think, until now, a lot of the strength came from the top, which means [Spiess] was always winning and I think there was less pressure on the bottom," she says. "I think the team that we're getting in next year is going to be really strong throughout the whole six first players. The whole lineup is pretty consistent, so I think it's going to be good."

Tennis is obviously a huge part of Pozar's life, but she also enjoys running, working out and going to the movies. It's also no surprise that her closest friends come from the team.

"I live with a few girls on the team, so it's inevitable that they're the people you spend the most time with," she says. "So it's kind of hard not to get close to them."

Pozar usually ventures across the Atlantic and travels to her native Slovenia for summer and winter breaks, but she will remain stateside this summer to focus on academics. In addition to working on her game, she will be taking a class and an LSAT course.

Pozar has one year of eligibility left at UMass, but cannot see tennis playing a significant role in her life following next year. Instead, the political science major is considering attending law school after graduation.

"I think after I graduate, tennis is done for me," she says. "I would love to have an opportunity to be an assistant coach somewhere and go to school, but I don't think with law school that's a possibility. I think it's time to turn a new leaf after I'm done and start something different for once.

"I've been playing tennis all my life and it's time to try something else, I guess."

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

Junior Masha Pozar was named to both the Atlantic 10 All-Conference first team and the Academic All-Conference team yesterday. Her 50 career singles victories rank her 10th on the all-time UMass list.

Richmond senior midfielder Ashley Friend received the Atlantic 10 Player of the Week on Monday, after scoring nine goals in two games. She scored six in the Spiders' win over Duquesne on Sunday.

A-10 Tourney time arrives

Top-seeded Richmond looks for third conference crown

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Atlantic 10 women's lacrosse conference season is over and the A-10 Championships are upon us. Richmond, George Washington, St. Bonaventure and Temple will be competing in the A-10 Championships this weekend.

The tournament will be held at Temple University. The semi-final games will be played on Friday, May 4 and the championship game on Sunday, May 6.

A-10 Lacrosse

The top four teams from regular-season play will be competing in the tournament. Top-ranked Richmond will take on No. 4 Temple on Friday at 1 p.m. No. 2 George Washington will play No. 3 St. Bonaventure at 3:30 p.m.

The winners of the semifinal game will compete in the championship game on Sunday at 3 p.m. The game will be nationally televised on CSTV. This is the first time in league history where a women's lacrosse conference championship game will be televised.

The winner of the A-10 Championship will have a guaranteed spot in the NCAA Division 1 Women's Lacrosse Tournament. The NCAA Tournament will be held at The University of Pennsylvania on Friday, May 25 and Sunday, May 27.

Top-Seed Richmond is the two-time defending A-10 champion. The Spiders finished the regular season tied with George Washington at 6-1 in league play, but were able to defeat GW, 10-7, during the regular season to capture first in the league. Richmond is 12-5 overall this season.

Spider's senior midfielder Ashley Friend was named player of the week after an impressive nine-goal and four assist week for Richmond. Mandy Friend, Ashley's sister, will try to advance the Spiders into the championship round of the tournament. Sophomore All-American Mandy Friend scored her 100th-career goal against St. Bonaventure last Saturday.

George Washington earned its first-ever regular-season title after tying Richmond in the regular-season standings at 6-1. The Colonials were 10-6 overall this season. GW enters the tournament for the first time since 2005, where they were second overall.

GW is looking to Junior Kristin Karesh once again to help the Colonials advance to the second round in the tournament. Karesh scored five goals in the second half of GW's game against St. Bonaventure in their come-from-behind 12-11 win clinching their first A-10 regular-season title, which is shared with Richmond.

St. Bonaventure is returning for the second straight year to the A-10 Tournament. The Bonnies are 5-2 in conference play and 8-6 overall.

St. Bonaventure took on GW last Sunday with the A-10 regular-season title on the line. The Bonnies failed to defeat the Colonials. On Friday they have a chance for a re-match in the semifinal game.

Temple is ranked fourth with a 4-3 conference record and are 6-10 overall. Temple has won four straight A-10 Championship titles from 2001-2004 and have made an appearance in every championship since the post-season tournament began in 1999. Temple beat Richmond this season, 9-8, for the first win against the Spiders since the 2004 season – and it will take them on again on Friday's semifinal game.

Temple looks to Allison Frengs, one of the Owl's top scorers for help in the Richmond game. When Temple took on Saint Joseph's earlier this season, Frengs scored four goals, but it wasn't enough in its 11-8 loss.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
PRESIDENTIAL APTS. COLLEGE INN APTS.
COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS LANTERN COURT APTS
PERRY APTS MILL HOLLOW
177 N. PLEASANT ST. CRESTVIEW APTS.
55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

CHIOS on the go
Specials of the Week
Buy 2 Calzones GET 1 FREE
5 FREE WINGS With Purchase of any Large Pizza
(413) 256-4110 Call Now!
Sun-Wed Open 'til 1am
Thur Open 'til 2am
Fri-Sat Open 'til 3am

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

	8			4		9
7			1		3
	3				1	5	8
4				1	3		8
				8
	6		7	2				4
8	4	7				2
		9		2				6
	2		5			7

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Judge's order
5 Did in, as a dragon
9 Batter
14 Jason's ship
15 Docking platform
16 Japanese capital
17 Island feast
18 Quelched
19 Demolishes
20 NYC hours
21 Is for two?
22 Methodological discipline
24 Kind of clam
26 Light touch
27 Pentateuch
29 Sketch again
34 Put in the bank
38 Clear frost
39 News piece
40 NFL team?
42 Part of a dance
43 Plaster of
45 Superlatively bleak
47 Cut into thin pieces
49 Calls a chicken
50 Narc org.
52 Fireplace shelves
56 Look over
60 D-Day ride
61 Bovine comment
62 On the up-and-up
63 Ace of the PGA
65 Actor Julia
66 Hackneyed
67 Is unable to
68 Sundial number
69 Helped out
70 Icelandic saga
71 Rosebud, e.g.

DOWN
1 Business transactions
2 Reliance
3 Playing marble
4 The better part of youth?
5 Barbecue favorite
6 Freed
7 Sushi bar order
8 Take by force
9 Like some pajamas
10 Wry face
11 Related (to)
12 Out of (discordant)
13 Wash down
21 Book after Joel
23 Auto
25 Submarine type
28 Listened to 30 Forbear
31 Religious custom
32 High cards
33 Sobbed
34 Quick swims
35 List ender
36 Actress Gilpin
37 Fantasy world
41 City south of Tampa
44 Drugged to sleep
46 Tenant's check
48 Dolores Rio
51 Wonderland visitor
53 Online messages
54 "Tax dispatcher
55 Unbroken
56 "Lohengrin" heroine
57 Abominable snowman
58 Yikes!
59 Liver secretion
64 Low-spirited
65 Letters for motor homes

THE HARP
SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
THURSDAY • RUDY BROWN
SATURDAY • DUDE F#CKIN' ...YEAH
CINCO DE MAYO PARTY!
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar
East of the River 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate Readers Poll
OCMT & All Credit Cards accepted
Free wireless Internet!
163 Sunderland Rd • N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-9000 www.theharp.net

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I know I'm young but if I had to choose her or the sun, I'd be one nocturnal son of a gun."
-Gym Class Heroes

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK BY JOSH SHALEK

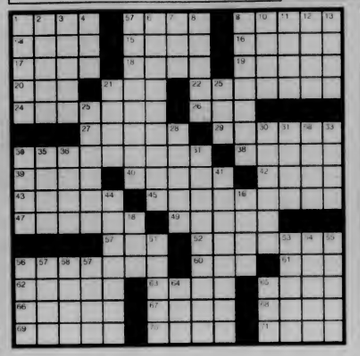
Ranger Dee wouldn't let me Play on a lawn
So You Got Astro-Turf?
She wouldn't allow non-indigenous matter- Why Put Something over it?
At first it was for aesthetics
Now its mostly to annoy Dee

A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE BY AARON WARNER

BOY, I REALLY BLEW IT WITH RYAN. I'M SO STUPID. WHAT WAS I THINKING?
WHAT HAPPENED??
I DON'T KNOW. I JUST STARTED FREAKING OUT ABOUT LEAVING SCHOOL AND US STILL BEING TOGETHER, AND I GUESS I'M JUST FEELING REALLY INSECURE WITH EVERYTHING ABOUT TO CHANGE.
DON'T WORRY. WE'LL FORGIVE YOU, AND EVERYTHING WILL BE OKAY.
REALLY? DO YOU THINK SO?
NO. BUT AREN'T FRIENDS SUPPOSED TO SAY STUFF LIKE THAT?

THE QUIGMANS BY BUDDY HICKERSON

"You're gonna find this hard to believe, but I had trouble gettin' dates in high school."



HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
In life you are either a coat, or a hangar. It is up to you to decide.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You're a tripod. Be proud.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Reacquaint yourself with Dr. Suess' jovial body of literary work tonight before bed.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Carry a large, important looking, book around so people think your smart.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Take time to ponder the simple fact that May first has already come and gone.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
After dinner, fill up your bathtub and test how long you can hold your breath.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You can get away with anything. They should put you in a mentos commercial.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Make your voicemail a recording of you belting out one of Cher's timeless classics.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Rest your weary frog legs upon a lilly pad of laughter and cotton candy.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Let yourself be governed not by laws of man but by the laws of Meerkat society.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Always remember: Butterfly the shrimp, nay you eat feces.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Now is a nice time to make like a jock strap and offer your friends some support.

Continuing & Professional Education
UMASS AMHERST
SUMMER SESSION 2007
Make plans to catch up - or get ahead!
• New online GenEds
• Same great faculty!
• Smaller classes
• Two Sessions:
I: June 4 – July 2
II: July 6 – August 22
Register now!
By visiting us at www.UMassLearn.net/dc

Townehouse of Amherst Condominums
Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC Our Nurses call the shots! Guaranteed 3 ½ to 2 year Full Tuition Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,900/Mo www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Handyman, Housecleaner, Landscaper, Now & for summer. $10/hr+ 549-1578

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must call 413-584-4746

Marketers wanted for part time work during school. Earn $15/hr + bonus. Email: rdonaldson@collegepro.com

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

WORK OUTDOORS THIS SUMMER Full time positions available in your hometown. Earn $8-12/hour Painting houses with a fun crew. Call 888-277-9787 or www.collegepro.com

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Summer Jobs for the Environment Work with Environment Massachusetts on a campaign to Fight Global Warming and work with great people! Make $400-$600/week. Career opportunities and benefits available. Call Mel at 413-256-6434. Visit our website @ www.jobsthatmatter.org

EMPLOYMENT

Castine movers in Athol is looking for summer help to include packing and labor with crews on local and/or long distance household moves. See the country, travel, keep in shape!! Warehouse help also needed for the summer season in our warehouse. Good hourly or daily wages offered. Call Kim Castine at 800-225-8068 x225 or send an email to move@castinemovers.com

Need a summer job? College Pro painters is hiring. Work with friends, steady hours, learn a valuable skill. Must be willing to work in the following areas: Milford, Millbury, Grafton, Auburn. Interviewers being held now. Please email collegepronorthbridge@yahoo.com

EMPLOYMENT

Brandywine Apts. Needs a certified lifeguard. Full time hours flexible. Must work some weekends. $9.00/ hr Call 549-0600 or stop by office.

HOUSE FOR RENT

3 Bedroom, Nice, recently updated. Near Bus stop. Also near Downtown Northampton $1200/month No pets. For June. Skibiski Realty 413-586-1827

SERVICES

BUY ONE, GET ONE FREE Emergency Contraception (EC), prevents pregnancy up to 5 days after unprotected sex Affordable and Confidential Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9902. www.tapestryhealth.org

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

SUMMER SUBLET

Alpine Commons apartment June-August 15th $2050/month includes utilities. 413.204.9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

Amherst Beautiful quiet house great location. Need Car. With nice guy and daughter. Perfect for single/ couple. Rent nego. Call Jonathan for details. 413-253-2535

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED $10,000(Plus expenses) We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1300+ (math+verbal) Physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more information please contact us. Email: Darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MAY 2, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UM takes pitchers' duel

Close game gives UMass 19th straight

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A streak of 19 games fell at the UMass Softball Complex yesterday while a streak of 18 was improved.

The Massachusetts softball team (30-12-1, 14-0 Atlantic 10) defeated Boston College, 1-0, ending its streak of scoring at least four runs at 19 games, but improving its winning streak, also, to 19.

UMass	1
BC	0

UMass pushed the decisive blow across in the last of the sixth inning. Junior Lauren Proctor lined a fastball back up the middle, scoring pinch runner Jackie Teman. The inning started off poorly for the Minutewomen, but soon got better.

The Maroon and White brought the top of its order to the plate looking to take the lead, but the normally reliable duo of Amanda Morin and Candice Molinari failed to reach base.

See SOFTBALL on page 8

BRIAN TUCKER/COLLEGIAN

Senior Jackie Teman crosses the plate, scoring the game's only run yesterday in UMass' 1-0 win over Boston College. She has scored 20 runs this season (fifth on the team) despite not having one plate appearance.

Teman scores lone run in sixth inning

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It was classic softball – a quick, tidy 1-0 game in which the outcome was not determined until its homestretch.

The Massachusetts softball team and the Boston College Eagles brought yesterday's matchup at the UMass Softball Complex into the sixth inning with zeros in the runs column.

For the first part of the game, a second-inning double by Whitney Mollica and a fourth-inning, infield single by captain Candice Molinari were the only hits generated by the Maroon and White.

That was, however, until the sixth frame.

With two outs in the bottom of the sixth, second baseman Stacy Cullington knew something had to be done and walked up to the plate with a million things racing through her mind.

"I was thinking about the outside pitch a lot and that last time we played BC they threw me one pitch inside and then after that it was all outside," Cullington said. "I was really looking for an inside pitch because I was feeling really comfortable with that."

The junior worked BC pitcher Taylor Peyton to a full count.

"She was giving me a lot of [inside pitches] that seemed a little too far in," said Cullington, who leads the team with 14 home runs. "I probably wasn't following it all the way in like I should have and then those outside pitches which are nice, but I just struggle with the outside – I just try to pull everything out."

She stared in at Peyton and braced for the payoff pitch.

The ball came in middle high

See GAME-WINNER on page 8

DAN TEPFER/COLLEGIAN

Lauren Proctor supplied UMass with all the offense it needed in yesterday's 1-0 win over Boston College with her RBI single in the sixth inning.

Victory bolsters staff's confidence

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Confidence is certainly being garnered in the Massachusetts baseball team's pitching staff. Weekday starter Tim Comiskey proved that in yesterday's 8-1 win over Siena in the final game of a five-game road trip.

Comiskey (2-3) became UMass' fourth consecutive starter to pick up a win, allowing only one run on five hits in 8 2/3 innings of work. He walked two and struck out four, leading the Minutemen to their fifth win in the last six games.

UMass (16-18, 9-9 Atlantic 10) went 5-1 in its second-longest road trip of the season, with the only loss coming at a neutral site Fenway Park. Holy Cross knocked off the Minutemen, 8-3, in the Beanpot consolation game.

UMass	8
Siena	1

Sure, the Minuteman hats have been productive during the current four-game winning streak, but Comiskey's long outing was just another example of how impressive the starting rotation has been recently.

Over the last four games, UMass pitching has allowed only 10 runs. The last four starters were only in to see seven of them. And because of their strong outings, UMass coach Mike Stone has only had to call upon three other arms for relief stints.

Mitchell Lilenherg and Bryan Adamski have had the most action out of the hullpen – allowing three runs combined – while Ryan Walczak came in only to record the final out in yesterday's win over Siena (7-29).

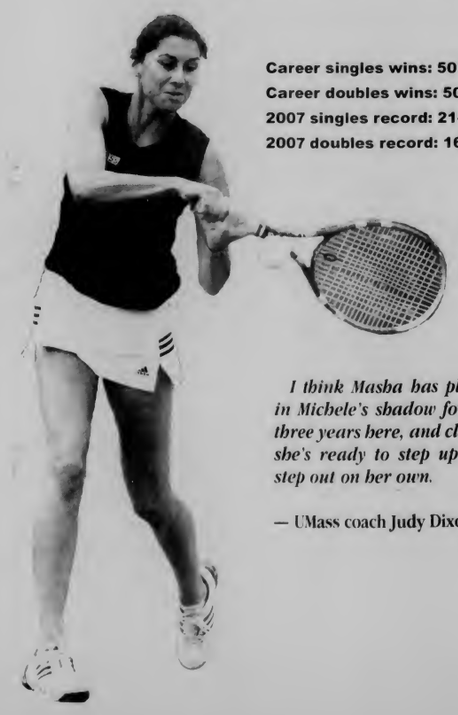
Comiskey was relieved by Walczak after he got in some trouble in the ninth, but the offense did their part to rack up eight runs in the first four innings, so that Siena's rally wasn't a threat.

Second haseman Adam Tempesta was hit by a pitch with two outs in the first inning, and advanced to third on a Bryan Adamski single up the middle. Tempesta put UMass up 1-0 when he scored on a wild pitch.

The Minutemen scored two more runs in the top of the third after Adamski hit his third home run of the season, scor-

See BASEBALL on page 8

Pozar primed to take reigns in 2008



Career singles wins: 50
Career doubles wins: 50
2007 singles record: 21-11
2007 doubles record: 16-13

I think Masha has played in Michele's shadow for her three years here, and clearly she's ready to step up and step out on her own.

— UMass coach Judy Dixon

Three stellar seasons has junior quietly approaching greatness

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's hard to make a name for yourself when the person playing above you is one of the biggest names in the history of the program.

Masha Pozar played behind the Massachusetts tennis team's No. 1, Michele Spiess, for the first three years of her collegiate career. The all-time singles wins leader at UMass, Spiess left a legacy at UMass that is now Pozar's to continue.

What many fans tend to overlook is that their respective teams would struggle or in many cases completely fail to succeed without these secondary stars. Most of these teammates are quietly waiting for their opportunity to show the world what they can do at center stage. For Massachusetts tennis player Pozar, her chance will come next year.

It is a vast understatement to say Michele Spiess had an excellent season for the Minutewomen this year – breaking Jackie Braunstein's all-time singles victories record was no small feat.

But UMass depended on its other players to play well en route to a 13-9 season and a fourth-place finish in the Atlantic 10 Tournament. No one did that better than Pozar, who compiled a 14-4 dual-match record to go with an overall 21-11 record.

"First of all, she's had an unbelievable year," UMass coach Judy Dixon says. "She had a better year than anybody else on the team."

A statement such as this coming from the head coach is the ultimate compliment, especially considering Spiess' various accomplishments this year.

The team itself entered the conference tournament with a four seed despite losing Ellen de Jong, the team's third-best player. Her absence left the Minutewomen at a huge disadvantage for the tournament. Despite this, Pozar was proud of the team's performance.

"I think the team did really well, considering that [we] were with without one of our top players," she says. "Everyone had to move up and step up, and I think everyone did really well. I mean we had a certain seeding and we upheld that and I think that was really important considering that we got the seeding with a player and then didn't have her."

Pozar was also pleased with her consistent performance throughout the year – a goal she put forth before the start of the season. The junior said a focus on conditioning allowed her to sustain the same level of play as the season wore on.

"I think that improved a lot so I was really happy with the way things turned out," Pozar says.

Improving from one year to the next is always the goal of an athlete, and that's what Pozar has done in the past – increasing her win total to 21 this season from 13 as a sophomore.

Although she won't be playing competitively during the offseason, Pozar plans on coaching tennis this summer. That way she'll still have her racket in hand while keeping up her conditioning.

While many regular college students envy student-athletes for winning scholarships and receiving special privileges, most overlook the commitment to the individual's respective sport.

Pozar, and the rest of the Minutewomen, wake up at 5:30 a.m. every weekday to practice at 6:45 a.m. As with any student, classes factor into Pozar's daily routine. But unlike the usual college procrastinator, Pozar's early practices make it impossible for her to put off work until the last minute.

"During the season I pretty much can't do work past nine o'clock in the evening, and we get up really early," she says. "It is tough, but I think the time pressure kind of gets to you, so you do what you have to do because you have to do it.

"Once the season goes on, your biological clock turns a different way, but at the beginning you just get so tired," she added. "I would fall asleep at like seven o'clock and I would take naps. It takes time to get used to. Every year you think its going to get better but it doesn't really."

Pozar always finds herself in an awkward situation during this time of year. She's gone from being busy from dusk until dawn, but now has as much free time as any other student. While she's happy to finally have some free time, the adjustment takes some to get used to.

"There's nothing to do and suddenly you're just a regular student when you don't have any practices or anything," she says.

Regardless of the physical and mental toll the practices and matches take on the players, already a co-captain this

See POZAR on page 8

Go online to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more from the writer's interviews with Masha Pozar and coach Judy Dixon.

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SUNNY : HI: 68 LO: 37 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, MAY 3, 2007

LAST SHOT FOR MINUTEMEN PAGE 8

URINETOWN STAGED AT UMASS PAGE 4

Hadley residents protest Wal-Mart

BY WES RAHN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

HADLEY — Over 50 protestors held signs and banners outside the Hadley American Legion Hall yesterday evening during a Wal-Mart community meeting, to protest the proposed construction of a new Wal-Mart Supercenter.

The protesters, holding signs saying "Stop Sprawl Mart," were met by honking motorists, some shouting out the windows in support.

Aaron Goldman, a policy development specialist who organized the demonstration, is dubious of Wal-Mart's good intentions in presenting the benefits of a new Supercenter.

"The Wal-Mart P.R. machine is in full swing," he said. "They can't just expand the store that is already there, they have to pave over pristine farmlands and wetlands."

Goldman worries that the construction of a new Supercenter may hold negative effects on the whole region, in particular with small business in rural communities.

"Big box stores close main streets doors," said Goldman.

Chris Buchanan, a public affairs manager for Wal-Mart disagrees with this mantra.

"I just don't see that. Small businesses here coexist now as it is, so I think that it is a non issue," said Buchanan.

"The only difference with the Wal-Mart that is already here is we're planning on adding a large grocery section."

Buchanan said that the protestors outside holding signs at passing cars are a disservice to the process of debate over the issue.

"I think it makes more sense to come in here and share their thoughts. I find it interesting that they don't come in here and talk to us one-on-one," said Buchanan.

Buchanan said the plans for the new store were laid out in the Spring of 2005.

Many of the people who were present at the com-

See WAL-MART on page 2

Card to receive honorary degree

A group of students lay in protest during the speech of former White House Chief of Staff Andy Card at UMass, April 11. Yesterday, UMass announced that Card would be one of two recipients of an honorary degree during this year's graduate school commencement.

BY MATT BELLIVEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Just two weeks after his speech at the University of Massachusetts drew massive protest, former White House Chief of Staff Andy Card is again causing a stir around campus.

UMass announced yesterday morning that Card would be one of two recipients of an honorary degree from the University during this year's graduate school commencement.

Members of the Massachusetts Society for Professors (MSP) teamed with graduate and undergraduate UMass students yesterday to organize their response in opposition to the University's decision.

Card's April 11 speech at UMass was met by a vocal opposition. The Graduate Student Center and the Radical Student Union (RSU) organized a series of protests from within the lecture to dispute the former Chief of Staff's policies on the Iraq war and the administration's foreign policy.

"He was at the center of putting the war together in Iraq. We do not believe that any department or organization on campus should be sponsoring a criminal," graduate student Sai Madivala told the Daily Collegian in April.

Two students held large banners claiming that Card's propaganda machine is meant to lie to the people and kill them for profit, and stood up mid-lecture to unfold the sign. In the front row, two students had turned their seats facing away from the stage and covered their ears in silent protest.

Several other students stood up as Card neared the stage and in what looked like blood-stained clothing lay on the floor. Each student represented either a fallen soldier or Iraqi civilian casualty unjustly killed in the line of fire.

Card was the second-longest serving White House Chief of Staff serving under the current president, and also served as the 11th U.S. Secretary of Transportation under President George W. Bush.

The Holbrook native served in the Massachusetts House of Representatives from 1975-1983. He was named Legislature of the Year by the National Republican Legislators Association and received the Distinguished Legislator Award from the Massachusetts Municipal Association.

He received his bachelor's degree in engineering from the University of South Carolina and went on to attend the United States Merchant Marine Academy and the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University.

The Graduate School Commencement will be held Friday, May 25 at 2 p.m. at the Mullins Center, where approximately 1,200 candidates will receive masters and doctoral degrees.

Card will receive the award alongside UMass Alumnus Tisato Kajiyama, president of Kyushu University in Japan.

Matt Belliveau can be reached at news@dailycollegian.com

UMass diverts funds from Sudanese companies

Nearly $530K to be altered

BY LORAINE BURGER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Investment Committee of the University of Massachusetts Foundation has directed the managers of its funds to dissociate itself from companies on the divestment list maintained by the Sudan Divestment Task Force (SDTF) and to make no new investments in companies on that list.

The Clinton and Bush administrations as well as Congress have officially declared that the government of Sudan is engaged in genocide and have invoked economic sanctions against the nation, prohibiting U.S. corporations from conducting business in Sudan unless it is of humanitarian nature.

"I am delighted by the committee's decision," said UMass President Jack Wilson. "It is yet another example of this group's commitment and leadership on behalf of the University of Massachusetts. This decision is consistent with the University's traditions and values."

Former Secretary of State Colin Powell has stated that the government Khartoum and government-sponsored Arab militias, known as Janjaweed, "bear responsibility" for rapes, killings, and other abuses that have left 1.2 million black Africans homeless, according to the Washington Post.

The UMass Foundation will inform its investments consultants of its fiduciaries' interest in being free of those companies and ask that this preference be communicated to the Foundation's managers.

See SUDAN on page 2

A 'Picture-perfect' shot

A photo of students playing basketball on the SouthWest courts. This photo, along with others, was showcased during last night's 'Festival of the Arts' held outside the Fine Arts Plaza.

Bush's veto survives House challenge

BY DAVID ESPO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Congress failed to override President Bush's veto of legislation requiring the withdrawal of U.S. troops from Iraq on Wednesday, a defeat for anti-war Democrats that triggered immediate talks on a new measure to fund the conflict.

The House vote was 222-203, 62 shy of the two-thirds majority needed to override a veto. With few exceptions, Republicans stood fast with Bush in the wartime clash.

"I'm confident we can reach agreement," the president said moments after the vote as he sat down at the White House with leaders of the Democratic-controlled Congress, who have vowed repeatedly to force him to change his war policy.

Democrats flashed defiance, yet signaled they were ready to make significant concessions such as jettisoning the troop withdrawal timetable and cutting some of the domestic funds that are part of the bill and Bush opposes.

There was early talk in both parties of setting goals for the government of Iraq to meet as it strives to develop a self-defending, democratic society, but no agreement on what form they should take, or on how — or whether — to enforce them.

Make no mistake. Democrats are committed to ending this war," House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (news, bio, voting record), D-Calif, said on a day of carefully scripted political drama at both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue. "We hope to do so in unison with the president of the United States."

At the same time, Republicans who have helped Bush sustain his policy quickly signaled a new impatience with a war that has claimed the lives of more than 3,300 U.S. troops.

"Obviously the president would prefer a straight funding bill, no benchmarks, no conditions, no reports. Many of us on both sides of the aisle don't agree with that," said Sen. Susan Collins (news, bio, voting record), R-Maine. She expressed interest in a proposal to cut reconstruction aid to Iraq if the Baghdad government does not live up to its promises.

Collins' sentiment was echoed by several House Republicans, who said that while they had cast their votes to sustain the veto, they wanted to signal impatience with a war that is unpopular with the public, and also with the administration's policy. They spoke on condition of anonymity, saying they were not yet ready to differ publicly with the White House.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 130

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherd Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jasmeen Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPIES EDITOR Adam Stanglin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Bellveau
SPORTS EDITOR Dustin Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Fitlland
FEATURES EDITOR Melissa D'Amico
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolianitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSITANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADCASTED SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Robert Greenfield

COPY EDITOR
Nicole Boonjakuakul

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@daily-collegian.com

Amherst Police log:
Man arrested on assault, battery

Monday
April 30

8:16 a.m.

Paul J. Reardon, 19, of Mashpee was summoned for $250 of malicious destruction of property. Reardon was arrested for underage possession of alcohol, and while in the Amherst Police Department holding cell, carved into the wall: "I was here-PJR-07." Video cameras showed footage of Reardon vandalizing the wall.

7:17 p.m.

A party called to report a fight at the Boulders residence on East Hadley Street. The party reported a group of 10 people fighting with baseball bats and beer bottles. Police arrived at the location to find intoxicated residents who had settled their previous arguments. No injuries were reported.

10:05 p.m.

An employee at University Liquors on University Drive reported a suspicious male who entered the store trying to purchase a 30-pack of Keystone Light beer. The employee noticed the male's fake ID and asked him to leave. The male allegedly grabbed the employee's arm before running out of the store to his vehicle.

Tuesday
May 1

1:23 a.m.

Tyler Koch, 22, of Sturbridge was arrested for assault and battery. A female party reported to police that Koch smashed a beer bottle over his own head and refused the female to leave for over an hour.

1:52 p.m.

A pharmacist at CVS on University Drive reported a suspicious male who came into the pharmacy asking questions pertaining to the store's oxycodone and other prescription drug supplies. In the meantime, the male was looking at the store's air vents and security cameras. The pharmacist asked him to leave before contacting the police.

6:41 p.m.

A larceny occurred at a house on College Street. A Playstation 2 was stolen, along with 15 video games, several DVDs and a motorcycle helmet. The cost of the stolen goods amounts to approximately $1,000.

Compiled by Holly Seabury

Hadley residents protest construction of new Wal-Mart

WAL-MART from page 1

munity meeting were there in protest.

The presence inside the Legion Hall was sparse compared to the group outside.

A local family from Hadley gleaning over the information tables commented, "I think this area is already so sprawled that a new Wal-Mart won't make much of a difference."

Ken Berestka, who catered the meeting, is in support of a new Wal-Mart.

"I think discounted prices for an older person are a good thing. I think it would help everybody in Hadley," said Berestka.

"It's not going to affect the traffic; everyone is coming up with excuses why we shouldn't have it."

Andy Morris-Freidman said myths of a "silent majority" in Hadley that supports Wal-Mart are unfounded.

"There has never been a word of support for it in any of our town meetings. There may be a silent majority nationwide, but not in Hadley," said Morris-Freidman.

"Wal-Mart has been fined $1.5 million for environmental violations in Hadley for run-off during construction; the new one won't be any different."

Wes Rahn can be reached at wrahn@student.umass.edu.

IRS: Man ran secret bank from home

BY GENE JOHNSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE—A man operated a "warehouse bank" out of his suburban home, taking at least $26 million from people around the country who wanted a discrete bank account, according to court documents.

An IRS investigator said Robert Arant had hundreds of customers, many of whom apparently used his bank, Olympic Business Systems LLC, to conceal assets for the purpose of evading taxes.

On his now-defunct Web site, Arant advertised his services to those "who would rather not deal directly with the banking system," court records said.

Arant took customers' money — promising to keep their identities private — and pooled it in six accounts at Bank of America, U.S. Bank and Wells Fargo Bank, IRS agent Susan Killingsworth said in court papers.

Arant would pay the customers' bills from those commercial bank accounts, charging about $75 a year in fees for the service, plus fees for wire transfers and for initial account set-up, court record said. For $30, customers could buy debit cards to access their money more easily; otherwise, they could access it by check, money order or wire transfer, she said.

Reached by phone at his home Tuesday, Arant said he intended to represent himself in court, but declined to comment further.

"I'm not where I need to be as far as responding to the IRS at this point," he said.

A civil complaint charges Arant with promoting abusive tax shelters and unlawfully interfering with internal revenue laws. And a federal judge has frozen the assets of Arant's bank.

Agents seized computers and financial records last month from the home where Arant lives with the property's owner, Martin F. Dugan.

Killingsworth was initially assigned to investigate Arant's failure to file income tax returns since 2001.

She said she has been able to identify 13 people who used Arant's service while underreporting or not reporting their income from 2002, when the bank opened, to 2005.

UMass diverts Sudan funding

SUDAN from page 1

"We take seriously our fiduciary responsibilities to the University, its students, faculty and alumni," said Investment Committee Chairman Roy J. Zuckerberg. "We are taking this action because we believe that it is the right thing to do."

The UMass campuses have several groups that have taken part in this decision, including the UMass MassPIRG Save Darfur Campaign, and Students Take Action Now (STAN) at the University of Massachusetts in Lowell.

"We worked with an organization called the Sudan Divestment Task Force, who researches which companies are invested in Sudan or invested in other companies which give funding to Sudan," said Stephanie Aines, a junior at UMass and active coordinator of the UMass MassPIRG Save Darfur Campaign. "Companies are British, French, American and plenty more. Many are Chinese oil companies. We used a targeted divestment model, which the Task Force promotes, which means the targeted companies give money or weapons directly to the Sudanese government [the money is then given to funding the genocide], or the companies do not give any funds to Sudanese people."

The campaign, as well as STAN, has spent the fall researching what UMass has in these companies. UMass accountants are constantly changing where its money is invested, and these companies are now blacklisted.

Once this action of divestment has taken effect, approximately $530,000 in investments made on behalf of the University of Massachusetts will be affected. This is only one-sixth of one percent of the total value of the foundation's assets, compared to the 80 percent of UMass endowment that is invested in co-mingled funds.

"Though it may be a miniscule part of our finances, it's imperative that we no longer give them even a penny to fund their killing," said Matt Giancola, Chairman of the University Policy Committee.

According to most sources, this action will have nothing but positive effects. The money that is taken out of these companies is transferred elsewhere, resulting in the University losing no money.

"The advantage of divesting from Sudan is that our money no longer will go to a government that supports and funds genocide," said Giancola.

The divestments of state funds that have been invested in companies that are doing business with the Sudanese government have become the law in seven states, and similar legislation is pending in 20 additional states, including Massachusetts.

"The campaign to divest from Sudan was largely a student-led one," said Giancola. "This proves that student action really can bring about change on campus and in our world."

"In mid-March a student at UMass-Lowell wrote to President Wilson and Vice President Katherine Smith asking about divestment," stated Aines. "On Thursday the Investment Committee of the University of Massachusetts Foundation made the decision to divest. So the money from all five UMass campuses is now divested. Both the Amherst and Lowell SGAs have passed motions supporting divestment. Our SGA passed this resolution unanimously on March 7 after I spoke to them about divestment, and UMass Lowell's SGA passed the resolution in late March."

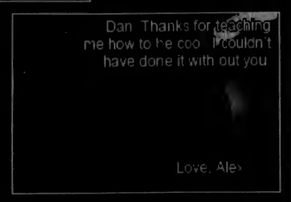
According to Giancola, the process of divesting has already been well underway, and is ongoing. It is the University's accountants and financial managers jobs to constantly stay on top of what companies are being invested in and whether they have a correlation with Sudan themselves.

Loraine Burger can be reached at lburger@student.umass.edu.

Leave your Senior Will
in the Collegian's 2007 UMass Flashback Grad Issue
One last chance for you to leave your mark on UMass.

JUST $15 Per message

Surprise your friends, Thank a professor,



Actual size of messages 2"x3"

or tell your graduating class congratulations.

Send your photo and statement to thecollegian@gmail.com or stop by 113 Campus center for payment info

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS

CERVEZA			TEQUILA
Coronita Extra	24pk btl	$17.99	Don Julio Reposado	750ml	$39.99
Modelo Especial	12pk btl	$11.99	Gran Centenario Reposado	750ml	$39.99
Negra Modelo	12pk btl	$11.99	Cabo Wabo Blanco	750ml	$32.99
Dos Equis	12pk btl	$10.99	Milagro Reposado	750ml	$29.99
Sol	12pk btl	$10.99	1800 Reposado	1.0lt	$24.99
Tecate	12pk can	$9.99	Jose Cuervo Flavors	750ml	$18.99

CINCO DE MAYO

Route 9, Hadley 584-8174
Hours: Mon-Sat 9 a.m.-11 p.m.
Sun Noon-11 p.m.
Www.MySpace.com/FourSeasonsHadley
Sale Ends May 9, 2007
Not Responsible for typographical errors.

Celebrate Graduation in Style!

Delivery:
413.549.0077
Telephone:
413.256.8923
413.256.8924

Panda East
FINE CHINESE & JAPANESE CUISINE

Featuring:
• Vegetarian Options
• Lunch Specials
• Sushi Bar
• "Light and Healthy" entrees

~ Elegant, Relaxing and Upscale~
We Bring China Town to You!

Monday - Thursday: 11:30am - 10:00pm
Friday & Saturday: 11:00am - 11:00pm
Sunday: 12:00pm - 10:00pm

Visit us at: www.pandaeastamherst.com
103 North Pleasant Street Amherst, MA

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MAY 3, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A shameful event

Greg Collins

Vox: Students For Choice's decision to hold the event, "Sex on the Lawn," today warrants severe criticism. Held for the second straight year by Vox on the Student Union lawn, the event intends to "promote positive, healthy sexuality and to make the community aware of the information regarding sexual health and also of local resources," according to its event profile on Facebook.com. Among various activities scheduled are a "Show Me Your O-Face" orgasm contest, in which pictures will be taken of people's facial expressions during fake orgasms, and a sexual bake sale, during which cookies will be decorated in the shape of penises.

These initiatives continue an offensive trend that started last year at the first "Sex on the Lawn" event. Balloons were blown up in the shape of penises, a "Captain Condom" costume worn by a student greeted visitors, and condoms were available to the public.

Contrary to the intentions of the event's organizers, very little education and "positive sexuality" are being promoted by holding such an event. The messages conveyed by this public display of sexuality are unequivocally the antithesis to real sexual education.

Contrary to the intentions of the event's organizers, very little education and "positive sexuality" are being promoted by holding such an event.

Genuine sexual education does not attempt to portray sexuality in an amusing manner, but rather in a serious light – no Captain Condom, balloons, or games. By abstaining from promoting games and activities intended to be entertaining, Vox would show that sex should not be seen in the realm of fun and games, but rather of personal choice, responsibility and privacy.

Sexual education should be based exclusively around these elements because sex is primarily a private choice that should be made responsibly. Vox leaders and "Sex on the Lawn" supporters directly suggest that sex should be a public topic by supporting both people who dress up in sexually inappropriate costumes on the campus lawn and the public display of sexually explicit balloons.

The event also implies that it should be the duty of public organizations to supply condoms to the public. Doing so removes the responsibility from individuals to make the personal decision to buy condoms without being influenced by external groups. More importantly, it reflects that Vox has very low expectations of human beings to make these choices in a private and responsible manner without relying on groups like Vox to help them.

Instead of endorsing public availability of condoms, Vox leaders should praise the decision of RAs to make available condoms on their particular floor, such as placing them in a paper support attached to their door. This does not suggest that sex should be openly discussed in a humorous way, a message "Sex on the Lawn" transmits, but rather in a confidential manner for the parties involved.

The availability of pamphlets and brochures containing information about STDs and contraceptives is not as reprehensible as that of condoms, but these should still be limited to UMass Health Services. It is important for people to be aware of this information, but the responsibility should be in the hands of the individual, rather than Vox, to obtain it. Relying on public forums creates a strong level of dependency on groups who have not just a self-proclaimed moral agenda, but also a political agenda in organizing events like "Sex on the Lawn."

In a larger sense, the point is not to debate whether today's activities are entertaining or funny. It is whether this event contributes positively to the effort to have people make responsible sexual decisions. For instance, Vox should cite statistics showing how the rate of STDs has reduced since the implementation of the modern form of sex education, which started in the 1960s and has continued on to today with groups such as Vox and Planned Parenthood. It should highlight studies disclosing whether an individual's amount of sexual partners, a number relevant to the transmission of STDs, has lowered since sex ed's inception.

Additionally, few will argue that Vox does not have a right to hold such an event. Yet the issue is the judgment and integrity of Vox and like-minded student groups who want to promote "positive sexuality" but only by their distorted conception of it as something to be presented in an entertaining manner.

Those who want to learn about sex in an amusing format dismiss criticism of "Sex on the Lawn." They assert that the event is just an opportunity for people to be more receptive to sexual awareness through an entertaining venue.

But many other people feel the topic is a serious and private matter that should be discussed in decentralized settings without the intention of portraying it in an amusing light. And until Vox promotes events that only convey this message, rather than organizing initiatives such as "Sex on the Lawn," then they should not be considered a group that legitimately promotes positive sexual education.

Greg Collins writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

Putting them to the test

S.P. Sullivan

Pop quiz: Who becomes President of the United States if the President and Vice President should die?

If you can't answer this question, you're not alone. Plenty of Americans don't have a clue. But if you're an immigrant in the United States planning on applying for citizenship, you'd better know that it's the Speaker of the House, because it will be on the test.

The United States Citizen and Immigration Services (USCIS) recently announced that it will be revamping its Naturalization Test – which some have criticized as little more than an episode of "Are You Smarter Than A Fifth Grader?" – to focus more on American ideals than mere memorization of facts.

The announcement has caused some controversy among immigrant-rights activists, but more unsettling was a CNN report that put some of the new questions to natural-born citizens, who didn't exactly pass with flying colors. It makes one wonder, then, how some prominent figures in American society might fare if asked to answer some of the new Naturalization Test questions. I have a feeling the results might look a little like the following:

It makes one wonder, then, how some prominent figures in American society might fare if asked to answer some of the new Naturalization Test questions.

• Question: Name one right or freedom from the First Amendment.
(Answer: Free speech; religion; assembly; press, petition the government.)
Don Imus: Freedom of speech – just keep in mind that this doesn't protect your job if you call the Rutgers women's basketball team a bunch of "nappy-headed hos."
Tom Delay: I think we need to rethink this whole "First Amendment" thing, don't you?
• Question: To become President of the United States, what must a person be at birth?
(Answer: A citizen.)
George Bush: A decider.
Al Sharpton: A rich white male.
Barack Obama: 'Articulate.'
• Question: Who is the Attorney General now?
(Answer: Alberto Gonzales.)
Alberto Gonzales: I cannot recall at the moment.
• Question: Who vetoes bills?
(Answer: The President.)
George W. Bush: I do. Deal with it.
Alberto Gonzales: I can't recall.
• Question: What does the President's Cabinet do?
(Answer: Advises the President.)
Dick Cheney: Whatever we tell them to do, and they keep their goddamn mouths shut, if they know what's good for them.
George Bush: That's where I keep my Cheetos.
Alberto Gonzales: I have no recollection of that.
• Question: What major event happened on September 11, 2001, in the United States?
(Answer: Terrorists attacked The United States.)
Rudy Giuliani: Oh! That's when the World Trade Center was attacked, did you see how good a job I did as mayor? Did you? Did you?
• Question: How many United States Senators are there?
(Answer: 100)
John McCain: Jeez, you know I'm so busy running for president that it's been awhile since I've actually been there; can't seem to recall.
Alberto Gonzales: I'm with John – can't recall.
• Question: We elect a U.S. Senator for how many years?
(Answer: Six.)
Ted Kennedy: Beats me, I was elected in 1962, and I've just been showing up ever since.
• Question: Who does a U.S. Senator represent?
(Answer: All people of the state.)
John Kerry: A good back-up plan. Those swing states are tough.
• Question: Why do we have three branches of government?
(Answer: So no branch is too powerful.)
George Bush: You know, I asked Laura that same question the other day; seems kinda' like overkill, doesn't it?
• Question: Name one example of checks and balances.
(Answer: The President vetoes a bill. Congress can confirm or not confirm a President's nomination; Congress approves the President's budget; the Supreme Court strikes down a law.)
George Bush: Well, the War in Iraq is pretty expensive, so I wrote a bunch of checks, and now we have a negative balance.
Alberto Gonzales: I recall neither checking nor balancing anything.
• Question: When must all males register for the Selective Service?
(Answer: At age 18.)
Dick Cheney: Before we take on Iran.
• Question: What are "inalienable rights"?
(Answer: Individual rights that people are born with.)
Bill O'Reilly: Our right to keep out those illegal aliens. They took our jobs!
• Question: When is the last day you can send in federal income tax forms?
(Answer: April 15.)
Willie Nelson: Come again?
• Question: When was the Declaration of Independence adopted?
(Answer: July 4, 1776.)
Angelina Jolie: Last Tuesday. I adopted her from Ghana – isn't it a pretty name?
• Question: What territory did the United States buy from France in 1803?
(Answer: The Louisiana Territory.)
Bill O'Reilly: We don't buy anything from France, we're boycotting France. Buy my book!
• Question: Name one war fought by the United States in the 1900s.
(Answer: World War I; World War II; Korean War; Vietnam War; Persian Gulf War.)
The Republican Party: Let's not worry about what wars we fought, or how we ended up in them, and just think about what we're going to do now.
The Democratic Party: Vietnam! Iraq is just like Vietnam! Pull out!
• Question: What international organization was established after World War II (WWII) to keep the world at peace?
(Answer: The United Nations)
John Bolton, former Ambassador to the United Nations: (grumbles unintelligibly).

These answers were compiled by yours truly, of course, and do not reflect the views of the individuals mentioned – not necessarily, at least. But perhaps before we expect immigrants to this country to understand American ideals, may be we should get a handle on them ourselves.

SP Sullivan writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at spsullivan@student.umass.edu.

UMass in four years

George Kennedy

I am graduating in a little over two weeks, and while I am anxious to get a job and start making money, I am sad to be leaving this wonderful place. Sure, there is a large enough police presence to invade Poland, and there are enough potholes on Massachusetts Ave. that you could lose a filling driving over it, but in light of all this, the experiences I've had here could not be traded for all the money in the world.

I am going to cite things that were the best about being here, the not-so-great, and things that went under the radar that deserve a little attention. The friends I have made here and the great times that resulted from those friendships are something that money cannot buy or make any of the following things that I am about to trash on worth dealing with.

First are the things that have ceased to be since arriving here four years ago, as well as good things that have shown up in the meantime.

Gone: Frat Row. Ok, we all outgrew it, but everyone has to start somewhere. It was close to Southwest, and for a wet-behind-the-ears freshman, that first time walking onto Frat Row seemed like walking onto the strip in Vegas. Every front porch is crowded, the front lawns and sidewalks were packed, and $5 could go a long way. Some of my best friends today I met at frat parties, the first few nights of school. It got old, but it was a great base on which to build a social life, and the new freshmen have no such institution.

New: Berkshire DC. Everything that I hated about the dining halls, I forgot when I went into the refurbished Berkshire Dining Common. They finally have good pizza, there is always something good to eat, and best of all, there is a sushi bar. The five plates of sushi that I eat for one meal swipe would cost me over $35 at an actual restaurant.

Gone: Barsies. Officially called Barsalotti's, it was the one bar where everyone knew your name. I can bump into friends at any bar, but it was Barsies where it would take me 30 minutes to get from one end of the bar to the other, just talking to people. I could go out any week night (which I seldom did Mom, I know you're going to read this) and the place would be bustling with people, decent prices, and I could hear myself talk. It was the polar opposite of "Club Pub" whose patrons spend too much time blowing their hair out to pick up a Collegian, let alone make it to the editorial page. I'm sure little Billy would rather hear that mommy met daddy having a conversation over a Guinness than daddy trying to pick up mommy by grinding with her on the dance floor. Barsies will be missed.

If you have never shown up to the Townhouse Quad when it is full, you are missing out.

Now for the good, bad, and worth mentioning:

Bad: Police Presence. I wish this was up in the "Gone" section, but alas. Here is a good sport: sit near the Horseshoe with bottle of Jim Beam, and every time a cop pulls a driver over for something completely unreasonable, take a shot. Guarantee you'll be passed out within an hour. I understand why the school had so many cops show up for the fests, but you can send them home now so they can stop harassing kids getting the education they never thought to get.

Good: Hobart Hoedown and Townhouse Throwdown. It may be cliché to mention and everyone knows our ranking of No. 7 last year among party schools, but to be there and see how many people came out is a sight to behold. If you have never shown up to the Townhouse Quad when it is full, you are missing out. You don't even have to drink; just see what an impressive gathering of coeds is taking place (I'm sure the Amherst PD appreciated that). On second thought, you may get pepper-sprayed by an Amherst cop for allegedly inciting a riot.

Bad: Elevators. North Apartments: very new. North Apartment elevators: very slow.

Good: Grad Lounge. Love a bar on campus, but waiting for the day I can use my UCard there.

Good: BDIC (make your own major). I'm not in it, but a student once created a major to study the aerobics of a frisbee. He invented the aerobe and is a very rich man. The general opportunities offered by a school of this size make it such a great place as well.

Good: PVTA. I have a slogan they should adopt: "Designated Driver for all of Pioneer Valley."

Places to check out: Puffers Pond, Crazy Noodles, The Moan and Dove, The Robert Frost Trail, and in the name of everything holy, order a buffalo chicken calzone from Chicago's.

George Kennedy can be reached at gkennedy@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

ON THE MONEY

In response to "A racist reversal" published Wednesday, April 25, 2007: Ben Duffy, you're absolutely right. Christians, especially white male Christians, are the most maligned group of people in this country today. I don't mean maligned by ordinary people either – I mean actual state-sanctioned discrimination.

Of course, it is the cool thing to do to malign this particular group by certain people (a good example of this type of person on this campus would be a member of the Radical Student Union).

Daniel Peirce
UMass Student

LACKLUSTER PROTESTING

(In response to "Not so radical a concept" published May 2, 2007)

All too often in protests or supposed "forums," most of those participating don't really know the whys or whats of what they're opposing – or ditto for the reasons for opposition. During the height of the Vietnam protest season (1968-1962), I was the deputy of the initial cadre that inaugurated Army ROTC at Western Illinois University.

With three VN tours behind me in all areas of the country from the DMZ to the Ca Mau peninsula, I had long ago determined not only the futility of our involvement, but the ignorance that led us there. And I had penned a classified study for RACIC (Remote Area Conflict Center) itemizing the errors in our descent into that quagmire.

Anyway, a group of student "leaders" organized a "moratorium on the Vietnam War," featuring a Veterans Panel. I, along with another of our officers, decided to sit in the back of the hall and take in the panel discussion. When those veterans on the stage continued putting out rant with little substance, my buddy stood up and hollered, "Can a person with three tours participate in the panel?" The moderator said, "Of course." So Paul pointed to me and said, "Here he is!" Yikes! But it turned out to be the education into why our involvement in Vietnam was misguided that that horde of students (guess the word got out that I was involved in debating with several protest leaders) that overflowed the large hall needed.

Their first shock came when the moderator/leader said, "We shouldn't be in Vietnam." I said, "That's right. But I know all the reasons why and all you know is the '1-2-3-4, we don't want your f war' chant." From that point on, at least on the WIU campus (until Kent State – then all bets were off for a week), all protest and debate on U.S. involvement there seemed to take on substance. Most of those at the forefront of the anti-war movement (both students and faculty) took the time to build their arguments with facts instead of merely furor. Your column hit the nail on the head!

Ted Raymond
Class of '59

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, MAY 3, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Amherst youths create art for social change

Food for Thought Books site of mural promoting empowerment

BY MANDY THOMAS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Wild shapes and colors stream across the once dull outside wall of Food For Thought Books. A group of over anxious kids bounces back and forth making both a beautiful mess and a chaotic mural. One boy warmly embraces a new face on the scene while another boy begins piling up left-over drop cloths and what looks like scrap sculpture material. A video camera is set in the grass documenting the excited team's every stroke and every laugh. Soon, their project will be complete and ready for the world to see.

The group calls themselves Get Up Get Down, which seems strangely too perfect when watching them busy at work. GUGD has been working on creating and painting the mural as both a creative outlet and a statement addressing social issues. GUGD is one of many programs sponsored by Youth Action Coalition of Amherst with a focus on all areas of art and its ability to express ideas. The unveiling of the mural and all it represents will happen tonight from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m during the Amherst Art Walk.

Nia Taylor, a Youth Action Coalition intern and a senior at UMass, said the 13 Amherst youths have long awaited the unveiling of their mural addressing social change in the 21st century.

"I've been really impressed with the teens' enthusiasm and dedication," Taylor said. "They really want to make a difference in their community, and the mural shows how dedicated and motivated Amherst teens are in creating change and making the world we live in a better place for all."

These youth have had the opportunity to learn valuable artistic skills, Taylor said, while also exploring and dissecting social and political issues that are important to them.

"Five College students and guest speakers have been critical components to the program during the past school year," Taylor said. "They've been mentoring the youth and assisting them with their artistic endeavors as students and future artists, lyricists, educators and politicians."

Students from the Pioneer Valley Performing Arts Charter Public School have also dedicated their time to assist the Amherst youth on their mural, Taylor said. With support from Food for Thought Books and local Amherst businesses, Taylor said the mural hopes to address issues of race,

See MURAL on page 5

Young women involved with the group Get Up Get Down are a part of the mural project at Food for Thought Books in downtown Amherst. They are using their artistic talents to explore social issues that impact their lives.

Trio draws lofty comparisons

Rose Hill Drive garners praise from Rolling Stone

BY MICHAEL HARDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Rose Hill Drive, a hot, young power trio from Boulder, Colo., is making a stop at the Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton tonight. They exploded onto the scene with their self-titled debut album and have since opened for bands such as The Who and Van Halen. Rolling Stone Magazine has also included them in their list Top 10 Artists to Watch.

Rose Hill Drive has received many impressive comparisons to bands such as Cream, The Who and Led Zeppelin, but they aren't buying into it.

"The whole new retro-hand thing is getting a little old," said guitarist Daniel Sproul, in an interview with Rolling Stone. At first glance, it would seem that the three band members stepped right off the Allman Brothers Band tour. Couple that with their stripped down sound and throwback lyrics about old western gunfights, and its easy to label them as a retro band.

This easy comparison, however, comes from the near extinction of power trios that know how to rock. People have forgotten about this formula with the Indie and Emo scenes grabbing the majority of the attention. While they may not totally warm up to the Classic Rock comparisons, they do offer a double live CD on their Web site in which they do a front-to-back cover of Led Zeppelin's first album.

Guitarist and singer Daniel has teamed up with his brother, bassist Jacob Sproul, and drummer Nate "The Foot" Barnes to consistently perform unpredictable shows chock-full of high energy. Before they had even begun working on their debut album, they had gathered a fierce underground fan base, which created the domino effect of success that they are currently enjoying.

Their debut album is mostly high octane rock, but also contains a few acoustic tracks interspersed throughout, which showcases the band's song-writing abilities. The acoustic songs slow down the rock assault, but do not take away from the album as a whole.

Their opening track, "Showdown," is, according to Jacob, a fantasy of being in the shoes of somebody with a quick draw and a lot of power. What may be their anthem, "Raise Your Hands," relates everyone to each other over internal battles and world issues. The epic, "Reptilian Blues" is the quintessential rebel story, running from the law onto the coattails of dreams which may not be.

To have a pure rock 'n' roll band emerge from the jam band city of Boulder may seem weird,

See ROSE HILL on page 5

Rose Hill Drive is a band that not only sounds like The Who, but has opened for them as well. They will be playing in Northampton tonight at 8:30 p.m.

Festival celebrates student creativity

BY AMANDA MITCHELL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The fourth annual Festival of the Arts will take place on the UMass Campus near the Fine Arts Center today. The program has been put together by the Center for Student Development with the help of other volunteers, and will include student artwork, performances and a chance for passersby to make their own crafts.

The Festival began four years ago as a result of Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Michael Gargano's desire to showcase and celebrate the arts that are present on campus. His intent was to open the event to everyone, encouraging students who aren't majoring in Fine Arts the rare opportunity to display their talents. Today, Erin Donnally Drake from the Center for Student Development organizes the event, with the help of the Craft Center and other students.

According to Jillian Vest, a sophomore student and Center for Student Development employee who helped organize the event, the Festival will include 18 performers this year, including Mission Improv, one of the University's improvisational comedy troupes, Dynamic Motion, otherwise known as the UMass Dance Team, and performances by the Ballroom Dance Team.

According to Vest, there are also several acts being put on by students not affiliated with a performance group as well as several performances from the music department. She is especially looking forward to the rap acts that will be a new feature in the Festival this year.

"I think it's a good thing to get the personal stuff out there," she said. "It's important that this festival is open to everyone and not just art majors and people who do this stuff everyday."

The performances will be going on throughout the afternoon in 15-minute time slots. And since Mission Improv has been given the honor of Master of Ceremonies, there are sure to be lots of laughs and entertainment in between acts as well. Also featured is the campus' FYC TV's film festival and an art exhibit featuring works from between eight and 10 students. The work, which varies from paintings, to 3D work, to photography, will be on display inside the front entrance of the Fine Arts Center throughout the entire day.

Vest said that all who applied to showcase their talents were accepted and hopes that everyone will make an effort to stop by throughout the afternoon.

There is also a hands-on aspect to the Festival for those who wish to participate. Tables will be set up between the Fine Arts Center entrance and the performance stage with supplies for hemp jewelry, button making, and decoupage, which can be described as lacquering pictures or other medium onto a surface such as the cover of a box. Along with arts and crafts, cotton candy and popcorn will also be available.

The Festival is open to the public and completely free to attend and participate. It will be held rain or shine, though according to Vest the weather is expected to be perfect for being outdoors. The fourth annual Festival for the Arts will begin at 1 p.m. and continue until 5 p.m. tonight.

"It should be a good time," Vest said. "There's something for everyone and that's what makes this a great event."

Amanda Mitchell can be reached at amitchel@student.umass.edu

Leave the games to the real athletes

BY JASMINE MONTEIRO
COLLEGIAN CONTRIBUTOR

Whether you want to believe it or not, relationships are like a sport. You win some, you lose some, and some people just plain suck at them. The most important thing to realize is that we can't please everyone. And if we have to choose, we should choose to please ourselves.

Sometimes when we play the relationship game, we don't even realize that we're playing. It's very easy to get caught up in the "he said," "she said," "they said situation." And before you know it, you're stuck in the game without any of your equipment. It may not be easy to get out of this situation, but it could be easy to prevent it from happening in the first place.

Some people are very insecure, or avoidant in their relationships. They're constantly worried that they will be betrayed by their significant other. Make sure if you are with someone who shows these signs, that you give them the reassurance they need when they need it. We all need that from time to time, some just more than others.

If, however, you realize that you are an insecure type, don't start playing guessing games. No matter how well we know someone we can never be mind readers. So if something is bothering you just say it — none of the "you should know," or "you tell me," accusations because that only creates a loaded situation leading to a disaster. You can either come up with something and get in trouble, or play dumb and get into the same amount of trouble. Damned if you do and damned if you don't.

If someone tries to play games with you stick to your guns and realize that you don't owe anybody anything. Jealousy is one of the most dangerous games to play; and in my opinion, nobody ever wins. But if you really feel strongly about something, then be upfront about it. Be stern, not mean. If you're mean it'll only provoke an unnecessary argument. Wouldn't you get angry if someone jumped down your throat and accused you of something that never happened? Of course!

Many people pride themselves on the fact that their trustworthy, so a stab at that is like a stab to the heart. So when you ask nicely and get your answer you have two options believe them, or don't. Everyone is entitled to trust their instincts; you just have to know that those instincts are likely to be right.

Another one of the worst games someone could play is that of hypocrisy. Don't say one thing and do another. And most importantly, don't say something and really mean something else. It's such a frustrating thing to deal with. I always believe, "say what you mean and mean what you say." No need to sugarcoat it — we should all be adults. So do you really want to see me, or do you really think I should spend time with my friends? Do you really not care, or is that just your way of making me feel bad?

Don't try to break someone down because they're in a situation where they feel bad too. Just because someone feels that way about a situation doesn't mean that they have something to hide. It just means they possess this very minute trait called a conscience, and no, not necessarily a guilty one.

As I've stated many times previously, trust is the glue that holds a relationship together. If you don't have that then you have nothing. Trying to foil that trust because of insecurities will only make you one thing — lonely. Don't trust everyone you see on the street, but don't miss the flashing signs that say someone is legitimately trustworthy.

If you're someone who is often very secure in a relationship and something doesn't feel right to you, don't ignore it. It could be the only thing that's being true to you. Sometimes it's just not easy for us to be honest all of the time because we're not always willing to show our true colors. We don't want to be the one to break someone's heart, and more importantly, we don't want to be the one who has our heart broken.

Instead of playing the impossible guessing game just let someone know how you feel. You may be surprised how understanding someone can be. And the more time you give each other to adjust, the more likely you will trust each other in the end. There's no need to play games anymore. Most of us have learned our lessons, and we're willing to take any necessary steps to making and keeping things right.

Jasmine Monteiro can be reached at jmonteir@student.umass.edu.

UMass brings satire, 'Urinetown' to stage

Musical pokes fun at extreme taxation because of weather

BY STEPHANIE MCPHERSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

What kind of musical is this? So questions those yellow posters pinned up around campus. And no, the word on those posters is not a mistake. The name of the show is "Urinetown: The Musical!" and it's being performed by the UMass Theater Guild starting tonight and running until Saturday, May 5.

In a strange future that resembles a "fifties every-town," a 20-year-old drought is sucking the Earth of its water supply. In an attempt to save what they can, the "Urine Good Company" (UGC) has decided to make the citizens take care of their private business in public amenities. Private bathrooms are a thing of the past. The citizens of the town must scrimp and save to gather the money to use the public toilets. If they can't pay, they are sent to Urinetown, from which no one returns.

The show opens on Public Amenity Number 9, located in the poorest part of town. It is run in part by Bobby Strong, played by Eric Rehm, a sophomore double major of theater and English at UMass. When Bobby's father doesn't have enough to cover the fee to use the toilet, he is carted off to the mysterious Urinetown, leaving Bobby questioning the policies of UGC.

When the company decides to hike the fees up once more, Bobby decides that enough is enough, and he leads a revolution of the poor against UGC. Comedy, farce, and satire combine to create a bizarre and somewhat dark tale of standing up for your right to pee in private while trying to avoid the grim fate of being sent to Urinetown.

URINETOWN: THE MUSICAL!
STUDENT UNION BALLROOM
MAY 3-5 8 P.M.
& MAY 5-2 P.M.
PUBLIC $10
STUDENTS $ 6

While backpacking in Europe, Greg Kotis got his inspiration to write "Urinetown" from a public toilet that demanded a fee to be used. He was joined by lyricist Mark Hollmann. Since opening on Broadway on Sept. 20, 2001 "Urinetown: the Musical!" has since won a number of Tonys, including Best Director, Best Score, and Best Book of a Musical.

This is not your regular musical. Not only does it consistently break the fourth wall in speaking directly to the audience, it frequently makes fun of not only itself, but all musicals. It references famous shows, most prominently "Les Misérables," but at the same time as satirizing classical musicals, "it is a classical musical, and it revels in it," said Mike Devlin, a graduate of UMass and the assistant director of the show.

Joey Ally, who is a senior political science major at Amherst College and is playing Hope Cladwell, the love interest of Bobby Strong, said she likes that it "doesn't take itself seriously." She went on to say that the show "is funny because it pokes fun at a very real situation." Not the fee to pee, of course, but the impending threat of running out of water. "I like the gritty underbelly of the show," Ally concluded.

The show is being performed in the Student Union Ballroom, which posed a big problem for the Theater Guild, as there is no stage. So, on top of rehearsing the singing, acting, and dancing, and the creating the set, the Guild had to build the stage as well.

Luckily for the cast and crew, the rest of the three-month process was "amazingly smooth," according to Tom Andrea, the producer of the show and a sophomore pre-medical/biology major at UMass. They even "ended up being ahead of schedule," said Ally. That's not surprising when under great direction, as the cast of "Urinetown" is. Said Rehm of director Devlin, "he really knows what he's doing." Also, because of the long process, the cast has been "singing and dancing hard," said Devlin, which should make for a very entertaining show.

Greg Kotis and Mark Hollmann wrote "Urinetown: The Musical!" as a satirical show about a water-deprived world that taxes urination.

"Urinetown" is undoubtedly a comedy, but it has an interesting message that many members of the cast hope is not lost on the audience. As Ally said, "I hope [the audience] walks away and laughs, but then thinks about the message." Devlin agreed saying that the drying up of Earth's water supply "isn't that far-fetched of an idea."

Of course, that isn't all there is to the show. "I hope they are thoroughly entertained," said Rehm. Andrea said he hopes that the audience enjoys the range of comedy, from low-brow bathroom jokes (the show is called "Urinetown," after all), to the cultural and musical references that they've brought to the forefront.

"Urinetown The Musical!" is showing in the Student Union Ballroom starting tonight through Saturday, May 5 with performances each night at 8:00 p.m. and a Saturday matinee at 2:00 p.m. Prices are $10 for the general public and $6 for students, children, and seniors.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcpherson@student.umass.edu

Get Up Get Down creates art

Amherst group Get Up Get Down brings youth together after school to create art projects that promote empowerment.

MURAL from page 4

class, gender, and civil rights.

Founded in 1988, Taylor said the Youth Action Coalition is a non-profit community organization working to promote youth empowerment through creative expression, community building, and social action initiatives. GUGD is one of three after-school programs created by Youth Action Coalition to promote creativity and social action in the western Massachusetts region and empower youth to mobilize their communities through socially conscious public art.

The unveiling of the mural will be open house style on the north side of Food For Thought Books, located at 106 N. Pleasant St. in downtown Amherst. Here, Taylor said the spectators will have the opportunity to meet the artists, learn about their creative process, and enjoy light refreshments while engaging in lively and educational discussions on art and social change with the Get Up Get Down youth.

Mandy Thomas can be reached at mandyrudy@gmail.com.

Rose Hill comes to Northampton stage

ROSE HILL from page 4

but they sell out whenever they play there, and everybody in attendance seems to know the lyrics just as well as the band.

"We are rock 'n' roll," Jacob said in an interview with PopMatters.com. "And I think that just means whatever you want it to mean, because it's going on now. We're not copying anything; we're just playing what we feel like playing. We just play it because it's coming straight out of us; that's the most magical way to write a song and to play it. It sounds like rock 'n' roll to me – feels like rock 'n' roll. It's energetic, makes you dance, makes you happy."

All in all, Rose Hill Drive will throw down a worthwhile show for those who appreciate frenzied, slicing guitar solos and some good 'ole rock 'n' roll. Opening for Rose Hill Drive are Palace in Thunderland and Thrill Pillow. The show starts at 8:30 p.m. tonight at the Pearl Street Nightclub in the Clubroom. Tickets at $10 in advance and $13 at the door, which is a bargain for the opportunity to catch this band.

Michael Hardman can be reached at mhardman@student.umass.edu.

Check out Rose Hill Drive in Northampton tonight at 8:30 p.m.

Write for Arts email: collegian-arts@gmail.com

get ready

ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Time is running out! Write for Arts. Email collegianarts@gmail.com

FACTORY DIRECT
DISCOUNT MATTRESS WAREHOUSE, INC.
LOWEST PRICES IN THE VALLEY!!
FORMERLY SLEEPY HOLLOW
The only thing that has changed is the name
VOTED # 1
Futons | Mattress | Platform Beds - 100% Hardwood
(413) 253-BEDS (2337) RT. 9 Amherst
SUN-MON: 12-4 TUES-SAT: 10:30-6

Great Natural Fiber Spring Clothing!
The Mercantile
11 East Pleasant Street
Amherst, Ma 01002
(413) 549-1396
And
108 Main Street
Northampton, MA 01060
(413) 584-1204

YANKEE CANDLE
a passion for fragrance
At the Yankee Candle Company, Inc. we care about our employees! If you are looking for a full- or part-time summer opportunity where you can be recognized for your hard work, in a friendly and fun environment, then Yankee Candle makes perfect scents!
We make perfect scents.
Seasonal Candlemakers
We offer a competitive salary, free fitness facility, and a generous employee discount!
To apply, visit us online at: www.yankeecandle.com or in person at: 102 Christian Lane, Whately, MA.
EOE/AA

SKYPLEX
SPRINGFIELD'S HOTTEST NIGHTCLUB
3 CLUBS & 3 DJ'S ALL UNDER ONE ROOF!!!
"LA & NYC NIGHTLIFE COMES TO SPRINGFIELD"
Thursday - 18+ College Night "Hot Body Contest"
Friday - 18+ "Underground Electronic Dance Party" Downstairs "Top 40" Upstairs
Saturday - 21+ "Party VIP Style"
WANTED: HIP YOUNG PROMOTERS/HOSTS • Earn $$$$
Calling all DJ's
Do you do campus and house parties? Looking for a chance to work at the HOTTEST Nightclub? Here's your chance to become a Club DJ! Signup online at www.info.skyplex.us
18+ $2.00 off admission before midnight with this ad
21+ FREE admission before midnight with this ad
code:umass
10 Stearns Square Springfield, MA 413-827-9000

Final regular season matchup at Rutgers

M. LACROSSE from page 8

"Athletically, they remind me of some of those teams," Cannella said. "Defensively they get the ball off the ground really well. They have some young guys that are really enthusiastic right now – they're playing really well for them right now. They've really come along. They're much improved from last year."

Cannella went on to praise some other Rutgers personnel, including defender Chris O'Dougherty, saying that he "is probably as good as anybody we're going to face."

O'Dougherty is second on Rutgers in groundballs with 27, behind freshman Justin Pennington, who has won 53 percent of his faceoffs and scored 16 goals on the season.

"They probably have the Rookie of the Year in our conference as well in Justin Pennington," Cannella said. "He'll faceoff for them but also score a bunch, too."

Rutgers has started three different goalies this season, but Bill Olin has received the most starts and let up the fewest goals, averaging 7.12 goals against him per game. Lyle Farrar and Peter Pantages have also received starts in goal for Rutgers this season.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu.

A sports writer's admittance

PELLAND from page 8

half-serious manner. But after admitting my mistake, the coach opened up: "I didn't really think about that."

Since that loss to the Greyhounds, UMass has dropped just one contest, an 8-7 battle for the ECAC crown against Georgetown. The win over the Orange also brought the Minutemen back into the national rankings (tied for No. 17 in the IL/Nike Media Poll) for the first time since February.

Even after all that, I still refused to admit the Minutemen had a shot at the postseason, but they do. The top 16 teams in the nation make it to mid-May. According to Lax Power's computer rankings, UMass currently sits just outside the threshold at No. 18. The Minutemen will obviously need to win this week, but they also need a lot of help from other schools.

But Cannella's still not thinking about it.

"[We're] trying to prepare for Rutgers and get our guys prepared for Rutgers," he said. "The more anybody thinks about that the further away you get from being focused on what's important. That's that task at hand and playing a good game on Saturday.

"I'm just happy that we've put ourselves in a position to be successful over the last five weeks. That's what I'm focusing more on and trying to keep that confidence going through the weekend here."

Working against the Minutemen is their 3-4 non-conference record. That is especially weak for a tournament team. Those four losses weren't suffered at the hands of the best lacrosse teams in the nation either. One was to Albany, who is currently ranked No. 12 and is the only non-conference loss to a team in the polls. The others were to the Ivy League's Yale and Brown, and the third was the season opener against Hofstra.

While the win over Syracuse was a huge confidence booster for the team, it may have hurt its tournament chances more than it helped. The Orange are the premier lacrosse program in the nation – that can't be denied – but have showed nothing of the sort this season.

The loss to the Minutemen effectively bounced Syracuse from postseason play for the first time in 24 years, making each team's victory over the Pylons less impressive. The process of inviting teams to participate in the tourney is based solely on this season alone, not history.

It's too bad computer rankings don't take character into account because then UMass' chances would be greatly increased. The Minutemen have kept true to their word of continuing to fight.

"We're fighting all the way. I'm proud of the guys that they've been able to do that," Cannella said. "It means a lot to me, and certainly I know it means a lot to them because they're a proud group."

Well this is a proud writer as well, but never too proud to admit when he makes a mistake.

Jon Pelland is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu.

Serio makes for solid replacement

SOFTBALL from page 8

As a junior last season, Molinari ended the season at .388 raising her career average to .323 before the start of this season.

WEHR'S THE BACKUP?

With sophomore catcher Emily Wehr out of the lineup with a hip injury, freshman Jessica Serio has started 24 games this season.

Initially, Wehr's injury looked like it could handicap the Minutewomen all season. But Serio has proved one of UMass' most consistent defensive performers all year which is a pleasant surprise for UMass coach Elaine Sortino since Serio came to Amherst as a third baseman. She isn't even listed on the UMass roster as a catcher.

UMass' pitchers, Bailey Sanders and Brandice Balschmiter, have praised Serio's dedication to learning the position all season.

Her offense has improved recently as well. Against George Washington on Sunday, she went 4-for-5 raising her batting average to .189 before yesterday's 0-for-2 dropped to .182.

Despite Serio's emergence, the Minutewomen have one problem to address: With Wehr unable to play, UMass has no clear backup catcher.

When asked to address the situation yesterday, Sortino replied, "You're not asking me that question."

It is safe to believe that she has someone in line to catch if Serio were to go down. The Minutewomen's roster is loaded with utility players who haven't seen much playing time.

THERE'S NO PLACE LIKE HOME

With yesterday's win over BC, the Minutewomen have now won 24 straight games at the UMass Softball Complex. The last time UMass dropped a game at home was April 9 of last season when Charlotte defeated the Minutewomen, 2-1.

UMass has only lost nine times ever at its home field. The complex was built in 2000 and since then UMass is 128-9-1 at home. So far this season, the Minutewomen are 14-0 in Amherst with four games remaining before the A-10 Tournament which is also in Amherst. . With an 0-for-2 performance against BC yesterday, senior Amanda Acampora's five-game hitting streak came to an end. In those five games, Acampora hit at a .615 clip with two home runs and nine runs batted in. . With an error in the second inning of yesterday's game, freshman shortstop Whitney Williams took over the team lead with 14. She was tied with Cullington before the contest, but Cullington has committed one in her last 17 games.

Joe Melomi can be reached at jmelomi@student.umass.edu.

BRIAN CHERVINSKY/COLLEGIAN

Her second inning error in Tuesday's 7-1 victory over Boston College increased freshman shortstop Whitney Williams' error total to 14, which leads the team. The Minutewomen are tied for fourth in fielding percentage (.953) in the conference this season.

Eilenberg gets win in first start this year following Bryan Garrity's walk. With runners on second and third, freshman outfielder Mike Donato stepped in and stroked a two-run single up the middle – increasing the lead to 4-0.

BASEBALL from page 8

"It just seems like over the past few weeks everyone's just stepped up," Garrity said, referring to the clutch hitting. "We're starting to produce, which is good to see. We didn't have that at the beginning of the year. People are really taking it upon themselves to come through in clutch situations."

Brandon Miles came in to pitch for Bayer, allowing the single to Donato – but it was Bayer who was charged with all four runs in the inning. None of the runs were earned, and Bayer actually improved his ERA on the season to 9.00 – in what was also his first start of the season.

Eilenberg maneuvered his way out of jams throughout the outing, making quality pitches and ensuring UMass maintained its lead. The Catamounts left eight men on base in Eilenberg's six innings, including two in the second and three in the third.

UMass coach Mike Stone was more than pleased with the effort from his sophomore hurler, but was a bit disappointed with the rest of the team.

"Other than the fact that Mitchell pitched very well, I'm not at all impressed with our performance," Stone said. "I felt like we were just going through the motions a little bit. I was disappointed with our effort today."

Vermont started to get back into the game in the sixth inning, scoring a run off Eilenberg on Brad Currier's RBI groundout. They scored again in the seventh – this time off reliever Beau Hodges – after cleanup hitter Jeff Heppner roped a double to deep right, scoring Kyle Henry, who reached on a single.

Hodges settled down and pitched a quick eighth inning, and Mike Dicato came in for the ninth inning – shutting the door on the Catamounts, while registering his first save of the season.

"We're starting to get on a roll, and everyone is gaining confidence right now," Garrity said. That's five [wins] in a row for us. It's the longest streak we've had I think in the three years I've been here."

Yesterday's victory gave UMass 60-career wins over Vermont, dating back to 1900, when these teams first met. The Catamounts aren't far behind, having won 51 times.

UVM had entered yesterday's game on a hot streak, winning eight of its last 10 contests, including three straight. Yesterday marked the first game of a seven-game road trip for the Catamounts, while the Minutemen will stay in Amherst for eight of their next nine games.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu.

George Washington faces minor setback

BY MIKE CONNORS

The George Washington softball team (21-24, 8-10 Atlantic 10) took a step forward before taking a step back in their quest for the sixth and final spot in the Atlantic 10 Tournament that begins this Wednesday.

Rhode Island (9-32, 2-11 A-10) found itself a victim of a Colonial sweep this past Saturday. GW has recently been led by junior Jackie Yaniga, who went 9-for-17 at the plate the past week. The pitching was also there as the games against URI freshman pitcher Amanda Gabriel struck out 10 along the way to a three-hit shutout in the first game. With the victory, Gabriel notched her 15th complete game of the season as well as her fifth shutout. Both are George Washington single-season records.

After its dismantling of URI, the team dropped two games to UMass on Sunday. The two losses left GW a half game behind Charlotte (23-21, 6-7 A-10) for the last spot in the tournament. Gabriel gave another strong performance for the Colonials in the first game but the team ultimately ended up on the short end of a 4-2 ball game.

The second game quickly got out of reach for the Colonials. The Minutewomen's Amanda Acampora and Stacy Cullington each hit two home runs en route to a 9-1 victory. The latter batted .600 for the week with four home runs, nine RBIs, and a 1.800 slugging percentage. That performance helped her earn her third Atlantic 10 Player of the Week award.

A-10 Softball

Charlotte helped its cause by winning two conference games this Sunday over St. Bonaventure. The first victory included a 5-0, one-hit shutout that helped Kristen Bowen earn her second A-10 Pitcher of the Week award. She also struck out a career-best 11 batters. The bats came alive as well. The 49ers all-time home run leader, Kristi Killough, hit her 20th dinger of her career.

Not to be outdone by her teammates, sophomore Cee Brooks hit five RBIs in the two games, including a home run and triple in the second.

RAMS AND MINUTEWOMEN COLLIDE

Fordham (36-16, 14-2 A-10) enters the weekend two games behind UMass (30-12-1, 14-0 A-10) for the top spot in the conference.

The Rams received superb performances from their pitchers this past week. Freshman Nicole Ayres won her third A-10 Rookie of the Week award after serving up shutouts against Dayton and Marist. Though winning no awards, senior Sarah Kinney struck out a school record 14 batters in a shutout win over Dayton.

Having won four consecutive coming in, including three shutouts, Fordham will move up to the first spot if it can sweep UMass this Friday and Saturday in Amherst.

The Minutewomen come in with quite a streak of their own, having won 19 straight after losing some tough non-conference games in the beginning of the season. None of their defeats have come in league play, and they're currently protecting a 25-game home winning streak.

STILL IN THIRD

After sweeping Saint Joseph's on Sunday, Saint Louis (25-30, 10-7 A-10) is clinging onto its third place lead in the conference.

The first game was knotted at three after the first seven innings, and St. Joe's jumped on the Billiken pitching to score two runs in the top half of the eighth. While they were held in check for most of the game, the Saint Louis bats came alive to score three runs and take the game. They used timely hitting as well as a wild pitch and two walks to mount the rally. Ashley Levan pitched for the Billikens and was named A-10 Co-Pitcher of the Week with a 1.47 ERA and 28 strikeouts in two outings.

Saint Louis won the second game behind the right arm of Stacy Gillette. The freshman threw a complete game four hitter in which the Hawks were only able to muster one run. Fellow freshman Nicki Jost went deep for the Billikens in the 3-1 victory.

Despite the sweep, Saint Louis only holds a slight advantage over Temple (16-18, 8-6 A-10). The Owls have not played a league game since April 22, when they took a weekend series from Rhode Island. They have two games left against Bonaventure this Sunday, while the Billikens play two against GW this Saturday.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

Outlook for 2008 bodes well for UM

KING from page 8

an undisclosed injury gradually morphed into her sitting out the season with a medical redshirt, allowing her to retain the three years of her remaining eligibility (though her status would still inexplicably be day-to-day if the team had qualified for the postseason, but that's a story for another day).

McCormick was a significant part of the 2006 team's offensive production, as she scored 35 goals. Adding a healthy McCormick to an attack featuring three returning 25-goal scorers should allow for a more balanced offense – something that Venechanos has been preaching since day one.

The first-year coach was thrilled that Typadis broke the record, but she would probably acknowledge that it's better for the state of the team if those 52 goals were spread more evenly among the attack and midfield.

Yet departing senior Lauren McCarthy will leave a gaping hole in net for the Minutewomen. In her fifth year with the program, McCarthy logged nearly 1,000 minutes while posting career-best numbers in goals-against average and save percentage – the two most important goalkeeping statistics.

The senior's improvement over the previous three seasons cannot be overlooked. In 2005, she posted a 12.92 goals-against average with full-time duty. Though she lowered that number to 12.00 the next season, she logged only 600 minutes in net, splitting time with Krissy Anderson.

This season, McCarthy lowered her goals-against average to 9.24, chopping off three goals allowed per game from her 2006 campaign. In fact, she ranked second in the league in that category – an impressive feat considering the Atlantic 10 has several talented goalies.

The competition for the starting job next season will be between current sophomore Jamie Whiteway and any recruits. Whiteway only saw action in five games this season, allowing 20 goals on 41 shots. For the purpose of comparison, her stats can be extrapolated into a goals-against average of 13.18.

But the wildcard in this situation may be incoming freshman Colleen Speth. One of 10 players to commit to UMass during the early signing period last November, the Evanston, Ill., native played for Venechanos on a club team as a high school junior.

The talent is there for the Minutewomen to make 2008 a year to remember. If the team can grow and learn from the mistakes they made this season, then there's a chance McGuirk Stadium will become known as a venue for something other than the gridiron.

Michael King is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

Rental Office
1040 N. Pleasant St. #410
Amherst, MA 01002
Phone #: (413) 549-0145
NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
Serving all Your Rental Needs
Now Accepting applications for summer/fall 2007
www.pufftonvillage.com

CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Loves UMASS
NEW UMASS STUDENT ASSOCIATE MEMBERSHIP
Just $75 allows you to play for half price until the end of next Fall.
Also Don't Miss our Spring Special:
Every Monday and Tuesday, 9 Holes Just $10
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE – JUST MINUTES FROM UMASS
www.cherryhillgolf.org

MOVING ON?
Rent a Truck or Cargo Van
Starting at $19.95
Special Reduced Rates Monday to Thursday
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston, New York & New Jersey
• One Way Rentals
• Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
• Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY:
♦ KARAOKE ♦
♦ LIVE BANDS ♦
THURSDAY, MAY 3RD, 2007: DIRTY HIT
SATURDAY, MAY 5TH, 2007: RUSTLER BAND
♦ STUDENT BAND WANTED ♦
NEED A PLACE TO PLAY? COME TO SEVEN O'S!
ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-6780
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F 1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN NEXT TO CUFFSIDE APTS.

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		2		3	6	7
	4	1	6
					4	9
				5	8	4
3	6					2	7
8		5	6
	2	8
				2	1	7
	5	6	9		7

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Recipe meas.
4 Maison of "The Goodbye Girl"
10 Hazy pollution
14 Stool pigeon
15 Hawaiian hellos
16 Cash drawer
17 Actress Meyers
18 French port
19 Ray of "Battle Cry"
20 Dollar fraction
22 Confidence in one's own worth
24 Border tool
26 Portable lights
27 "Finding ___"
30 Rolodex info
31 Retreat in panic
36 "Ladder of Years" writer ___ Paulo, Brazil
40 Grommets
41 Period
44 Camping equipment
46 Study of humans
48 Small snake
50 Citizen of Hollywood?
51 Engenders
56 Nose
60 Movie music
63 Scholarly volume
64 Anderson of "WKRP"
65 Sounded the hour
67 Branch of Buddhism
68 Pops the question
69 Coveter
70 Sense of self
71 Screen material
72 Profoundly
73 Jose, CA

DOWN
1 Minute amount
2 Revealed
3 Smarting pain
4 Buddy
5 Lamenter's cry
6 Part cast
7 Auxiliary verb
8 Israeli port
9 Acquiescence
10 Majestic
11 Barrister or Cue
12 Of days past
13 Seizes
21 Pitfall hiders
23 Wide-brimmed hats
25 Suspended
28 Has permission to
29 Raw minerals
31 Q-U connection
32 Abu Dhabi loc.
33 Persona grata
34 Telephone line: grp.
35 Pack of cards
37 Computer Deities
38 Joule fraction
39 Comic Romano
42 Madre's sister
45 Taint
47 Pre-Easter period
49 Stroked lightly
51 Muslim faith
52 Hangman's knot
53 Sleeping berths
54 Mark honeydew
55 Ointment
57 F-kudos slowly
58 Greek letter
59 Mortise's counterpart
61 Cut short
62 Bow stern connection
66 Matter-of-fact

The Moan and Dove
cut out this ad and redeem it at the moan and dove for free pea nuts in your mouth
themoanandDove.com
460 West St. • Rte 116 Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1 am every day

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Nearly all men can stand adversity, but if you want to test a man's character, give him power."
-Abraham Lincoln

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

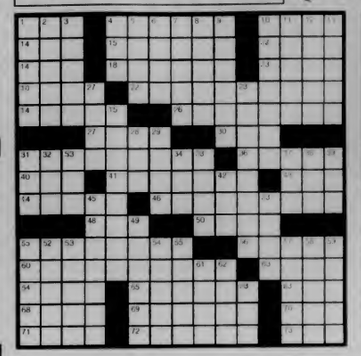
ALRIGHT, I ASK YOU HOW ASHLEY'S
YES?
I WAS WONDERING IF YOU'D LIKE TO GO OUT SOME TIME!!
WHAT'D YOU DO THAT FOR?!
I BOUGHT A LEMON CREAM PIE BUT I MEANT TO GET LEMON MERINGUE. I CAN'T RETURN IT, SO I THREW IT AT YOU INSTEAD.
I HOPE IT WAS WORTH IT!!
TOTALLY WORTH IT. BOY, IF YOU COULD SEE YOUR FACE RIGHT NOW!
BUT HE CAN'T, BECAUSE THE PIE IS COVERING HIS GLASSES.
HA HA, EXACTLY!

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

I WANT A BEAR CUB! I LIKE THE TOYS YOU HAVE
DO YOU THINK I COULD CONVINCE A BEAR TO LIVE THERE?
I'D HAVE TO TRICK HIM
TRICKERY IS THE ONLY WAY TO GET A BEAR'S COOPERATION
WHAT IF THE BEAR REALIZES HE'S BEING TRICKED?
HE WILL EAT YOU

THE QUIGMANS By Buddy Hickerson

"Billy! You better finish your broccoli... before it finishes you."



HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Pick, pick, pick but pretty please... watch where you flick.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Save gasoline by riding a porpoise powered chariot like King Triton.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Today you are at alert level orange for papercuts. I beg you, be careful.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Take time out of your day to make some bling for your lady friend.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Accent your wardrobe with a fancy watch and a hat made of fine plumage.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
There is always room for improvement. Ergo, you will never be good enough.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Speak with a faux British accent. Tell tales of crumpets and tea to strengthen the act.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Strike up a conversation with a stranger about the geneology of clam chowder.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Earn the title of official minstrel of UMass by serenading students walking to class.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Visit your local science fiction society with claims of having just met a hobbit.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Stay away from smug people. Also avoid smog and pugs.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Watch out for man eating hummingbirds. The only nectar they seek is blood.

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
NOW OPEN FOR LUNCH!
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 11am-2am
Thurs-Sat: 11am-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Street Kung Fu The ultimate in personal safety. For class times call 413-325-1322

Like no other course, Army ROTC Minor in Leadership and get paid for it! Graduate as an Army Officer full time/part time after college www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Center of town, 1,2,3 bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Handyman, Housecleaner, Landscaper, Now & for summer. $10/hr+ 549-1578

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must call 413-584-4746

WORK OUTDOORS THIS SUMMER Full time positions available in your hometown. Earn $8-12/hour Painting houses with a fun crew. Call 888-277-9787 or www.collegepro.com

EMPLOYMENT

Brandywine Apts. Needs a certified lifeguard. Full time hours flexible. Must work some weekends. $9.00/ hr Call 549-0600 or stop by office.

Need a summer job? College Pro painters is hiring. Work with friends, steady hours, learn a valuable skill. Must be willing to work in the following areas: Milford, Millbury, Grafton, Auburn. Interviewers being held now. Please email collegepronorthbridge@yahoo.com

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Jobs for the Environment Work with Environment Massachusetts on a campaign to Fight Global Warming and work with great people! Make $400-$600/week. Career opportunities and benefits available. Call Mel at 413-256-6434. Visit our website @ www.jobsthatmatter.org

Castine movers in Athol is looking for summer help to include packing and labor with crews on local and/or long distance household moves. See the country, travel, keep in shape!! Warehouse help also needed for the summer season in our warehouse. Good hourly or daily wages offered. Call Kim Castine at 800-225-8068 x225 or send an email to move@castinemovers.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs Training provided 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Marketers wanted for part time work during school. Earn $15/hr + bonus. Email: rdonaldson@collegepro.com

HOUSE FOR RENT

3 Bedroom, Nice, recently updated. Near Bus stop. Also near Downtown Northampton $1200/month No pets. For June. Skibiski Realty 413-586-1827

SERVICES

BUY ONE, GET ONE FREE Emergency Contraception (EC), prevents pregnancy up to 5 days after unprotected sex. Affordable and Confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992, wwwtapestry-health.org

ROOM FOR RENT

Amherst Beautiful quiet house great location. Need Car. With nice guy and daughter. Perfect for single/couple. Rent nego. Call Jonathan for details. 413-253-2535

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED $10,000(Plus expenses) We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1300+ (math+verbal) Physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more information please contact us. Email: Darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, MAY 3, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Hanging Tough

Slim chance of NCAA bid before season finale

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After an emotional, physical and triumphant win of any kind, there is an inherent instinct that points athletes toward a let-down. The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team has to battle that on Saturday when it takes on Rutgers on the road for the final game of the regular season.

The Minutemen are coming off of their biggest win of the 2007 season, a 9-7 "W" over rival Syracuse at Garber Field last Saturday, and UMass coach Greg Cannella acknowledges the ever-present possibility of the let-down.

"There's always fear," he said. "I just talk to the guys and make sure that they're sharp in practice. We went a little bit shorter in practice this week to keep the guys mentally sharp. You have to get after them too if they don't respond to that.

"You have to remind them, 'Hey guys, the season's not over yet. We have another game here. Last week was last week,'" he added. "You have to move on. At this point, if we're not mature enough to understand that then we're in a lot of trouble, but I think that we are. I think we understand that as a group."

The Minutemen have a slim shot at an at-large bid to the NCAA Tournament, and would need a lot of things to go right for them this weekend.

UMass changed its style of play last weekend to throw Syracuse off of its game, slowing things down in order to minimize possessions and control SU's fast-break potential.

This week, the Minutemen are preparing for a Rutgers squad that is in a similar situation regarding its playoff picture. Rutgers is 5-6 overall and 3-3 in the ECAC. It needs to finish the season with a .500 record in order to be eligible for an at-large selection to the NCAA Tournament.

While the Minutemen will finish the season over .500, they desperately need a win this weekend in order to bolster their status for a postseason bid. Rutgers is the newest obstacle.

"They like to run, they're athletic, they're not going to slow the game down," Cannella said. "They'll take some time with their possessions, but traditionally they are not a slowdown team. But if the goalies play well, that's the way it will end up."

UMass proved that it could play that way last weekend, even though that style of play is not Cannella's preference. Cannella believes that Rutgers has a similar makeup to some other teams that the Minutemen played this season, including Penn State, Georgetown and Loyola.

See M. LACROSSE on page 6

CRISTIAN GOMEZ/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore attack Jim Connolly and the Minutemen can improve their postseason prospects with a win over conference rival Rutgers on Saturday. It marks UMass' last regular season game in 2007.

Not a prediction, but an admittance

Jon Pelland

Stop, slow down and read this very carefully because it's not everyday that a sportswriter readily admits his shortcomings.

I was wrong – there I said it (or wrote it, I guess).

A little over a month ago it appeared as if the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team had zero shot at making the NCAA Tournament just one year after making the national championship game (I'm obligated to mention last year's team with every reference to the tournament).

It was March 24, and the Minutemen just lost to the Loyola Greyhounds, 10-8, on the tail end of spring break. The loss was UMass' fifth of the season, to go with just two wins.

It couldn't score, couldn't put teams away, and missed countless opportunities to win games.

The Minutemen managed 10 goals on just two occasions – wins over Harvard and Sacred Heart. Things were bad, really bad. Although there were glimmers of hope (previous sentence) it just seemed like 2007 was not their year.

UMass coach Greg Cannella and his players insisted they would keep fighting, confident they'd turn the season around. But that was cast aside as wishful thinking; it was something the Minutemen had to say to keep their spirits up during what was a terrible beginning to the season.

Again, I was wrong.

But this admission comes with a disclaimer. This is not a prediction, stating that UMass will make the tournament. That is still a long shot, and remains to be seen barring what happens this weekend. All I'm saying is that I miscalculated their chances – nothing further.

As bad as the Maroon and White was to begin the season, it's played that much better to finish it out. UMass' dramatic win over Syracuse last Saturday was a huge victory for the team's morale, and continued a run in which it won five of its last six contests.

Even when the season was at its bleakest, Cannella says the tournament was nowhere near the forefront of his thinking – this before informing me of what's been written lately.

"You keep saying that we don't [have a chance]. So how can you ask me this now?" he inquired in a half-joking,

See PELLAND on page 6

Minutemen win fifth straight

Eilenberg picks up second win in unordinary starter's role

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts baseball team took advantage of its few opportunities, while Vermont stranded 11 baserunners in yesterday's 4-2 victory for the Minutemen at Earl Lorden Field.

UMass	4
UVM	2

Mitchell Eilenberg – making his first start of the season after 14 relief appearances – pitched six strong innings, surrendering one run, while striking out five. He allowed four hits and five walks. With the win, he improved his record to 2-0 and dropped his ERA to 3.75.

"He pitched great," captain Bryan Garrity said. "He kept hitters off-balance and was hitting his spots. He was just throwing strikes and that's the big thing with our pitching staff."

"I was excited," Eilenberg said, in reference to getting his first start of the season. "I started once last year, but I've had a lot of appearances as a reliever, so it was good to get one as a starter. It went pretty well, but I walked too many batters, but I got good defense to hail me out when I needed it."

UMass (17-18, 9-9 Atlantic 10) scored all four of its runs in the fourth inning – and all with two outs – taking advantage of two Vermont (18-19) miscues in the field.

UVM starter Jeremiah Bayer retired Jim Cassidy to start the inning, but Adam Tempesta reached on the error by shortstop Jim Chapman and moved to second on a past ball. Following a Bryan Adamski fly out, Ryan Franczek delivered the game's first run with an RBI single – dumping the 3-2 pitch to right field.

Franczek quickly advanced to third on a wild pickoff attempt, and Bill Rankin doubled him in

See BASEBALL on page 6

Pitching six strong innings, sophomore Mitchell Eilenberg struck out five batters and allowed only four hits in yesterday's win over UVM.

Cullington ties UMass home run record

Hits Nos. 13 and 14 to tie single-season school mark

BY JOE MELONI
CORRESPONDENT

In her last 19 at-bats, the Massachusetts softball team's second baseman, junior Stacy Cullington, has hit six home runs. Against George Washington, Cullington hit her 13th and 14th home runs of the season, tying the program single-season record Cullington tied former UMass catcher and current assistant coach K.J. Kelley for the single-season mark.

UMass Softball

Kelley also holds the career record with the 41 homers she hit from 2003-2006.

The Atlantic 10 took notice of Cullington's accomplishments, naming her its Player of the Week for the third time this season.

Prior to 2007, Cullington had just 12 home runs in her first two years at UMass – she hit seven as a freshman and five last season as a sophomore.

She had her first chance to break the record yesterday against Boston College. In three plate appearances, she went 1-for-1 with a double and a walk.

With sophomore Whitney Mollica struggling to produce like she did as a freshman, UMass needs Cullington to continue putting up those kinds of numbers. Every statistic is down this season for Mollica. She is hitting .290 this season compared to .394 last season.

Cullington also leads the Minutewomen with 47 runs batted in. If she hopes to capture that record as well this season, she will have to drive in 15 more to jump over the current mark of 61 set by Mollica last season.

The Minutewomen have four regular season games remaining before they enter the postseason.

THE CHASE FOR .400

Only eight times in program history has a player hit .400 in a season and not since 2003 when Aisha Franke hit .403 – Franke played at UMass from 2001-2004.

With a 1-for-3 day against BC, senior Candice Mollman's batting average is at .397. The hit against the Eagles extended her hitting streak to 11 games.

She is hitting .405 in that stretch with 15 hits in her 37 at-bats.

See SOFTBALL on page 6

Junior second baseman Stacy Cullington ranks among the top hitters in the Atlantic 10 this season. She leads the league in both home runs (14) and RBIs (47), while starting all 43 games this season for the Minutewomen. Cullington is third on the team with a .322 batting average.

Future looks bright for Minutewomen

Michael King

With the 2007 season coming to a close earlier than UMass hoped for, all the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team can do is look forward to next year. After a season of tough losses and missed opportunities, the Minutewomen have the chance to make their own mark on McGuirk Stadium.

All signs point to this being possible, but the team will certainly need to resolve significant question marks before next season. First and foremost, can the Minutewomen take their talent and experience and transform themselves into a winning team?

UMass finished the season with eight wins, three more than its 2006 campaign. The team also had a losing conference record, finishing one win away from qualifying for the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

Obviously an 8-9 record is an improvement over the last three losing seasons, but it's the way the team lost many of those nine games that has the Maroon and White wishing for a mulligan.

It's difficult to lose games by one goal, but the Minutewomen experienced that feeling four times this year. And it was those four devastating losses that kept the team from having a good season.

Even in the games where the final score was not close, the team had a reasonable chance in nearly every loss. Except for being overmatched by a national championship caliber Northwestern squad, the pattern for every loss was almost the same. UMass would take the lead or keep it close during the early minutes, then allow the opposition to make scoring runs over several minutes to put the game out of reach.

It's hard to pinpoint a fatal flaw, but more times than not, the Minutewomen were done-in by turnovers and a failure to win draw controls. In a sport like lacrosse where possession means everything, those two statistics become very important.

But then again, the team made strides under first-year coach Alexis Venechanos. Progress on the field can be difficult to create in a coach's first opportunity to lead a program – something that Venechanos achieved, although she has yet to replicate the success of her winning pedigree.

If you don't know by now, she won national championships as a goalie at Maryland in 2000 and 2001 and another pair as an assistant coach with Northwestern in 2005 and 2006 (we'll ignore the "You wore flip-flops to the White House?!" scandal, as headlined in the Chicago Tribune after the team's first visit in July of 2005).

The 2007 Minutewomen can best be characterized as a young team. With only three seniors moving on, the team will return the vast majority of its starters on both sides of the ball. Not to minimize the contribution of the seniors, but whenever a team graduates only three people, it will almost always be in a good situation for next season.

Of the team's three units, the offense/attack should be in the best position for success for 2008. The Minutewomen will return 91 percent of their total offensive scoring from this season, including junior attack Kathleen Typadis, who broke the school's single-season goal record of 51 in the last game of the year.

The team will also benefit from the return of Kaytlin McCormick. Her day-to-day condition from

See KING on page 6

THE MASSACHUSETTS

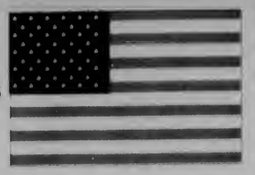
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SHOWERS : HI: 69 LO: 56 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, MAY 4, 2007

ASC CONCERT ROCKS VAN METER PAGE 6

STARTING ON MONDAY, PART ONE OF THE COLLEGIAN'S FIVE-PART SERIES ON STUDENT WAR VETERANS



ASPEN CHARRED

SAID AZADIAN/COLLEGIAN

A two-alarm fire destroyed an Aspen Chase apartment and damaged seven others yesterday. Amherst Fire officials are still searching for the source of the blaze that caused over $150,000 worth of damage and left many residents without a home.

Blaze destroys apartment

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The cause of a two-alarm fire that resulted in an estimated $150,000 worth of damage at the Aspen Chase apartment complex on Main Street in Amherst yesterday has not yet been determined by fire officials.

State troopers attached to the State Fire Marshal's Office are currently investigating the cause of the fire in conjunction with fire investigators from the Amherst Fire (AFD) and Police Departments (APD), according to a press release issued last evening by AFD.

There were no civilian injuries, but two firefighters and one police officer suffered minor injuries, including smoke inhalation and dehydration, and were treated at the scene, according to the press release.

At 11:54 a.m. the Amherst Emergency Communications Center dispatched off-duty and on-duty firefighters to the apartment complex after receiving a 911 cell phone call reporting the fire. Firefighters arriving on the scene observed heavy smoke emitting from the second-story of the building housing apartment units nine through 16.

Both firefighters and police officers participated in a search of the building to locate and evacuate residents. The occupants of unit 15, which suffered the most damage from the fire, were not immediately located, but arrived on the scene safely later in the day.

A second alarm was ordered at 12:02 p.m. recalling all of Amherst's off-duty career firefighters to the scene after the fire had spread up to the roof of the structure. Assisting fire crews from Belchertown, Hadley, Northampton, and South Hadley were also called to the scene. A total of 46 Amherst firefighters with six fire engines and three ambulances responded to the fire.

Firefighters were able to prevent the roof from burning off entirely, but were forced to exit the building after the fire damaged roof trusses and support systems, creating a potential safety hazard. An aerial ladder was used to finish extinguishing the fire on the roof and in the attic completely.

According to Amherst firefighter Bill Klaus, the fire was put out by approximately 2:30 p.m.

The Red Cross is in the process of relocating several of the residents of the building who were without insurance and lost all of their belongings in the fire. Apartment unit 15 was destroyed by the fire and seven other units suffered varying degrees of water and smoke damage. All eight units are uninhabitable for the time being.

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins a student.umass.edu

Tocco visits UM, faculty

Addresses Card issue, school diversity

BY MICHELLE OSORIO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Stephen Tocco, chairman of the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees, met with graduate students and members of the faculty yesterday to discuss the rising cost of higher education, diversity and construction on campus, and the awarding of an honorary degree to former White House Chief of Staff, Andrew Card.

Tocco's appearance consisted more of an ask-and-answer session than a lecture. His speech was brief and summarized the Trustee's efforts to make UMass and all of its campuses grace the Top 15 College list since Tocco took office six months ago.

"We need to look at the universities and institutions we aspire to be and understand the characteristics that make them great and how we can achieve those characteristics here, and one of the most important

See TOCCO on page 3

Controversial preacher met with debate from students

BY WES RAHN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Equipped with a Bible, a New York preacher drew a large crowd while lecturing about morals near a sex festival at the University of Massachusetts yesterday.

Near the steps of the W.E.B. Du Bois Library, the preacher spoke his often fiery interpretations of scriptures to anyone who cared to listen. Nearby, students took part in "Sex on the lawn," an annual event put on by Vox: Students for Choice, which encourages safe sex.

While the preacher spoke, students took part in the sex festival about 50 feet away, handing out condoms, playing music and displaying various sex toys.

The preacher, a young man, was clean cut, dressed in a blue suit and tie with a state of Texas pin on the lapel. He was identified by his mother Victoria Lewis as Miles Lewis. Lewis, 22, is an "open air preacher and a member of the group "Open Air Outreach," which was founded in Lewis' hometown of Syracuse, N.Y. The group considers it their duty to "take the gospel where it belongs," and has traveled around the nation and visited over 60 campuses.

See PREACHER on page 3

KRISTIAN GOMEZ/COLLEGIAN

A preacher addresses a congregation of UMass students outside the W.E.B. Dubois library yesterday. His speech, which at times drew loud protest from onlookers, was given just fifty feet away from Vox's 'Sex on the Lawn' demonstration.

Psychologist discusses covert CIA mind experiments

BY TUCKER MERRICK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Mind control, assassins, radioactive tests on civilians, subliminal activation codes, espionage, biological warfare, chemical warfare and the C.I.A. These far-fetched and fantastical plot devices that seem to belong only in spy movies, found there way onto University of Massachusetts campus on Thursday through the words of Dr. Colin A. Ross.

From recovering thousands of pages of classified documents followed by extensive years of research, Dr. Ross wrote a book, and presented a shocking lecture of its contents in an electricity-filled room of Herter Hall, yesterday evening.

In his lecture, put on by UMass Amherst Chapter of Psi Chi, the National Honors Society for Psychology Students, Dr. Ross discussed the actions taken by United States intelligence services in the apprehensive times following the end of World War II and the beginning of the Cold War. In this time, life-altering experimentation and tortuous techniques were developed by some of the world's leading psychologists and psychiatrists. These actions have an impact today not only because of the victims who still continuously suffer, but because this formerly ground-breaking research is "relevant to what's going on in the world today" regarding situations in Iraq.

Dr. Ross began his research into this subject in 1992. After performing clinical work in psychology for some years, Dr. Ross became intrigued by the number of claims by his patients of being involved in secret C.I.A experimentation. He had narratives stating "I was taken on a military base" and that "there was lab equipment." Though at first these stories seemed comparable to UFO abductions, Dr. Ross soon found himself looking into the claims – eventually requesting a disclosure of documents from the C.I.A under the Freedom of Information Act.

The 15,000 pages of text that he was eventually delivered became the backbone of his research – research into attempts of the last century to develop a real-life "Manchurian Candidate."

For those who have not seen the movie, the "Manchurian Candidate" is a classic flick about a squad of soldiers who are abducted on a patrol and forced to undergo brain-washing at the hands of a communist cadre of scientists and generals.

See MIND CONTROL on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 131

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jameson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Adam Scagnin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Pelliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
FEATURES EDITOR Melissa D'Amico
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Perez
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Paddestter
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dollamitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALUE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCRIBE IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES, AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik

COPY EDITOR
Courtney Souza

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Judge sues cleaner for $65M over pants

Jin Nam Chung and Ki Chung stand inside of their dry cleaning business, Custom Cleaners, in Washington on Wednesday.

BY LUCINA TAKIGUCHI
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Chungs, immigrants from South Korea, realized their American dream when they opened their dry-cleaning business seven years ago in the nation's capital. For the past two years, however, they've been dealing with the nightmare of litigation: a $65 million lawsuit over a pair of missing pants.

Jin Nam Chung, Ki Chung and their son, Soo Chung, are so disheartened that they're considering moving back to Seoul, said their attorney, Chris Manning, who spoke on their behalf.

"They're out a lot of money, but more importantly, incredibly disenchanted with the system," Manning said. "This has destroyed their lives."

The lawsuit was filed by a District of Columbia administrative hearings judge, Roy Pearson, who has been representing himself in the case.

Pearson did not return phone calls and e-mails Wednesday from The Associated Press requesting comment.

According to court documents, the problem began in May 2005 when Pearson became a judge and brought several suits for alteration to Custom Cleaners in Northeast Washington, a place he patronized regularly despite previous disagreements with the Chungs. A pair of pants from one suit was not ready when he requested it two days later, and was deemed to be missing.

Pearson asked the cleaners for the full price of the suit: more than $1,000.

But a week later, the Chungs said the pants had been found and refused to pay. That's when Pearson decided to sue.

Manning said the cleaners made three settlement offers to Pearson. First they offered $3,000, then $4,000, then $12,000. But Pearson wasn't satisfied and expanded his calculations beyond one pair of pants.

Because Pearson no longer wanted to use his neighborhood dry cleaner, part of his lawsuit calls for $15,000 — the price to rent a car every weekend for 10 years to go to another business.

"He's somehow purporting that he has a constitutional right to a dry cleaner within four blocks of his apartment," Manning said.

But the bulk of the $65 million comes from Pearson's strict interpretation of D.C.'s consumer protection law, which fines violators $1,500 per violation, per day. According to court papers, Pearson added up 12 violations over 1,200 days, and then multiplied that by three defendants.

Much of Pearson's case rests on two signs that Custom Cleaners once had on its walls: "Satisfaction Guaranteed" and "Same Day Service."

Based on Pearson's dissatisfaction and the delay in getting back the pants, he claims the signs amount to fraud.

Pearson has appointed himself to represent all customers affected by such signs, though D.C. Superior Court Judge Neal Kravitz, who will hear the June 11 trial, has said that this is a case about one plaintiff, and one pair of pants.

Sherman Joyce, president of the American Tort Association, has written a letter to the group of men who will decide this week whether to renew Pearson's 10-year appointment. Joyce is asking them to reconsider.

Chief Administrative Judge Tyrone Butler had no comment regarding Pearson's reappointment.

The association, which tries to police the kind of abusive lawsuits that hurt small businesses, also has offered to buy Pearson the suit of his choice.

Terrier dies after saving 5 kids

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP) — A plucky Jack Russell terrier named George saved five children from two marauding pit bulls, but was so severely mauled in the fight that it had to be put down, its owner said Wednesday.

George was playing with the group of children as they returned home from buying sweets at a neighborhood shop in the small North Island town of Manaia last Sunday when the two pit bulls appeared and lunged toward them, Allan Gay said.

"George was brave — he took them on and he's not even a foot high," Gay told The Associated Press.

"He jumped in on them, he tried to keep them off. If it wasn't for George, those kids would have copped it."

One of the children, Richard Rosewarne, 11, was quoted in the Taranaki Daily News on Wednesday as saying George fought with the pit bulls to keep them off his 4-year-old brother, Darryl.

"George tried to protect us by barking and rushing at them, but they started to bite him — one on the head and the other on the back," Rosewarne said. "We ran off crying and some people saw what was happening and rescued George."

But George was so badly mauled that a veterinarian had to put him down, Gay said.

South Taranaki District Council official Graham Young said the two pit bulls had been impounded, and likely would be put down because of the attack.

In New Zealand, owners of dogs judged to be too aggressive can be required to have them neutered and dogs involved in attacks are destroyed.

Associated Press

U.S. says terrorist in Jill Carroll kidnapping killed

BY KIM GAMEL
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD (AP) — U.S.-led forces killed a top al-Qaida figure in Iraq linked to kidnappings of a Christian Science Monitor reporter and other Westerners, the military said Thursday as mourners gathered at the slain terrorist's home in a Sunni insurgent stronghold north of Baghdad.

The U.S. Embassy, meanwhile, said a rocket attack on the Green Zone killed four Asian contractors Wednesday, the third straight day that extremists fired rockets or mortars at the U.S.-controlled area.

The announcement of the death of al-Qaida propagandist Muharib Abdul-Latif al-Jubouri came after days of conflicting reports from the Iraqi government that the top leaders of the terror group and its front organization — the Islamic State of Iraq — had been killed.

Chief spokesman Maj. Gen. William Caldwell said the military did not have the bodies of al-Qaida boss Abu Ayyub al-Masri or Islamic State leader Abu Omar al-Baghdadi and did not know "of anybody that does."

Caldwell said the confusion apparently stemmed from misunderstandings among Iraqi security forces as al-Jubouri's body was being moved across Baghdad after it was released to his tribe. But he played down implications that it was a symptom of a broader problem of communication between U.S. and Iraqi forces, saying instead it showed that the Iraqis were doing their jobs.

"They at least knew that they had somebody who was very significant," he said, adding that was "a very positive thing."

The Islamic State of Iraq confirmed in an Internet statement that al-Jubouri, whom it called its official spokesman, had been killed. It denied the deaths of al-Baghdadi and al-Masri.

Al-Jubouri was believed to have been deeply involved in the kidnapping of Jill Carroll, the Christian Science Monitor reporter who was released unharmed, and Tom Fox of the Clear Brook, Va., one of four men from the Chicago-based peace group Christian Peacemaker Teams who was found shot to death in Baghdad on March 10, 2006, he said. He was also involved in the kidnapping of two Germans in January 2006, Caldwell said.

Caldwell said al-Jubouri helped facilitate Carroll's transport from one location to another and was believed to have been the last known person to have custody of Fox before he was killed. The Monitor later reported that Carroll did not recognize a photo of al-Jubouri that the military provided.

Al-Jubouri was arrested in 2003 by the U.S. and freed a year later, Caldwell said. A man who claimed to be a relative said al-Jubouri, in his mid-30s and a father of four, deepened his involvement with insurgents after his release. The relative spoke on condition of anonymity out of concern for his own safety.

Caldwell said al-Jubouri had worked in Syria, where he allegedly helped smuggle foreign fighters and funds into Iraq until he returned to the country in September.

Al-Jubouri was killed early Tuesday during an operation dubbed "Rat Trap" about four miles west of the Iaji, a town near an air base north of Baghdad, Caldwell said. The body was identified by photos and DNA testing, he said.

On Thursday, mourners gathered at al-Jubouri's house in Duluiyah, 45 miles north of Baghdad, as a huge funeral tent went up in the street, police said.

Caldwell said 87 militants were killed and 465 people of interest detained in 139 operations against the group in April.

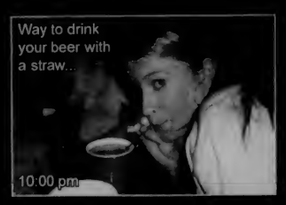
U.S. and Iraqi forces have stepped up operations against the terrorist network following a series of car bombings and suicide attacks that have killed hundreds in recent weeks despite the 11-week-old operation in Baghdad and surrounding areas.

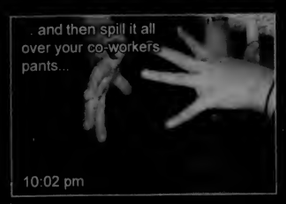
At least 52 people were killed or found dead in Iraq on Thursday, including four in mortar attacks in different parts of Baghdad and two in a parked car bombing that also wounded more than 30 in the oil-rich northern city of Kirkuk.

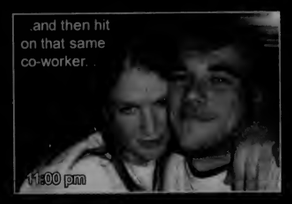
The U.S. Embassy statement gave no other details about Wednesday's attack that killed the four contractors in the Green Zone — two from India, one from the Philippines and one from Nepal.

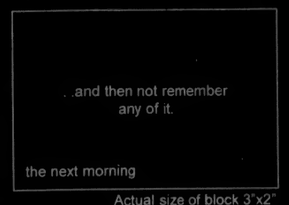
Senior Wills
a great way to embarrass your friends

For example:









Actual size of block 3"x2"

You can't buy embarrassment this cheap anywhere else!

$15 per block

You can surprise your friends just like we did!

Send your photo and statement to thecollegian@gmail.com, or stop by 113 Campus Center for payment info.

Psychologist discusses covert CIA mind experimentation

MIND CONTROL from page 1

One of the soldiers, played by Frank Sinatra, can't seem to stop nightmares of what really happened during the squad's kidnapping. Another soldier, the titular Manchurian Candidate, is poised to kill a presidential candidate — an unaware sleeper assassin with a subliminal activation command.

Dr. Ross, after describing and acknowledging the seemingly outlandish plot, declared the idea behind the Manchurian Candidate assassin as "absolutely a documented fact."

In an attempt to counter assumed Communist mind-control technology, leading American Psychiatrists and Psychologists actively participated in a long and terrible list of human rights violations over the second half of the 20th century. According to Dr. Ross' research, they experimented on unwitting civilians and volunteers using methods like sleep deprivation, electroshock therapy, and isolation. Compounding this cruelty was their work with LSD, along with biological and chemical weapon research.

The permission for these violations was granted under a string of progressing C.I.A projects. First known as "Bluebird," then "Artichoke," these documented crimes in the name of science and national security are best known by the codename MK-ULTRA.

Some may have heard the name MK-ULTRA before. It was featured prominently in the movie "Conspiracy Theory" and acknowledged in books like Tom Wolfe's "The Electric Kool-Aid Acid Test." The idea of MK-ULTRA, in Dr. Ross' words, was to "create a multiple personality disorder." A sleeper assassin or spy would lay dormant within the subconscious until a preprogrammed activation code – verbal, visual, or audible – was presented. In attempts to accomplish this ultimate end, atrocities were committed.

Though the crimes of MK-ULTRA are sometimes examined in light culture references such as these, researchers like Dr. Ross are only beginning to uncover its true brutality and complete disregard for individual wellbeing.

Experiments ranged in variety from comical to horrific. In one instance, a C.I.A operative recruited prostitutes in San Francisco and constructed a brothel. Prostitutes would go out at night to bring back male test subjects. These males were then slipped acid right before sexual intercourse and observed through a one-way window. As reasoning behind these experiments, as Dr. Ross put it, were to "test the effects of LSD in situations that mimic an interrogation."

In a much more severe experiment, Dr. Ross alleges that retarded school children were fed plutonium in their meals and "deceived by telling their parents they were subjects of a dietary study."

To Dr. Ross, these and other experiments are "stories of massive systematic malpractice and human rights violations." He went on to say that though MK-ULTRA was exposed in the 1970's, much of its experiments and finding are still being utilized today.

He related much of this to the War in Iraq. Taking the example of Guantanamo Bay, Dr. Ross charged that the prison is "using the techniques and methods that have been developed since Bluebird." He cited practices such as "water-boarding," where an individual is tied to a board and forced to experience a simulation of drowning. Dr. Ross also noted black head-bags and mock-killings as other examples.

Toward the end of the lecture, Dr. Ross began expanding out of the realm of documented evidence, and discussed various theories and assumptions. One example is the notion of Al Qaeda utilizing similar techniques of mind control on the perpetrators of September 11 and suicide bombers in general. He also espoused the theory that facilities like Guantanamo Bay and Abu Graib were areas set up for further covert experimentation. Mind control with brain electrodes, very similar to the "Manchurian Candidate" remake starring Denzel Washington was also discussed.

Though MK-ULTRA was discontinued in 1972, Dr Ross remains open to the idea that past experiments were a success, and future experimentation is continuing. "Go back and look in the documents. The experiments were not a failure, people were functioning seamlessly in real-life simulations. There's a body of evidence that shows the experiments were successful."

Tucker Merrick is a Collegian Editor

DAN TRONE/COLLEGIAN

Dr. Colin Ross speaks at his lecture, put on by UMass Amherst Chapter of Psi Chi, the National Honor Society for Psychology Students, yesterday.

Tocco addresses Card degree

TOCCO from page 1

heights that it wants in order to serve the economic needs necessary to go forward."

Members of the faculty were not as optimistic about the direction the Board has taken, criticizing the current sabbatical policy, the anomaly in raises and the Amherst 250 Plan, a program aimed at rebuilding and balancing the faculty by investing in key programs meant to advance teaching and research.

The rising cost of higher education has prompted talks between the state government and the Board of Trustees to possibly provide two free years in community college for students. Tocco said that several billion dollars of the new budget is expected to be distributed from the state government toward higher education.

"This debate is at the feet of the governor and the legislature as to how they're going to make this affordable. There are several ways they can do it, all of them cost money," Tocco said.

Graduate students raised concerns that this year's commencement will be focused on Andrew Card's honorary degree as opposed to the graduates and that the ceremony could result in violence. Tocco said he would not call for a special session of the Board of Trustees to revoke the plan. Behavior at the commencement is up to the students and should not be influenced by Andrew Card, according to Tocco.

Professor of Sociology, Dan Clawson believes Card does not meet the "high ethical standards" nor "exemplify the ideals of the University of Massachusetts," qualifications the University has set for granting honorary degrees.

"I deeply regret that the Chancellor, President, and Board of Trustees have chosen to make the Graduate Commencement a bitter and partisan event. Those of us who are opposed to the war in Iraq, and to the deception of the U.S. public, have no choice but to speak out, and to act to prevent this dishonor to UMass, its students, faculty, alumni, and friends," Clawson said.

Several students and faculty also brought up the diversity problem on campus.

"The record on diversity has several characteristics. I'm certain that the leadership here on campus is dealing with this question and I'll meet with them to see what they're planning on this issue. And if we can do better we must," Tocco said.

The chairman also spoke of the dire need for capital investment for the infrastructure of the UMass Amherst campus. Renovating buildings with condemned floors and the need for what the administration calls "New Dirt" will dig deep into already dwindling capital dollars. Tocco did express trust in the new state legislative government to provide funds for the projects.

"The good news is that I think we've made some traction on that quest. This governor is the first governor I've worked with that understands without question the link between the University and the future," Tocco said. "I'm optimistic that leaders in the Senate and the House have for the first time looked at the University as an investment account as they build their budget and this is the first House budget that has actually upped the ante in investing in the University system."

Preacher met with debate

PREACHER from page 1

Open Air Outreach's demonstration at UMass was a random stop on their way to New Brunswick, and was unrelated to the sex festival.

Victoria Lewis held a sign that read "know the God of the Bible" and "trust Jesus."

"We heard that this was a big campus in this area and we thought we would stop here on our way to New Brunswick," said Victoria Lewis.

Lewis preached a hard line interpretation of the Bible making comments about God as "having infinite power, infinite wisdom and that we're all created out of his image." He responded to those who shouted claiming they were "good people," that nobody was good in the eyes of God and listed all offenses against the "laws" of God.

"Nobody is good in the eyes of God," said Lewis, "unless you follow the laws. If you've broken one point in the law then you are cursed. The law is good but it doesn't save us."

Lewis said the only way to be saved from this was to repent sins through Jesus. "I love everybody" he said, "God loves everybody, but that does not mean he accepts the actions of everyone."

When asked to explain the evidence for these things being true he said "God's not on trial here, you are. Many of you guys spend your time on playing X-Box and masturbation, but you should take an hour out of your life and read the scriptures."

Lewis's view of religion was strict and damning. Holding a Bible in his hand he said, "you don't have your whole life. You don't know when you're gonna die and stand before God. It's a blessing if you follow and obey my commands. But if you commit all kinds of fornication and fulfill the lusts of your heart, if you sew to your flesh-sin, you will reap death and destruction."

"This is heresy; you're almost as eloquent as Hitler," one young woman shouted in response.

Lewis's preaching drew a lot of attention, most of it negative.

"A lot of you guys have a sewer in your heart and that's why you've got a toilet in your mouth," declared Lewis. He repeatedly responded to swearing by saying, "watch your language, there are ladies present."

Lewis's condemnation of gays and lesbians caused a disgusted response. At one point two young women embraced in a defiant kiss directly in front of him. Lewis later recited his "homosexual song," with the words, "it's not OK to be gay, it's not OK to be perverted, it's not in your DNA, so repent and be converted." A woman in the crowd shouted back, "It's in my DNA."

Although most of the crowd seemed to despise what Lewis had to say, many found it irresistible to watch the spectacle.

"I think he's a nut," said one observer, "but it's really entertaining and I don't believe anything he says."

One passer-by, then joined the crowd which at one point swelled to more than 30 people. Many students were calling friends on their cell phones and taking pictures. One student made a pentagram out of sticks in front of Lewis, and placed dandelions on the star. Lewis was gradually stepping back from the crowd, until he was almost standing in the shrubs. People said that he was threatened.

"I'm not threatened," he said, "I'm standing here and you guys seem a little upset."

When asked how he responded to all the criticism thrown at him, Lewis said,

"I welcome the challenge, I welcome criticism and I always expect an open dialogue."

Wes Rahn can be reached at wrahn@student.umass.edu

Thinking of a Teaching Career?

Master of Arts in Teaching (MAT)

A 12-month graduate program for aspiring teachers that blends theory and practice and features:

- Endorsement for teacher licensure in elementary or secondary education
- Field experiences in Boston public school classrooms
- Supervised student teaching placements
- Instruction from Northeastern faculty and master public school teachers

For more information, visit www.education.neu.edu or call toll free 877.6NU.SPCS (877.668.7727).

Northeastern

BRUEGGER'S BAKED FRESH DUO

We've never done anything halfway. Until now.

— Choose any two for only $6.29 —
(Soup & Sandwich Soup & Salad, Sandwich & Salad)

FREE WiFi!

Amherst
170 N. Pleasant Street
413-253-5713

We accept the OCMP card!

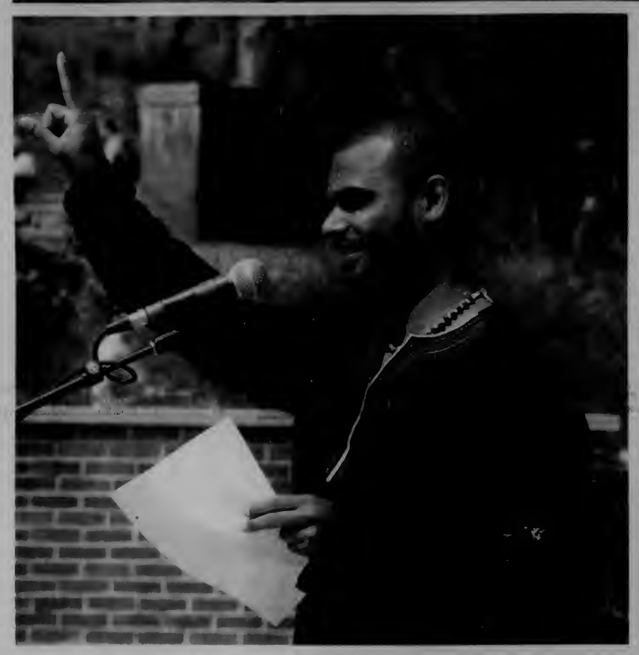
WITH THIS COUPON
$4.99 Big Grande Classic Breakfast Wrap with a Medium Coffee
PLU 503 One coupon per person. Not valid with any other offer. Only original coupons will be accepted. Prices do not include tax. Valid at all participating locations. Expires 5-31-07.

WITH THIS COUPON
$1.99 For a bagel with cream cheese and a small coffee
PLU 499 One coupon per person. Not valid with any other offer. Only original coupons will be accepted. Prices do not include tax. Valid at all participating locations. Expires 5-31-07.

WITH THIS COUPON
$1.00 OFF Any Bruegger's DUO
PLU 502 One coupon per person. Not valid with any other offer. Only original coupons will be accepted. Prices do not include tax. Valid at all participating locations. Expires 5-31-07.

WITH THIS COUPON
$4.99 DOZEN
PLU 619 One coupon per person. Not valid with any other offer. Only original coupons will be accepted. Prices do not include tax. Valid at all participating locations. Expires 5-31-07.

Tuesday's immigration rally



THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, MAY 4, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it"
-Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Veterans at UMass

The presence of veterans at the University of Massachusetts is remarkably understated. We are a group that is seemingly overlooked, ignored, and viewed as an afterthought. At a school where a preponderance of affirmative-action protected groups exercise unprecedented rights, privileges, political power, and unfettered access to the highest levels of the administration, the veterans at UMass struggle to acquire a budget for a group that works tirelessly to represent their interests, Veterans and Service Members Association (VASMA). This is a shame that should garner the interest of top administrators and faculty. Unfortunately, that is not the case, and our veterans at UMass are left without adequate resources for counseling and Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD), with no housing community to call their own, and with very little support from the administration for any of our initiatives. The financial aid office specifically has been incompetent in their handling of veterans' financial aid packages, telling me personally that when veterans fill out the FAFSA it is a "pain in the ass" for the school. Financial Aid has been notorious for not properly documenting and filing discharge status paperwork, which is a crucial step for veterans to get their financial need properly assessed in terms of being a student who is no longer on active duty.

Brad DeFlumeri

Then there is the ineffectual position of Veterans Liaison, which can be a critical agent of positive change and facilitation when filled by a competent and caring administrator. Here at UMass, this position is ceremonially filled by Assistant Dean of Students Eileen Stewart. Go around and ask some of the veterans at UMass about their experiences with Dean Stewart's office and the responses you receive will boggle the mind. Lost paperwork, missing G.I. Bill payments, and a blatant inability and lack of desire to help veterans are just a few of the myriad problems with the person currently in charge of reaching out to veterans.

If UMass is serious about promoting social justice and equality, then it will get serious about supporting all veterans on campus.

In striking contrast, a preponderance of schools not located in Massachusetts could not be happier to fund and assist veterans groups and causes. Schools such as Old Dominion in Norfolk, Va. actively staff and fund veterans affairs offices, maintain veteran and military-related Web sites to assist in answering potential veteran questions, and engage in aggressive campaigns to bring more former servicemen to their campuses. On the contrary, at UMass veterans are treated to displays of "die-ins" during which political extremists "pretend" to be servicemen that are wounded to disparage the Bush Administration's presence in Iraq. If that's not enough, ROTC cadets in uniform are regularly harassed and greeted with anti-military slurs.

As left-leaning students shouted slurs at Andy Card during his recent speech here at UMass, I asked Chief of Police Barbara O'Connor why a double standard applied to the police enforcing the picketing code. That is, why should left-leaning students be able to shout down a school-sponsored speaker in protest, and in violation of the picketing code, when if minority groups on campus were protested against the outcry and legal fallout would be immense? Her response was the typical coward's line of "in the name of political discourse." There would certainly be a double standard present if a group of veterans wanted to protest the military's policy of allowing homosexuals to join, or if a group of veterans decided to protest and disrupt the festivities at Queerfest last week. I am willing to bet that the UMPD would not be able to charge the veterans as perpetrators of "hate crimes" fast enough.

Rather than supporting the causes of veterans on campus, the administration allows others to do their political bidding for them and tacitly consents by not enforcing certain policies. Rather than funding VASMA and supporting initiatives such as sending out school-sponsored care packages to UMass students in combat, which Vice Chancellor Michael Gargano refused to help pay for, the school is all too willing to turn a blind eye when veterans are made a mockery of by protestors rolling around on the floor. In fact, the school has a policy of forcing students who are currently in the military and called on by their service to deploy, to first withdraw from school. Should the student want to transition back into UMass after their tour of combat, he or she will have to re-apply as a new student as if they were not here in the first place.

Veterans are an indispensable and vital asset to our campus, bringing a unique mosaic of skills and offering hard-earned experience and perspective to a student population often accused of lacking maturity and rationality. Further alienating this vital group of students would work to everyone's disadvantage. If UMass is serious about promoting social justice and equality, then it will get serious about supporting all veterans on campus, not just those veterans who lead anti-war rallies and support leftist policies that align with the views of the Pioneer Valley and the faculty. Unfortunately, from observing the way that UMass treats its veterans, you would think they run the risk of veterans simply choosing to not come to UMass anymore. Come to think of it, maybe that is exactly what the administration wants.

Brad DeFlumeri is a UMass student and U.S. Navy veteran. He can be reached at bdeflume@student.umass.edu.

DO YOU LIKE TO DRAW COMICS?

THE COLLEGIAN NEEDS EDITORIAL COMIC ARTISTS FOR NEXT SEMESTER!

Send any work to collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

Who do we believe?

Andy Smith

For years, the question has remained the same: When are American forces going to be withdrawn from Iraq? The Democrats say should be sooner rather than later, while the Republicans say a full withdrawal cannot take place until Iraq has a stable, democratic government. It seems that every time President Bush appears on television, the message remains the same: the troops are seeing progress on the ground. The Democrats respond with, "Well, then why can't we leave?" This government is in the midst of one of the biggest congressional stalemates in our history.

With the Democrats taking up the majority in both the House of Representatives and the Senate, the legislative process has come to a screeching halt. Never has that been more evident than with the recent veto President Bush placed on the Democrat-led bill that set an Oct. 1 withdrawal date for troops in Iraq. According to the legislation, all troops would have been withdrawn six months later. The House then failed in creating the two-thirds majority votes that is needed to override a presidential veto. So, essentially, they are back where they started. The Democrats want a full troop withdrawal and the Republicans will not give it to them.

Normally, I would be furious about this, and writing this column to denounce everything related with the President. However, Tuesday night, I started to see this war from both sides. I attended George Sada's lecture on the war in Iraq and the War on Terror. Before that, the belief that Iraq was harboring weapons of mass destruction seemed farcical. But Sada, a retired Iraqi Air Force general, told otherwise. He told stories of how he had seen the weapons with his own eyes and how Saddam Hussein had them transported from Iraq to Syria in early 2003 because he anticipated an American invasion. According to Sada, the weapons were transported mostly by 18-wheelers because they only had two planes to work with.

Before this lecture I would have seriously doubted his accusations, but they were just too detailed to not believe. Who else would know when, how, and where the weapons were moved? It is amazing how one man can make a person question their views on a war.

Much to my dismay, some of Sada's lecture did come across as fabrication. For example, he spoke of an encounter he had with Hussein during the Gulf War. Apparently, Sada was responsible for 45 captured pilots during that war. When Saddam ordered the execution of said pilots, Sada spoke up against Hussein. Did Saddam seem like a man who would listen to reason?

Before this lecture I would have seriously doubted his accusations, but they were just too detailed to not believe.

Who really knows for sure?

The Sada lecture shed light on the idea that there may be two sides to this story. For years, there has been a universal belief that Iraq did not harbor weapons of mass destruction, but Sada proclaimed otherwise. Because American soldiers did not discover them, Bush has become arguably one of the most despised men in America. He proceeded to take down a dictator, completely dismantle the government, and attempt to rebuild it. He has said that the war will not end as long as he is in office. In turn, he now faces intense public backlash until at least 2008. Is it justified? I doubt we will ever find out. Until then, the American people will turn on the nightly news and hear about the latest casualties resulting from a war they are not sure they should be in.

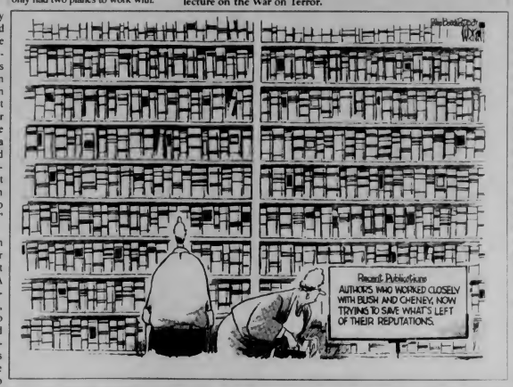
As hard as this is to confess, maybe Bush knew something we didn't. Maybe if he had gone in to Iraq earlier, taken down Hussein, and found weapons of mass destruction, we wouldn't be discussing if this war is right or wrong. However, that's not the case. Because of the timing of the invasion, the question remains: should it have happened at all? If the American intelligence is, as Sada calls it, "very, very good!" how did they not know that Saddam moved the weapons? Because this question will never get answered, the death tolls will continue to rise and the congressional stalemates will rage on.

The question will remain the same: who do you believe? Do you believe the Democrats who say they were fed misinformation by the administration? Do you believe the Republicans and Sada, who believe the cause is worth fighting for? It doesn't matter.

As long as the Democrats have the majority in Congress and the President is a Republican, we will not withdraw from Iraq. We will continue to fight and wonder who exactly is telling us the truth.

Andy Smith can be reached at ajsmith@student.umass.edu.

Iraqi general George Sada raised eyebrows this Tuesday with his lecture on the War on Terror.



Who created whom?

The "intellectuals" and "truly informed" personalities of today tell us that belief in God is a flimsy hypothesis which has no credibility on the grounds of reasoning. With this understanding, many people have proposed different theories regarding how religion and the belief in God were created by society. I, on the other hand, believe that those who reject the belief in God have no evidence for what they claim. In fact, I believe the evidence points in the opposite direction of what is commonly thought. So, is it really reasonable to think that the belief in a Creator is a myth or that religion was just cooked up by someone who might have wanted to exercise his power over people? Well, let's put these questions to the test by examining them with a closer eye.

Ariz Saleem

I always hear people say, "If I can't see God, then how can I believe in Him?" This shaky argument is surprisingly still the basis of thought for many atheists in the scientific community. Science is limited to the five senses. Therefore, it can never tell us anything about matters that are beyond sense perception. For example, questions of morality and human values are outside of the scope of science. It is a field that reveals a partial knowledge of our reality, but too many of us get fooled into thinking it is the sole criterion for truth. Since God is a being beyond sense perception, how can we use our senses as a tool for determining whether He exists or not?

Another common reason for opposing religion is that it is used as a tool for propaganda and a means to gather people under the flag of fear. By creating the notion of an after-life where the wrong-doers will be punished, one can control the behavior of the masses. This is hardly evidence of the creation of religion by society. First of all, this assumes that religions are fundamentally based around fear and it is because of this fear that people follow a religion and behave morally. This couldn't be further from the truth. Ask an adherent of any religion why they have faith. You will hardly ever hear "because I am scared." Talk to a Christian and they will tell you that love is what drives them towards religion rather than fear.

But does scientific evidence really point towards a universe free from the need of a Creator?

Besides, is fear the only way to get people to behave? Doesn't a person naturally feel good when he gives to the needy or does some other good action? So why does fear need to be used to propagate being good? If everyone decided not to help society and only look after personal interests, humanity would be doomed. I would argue that education could also be used as a means to rectifying behavior. One could teach the people that acting solely on self-interest will lead to the destruction of society as a whole. Education would be a better alternative than using fear as the tool. So why would anyone go through the trouble of creating a complex religious dogma?

We often try to think about how religions could have been created by people, but have we ever questioned this very thinking? Where did the atheistic and anti-religious movements of today come from? One driving factor was the past resistance of the Christian elites to scientific research which led to the prosecution of great people like Galileo. This divorcing of religion and science is what led many good-intended people to turn their backs on religion because of its closed-mindedness to new discoveries. The mistake these people made was that they threw the baby out with the bath water and rejected any notion of a Creator, whatsoever.

So here we are today witnessing this great divide between science and religion. But does the scientific evidence really point towards a universe free from the need of a Creator? The prominent and most heavily-backed theory regarding the origin of the universe is the big-bang theory. The theory of the universe being eternal has been completely disproven by science.

The big-bang theory states that there was a big explosion which caused time, matter, and space to come into existence. Prior to this bang, there was nothing. So, let's examine what's being said. There was absolutely nothing and then a bang causes the universe to come into existence. The question of the day is "can something come from nothing?" Have you ever seen a blob of nothingness flying 80 mph hit another blob of nothingness flying at 50 mph and something miraculously appears? Obviously, something had to have caused the bang – something outside of time, matter, and space; not physical but metaphysical, perhaps, a Creator or whatever name you would like to give it. Is this evidence or not? I'll let you decide.

Ariz Saleem is a UMass student and can be reached at asaleem@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

KEEP SEX ON THE LAWN

I'm writing in response to the Ed/Op piece entitled "A Shameful Event." I have two problems with the article. The first is the author appears to have no understanding of how public health campaigns are run. It is very common to bring information to the community. Rather than calling it low expectations of citizens, it is a response to decades of public health efforts, with the recognition that people frequently need prompting to make changes in their lives. It is also a way to reach people who aren't aware of a particular health problem. So please, take an Introductory course about health promotion. The University of Massachusetts has an excellent School of Public Health.

The second problem I have with the article is that it is trying to force one particular set of morals on the school and its students. Not everyone believes that sex should be limited to hushed conversations in darkened rooms. We all have different experiences with sex, and all have something to share with and learn from those around us. This group has chosen to focus on the fun aspects of sex (let's face it, sex is a lot of fun) which makes people more comfortable talking about a subject that might otherwise be to scary to talk about. Considering how many sexually transmitted diseases are on the rise currently, especially among people in their late teens and early twenties, the more accessible conditions are the better.

Eli McKenna-Weiss
Amherst, Mass.

ANOTHER VETERAN'S PERSPECTIVE

While reading Wednesday's editorial about the negative impacts of troop withdrawals from Iraq, I couldn't help but notice more than a few absurd conclusions that the writer drew, including the dissociation between the U.S. occupation and the immigration of Jihadists and extremists to Iraq, and comparison to the tragic ending of the Vietnam War – an ending that ultimately saved God knows how many American lives.

As everyone knows, U.S. troops are not the only ones being killed in Iraq. With back-page to no-page coverage, American media would have us all believe that the number of civilian casualties in Iraq is low. While this is clearly untrue, the fact of the matter is that U.S. troops are being targeted today more than ever. I urge the author, if he ever gets the chance, to take a drive down Route Michigan between Ramadi and Fallujah and see. Or if he's unlucky, like thousands of U.S. service members have been, experience one of the countless devastating improvised explosive devices put in place for one reason – and one reason alone – to kill Americans. It's easy for us as students to sit behind our desks and base our political opinions on what we read or what a professor rants about. But before you choose a side on the issue of a U.S. troop withdrawal, talk to someone who's been over there and stared down the business end of an AK-47, and find out what life in Iraq is truly like for our service members.

Every day U.S. Marines, soldiers, airmen and sailors are being targeted while Iraq is still trying to rebuild its infrastructure and organize a working government. The invasion of Iraq was first launched for all the right reasons. After our administration's failure to recognize the tumultuous nature of facilitating a transition from an autocracy to a democracy, failure to appoint an interim ruler, and failure to avoid a prolonged occupation the situation in Iraq began to rapidly decline. And now we are here, debating what to do with the 142,000 U.S. troops currently stationed in Iraq.

"Supporting a withdrawal doesn't mean supporting a retreat in which we tuck our tails between our legs and hang our heads in shame. It means supporting our troops and their families, as well as supporting an independent and sovereign Iraq, free of western influence to govern and police themselves.

To the author, the truth of the matter is that the U.S. did have something to do with Pol Pot coming to power in Cambodia, but it wasn't through the "power vacuum" the U.S. withdrawal supposedly created. It was through direct funding by the CIA and indirect U.S. funding funneled through China and Thailand. Please get your history straight before you twist facts to back the validity or an argument.

Sol Black
UMass Student
U.S. Marine Corps Sergeant

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, MAY 4, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ASC benefit concert rocks Van Meter hall

Talented student musicians join forces for a good cause

BY OLGA DESHCHENKO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The tables and chairs that usually furnish the basement of the Van Meter residence hall, a designated 24-hour study room, took part in a major transformation Wednesday night. Balloons, streamers, amps, guitars and drums replaced furniture as attendees of Central Cause, a benefit concert held for the Amherst Survival Center (ASC), poured into the room.

Over a dozen musicians made up of full bands, acoustic duos, solo performers and a cappella singers tightly packed the basement with talent. As more people gathered for the event, the bins set up for canned goods and clothing collection were filled with non-perishable food items and other donations.

Kicking off the benefit concert with a lively set that surprised the audience with its energy and impressive musical ability was Leaving London, a band that is just beginning their collective journey as musicians. The band mates only met last semester, through a random sequence of events that somehow involved ultimate Frisbee and drums on the hill. Leaving London got their chance to play in front of an audience at the benefit show.

"It was our first concert. We actually practiced just one time with our bass player," said singer and guitarist Sean Burns. "I really can't complain, the show was great!"

A hard act to follow, the band shook the crowd awake and served as a precursor to a night of good music. The boys signed off by thanking the audience for coming out for charity, and of course, threw in a compliment.

"You've been beautiful!" shouted guitarist Martin Legg.

Leaving London was followed by an acoustic duo: Faisal Abid and Matt Kane, who both sang, played guitar and keyboards. In between songs, Abid and Kane chatted and joked with the crowd, giving the basement a living room feel, full of friends and family. The duo also covered a song by the Decemberists, which was received well by the attendees. The performers finished their set with a song Abid had written just the night before. The duo made the atmosphere of the concert more relaxed and left the audience eager to hear more student performers.

A definite highlight of the night was the highly anticipated performance of the Dynamics, an a cappella group that did not rely on guitars and drums for entertainment. As if it were an intricate mechanism of instruments powered solely by the students' voices, the Dynamics delivered covers of songs by the Fray, Gnarls Barkley and the Postal Service. Complete with upbeat choreography, the group certainly delivered a crowd pleaser performance, as cheers and shouts of praise overwhelmed the room. The Dynamics also sold their CDs at the concert and donated one third of all sales to the ASC.

"I thought it was phenomenal," said attendee Kara Solomon. "I am really proud to say that these people are my close friends."

The students who worked hard to organize Central Cause were also welcomed on stage. Caroline Koch played guitar and sang in unison with other performers throughout the night. With the lights dimmed and all the seats taken, another student organizer Robby Vanasse settled down to play the acoustic guitar with a harmonica around his neck. His cover of Neil Young's "Heart of Gold" earned him the audience's undivided attention. Vanasse captivated the attendees until the very end of his set when the room erupted into a wave of applause and praise.

Another crowd favorite was

See BENEFIT on page 7

Leaving London played their first set at the Central Cause benefit concert. Guitarists Sean Burns and Martin Legg were excited to be a part of the charity event.

Alex Schwartz of the band Mcallister performed a duet with his girlfriend Jessica Gordon of the a cappella group The Dynamics at the ASC benefit concert. The couple was warmly welcomed by the excited crowd.

Robby Vanasse, a student who helped organize the event held for charity, impressed the audience of about 100 students with his cover of Neil Young's "Heart of Gold."

Bands reunite at Coachella Festival

BY GREG KOT
CHICAGO TRIBUNE

INDIO, Calif. — Reunions were the major theme of the three-day Coachella Valley Music and Arts Festival, which wrapped up its ninth year Sunday as one of the world's premiere music gatherings.

Despite scorching 100-plus-degree heat, more than 180,000 people from around the world attended the festival, which brought together long-dormant Rage Against the Machine, the Jesus and Mary Chain, Happy Mondays and Crowded House for performances. But it was hardly a nostalgic affair, as political overtones ran through a number of sets, and new bands such as Sweden's Peter, Bjorn and John, and Puerto Rico's Yeva established themselves as newcomers to be reckoned with.

Here are some highlights, and a few disappointments, from the front lines of this weekend's musical mecca in the desert...

SCARIEST SONGS

It was difficult not to shudder as psychedelic-rock pioneer Roky Erickson screamed the blues in songs rife with devils, beasts and ghosts — much like the ones that plagued him through decades of mental illness. Yet the Texas artist sounded in fine form as his remarkable comeback continued.

BEST NEWCOMER

Yeva, a nine-piece band from San Juan, proved there's still life in the rock en español movement by pouring on the polyrhythmic groove while horns brayed and guitars slashed a volatile blend of finesse and ferocity.

BEST POLITICAL RABBLE-ROUSING

Tie, between El-P, the Brooklyn rapper who channeled the anxiety of post-9/11 New York into a performance that was alternately hard-hitting and chilling, and Rage Against the Machine guitarist Tom Morello, in a solo set as the Nighwatchman. "Songs like this, days like this ... are a reaction against illicit and immoral wars ... torture, and the rollback of civil liberties," Morello said during a set heavy on protest songs.

BEST CAMEO

Perry Farrell and the Coup's Boots Riley joined Morello for a rousing version of Woody Guthrie's "This Land Is Your Land," focusing on the song's lesser-known protest verses. These transformed

See COACHELLA on page 7

Get the Led Out to perform in Noho

Led Zeppelin cover band recreates classic rock 'n' roll

BY ZACHARY DEL NERO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The crushing power chords, unstoppable riffs and overall mysticism of Led Zeppelin defined an era of rock music. Rising from the embers of the legendary Yardbirds outfit, Led Zeppelin fused blues, rock 'n' roll and folk into a sound unlike any other, creating the foundation for the hard rock swagger of the 1970s. Jimmy Page's manic soloing and Robert Plant's melodic shriek became benchmarks for the genre.

Led Zeppelin churned out their first three albums in an amazing span of only two years, birthing classics such as "Communication Breakdown," "Whole Lotta Love," "Ramble On," and the "Immigrant Song," to name a few. When their fourth self-titled album was released and the epic "Stairway to Heaven" unleashed upon the world, there was simply no doubting the power of the Zeppelin.

For those who ache to hear Led Zeppelin in all their live and loud glory, the wishful thinking ends this weekend. Get the Led Out, performing this Saturday night at Pearl Street, is the current undisputed tribute band to the gods of metal. Their aim: recreate Led Zeppelin's aural achievements as accurately as possible. GTLO, as fans affectionately refer to the group, was born out of the Philadelphia music scene three years ago. Members include vocalist Paul Sinclair, guitarist Paul Hammond, guitarist Jimmy Marchiano, bassist Paul Piccari, drummer Adam Ferraioli and keyboardist Andrew Lipke.

GTLO is more than just a local gig; each musician plays on the professional level and comes from a rich musical background. Sinclair has been a close friend of Aerosmith's vocal icon Steven Tyler since his teenage years.

"When I was 17-years-old, I drove up to Sunapee to find the Tyler family. After I met them, they went and told Steven there was a kid outside who was definitely a big fan. They asked him if he would go talk to me and blow my mind," Sinclair remembered with a smile, "and that's exactly what he did. Steven Tyler and Robert Plant are the reasons I sing in a band. I locked myself in my bedroom for four years with classic records and just screamed along."

Similarly, Ferraioli's obsession with percussion began the first time he heard Bonham's bombastic playing.

"It all started when I heard my first Led Zeppelin record," said Ferraioli. "That's how I wanted to play the drums!"

A defining moment in the history of GTLO came in a blast from the past when a high school friend of Sinclair's sent him an e-mail about an upcoming charity event involving none other than the renowned Jimmy Page. Apparently, Page

See ZEPPELIN on page 7

On Saturday GTLO will bring the Led Zeppelin experience to Pearl Street Nightclub with a set of classic rock hits.

Zeppelin backs tribute band

Legendary guitarist Jimmy Page has come out and said he is impressed with Get the Led Out. The cover band members fell in love with the music of Led Zeppelin the first time they heard Zeppelin's album.

ZEPPELIN from page 6

had seen a video of GTLO on the Web. More than that, he was impressed. Would they like to play at an upcoming event?

"There is nothing more exciting than hearing that Jimmy Page likes your sound," said Sinclair.

Plans were made and Hammond, a collaborator with Sinclair both on and off GTLO, picked out a customized Martin acoustic guitar as a birthday present for Page, complete with the legendary Zoso symbol inlaid on the fifth fret.

"Page was blown away," he happily recalled.

Since their recognition by Page and subsequent nationwide bookings, GTLO has been hailed for delivering what has been sought for so long: a sonically inspired rendition of Led Zeppelin's extensive catalog from their eponymous debut to "Physical Graffiti." GTLO's renditions of Led Zeppelin's tracks are more faithful to the original recordings than were the live performances of the original quartet.

The addition of back-up vocalists and an extra guitarist on the stage creates the complex overdubs that four musicians can only achieve in a studio.

"We play the songs you know and love from the albums and do them justice," Sinclair declared. "It's all about recreating the original cuts on stage. I want you to sing along with me!"

Backed by Page's word, one that any rock fan knows to respect, Get the Led Out are considered the closest today's ears can get to the true Led Zeppelin experience short of listening to the original recordings.

The band will perform at the Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton this Saturday, May 5 at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $17.50 in advance and $20 at the door. Led Zeppelin fanatics and classic rock listeners alike should not miss this performance.

Zachary Del Nero can be reached at zdelnero@student.umass.edu.

Students gather for music and charity

Eric Greene helped lead the benefit event to a close Wednesday night as he played his guitar in his trademark green sweater and pajama pants.

BENEFIT from page 6

the acoustic guitar performance of Alex Schwartz, who is a part of the band Mcallister. Schwartz joked that he felt lonely without his band mates on stage with him, but still managed to single handedly rock the crowd. His ease and comfort with the microphone revealed a sense of confidence, an indication that Schwartz is a seasoned veteran when it comes to stage presence. Mcallister's CDs were also available for purchase, and like the Dynamics, the band passed on a portion of the sale proceeds to the ASC. Schwartz will be opening for Parker House Theory at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton next Thursday; only this time, he will be joined by the rest of Mcallister on stage.

Dressed in a sweater and a pair of pajama pants, Eric Greene urged the audience to "hug your super best friends," as he played the guitar and sang. By the end of Greene's set, daylight was a thing of the distant past. As the time crept up closer to midnight, students sat around the stage huddled in small groups of friends, taking in the music of the talented lineup. By the time the last performers prepared to close the event, the hins of collected food and clothing had reached their full capacity.

"I volunteer at the Amherst Survival Center," said student Elizabeth Braley. "I think that this event was awesome, it is a really important organization to support."

Central Cause drew a crowd of about a 100 students and raised roughly $300 in addition to food and clothing for the ASC. The student organizers of the concert were thrilled with the outcome.

"It was an absolute success," said Vanasse, who along with Caroline Koch and Regina Parkinson, was responsible for setting up an exceptional night of music for charity.

Olga Deshchenko can be reached at odeshche@student.umass.edu

LCD wins best set of weekend

COACHELLA from page 6

the song from a declaration into a challenge, one that questions just whose land it really is, and why.

WORST CAMEO

Actress Scarlett Johansson somehow got the call to sing backing harmonies with the Jesus and Mary Chain on "Just Like Honey," and ended up flubbing the assignment.

COOLEST ANTI-FASHION STATEMENT

Gillian Welch and David Rawlings looked ready to step onto the stage of the Grand Ol' Opry in their matching rhinestone outfits. They further enhanced the vintage Nashville mood with a sassy version of the Johnny and June Carter Cash hit "Jackson."

SONG OF THE WEEKEND

The Swedish trio Peter, Bjorn and John performed "Young Folks," a melody that swept through the Internet last year and has been used in several television ads and shows. Each component of the song was loudly cheered as it was introduced: the trip-hop beat, the bubbling bass line, the co-ed harmonies and, best of all, the whistled melody line.

SET OF THE WEEKEND

LCD Soundsystem stole the Red Hot Chili Peppers' thunder in dueling sets on Saturday night. LCD received the wildest crowd response of the festival – that is, until Rage Against the Machine's closing-night performance — with a meld of mirror-ball beats, rock dynamics and emotionally intense lyricism that belied singer-producer James Murphy's reputation as a wise guy.

MOST DISAPPOINTING SET

Perry Farrell could run for mayor of Los Angeles and have a fighting chance, but his new band, Satellite Party, is nothing special. The songs paled next to "Stop," which was the one Jane's Addiction song performed.

STRANGEST SIGHT

A tossup between whatever that was Bjork plopped atop her head (some kind of magic mushroom, with dangling roots?) and the towering heehive hairdo sported by U.K. singer Amy Winehouse.

TOURISM RUN AMOK

Winehouse, again. She's got a terrific voice, but her slavish homage to Motown, Memphis, Jamaica and other '60s and '70s centers of soul music left one wondering if she was little better than a karaoke act.

The Swedish trio Peter, Bjorn and John might not have had the best set at this year's Coachella Festival, but they did perform the best song.

YANKEE CANDLE
a passion for fragrance

At the Yankee Candle Company, Inc. we care about our employees! If you are looking for a full- or part-time summer opportunity where you can be recognized for your hard work, in a friendly and fun environment, then Yankee Candle makes perfect scents!

We make perfect scents.

Seasonal Candlemakers

We offer a competitive salary, free fitness facility, and a generous employee discount!

To apply, visit us online at: www.yankeecandle.com or in person at: 102 Christian Lane, Whately, MA.

EOE/AA

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
Schedule for Fri 5/4/07 - Thurs 5/10/07
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
cinemark.com

Remember when you felt like this?
Find it again...
UMASS
Haigis Mall bus stop•10:00 am
Amherst College
Converse Hall bus stop
10:20 am
for the FREE Sunday shuttle to Dwight Chapel
Dwight Chapel
885 Federal Street Belchertown, MA 01007 • 413 256 8089
www.dwightchapel.org • Pastor Emmanuel Hogg
We're growing in Christ - come grow with us!

CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Loves UMASS
NEW UMASS STUDENT ASSOCIATE MEMBERSHIP
Just $75 allows you to play for half price until the end of next Fall.
Also Don't Miss our Spring Special:
Every Monday and Tuesday, 9 Holes Just $10
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE – JUST MINUTES FROM UMASS
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
www.cherryhillgolf.org

get ready
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Budding rivalry in the making

SOFTBALL from page 10

Sortino said the Rams are a well-armored team – with plenty of weapons in their arsenal.

"They're going to have solid pitching, kids that can really put the ball in play and they'll always play good defense," she said.

Fordham's aces are freshman Nicole Ayres and senior Sara Kinney, who have records of 15-4 and 14-8, respectively. The only pitchers to start more than eight games, they've combined for 298 strikeouts, while allowing 144 hits and 129 runs.

The team's best hitters are Allison Iwarowski and Jessica Weckenman. They both maintain a .386 batting average.

Iwarowski, a junior, has 64 hits on the year with 24 RBIs. She has also belted seven home runs. Weckenman, a sophomore, has 32 hits on the year and 17 RBIs.

Sortino believes her players are ready to match up against the team from the Bronx. She feels this readiness is the product of hard work and dedication that has trickled down from the top ranks – captains Candice Molinari and Amanda Acampora.

"They are involved and very proactive captains. They don't wait for me to say something – they're ahead of me," Sortino said. "I think the team typifies their leadership. I think that they're quiet, consistent, in your face when they have to be in your face, determined and all over it and I think that if you take the same words, it describes the team."

This is the same team who held firm and picked up a 1-0 win over Boston College on Tuesday.

With the game locked in a scoreless pitchers' duel, junior Stacy Cullington came to the plate in the sixth inning looking to get things going.

The second baseman – who leads the squad with 14 homers – roped a double into the gap in right-center and was subbed out of the basepaths for senior Jackie Teman.

Junior Lauren Proctor then punched a ball up the middle, bringing Teman home for the first and only run of the day.

Cullington and Proctor have been two of the team's premier hitters this season and Sortino says it is great to have them back-to-back in the lineup. She is quick to mention, however, that wins are the result of a team – not a group of individuals.

"I feel really good about our batters, one through nine. I don't think this is the year where if three or four people in one part of the order don't do something, God help us until the next time they come around," she said.

The Minutewomen will have to continue to be Sortino's best nine and not her nine best if they want to be successful this weekend and remain tops in the A-10 standings.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu. Log on to the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass sports.

BRIAN HEFFRON/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore ace Brandice Balschmiter was 4–0 last season against Fordham in three starts and one relief appearance.

UM looks to make up ground in A-10

BASEBALL from page 10

UMass hasn't been as dangerous at the dish with its .256 team average and .336 on base percentage, but the Minutemen have an ERA (5.28) more than a full run lower than Richmond – and that number has dropped steadily as of late.

These teams met three times last season in Richmond, Va., with the Spiders winning two in a wild series. Richmond scored 34 runs on 41 hits in the series, and UMass wasn't far behind, crossing the plate 26 times on 36 hits.

The Minutemen dropped Game 1 of the series, 15-10, as the Spiders pounded out 15 hits. Richmond trailed in that game, 7-1, but exploded for 10 runs in the seventh to register the victory. UMass reliever Beau Hodges allowed eight runs in 2 ⅓ innings, but only two were earned.

Interestingly, the Spiders scored 10 runs without the benefit of an extra base hit – using seven singles, two walks and two hit batsmen to do the damage.

The second game was just as strange, as the Minutemen failed to parlay their eight-run outburst to start the game into an easy victory. Richmond scored six runs in the first two innings to get right back into it. Trailing 9-6 with three at-bats left, the Spiders scored one run in each of the last three frames to send the game into extra innings.

Five consecutive batters reached in the top of the tenth for the Minutemen, and they pushed two runs across for the 11-9 win. Ryan Franczek enjoyed a monster day, stroking a grand slam and reaching base four times. Bryan Adamski went 2-for-6 at the plate and registered the win on the mound, pitching three strong innings in relief.

Riggi and Mahoney enjoyed a huge series, combining to go 10-for-23 at the plate, with eight runs scored, nine RBIs and six walks.

UMass coach Mike Stone and the rest of the Minutemen will have to do better in containing those two if they want better success this time around against the Spiders.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu.

KRISTI FRANTZIS/COLLEGIAN

Junior Jim Cassidy has won five consecutive decisions and leads the team with a 3.15 ERA and a .241 opponent's batting average.

Defense a focus for Sortino and Co.

DEFENSE from page 10

left a void at shortstop.

Sophomore Samantha Salato started the year at shortstop, but eventually moved to right field, leaving the position open for freshman Whitney Williams.

Williams' 14 errors lead the team, but her athleticism has overshadowed her rookie mistakes. Against GW, Williams snared an errant throw to second on an attempted steal, catching the ball on the third-base side and reaching back to make the tag.

"I thought that was incredible instincts," Sortino said of the play. "You don't teach that stuff. I think she's going to be a great shortstop."

Catcher Jessica Serio has also been a key to the Minutewomen's defensive improvement. Last year's catcher KJ Kelley graduated with Stefanoni (both are still with the team in various roles), and the position was the biggest question mark coming into 2007.

Serio has held her own, however. A third baseman by trade, she is still learning how to catch pitchers Brandice Balschmiter and Bailey Sanders, but her fielding has given Sortino one less thing to worry about.

The freshman has been solid unshakeable behind the plate, fielding bunts, throwing out runners and making tags at the plate.

Brought on for her abilities with a bat in her hands, Serio has focused her energies on catching, which hurt her offensive numbers early on. Recently, she looks more comfortable both behind the plate and in the batter's box.

"I think she gets better everyday," Sortino said. "The kid's done a fabulous job getting it done behind the plate. She's really given us great consistency back there, and her offense is starting to come around. She's finally comfortable with what she's doing defensively, and it frees her up to put the other side of her game [together]."

Asked if she was satisfied with the improvement the team has made, Sortino insisted there is more to be done.

"I never will [meet my expectations] unless we're fielding 1.000, so that's never going to happen," Sortino said. "I'm really satisfied with the amount of energy and intensity we take to defense. Everyday we field balls in the infield, in the outfield and on the mound. We've got great focus and determination, and that's all you can ask for."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

BRIAN HEFFRON/COLLEGIAN

After her transition from shortstop to second base, sophomore Stacy Cullington has committed one error in her last 17 games.

UMass in N.C. for A-10 Championships

TRACK AND FIELD from page 10

Seniors Manny Harris-Lopes and James Godinho have been two of the most consistent performers on the men's team. Both have been consistent point scorers with Harris-Lopes contributing to sprints, and Godinho competing in both the high jump and the 400-meter race.

The men's team is rated very highly in the relay races. The 4x100 relay team, made up of Manny Harris-Lopes, Nathan Barksdale, Ian Hackney and Brian Miller, finished in first place last week and improved each week as they gained experience.

The 4x400 squad consists of Manny Harris-Lopes, Andrew O'Donnell, Nathan Barksdale and James Godinho. O'Brien expects both squads to give a great performance this week, as they ranked in the top four in the conference.

Freshman standouts Brian Miller and Tyler Cotto have also helped the Minutemen this season. Both rank in the top 10 in the A-10 – Miller in the high jump and Cotto in the high hurdles.

The women's team does not feature the same depth across the board, but the team does feature a few standouts that will look to represent the Minutewomen.

Freshman thrower Lisa Wilson is attending her first conference meet, competing in the hammer throw, the discus and the shot put. She ranks eighth in the hammer, fourth in the discus and 12th in the shot put.

"If she just allows herself to do what she's capable of doing, sometimes people try too hard in the throwing events" LaFreniere said. "She is a freshman – she's learning. She's doing very well, and I think this will be an exciting time for her."

Junior distance runner Christina DeRosa is the most consistent point scorer for the women's team this year, specializing in the 5,000-meter run.

At the A-10s, she will compete in the 10,000-meter run. She has been preparing for the event all season by competing in both the 1,500- and 5,000-meter runs at all previous meets, as well as training for a serious distance regiment. The 10,000 meters is not normally run at a regular season meet, but coach LaFreniere believes DeRosa is better suited to the 10,000 meters.

"Christina doesn't have a lot of explosive speed, but she's able to maintain a high speed for a long time, so she's actually stronger in the [10,000 meters]," LaFreniere said. "I think she will qualify for the ECAC's in the [10,000 meters] off of this meet."

Graduate student Mary Serdakowski will run the 400- and 100-meter hurdles in addition to competing in the 4x100 relay. She has made great strides over the course of the season, and now ranks fourth in both hurdles events.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Maroon and White has eyes on Metro Cup at ECACs

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

As the end of the season draws closer, the Massachusetts rowing team looks to add to their historic season by recording their sixth straight Metro Cup at the ECAC Championships.

Last year at the ECACs, the Minutewomen finished first with 76 points. The Maroon & White finished well ahead of second place Buffalo, which had 58 points.

At this year's regatta, two opponents to watch out for are Bucknell and Rhode Island. Massachusetts fell at the hands of URI, as the Rams beat UMass in Kingston, R.I., to take the Yankee Cup. Also, Bucknell has faced URI earlier in the year and the Rams knocked off the Bison to get the victory at the Resolute Cup Regatta in Kingston.

The fact that URI has beaten UMass and that Bucknell has beaten the Rams normally would not bode well for the Minutewomen. However, the Maroon and White are coming off of a narrow victory in the Atlantic 10 Conference Championships, a field that included Rhode Island.

UMass coach Jim Dietz has a particular interest in beating the Rams, a conference foe, as well. The coach admitted that URI represents one of the Minutewomen's biggest rivals.

"We're really looking forward to getting another crack at URI," Dietz said. "I think that would do a lot for our program if we could come on and get back at them."

Dietz and Co. are looking to repeat their success from last year. In last year's ECACs, the Minutewomen put the hurt on the Rams in multiple races. The UMass Varsity Eight boat finished three seconds ahead of URI, and the Second Novice Eight boat held the largest margin of victory over their conference foes, beating the Rams by more than 11 seconds.

The Minutewomen will have a different look this weekend, however. Dietz switched around the Varsity Eight boat, replacing junior Amanda Mawn and senior Elizabeth Hayashida with sophomore Haley Fitzgerald and junior Rachael Nealer. Dietz believes that this new dynamic will give the Minutewomen an added charge going into the weekend.

"We've added a little bit more power to the boat," said Dietz. "We've changed the rigging a little bit and we're looking for an impressive weekend."

Mother Nature has again hampered the Minutewomen, as the Connecticut River's water level is still too high to safely practice on. Instead of the sound of oars moving in and out of the water, the team has had to settle for the sound of erg machines – the indoor rowing machines that the team frequently uses for on-land training.

Also with training comes the recurring injury factor, and UMass has been no stranger to that this season. Junior Stephanie Rist of one of the Varsity Four boats has an injured thumb.

Senior Karalyn Walk replaces sophomore Karen Plevock – out with a knee injury – in the second Varsity Eight boat. Walk usually rows with the Varsity Four.

Even with the bleak weather conditions expected this weekend, Dietz still remains hopeful about the outlook of this coming weekend.

UMass won the last five straight ECAC titles and was ranked as high as second in the Mid-Atlantic region by the NCAA Division I Rowing Committee during that span. The Minutewomen have high expectations heading into Saturday's races.

However, Worcester is a familiar stomping ground for the women of UMass, and coach Dietz believes that the team will be relatively at ease.

"Racing in Worcester is kind of like racing at home for us," Dietz said. "So we're looking forward to it. A lot of the girls are from the Worcester-Shrewsbury Area and we will have a lot of fans there this weekend."

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

Congratulations Graduates!

Alumni "Fare" For Graduating Seniors

To celebrate your upcoming graduation, your UMass Amherst Alumni Association invites you to Memorial Hall for...

a FREE GIFT,
free Career information,
a DEMO of the ALUMNI DIRECTORY,
a chance to win $1000,
and a few SNACKS to get you through exams.

ALUMNI Association

Monday, May 7 through Thursday, May 10
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.

You were You are UMASS • UMassAlumni.com

SUMMER JOBS

Are you a creative, energetic, and nurturing person? Would you enjoy spending the summer in a beautiful natural environment working with children ages 5-13? YMCA Camp Norwich, just 20 minutes from Northampton, is now hiring Counselors, Lifeguards, and Instructors for Nature Study, Arts & Crafts, Athletics, Boating, Wood Working, Ceramics, and Music.

Call the Camp Registrar or stop by the HRYMCA for a camp brochure and camp staff application.

Hampshire Regional YMCA
286 Prospect Street
Northampton, MA 01060
413-584-7086 • www.hrymca.org

May 4-May 10
amherst cinema
IRAQ IN FRAGMENTS
Fri-Sat, Mon, Wed: 5:00, 9:50
Sun: 9:50, Tue, 5:00, 9:30, Thu: 5:00
AFTER THE WEDDING
Daily: 2:00, 4:30, 6:50, 9:20
THE NAMESAKE
Daily: 2:20, 4:45, 7:15, 9:40
THE HOAX
Fri, Mon, Wed: 2:40, 7:30
Sat-Sun: 7:30, Tue & Thu: 2:40
FREE SPIRITS
Special Show!
Sun 5/6: 4:00
2007 ACADEMY AWARD NOMINATED SHORTS Sat: 2:00 Tues: 7:00
JANUS FILMS New 35mm Prints!
KNIFE IN THE WATER
Thu 5/3: 7:00, Sun 5/6: 2:00
28 AMITY STREET (413) 253-2547
www.AmherstCinema.org

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

	3	9				8	5
		8	3		4	6
6	4						3	1
			4	2	3
				8
			1	5	6
8	6						9	3
		7	9		8	4
	9	4				1	7

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Preferred
7 Cuts short
11 Star Wars letters
14 Italian cheese
15 Twofold
16 Moving camera shot
17 Acapulco pals
18 Trying hard
20 Cousteau garb
22 Keepsake
23 Elegance of form
25 Map in a map
26 Quantity of cookies
30 __ down (held up)
32 West Point sch
33 Mule heir
34 Poet devil
38 Quantum
39 Brimless hat
41 Bangkok resident
42 Monkey munch
44 Large vase
45 Chance to play
46 Spider's parlor
48 Locked up
49 Send in payment
52 "The Sheik of __" (1921 song)
54 Tombstone inscription
56 Part of NRC
61 Unisex do
63 Bombshell's color?
64 World Series mo.
65 Gender-biased suffix
66 Sought mercy
67 Quaker pronoun
68 Thing done
69 Bedecks

DOWN
1 Bird's crop
2 Abode
3 Overlook
4 Sinks in the middle
5 Sufficient to meet a need
6 Boot Camp negative
7 Asner and Murrow
8 Eggnog spice
9 Challenge
10 More icky
11 Short drives
12 "The David Comedy" poet
13 Gold track
19 Vengeful feud
21 Prohibited
24 Triumph over
26 Rhizome
27 On the Atlantic
28 Fed
29 Volume
31 Version of "Damn Yankees"
35 Goon
36 Have a heart
37 Female red deer
40 Of a city
43 Wrote music
47 Female surfer
48 Rode a bike
49 Transplant as a plant
50 Geological division
51 Like a lamb sauce
53 Defensive tackle Smith
55 Window unit
57 Company emblem
58 Cal Tech grad
59 Port of Yemen
60 Some wines
62 Conducted

IRON HORSE ENTERTAINMENT GROUP PRESENTS
GET THE LED OUT
The American Led Zeppelin
SAT. MAY 5 • 8:30 PM/DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM - BALLROOM
BANG CAMARO
plus Hooray For Earth, Nor Whale
SAT. MAY 5 • 8:30 PM/DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM - CLUBROOM
DARK STAR ORCHESTRA
FRI. MAY 11 • 8:30 PM/DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM - BALLROOM
BRETT DENNEN, ALO
plus Lucas Reynolds of Blue Merle
SAT. MAY 12 • 8:30 PM/DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM - BALLROOM
Pearl Street Nightclub, 10 PEARL ST, NORTHAMPTON
WIN TICKETS!
E-mail your name & favorite band to streetteam@iheg.com
TO PURCHASE TICKETS OR FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL
WWW.IHEG.COM or 413-586-8686

Quote of the Day

"I'm like a duck: calm above the water, and paddling like hell underneath."

-Fred Shero

Paul By Billy O'Keefe

Welcome To Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shalek

(Nice rug.)
(Thanks.)
(Hmm, I need...)
(Hey, super trackers are concerned. You're throwing too much to mourn.)
(Thanks.)
(Sniff)
(Sniff)
(Sniff

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, MAY 4, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen prepare for home stretch

Fordham, La Salle in town for final weekend of regular season

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This weekend may add ingredients to a rivalry that has been cooking the past few years between Massachusetts and Fordham.

UMass (30-12-1, 14-0 Atlantic 10) will begin a four-game weekend today when it takes on the Rams (36-16, 14-2) at 3 p.m., the first round of a two-game set. The teams play again tomorrow at noon.

The Maroon and White conclude the weekend with a doubleheader against La Salle (15-20, 7-8 A-10), Sunday at noon.

Fordham is the second-best team in the A-10 and is chasing UMass for the top spot.

The Minutewomen are 29-2 all-time against Fordham, all under UMass coach Elaine Sortino. But she is not one to get caught up in any hype people may stir about a rivalry – she just wants her players to get on the field and play the Rams like any other team.

"I think the opponent right now is irrelevant in terms of our practice plan. Our game plan goes into more where we set up, what kind of pitch sequences we're using," she said. "The things we're doing in practice are the things the UMass team needs to do – things that are going to make us a better team.

"I feel like we've been perennially a front-runner in the Atlantic 10 and I believe that we're chased by every team in the conference," she continued. "I mean, it's pretty much a big game for every conference opponent we have, so it doesn't matter what colors you're wearing – the rivalry is intense.

They come after us with everything they've got and we know we have a bull's eye on our back and we need to handle it."

Fordham has improved rapidly since joining the A-10 in 1996, having won 35 or more games each season since 2003. Prior to that, the Rams had not won more than 19 games since 1985 – they went 37-23 last season.

See SOFTBALL on page 8

BRIAN TEUTSCH/COLLEGIAN

Senior first baseman Amanda Morin and the Minutewomen welcome Fordham and La Salle to the UMass Softball Complex this weekend. With a win over the Rams, UMass clinches the top seed in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

Minutemen still in playoff chase

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With one of the elite teams in the Atlantic 10 coming to Amherst this weekend, it will be imperative for the Massachusetts baseball team to continue its hot streak to stay within striking distance for a postseason spot.

The Minutemen (17-18, 9-9 A-10) welcome conference foe Richmond (26-19, 14-4 A-10) to Earl Lorden Field today at 3 p.m. for the start of a three-game set this weekend. UMass has won five straight for the first time since May of 2003, and is currently tied for seventh place in the A-10. The top six teams earn a spot in this month's conference tournament.

The Spiders rank second in the conference, but they enter this series having lost three of their last four – all at home, and twice against Fordham. The Richmond pitching staff struggled in those four games, allowing 47 runs. Despite the recent slide, the Spiders are still one of only three teams in the conference with an overall winning record.

Strong pitching the past few weeks has led UMass to eight wins in its last 10 games. This weekend's likely trio of starters – Chris Lloyd, Jim Cassidy and Jared Freni – have been terrific during that stretch, especially Cassidy, who has won five consecutive starts. Freni struggled a few starts ago, but was outstanding in his last outing – blanking Dayton for 6 1/3 innings en route to winning the A-10 Rookie of the Week.

Richmond hasn't had the same fortunes on the mound, with a team ERA of 6.37 this season. In 395 1/3 innings, UR pitchers have allowed 496 hits and 199 walks – resulting in a 1.75 WHIP. Opponents have run wild against Richmond battery mates, with 97 successful steals in 116 attempts. The staff has been helped out by its defense, however, with 50 errors committed in 45 games.

Although seven games over .500, the Spiders have actually allowed more runs (317) than they've scored (304). Opponents have enjoyed their time in the batters box against Richmond, hitting at a .308 clip for the season.

Scoring runs haven't been a problem, though. Richmond averages 6.8 runs per game; compared to the 5.1 runs per contest UMass has averaged. The Spider lineup is deep, with six hitters batting above .300. The team sports a .288 collective average, and with 186 walks and 80 hit batsmen, the Spiders have an impressive .387 on base percentage.

The middle of the order has terrorized opponents all year long. Junior first baseman Joe Mahoney and senior outfielder Vince Riggi have combined for 19 home runs, 91 RBIs and a .332 batting average. Mahoney is tied for first in the A-10 in homers (13) and is in third with 48 RBIs. Riggi's .492 on base percentage ranks third in the conference, and his 38 walks are tops in the league.

See BASEBALL on page 8

MICHAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

Senior Chris Lloyd has the highest ERA (5.82) of the regular starters, but leads the team in innings (51) and is second with four wins.

UMass flashes bat as well as glove in 2007

Focus on improved defense has paid off

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

If this year's version of the Massachusetts softball team doesn't seem any different than last year, you probably haven't been watching the Minutewomen in the field.

This year's pitching staff is stronger with the addition of freshman Bailey Sanders. The offense is once again an imposing force, but perhaps the most marked improvement so far this season has been the play of the UMass defense, especially the infield.

Last year, the Minutewomen finished the season with 90 errors in 57 games – not ideal statistics for a defending conference champion.

In 2007, however, the Maroon and White have cut that number to 60 errors. While that's still a relatively high figure, it shows marked improvement from a year ago.

And what doesn't show up on the stat sheets are the countless athletic plays the team has made, preventing hits and saving runs.

"It's something we've worked on," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "Our kids work hard on playing defense, and defense win championships. Trying to do a good job and taking care of the ball is something we talk about everyday."

Sophomore Whitney Mollica has been the most improved player defensively. Her 17 errors last year were second on the team. She has cut down on the mistakes this year – committing nine errors in 43 games.

However, she has also shown some flash with the glove on the hot corner – plays she would not have made last season. Last Sunday's doubleheader with George Washington is the perfect example.

Mollica's number was called on several plays where she made diving stops along the third base line, coming up firing to first. On one play, the ball took a strange bounce in front of the bag and headed into foul territory. Mollica snatched the ball out of the air with her arm fully extended, reset, and got the out at first.

"She worked very hard," Sortino said. "[Fielding] is one of the things she needed to work on, and she did. I feel like Whitney is doing the job she needs to do for the team to do well."

Playing next to Mollica last year at shortstop was Stacy Cullington, who struggled at the position, committing at team-high 23 errors. With the loss of Kristi Stefanoni to graduation, Cullington moved over to second base, where she has looked more comfortable all season (one error in her last 17 games). That move

See DEFENSE on page 8

BRIAN TEUTSCH/COLLEGIAN

Last year's A-10 Rookie and Player of the Year, Whitney Mollica has improved her defensive play, committing nine errors this season, compared to 17 in 2006.

Maroon and White set for Atlantic 10s

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's and women's track teams are approaching the home stretch, as they travel to Charlotte, N.C., to compete in the Atlantic 10 Championships this weekend.

This will be one of the most important, and certainly the highest profile, meet they will compete in – this meet defines their season.

The competition will be fierce, as the A-10 harbors some very strong competition. Charlotte took the A-10 title in both the men's and women's competition last season and is favored to repeat this year.

In this year's indoor track and field events, URI and La Salle came in first and second, respectively, for the men. They are expected to finish strong on the outdoor track as well. Charlotte and Richmond were the top two women's indoor teams, and are expected to score top three finishes this weekend.

The Maroon and White hold different expectations for this year's A-10 Championships.

The Minutemen expect to place somewhere in the top four. They are coming off a win at home last Saturday, and hope to ride the momentum into this year's A-10 meet.

Injuries hit the women's team hard in 2007 – fielding a full team proved a challenge all season. The Minutewomen plan to use the meet as a chance to compete against the best, and give their younger athletes some experience.

"The team that we do have is young and very excited to go down to Charlotte and compete at the Atlantic 10 championships," women's coach Julie LaFreniere said.

The men's team has some depth across the board, with a combination of veteran talent and some freshman standouts that rank highly in their events.

The overall strategy for the men's team is to match up the runners and athletes in events where they rank highest.

"We try to identify the events we stand the best chance of finishing high and we try to put our top athletes in the place where they stand the best chance of finishing highly," said UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien.

Junior sprinter Nathan Barksdale won the 100-meter dash last week, running it in 11.07 seconds. He is expected to give another strong performance in the sprints and contribute to the relay teams.

See TRACK AND FIELD on page 8

CLEMENS RETURNS TO THE YANKEES PAGE 10 | SPIDERMAN 3 DISAPPOINTS PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SUNNY : HI: 75 LO: 41 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, MAY 7, 2007

MICHAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

War veteran, UMass student and founder of VASMA Jon Schnauber, 35, meets with fellow veterans (top-left) and talks with children during a pancake breakfast organized by VASMA (bottom-left). AFROTC Cadet Kristen Walls presents a memorial reef during this year's Veterans Day vigil.

Student of War

War veteran returns to student-life

BY DEBBIE FRIEDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Today is Part One of a Five Part series illustrating the life of student war veterans at the University of Massachusetts

Jon Schnauber had a life securely in place before he came to the University of Massachusetts. He was happily engaged with two beautiful young daughters, a good job and a home in Pittsfield, Mass. But, on one day in September 2001, he was called on to serve his country, and in the blink of an eye, the life he once knew changed forever.

Looking into Schnauber's eyes, it is clear that he has endured a lot. He has what is called, a soldiers heart, whereby the internal pain of his experience is evident to those who look closely enough. Yet even so, at 35, his face is still young. And, at first glance, he looks just like any other student walking around campus in jeans and a sweatshirt, book-bag in hand. However, Schnauber is anything but an ordinary college student. He has been all around the world, and lived more already, than some people do in their entire lives.

Nearly 17 years ago, Schnauber joined the United States Air Force, and was stationed in bases all around the country as part of the security forces. Following the Gulf War, he volunteered to go to Saudi Arabia for six months to assist in Operation Southern Watch. Once he completed his four years of service, Schnauber returned home to Upstate New York, and decided to take advantage of the militaries G.I. Bill by attending classes at SUNY Pottstown.

Three semesters later, he moved to Pittsfield to be closer to his girlfriend and found a job as an asset manager for KB Toys Corporate. He continued taking classes at Berkshire Community College, working towards his associate degree, and became a father to his daughters Jade and Morgan, who are now nine and five. Schnauber, who was now in his late 20s, had settled into a comfortable life, but he missed the camaraderie of the military. So in 2000, he joined the Army National Guard, committing himself to one weekend a month and two weeks a year. Or so he thought.

Just one year later, when the events of Sept. 11 unfolded, Schnauber was immediately called to action, first deployed for three weeks to Westover military base and later to Italy for the same period of time. After he returned home, Schnauber attended the NCO academy in New Jersey for two weeks, in order to be promoted to a higher rank and gain more responsibility within the military. He graduated in 2002 with high marks, and returned home to his life in Pittsfield. But that life was already changing, and in the coming months, it would disappear completely.

In the beginning of the summer of 2002, Schnauber learned he would be going to Afghanistan for Operation Enduring Freedom the U.S. response to the Sep. 11 terrorist attacks. This time, the deployment was not just for three weeks; it was for six months. And Schnauber's daughter could not understand why her dad had to leave her once again.

The recollection of his eldest daughter Jade asking him why he couldn't stay and "send all the bad people away," is something that will be forever engrained in his memory.

"I found it difficult to deploy the first time, but having children and then being deployed is a completely different realization," Schnauber said.

While stationed at an Air Force base in Afghanistan, Schnauber

See PROFILE on page 3

UMass war veterans adjust life after combat

Students cope with stress disorder

BY JAMIE MASON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Jon Zagami, a junior resource economics major, had night terrors living in the dormitories when he first came to the University of Massachusetts after serving in the U.S. Army in Kuwait and Iraq in 2003 and 2004.

Listening to people run up and down the halls at night scared him to death, he said.

"You can't take someone out of this environment and throw them into a combat zone and expect them to come home and just shut it off, it doesn't work like that," he said.

Jon Schnauber, a senior sociology major, was in the U.S. Air Force during the Gulf War and in

See TRANSITIONS on page 3

MICHAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

UMass junior Brad Dellumieri, a war veteran, sits inside the UMass Republican Club office. Veteran students claim that the transition between a war environment to an academic environment is a difficult one.

RIAA sends new wave of letters

First letters to Brandeis, Duke, MIT and Tufts

BY KATHERINE HAYNES
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

On behalf of the major record companies, the Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA) last week sent a fourth wave of 402 pre-litigation settlement letters to 13 universities.

Earlier this year, the RIAA launched new deterrence and education initiatives focused on illegal file trafficking on college campuses – a significant escalation and expansion of the industry's ongoing efforts, coupled with the implementation of a new process that gives students the opportunity to resolve copyright infringement claims against them at a discounted rate before a formal lawsuit is filed.

Each pre-litigation settlement letter informs the school of a forthcoming copyright infringe-

See RIAA on page 3

Canada unveils $1M coin

OTTAWA (AP) The Royal Canadian Mint unveiled a welcome addition to any piggy bank on Thursday — a monster gold coin with a face value of C$1 million (455,000 pounds) that it says is the world's biggest, purest and highest denomination coin.

Weighing in at 100 kilograms (220.5 pounds), the limited edition coin easily dwarfs its closest rival, the 31 kg (68 pound) "Big Phil", which was made to honour the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra and has a face value of a mere 100,000 euros (C$150,000).

The Canadian mint introduced the mega-coin, which is the size of an extra-large pizza, alongside the one-ounce gold bullion coins it is mass producing at its Ottawa plant.

Originally designed to promote the new one-ounce coins, the colossal 100 kg coins will be produced in a very limited quantity. A U.S. precious metals distributor has ordered three and there is interest in Asia and Europe, the mint said.

At 53 centimetres (21 inches) in diameter and over 3 cm (1.2 inches) thick, the massive coins need a high level of hand crafting.

While it has a C$1 million face value, the coin is worth more than twice that amount given the current gold price of $683.30 an ounce.

The new coins are both adorned with a maple leaf and boast 99.999 percent purity, a notch above previous purity peaks of 99.99 percent.

"Since the Royal Canadian Mint upped the ante on the rest of the world in 1982, by raising the purity of gold bullion to four nines pure (99.99 percent) other nations have come on the scene ... Austria, the United States, and Australia being the case in point," said mint spokesman Alex Reeves.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
issue 132

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Eric Athas
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conn
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sheryl Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jameson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Adam Stanton
Editorial Editor Tucker Merrick
News Editor Matt Bellweau
Sports Editor Danny Picard
Sports Editor Jon Pelland
Feature Editor Melissa D'Amico
Circulation Manager Jeff Pentz
Asst. Business Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Nicole Paddevetz
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Sydney Towne
Assistant News Anna Dolianitis
Assistant News Nicole Boonyakuakul
Assistant Editorial Brendan Hall
Assistant Sports Jeremy Bacr
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic year. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper is an all-Read Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik

COPY EDITOR
Callie Williams

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

150 million-year-old dinosaur unearthed

BUENOS AIRES — Paleontologists unearthed a flesh-eating dinosaur some 150 million years old in southern Argentina with all its joints in place, the first time such a beast has been dug up so intact, one of the finders told AFP on Friday.

The seven-meter (23-foot) tall, two-legged dinosaur, dubbed the Condorraptor, was found fossilized with parts of its jaw and head showing in rock near the village of Cerro Condor in Patagonia, at a site where paleontologists had been working for five years.

"It is an unprecedented discovery. It is the first time in the world that a carnivorous dinosaur of the Middle Jurassic period has been found fully jointed," said Pablo Puerta, a paleontologist at the Egidio Feruglio museum in the town of Trelew.

Working in the southern province of Chubut, the team led by the German dinosaur specialist Oliver Rauhut uncovered the fossil using a giant crane to shift rock.

Puerta said it will take about a year to fully uncover the dinosaur. It could then go on display at the Trelew museum.

—Associated Press

Paleontologists unearthed a flesh-eating dinosaur some 150 million -years-old in southern Argentina with all its joints in place.

Man glued to bike by burglers

JOHANNESBURG — A gang stripped a South African man before supergluing him to an exercise bicycle while they ransacked his house, according to a report Thursday.

SAPA news agency said the attackers, dressed in suits, hijacked a man in his 50s and forced him at gunpoint to take them to his home in Johannesburg.

"The victim was then forced to strip, after which he was superglued to the seat of an exercise bicycle, his hands were superglued, as were his feet and then his mouth was superglued shut," SAPA quoted Mark Stokoe, a spokesman for emergency services Netcare 911, as saying.

The man was rescued about three hours later when his partner arrived home, SAPA said.

—Associated Press

Gas prices reach record average

CAMARILLO, Calif. — Gasoline prices have surged to a record nationwide average of $3.07 per gallon, nearly 20 cents higher than two weeks earlier, oil industry analyst Trilby Lundberg said Sunday. The previous record was $3.03 per gallon on Aug. 11, 2006.

Just two weeks ago, the United States average for a gallon of gas was $2.87, but the Lundberg Survey of 7,000 stations nationwide on Friday showed an increase of about 19.5 cents to $3.07. That's up 88.4 cents since Jan. 19, Lundberg said.

The nationwide average for mid-grade gasoline was $3.18 and premium was $3.28.

The nation's lowest average pump price was $2.80 per gallon in Charleston, S.C., while the highest was $3.49 in San Francisco.

The recent increases are due mostly to refinery problems, Lundberg said, noting there have been at least a dozen additional partial shutdowns in the U.S. and internationally that cut refining capacity.

The outages have been reflected in weekly government data which has shown gasoline inventories falling during a season when most analysts think they should be rising. Summer driving begins Memorial Day weekend, and analysts worry refineries won't be producing enough gasoline by then to meet demand.

The Oil Price Information Service and AAA reported Friday that the national average price of a gallon of gasoline hit $3.012 that day, up 2.1 cents overnight.

Despite prices at the pump climbing past the $3 mark, oil and gasoline futures fell Friday. Retail prices generally lag the futures markets, so consumers can end up paying more for gas even as futures prices drop.

Gasoline futures for June delivery fell 3.12 cents Friday to settle at $2.2164 a gallon on the New York Mercantile Exchange

—Associated Press

Mr. T

Gas prices are posted on a sign in Northfield, Vt., Friday. Gas prices have soared to more than $3 a gallon in some parts of the state.

College presents logistical obstacles for transgenders

By Amanda Cohen
The Dartmouth (Dartmouth)

HANOVER, N.H. — Before transitioning from female to male, Corey Mallon, '04, transferred from Dartmouth College during his sophomore year. The college, while well-intentioned, he said, lacked the education and resources to make it a supportive community. Mallon found a more welcoming community at the University of Vermont, where he enrolled in 2003.

"To be fair, there was just a total lack of knowledge by professors, by the Rainbow Alliance. It's no one's fault, it's a systemic problem," Mallon said. "I wasn't at a place where I could do a lot of the education as well as deal with issues myself."

Pharmacology graduate student Kelly Heim, who has fully transitioned from female to male, said that the issues surrounding transgender identification are often ignored because transgender students are less visible on campus.

"That's the whole idea of transitioning: we want to blend in," Heim said.

Because the issues have not been brought to the forefront, adviser to gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender students Pam Misener said many people do not realize the ways in which the campus asks students to identify gender.

At Dartmouth, students are asked to implicitly declare a gender each time they enter a bathroom, and many forms and applications ask students and faculty to select gender.

Sasha Bright '09, Kris Gebhard '09 and Tiger Rahman '09, who are all transitioning, said they seek out unisex bathrooms when they are available, although doing so is not always a possibility.

If a bathroom is single-stall, there is no need to designate it by sex, Mallon argued. He suggested that the college create a pamphlet available to students during orientation with the locations of the unisex bathrooms and the single-stall showers on campus.

Heim said that being approached for presumably entering the wrong bathroom "can be extremely unnerving and frightening."

"[Such experiences] can happen anywhere, and I think this place is no exception until we put this nondiscrimination policy of transgender students into practice."

Dartmouth updated its nondiscrimination policy to include gender identity and representation in June 2006, following the lead of Harvard University, Brown University, Columbia University, Cornell University and the University of Pennsylvania. According to Giavanna Munafo of the Office of Institutional Diversity and Equity, Dartmouth waited until Harvard changed its policy before updating its own, although the topic had been discussed for years.

"Historically, it's just not in our nature to just blaze down these trails all alone," she said. "I don't think that we tend to be out, ahead on these kinds of potentially contentious social issues."

Senior Will
Hopefully not for Revenge

Bring back those wonderful memories...

...or something just because

Actual size of messages 3"x2"

Leave some love before you leave in the Collegian's 2007

UMass Flashback Grad Issue

Send your photo and statement to thecollegian@gmail.com or stop by 113 Campus center for payment info

Sarkozy wins French presidency

By Angela Doland
Associated Press

PARIS — Conservative Nicolas Sarkozy won the French presidency by a comfortable margin Sunday and immediately signaled his victory would mean friendly relations with the United States.

His socialist opponent, Ségolène Royal, conceded defeat for her hopes of becoming France's first woman president. With nearly 70 percent of ballots counted, Sarkozy had just over 53 percent of the vote, according to the Interior Ministry.

Washington can "count on our friendship," Sarkozy told hundreds of cheering supporters, though he added that "friendship means accepting that friends can have different opinions."

President Bush swiftly phoned the new president-elect to offer congratulations.

"The United States and France are historic allies and partners. President Bush looks forward to working with President-elect Sarkozy as we continue our strong alliance," said Gordon Johndroe, spokesman for the White House National Security Council.

Largely untested on the global stage, Sarkozy delved into foreign policy in his first speech as president-elect, urging the United States to take the lead on climate change and saying the issue would be a priority for France.

"The people of France have chosen change," Sarkozy said, while pledging to be "president of all the French."

Voter turnout was projected at 85 percent — a level not seen in 40 years — thanks to the dynamism of both candidates and the high stakes for a nation losing global clout to neighbors Britain and German and even developing countries like China and India.

"I gave it all my efforts, and will continue," Royal told supporters as she conceded defeat. "Something has risen up that will not stop."

Sarkozy — a charismatic but divisive figure known for uncompromising, even brutal language — inherits from Jacques Chirac stagnant wages, a lagging economy and frustration in impoverished, immigrant-heavy suburbs.

While exuberant Sarkozy supporters partied in central Paris, police quietly looked out for possible unrest in suburbs where Sarkozy is unpopular and riots broke out in 2005.

Sarkozy — for whom the presidency has been a near-lifelong quest — is certain to face resistance to his plans to make the French work more and make it easier for companies to hire and fire.

Sarkozy, 52, says France's 35-hour work week is absurd, and as interior minister, cracked down on drunken driving, crime and illegal immigration.

He is an admirer of the U.S. who has borrowed from some American policy ideas. Tough-talking and blunt, he alienated many in France's housing projects when he called young delinquents "scum."

At a polling station near Paris' Champs-Elysees, Anne Combemale said she voted for Sarkozy because of his market-oriented economic platform.

"He has the willpower to change France," said Combemale, 43, who is unemployed.

Sarkozy has drawn up a whirlwind program for his first 100 days in office and plans to put big reforms before parliament at a special session in July. One bill would make overtime pay tax-free to encourage people to work more, and another would put in place tougher sentencing for repeat offenders.

Royal, 53, is a former environment minister who believes France must keep its welfare protections strong. She wanted to raise the minimum wage, create 500,000 state-funded starter jobs for youths and build 120,000 subsidized housing units a year.

Bechir Chakroun, a 26-year-old who works in marketing, said he liked Royal's commitment to helping the poor.

"She represents change, I want to see what a woman can do," he said.

Royal was strong on the environment and schools but made a series of foreign policy gaffes — suggesting, for instance, that the Canadian province of Quebec deserved independence. During the campaign, Sarkozy's camp portrayed Royal as a lightweight with unclear ideas, while hers painted him as brutal, a bully — once Royal even called Sarkozy the "bogeyman."

Nicolas Sarkozy, France's newlyelected President, arrives for a campaign meeting in Meaux, France, April 13, 2007.

Student of War; war veteran returns to student-life kept in touch with his family as much as possible. On base, Schnauber said conditions weren't bad. They had the Internet, cable, a gym and a driving range, although no one used it. But their living quarters were anything but comfortable. Soldiers slept in tents every night, using rain ponchos as their only means of privacy. They dealt with rats, spiders and jackals on a regular basis. But the most unsettling part of the experience for Schnauber was the environment surrounding him.

PROFILE from page 1

"The toughest thing over there that I still carry with me was at night – the people would fight against themselves, and you'd hear gunfire and explosions, woman screaming and children crying," he recalled.

"And you're sitting there, one of the best trained and equipped militaries in the world and you can't do anything."

Those restless nights, however, paled in comparison to the unnerving stress he endured while running Raven missions. During these missions, Schnauber was part of an aircrew whose main job was to help secure the landing of C-130s into bare bases, or remote areas, in the dark of night. Schnauber recalled how the pilots in charge of landing these planes twice refused because the dangers involved in navigating the planes, using only infrared lights and night vision goggles, were great and the threat of hostile enemy fire was almost certain.

"The base that we were going into was taking rocket and small arms fire four times a week, always at night, and we were going in very heavy, which means we had lots of cargo and an entire platoon," Schnauber said.

However, the pilots and crew were ordered to run the missions anyway, despite the dangers posed. Once landed, it was up to Schnauber and a partner to leave the plane first, in order to engage with any possible enemy threats waiting for them outside in the darkness.

"We were just out there waiting to get fired at, or see something to get engaged. You could just imagine the stress," Schnauber said.

But even in tension filled moments like those, Schnauber says the threat of death was never running through his mind.

"When you're out there, fear isn't involved. It's just you're out there, doing your job. You get done doing your job, and it's like 'yeah!'" he said emphatically. "It's a rush."

Once the six-month deployment to Afghanistan was up, Schnauber returned home to Pittsfield again. Yet it was his return home that was perhaps the most challenging and heart-wrenching experience of his entire life.

Schnauber can still vividly recall walking out to greet his family. He remembers giving his fiancé a hug and climbing into the passenger seat of his car, excited to see his two young girls. But when he turned around to see them, he found that Jade was asleep and his youngest daughter Morgan was blankly staring back at him as if he were a complete stranger.

"She looked at me, and she was scared. She didn't know who I was," Schnauber painfully recalled.

At that moment, he felt lost and overcome with guilt for missing first birthdays, school functions and all the important early moments of his daughters' lives. Guilt he is still trying to reconcile with today; feelings he tried to explain in the death letters he wrote before leaving, never knowing for certain if he would return. For Schnauber, just thinking about the night he spent sitting in his kitchen writing these letters brings tears to his eyes.

"You try to tell them who you are, because they're never going to know you. You try to tell them what you want them to be and relay all the important lessons you've learned in life, and what you want them to get out of it," Schnauber said.

You try to give them everything in a letter, and it's impossible. But it's the only thing you have."

Fortunately, those letters never had to be sent. They now sit in a case atop his dresser, behind an American Flag he kept with him during his deployments. Schnauber has only taken them out once since coming back. He is keeping them aside until his daughters are old enough to understand what is inside of them.

While Schnauber was very grateful to make it back to his family safely, he soon realized it was his home life that had suffered the greatest injuries from war. The time spent away during his previous deployments, combined with one final tour to Germany proved to be too much on his relationship with his fiancé, and as a result, the home and family life he had before his time abroad, crumbled shortly thereafter.

Even so, Schnauber managed to keep his head up. After fulfilling all his commitments with the military, and completing his associate's degree at Berkshire Community College, he transferred to UMass in Jan. 2004, majoring in sociology. He has spent every moment of the past four years trying to make up for the lost time with his daughters.

"Everyday I make up for it. I try to," he said.

"I call them every single night, and see them two or three times a week. I do everything I possibly can."

Thinking back on the past 17 years of sleepless nights, stressful missions and painful goodbyes, Schnauber says considering it all, the hardest part has been learning how to start over.

"My entire life I had to start over. I had a house, and a life and children. I had my life, and I came home and it was all gone," he said.

And start over he did, by throwing himself into a completely new environment – the college environment, with which most of his peers could never understand the things he has been through.

"Everybody transitioning into college has difficulty. But for someone who has been in the military, and has been indoctrinated into a way of life, a way of thinking, you have to sort of discard those things you were indoctrinated into," Schnauber said.

Some of those ways of thinking are hard to shake however, which is why many veterans struggle with Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) after they return from battle. Schnauber says he still deals with it daily.

"When you are over there, you are at a heightened sense, and it's constant. So when you come back its very difficult to transition back into just being normal. I'm still hypervigilant about everything," he said.

"My fight or flight mechanisms are always on, and I have to try and control them in some ways. Even when I am in a verbal debate with someone on an intellectual level, I have to try and keep that in mind and control it, and sometimes, it's very difficult," he added.

As far as Veteran Affairs is concerned, Schnauber feels the military could stand to improve the way they handle issues surrounding reintegration. The post deployment psychological evaluation is one example of something he believes needs to change. On the evaluation, soldiers are asked a series of questions, such as "have you recently experienced violent thoughts?" or "have you recently thought about killing someone?"

When thinking about these questions, Schnauber noted how all soldiers who train for combat have these thoughts because, in many cases, they are necessary for survival.

"Ever thought of killing someone, well yeah, pretty much everyday," Schnauber quipped.

"The problem with that is … it was well known, and they let us know verbally, that if we answered wrong on those things, we'd be stuck in a mental hospital when we got home. We wouldn't be going home to see our family," he said. "So every single person I know lied on it."

And for Schnauber and many other veterans, that meant they didn't get the help they needed.

Even with all the challenges involved in transitioning though, such as dealing with PTSD and the changes in his home life, Schnauber has managed to persevere, and more recently has found great success at this University. At first, he kept a low profile, rarely sharing the fact that he was a war veteran with his classmates. However, one day he spoke up, and it opened his eyes to the weight his experiences in the military held.

"One day you are just a student in class voicing your opinion about things, and the next day you are somebody who has been places and has experiences. And so not only does the class start listening, the teacher starts listening," he said. "You really feel like you are contributing in a major way."

Sociology professor, Dr. Barbara Tomaskovic-Devey has had Schnauber as a student, and says his passion for academics and consideration of others makes him stand out.

"I had mentioned to the students that my own son-in-law had been in the military and had served in Iraq and Afghanistan, and when he learned that Peter was having trouble re-adjusting, Jon offered to give whatever assistance he could," Tomaskovic-Devey said.

"I admire him for not only for being motivated, persistent and serious in his work, but for reaching out to others to help them, when he himself struggles," she added.

Schnauber's compassion for his fellow veterans is something that led him to create a Registered Student Organization on campus called the Veterans and Service Members Association (VASMA), which seeks to provide information and support to veterans, service members and their families. The group is also open to anyone who wants to support the troops. With the help of friend and fellow Veteran, John Zagami, VASMA has taken off from a small group to an organization with nearly 50 members committed to volunteer work in the community and awareness and advocacy of veteran's issues. Members of the group, including Schnauber who is now the President, have more recently started talking to classes about their experiences in the military. Schnauber specifically has spoken to classes throughout the University, including the Army and Air Force ROTC.

Professor of Military Leadership, Lieutenant Colonel David Vacchi has seen Schnauber address fellow classmates about his experiences.

"There are times in classes when it is useful to refer to operations in Iraq or Afghanistan and this is where his measured perspective is so beneficial. He doesn't get overly excited about the fact that he's a war veteran, he merely provides that mature perspective and relates it to leadership," Vacchi said.

"He is a leader, and the UMass community, especially the veterans, is better off because of it," Vacchi added.

As a member of the UMass community, Schnauber has had to deal with the abundant amount of opposition to military action in the Middle East. But it is not something he views as a difficulty.

"I think a lot of them – the anti-war coalition, the Radical Student Union, all the ones determined as left – all of them are trying to do the right thing," Schnauber said.

However, he noted that they did not always go about accomplishing their goals "in ways that were respectful."

When asked about the current state of the War in Iraq, Schnauber definitively stated, "Nobody wants war."

"I've said many times that your greatest opponents to war are your soldiers, sailors, airmen and marines, because they're the ones that have to go and fight and die," he added.

From the perspective of a Veteran, Schnauber feels the military gives its men and woman the means to both succeed and fail. "It depends what you do with it," he said.

But even so, Schnauber feels that pulling out of Iraq now is not the right thing to do.

"We have to take responsibility for our actions, and make sure we leave these people in a better place than when we came," he said.

Today, Schnauber is working towards getting his new life in place. This summer, he will be graduating from the University and aims to turn his passion for helping Veterans into a career.

"I hope to work for the VA in helping veterans transition back into society so they don't lose a step," Schnauber said. He has also welcomed the addition of another little girl into his life, and is focused on being as good a father as possible to all three of his children.

With all that he has been through, all the deployments, transitioning, pain and stress, Schnauber still says he would do it again if he had to.

"I wouldn't just jump up at the chance again, because obviously I don't want to leave my family. But if I was called upon, and it was necessary, I would," he said.

For Schnauber, it's all about a sense of duty – a duty to his country and to his fellow soldiers.

"You're not going over there to be a hero. You're going over there to support those who would stand behind you," he said.

It is that very selflessness with which Schnauber's maturity shines through. Maturity he feels the military helped to instill in him, along with many other positive qualities. But when asked if the military made him grow up too fast, he thought a minute and just smiled. "I don't know about that," he said with a chuckle.

"I'm just starting to grow up now."

Debbie Friedman can be reached at drfriedm@gmail.com

UMass war veterans adjust to student-life, stress disorders

TRANSITIONS from page 1

the Army during Operation Freedom in Afghanistan. Schnauber said that he thinks that everyone coming back from Iraq has Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD), "in one way shape or form."

According to the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs Web site, PTSD "is an anxiety disorder that can occur following the experience or witnessing of a traumatic event. A traumatic event is a life-threatening event such as military combat, natural disasters, terrorist incidents, serious accidents or physical or sexual assault in adult or childhood."

One of the things that Schnauber deals with since he has returned is intrusive thoughts, "where I am always in a mindset, always ready. We are constantly at that level of preparedness, constantly checking out our surrounds. It's hypervigilance," he said.

It has been four years since Schnauber has returned from Afghanistan and he is still suffering from PTSD, he said. Last semester he was walking through campus and he saw three guys on top of the Student Union, with a telephoto lens camera. "I immediately thought RPG when I saw what was in his hands and I started looking for cover. It doesn't get better," Schnauber said.

"We walk though campus and we look at bushes, doorways, peoples hands, how they are carrying their backpacks," said Schnauber. "I certainly do not have a bad case of PTSD either."

Zagami said that he had a hard time when he came to campus. When he would walk to class he would think that people were following him. "I didn't put two and two together that he lives in the same dorm as me and we have class together. As soon as I get around this building I would cut out and start tracking him. It's not a healthy way to live," he said.

Another thing Schnauber and Zagami experienced was having a hard time driving when they returned from combat; they felt like a land mine would go off at any time.

One of the hard transitions that veterans face when they return to campus is navigating their way through the University.

Zagami said it can be hard to go to large classrooms and walk around campus when it is busy. "What if I come to class and I am two-minutes late for a test and I have to sit in the middle of the row, I can't handle that, but there is no choice. I hate walking through the Campus Center if it's crowded. I hate people touching me in a crowd. I hate going to bars," he said.

"Every soldier here that I have talked to deals with it," said Zagami.

"It was hard to come here and figure out the admissions process," said Zagami. "In the Army, it's real easy to figure out where everything is."

Schnauber said that his transition was also difficult because his wife left him when he returned from combat. He went to school before he left so he was familiar with the academic life, but he found returning to school at UMass hard.

"Trying to work my way through Whitmore was not much fun. I didn't know who to talk to, or how to get things done," he said. "The financial aid, the bursars, the dean of students was ridiculous."

Zagami similarly had a hard time moving into the dorms. Every time he moved in the military he knew exactly what was on the packing list to bring. He had no idea what to move into his dorm room.

"How do I connect with these people I am living with because we are way different. I felt like I had just walked back into high school. I didn't understand how they could stay up until four in the morning sucking down beers and not plan on getting up tomorrow morning," Zagami said.

Zagami also did not understand how students could miss class. "That's your job; it's the only thing you have to do while you are here. You are paying for it, why would you not go to class."

Zagami also experienced feeling like an outsider once people found out that he was in the Army. Fellow students even asked him if he had killed people in Iraq. He said that he had a hard time finding people that he fit in with and felt like he was among people who did not get what he had been through.

Andrew Masciola, a sophomore political science major, is in the Massachusetts National Guard. He has not been to war, but said that he often feels like an outsider at UMass.

"The biggest thing for me was relating to people. It was hard to relate to them. My freshman year roommate was real big into drugs, that was a rough situation having to deal with coming out of the military because it doesn't exist," he said.

Students in the military often have a very different life than other University students. Their weekends are often spent doing drills. There is no option to gain the "freshman 15" because they have to maintain their physical fitness, according to Zagami.

"On Friday night, when everyone is worrying about where they are going to pre-game and what bars they are going to go to, I am worried about having all of my gear to spend the weekend in the woods.

When you go to a drill, you are getting up at three or four in the morning and then you can't sleep when you come back to school because your roommates are being loud. On the weekends, when everyone puts off their papers, we don't have that luxury," said Zagami.

Masciola said that one of the main differences is that they do not take anything for granted at school. "A lot of people who go here have everything, but they don't realize that they have everything," he said.

The Veterans and Service Members Association (VASMA) was started by Schnauber and Zagami to help student veterans with their transition from military to academic life.

"It can be hard to get people on this campus to come out and acknowledge that they are veterans," said Schnauber.

Zagami said that they have been able to create a network of students in the military, so that when they see one another on campus, they know that they are not the only one who has been to Iraq. They have made contacts with many different offices and services on campus so that they can help direct veterans to the right places to seek help.

"It can be very comforting when you see someone else that you know was in the military," said Schnauber.

Masciola said that when a veteran first comes to campus it can be easy to feel like they are the only person in the military. "To know that there are more people just like you, helps a lot," he said.

VASMA is currently redoing their Web site so that they can give student veterans the resources that they need about SPIRE, UCards, housing, dining and other things that may be hard for them to navigate.

"We want them to get here and be at ease. Tell them what to expect when they get here. Everything and anything that we can answer for them we want to," said Zagami.

"There are soldiers among you, veterans among you, male, female, every race and ethnicity, and they are walking around here in plain clothes going to classes just like you and they have overcome the same obstacles that you are going to have to overcome. Why not talk to them about how they got through it? VASMA has done an exceptional job of helping people do that so far," said Zagami.

Jamie Mason can be reached at jlmason@student.umass.edu

New wave of RIAA pre-lawsuit letters target 13 campuses

RIAA from page 1

ment suit against one of its students or personnel and requests that university administrators forward that letter to the appropriate network user.

In the fourth wave of this new initiative, the RIAA sent letters in the following quantities to 13 schools, including: Brandeis University (15 pre-litigation settlement letters), Duke University (35), Iowa State University (15), Massachusetts Institute of Technology (23), Northern Illinois University (50), Syracuse University (20), Tufts University (15), University of Georgia (19), University of Iowa (25), University of Southern California (50), University of South Florida (50), University of Tennessee (50) and the University of Texas Austin (35).

"With record companies embracing digital distribution models of every kind, there is more legal music available now than ever before," said Steven Marks, Executive Vice President and General Counsel, RIAA. "For students, many of these high-quality music options are available at deeply discounted rates – or even free. Yet, for one reason or another, theft on college campuses continues at disproportionately high levels. We will continue to educate fans of all ages, but deterrence is equally important. Students must understand that there are consequences for their illegal actions."

A survey by Student Monitor from spring 2006 found that more than half of college students download music and movies illegally, and according to market research firm NPD, college students alone accounted for more than 1.3 billion illegal music downloads in 2006.

While college students represented only 10 percent of the sample in the new online NPD study, they accounted for 26 percent of all music downloading on P2P networks and 21 percent of all P2P users.

Furthermore, college students surveyed by NPD reported that more than two-thirds of all the music they acquired was obtained illegally.

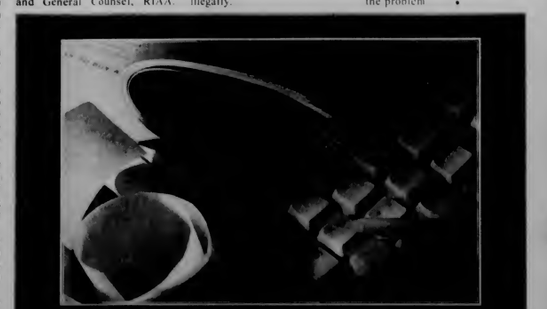
These enforcement actions come in addition to the lawsuits that the RIAA continues to file on a rolling basis against those engaging in music theft via commercial Internet accounts.

A survey conducted by Survey1.com in late March 2007 states that "67 percent of students on college campuses are still not concerned with their illegal downloading habits," according to an April 4 Daily Collegian article.

Finally, the market research firm NPD found that college students accounted for an estimated 1.3 billion illegal downloads in 2006.

Rolling Stone Magazine released some of the recording industries figures in a 2005 article.

They found that in August 2003 (the month before lawsuits started) there was an estimated 3.85 million users engaging in peer-to-peer file sharing. Two years later, in April 2005, that number rose to nearly 8.63 million, showing that the legal actions had an adverse effect on the problem.



Gained only through working at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian as a Fall 2007 semester Advertising Representative

Stop by 113 Campus Center to pick up an application at the Daily Collegian Office or call the Campus Center basement or contact Alex Bender at ebender@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MAY 7, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." -Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A controversial under-'Card' to graduation

Save our commencement

Giving an honorary degree at the graduate commencement to Andrew Card, the former White House Chief of Staff for President George W. Bush from 2000 to 2006, and the creator and head of the White House Iraq Group, which coordinated the Bush administration campaign to sell the invasion of Iraq to the American public, would be a terrible and tragic mistake.

Justin Jackson

Those with authority to award the honorary degree – namely the Board of Trustees of the University of Massachusetts system – need to meet immediately to consider revoking the offer of the honorary degree. And President Jack Wilson, Chancellor John Lombardi and Graduate School Dean John Mullins, on behalf of the students, faculty and staff of UMass whom they serve, need to urge the Trustees to rescind the degree.

News of the honorary degree immediately provoked a furor on this campus. Emergency protest meetings have been held. Petitions are circulating online and around campus. "Not Wanted" posters are being posted on doors and bulletin boards. This week, numerous University departments, governing bodies and organizations will pass resolutions against it.

A degree for a political figure of such controversy necessarily invites dissent and disruption of commencement itself. For two years, I looked forward to receiving my Master's degree. Now, instead of enjoying the ceremony and celebrating with family, friends and colleagues, we graduates will have a protest hardly a way to finish our education and work at UMass.

Awarding an honorary degree to Card is equivalent to awarding an honors degree to undergraduates who plagiarize or invent sources for term papers.

Why protest Card? He may be a nice guy – I'm sure he plays a great game of golf with Board of Trustees Chair Steve Tocco and other top administrators who know Card personally – but the policies he propagated and represents can't be separated from the degree. And unfortunately, his record as Bush's Chief of Staff, and his coordination of the public relations campaign to sell an unnecessary invasion of Iraq to the American public based on manipulated, manufactured or outright false intelligence regarding Iraq's alleged weapons programs or ties to terrorists, completely contravenes the fundamental commitment to integrity and honesty in research and scholarship on which the University and academic endeavor itself rests.

Awarding an honorary degree to Card is equivalent to awarding an honors degree to undergraduates who plagiarize or invent sources for term papers. The only difference is that Card and those he served (Bush, Cheney, Rice, Rumsfeld, Paul Wolfowitz, Douglas Feith) plagiarized on matters of war and peace – and the result? The unnecessary deaths of 3,300 American soldiers (including two UMass students, engineering student and Marine Corps Lance Corporal Eric P. Valdepenas, 21, and economics Ph.D. candidate and Army Staff Sergeant Ayman A. Taha, 31) and hundreds of thousands of Iraqis, the physical and psychological maiming of tens of thousands of American soldiers and many more Iraqis, the draining of the treasury by nearly $450 billion (and counting), and the violation of the Constitution and international laws. A degree for the man who was the public face of a dishonest administration undermines the credibility and legitimacy of our institution itself. We might as well dismantle the University the day after he receives the degree.

Indeed, Card is not even eligible for the honorary degree according to University policy. University of Massachusetts Policy T93-060, "Policy on Awarding Honorary Degrees," stipulates that "Candidates for honorary degrees shall be persons of great accomplishment and high ethical standards who exemplify the ideals of the University of Massachusetts."

University administrators could have guessed that a degree for Card would seriously disrupt our graduate commencement if they had attended Card's lecture in April, the opening event of the "Talking Politics" series sponsored by Donahue Institute and the Political Science department. Dozens of students held signs denouncing Card and staged a "die-in" in front of the stage while he showered students with platitudes about political participation. When finally asked about Iraq during the subsequent question-and-answer session of softball questions from college Republicans and Democrats about 2008, Card recycled old allegations that the U.S. had to invade Iraq because the Iraqi government (a secular Sunni government) was harboring one terrorist, Al-Zarqawi (a fundamentalist). Not even Bush says this anymore. Magically, as the invasion turned to occupation and counter-insurgency in 2004, the official rationale for the invasion and occupation shifted from WMDS and terrorists to instilling democracy and saving Iraqis from themselves. Card seems a bit behind on his talking points and spin.

But, in fact, the Board of Trustees made the decision to award Card an honorary degree months before his April lecture. Truly, the honorary degree seems to have been awarded as a political favor by University administrators within or close to state and national GOP leaders (Card was considering running for president in '08). The University should not play politics with our commencement or with honorary degrees.

Justin Jackson is a UMass graduate student. He can be reached at jfjin@yahoo.com.

Credibility of degree at stake

Caroline Moretti

As you've probably heard, Andrew Card, former Chief of Staff under President George W. Bush, will be receiving an honorary degree from our fine University. This divisive figure (who was derided by protestors at his pitifully unoriginal speech on campus a few weeks ago) will now be forever tied to our institution with a doctorate in public service. Awarding this degree to Card makes a mockery of the whole notion of an honorary degree, and tarnishes our school's reputation.

As stated on the University of Massachusetts Web site, recipients of honorary degrees "should be individuals of exceptional distinction." These degrees are meant to reward a person who has truly achieved something great, to recognize extraordinary accomplishment. For example, Tisato Kajiyama, who will be receiving the other honorary award at the graduate commencement, has massively contributed to the field of polymer science. He is president of Kyushu University and Vice President of the Japan Association of National Universities. He has published literally hundreds of scientific papers on topics that I personally couldn't begin to comprehend, and has created a bridge of unity between Japanese and American scientific research. Nobody can debate the fact that this man has contributed volumes to intellectual society and scientific understanding. He clearly deserves recognition for his outstanding personal success.

Then there's Card. Aside from almost being the longest serving Chief of Staff ever (narrowly beaten by Llewelyn Sherman Adams, buddy of Eisenhower), there's nothing remarkable to say about his political career. In fact, much of Card's political history is mired in the Iraq war, and his association with the White House Iraq Group (acronym – WHIG, but I doubt the Whig party would approve of the Bush presidency at all).

Card was instrumental in the organization of WHIG, which was designed to sell fear and distrust to the American people, and sway our minds toward the war in Iraq. According to a 2002 CNN report, this group was used to push an "escalation of rhetoric about the danger that Iraq posed to the United States, including the introduction of the term 'mushroom cloud.'" Indeed, many people on this campus would have Card labeled a propagandist and a war criminal.

More importantly, the very fact that we have to debate Card's honorary degree is proof enough that he doesn't deserve it. If Card were really worthy of this award, everybody would be able to recognize his wonderful contributions to society. Card should only be granted this extraordinary recognition if every single person present at the graduate commencement can stand up and say, "This man has done great things, and deserves to be recognized." Instead, we have a man who has nothing to show for himself, but the reputation of war and manipulation.

Does he really need to accrue another award – for public service, no less – from a public that is clearly divided by his questionable past?

Card's honorary degree seems to be nothing more than a slab of revolting pandering to a man who needs no further encouragement. According to the official White House Web site, Card has already received "numerous honorary degrees and awards" – so many that they apparently don't see fit to list them. Do we really need to continue to pat this man on the back, when he is clearly a figure of public antagonism and distrust? Does he really need to accrue another award – for public service, no less – from a public that is clearly divided by his questionable past?

Even though our elusive Trustee Board Chairman Stephen Tocco has already explicitly stated he would not reconsider awarding this degree, I urge you all to continue protesting its merit. There is an online petition, available at petitiononline.com/no4card/petition.html, that everyone ought to sign. Even if it won't revoke his diploma, it will still make perfectly clear to this administration that we refute their decision.

The Boston Globe quotes Tocco as saying to a jeering crowd of students and faculty last Thursday that he would "not debate the merits of Andy Card," which is, quite frankly, appalling. Isn't it his job, along with all of these other trustees with recently bloated paychecks, to debate the merit of these candidates before they throw them the diploma? It's really quite disgusting that Tocco openly admits that he's not willing to discuss the implications of giving this publicly derided figure a symbol of social achievement. It's obvious that the campus Tocco represents is not comfortable with the decision to give this award. I think this stands as yet another sterling example of this school's administrations failing to recognize the needs of the campus it serves, while alienating the students and faculty who have so much invested in this institution.

You would have thought that after the Robert Mugabe incident, our school would be a little more discriminating about who they award these degrees. Now, not only do we have a despotic dictator as an honorary alumni, but a figurehead of an unpopular and detrimental war as well. For a growing University that's trying so hard to revamp its image, UMass doesn't seem to care too much who it's tying itself to.

Caroline Moretti can be reached at cmoretti@student.umass.edu

Sex, lies and politics

Chris Eckel

Every time I turn on the news, I become rather nauseous at the mention of the war against religious fundamentalists in the Middle East or Afghanistan. In the wake of the 700,000-person protest against religious government in Turkey last week, it becomes even clearer that Americans are deluding themselves. The fact of the matter is, the media and many members of the Bush cabal are relying upon rhetoric to frame the issue in that manner. The uncomfortable truth is that a true war against religious fundamentalists would also have to require quite a few changes in the United States. Just look at the way this country treats sex, for instance, a subject with which most other democratic countries are quite comfortable.

Among many other wrongly imprisoned people in this country, there is a 19-year-old former honors student serving a minimum 10-year prison sentence in Georgia. Genarlow Wilson's heinous crime was engaging in consensual oral sex with a schoolmate. Thanks to an illogical set of laws, a stunningly overzealous prosecutor and a lazy and/or inept State Senate, the young man is sitting in prison rather than a college classroom for a "crime" many people have committed. Need more evidence? How about that, despite the fact the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled similar state laws unconstitutional, sodomy is defined as an "unnatural carnal act," by the U.S. military, and offenders are subject to court-martials.

Many misguided parents and teachers attempt to suppress any mention in class of families led by same-sex parents, but that is hardly the only problem in public education. From 2000-2005, the Bush administration provided almost $900 million to support "abstinence-only education," despite the fact that according to Congressional analysis, these programs teach "that abortion can lead to sterility and suicide, that half the gay male teenagers in the United States have tested positive for the AIDS virus and that touching a person's genitals 'can result in pregnancy.'" As if the misinformation was not bad enough, the programs simply do not work: numerous studies have shown that students who take abstinence-only classes are just as likely to become sexually active as their classmates who do not take these sexual education classes.

The common thread connecting all of these stories is clear as day. Americans are afraid of sex, afraid of homosexuals, afraid to acknowledge the fact that Americans are having sex and seek to demonize and criminalize any act other than sex between a married straight couple attempting to conceive a child. Such viewpoints and laws can be attributed to religious zealots who would seek to legislate and prevent individuals from choosing to engage in actions that the fanatics feel violate some tenet of their religion.

Such zealotry also extends to one of the hottest issues in the country today: abortion.

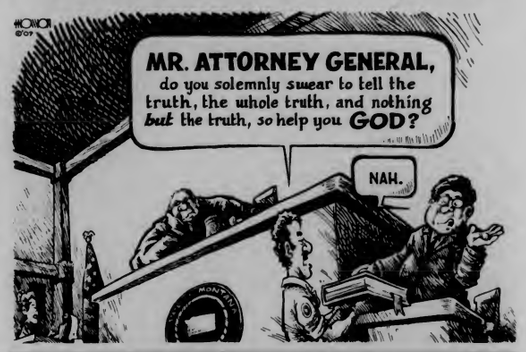
Such zealotry also extends to one of the hottest issues in America today: abortion. Recently, the conservative-dominated Supreme Court voted to make illegal so-called "partial-birth abortions" even if the health or life of the prospective mother is in jeopardy. Where to begin? How about with the term: "partial birth abortion?" It is not accurate, and was coined by religious pro-life devotees, not doctors. In fact, doctors – the people who would be professionally familiar with the procedure – refer to it as "intact dilation and extraction." In such a case, whose thinking and terminology would you be more likely to respect? A medical doctor or someone who makes up names for medical procedures? And yet, such junk science is respected by many in the United States.

This misleading is a deliberate attempt by pro-lifers to conjure up gruesome images in an attempt to bend others to their will. Such a tactic is designed to shame others into joining up with religiously-sponsored legislation, which goes entirely against the idea of separation of church and state. Further proving the idea that religious fundamentalism rules the day in the U.S. is a simple examination of any map showing the countries in which legislation intrudes upon a woman's body. Many of the countries on such a map are to be found in the Middle East and Africa, both of which are frequently shown in the U.S. media to be hotspots for religious indoctrination and religious warfare.

That's the hook, right there. The U.S. is governed, both by the citizenry and the politicians they elect, in a manner more befitting the "religious fundamentalists" we are apparently at war with than in a way that would be recognized by either the original founders of the U.S. or the populace of many of the countries we attempt to identify with around the world. The ideology of these folks that seek to demonize individual-free choice was best encapsulated by George W. Bush, who once famously said: "You're either with us or against us."

Legitimate debate is stifled and silenced. Such tactics are the trademark of, not those who believe in democracy, but of despots like Hitler, Stalin and, for that matter, Darth Vader, who once said: "If you're not with me, you're my enemy." Such a philosophy is truly a sign of overbearing fundamentalism, and it is all too often put into practice in modern-day America. Anakin Skywalker managed to redeem himself in the end, whereas it will be difficult for America to overcome such hatred and small-mindedness.

Chris Eckel can be reached at ceckel@student.umass.edu



LETTER TO THE EDITOR

EXPRESSION ON THE LAWN

Greg Collins is the Massachusetts Daily Collegian's best columnist; unlike every other writer, he seeks virtue and truth in all of his columns. By his words and actions, Collins demonstrates he is a man of integrity and a model for all of us. Sadly, in his most recent column ("A Shameful Event," May 3) Collins misses the mark. It is his column, not the event he discusses, "Sex on the Lawn," that advocates for shame.

One must give credit to Vox: Students for Choice, the sponsor of Sex on the Lawn, because they are willing to openly proclaim the depravity for which they stand, exposing themselves to public ridicule. Vox reveals its true agenda is to advance sex without consequences. This is a direct assault on the strong Christian ethics of our forefathers, morals that have made America strong through the centuries. Instead, it is Collins, not Vox, who professes shame by suggesting sexual decisions be made in secret. As all discussions of moral and political issues should be grounded in our first principles, it is important to examine the role of our public University as envisioned by our pious ancestors, whose wisdom granted us the birthright of this institution.

Chapter V, Section 1 of the Massachusetts Constitution teaches, "The encouragement of arts and sciences, and all good literature, tends to the honor of God, the advantage of the Christian religion, and the great benefit of this and the other United States of America."

Chapter V, Section 2 teaches, "Wisdom, and knowledge, as well as virtue, diffused generally among the body of the people, being necessary for the preservation of their rights and liberties; [it is the duty of public schools and universities] to countenance and inculcate the principles of humanity and general benevolence, public and private charity, industry and frugality, honesty and punctuality in their dealings; sincerity, good humor, and all social affections, and generous sentiments among the people."

In conflict with today's campus culture, our Constitution boldly professes the mission of our public universities is to bring honor to God and to inculcate wisdom, virtue, sincerity and generosity among the people. The Constitution further declares our civil rights and liberties depend on this mission.

Collins professes that sex is in the realm of personal privacy and praises resident assistants who provide condoms discretely outside their doors, but sex is not simply a matter of personal privacy. The foundation of our civilization is rooted in marriage and the family, as these sacred institutions guarantee stability within our communities. Reserving sex for within the marriage covenant is not designed to take away our fun, but to reinforce marriage as a unique, unbreakable contract between a man and a woman.

Collins suggests students seek advice from University Health Services concerning contraception and sexually transmitted diseases. For a decision of moral implications, this is not a good idea. Students should seek the advice of their parents, their ministers and other faithful stewards of the ethics of our forefathers. The University should be ashamed for leading us astray by encouraging sexual depravity. Instead, the University should remain steadfast to its mission, turning out students of strong character and high ideals, by encouraging restraint and teaching us the true definition of love.

The keystone of our civilization, the gospel of Jesus Christ, teaches us the true definition of love is modeled on God's love for humanity and summed up by the Greek word agape. Instead of turning to each other to fulfill our sexual desires, which only leave us empty, let us turn to each other in a love that endures. Agape is love rooted in the complete sacrificing of ourselves to live perfectly for our friends. This love never keeps a record of grievances and never expects anything in return. Let us go forward serving each other in forbearance, love and charity. If we can love in this way, then we are truly alive.

Eric Magazu
Northwestern Student
Former UMass Student

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MAY 7, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Plaza dons arts festival

Fourth year running

SASHA LAPKIN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Students on their way to classes had an exciting opportunity to take a study break and enjoy the Festival of the Arts last Thursday. The Festival took place on a gorgeous spring day, on the Fine Arts Center plaza at the University of Massachusetts.

While snacking on cotton candy and popcorn, attendants of the Festival enjoyed performances by guitar players and singers Teresa Franco, Ross Duquette and Sam Francis.

Other music performances included a band called Legal Lies and the Music Department Jazz Quintet. The Festival also featured Mission IMPROVable sketch comedy and Mike McDonald, a stand-up comedian. A wide variety of dance was performed by UMass Ballroom Dance, Dynamic Motion Dance Team, belly dancers of the Middle Eastern Dance and South Asian dancers of the Mass Masti. Other dance performances included those by the UMass Dance Team and Stage Crew Dance Team. Commonwealth College student group Ya Got Trouble! presented a unique performance art show.

Student art work was presented inside the Fine Arts Center lobby, where students could reflect on oil paintings and photographs in color and in black and white. The highlight of the display was the "Water is Life" collection which was compiled from an Engineers Without Borders trip to Namawanga, Kenya. More information on the Kenya Project can be found on www.ewb-umass.org.

Some of the other attractions at the Festival included arts and crafts stations for making hemp jewelry, creative buttons, decoupage, henna tattoos and clay pottery.

The Fourth Annual Festival of the Arts was coordinated by a committee headed by Erin Donnally-Drake, the assistant director for the Center for Student Development. Student Affairs and Campus Life, The Craft Center, UVC TV-19 and the Fine Arts Center were other organizations involved in making the Festival of the Arts happen.

If you would like to participate in next year's Festival of the Arts, please contact Erin Donnally at Donnally@stuaf.umass.edu.

Sasha Lapkin can be reached at alapkin@gmail.com

Spring Concert Roars

Last night the University of Massachusetts hosted its annual Spring Concert, showcasing such acts as Talib Kweli, Ben Folds, and OK Go. Above, lead singer and guitarist of OK Go, Damian Kulash, plays in front of a Mullins Center crowd. Check out tomorrow's Arts and Living section for a full recap of last night's show.

Rose Hill rocks through U.S.

MICHAEL HARDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The young rock band, Rose Hill Drive, played an inspired set to a privileged, small crowd in Northampton at the Pearl Street Nightclub on Thursday night. They silently came onto the stage and promptly began their 200-mph song, "Showdown."

The Eastern part of the United States has not been privy to Rose Hill Drive's rock mayhem until now. They are currently on their first tour through these parts and are beginning to make some waves. For a young band who just released their self-titled debut studio album, a tour like this can be grueling, but the band is optimistic.

"For our first time there, I thought it was fantastic," guitarist Dan Sproul said of the Pearl Street Nightclub. "There are so many times you go to a club for the first time, you play for the bartender and the sound guys. I was pleasantly surprised for sure."

The set, clocking in at just under two hours, included most of their album, three new songs they've written and a few covers, notably Black Sabbath's "Fairies Wear Boots." Their tracks, "The Guru" and "Cool Cody," were the highlights, amazing the crowd like a 10-second Camaro.

Rose Hill Drive gets compared to many classic rock bands, but they are more than that. They grew up listening to all things rock. Singer and bassist Jake Sproul growls arena-rock vocals with a punk-rock attitude, while drummer, Nate Barnes, lays down the rhythm in a '90s rock style. Dan Sproul shreds the guitar as if he is possessed by eccentric rock spirits battling each other. If the time capsules of every rock genre were mixed into one giant capsule and then blown up, that is Rose Hill Drive.

See ROSE HILL on page 6

'Urinetown' is pee for perfect

UMass Theater Guild combines humor with high energy

STEPHANIE MCPHERSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This past weekend, the UMass Theater Guild staged the Mark Hollmann and Greg Kotis show "Urinetown: The Musical!" directed by Mike Devlin. Friday night's house was full, and it's safe to say that no one in the audience was disappointed. The entire show was hilarious and highly entertaining.

You know what they say – bad dress rehearsal, great performances. After the final dress rehearsal of "Urinetown," Ben Sharton, who was a member of the ensemble, said that if that old adage is true, "we are bound for Broadway." The dress rehearsal was full of injuries and breaking set pieces. All of that was in the past, however, during the actual performances, which went along the lines of Sharton's prediction.

Each member of the cast was right on the mark in their portrayal of citizens in a water-deprived city that taxes its residents's use of public toilets. "Urinetown: The Musical!" is a farce on all musicals, and this was brought to the forefront wonderfully.

Every actor brought their own unique qualities to the show. Kate Richardson, an audience member at Friday night's show, said, "plays usually have one or two people who bring the show down a little, but this whole cast is amazing and so talented." Richardson went on to say, "Everyone had great comedic timing; I was cracking up the whole time!"

Before the show started, cast members began to wander through the audience, in character, begging for a "penny for a pee." There was a funny beginning sketch in which Officers Lockstock and Barrel gave the general rules of the theater. This got the audience involved with the characters, and it set the pace for the rest of the show, in which the narrators frequently spoke directly to the audience.

The hero of the show, Bobby Strong, was played by Eric Rehm. According to his biography in the program, Rehm "hopes to one day be a mildly successful actor," and that dream is not far-fetched at all, judging by his performance on Friday night. He was completely convincing as the good-hearted leader of the rebellious poor. According to Rehm, he got "the money notes" in this show, and when the time came, he sold them.

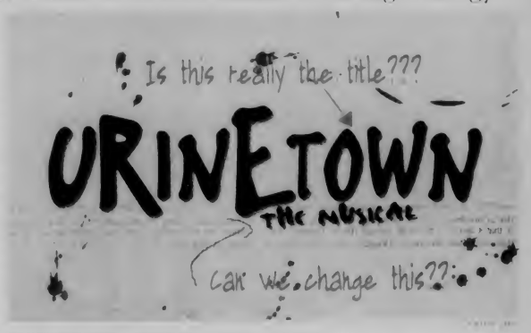
The cast was full of many other memorable performances, including Vanessa Calantropo, a graduate of UMass, and Conor Shanahan, a senior communications major. The former played a disgruntled, hook-handed public amenity official and the latter was a policeman who narrated the show and carried out the dirty work of the city's rich. Both were hilarious and thoroughly entertaining to watch.

The choreography was fantastically high energy, and added a level of professionalism to the show, thanks to Chris Kane. Each song had a completely different set of moves, the most fun to watch being "Snuff that Girl," a jazz inspired song, and "Cop Song," during which the cast used flashlights for a cool effect.

Every detail of the show was flawless, from the set to the costumes to the hair and makeup. Katy Staley, a UMass student and part of Friday's audience, said it was "incredible. I always like the Theater Guild performances."

"Urinetown: The Musical!" followed in the tradition of high-energy, fun Guild shows, and it was pure entertainment for anyone who attended.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcpherson@student.umass.edu



The UMass Theater Guild put on the comical musical "Urinetown: The Musical!" a show originally created by Mark Hollmann and Greg Kotis.

Third time isn't the charm for 'Spiderman'

KATE BAUER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's hard to truly make a good sequel. If the first film did well, the pressure's on to deliver a second that can top the first. Few films succeed, and many fail: Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Man's Chest, Rush Hour 2, Hannibal, Men In Black II, Ocean's 12 and The Matrix Reloaded. The curse of the sequel seems to be a trend in Hollywood as of late, and only a handful of films have succeeded at breaking that mold, hailed as being as good if not better than their originals. Recents include The Bourne Supremacy and Shrek 2 (coincidentally both coming out with third installments this summer).

I'm sad to admit that the third installment of the Spiderman franchise, after attaining praise from critics and fans alike for its first two installments, fails to keep its charm going. A badly layered and underdeveloped storyline, Spidey's third visit to the big screen is a rocky one.

It's certainly understandable that Spidey has (Tobey Maguire) a complicated life. School, his boss, a girlfriend and, this time, a trio of bad guys are all keeping him very busy. But this time around, the whole city is on his side, even holding a parade in his honor when he rescues the police chief's daughter (Gwen Stacy (Bryce Dallas Howard). He even lets all the fame get to his head a bit, declaring to Mary Jane at the parade "they love me!" Spiderman, aka Peter Parker, thinks he's finally found a balance between his life with Mary Jane and his duties as Spiderman, but as is always the case with the web slinger, the good never lasts.

Sticking to that formula, director Sam Raimi, along with brother Ivan Raimi and Alvin Sargent, has concocted a multiple-character story, but remains centered around Spidey's inability to control his two lives. Yet this time around, he doesn't lose his powers, he gains something else.

A meteorite crashes to Earth from who-knows-where, depositing an icky, gooey substance on to Manhattan to, as we can only assume, wreak some unknown evil on whomever it attaches itself. Never explained as to why it's there or where it came from, the black ooze latches onto Spiderman, turning his suit black and giving him even more power and agility. But the new drug has a side affect-the black "symbiote" emphasizes aggression, turning Spiderman, and Parker, into an egotistical

The blockbuster action movie "Spiderman 3" opened this weekend, showcasing its weak story line and formulaic devices. Regardless of its artistic quality, the film collected roughly $148 million in its first three days.

See SPIDER on page 6

Tobey Maguire plays Peter Parker, aka Spiderman, the crime-fighting, comic-book hero.

GTLO rocks in Noho

Led Zeppelin tribute revives authentic sound

ZACHARY DEL NERO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

In the circle of tribute bands, there is a benchmark known as the "eyes closed test." Recognized not so much as a possibility but rather a goal, those that pass sound exactly like the original. Realistically, no such group exists, but Get The Led Out (GTLO) came as close as any last Saturday night at Pearl Street.

A relatively small crowd waited with anticipation while crewmembers set up the stage for GTLO, the Led Zeppelin tribute act backed by the legendary Jimmy Page himself.

People were still sitting patiently on the steps to the side when, without warning, the instantly recognizable hook of "Rock 'n' Roll" exploded into the room. Within a few seconds, everyone had crowded to the stage, feet tapping furiously to the classic hit. With eyes squeezed shut and lips pulled back into a grimace, vocalist Paul Sinclair belted out the lyrics with accuracy and force enough to make any Led Zep devotee tingle with satisfaction.

One sentiment was shared throughout the room: these guys rocked hard. What was more, they sounded uncannily like the virtuosos of hard rock from over 30-years ago. After "Rock 'n' Roll," the group meandered through a long list of Zeppelin staples, from stomping anthems such as "The Ocean" to psychedelic epics such as "Dazed and Confused."

The first note of every number brought a positive reaction from the crowd. Stage presence was excellent, from Sinclair's confident strut to Paul Hammond and Jimmy Marchiano taming their guitars. Slower songs such as "Babe, I'm Gonna Leave You," featured smoke machines and hypnotic lighting. After delivering a few more hard tunes, among them "Black Dog" and "Your Time Is Gonna Come," the group launched into an acoustic set, a recent addition for the current tour. With three acoustic guitars on stage, the complexities of "Battle of Evermore" and "Going to California," were realistic and mesmerizing. The mystical lyrics and gentle tunes of the set were an enjoyable break from the hammering rock themes.

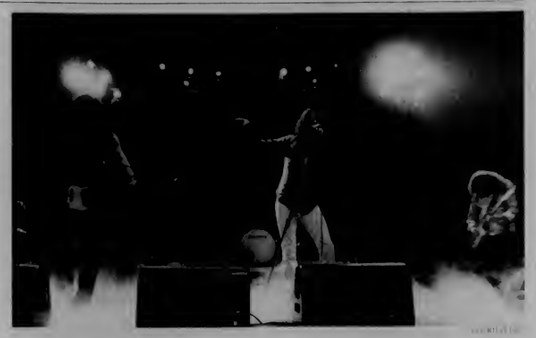
During any performance by a Led Zeppelin cover band, questions always present themselves. Will the group dare to perform the mind-bending "Moby Dick?" Will they attempt sacred notes of "Stairway to Heaven?" Returning to the harder side of Zeppelin, the furious riff of "Moby Dick" sent many into frenzy. Sinclair and the guitarists left the stage, leaving drummer Adam Ferraioli to tackle John Bonham's solo. The audience grew quiet. Ferraioli steadily built himself a beat, picking up the pace every 10 seconds or so. When the beat was near breaking point, the drumsticks flew into a mania of sound.

For the first time of the evening, liberty was taken with a Zep song as Ferraioli created an original solo, cymbals smashing. After a minute of tumultuous drumming, Ferraioli threw the sticks backstage and emulated Bonham's signature style of barehanded playing. Slowly, Ferraioli brought the beat back before stopping. Silence took the room for not more than a few seconds, but most knew exactly what was coming. Those that didn't were practically knocked off their feet as Hammond and Marchiano literally jumped onto the stage, bringing back the thundering riff.

After "Moby Dick," Marchiano picked up an acoustic guitar. Sinclair told the crowd, "Jimmy is going to pick out a tune. Everyone has to sing along, that's a rule." As the beautiful intro filled the room, many closed their eyes. The artists on stage became noticeably more involved with the music as well, showing respect for the song. "Stairway to Heaven" is a spiritual experience for many, and attempting to cover the song faithfully is a tall order. During the ending torrent of guitar solos, the musicians sounded more like Led Zeppelin than any other number. Hammond kneeled on the edge of the stage, holding up his guitar, fingers flying. As Sinclair spoke the ending lines, members of the audience opened their eyes, smiling.

GTLO delivered what was promised: a duplication of Led Zeppelin's beloved songs performed with jaw-dropping accuracy and a great stage presence, to boot. Sinclair was there with every "oh" and "ah" while Hammond's roarlng power chords shook the audience from head to toe. Sinclair only had one thing to say after the show. "Thanks for coming. We live for this music."

Zachary Del Nero can be reached at zdelnero@student.umass.edu



Led Zeppelin tribute band Get The Led Out performed on Saturday night to a modest-sized crowd at Northampton's Pearl Street Ballroom.

Bassist Paul Piccari, left, and guitarist Paul Hammond, right, jam at a House of Blues gig in Atlantic City, N.J. on Sept. 9, 2006.

RHD talks on music industry

COURTESY PHOTO

On Thursday night rock band Rose Hill Drive performed at the Pearl Street Nightclub, opening with their fast-paced song "Showdown."

ROSE HILL from page 5

The Who's Pete Townsend raves about them. Rolling Stone Magazine listed them as a band to look out for and the band is preparing to embark on a European tour.

"It's humbling and that's a really important thing," Dan Sproul said of the success. "It keeps you in check."

For a band like Rose Hill Drive, it is tough to gain maximum exposure in the current state of the music industry. Indie rock and Emo are big right now, and the art of creating a full album has become less important.

"Man, it's changing so much," Dan Sproul said. "I think it's developing into something new. The fact that you can get music on the Internet now with sharing, you know it's cool and it's not at the same time. It's really bad ass that you can get music whenever you want it, and whatever music you want. I think people deserve that, but it takes a toll on the other end. The art scene, the creative sh*t is really flat."

For a trio of laid-back musicians from Boulder, Colo., they sure do know how to rock out.

The second opener, Palace In Thunderland, hailing from Western Mass., played a stoned out, heavy set. They were at their best when the slow, psychedelic death riffs took over.

For those looking for a short road trip, Rose Hill Drive is playing this Tuesday night, May 8, in Boston at Hennessey's in Faneuil Hall. Tickets are $8.

Mike Hardman can be reached at Mhardman@student.umass.edu.

Too much quirk for Spidey

SPIDER from page 5

and violent person. Soon Parker's ditched his heart-of-gold nerd for a sexier, swinger-type who likes to strut down the street to Chubby Checker's "The Twist."

Now, the Spiderman films have always had a bit of quirkiness to them (the director is after all famous for his Evil Dead series), but this time around, the quirks are a little too much. There are fewer laughs, most directed at how ridiculous Parker looks trying to act like a bad boy while sporting eyeliner, and even the climactic fight scene inside a construction site seems shoddy. There's even a dance number (I wish I were kidding). Perhaps my expectations were too high, but this movie fails to entertain in comparison to the first two.

An interesting collection of bad guys fills out the film this time, but their screen time is reduced to secondary players instead of real threats. Harry Osborne, Parker's longtime pal, has decided to fully crossover to the dark side and avenge his father's death, taking up the mantle of the Goblin, this time around simply known as the New Goblin. Osborne's accessories have changed too, switching his father's glider for a snowboard-style hovercraft and a facemask instead of a helmet. Honestly, it looks like he's heading for the Berkshires. At least he's got a cool sword.

Flint Marko (Thomas Haden Church), a petty thief who accidentally gets trapped within a molecular experiment that changes his physique into sand, transforms into the misunderstood villain Sandman. He also turns out to be Uncle Ben's true killer, giving the new dark-and-twisted Spidey all the more reason to hunt him down and bring on some pain. Surprisingly, it's Church's performance that brings the emotional punch to the film, a once-ordinary guy who was just trying to help his ailing daughter.

Venom seems to be the only one in the film who actually enjoys getting his bad on, saying it "makes me happy," and who could have been the biggest threat to Spiderman? He's unpredictable, like some teen that isn't thinking about the consequences. He's Parker's mirror image, his evil twin. The same powers, abilities, even lifestyles. Venom was once Eddie Brock, a struggling photographer vying for the same staff job at The Daily Bugle as Parker. But when it appears that Parker has taken everything away from him, his anger doesn't just turn to vengeance, but pure madness.

Now here was the potential for Raimi to add an interesting twist to the film, a sort of Spidey versus his alter ego. But sadly, Venom gets the least amount of screen time, and is dispensed a little too easily for being Spiderman's evil twin. The trailer certainly gave the film the prospect of one truly scary villain, but Venom's screeches and razor sharp teeth have been reduced to the third act.

But like all Hollywood blockbusters, or really bad sequels, Spidey works to set everything right after the mess he's made. Relationships need to be patched, bad guys need to be roped (or webbed) in to save the city from peril and someone has to die.

The Spiderman story arc, both in the comics and films, has centered on Parker struggling with his two identities and inability to lead a normal young adult life, but when you keep attempting to squeeze a storyline out of it, then the premise starts to wear thin. The first time around it was about learning to lead a double life, the second realizing that double life isn't easy to live with and the third now about keeping that double life together. The trend's a bit worn out.

This film marks the beginning of what promises to be the biggest summer in history, but if all of the Hollywood mega-budgeted pics turn out like Spiderman 3, then it doesn't look like this summer's off to a good start.

Kate Bauer can be reached at Kbauer@student.umass.edu

COURTESY SONY PICTURES RELEASING

Kirsten Dunst stars alongside Maguire as his love interest in director Sam Raimi's action flick "Spiderman 3."

From Your Dorm* To The Airport And Back!
*central campus pick-up - during heavy travel time
VIP Exclusive Service
Door-to-Door Service
Charter & Group Service
Professional Drivers
New, Well Maintained Vans
Scheduled Van-Share Service
Call: 253-1350 or Out of Area Toll-Free at 1-800-872-8752
Or Book Online at www.valleytransporter.com
Valley Transporter
The Easy Way to the Airport!

Bulk up your resume and write for Arts and Living.

UMass wins 23rd straight

BRIAN TEPERACK | COLLEGIAN

Sophomore right fielder Samantha Salato is one of six Minutewomen hitting above .300. She has three home runs and 20 RBIs to go along with her .310 batting average. She went 4-for-11 in the four games this weekend, and contributed with two RBIs and her third home run of the season.

SOFTBALL from page 10

the weekend, made it difficult for the Minutewomen to put together anything resembling a rally.

"In a game like [the second game of yesterday's doubleheader] where nothing goes your way and you're making solid contact, but you just can't push a run across, you just have to stay patient and poised at the plate," senior captain Amanda Acampora said.

The patience Acampora spoke of came into play in the sixth inning of Game 2 on Sunday. Following a Whitney Mollica groundout, Acampora came to the plate with the bases empty in the bottom of the sixth inning.

La Salle pitcher Laura DeZolt fed Acampora a steady diet of outside pitches all day, including the first four pitches she saw in her at-bat in the sixth.

Prior to the fifth pitch of the at-bat, DeZolt shook off her catcher, Michelle Sullivan, four times before nodding and moving into her delivery. This raised an alarm in Acampora's head that DeZolt may stray from the scouting report and try to sneak something by her.

The 3-1 count allowed Acampora to anticipate both pitch type and location, knowing she could let it pass if she didn't guess right.

"I saw [DeZolt] shaking the catcher off and in my mind I just thought it was coming inside so I was able to sit on the inside pitch," Acampora said.

Acampora turned on the inside fastball and hit a towering shot over the left-field fence. The solo homerun, her ninth of the season, extended UMass' lead to 2-0, providing Sanders with some breathing room.

For Acampora, the homerun was especially satisfying since it came on Senior Day.

"It feels awesome," Acampora said. "It's my last regular season at-bat at home, you really can't ask for a better way to go out."

Two other UMass seniors made their presence felt in the game. Michen Holness and Jackie Teman entered the game as pinch runners and came around to score.

Teman pinch ran for Mollica who reached base after DeZolt threw wildly to first base. A single from sophomore Samantha Salato moved Teman to second base for freshman Jessica Serio.

Serio lined a DeZolt offering into the left-centerfield gap. Teman scored easily from second, but La Salle flawlessly executed a relay throw and nailed Salato at the plate to end the inning.

Serio's transition from third base to catcher early in the season slowed her development as a hitter. The transition appears to be complete, not only has Serio become an excellent defensive catcher, her bat is heating up as well. She was 5-for-7 over the weekend with one RBI. She also demonstrated a fantastic understanding of the strike zone, walking six times in 13 plate appearances.

Her average dapped as low as .125 not too long ago but is now at .242.

"She's got a great eye at the plate and she's also brought her batting average up about 100 points in the last week or so," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "She's definitely coming into her own. I think she's doing a great job."

In the early game, the offense pushed five runs across the plate, but Balschmiter was the story.

She pitched her 28th complete game of the season and her 16 strikeouts broke her own school record of 15. After a 7-8 start, Balschmiter has won her last 17 decisions – including two no hitters. Her record is now 24-8.

The second of the two no hitters came in Friday's win over Fordham. Balschmiter's command of her overpowering fastball and her changeup kept the Ram hitters off balance – of the 21 outs recorded, 13 were ground-ball outs.

"She moved the ball around really effectively," Sortino said. "She got them to swing at some changeups. She surprised them with her changeup. She had a good mix of pitches and got them swinging early in the count."

With one out in the seventh and final inning, Balschmiter still had a perfect game intact when the Rams' left fielder, Krystle Henry, hit a roller between first and second base. Junior second baseman Stacy Cullington ranged to her left, but the ball skipped off her outstretched glove and Henry reached on what the scorer ruled an error. Balschmiter retired the next two batters to preserve the UMass victory and the no-hitter.

The biggest threat to Balschmiter's gem came in the top of the sixth. The inning's first batter, Erin Fisher, drove a Balschmiter offering to deep right-center. Senior Candice Molinari took off and the ball fell harmlessly into her glove just before she reached the warning track. The fly out was the only ball the Rams hit out of the infield all game.

"I don't get many balls out there so I just try and get my best jump when I actually do see a ball come off the bat like that," Molinari said. "I just tried to track it as well as I could and get a good jump."

Two innings earlier, Mollica provided the Minutewomen with all the runs they would need with a two-run home run.

A Cullington single earlier in the inning gave UMass its first hit of the day. Mollica came to the plate with two outs and sophomore Davina Hernandez, who pinch ran for Cullington, at first.

With the count at 1-0, Mollica turned on an offering from Fordham ace Sara Kinney. The ball easily cleared the left-field fence, giving UMass a 2-0 lead.

The homerun proved the difference in the second game against Fordham as well. Senior Amanda Morin hit a three-run shot, her first of the year, to kick off the UMass scoring. Salato provided the game-winning runs with a two-run homer of her own in the third – it was her third homer of the season.

Joe Melom can be reached at jmelom@student.umass.edu.

BRIAN TEPERACK | COLLEGIAN

Freshman shortstop Whitney Williams and the Minutewomen have won 29 consecutive games at home, dating back to last season.

Balschmiter anchors Minutewomen

Follows no-hitter with record 16-strikeout performance

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The timing couldn't be any better for the University of Massachusetts softball team.

Three days before the Atlantic 10 Tournament gets underway at the UMass Softball Complex, the Minutewomen's ace, Brandice Balschmiter, put together one of her best weekends to date.

The Maroon and White faced its top competition in the conference in Fordham, and then finished with La Salle, a bubble team on the verge of breaking into the postseason.

The Minutewomen were perfect from Friday to Sunday, as they have been since A-10 play began in late March. But it was Balschmiter – who was nearly perfect herself on Friday – who anchored the team through the weekend.

She followed that up on Saturday with her second save of the season, in relief of freshman pitcher Bailey Sanders.

Balschmiter then capped the weekend with a school-record 16 strikeouts in Game 1 of the doubleheader against the Explorers Sunday.

She started off the final stretch of the regular season by pitching 6 1/3 innings of perfect softball against the Rams Friday afternoon. Balschmiter had perhaps her best stuff all season, striking out five batters and keeping the bases untouched until the seventh inning.

Second baseman Stacy Cullington let a routine ground ball past her glove and into right field with one out in the seventh. Her error was the only mark on an otherwise clean score sheet for Balschmiter in a 6-0 win.

"I knew [about the perfect game] since the fifth inning," Balschmiter said. "I was hoping for three more runs and we could just walk away with [a win by run-rule]."

The game went a full seven innings, however, and the sophomore picked up her third career no-hitter in the process. Balschmiter had both her fastball and newfound changeup working for her Friday, and it had the Fordham lineup completely baffled.

"I thought her best performance was on Friday," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "She had total command of all of her pitches that day."

Saturday was a different type of game for Balschmiter. Sanders started and pitched well through the first four innings but let the Rams back into the game in the fifth, giving up three runs (one earned).

A single and two walks loaded the bases, and after an RBI single, an error by shortstop Whitney Williams brought in two more runs, making the score 5-3.

Sortino kept a short leash on Sanders in the sixth. After she gave up a leadoff single, Balschmiter came in to close out the final two innings.

She gave up one hit, struck out one batter and held the Rams scoreless through the rest of the game, clinching the top seed in the A-10 Tournament in the process.

"I thought she came into a tight situation and showed a lot of poise," Sortino said. "She's had to do that a couple times for us this season, and I felt pretty good about it."

"It's a little bit more nerve-wracking," Balschmiter said of her relief appearance. "You want to go in and pick each other up. I picked Bailey up, and she's done it for me too, like a 1-2 punch."

Today's game was a different one for Balschmiter, who watched several balls fly over the fence just foul in the first inning.

Her command was not as strong early in the game as it was on Friday, or even Saturday, but after spending time between innings in the bullpen, Balschmiter held the Explorers to two hits.

Balschmiter set a new UMass record with 16 strikeouts on Sunday, breaking her own record of 15, which she achieved twice last season, the last coming in the NCAA Amherst Regional against Lehigh.

"I thought I started off pretty rough," Balschmiter said. "I gave up two pretty long foul balls, and thank God they were foul."

"She didn't have her sharpest stuff," Sortino said. "She came out to the bullpen and worked herself back out of it. She was pretty brilliant [after that]."

Balschmiter pushed her record to 24-8 on the season. She goes back to work Thursday in the A-10 Tournament. Last year, Balschmiter threw two one-hitters in the tournament en route to earning the A-10 Tournament MVP award.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jermrice@student.umass.edu.

BRIAN TEPERACK | COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Brandice Balschmiter followed her no-hitter on Friday with a 16-strikeout, two-hit shutout performance in Game 1 yesterday.

New York is wrong fit for the Rocket

PICARD from page 10

ously believed to be true about the man.

Last year, he made the easy decision to stay home in Houston. The Red Sox were, like Hendricks told me just days after last year's signing, "beaten by a nose in a five-horse field, that included retirement."

So what exactly changed this year that made Clemens choose last year's third choice? If anything, Boston bolstered its rotation and bullpen to be one of the best in baseball, something New York didn't do, which can be seen in trading Randy Johnson.

If you're coming back to baseball at age 44 to win, Houston is certainly out of the picture mainly because of poor run support. That leaves Boston and New York, two teams with explosive bats and strong closers. The difference, however, lies within their respective starting rotations.

The Red Sox boast one of the strongest rotations in recent team history, while the Yankees, well, don't. Sure, Mussina and Wang are back from DL stints, but who's to say those hamstring injuries won't come back to haunt them throughout the year?

And Pavano was the team's opening day starter, right?

But Camp Clemens isn't too concerned about the pitching woes.

"We think the staff will stabilize, and Roger will be a part of it," Hendricks said in an e-mail late Sunday night.

The Rocket's decision to return to New York downright boggles my mind, and that isn't because I'm from South Boston. It's because I never envisioned Clemens coming back to baseball in an attempt to "save" a team. I never thought that's what all this was about.

The Yankees were desperate for Clemens. If you can't see it in the team's injury report, you can certainly see it in the $4-5 million they're about to pay him per month. The Red Sox didn't need Clemens, but his presence as the team's fifth starter would have made for everything but world domination, and I'm not even too sure you could rule that out.

The bottom line is, if Clemens wanted to join a team that had the best chance of winning, he'd be suiting up for a minor league stint in Pawtucket in a few weeks. Instead, he's coming back to play the role of a superhero in the Bronx.

The Rocket's return to New York is great for baseball. I'm just not too sure it's the best thing for Clemens.

Danny Picard is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu

Roger Clemens walks by New York Yankees GM Brian Cashman after a short bullpen session yesterday at Yankee Stadium.

Check out the Daily Collegian Sports Blog at
dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com
for more coverage of your favorite UMass sports.

MOVING ON?
POTTER'S
AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Rent a Truck or Cargo Van
Starting at $19.95
Special Reduced Rates
Monday to Thursday
Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston, New York & New Jersey
One Way Rentals
Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

Spiders crawl on UM

Minutemen take Friday's game, but drop series to Richmond

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A crazy ninth-inning comeback, a walk-off victory, a three-run bomb and an ejection; this weekend's series between the Massachusetts baseball team and the Richmond Spiders had it all.

But after the dust settled on the wild weekend, the Minutemen (18-20, 10-11 Atlantic 10) ended up falling further behind in the race for the final playoff spot in the A-10, dropping two-of-three from the Spiders (28-20, 16-5 A-10) at Earl Lorden Field.

"When you win the first game and end up losing [the series] it's going to be disappointing," Garrity said. "They have one of the better teams in our conference, and we showed we can play with them. It just would have been nice to take two of three from them."

Friday's game had the most drama. As UMass starter Chris Lloyd kept tossing scoreless innings, the Minutemen scored a run in the third and fourth to give him the lead. They added two insurance runs in the eighth, and Lloyd trotted to the mound in the ninth looking for the shutout.

After retiring 18 of the previous 19 hitters, Lloyd got into trouble to begin the ninth – walking Vince Riggi and allowing Hank Coogan to reach after making a throwing error on his bunt attempt. With runners on first and third and nobody out, UMass coach Mike Stone walked to the mound, but elected to keep in Lloyd to face outfielder Joe White.

With one swing of the bat, White cut the lead to one and sent Stone right back to the mound to pull Lloyd, as he laced the 2-2 pitch over the right field wall for his first home run of the season.

Bryan Adamski replaced Lloyd, and the first batter he faced Matt McKenna reached on an error by third baseman Ryan Franczek. After a sacrifice moved him to second for the first out, McKenna tagged up to third on the deep fly ball to left-center by Andrew Justice. That tag-up loomed large, as it allowed McKenna to score on the infield single by Benji Marshall – tying the game at 4-4.

UMass had a chance in the bottom of the ninth, loading the bases after a double and two consecutive walks. With the bases loaded and two down, Spiders closer Brian Alas struck out Garrity on a full count so send the game to extra innings.

After Adamski took care of the side in order in the tenth, the Minutemen had another opportunity to close out the ball game – and this time, they delivered. Bill Rankin led off the inning with a single up the middle, and was sacrificed to second by Brian Baudinet. Travis Munsey then pounced on the first offering from Alas, singling up the middle – and scoring a hustling Rankin for the game's winning run. Rankin was mobbed at home plate by his teammates.

"It was a great win for us," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "It was just unfortunate that we had to win in 10 innings."

Saturday's contest was a little more tame, with the Spiders taking a 3-1 decision on the strength of a three-run blast by star first baseman Joe Mahoney. The 6-foot-6, 260-pound Mahoney had been quiet in the series, but broke out when he sent Jared Freni's offering over the right-field wall for his conference-leading 14th home run in the third inning.

Those three runs were all Richmond starter Matt Zielinski needed, as the freshman left-hander tossed a complete game, allowing the one run on six hits. Despite going the distance for the first time this season, Zielinski didn't record a single strikeout. He entered the game having struck out 58 batters in 62 innings.

Trouble almost brewed in the fifth, as Freni and Mahoney had words for each other after Freni hit Mahoney with his first pitch in the at-bat. The umpires quickly intervened and trouble was averted.

Freni pitched well, only making the one mistake on the long ball by Mahoney. He took the loss, however, allowing three runs in 5 2/3 innings. Mike Dicato was terrific in relief, allowing just one base runner in 3 1/3 innings.

In Sunday's rubber match, the Spiders jumped on starter Tim Comiskey – knocking him out in the third inning after he allowed six walks and three runs. Richmond picked up one run in the sixth and two more in the seventh off reliever Rory McDonald to take a 6-0 lead.

UMass wanted nothing to do with Mahoney, walking him four times, including three intentionally. Cleanup hitter Riggi made the Minutemen pay for that decision in the first, following the walk with an RBI single. He almost made them pay in a big way in the seventh, just missing a grand slam as Jim Cassidy took it away from him in left field with a terrific catch.

The Minutemen put a comeback together in the seventh, getting four straight singles after Franczek reached on an error to start the inning. With the bases loaded, Lou Proietti bounced into a double play, scoring the third run of the inning. Cassidy then struck out, but he reached on the past ball as the runner from third scampered home.

With the score 6-4, Alas came in for the Spiders, retiring Adam Tempesta for the third out. He finished off the Minutemen with two additional shutout innings, registering his 12th save.

UMass maintains the seventh spot in the conference, but is now two games back of Xavier with six conference games remaining. The Minutemen meet the Musketeers in Cincinnati, Ohio for three games starting on May 17.

"I haven't been doing much scoreboard watching, but we definitely have to win both our remaining series," Garrity said. "We have to play our best baseball in the next two weeks."

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu

BRIAN TEIXEIRA/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore second baseman Adam Tempesta leads the Minutemen with a .299 batting average. He went 2-for-12 in the three-game set against Richmond over the weekend. UMass hosts UConn tomorrow.

Second in ECACs for UMass

Minutewomen finish behind Bucknell, tie for second place

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

WORCESTER — It's similar to a track meet. Rowing is a sport of seconds and inches. The Massachusetts rowing team fell victim to this philosophy at the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference Championships this past weekend in Worcester as it finished tied for second, along with Rhode Island and Buffalo. Bucknell won the regatta, with Marist coming in fifth place.

However, the name of the game in this particular regatta was moral victory. After previously facing URI in two regattas before this one, the Maroon and White was finally able to take out its conference rivals in the Varsity Eight Grand Final race. Four seconds behind the eventual winner, Bucknell, UMass finished four seconds with open water (water visible between one boat and the boat behind it) ahead of the Rams. In a day, with the Minutewomen only capturing one medal, the sweetest victory of all was finally beating Rhode Island.

UMass coach Jim Dietz alluded to the fact that his players have done quite well for themselves, despite not having access to on-water facilities very often, due to bad weather conditions.

"We missed a good three weeks this year due to bad weather conditions and now we're finally catching up," Dietz said. "And unfortunately the season is coming too quickly to an end."

The wild card at this weekend's regatta by far was Bucknell. While the Minutewomen have faced many of the numerous teams that were in Worcester this weekend, Bucknell has never before shown up at the ECAC's. In fact, the coach of Bucknell had to make the decision on whether to bring the team to Worcester this past weekend for the ECACs, or to bring them to Philadelphia this upcoming weekend for the Dad Vail regatta.

With the Minutewomen facing many fast crews this weekend, the weather cleared up none to soon. UMass was able to get in a full-weeks worth of time on the water. Junior Dana Pulda, coxswain of the silver-medal-winning Varsity Eight boat, believes that even though the team got a late start to the season because of bad weather and the fitness level of the team was hampered because of the lack of time on the water, they have come a long way this season.

"The fitness level [of the team] was pretty low starting off and has definitely improved recently and that definitely showed this race because we were able to beat URI who we had not [beaten] twice previously," Pulda said. "I think that this race really showed how much stronger we've gotten over the course of this season so maybe the other teams have sort of plateaued and remained at a steady pace and we keep improving."

Yet it is very rare that a regatta is held in positive weather conditions. More often than not, there is something hindering the rowers. In the case of this past weekend, there was a stiff tail-wind disturbing them. Even though the tail-wind was traveling with the boats, it still made for a hectic atmosphere, making it even harder for rowers to concentrate and making it even more imperative for the coxswain in each boat to make correct calls in the boat.

While the Varsity Eight was one of the biggest highlights of the day, the Second Varsity Eight did well enough in their heat of the qualifying race to be placed into the grand finals. Senior Kristen Boyce believed that the success from the boat's first place finish in its race last year could be carried over into this year's race in order to give the boat an added boost.

"I was in the same boat last year and we won the race so we really thought that we could do it again," Boyce said. "It was a great race. We took some risks; we raced the beginning of the race faster than we normally would."

"We all gave it our all," Boyce added. "We finished that race and we couldn't paddle another stroke and that's the most important thing."

In many of the races there were multiple crews and even multiple heats. However, there were a few races in which two boats went head-to-head. Senior Maria Arcari believes that although the Lightweight Eight boat lost their race that they performed admirably.

"Everyone was pulling hard and giving their all and we know what we need to fix for our race next weekend," Arcari said. "I think we just need more time together on the water."

Note that the Lightweight Eight boat has only been together for one season.

The Minutewomen look to take their positive mentality from beating Rhode Island into the Dad Vail regatta in Philadelphia, its final regatta of the season.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

KRISTY BARRY/COLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts rowing team finished in a tie for second with Rhode Island and Buffalo this weekend in the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference Championships. Bucknell finished first.

KRISTY BARRY/COLLEGIAN

The Minutewomen finished ahead of rival Rhode Island in this weekend's Varsity Eight Grand Final race. They travel to Philadelphia for the Dad Vail regatta, their final regatta of the season.

KISS A SENIOR Goodbye

Send your favorite graduating Senior a...

UMass Amherst Champagne Glass or a Class of 2007 Coffee Mug

...full of Hershey Kisses to celebrate graduation!

It's one graduation gift they won't forget!

Only $6.00 per glass or mug

Available at the Student Alumni Association table at the Campus Center Concourse April 25-26, May 1-3 and May 8-10 or at UMassAlumni.com/students.

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION SINCE 1869

GIVE US YOUR COMICS

(AND YOUR SOUL)

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

8		3	7		5
						6
					8	1 7
		2	9	1		6
		8	2		3	9
		1		4	8	2
7	3	9
1
			4		1	3 5

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"And you run, and you run to catch up with the sun but it's sinking."
-Pink Floyd

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK BY JOSH SHALEK

I'm so easily distracted
I should focus on my goals
You should focus on REVENGE
revenge?
Or winning the Olympic silver medal in men's wpe
I'm so easily distracted

RUNNING ON EMPTY BY DAN BEADLE

LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELL

ACROSS
1 Histories
6 Currency
10 Goes on to say
14 Cause anxiety
15 Memory unit
16 Gather in
17 Juliet's beau
18 Burn the surface of 19 Wright or Man
20 Porterhouse and T-bone
22 Elitist
24 Pig place
25 Jerseys
27 Most pricey
29 Waterston or Donaldson
32 Collectors' groups
34 Have top billing
35 Rule of conduct
38 Orient Express, e.g.
41 Thespian
42 Spanish river
43 Window sill
44 Oil-producing rock
45 Mini-warehouse
47 Pedal extremities
49 Trudge along
50 B'way theater sign
51 "Lou Grant" star
54 Poet Teasdale
56 Yow, it's cold!
57 Smeltery waste
59 Talk show host Williams
63 Honshu
65 Soggy ground
67 Join forces
68 Bayh or Hunter
69 Gobi location
70 Foch and Simone
71 Wooded hollow
72 In the mail
73 Distributes cards

DOWN
1 Golfers' norms
2 Tons and tons
3 Unvarying
4 Actor Williams
5 Covering operations
6 "48 Hours" network
7 Affirmative votes
8 Put up with
9 Legendary figures
10 Jackie's second
11 Western outlaws
12 Bucolic valleys
13 Ali done in
21 Crystal gazer
23 Sukkot's stage
26 Mixes up
28 More uncommon
29 Health resorts
30 Crafty
31 Of a bone of a fool
33 Roasting rods
36 Singular performances
37 Instruments
39 Composer Stravinsky
40 "Finding ___"
46 Burn around
48 Diamond and Lagerfol
51 Flowed back
52 Took the wheel
53 Poker action
55 Actress Potts
58 Broad smile
60 Singer Turner
61 Lint-shortening abbr.
62 Fewer
64 NBC classic
66 ___ your heart out!

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

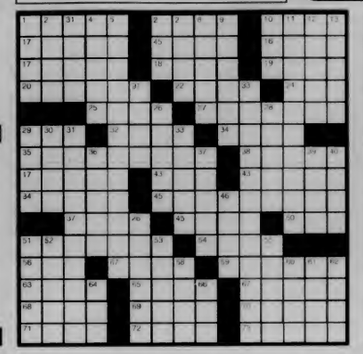
DELANO'S

$5 PITCHERS

$2 VODKA WELL DRINKS

GET YOUR BUTT DOWNTOWN!

"The Heart of downtown Amherst"



Continuing & Professional Education

UMASS AMHERST SUMMER SESSION 2007

Make plans to catch up - or get ahead!

- New online GenEds
- Same great faculty!
- Smaller classes
- Two Sessions:

I: June 4 – July 2
II: July 6 – August 22

Register now! By visiting us @ www.UMassUlearn.net/dc

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
There are two kinds of people: Cool Cats and Hot Dogs.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Send this horoscope to 15 more people in the next hour or your teeth with rot out.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Add an "o" to the end of your name for the day. You'll feel way more spunky.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Tango your way into the heart of a fine and bootylicious strumpet.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
You are deprived of citrus. Buy three grapefruits, juggle them, then eat.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Spend an entire day telling gross stories and eating even grosser meat products.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You're out of money. Either beg your parents or hit the streets in search of work.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
If you ever find that your thoughts parallel LL Cool J's Lyrics...you're a nympho.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
When you die you will be reincarnated as one of David Hasselhoff's many chest hairs.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Prepare yourself for two harsh weeks of being dominated by Mistress Academia.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Hungry Velociraptors will invade the campus in search of food. Food=freshmen.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Quit being such a hipster doofus.

Chicago Pizzaria

Free Delivery!

PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!

NOW OPEN FOR LUNCH!
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 11am-2am
Thurs-Sat: 11am-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Street Kung Fu The ultimate in personal safety. For class times call 413-325-1322

Like no other course, Army ROTC Join the wave of your generation's willingness to serve our country No strings attached! Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Center of town, 1,2,3 bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherst-lincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Get Hired Staffing Now, Inc helps people like you find work locally! We can help you find summer work or help jump start your career. We have great jobs available contact us at 413-529-7100 or check out our website at www.staffingnow.com

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must call 413-584-4746

Summer Job on Martha's Vineyard! Asst. Manager, retail clothing store in Edgartown. Richard 413-575-1579 or email rdwhite27@charter.net

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Jobs for the Environment Campaigne Offices in 60 cities! Work with Sierra Club and State Environmental Groups on a nation wide effort to Fight Global Warming this summer. Work with college students from across the country! Make $4000-$6000/ Summer. Career oppurtunites and benefits also available. Amherst office call: 413-256-6434. Boston Office call: 617-292-4810 or Call 1-800-75-Earth for opportunities in other cities. Visit our website at www.jobsthatmatter.org

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

EMPLOYMENT

WORK OUTDOORS THIS SUMMER Full time positions available in your hometown. Earn $8-12/hour Painting houses with a fun crew. Call 888-277-9787 or www.collegepro.com

Brandywine Apts. Needs a certified lifeguard. Full time hours flexible. Must work some weekends. $9.00/hr Call 549-0600 or stop by office.

Need a summer job? College Pro painters is hiring. Work with friends, steady hours, learn a valuable skill. Must be willing to work in the following areas: Milford, Millbury, Grafton, Auburn. Interviewers being held now. Please email collegepronorthbridge@yahoo.com

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Summer Jobs for the Environment Work with Environment Massachusetts on a campaign to Fight Global Warming and work with great people! Make $400-$600/week. Career opportunities and benefits available. Call Mel at 413-256-6434. Visit our website @ www.jobsthatmatter.org

HOUSE FOR RENT

3 Bedroom, Nice, recently updated. Near Bus stop. Also near Downtown Northampton $1200/month No pets. For June. Skibiski Realty 413-586-1827

HOUSE FOR RENT

House for rent on Cape Cod Rent for summer .3BR 2 bath house with large yard in Dennis. Available immediately $5k per month or $8K for entire summer. Call 617-312-3034

SERVICES

BUY ONE, GET ONE FREE Emergency Contraception (EC), prevents pregnancy up to 5 days after unprotected sex. Affordable and Condifential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992, wwwtapestryhealth.org

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MAY 7, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Sour note for season finale

UMass drops third one-goal game of season to Rutgers

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It turned out that Rutgers and Massachusetts both had their way on Senior Day.

UMass defeated rival Syracuse, 9-7, at Garber Field on April 28 in a feel-good win on Senior Day in Amherst. Rutgers had its Senior Day on Saturday at home, and the Minutemen were the victims, falling 9-8 after a late-game rally fell short.

Rutgers	9
UMass	8

UMass ends its regular season with a 7-7 overall record and a 4-3 record in the ECAC. Rutgers finishes one game over .500 at 7-6 and a similar 4-3 in-conference record.

Sophomore attack Jim Connolly and senior midfielder Andrew Recchione led the Minutemen with two goals apiece.

UMass will be looking for an at-large bid into the NCAA Tournament after the Georgetown Hoyas ended the Minutemen's hopes for winning the conference with an 8-7 victory over the Minutemen at Garber Field on April 21.

But the Minutemen suffered a familiar fate on Saturday, losing by one goal in a closely contested game. UMass has lost four games by one goal this season – Yale, Albany and Rutgers on the road, Georgetown at home – and has lost three games by three goals or less.

It has been a season of close-calls, and more often than not, they haven't gone the way of the Minuteman in 2007.

Saturday, UMass again came up just short. Rutgers senior Matt Gaines scored three goals, including the final goal that turned out to be the game-winner for his team.

The Minutemen went down 9-6 after Gaines notched his third goal of the game with 5:13 left in regulation to give Rutgers a three-goal cushion. Gaines put the ball past UMass goalie Doc Schneider in a man-up situation, as Connolly and defenseman David Von Voigt both drew penalties.

Rutgers capitalized on the two-man advantage with Gaines' goal, and UMass scored two goals in the final five minutes to make it 9-8, but time ran out on the Minutemen.

Senior Brian Jacovina scored with 1:52 left in regulation and Recchione brought UMass within one with just under a minute left. The Minutemen nearly tied the game with a Recchione score but a crease violation negated the goal and UMass fell in the last game of its regular season.

Junior Rory Pedrick, freshman Bobby Hayes and senior Denis Whelan also scored in the game. Senior captain Brett Garber was held scoreless despite 11 shots. Just two of those shots were on goal.

With two goals on Saturday, Connolly finished the season leading UMass in goals and scoring, netting 29 goals and handing out eight assists, good for 37 points on the year. Garber finished with 26 goals and six assists, totaling 32 points.

Recchione had 10 goals heading into Saturday and finished with 12 for the regular season on 66 shots. Connolly ended up with the best shooting percentage (.333) of the Minutemen with over 30 shots taken for the season.

The Minutemen await the selection committee's selection for at-large bids to the NCAA Tournament.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu.

Junior midfielder Rory Pedrick had one goal on three shots in UMass' regular-season finale loss to Rutgers on Saturday.

Return to New York was wrong decision

Danny Picard

It certainly wasn't your typical seventh-inning stretch yesterday at Yankee Stadium. In fact, it was everything you would least expect, and then some.

Over a month ago, before the first pitch of the 2007 Major League Baseball season, you would have been hard pressed to convince me that Roger Clemens would be playing anywhere but New York this season.

That was, until the Yankees pitching staff looked like it had fallen victim to a Tony Soprano beat down.

Mike Mussina, Chien-Ming Wang and Carl Pavano were each placed on the disabled list in the early stages of the season, and other than Alex Rodriguez' "how-do-you-like-me-now" historic April, there wasn't much to cheer about in the Bronx.

The Yankees, along with a new trainer, needed a savior. They needed a hero. They needed Roger Clemens.

But in the wake of all that's happened this season in New York, I wasn't so sure the Rocket needed them. His announcement to Yankees fans in the seventh inning of yesterday's game against the Seattle Mariners proved my assumption to be wrong, as Clemens signed a one-year deal worth a pro-rated $28 million to throw on the pinstripes one more time.

Being in contact with Clemens' agent, Randy Hendricks, for more than a year, I've followed all the drama that's come with the seven-time Cy Young award winner's journey to jump on a winner.

At least that's what I thought it was.

This latest move makes me question what Clemens is looking to get out of all this. For the past two years, he has waited until May to make a decision about his plans for the season that's already been underway for more than a month. The thought was that he wanted to play for a team that had the best chance of winning a World Series, and not jump into a rotation that was desperate for pitching.

But let's face it, that's exactly what New York was, and still may be. They've already had to put seven pitchers on the DL this year. Mussina and Wang missed most of April with hamstring injuries, while Pavano has been out of action since his second start of the season with a right elbow strain.

The news on the Pavano front didn't get any better Sunday, as it looks like he'll be having elbow surgery that could put him out of action for the remainder of his four-year, $40 million contract.

What does that have to do with Clemens, you ask?

It just backs up my point that New York may have been the right place for him back in March, but now it seems as if his return to the Bronx goes against anything I previ-

See PICARD on page 7

COURTESY GETTY IMAGES

Roger Clemens announced yesterday that he has signed a one-year, pro-rated $28 million deal with the New York Yankees for 2007.

Coen and Co. will look different next year

Minutemen eager to get 2007 started with some fresh faces

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Five months removed from losing to Appalachian State in the Division I Championship Subdivision title game, the Massachusetts football team got back on the field Saturday for its annual Maroon and White intersquad game.

The Minutemen used the spring practices, which culminated with the scrimmage Saturday, to take the edge off the learning curve come camp in August. With the graduation of many key players, University of Massachusetts coach Don Brown will have many new faces in the starting lineup.

"Spring has been good. The guys have worked tremendously hard," he said. "We found some young guys that are certainly starting to step up."

Quarterback Liam Coen was most impressed with the Minutemen's revamped offensive line. They lost two four-year starters in center Alex Miller and guard David Thompson – both of whom will be working out at NFL rookie camps in the coming weeks.

"Vladimir [Ducasse] is stepping up, Kevin Macon is stepping up ... we have some guys stepping up and it just comes down to execution," Coen said. "Today was kind of a culmination of the spring."

While acclimating the young players was going well for UMass, it was without some key members of last season's record-setting team. Tight end Brad Listorti, offensive lineman Matt Austin and wide receiver Mike Omar didn't participate in the scrimmage.

Listorti was a pleasant surprise after transferring from Rutgers and Omar showed flashes of brilliance before injuring a hamstring midway through the 2006 season. Austin was one of many stalwarts on the offensive line that allowed Steve Baylark to rush for his fourth 1,000-yard season.

"When we get all the pieces in place, by August, the roster will be settled and all those things, I'm sure we'll be in great shape," Brown said.

Coen added that the Minutemen had a tougher scrimmage on Thursday, easing up Saturday as to not injure any more players.

"That's why today was kind of, not breezed through, but we didn't want to get anybody else banged up," he said.

LOOKING GOOD

The running back situation will be one major question mark entering preseason camp. Brown has the tough task of replacing Steve Baylark, a four-year workhorse for the Minutemen.

Right now the front-runners are Matt Lawrence and Tony Nelson, with the latter most likely holding the advantage. Lawrence moved to fullback near the end of last season after spelling Baylark along with Tim Washington in the season's early stages.

The soon-to-be sophomore Nelson showed flashes of brilliance in the limited playing time he saw during the 2006 campaign. He carried the ball 47 times for 239 yards.

Nelson's biggest impact came in the blowout win over William and Mary. He scored the first three touchdowns of his career in that game, becoming the first UMass rookie (he redshirted in 2005) to do so since R.J. Cobbs in 2002.

"Tony looks great," Brown said. "He's had some big days during the course of spring. We're really happy with Tony and Matt Lawrence."

Nelson is listed at 210 lbs. on the Minutemen's Web site, a number that is probably outdated. He looked much thicker than that on Saturday.

GLAD TO BE BACK

Football was never completely out of the picture over the winter months, but Coen said Saturday he was very happy about getting back on the field for spring practice after the long layoff.

The loss to the Mountaineers back on Dec. 15 compounded the length of the offseason.

"Winter workouts are fun, but it's really that much fun," Coen said. "It's working hard and preparing for this. Spring ball is always a good time because it's not as grueling, it's not two-a-days, it's not like you're really preparing for a game, but you're really just trying to get better.

"I like being out here just being able to execute with the guys – just have a good time, spring ball is just having a fun time."

But now that spring practice is over, Coen must now wait another few months before getting back on the field. UMass doesn't open preseason camp until the beginning or middle of August and then doesn't open its 2007 regular season until Sept. 1 against Holy Cross at McGuirk Stadium.

Jon Pelland can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO/JOSH REYNOLDS

Quarterback Liam Coen returns to UMass next year for his junior season. Coen has 35 touchdowns and 4,960 yards in 24 career games.

UM goes exploring for 23rd straight win

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In the final weekend of the regular season, the Massachusetts softball team won all four of its games. The Minutewomen swept a doubleheader from La Salle yesterday after defeating Fordham on Friday and again on Saturday.

Pitching themed both series for the Minutewomen (34-12-1, 18-0 Atlantic 10. Against the Explorers (16-23, 8-11 A-10) yesterday, sophomore Brandice Balschmiter struck out 16 batters in a 5-0 UMass victory. Her best performance of the weekend came on Friday, however. She came within two outs of a perfect game, ending up with her third-career no-hitter in a 6-0 UMass win.

Freshman Bailey Sanders did her part in UMass' weekend sweep, winning both of her starts. She allowed three runs – one earned – in her 12 innings of work.

She collected her second shutout of the season in the back-end of the doubleheader with La Salle yesterday. The 3-0 UMass win improved her record to 10-4 and dropped her earned run average to 2.52. The Maroon and White's sweep of La Salle eliminated the Explorers from the A-10 tournament.

In Sanders' first outing, on Saturday, UMass defeated Fordham 5-3 to clinch the regular season A-10 Championship. She pitched five-plus innings for the Minutewomen before Balschmiter came in for the final two innings to collect her second save of the season.

While UMass hurlers dominated their opponents for a majority of the weekend, the UMass offense didn't have the same success. The Minutewomen made solid contact more often than not, but were the recipients of bad luck on several occasions.

In the first game of yesterday's doubleheader, two UMass baserunners were hit by groundballs that initially looked like base hits. That, paired with lining into four double plays over

See SOFTBALL on page 7

BRIAN THEOBALD/COLLEGIAN

Senior first baseman Amanda Morin has started in all 47 games this year for UMass. She went 2-for-7 with two runs scored and a walk in the doubleheader against La Salle on Sunday. The Minutewomen have won 23 games in a row, the largest streak in the nation.

BROWN AGREES TO EXTENSION PAGE 10

VARIETY HOUR TAKES OVER SPRING CONCERT PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SUNNY : HI: 82 LO: 48 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, MAY 8, 2007

Fort Devens imitates Iraq

The University of Massachusetts' Army ROTC undergo a weekend training at Fort Devens where cadets are placed in two-hour scenarios that mimic real battlefield experiences in Iraq, such as raiding a bunker, reacting to improvised explosive devices, planning and constructing roadblocks and barriers, acting out security checkpoint searches – all while learning how to interact with Iraqi civilians.

ROTC trains cadets with realistic war scenarios

BY DAVID HUMPHREYS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"Sir, put the weapon down! You need to put the weapon down!" the soldier commands an Iraqi farmer's son. The father and son, driving back to their farm, were stopped at a roadside checkpoint to have their identification checked and undergo routine questioning. After calling in their IDs, the Iraqis were found to be using stolen military IDs and carrying an improvised explosive device (IED).

This is a routine day of training for the University of Massachusetts' Army ROTC.

The training takes place at Fort Devens in Massachusetts. One weekend a semester the Army ROTC helps train freshmen and sophomores while assessing juniors before their Leadership Development Assessment Course (LDAC). The LDAC is the Army ROTC's way to recognize talent and test leadership skills.

Training consists of different scenarios in each lane, or area, where it takes place. Some scenarios include a civilian presence on the battlefield, raiding a bunker and reacting to an IED. Each scenario lasts around two hours.

One scenario instructed cadets to set up a roadblock similar to what they might see in Iraq. Before actually constructing it, the cadets surveyed the area for good vantage points and planned what course of action to take.

By use of a crude string-and-dirt map, the cadets decided how to set up the barricades – where each person should be and what each person's job is. After they finished, the squad dispersed around the area. Some cadets found covered positions overlooking the road while others set up the checkpoint, using their rucksacks as jersey barriers.

The checkpoint was set up, two lines of rucksacks to stop vehicles and cadets waiting for someone to pass through. Soon, after giving the go-ahead signal, a white van pulled up with two men in it.

Two cadets instructed the driver to take the keys out of the ignition and asked the men – a local farmer and his son – for identification. The driver readily gave up his and instructed his son to do the same. After debating loudly with his father in Arabic, the son finally threw his ID out the window.

While the ID check cleared, the cadets ordered the father and son to exit the vehicle for a routine search. With the father about 20 feet away from the car, the son shouted in Arabic and waved his M16 in the air angrily. The cadets knew to be careful and quickly brought him to the ground and wrestled the gun away from him.

Meanwhile, the father, while being searched for weapons or contraband, chastised the cadets for giving him orders in his own country. After searching, the cadets ended up with a click pen, a cell phone, a standard knife and some papers. Father and son were cleared and free to go to their farm.

A debriefing followed the completion of the scenario. The cadets were given their assessments. These troops are not expected to know everything now, but rather to learn what to do and

See ROTC on page 3

Aspen Chase fire sparked by defective electrical socket

SAID SOUTTAR/COLLEGIAN

According to the Amherst Fire Department, the blaze that injured two firefighters and a police officer, displaced students and Amherst residents and caused $150,000 in damage was caused by a broken electrical socket from apartment unit 15.

BY MATT BELLIVEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The massive blaze that caused over $150,000 in damage at the Aspen Chase apartment complex last week was caused by a faulty electrical socket, according to a statement released by the Amherst Fire Department (AFD) yesterday.

An electrical socket in apartment unit 15 sparked the fire, which spread to other combustibles in the room and throughout the apartment, breaking through windows and igniting the outside of neighboring apartments.

Apartment unit 15 was destroyed by the fire, and seven other units suffered varying degrees of water and smoke damage. All eight units are currently uninhabitable.

At 11:54 a.m. the Amherst Emergency Communications Center dispatched firefighters to Aspen Chase after receiving a 9-1-1 cell phone call reporting the fire.

Firefighters arriving on the scene observed heavy smoke emitting from the second story of the building, housing apartment units nine through 16.

A second alarm was ordered at 12:02 p.m. recalling all of Amherst's off-duty career firefighters to the scene after the fire had spread up to the roof of the structure. Assisting fire crews from Belchertown, Hadley, Northampton, and South Hadley were also called to the scene. A total of 46 Amherst firefighters with six fire engines and three ambulances responded to the May 3rd fire.

There were no civilian injuries, but two firefighters and one police officer suffered minor injuries, including smoke inhalation and dehydration, and were treated at the scene, according to the AFD press release.

The Red Cross is in the process of relocating several of the residents of the building who were without insurance and lost all of their belongings in the fire.

Matt Belliveau can be reached at news@dailycollegian.com

RNA's world, not ours

UMass students and members of the community packed into Mahar Auditorium last Friday, May 4, to hear 2006 Nobel laureate Craig C. Mello speak in the lecture, "Return to the RNAi World: Rethinking Gene Expression, Evolution and Medicine." Mello and Andrew Z. Fire share the Nobel for the discovery of RNA interference.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 133

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherri Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jaimeson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPIES EDITOR Adam Stagin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Dannis Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
FEATURES EDITOR Melissa D'Amico
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Penet
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dellanitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Bwonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL MONDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Belliveau

COPY EDITOR
Jamie Mason

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Tiffany Van Langen

Doctors flush out pair of spiders from boy's ear

ALBANY, Ore. — These guys weren't exactly Snap, Crackle and Pop. What began as a faint popping in a 9-year-old boy's ear – "like Rice Krispies" — ended up as an earache, and the doctor's diagnosis was that a pair of spiders made a home in the ear.

"They were walking on my eardrums," Jesse Courtney said.

One of the spiders was still alive after the doctor flushed the fourth-grader's left ear canal. His mother, Diane Courtney, said her son insisted he kept hearing a faint popping in his ear – "like Rice Krispies."

Dr. David Irvine said it looked like the boy had something in his ear when he examined him.

When he irrigated the ear, the firs: spider came out, dead. The other spider took a second dousing before it emerged, still alive. Both were about the size of a pencil eraser.

Jesse was given the spiders – now both dead – as a souvenir. He has taken them to school and his mother has taken them to work.

"It was real interesting, 'cause, two spiders in my ear – what next?" Jesse said.

—Associated Press

Plane turns around when drug mule vomits bag of heroin

HANOI — A passenger on an Australian-bound plane vomited a nylon bag of white powder suspected to be heroin, causing the plane to return to Vietnam in the latest drug mule case between that country and Australia, officials said.

The Vietnam Airlines plane had been flying for an hour after leaving Ho Chi Minh City on Saturday when an Australian man of Vietnamese descent took ill, airline officials told the state-run Tuoi Tre (Youth) newspaper.

The aircraft turned around and made an emergency landing at Tan Son Nhat Airport, where the man coughed up two more bags of white powder. He was detained by police and taken to hospital.

Another newspaper, Lao Dong (Labor), reported doctors found 30 red nylon bags in the man's stomach. It identified him as 35-year-old Nguyen Kant.

The aircraft took off again for the flight to Sydney in the early hours of Sunday morning, officials said.

In March, a man was arrested at the Ho Chi Minh City airport while checking in for a flight to Sydney. He was accused of trafficking 1.1 kg (2.4 pounds) of heroin.

At the same airport in February, an Australian woman was arrested after being caught with 1.5 kg of heroin in her luggage.

Several Australians of Vietnamese descent have been arrested for trafficking heroin to Australia from Vietnam in recent years and at least four were sentenced to death.

—Associated Press

Store ads spur teens to smoke

The more cigarette marketing teens are exposed to in retail stores, the more likely they are to smoke, researchers reported Monday in a national study, which may call for tighter restrictions on tobacco ads.

WASHINGTON — The more cigarette marketing teens are exposed to in retail stores, the more likely they are to smoke, researchers reported on Monday in a U.S. study they said supports even tighter restrictions on tobacco ads.

Point-of-sale advertising can encourage teens to try smoking, the team reported in the Archives of Pediatrics and Adolescent Medicine.

"Our study shows that the marketing of cigarettes in places where teens shop clearly increases their cigarette use," said Sandy Slater of Bridging the Gap, a joint project of the University of Illinois at Chicago and the University of Michigan.

"Restricting these marketing practices would reduce youth smoking," Slater, who led the study, added in a statement.

The study, paid for by the nonprofit Robert Wood Johnson Foundation and the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, found the more retail advertising in a community, the higher the odds that non-smoking teens would experiment with tobacco.

Slater's team studied a nationally representative sample of 26,000 eighth, 10th and 12th graders from 1999 to 2003.

They monitored smoking rates and examined promotions such as cigarette point-of-sale advertising, cigarette price, multi-pack discounts and gifts with purchase.

Such practices make up more than 90 percent of the $13.1 billion that cigarette manufacturers spent on marketing in 2005, according to a Federal Trade Commission report on cigarette marketing released in April.

Slater's team projected that removing point-of-sale cigarette advertising in communities with a moderate level of such advertising in stores – 2.5 on a 5 point scale – would reduce the number of teens experimenting with cigarettes by 11.25 percent.

The same communities would see an almost 11 percent increase in experimenters if all stores had the maximum level of advertising, they found.

And every dollar increase in the price of a pack of cigarettes would lower the odds that an adolescent would move to the next level of smoking by 24 percent.

"Our children should not be exposed to Big Tobacco's dirty tricks when they shop in retail stores," said M. Cass Wheeler, chief executive officer of the American Heart Association.

"That's why we need strong federal legislation to make it increasingly difficult for the tobacco industry to addict children and increase their risk for heart disease and stroke," Wheeler said.

The group supports legislation that would allow the U.S. Food and Drug Administration to regulate tobacco products.

The legislation, pending in Congress, would also limit tobacco advertising in stores and would require stores to place tobacco products behind the counter.

—Associated Press

Cancer survivor first black woman to ski to North Pole

By Meghan Barr
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The bone-numbing trek to the North Pole is riddled with enough perils to make a seasoned explorer quake: Frostbite threatens, polar bears loom and the ice is constantly shifting beneath frozen feet.

But Barbara Hillary took it all in stride, completing the trek to the world's northernmost point last month at the age of 75. She is one of the oldest people to reach the North Pole, and is believed to be the first black woman on record to accomplish the feat.

Hillary, of Averne, N.Y., grew up in Harlem and devoted herself to a nursing career and community activism. At 67 and during retirement, she battled lung cancer. Five years later, she went dog sledding in Quebec and photographed polar bears in Manitoba.

Then she heard that a black woman had never made it to the North Pole.

"I said, 'What's wrong with this picture?'" she said. "So I sort of rolled into this, shall we say."

In 1909, Matthew Henson made history as the first black man to reach the Pole, though his accomplishment was not officially recognized for decades – it was overshadowed by the presence of his white colleague, Robert Peary.

Ann Bancroft, a physical education teacher from Minnesota, was the North Pole's first female visitor in 1986 as a member of the Steger Polar Expedition, which arrived unassisted in a re-creation of the 1909 trip. Various scientific organizations said no record exists of a black woman matching Bancroft's feat, although such record-keeping is not perfect.

"It's not like there's a guest book when you get up there and you sign it," said Robert Russell, founder of Eagles Cry Adventures, Inc., the travel company that leads thrill-seekers like Hillary to the farthest corners of the globe. Russell conducted six months' worth of research, interviewing fellow polar expedition contractors and digging through history books, but failed to find a black woman who had completed the trek.

Russell's paying customers can travel to the North Pole in various ways, from 18-day cross-country ski trips to simply being dropped off at the Pole via helicopter. The trip costs about $21,000 per person.

Hillary insisted on skiing. Only trouble was, she had never been on the slopes before.

"It wasn't a popular sport in Harlem," she quipped.

Barbara Hillary is seen on her skis during her trip to the North Pole, April 23, 2007. Hillary is one of the oldest people to reach the Pole at age 75.

So she enrolled in cross-country skiing lessons and hired a personal trainer, who finally determined she was physically fit for the voyage.

"She's a headstrong woman. You don't tell her 'no' about too many things," Russell said.

Her lack of funds didn't stop her, either. Hillary scraped together thousands of dollars and solicited private donors. On April 18, she arrived in Longyearben, Norway, where it is common for people to carry guns to ward off hungry polar bears.

"Before I arrived, the word was out that soul food was coming," she joked.

The travelers were then flown to the base camp – which is rebuilt each year due to melting ice – and pitched their tents. On April 23 Hillary set off on skis with two trained guides. Russell, fearing for her health, had convinced her to take the daylong ski route to the Pole in lieu of the longer trips.

As the sunlight glinted off the ice, distorting her gaze, Hillary struggled beneath a load of gear and pressed on. In her euphoria at reaching the Pole, she forgot the cold and removed her gloves, causing her fingers to become frostbitten.

Standing at the top of the world, she could have cared less. The enormous expanse of ice and sky left Hillary, for once in her long life, speechless.

While such expeditions serve as major accomplishments, some historians and Arctic experts criticize what they call an overhyping of being the "first" to do something.

"The same issue is in effect for the climbing of Mount Everest," said Michael Robinson, a University of Hartford professor who wrote "The Coldest Crucible: Arctic Exploration and American Culture." "You see the first diabetic, the first blind person to climb Everest. I'd hate for there to be a constant emphasis on nationality and race and gender, or disability."

But for Hillary, the achievement extends beyond race. She hopes her journey will inspire hope in other cancer survivors. With her feet back on dry land in New York, she is already plotting a new adventure: that of a global-warming activist.

"What if?" she said. "I'd like to go and lecture to different groups on what they can do on a grass-roots level (to fight global warming)."

Thinking of a Teaching Career?

Master of Arts in Teaching (MAT)

A 12-month graduate program for aspiring teachers that blends theory and practice and features:

- Endorsement for teacher licensure in elementary or secondary education
- Field experiences in Boston public school classrooms
- Supervised student teaching placements
- Instruction from Northeastern faculty and master public school teachers

For more information, visit www.education.neu.edu or call toll free 877.6NU.SPCS
(877.668.7727).

Northeastern University

Minority numbers rebound at UC-Berkeley

By Michelle Locke
Associated Press

BERKELEY, Calif. — A fit of spring-cleaning led Eric Brooks to a box of old newspaper clips from 1997. That's when he was the lone black student enrolled in the incoming law school class at the University of California, Berkeley, following the end of affirmative action admissions.

He didn't read them. That box doesn't hold pleasant memories.

"I felt bad for myself at the time because of my situation, but worse for the people who were denied admission," said Brooks.

Ten years later, the numbers of underrepresented minorities at UC have rebounded at the undergraduate level, although they haven't kept pace with high school graduation rates. But more blacks and Hispanics are also going to lesser-known branches of the 10-campus system and fewer to the flagships of Berkeley and UCLA.

Meanwhile, the movement toward race-blind admissions is spreading. Florida, Texas and Michigan have rewritten their admissions rules. Ward Connerly, the UC regent who started it all, is taking his campaign for race-blind admissions to as many as five more states next year, including Colorado, Missouri, Oklahoma and Arizona.

"If things unfold the way I am predicting they will unfold," Connerly said, "I think we are witnessing the end of an era."

The debate over affirmative action begins with how you define affirmative action.

To Connerly, it's a system of "racial preferences" that drive a wedge between people. To his opponents, it's a way to recognize that not everyone starts with the same advantages.

The debate came to UC in 1995 when, in a bitterly contested 14-10 vote, the system's governing Board of Regents voted to stop looking at applicants' race, effective for graduate students in 1997 and for undergrads the following year.

In 1996, Connerly took the movement statewide with Proposition 209, which banned consideration of race in public hiring, contracting and education.

A similar measure passed in Washington state in 1998, and Texas affirmative action policies fell in 1996 with a federal appeals court ruling.

Eric Brooks stands in Boalt Hall on the University of California campus in Berkeley, Calif. Brooks was the lone black student to enroll at the school in 1997, following the end of affirmative action admissions.

In Florida, Connerly launched a campaign similar to Proposition 209. Then-Gov. Jeb Bush opposed the measure as divisive but implemented his own "One Florida" plan eliminating the use of race or gender in higher education and government hiring.

The tide seemed to turn in 2003 when the Supreme Court, ruling in two University of Michigan cases, said race could be used as a limited factor in college admissions.

But Connerly and his supporters countered with a successful initiative last fall banning consideration of race in Michigan admissions.

What has it all meant?

Florida figures released last fall showed black students made up 13.7 percent of enrollment in state universities, compared to 14.2 percent when One Florida was implemented in 1999.

The bottom line on Proposition 209, from where I sit, is it has continued to suppress enrollment," said Ed Tom, director of Boalt admissions.

But does it matter if the numbers of black students dip at elite campuses?

"Not to me, it doesn't," said Connerly. "As long as all of our kids have an equal chance to get an education."

Interestingly, Asians, who did not benefit under affirmative action, now make up 36 percent of admissions, up from 33 percent in 1997. That makes Asians overrepresented since California is roughly 44 percent white, 35 percent Hispanic, 12 percent Asian and nearly 7 percent black.

Connerly thinks the growth in Asian admissions since '97 shows they were being discriminated against under the old system.

But Van Nguyen, a Berkeley student of Vietnamese descent and member of a task force studying the impact of dropping affirmative action, also sees discrimination in the new system.

"I don't think it's a liberal-conservative issue," he said. "It's really, Do you believe in equality? Do you believe in access? Do you believe in everyone having an equal shot to get to Berkeley? If you believe that then we need to really rethink this (Proposition) 209 issue."

Brooks recalls sitting on the law school steps reading bar exam passage rates broken down by race. "I remember thinking: 'Well, that's going to be fun when I take the bar,'" he said. "'It's either going to be 100 or zero.'"

In 2000, he did pass the bar. He became active in diversity issues, serving on the state bar's ethnic minority relations committee.

Brooks sees a way for affirmative action to consider merit, but he doesn't think it's time to banish the concept. "I think that it's useful in that it remedies past discrimination," he said.

But Connerly thinks "most Americans are with me. They realize that this thing has probably outlived its usefulness and it's just a question of how it's going to end and when it's going to end, not whether it's going to end."

Car explodes in Luxor parking lot

By Ken Ritter
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — A device left on the top of a car in a casino parking garage exploded early Monday, killing a man who tried to pick it up, authorities said.

The blast shortly after 4 a.m. on the second floor of garage behind the Luxor hotel-casino was not considered a terrorist act police said.

"This appears to have been a small device that was constructed in such a way to target a single individual victim," Deputy Police Chief Ted Moody said. "It was successful in doing that, unfortunately."

The victim, who was pronounced dead later at a hospital, worked at a business inside the hotel, police said, adding that the case was being investigated as "a homicide with an unusual weapon." Another person who was with the man narrowly escaped injury and was cooperating with investigators, police said. Their names were not released.

Police spokesman, Officer Bill Cassell, declined to describe the device, but said initial reports that it was inside a backpack were wrong.

No threat had been made against the Luxor, Cassell said.

Moody said investigators were reviewing the surveillance videotapes from multiple cameras in and around the two-story parking structure.

Gordon Absher, a spokesman for MGM Mirage Inc., which owns the Luxor, said the casino was not damaged and, except for the top floor of the parking garage, the resort continued normal operations.

Aerial video showed no apparent damage to the garage, where entrances were blocked while police, firefighters and federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives agents investigated.

There was little damage around the vehicle, police said.

Immediately after the explosion, entrances were sealed and authorities went vehicle to vehicle with bomb-sniffing dogs. Later, people were allowed to remove their vehicles after an inspection, Absher said.

Several hours after the explosion a report of an unattended bag prompted a brief evacuation of the race and sports betting area inside the casino. Police were called about 11 a.m. and a bomb squad determined the bag was an empty computer case, a police spokesman said.

Absher said there was no connection between the incidents other than "awareness was heightened" among employees.

The Luxor, a pyramid-shaped hotel at the south end of the Las Vegas Strip, has more than 4,400 rooms and 4,200 employees.

A small device left atop a vehicle outside the Luxor hotel and casino exploded, killing one man and injuring another, Monday morning.

Officials investigate the scene of an explosion in the top floor of a parking lot behind the Luxor hotel and casino. Police said the blast was not a terrorist act, but the apparent murder of a hotel employee.

Student soldiers in ROTC placed in mock war situations

ROTC from page 1

how to appropriately respond to situations they might encounter on the battlefield.

While troop placement and reaction were well done, the squad had three glaring errors in their approach. First, the setup of the jersey barriers left room for a vehicle to reverse or go forward through the checkpoint. In order to remedy this, the cadets abandoned the double barrier approach for a more secure layout. Now, rucksacks are arranged in three lines with a space for the vehicle to pull in to. Once in the designated space, a vehicle barely has any room to drive forward or backward without ramming into a barrier.

The second problem was in not confiscating the farmer's cell phone and click pen. Those two items, the cadets were told, are often used to set off an IED and should not be within reach of a possible enemy combatant until the vehicle is cleared.

The third error, pointed out by the farmer while being searched, is harder to remedy. The mistake the cadets made was not treating the Iraqi farmer and his son with enough respect. They were instructed to make conversation with civilians and see if everything makes sense in their story. Also, the cadets were told to try and not give orders or force civilians to do anything. By excessively dominating a civilian, a soldier might unintentionally make a once neutral person a hostile threat.

After debriefing, the cadets prepared themselves for another run-through of a checkpoint scenario. They changed the barrier, got into position and waited for the next vehicle to come to the checkpoint.

As the van pulled up, two cadets approached and asked for identification. This time they had a friendly but reserved attitude to the Iraqi farmer and his son. The feeling was reciprocated, and everything seemed to be going fine until the ID check came back. The Iraqi men had tried to pass stolen military IDs as their own.

The cadets politely asked the men to step out of the vehicle for a routine check, not letting them know their ID had been spotted as fake. The farmer and son were brought to separate areas and searched while the cadets searched the van for an IED, papers or anything else illegal or suspicious.

The farmer had nothing on him besides the cell phone, knife and click pen but became angry when restrained and argumentative. The son, once again, refused to give up his weapon and tried to fight the cadets for it. They subdued him, immediately flex-cuffed him and brought him to a holding area. The only thing they had left to do was search the car.

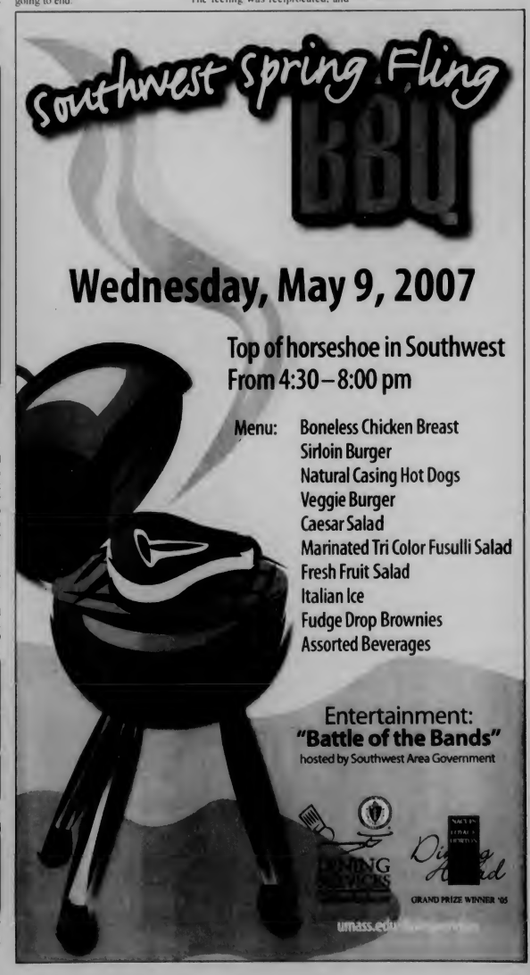
Inside they found everyday items: tools, rucksacks, some clothes, maps and a circular piece of plastic. The maps were taken back, but everything else was left in the van. The training ended and debriefing followed.

Although the cadets fixed their previous errors, they missed one thing this time – the circular piece of plastic. About the size and shape of an old carburetor, this plastic models a mine commonly used as the explosive in an IED. Although this IED was missing a detonator, the men could have been transporting it for an attack at another military base or checkpoint or just as a roadside bomb.

The cadets will learn from their mistake and not make it in the future. Every day, these cadets move closer and closer to being relatively mistake-free or at least learning what their mistakes can lead to. During training, mistakes can be made and remedied.

In two hours, the cadets have learned skills that will stay with them in their every day life and help keep them alive in a combat zone.

Dave Humphreys can be reached at dhumphre@student.umass.edu



THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

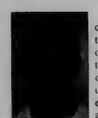
EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MAY 8, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." -Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Uncle Sam's false advertising



Joshua H. Wilder

Here in America, the everyday citizen is lucky enough to be able to live comfortably during a time of war. While chaos and violence takes place in Iraq, the majority of us here at home are relatively unaffected. From coast to coast, everything appears to be business as usual.

The war and its effects are not visible to the average Joe on the street, but reminders spring up everywhere. Television rarely shows live footage, and the network news downplays stories on Iraq. But advertisements for the Army and Marines seem to surface as much as those for the new Volkswagen.

"There's strong, and then there's Army Strong."

Soldiers stand straight as an arrow, display confident smiles and salute the camera in unison. It is an impressive sight and makes quite the impression on the casual observer. These soldiers look as though they are on top of the world, healthy and full of life.

An old saying goes "If something sounds too good to be true, it usually is," and it runs through my head whenever something fishy is presented. While these commercials are uplifting, they seem to present a message that stands in direct opposition to what the news has been reporting lately.

Watching friends and fellow soldiers die in combat is enough to traumatize even someone who is "Army Strong."

On May 4, the Pentagon released a detailed mental health survey of troops in Iraq, and the results were not encouraging. According to the survey, the lengthy tours of duty that many soldiers have had to serve have led to a high level of combat stress.

The report consisted of surveys of 1,320 soldiers and 447 marines, as well as interviews with commanders and focus groups. It found that 30 percent of troops involved in close combat suffered psychological problems, those of which include becoming prone to unethical behavior.

What is unethical conduct for a solider during a time of war? The report stated that more than one-third of soldiers surveyed supported occasional torture; it also found that increased tours of duty increased the likelihood of soldiers to lash out against Iraqi citizens.

The report itself was presented to General George W. Casey Jr. in November, when he was the senior American commander in Iraq.

Interestingly enough, the report stayed a mystery to the press for nearly half a year after being compiled.

The fact that the report is being surfaced now has enabled some conspiracy theorists to suggest that it was covered up. Instead of jumping to a sensationalized conclusion, instead let's just look at the facts.

Any war historian can tell you that trauma among soldiers during active combat is nothing new. After World War I soldiers suffered shaking and partial paralysis. World War II left soldiers feeling combat fatigue, and our boys who fought in Vietnam suffered Post Traumatic Stress Disorder.

If you have a relative who served in World War II or Vietnam, you know that when they come back alive from active combat, they often refuse to talk about what happened there. Who can blame them?

Watching friends and fellow soldiers die in combat is enough to traumatize even someone who is "Army Strong," and with their tours of duty continually being lengthened, our troops in Iraq are running on fumes.

War is the worst possible scenario for any human being to be in the middle of. No matter what side of the coin you are on, soldiers or civilians, everyone is put in harms way.

Those holding out hope that the psyche of our troops will soon improve may have a long time to wait. The month of May has already been especially bloody, as at least 24 American service members have been killed as this is being written. Furthermore, President Bush and Congress are in a stalemate in discussions to set a time to bring the troops back home.

All and all this current situation looks bleak for our soldiers who bravely decided to serve their country. It stands in sharp comparison to the cavalier attitude displayed in the Army commercials. One could go as far as to say that the commercials do not accurately represent the situation for someone who joins the Army.

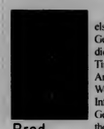
Sure, all commercials may stretch the truth to appeal to the viewer, but when you are advertising military service, the facts should be presented. The soldiers on television have not had their tours extended, they are not in Fallujah, they are behind a blue screen.

It is important for anyone thinking about joining the military to know the facts and not get swept up in a marketing scheme.

If the Army commercials were filmed at Walter Reed Medical Center they would be a lot less glamorous, more depressing and hard to market. They would also be true.

Joshua H. Wilder can be reached at jhwilder@student.umass.edu.

A 'Bush'-league omission



Brad Leibowitz

Did anybody else notice that George W. Bush did not make Time Magazine's Annual list of the World's 100 Most Influential People? George W. Bush, the so called leader of the free world. Hate him or love him (I find the latter much harder) he didn't make the list. How is that even remotely possible?

Other names on the list included, Barack Obama, Chief Justice John Roberts, Tyra Banks, Al Gore, Brad Pitt, Elizabeth Blackburn and then some. Sacha Baron Cohen (Borat) even made the list. Is "Time" saying that "Very Niceeee, how much?" is more influential then "Stay the course?"

Is "Time" saying that "Very Niceeee, how much?" is more influential than "Stay the course?"

I'm not saying I am a fan of "W" but then again, even if you share my opinion of the man, you still have to realize that he is one of the most influential people on the face of the Earth. I would go as far as saying he is in the top three of the most influential people in the world.

Also on the list, Leonardo DiCaprio and Martin Scorsese. I understand DiCaprio has his hand in the fight against Global Warming, but in the end, both of these men just make movies. They make entertainment. If this assessment of influence on the world is correct, this means the boy who couldn't stay alive in "Titanic" and the man who just won his first Oscar are more important than a man who wields the nuclear power of the United States.

So for the record, let's list the influence (blemishes) of our President. The Iraq War, The Afghanistan War (both failing, terribly), an 8.8 trillion dollar U.S. debt, numerous White House scandals, the appointment and effective re-direction of a now conservative U.S. Supreme Court, the outing of a CIA officer, the terrible support for the city of New Orleans, and the lack of scientific development in areas such as Global Warming and Stem Cell Research. And oh yeah, did I mention, according to good old "W," the jury is still out on evolution?

Of the first two, they affect the world. The debt, again, like the first two, effects the world. As for the scandals, conservative judges, outing a patriot, New Orleans, and the lack of scientific development, you can decide for yourself the influence those have (when doing this, consider the possible repeal of Roe v. Wade, widespread international distrust/hatred of the U.S. government, millions of U.S. citizens lives ruined, and a city still under water).

So as much as I would love to think "Very Niceeee" has more influence than "Families is where our nation finds hope, where wings take dream," it does not. Both are incredibly stupid, yet the latter, sadly enough, influences more.

Brad Leibowitz can be reached at bleibow@student.umass.edu.

TIME MAGAZINE TAKES PRESIDENT BUSH OFF ITS 'MOST INFLUENTIAL LIST'
WE'RE STILL LOOKING FOR A REPLACEMENT... HEY, WAIT! HOW ABOUT YOU, CHIEF?
TIME MAGAZINE
PUBLISHER
STAYSKAL TRIBUNE MEDIA SERVICES '07

Fighting fire with brimstone

Domenic Poli

Oh boy! I have been waiting a very long time to do this – bash the Westboro Baptist Church. Well, my chance is finally here.

The raving bunch of pseudo-Christians have made the headlines of many newspapers and the top story of many evening news shows for their deplorable protests at the funerals of American soldiers killed in Iraq. Armed with signs reading, "God hates your tears," "God hates America," "God hates fags," and "Thank God for IEDs," these pathetic souls picket the burial services of America's heroes fallen in combat because they feel the United States is a sinful and doomed nation.

Run by the Rev. Fred Phelps, who actually looks like he died about seven years ago, the WBC says the U.S. government has disgraced the Lord God and the Holy Bible by creating gay-friendly laws and telling the whole world that homosexuality is okay. These psychopaths have been seen inflicting horrific emotional pain onto the livers of the families of the deceased by holding protests (for whatever particular reason) mere feet away from funerals.

I wonder where Phelps attended Sunday school and what kind of Bible he studied. It certainly was not the Bible of the Lord God.

They picketed the burial of Matthew Shepherd, a 21-year-old homosexual man who was lured from a college campus bar, tied to a split-rail fence and brutally beaten to death simply because he was gay. Members of the church (if you can even call it a church) shouted harassments at Shepard's mother, telling her that Matthew was burning in hell for committing the ultimate sin – sodomy. Mrs. Shepard was seen crying hysterically as friends and family members tried to console her.

Gay people aren't the only ones who suffer the WBC's wrath. Phelps and his band of idiots are often at the funerals of soldiers killed while defending their country in Iraq – because since America is a gay-loving nation, they were sent straight to hell. The protesters bring signs that help them spread their love to other victims of tragedy. They like to stand near funeral processions with banners that say "Thank God for AIDS," "Thank God for 9/11," and "Thank God for Hurricane Katrina." No one is spared from this group's spew of hatred – almost everyone is going to burn because America is "tolerant" of homosexuality.

And these sick bastards just came painfully close to sticking their filthy paws into another American tragedy – the Virginia Tech Massacre. That's right, the Westboro Baptist Church planned on protesting the funerals of the victims of the horrific shooting at Virginia Tech that killed 32 people on Patriots' Day. Members say higher education preaches rebelliousness against God and therefore, these kids deserved to die.

"Why did this happen, you ask? It's simple," says godhatesamerica.com, one of the church's Web sites, "The Lord your God sent a crazed madman to shoot at your children, and he didn't miss. Get this straight – God sent this South Korean madman to kill 31 of your children at Virginia Tech. Was God asleep while this [took] place? Was He on vacation? Of course not. He willed this to happen to punish you for assailing His servants."

The church agreed to cancel all protests related to the Virginia Tech Massacre with a few stipulations. It suspended all pending pickets and won't schedule future pickets, in exchange for three hours of national radio time with Mike Gallagher on his National Radio Show. Members will openly discuss their religious positions on tragedies like the shootings at VT. They also plan on doing the same routine at the funerals for victims of the tragic tornadoes in Kansas – their home state.

What about some of their Web sites – godhatesfags.com, godhatesamerica.com, godhatescanada.com and godhatessweden.com? They all spew the same kind of trash as the rest, but for different reasons. Phelps created the third Web site in response to the Dominion of Canada passing of a law on April 28, 2004, that makes any criticism of gays a crime punishable by fines and jail time. He created his anti-Sweden site after Pastor Ake Green was imprisoned for preaching that homosexual sex is an abomination.

Yeah, these people are simply beautiful. I wonder where Phelps attended Sunday school and what kind of Bible he studied. It certainly was not the Bible of the Lord God – that's for sure. My God loves every one of the creatures He created and would never condemn someone to hell simply for being gay. Phelps and his posse of mentally-warped heathens are using their First Amendment rights (a perk of the so-called doomed nation of America) to spread their message of hate.

Mr. Phelps, this God you claim you are speaking for does not exist. The one true God is a loving and caring one and He weeps because of what you are doing. You are not sending His messages, but rather the message of the devil.

But just to cover all my bases, just in case a God with your frame-of-mind does exist, here is a message from me to you, Mr. Phelps: Take that Holy Bible you have perverted and those mindless drones you have brainwashed and have them forever keep you company in the bowels of Satan's kingdom.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

Members of the Westboro church demonstrate outside of a fallen soldier's funeral.

Goodbye to stereotypes

Debbie Friedman

Simone Larson

Megan Rynne

Sitting here reflecting on our final weeks at UMass, we can't help but reminisce about all the good times that have transpired over the past four years. We sure are going to miss this place. Rather than be overcome by nostalgia, we've decided to look at the bright side of graduating by thinking about all the inane, annoying and outright ridiculous types of people we won't be sad to leave behind. Here's a list:

The Entourage Wanna-be: While you might believe that the way you casually dispose of your weekend hook up makes you part of Vince Chase's crew, you really aren't that smooth. To be honest, your "moves" weren't all that satisfying. You can wear the shirt all you want, but remember: it's not HBO, it's UMass.

The Under Stimulated Amherst/UMPD Police Officer: When you're not breaking up parties and forcing students to drive home drunk, you're abusing your authority by asking young girls out to dinner as a way for them to avoid a speeding ticket. Way to serve the community! (But thanks for the clutch ride home on Debbie's 21st birthday.)

The College Conservative: We applaud the fact that you were brave enough to survive four years in this liberal haven. You even formed a cute little club and bribed people to come, promising free pizza. But here's the problem: if you're this uptight now, what the hell are you going to be like in 20 years?

If you're this uptight now, what the hell are you going to be like in 20 years?

The Forty Year Old Clinically Depressed Insomniac Who Lives In Student Apartment Complexes: Of all the places to live, why did you have to plant your miserable existence in the mecca of student life? Have you ever heard of North Village Apartments? All we wanted was to listen to some jams while shaving our legs at 7:30 p.m. on a Wednesday. Did you really have to call the cops?

The Personality Monet: This type draws in innocent bystanders with one unique attribute, like an interesting accent or a rare and exciting hobby. Initially, you find yourself in awe of their seemingly electrifying personality, but upon closer investigation you realize it is nothing but a bunch of little dots. Turns out that "one unique attribute" is actually the only redeeming quality they have. Tricks you every time.

The Self-Hating Girl: Is every girl outside your circle of three friends really a slut? We seriously doubt it. Redirect your hostility at the guy who broke your heart. Those dirty looks are only bringing us, the female population, down.

The Overly Affectionate Campus Couple: We know you've probably been together since high school and skillfully coordinated all of your classes so you can be together, but please, for the general sanity of the people in your lecture, save the foreplay for after class!

The "My Away Messages Are Not About My Life" Person: Yes, the sad Coldplay lyrics in your away message do mean you're upset. You can pretend you "just like the song" all you want, but everyone knows your sitting in your room crying out for some TLC.

The Off-Campus Apartment Dictators: Do you know the Puffton man? Well we do and he's a d-bag. The management in Brandywine aren't any better. Both are constantly breaking up small get-togethers, threatening eviction, towing your car or charging you ridiculous fees for nothing at all. Maybe the dorms weren't so bad after all.

The Annoying Classmate Who Never Shuts Up: Please stop! No one wants to hear every thought that pops into your head, especially when it adds nothing to the class discussion. This is Intro to World History, not the story of your life, so save the tale about forgetting the words to "A Whole New World" during the fourth grade talent show for someone who cares.

The Sexually Frustrated Late Night Assailter: You might think it's okay to get drunk and unleash your inner aggressions on random girls who walk by after midnight. But it isn't. Just because we don't want to humor you by chatting about our nights it doesn't mean we are lesbians. It's actually because you're ugly, creepy, and smell like Bacardi 151. Oh, and if you threaten to "bottle us," you might just get punched in the face.

The Rioters: Everyone loves a good 'Yankees Suck' cheer, but when you start lighting shit on fire and hurling yourself off of buildings, you've gone 10 steps too far.

The Daily Collegian Critic: Okay the Collegian isn't perfect, but the Collegian staff does the best they can. Despite what some may think, that hard work isn't just for your reading pleasure; it's for their future careers. So as you sit there with your red pen, circling all their mistakes, know that they've done something with their four years here. Where has that red pen taken you?

The Overly Critical Girls Who Pick Out Everyone's Flaws: Oh wait, that's us! Don't worry, we realize we aren't perfect. We also realize this column may have offended some people. So if you feel you were unfairly portrayed in our column in any way, feel free to express your concerns by e-mailing us at wedon'tcare@we'llneverseeyouagain.com. It's been real, UMass!

Debbie Friedman, Simone Larson, and Megan Rynne are graduating seniors.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MAY 8, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Variety hour takes over Spring Concert

The 2007 Spring Concert featured Ben Folds, Talib Kweli, OK Go, Sara Bareilles and 80 Proof. The concert was hosted by Dennis Haskins from the early 80's television show "Saved By The Bell" on Sunday night. The six different acts each performed in different ways, giving the concert more of a variety hour feel then a typical Mullins Center concert.

By Tim McCall
Collegian Staff

It wasn't just "Saved By The Bell," rock'n'roll, or hip-hop, but at times on Sunday the Mullins Center came close to all three. Instead the 2007 Spring Concert was more of an old fashion variety hour.

The evening was started off with a brief performance by this year's battle of the bands winner 80 Proof. Their set began a little past six. A set time too early for performing to the entire student body, instead they performed to the crowd as the wandered their way into arena. They were received by some, but for the most part they were ignored by the concert goers.

Next to perform was Sara Bareilles. Bareilles showcased a talent as a pianist, songwriter and singer, everything "American Idol" contestants are not. Unfortunately Bareilles faced the same ill-fate of 80 Proof. The arena was a quarter full at best during her performance. However, Bareseille ignored the empty seats and went on with her set.

While roadies prepared the stage for OK Go, Dennis Haskins ("Saved By The Bell's" Mr. Belding) was introduced to the audience. Haskins wasted no time before tapping into a brief performance of Mr. Belding saying his famous line "Hey Hey What is going on here" and having the audience sing "Saved By The Bell" theme song. But for the most part Haskins remained himself, making small jokes, talking to audience members.

By the time OK Go began their performance following Haskin's introduction, the Mullins Center was about half full. OK Go proved they easily could have been the headliner of the night's festivities with their lively stage presence and performing a variety of songs from both their albums.

Front-man Damian Kulash did his best to keep the entire audience involved in the show. One point during their performance he had the audience perform the wave. A move that came across very staged, but entertaining.

The most entertaining portion OK Go's set was when they left the manstage to perform an acoustic set in the middle of the floor. It was obvious this move was planned, but the mini set was outstanding. Various audience members were given lights to shine on the band as they performed.

Following OK Go's set Haskins returned to the stage. This time he had the now larger crowd sing along the actual theme song instead singing it acapella like earlier in the night. His humor was well received, but he came more across as an inspirational speaker (Haskins has once come to UMass as an inspirational speaker) Haskins also talked briefly about

See CONCERT on page 6

NEW MUSIC TUESDAY

Amos splits personality into disc

By Olga Deshchenko
Collegian Staff

The tendency of artists to burn out of originality in their music, presentation and lyrics is highly probable by their ninth album. Some performers, however, manage to peak on the ingenuity scale and deliver a release that can feed the hunger of their solid fan base, as well as succeed in captivating a new wave of listeners. Such is the case of Tori Amos's new album "American Doll Posse," a work that is both musically and visually engaging.

The name of the album does not refer to a specific song on the disc, but rather identifies a group of five audacious personalities of women that Amos lyrically possesses. It is a work that begs to be referred to as schizophrenic, but in that remarkably artistic way. The album consists of 23 songs, but it is much more effective if the five personalities – Isabel, Tori, Clyde, Santa and Pip – are isolated and inspected separately.

Isabel (hisTORical), featured on the CD cover as a fashionable, blonde photographer, starts off the album with "Yo George," in which she addresses the commander in chief. With lyrics like: "Where have we gone wrong America? Mr. Lincoln, we can't seem to find you anywhere out of the millions," it is clear that Isabel is the designated political mind of the posse. Her songs are slow, and the presence of Amos' signature Bösendorfer piano and straightforward lyrics deduce any doubt regarding Isabel's sincerity. The essence of political criticism on the album also comes across in the antiwar ballad "Dark Side of the Sun," a track that ties Isabel to the present.

Tori (terraToRIes) follows Isabel with the raunchy "Big Wheel." She is the most complicated personality, playing a tug of war between a sexually charged female in control and an insecure woman who fears abandonment. Although Tori declares that she is "a MILF, don't you forget," she reveals a weaker side in "Digital Ghost." This inconsistency, a stab at feminine vulnerability by Amos, is successful.

Although Clyde (cliTORIdes) out-

See AMOS on page 6

Former Phish keyboardist stays true to former bands sound

By Brad Farbrman
Collegian Staff

Page McConnell's self-titled debut, out now on Legacy Recordings, sounds a lot like Phish, which says a lot about the former Phish keyboardist and vocalist in this post-Phish world (the longstanding group broke up "for good" in 2004). Since the band parted, ex-Phish bassist Mike Gordon has gone down both the funky jazz route (with the Benevento-Russo Duo) and a folk direction (with Leo Kottke), and ex-Phish guitarist Trey Anastasio has turned to a decidedly un-Phishy brand of pop music. McConnell has stood his ground, and sounds more like himself and his onetime comrades than ever. "Page McConnell" is a funky adventure through nine new tunes, all penned by McConnell himself, and they fit the keyboardist well.

Of course, McConnell had a little help in sounding so Phish-like. Gordon's unmistakable bass playing appears on three tracks, Anastasio appears on one, and Phish drummer Jon Fishman appears on the majority of the album (master session drummer Jim Keltner subs for Fishman on a few cuts). But its McConnell's top-shelf ivory tickling and tantilus vocals that remind us of home.

The album opens with two winners, "Beauty of a Broken Heart" and "Heavy Rotation." The latter, featuring Gordon, Keltner and the Spam Allstars' Adam Zimmon on guitar (he plays on the whole album) digs into several serious jams, highlighting McConnell's synth and acoustic piano work, and Gordon's inimitable phrasing. At over 10 minutes, the track just keeps on rolling, always changing, never missing a beat.

On "Maid Marian," the pianist chan-

See MCCONNELL on page 6

23 songs from five personalities

AMOS from page 5

wardly sings about pain and struggle, she remains hopeful. Amos' gentle voice comes through Clyde as the artist allows the listener to zoom in on her wounds. In songs like "Girl Disappearing" and "Beauty of Speed," Clyde has no problem with sharing her pain and still retaining a sense of idealism.

Santa (SantaTORIum) holds a martini glass on the album cover and signifies timeless beauty and classiness. Through sexually suggestive metaphors she lures a man in "You Can Bring Your Dog," and defends her sensuality in the calm "Dragon." Forward in some songs, while careful to protect her passions and identity in others, Santa is a character that hides more than she reveals.

Pip (vypiraTORIal) is the darkest out of the five ladies and she is as honest, explosive and vulgar as Amos gets on this release. A song that is best representative of Pip is "Teenage Hustling," in which she sings: "me and my teenage hustling/I've been workin' it since I'z 14/ But you've been skankin' around/with your talentless trash." Pip makes no apologies and does not take no for an answer. The necessary contrast she creates with her edginess completes the "American Doll Posse."

Amos makes a smart move on this album, by introducing five different personalities, who take on war, feminism, politics, and sexuality, she is sure to appeal to an extensive spectrum of listeners. It is refreshing to see an artist be as involved with the visual aspects of the album as she is with the vocal and musical. Amos put a lot of effort into this release, and fortunately, it shows. Nevertheless, be warned: if not listened to carefully, the meticulously crafted personalities of the women may overshadow Amos' musical accomplishments. "American Doll Posse" is worth a listen, and even five. Tune in with caution.

Olga Deshchenko can be reached at odeshche@student.umass.edu.

'American Doll Posse' is not named after any specific lyric or song on Tori Amos' latest disc. Instead the disc is named after five personas Amos takes throughout her latest album.

Friends help out McConnell

Page McConnell's debut solo album features cameos from former bandmates Mike Gordon, Trey Anastasio and Jon Fishman. McConnell, Gordon, Anastasio and Fishman disbanded Phish for good in 2004.

MCCONNELL from page 5

nels his inner Billy Joel or Ben Folds, in a true singer/songwriter moment, plus some funny lyrics: "such a desperate way to trade your wings for your 18 inch spinnin' rims," he sings. On "Back in the Basement," featuring Anastasio and Gordon (but sadly, not Fishman), the groups finds their instrumental footing (the song has no lyrics) somewhere in between Meters territory and the world of Little Feat, to euphonic effect. The jams on this one wind in and out of many passages.

The serene "Complex Wind" finds McConnell in a jazzier vein, with keyboard effects that recall vibraphone and flute, near-skittish drum programming, and lyrical references to Michelangelo and Genghis Khan. The album ends with "Everyone But Me," featuring vulnerable lyrics: "give it up, all of my deep seeded screams as the years full of fears that I'm not all I should be," atop a joyous groove, reminding the listener to be hopeful.

At the end of this month, McConnell will embark on a 13-date tour through the northeast and midwest in support of the album, including stops in Boston, Providence, R.I., Burlington, Vt. and New York City. His touring band is set to include Zimmon, multi-instrumentalist Jared Slomoff, bassist Rob O'Dea and former Jazz Mandolin Project drummer Gabe Jarrett.

Brad Farberman can be reached at bfarberman@gmail.com.

WMUA Top Ten May 8, 2007

1. J DILLA "Ruff Draft"
2. BRIGHT EYES "Cassadaga"
3. DJ JAZZY JEFF "Return Of The Magnificent"
4. XBXRX "Wars"
5. MODEST MOUSE "We Were Dead Before the Ship Even Sank"
6. STANDING NUDES "Ghost Story"
7. CLIENTELE "God Save The Clientele"
8. LOVE OF DIAGRAMS "Mosaic"
9. ANTELOPE "Reflector"
10. HOT ROD CIRCUIT "The Underground is a Dying Breed"

Guitar master heads to Northampton

By Michael Hardman
Collegian Staff

A master of the finger-picking guitar style, Jorma Kaukonen will be playing an acoustic show at the Ironhorse in Northampton Thursday, May 10.

Kaukonen has been releasing albums since 1966 beginning with rock 'n' roll Hall of Famers, Jefferson Airplane. The often controversial Rolling Stone Magazine's Greatest Guitarists List has him ranking 54th for his stint with the Jefferson Airplane. The Airplane was just the beginning of his extraordinary music career.

Kaukonen was one of the founding members of the Airplane and later formed Hot Tuna, a blues group, with fellow Airplane member, Jack Cassidy, whom he has had a friendship with since their teenaged days sneaking into blues clubs. Hot Tuna is still touring today, as well as being placed on the bill for the 2007 Bonnaroo Music Festival.

Kaukonen's passion for music has consistently kept his fingers moving.

Kaukonen's solo career, which he began while Hot Tuna was in full force, has been flying since 1974. He has always enjoyed folk, blues and Americana. So, with his solo albums he was capable of exploring all his creative outlets.

His 2002 album, "Country Blue Heart," received a Grammy nomination.

This past March, at the age of 66, he released his latest effort, "Stars in My Crown." The album has generated many wonderful reviews, with many saying that this may be his greatest and most personal effort.

"Stars in My Crown" is a meandering, acoustic country blues album in which Kaukonen covers songs ranging from The Melodians'

Jorma Kaukonen
Iron Horse
May 10
$25

"By the Rivers of Babylon" to Johnny Cash's "When the Man Comes Around," as well as writing five of his own. Kaukonen has consistently paid homage to the late Rev. Gary Davis, a finger-style guitarist who greatly influenced musicians, such as Jerry Garcia, Ry Cooder and Kaukonen. On this album, Kaukonen plays two of Davis' songs, including "There's a Table Sitting in Heaven," that might be taken as a heavenly letter to Davis.

Each song on the album, whether written by him or not, takes on some form of his identity. This album is considered to be his most personal, for the lyrics and overall mood of the album seems to contemplate life's many meanings.

Kaukonen's guitar mastery speaks for itself, but the real surprise is his voice. He seems to keep his voice restrained, but his gruff man's man singing makes the songs that he is covering his own.

On the darkly beautiful "When the Man Comes Around," his voice ranges from joy to desperate doom.

Kaukonen has been teaching guitar since 1962. In 1989, with his wife, he created Jorma Kaukonen's Fur Peace Guitar Camp in the rural foothills of Southeast Ohio, which still runs today. He is one of the leading finger-style guitar practitioners and teachers. The skill levels range from basic to advanced.

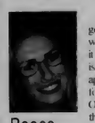
This Thursday night, Kaukonen will be playing with the acclaimed mandolinist, Barry Mitterhoff. The show begins at 7 p.m., with MarjorieThompson, a finger-style guitarist from Providence, R.I., opening the night's show. Tickets are $25 in advance and $28 at the door.

Michael Hardman can be reached at mhardman@astudent.umass.edu

Jorma Kaukonen began his solo career back in 1974 while a member of the band Hot Tuna. In the past 33 years Kaukonen has explored many genres.

Hats off to Graduates!
Come Celebrate with us at
Salem Cross Inn
— Restaurant —
Route 9, 260 West Main St., West Brookfield, MA
Great food, Great setting, Great time! Call now to book your reservation!
Groups of any size welcome!
To Make Reservations
(508) 867-2345
www.salemcrossinn.com

A guide to shopping for every body size



Reece Coppolino

One of the biggest problems women have when it comes to fashion is knowing how to appropriately dress for their body type. One needs to admit that it is more common to resemble a type of fruit than the bodies we see in the magazines. There are many techniques that can help flatter every body type from dresses to swimsuits. Many tricks of illusion also exist to hide those self-conscious areas.

There seems to be a lot of diets out there and they all seem to have some religious followers. Although it is possible to experience a miracle weight loss, or a few pounds dropped here and there, our bone structure and genetics will be boundaries that will always constrain us. It is recommended that women evaluate their body type and understand that certain styles can effectively compliment it and boost one's confidence. Melissa Kirsch, author of the book "The Girl's Guide to Absolutely Everything," stated:

"It's not about what's in style necessarily, it's more about what style is right for you."

There are four basic women's body types that can be used as a reference for creating a balanced and flattering outfit; we know them as the pear, the rectangle, the hourglass and the petite. The names are somewhat self-explanatory.

Those who resemble the sweet elongated fruit, the pear, should not feel alone; the pear shaped figure is actually the most common form. This body type is defined by having a noticeably smaller upper body than the lower body. Most of the body weight in a pear shaped figure is carried at the hips. This form may also exhibit a small to medium bust, a defined waist and full calves.

The most important goal that a pear-shaped woman must value is to emphasize the upper body while drawing attention away from the lower half. When looking for an appropriate style of dress, look for embellished and styled necklines that can help focus on the face, neck and shoulders. Halters, v-necks and sweetheart style tops can aid in this illusion. When trying to define one's waist, look for styles that have free-flowing fabric from a high waist, such styles include empire cuts, a-lines, wrap dresses and baby dolls. Keep this focus on the upper body when shopping for swimsuits as well. Detailed and embellished bikini tops combined with simple bikini bottoms will help a pear look her best in the sand.

Pear-shaped figures must remember to draw attention away from their larger lower half when searching for the perfect pair of jeans. Boot-cut jeans with a slight flare help tone-down the thighs while balancing out a pear's wide hips.

Those who exhibit an hourglass physique are considered to be blessed with the "ideal female form." Hourglass figures typically have a medium to larger sized bust that is proportional to the hips. This figure's waistline is usually around 10 inches smaller than the bust and the hips. This body type is the easiest to compliment in a dress. One needs to maintain focus on their desirable waist and elongate their legs. Dress tops should be simple and soft. A light and delicate dress fabric highlights an hourglass' curves by gently skimming them.

Hourglass figures look great in just about every fashionable swimsuit style. A classic bikini style is recommended because no hourglass' slim waist should be covered up at the beach.

When shopping for jeans look for darker washes that can help play down the lower half and create a lengthy illusion. Low-rise jeans with a bit of Lycra stretch in them will fit hourglasses best. Nikki Salk of "The Denim Lounge" claimed:

Petite frames often have the most trouble finding fashions that won't swallow them up or make them look even smaller. Petite frames usually have a smaller bust that is proportional to their small hips. They also exhibit a short stature. When searching for a flattering dress, a petite frame must avoid shift dresses that offer an unstructured and shapeless look. Mini dresses are a great way to elongate the legs and look proportionate. Petites can wear a wide array of dress tops because they don't suffer from support issues. Strapless tops and sweetheart styles can compliment the bust and small frame.

Petite frames are the most comfortable in all types of swimsuit styles. Bandeaus and sweetheart style tops look the best on petite women. Fitted tri-tops with embellishments and ruffles are another flattering look for the tiny frames.

The rectangle frame is a common body type that lacks curves by exhibiting an undefined waist, broad back, slim legs, and an average bust. It is important to accentuate the waistline with empire-cut dresses. Avoid dress fabrics that are tight and clingy; this style will show off the lack of curves. High-hemmed, soft flowing fabrics can create the illusion of curves while showing off the slim and lean legs. Slender legs can also be emphasized by wearing dark-washed skinny jeans.

When choosing the perfect swimsuit for a rectangle frame, avoid vertical stripes which can draw attention to the lack of curves. Embellishments at the hips and around the swimsuit top can draw out these feminine features.

Folds rises to occasion

CONCERT from page 5

the UMass football team of the past season and told the audience to be proud of their team coming in second place to his alma-matter University of Tennessee at Chattanooga.

The concert was not only Haskins and rock music, this years concert also featured the rapper Lahb Kweli. Kweli was definitely the odd man out, but he embraced the crowd. Trying his best to get everyone up and dancing. Freestyling during most of his songs, he kept the audience guessing which song he would perform next. While OK Go and the other previous acts did entertain, it is safe to say that Kweli was the most energetic of all the performers Sunday night.

Ben Folds came on stage quickly after Kweli. Folds wearing his trademark glasses did not waste anytime. Accompanied with just a bassist and drummer, the main point of Folds was definitely his ability to play the piano and keyboards. While leaving out most of his Ben Folds Five material, he played a variety of his solo material.

A highlight of his set was the performance of his Dr. Dre cover "B*tches Ain't Sh*t." At one point of the song he had the entire audience singing long to the melody he created on his piano. He also performed the song "Such Great Heights" originally by the Postal Service.

For a slideshow of Sunday's performances narrated by a Dennis Haskins, please go to www.dailycollegian.com.

Tim McCall can be reached at tmccall@student.umass.edu

A-10s a letdown for UMass

TRACK AND FIELD from page 10

all, the team was unable to pull it together to reach their goal.

Junior Nathan Barksdale placed seventh in the 200-meter dash with a season best time of 22.63 seconds. Peter Fortundato and Jesse Regnier both had personal-best times of the season in the 3,000-meter steeplechase. Fortundato finished in fifth place with a time of 9:17.74, and right behind him was Regnier, finishing sixth in 9:19.74.

Brian Miller had a season-best performance in the high jump, where he placed fourth, with a height of 6 feet, 4.25 inches. Next for the Minutemen was fifth-year senior James Godinho, who placed eighth at 6 feet, 0.5 inches. Mark Anderson placed 10th, his best mark of the season.

Godinho also competed in the long jump, reaching a season-best 22 feet, 0.75 inches, placing him eighth.

The Minutemen are hoping for a better outcome next weekend at the New England Championships, the ECAC Championships and the IC4A Championships. The New England Championships will have approximately 45 Division I, II and III schools, which is three-times as big as the A-10 Championships field.

"[In the New England Championships] some events will be more difficult, but some less competitive," O'Brien said. "We'll have to readjust and use lessons we learned from this weekend to come back with more success."

As for the Minutewomen, they placed 10th out of 12 teams in the A-10 Championships. After taking second place at the last home meet, the Minutewomen had a variety of strong individual performances.

Junior Christina DeRosa had an impressive weekend, placing first in the 10,000 meters and third in the 5,000 meters. DeRosa was expected to do well in the 10,000 meters and she met those expectations.

She ran the 10,000 meters in 36:07.62, which qualified her for the ECAC Championships. It was also the second-fastest time in UMass history and broke the A-10 Championship record for the 10,000 meters.

The previous record was set last year by Cindy Smith of Rhode Island at a time of 36:56.65. DeRosa placed second last year. DeRosa also did well in the 5,000 meters with a time of 17:16.46, the fourth-best time in UMass history. It also qualified her for the ECAC Championships.

Junior Nils Fischer and the Massachusetts men's track and field team finished eighth at the A-10 Championships over the weekend.

Another strong performance came from graduate student Mary Serdakowski. In the 100-meter hurdles, Serdakowski finished third with a season-best time of 14.46 seconds, also ranking fourth in UMass history. In the 400-meter hurdles, she placed second with another season-best time of 1:04.09.

The Minutewomen will compete in the New England Championships and the ECAC Championships.

Melissa Tuttiveni can be reached at mtuttiveni@student.umass.edu.

Williams has voice to go with arm

SOFTBALL from page 10

Her .283 batting average ranks her eighth on the Minutewomen. The strongest of her tools, however, is her throwing arm. While she does take longer than UMass coach Elaine Sortino would like to throw the ball, the rate at which it arrives at first base makes up for the delay.

The freshman has started 34 games for the Minutewomen, including every home game. But when she suits up at home, softball is not the only of her talents on display. Prior to every UMass home game, Williams sings the national anthem for the Minutewomen and those in attendance.

Hitting her stride

It's mentioned so often, but there's no other way to describe a sophomore slump. Whitney Mollica's numbers may have been respectable this year, but they pale in comparison to her record-setting rookie campaign.

Like so many other collegiate athletes, Mollica has struggled this year to replicate the phenomenal season she put together last year.

However, Mollica showed this weekend that she has not completely lost the offensive prowess that recorded a .394 batting average, 12 homers and 61 RBIs in 2006.

She went 5-for-13 in four games this weekend with 4 RBIs, and a two-run home run Friday against Fordham.

Although struggling early on, Mollica hit the .300 mark for the first time Sunday after going 2-for-3 in Game 1 of the doubleheader against La Salle. After failing to record a hit in Game 2, her batting average now sits at .299. She hit four home runs and knocked in 29 runs during the regular season in 2007.

A-10 honors Balschmiter

For the fifth time this season, sophomore pitcher Brandice Balschmiter won A-10 Pitcher of the Week.

After throwing her third-career no-hitter against Fordham on Friday, she finished the weekend with Sunday's 16-strikeout, complete-game win over La Salle. She ranks second in the conference in ERA against A-10 opponents at 0.66. She has struck out 103 batters in 84 2/3 innings pitched.

In her 23 innings pitched this weekend, she allowed six hits and walked no one. She also struck out 37 batters in her four appearances.

She made three starts, getting the win in each one and also recorded a save against Fordham in the win that clinched the No. 1 seed for UMass in this week's A-10 Tournament. The Minutewomen look to capture their 19th conference title this week, and their ace is peaking at just the right time.

If UMass plans on winning the tournament, they will most likely need to go through Fordham again. Considering Balschmiter threw nine scoreless innings seven without allowing a baserunner against Fordham this weekend, the Minutewomen are in good shape heading into the tournament.

Catching on quick

Freshman catcher Jessica Serio was also honored by the A-10 this week, earning the conference's Rookie of the Week award. It marks the first A-10 award of Serio's career.

Serio was recognized for her play over the past week which included last week's 1-0 win over BC and the four wins against Fordham and La Salle over the weekend but it was her performance in the four games from Friday to Sunday that were particularly impressive.

The Barrington, R.I., native went 5-for-7 against the Rams and Explorers with two doubles, a run scored and one RBI. She also demonstrated her patience at the plate, drawing six walks from opposing pitchers.

Serio, whose batting average was once at a dismal .125, has vastly improved her offensive numbers recently. She is now hitting .242 with three RBIs.

The former third baseman was brought to UMass for her abilities with a bat, and now that she appears to have adjusted to life behind the plate, her hitting has begun to improve as well.

Closing in on 1,000

UMass coach Elaine Sortino has built a storied career during her 28 years at the helm of the Maroon and White.

Her .703 winning percentage ranks in the top 15 in the nation among active coaches, and her 983 wins is in the top 10 among active coaches.

She is now just 17 victories shy of reaching 1,000 wins with the Minutewomen. It is unlikely, however, that she will hit that mark this season.

Even if UMass won a national championship this season, that would only equal another 15 wins.

The Minutewomen would have to fall into the loser's bracket in both the A-10 Tournament and the NCAA Regional round, but then win both tournaments (requiring four wins instead of three in each).

Another two wins in the NCAA Super Regional and five in the Women's College World Series (once again with one loss coming somewhere) and Sortino would be just two victories away from 1,000.

Even considering this unlikely scenario, the milestone cannot be reached until next season for Sortino and company. Freshman Bailey Sanders leads the A-10 in ERA against conference opponents with a 0.46 mark in seven appearances. She is 5-0 with one save in those seven appearances. With her fifth-inning error against Fordham, shortstop Whitney Williams added to her team-high total, making her 15th error of the season. Amanda Morin's three-run home run Saturday against Fordham was her first of the season.

Heading into postseason play, senior center fielder Candice Molinari is eight stolen bases shy of tying the UMass career record of 103. Stacy Cullington's .323 batting average is 75 points higher than last season's .248.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jcrice@astudent.umass.edu. Joe Mehegan can be reached at jmehegan@student.umass.edu.

Huskies in town to renew N.E. rivalry

BASEBALL from page 10

10th with a double to left field, and scored the go-ahead run on the very next at-bat.

Senior Bryan Adamski was the savior of sorts both offensively and defensively. After Tuetken doubled, Adamski dropped down a sacrifice bunt to third, but the throw to first by UConn's third baseman was wild, and Tuetken crossed the plate for the lead.

Adamski advanced to third on the errant throw, and scored the sixth and final run on a Ryan Franczek sacrifice fly to center.

UMass used four pitchers in the game, but Adamski took the mound in the seventh inning and stayed in to close the game out in the 10th. He picked up his second win of the season by allowing no runs on only two hits and one walk in four innings of work. Adamski is now 3-0 on the year with a 3.63 ERA in 22 innings.

Aside from Sunday, the Minutemen have benefited from solid starting pitching as of late, having their starters throw into the sixth inning or deeper in seven of the last eight games. That bodes well for the team's bullpen, as the weekday starters' arms are saved for the non-conference matchups.

Tomorrow's game against Northeastern will also be a rematch from earlier in the season. The Huskies beat UMass 17-6 in the first round of the Beanpot Tournament on April 19.

Danny Picard can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu.

In the Minutemen's previous game with UConn this season, senior Bill Rankin failed to get a hit in the 6-4 UMass victory.

Leave your Senior Will
in the Collegian's 2007 UMass Flashback Grad Issue
One last chance for you to leave your mark on UMass.
Guess you'll miss foos ball at ABC more than I will...
Just $15 Per message
Surprise your friends, Thank a professor,
Dan, Thanks for teaching me how to be cool, I couldn't have done it with out you
Love, Alex
Actual size of messages 2"x3"
Congratulations ladies, We didn't flunk out!
or tell your graduating class congratulations.
Send your photo and statement to thecollegian@gmail.com, or stop by 113 Campus center for payment info

From Your Dorm* To The Airport And Back!
*condo's, campus pick up's during heavy travel times
VIP Exclusive Service
Door-to-Door Service
Charter & Group Service
Professional Drivers
New, Well Maintained Vans
Scheduled Van-Share Service
Call: 253-1350 or Out of Area Toll-Free at 1-800-872-8752
Or Book Online at www.valleytransporter.com
Valley Transporter
The Easy Way to the Airport!

Rams sweep Colonials in A-10 series

Charlotte's Mills nominated for Golden Spikes award

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

The Rhode Island Rams completed a three-game homestand with a sweep of the George Washington Colonials last weekend, winning the games by scores of 5-1, 6-0 and 6-2.

Rhode Island (19-23, 13-8 Atlantic 10) got a great effort from its pitching staff in the series, never allowing the Colonials (17-29-1, 9-12) to get on a roll offensively.

Rams junior pitcher Brett Polanski threw eight shutout innings in the first game, allowing five hits and racking up a season-high nine strikeouts on the day.

Pitcher James Norcott had an even better outing during the second game of the series, throwing a complete game and giving up only two hits, while striking out eight batters. Norcott was named the Atlantic 10 Pitcher of the Week for his achievement.

A-10 Baseball

In the final game of the series, URI pitcher Adam Perkins only allowed one hit and one run in six innings of work. Rhode Island scored six runs between the second and fourth innings. Junior Mike O'Malley led the way offensively for URI, going 3-for-4 and scoring two runs.

With the win, Perkins tied the team-record for most career wins with 22.

Mills nominated for award

Charlotte pitcher Adam Mills has been a star for the 49ers all season long. He is 10-1 overall with a 0.97 ERA, and has thrown 125 strikeouts over the course of 112 innings. He also has four shutouts and eight complete games.

Mills is even more dominating in conference play, allowing only four earned runs in six games, which gives him a 0.58 ERA against the A-10.

In his last game against Temple on May 3, Mills allowed one run in the ninth inning during a 3-1 victory over the Owls. The win tied him for most career wins all-time (29), and most career starts all-time (47) in the 49ers baseball program.

His success has garnered national attention, as Mills was selected as one of 50 semi-finalists for the 2007 USA Baseball Golden Spikes Award. The award is given out to the best amateur baseball player in the country, regardless of position. The list will be pared down to five finalists, with the winner being announced on June 29, 2007.

Previous winners of the award include major leaguers Terry Francona (1980), Jim Abbott (1987), Jason Varitek (1994), J.D. Drew (1997) and Mark Prior (2001).

Silver lining for Hawks

This 2007 baseball season has been a difficult one for the Saint Joseph's Hawks. St. Joe's is currently last in the A-10, going 5-16 in league play and 8-34 overall. They have the worst team ERA (7.34) in the conference, and are third from the bottom in team batting average (.263).

However, freshman infielder David Valesente has been a bright spot in an otherwise forgettable season. Valesenta has hit .338 on the season, second-best on the team.

He was scorching hot in a recent series against St. Louis, recording seven hits in 13 plate appearances for a .538 batting average. He also had three RBIs, including a seventh inning single that drove in the winning run in a 3-2 victory over Saint Louis.

Valesente was a co-winner of the A-10 Rookie of the Week award last week; he shared the honor with Charlotte pitcher Brian Hamilton.

Dayton extremely hittable

The Dayton Flyers are closing in on triple digits in a most unlikely statistic. Having played 46 games so far this season, the Flyers have been hit by an astonishing 93 pitches coming into their game against Ohio. That averages out to getting hit by over two pitches per game.

There is no one single player responsible for this occurrence, as four players have been hit more than 10 pitches, and five other batters have been hit by more than five pitches.

Dayton has eight more games to go in its season, and if the team keeps up the pace they should easily get hit with over 100 pitches.

The reason that Dayton batters are hit by so many pitches is unclear. Perhaps the Flyers are coached to always crowd the plate, or maybe they have faced an inordinate amount of pitchers with poor control. Either way, their knack for getting plunked has given a nice boost to the offense.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Senior catcher John Mollicone went 5-for-5 against Temple on Sunday. He added five RBIs to his season total of 48, which is eighth best in the A-10. Fordham managed 21 hits in the 21-5 blowout of the Owls and the team now sits in third place with 13 conference wins.

Spiders claim third straight league crown

Mandy Friend named Most Outstanding Player in tourney

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

For the third year in a row, the Richmond Spiders will advance to the NCAA Tournament, after beating George Washington in the Atlantic 10 Women's Lacrosse Championship on Sunday.

The A-10 Women's Lacrosse Championships took place last weekend. The semi-finals were held on Friday and the championship game on Sunday. Richmond beat Temple on Friday afternoon 13-6 while George Washington defeated St. Bonaventure 15-9. Richmond and George Washington advanced to the championship game on Sunday afternoon where Richmond came out victorious.

First-place Richmond took on fourth-ranked Temple in one of the semi-final games on Friday. The Spiders set the tempo of the game by quickly scoring five goals.

A-10 Lacrosse

At the beginning of the second half, the score was 5-3 in favor of the Spiders after two goals from Temple's Casey Cech. With 20 minutes remaining in the game, Richmond scored two goals making the game 7-3. Temple scored three more goals while the Spiders scored five unanswered goals to end the game at 13-6.

Richmond's Jackie Swansburg was named A-10 Defensive Player of the Year and she demonstrated her skill by stopping nine shots while teammate Bridget McMullan had 11 saves in the game.

Colonials hang on

Also on Friday afternoon, second-place George Washington challenged third-place St. Bonaventure in a semi-final game. The Colonials beat The Bonnies 15-9, giving GW its fourth straight win and admission to the championship game.

The Bonnies led the game 2-0 until GW's Kristen Karsch scored to make the game 2-1. With less than 28 minutes on the clock the Colonials scored eight unanswered goals, capturing the lead, 11-5. There were many comeback attempts by St. Bonaventure late in the second-half, but the game ended with a score of 15-9.

GW out-shot the Bonnies, 45-20, and also led in groundballs (19-13) and draw controls (16-10).

Spiders come from behind

George Washington and Richmond moved on to the championship game where Richmond won its third straight A-10 Championship.

The Colonials scored just two and a half minutes into the game, but that didn't stop Richmond, as it came back and scored to tie the game 1-1 just minutes later. The two teams took turns scoring goals, but at the end of the first half the Spiders began to dominate and continued their control into the beginning of the second.

With just over 12 minutes left of play, GW scored three goals making the game 9-6 in favor of Richmond. Close to the end of the game, Richmond scored six goals while GW only scored one, finishing the game 15-7.

Richmond sophomore Mandy Friend led the team with six goals, tying an A-10 Championship record for the most goals scored in a game. Friend was also voted the Most Outstanding Playcr of the 2007 Tournament.

The Spiders set new records for draw controls by a team in a championship with 28 and also most points earned by a team with 24.

Richmond will move on to its third straight NCAA Tournament. The Spiders will find out their opponent today at 8 p.m. during the NCAA selection show.

Six Richmond players were named to the A-10 All-Tournament team, including Jackie Swansburg, Claire Cunliff, Ashley Friend, Mandy Friend, Allison Furstenburg and Megan Riedy. George Washington's Kristin Kirsch, Taylor Donahue and Katelyn Honeyford took spots on the roster, along with St. Bonaventure's Katelyn Faas and Eboni Preston. Also named to the team was Temple's Allison Frengs.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu.

FRUSTRATED? PUZZLED? DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

Check This Out!
$20 Off Your Order of Custom Printed T Shirts!
This coupon must be used at time of ordering. Not good w/any other offer. 24 shirt minimum order.
FAST make everyone look!
Custom Printed with your art or logo. Be creative.
Apparel Unlimited SCREEN PRINTERS
Route 9, Russell Street • Hadley
586-7133

Cornell snubbed on Selection Sunday

ECAC LACROSSE from page 10

Greyhounds own one of Duke's two losses, as well as a victory over Syracuse (5-8). The team even earned a bid despite losing its final regular season game to No. 5 Johns Hopkins (9-4).

Nonetheless, the Greyhounds have one of the more winnable first-round games, paired with No. 11 Albany (14-2).

The Great Danes carried an undefeated record to an April 20 game with Syracuse, before losing that game by four goals. But the majority of their wins came against weak teams from the America East Conference.

Ranked No. 10 in the preseason Nike/IL Media Poll, many expected Massachusetts (7-7, 4-3 ECAC) to reach the tournament for the second straight year. However, the Minutemen could not overcome a 2-5 start, despite winning five of their last seven games.

The league's coaches picked the Maroon and White to finish second in the conference at the beginning of the season. The team also received one first-place vote.

But having only two representatives in the 16-team field only emphasizes the conference's lack of depth this season.

To put that into perspective, all four members of the Atlantic Coast Conference qualified for the tournament, even though the league does not have enough members to be eligible for an automatic bid.

The ECAC may not be as deep top-to-bottom as some of the sport's other conferences, but its top two teams have enough quality wins to belong in the tournament.

The same cannot be said for the winner of the Metro Atlantic Conference. Even with finishing the season with a losing record – a circumstance that would typically make a team ineligible for any NCAA-sponsored postseason play – Providence (7-9) earned the league's automatic bid.

The Friars did not even play a team ranked in the Top 20 all season, but defeated conference favorite Siena (10-6) in consecutive games to qualify (the first to end the regular season and the second in the conference semi-finals). They are also the only unranked team in the field.

However, Providence will have a difficult time advancing to the quarterfinals, as the team faces the tournament's No. 1 overall seed – Duke (14-2) on Saturday.

Tourney Controversy

If Cornell feels slighted after yesterday's bracket release, the team has a legitimate reason. Despite defeating every team on its schedule and winning the Ivy League title, the NCAA Tournament Committee placed the Big Red into the fourth overall seed.

Though playing in a weaker conference than in most years, Cornell boasts non-league wins over No. 2 Duke, No. 9 Notre Dame (11-3), No. 14 Colgate (11-5) and Syracuse.

But the Big Red can take solace in the fact that the tournament committee collectively displayed little respect for the Ivy League. Princeton, the nation's No. 6 ranked team – instead of getting a seeding will have to play a Georgetown – a team ranked only two spots higher in the poll.

Maryland Battle

One of the more intriguing first-round matchups for reasons other than lacrosse is between Maryland and No. 13 UMBC (10-5). Both schools are members of the University of Maryland system, though Maryland is the flagship school and also has 14,000 more undergraduate students than the Baltimore County campus.

UMBC narrowly lost the America East Championship game to Albany last weekend by a single goal. Meanwhile, Maryland is one of the four ACC teams to qualify for the tournament ... No. 14 Colgate (11-5) is the highest ranked team not to make the field of 16.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

Seven O's
Every Wednesday:
♦ KARAOKE ♦
♦ LIVE BANDS ♦
Friday, May 11th, 2007:
RED GRENATE
Saturday, May 12th, 2007:
TOTAL RECALL
♦ STUDENT BAND WANTED ♦
Need a place to play? Come to Seven O's!
Route 116, 330 Amherst Rd. Sunderland, MA 01375 (413) 665-9788
3 PM to 1 AM M-F
1 PM to 1 AM Saturday
Next to Clarke's Apts.

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

4				7	6			8
	6	8		2		5
			3			6	2
		9			8
	3						7
			1			9
	5	3			7
		6		1		7	8
1			5	9				6

andiamo

ACROSS
1 Frees from
5 Hawaiian dance
8 Rami's husband
14 Curved molding
15 NYC theatrical award
16 Vibrant
17 Aida or Ladd
18 Leader
19 Clan's emblem
20 Winter spell
22 Present
23 Popular nightclub
24 Defend
27 Refrain
29 Crude
30 City on the Ruhr
34 Cool or groovy
35 French cleric
36 Once more
37 At that place
39 Govern
40 Windmill part
41 Decay
42 Give rise to 43 Newt
44 Game with four jokers
47 Come up for air
49 Einstein's field
54 Pull sharply
55 Become less tense
56 Artist Picasso
58 Gloomy
59 Space lead-in
60 Nearby
61 Shuttle org.
62 Small musical group
63 Government's due
64 Visa alternative
65 British gun

DOWN
1 Insecticide target
2 Icy abode
3 Worked at blackjack
4 Transmits
5 Associate familiarly
6 N. Atlantic sinkers
7 Speech defect
8 DDE's rival
9 Restrict allotments
10 In the rigging
11 Strenuous acrobatic dance
12 Hair to Horace
13 Tailor's line
21 Extend across
22 Grumble
24 Twosome
25 Television distribution system
26 Chirping sound
28 Greek letter
30 Gutters' site
31 Confused circumstances
32 Shelter for a soldier on guard duty
33 Lamb's mom
35 Exist
37 Racing oval
38 Sharpen
42 Chesapeake and Hudson
44 Tippy vessels
45 Husband or wife
46 Chest
48 Incorrect
50 Does ushering
51 Having no will to move
52 Pierre or Maine
53 Hug and kiss
55 Rich, fertile soil
56 Cut of an agt.
57 In the style of
58 Recombinant letters

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE HARP
SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
THURSDAY • RUDY BROWN
SATURDAY • DUDE F#CKIN' _YEAH
CINCO DE MAYO PARTY!
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar East of the River 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate Readers Poll
OCMC & All Credit Cards accepted
Free wireless Internet!
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net

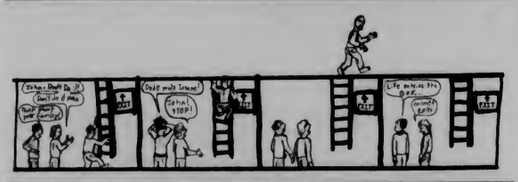
Quote of the Day

"My biggest weakness is my sensitivity. I am too sensitive a person."
-Mike Tyson

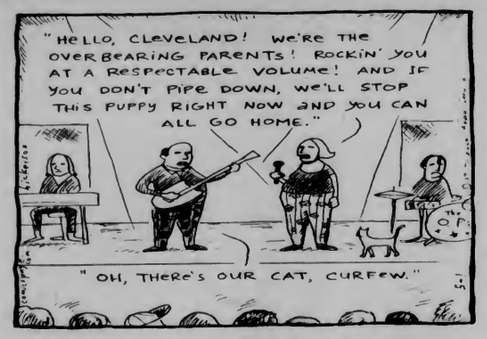
Welcome To Falling Rock National Park By Jesse Steele

Oh boy! A bike!
It has a bent tire
I could turn it into a unicycle
Ernesto, You have to stop riding that unicycle
Park visitors ride bikes and cars
Yeah, but when Pattie see a lizard on a unicycle, they don't think "Park." They think "circus."

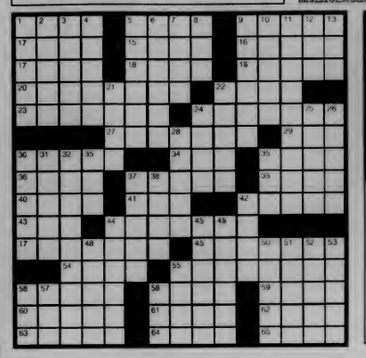
Outside The Box By Alex Fjorkenlie



The Quigmans By Brody Hickerson



"HELLO, CLEVELAND! WE'RE THE OVERBEARING PARENTS! ROCKIN' YOU AT A RESPECTABLE VOLUME! AND IF YOU DON'T PIPE DOWN, WE'LL STOP THIS PUPPY RIGHT NOW AND YOU CAN ALL GO HOME."
"OH, THERE'S OUR CAT, CURFEW."



Submit your comics!
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Locate the danger zone (as described by Kenny Loggins) and take a ride into it.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
When faced with confrontation, its best to turn around and act flatulent.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Conduct all conversations as if they are a formal and awkward interview.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
There is an indirect correlation between onion breath and close friendship.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Watching amazing soccer films on Youtube is the best way to spend your time.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Don't let on that you and R. Kelly have more in common than most people think.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
The world is your corn husk. Now get out there and shuck!

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You will be plagued by a flesh eating bacteria. Sorry.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Synergize your life by eating meatloaf and listening to Meatloaf at the same time.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
The time for flip-flops is now upon us. Rejoice and be merry.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Hand out Snickers to hungry people and put the DC out of business.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Purchase a pair of velcro shoes and you will add one minute of free time to each day.

Giving blood is cool but giving comics is better.

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Like no other course, Army ROTC Our Nurses call the shots! Guaranteed 3 ½ to 2 year Full Tuition Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Apartments for Rent

28 Stockbridge St. 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,900/Mo www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Employment

Summer Jobs for the Environment Campaigne Offices in 60 cities! Work with Sierra Club and State Environmental Groups on a nation wide effort to Fight Global Warming this summer. Work with college students from across the country! Make $4000-$6000/ Summer. Career oppurtunites and benefits also available. Amherst office call: 413-256-6434. Boston Office call: 617-292-4810 or Call 1-800-75-Earth for opportunities in other cities. Visit our website at www.jobsthatmatter.org

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Employment

Summer Job on Martha's Vineyard! Asst. Manager, retail clothing store in Edgartown. Richard 413-575-1579 or email rdwhite27@charter.net

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must call 413-584-4746

Brandywine Apts. Needs a certified lifeguard. Full time hours flexible. Must work some weekends. $9.00/ hr Call 549-0600 or stop by office.

Employment

WORK OUTDOORS THIS SUMMER Full time positions available in your hometown. Earn $8-12/ hour Painting houses with a fun crew. Call 888-277-9787 or www.collegepro.com

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/ hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Summer Jobs for the Environment Work with Environment Massachusetts on a campaign to Fight Global Warming and work with great people! Make $400-$600/week. Career opportunities and benefits available. Call Mel at 413-256-6434. Visit our website @ www.jobsthatmatter.org

House for Rent

House for rent on Cape Cod Rent for summer 3BR 2 bath house with large yard in Dennis. Available immediately. $5k per month or $8K for entire summer. Call 617-312-3034

3 Bedroom, Nice, recently updated. Near Bus stop. Also near Downtown Northampton $1200/month No pets. For June. Skibiski Realty 413-586-1827

Services

BUY ONE, GET ONE FREE Emergency Contraception (EC), prevents pregnancy up to 5 days after unprotected sex. Affordable and Condifential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992, wwwtapestryhealth.org

Summer Sublet

Alpine Commons apartment June-August 15th $2050/ month includes utilities. 413-204-9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

Senior Wills!

Leave your friends one last message as you graduate in the Daily Collegian's 2007 Flashback issue.

The flashback will be distributed in the final daily issue and at graduation. $15 will get you a picture and a message. Send your message and photo to thecollegian@gmail.com or visit 113 campus center.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, MAY 8, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Runners fall flat at A-10s in Charlotte

Men's squad finishes eighth, women come in 10th overall

MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's and women's track and field team traveled to North Carolina for the Atlantic 10 Championships last weekend. Despite high expectations leading into the meet, the men's team placed eighth, and the women placed 10th.

Rhode Island won the men's A-10 Championship, while Charlotte placed second, and LaSalle third. As for the women's division, Charlotte took first, Richmond second and Rhode Island placed third.

The men's team had hoped for successful performances at the A-10 Championships coming off of its win at the nine-way home meet the week prior. The men's team was unsuccessful in reaching its goal and placed eighth out of 11 teams.

"It was a disappointing team performance," said UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien. "We hoped to finish from fourth to eighth place. It's never best to finish at the bottom."

The top performances from the men's team came from the relay teams. All three relay teams qualified for the IC4A Championships. In the 4x100 relay, the Minutemen placed fourth, with a time of 42.05 seconds. The 4x400 meter relay team placed third in 3:17.45. The 4x800 meter relay finished in 7:37.70, good enough for fifth place.

"We didn't have a bad meet, but it was not championship material," said O'Brien. "We went down to a championship meet and had dedicated most of our season's practices to this meet. I don't think it paid off at the level we thought it would."

The Minutemen had many successful individual performances. Season-best performances were spread across the board, but over-

See TRACK AND FIELD on page 7

Junior Christina DeRosa and the Massachusetts women's track and field team finished 10th at the Atlantic 10 Championships.

Minutemen take on Huskies

UM faces regional rival in midst of league race

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Senior Bryan Adamski leads the Minutemen with three home runs and a .383 on-base percentage. From the pitcher's mound, he has three wins and three saves for UMass.

Currently sitting in seventh place in the Atlantic 10 standings, the Massachusetts baseball team will take a break from the uphill postseason battle to play back-to-back non-conference games this week.

The Minutemen host Connecticut (22-23, 6-12 Big East) this afternoon at 3 p.m., and head to Boston to play Northeastern tomorrow.

UMass (18-20, 10-11 A-10) is one spot out of an A-10 Tournament berth after dropping two-of-three to Richmond this past weekend at Earl Lorden Field. Only six teams advance to the playoffs, and the Minutemen are two games back in the loss column to St. Bonaventure (11-9).

Connecticut plays its second consecutive non-conference game today. It is coming off an 8-7 win over Northeastern yesterday, but has lost three of its last five games.

Leading the way for the Huskies is Dennis Donovan, who holds a team-high .328 batting average. Donovan has started in every game this year for UConn. He also leads the team in RBIs with 29, and is one of five Huskies with two home runs. Senior outfielder Josh Farkes has the most with four.

Donovan is the only UConn player batting .300, which is better than UMass, which has nobody batting over .300 and nobody with more than 19 RBIs. Junior second baseman Adam Tempesta leads the Minutemen in hitting with a .299 average, while sophomore Jim Macdonald holds the most RBIs with 19.

Today will mark the second matchup of the season between UMass and UConn. The Minutemen knocked off the Huskies in Storrs, Conn., back on April 10 for the first time since 1998.

Two runs in the 10th inning propelled the Maroon and White to a 6-4 victory. Junior Andy Tuetken led off the

See BASEBALL on page 7

Brown to stay in Amherst through 2011

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Following a trip to the NCAA National Championship game last season, UMass coach Don Brown agreed to a five-year contract extension yesterday.

Massachusetts Athletic Director John McCutcheon announced yesterday that UMass football coach Don Brown – who led the Minutemen to the Division 1 Championship Subdivision National Championship game against Appalachian State in December before losing to the Mountaineers – has agreed to a five-year contract extension that puts Brown in Amherst through the 2011 season.

"We are very pleased that Don Brown will continue to direct the UMass football program," McCutcheon said. "This past season was one to remember for all UMass fans and with this agreement I know we will be in very good hands for many seasons to come."

Brown has a lengthy history in the Pioneer Valley. He was part of UMass' 1998 national champion team, serving as the defensive coordinator under head coach Mark Whipple. That team defeated Georgia Southern in the national championship in Chattanooga, Tennessee, and Brown took the Minutemen to Chattanooga this season as the head coach.

UMass lost to Appalachian State in the championship after defeating No. 2 Montana on the road in Missoula, and McCutcheon thought it best to keep Brown around for the long term.

"I am happy to agree to the extension to remain the head coach at UMass for the next five years, being a Massachusetts native," Brown said. "UMass has always been a special place for me and my family. We will continue to work hard to maintain the high level of competition which has been established at UMass."

McCutcheon took over the athletic director position in 2004 and fired Brown after Whipple moved to the NFL to become the quarterback coach for the Pittsburgh Steelers.

Brown has had a successful career as the head coach here in Amherst. He is 26-11 in three seasons at UMass and is 78-37 overall as a head coach, including his time at Plymouth State and Northeastern. At Northeastern, Brown won the league title in 2002, becoming just the second coach in league history to lead two different teams to conference titles.

Brown spent four seasons at Northeastern before coming to UMass to become the 27th head coach in the history of the program.

The UMass coach is losing several key seniors to graduation, including running back Steve Baylark, who registered four 1,000-yard rushing seasons while wearing the UMass uniform. Baylark was recently acquired by the Arizona Cardinals in the aftermath of the NFL Draft.

Wide receiver Brandon London, the Minutemen's leading receiver for the 2006 season, is also graduating. London was signed by the New York Giants after the draft and Brown will struggle to replace London at wideout.

For the second year in a row, Brown will lose a key safety. Two seasons ago, defensive back Shannon James, a tremendous impact player in the UMass defense, graduated, and now James Ihedigbo is graduating. It will leave a significant hole in the UMass defense that Brown, a defensive-minded coach, will have to fill.

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu.

Emotional farewell for Teman, seniors

UMass role-player fought adversity to play final season

BY JEREMY RICE
AND JOE MELENDI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In between the first and second game of Sunday's doubleheader with La Salle, the Massachusetts softball team honored the five seniors on this season's roster.

Of the five seniors, first baseman Amanda Moran, entis fielder Candice Molinari and designated player Amanda Acampora start for the Minutewomen, while Jackie Teman and Michea Holness see most of their action as pinch runners for UMass (34-12-1, 18-0 Atlantic 10).

Two of the seniors, Acampora and Molinari, currently serve as captains for the Minutewomen, but the other three players provide leadership and strong examples to the younger players on the roster. Teman especially.

After committing to UMass, she suffered a series of concussions and doctors ruled her ineligible for her freshman year. She rehabbed during that season in hope of returning as a sophomore, but nothing improved.

After doctors told her that she would never play again, Teman put the success of the program first, accepting a medical scholarship to free up an athletic scholarship for UMass coach Elaine Sortino to use on a player who could take the field.

UMass Softball

So, after three years at UMass, Teman didn't see the field once but didn't let that stop her from trying to make her way into the lineup.

Before this season, she received her first bit of good news since arriving in Amherst four years ago.

The damage suffered from the concussions healed enough that she could play the field and run the bases safely. But if she wanted to take the field for UMass, she would need to make a decision.

Her medical scholarship disqualified her from playing. If she wanted to play for UMass, she would need to vacate her full scholarship and pay her own way for her final year at UMass.

Teman agreed to accept walk-on status for her final season and made her debut in UMass' first game of the season against California-Santa Barbara on Feb. 9. After pinch running for Acampora, she scored on a bases-loaded walk by junior Stacy Cullington.

She currently ranks fifth on the team in runs scored (21) and fourth in stolen bases with six.

REACHING THE RECORD BOOKS

Cullington made UMass history on April 29. The junior hit a pair of home runs against A-10 rival George Washington, pushing her season total to 14, tying the school's single-season home run record, set by KJ Kelley in 2005.

Since then, Cullington had five games remaining in the regular season to take sole possession of the UMass home run mark, but couldn't get that last ball over the fence.

She did not hurt the rest of her statistics, however, going 3-for-7 with an RBI, a run scored and six walks over that five-game span.

PLEASE RISE FOR THE NATIONAL ANTHEM

Freshman shortstop Whitney Williams typically occupies the nine spot in the UMass batting order. A nine hitter is usually not the best offensive player and often an easy out – this is not the case with Williams.

See SOFTBALL on page 7

Despite losing her first three seasons to injury, senior Jackie Teman has found a niche for herself with the 2007 Minutewomen. As a pinch runner, she has scored 21 runs and stolen six bases.

ECAC represented in NCAA Tourney

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

At the beginning of the season, it looked like three teams would represent the ECAC in the 2007 NCAA Tournament. Yet after three months of lacrosse competition, only two teams made the cut into the 16-team field.

Continuing their seasons this weekend will be No. 4 Georgetown and No. 12 Loyola, while No. 19 Rutgers and No. 20 UMass failed to qualify. These four teams are also the only ECAC schools to be ranked in the final Nike/Inside Lacrosse Media Poll.

ECAC Lacrosse

Georgetown (11-2, 7-0 ECAC), having clinched the conference title and its automatic bid two weeks ago, earned the tournament's sixth overall seed. The team will host No. 6 Princeton (10-3) on Sunday, but it will most likely have to go through No. 3 Virginia (12-3) to reach the Final Four.

The Hoyas dominated the ECAC this season, finishing with a perfect 7-0 record. The team also boasts non-conference victories over No. 7 Maryland (10-5) and No. 8 Navy (13-2).

While Georgetown cruised to the conference championship, Loyola (7-5, 5-2 ECAC) quietly finished in second place. Narrowly picked to finish third in the conference by the league's coaches, Loyola suffered conference losses to Georgetown and Rutgers (7-6, 4-3 ECAC).

Even though the team has the least amount of wins of any team in the NCAA Tournament, the

See ECAC LACROSSE on page 8

Check out the Daily Collegian's sports blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com!

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SUNNY : HI: 85 LO: 57 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, MAY 9, 2007

Former track star threatens lawsuit

Sophomore Jordan Veney, formerly a member of the women's track and field team, is appealing her recent removal from the team.

Claims to be victim of discrimination

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Former Massachusetts track and field star Jordan Veney sent a letter to the University of Massachusetts through her lawyer last week to appeal her recent removal from the team and the termination of her $20,000 scholarship.

Veney, an African-American, cited racial discrimination as the reason for her removal.

UMass women's track and field head coach Julie LaFremiere cut Veney from the team in November and took away her $20,000 partial scholarship, effective at the end of this semester.

Veney is asking the University for a $23,500 scholarship for the remaining two years of her enrollment, which covers the full scholarship that, according to the demands letter, she should have received for this academic year. The demands letter informed the University that it has 10 days to respond to Veney's request before she will take legal action "against the University of Massachusetts and the employees involved," the letter said.

If the University complies and grants her the $23,500 scholarship for the next two years, Veney said she will return to UMass next year. If not, Veney will file a lawsuit against the University on the grounds of racism and discrimination.

On Monday, Veney will hold a press conference in conjunction with the Student Government Association (SGA) to shed more light on what she believes to be discriminatory treatment from the coaches of the women's track and field team, specifically LaFremiere. The press conference will be held at 3 p.m. in the Dukes Room of the Student Union.

"I've been aware of what's going on with the track team," said former SGA Student Trustee Mishy Leiblum, who organized the press conference. "There is a clear pattern of racial discrimination on the women's [track] team and it seems like somewhat of a trend."

Two or three other athletes, including Erik Hoagland, a member of the men's team, will also speak about their experiences with discrimination in the program, Veney said.

Veney claims that other members of the track and field team, who can either attest to discriminatory treatment of others or have experienced discrimination in the track program, submitted comments to be read at the press conference on the condition of anonymity.

In the demands letter, Veney claims that LaFremiere "only exhibits her racism if and when her athletes of color refuse to kiss up to her."

Veney cites in the demands letter several other African-American teammates who received similar treatment, which "confirmed her suspicion" of LaFremiere being a racist.

The conflict stemmed from a

See VENEY on page 3

Modern day Minuteman

UMass student recounts war experience

BY WILL MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

At age 18, Zagami was flown overseas to fight in Iraq. Today, he is vice president of VASMA and uses his activism to break the stereotypes of fighting in the war.

"I'm not pro-war, I'm pro-soldier," says Jon Zagami, a member of the United States Army Engineering Corps and Resource Economics major at the University of Massachusetts. He arrives five minutes early to the interview, but apologizes for being the later one to arrive. If it weren't for my Facebook.com stalking prior to this interview, I wouldn't have recognized him as an Iraq War veteran involved in the invasion.

In a T-shirt, jeans and a buzz-cut, he could be mistaken for an average student. He splits his time between military training exercises and managing homework, just as he splits his wardrobe, which he changes one weekend a month, two weeks a year. His uniform camouflages his body and makes him vanish into sand, his denim and cotton blends him in with the college environment – another face in the crowd.

The politics of the Iraq War don't interest him much; he's a business major. He did his business in the desert and concerns himself with supporting those still there and preparing for finals. He didn't think he'd even be in school, never mind excelling at UMass' Isenberg School of Management.

"I barely got through high school," he reflects. "I didn't think I could handle college." Instead, he joined the Army in search of some structure in his life. His grades dropped dramatically his senior year of high school.

"I was going through some family stuff that I thought was a big deal at the time," he explains. "My parents had gotten divorced, my brother went off to school and I was left with my mom and two sisters. I told myself, 'Get your life on track and go.'

"At first my family was nervous and scared. It was something new. You can join the Army at 17 with your parents' content, but they told me there was no way I was going to get [it]," Zagami continues. "Now they're very proud of it. They want to tell everyone about it. They are, I don't know, proud that their son is an Iraq War vet. I signed up as soon as I could [without consent]. And they said, 'He's really going through with this. You haven't done anything right to this point. When are you going to show up?'"

Zagami showed up in basic training in Oregon in 2002.

"I excelled. It was the first time in my life I was part of something that caused me to say, 'Wow, this is awesome,'" he says.

But this newly-found confidence proved evasive. Upon finishing basic, he was placed in a unit fresh from keeping the peace in Africa and Kosovo, and headed to Kuwait.

"I remember getting these classified briefings," he said about his "Welcome to the Army" moment. "At the time they were talking about the definite existence of weapons of

See VETERAN on page 2

Arrest rates increase over spring semester

BY COREY CHARBON
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Police activity has increased dramatically on the University of Massachusetts campus, stemming from events that have hurt the school's image, and resulting in a substantial increase in student arrests – especially since the riots that occurred at the end of the fall semester.

The University of Massachusetts Police Department, since the beginning of this semester, has arrested 256 people on campus as of April 15 – a period of about two and a half months. That figure compares to the 840 arrests on campus in all 12 months of 2006, according to Patrick Archbald, Deputy Chief of UMPD. Some 95 percent of the arrests are for alcohol-related offenses, he said.

Overall, Archbald said police are trying to encourage "a change in behaviors by curbing alcohol and drug use on campus."

The majority of those arrested face charges for misdemeanors, he said. A misdemeanor is a crime less serious than a felony and usually punishable by no more than one year in jail.

About three to four percent of arrests are for drug-related offenses, he said. Arrests are more rare for drug trafficking, a crime classified as a felony, and punishable by stiffer fines and prison sentences, Archbald explained.

The remaining one to two percent of arrests involve problems with domestic violence, indecent exposure and theft.

The police crackdown comes after the black eye the University received from the Dec. 15 riots in the Southwest housing area after the school's football team lost 28-17 to Appalachian State in the NCAA Division 1 Championship. Some 2,000 students poured into areas in and around the buildings in Southwest, breaking windows and starting fires. The destruction cost the University $100,000, according to the UMass Office of News and Information.

The increased police presence was evident by the first weekend of this semester, with the arrests of 29 people on the UMass campus, according to police reports from that weekend.

The stepped-up presence also follows a November 2005 AIHC Primetime program that labeled UMass as one of the more violent schools in the country. The Springfield Republican later labeled the AIHC report as flawed and other work indicates that UMass has been penalized for reporting crime more honestly than most other institutions.

"There is direct correlation to the

See UMPD on page 3

Wilson reacts to Card degree nomination

E-mail negates nomination allegations

BY WILL MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Students and faculty are opposing the nomination of former White House Chief of Staff Andrew Card for a UMass honorary degree because of his "alleged involvement in the Iraq War's selling to the American people."

University of Massachusetts President Jack Wilson supports the selection of former White House Chief of Staff Andrew Card for a UMass honorary doctorate degree and addressed rumors of a flawed nomination process in an e-mail.

"The president supports the decision of the Board of Trustees to award Andrew Card the degree," said William H. Wright, a spokesman for the president's office.

Rumors have circulated that Card was added to a list of potential degree recipients through unofficial channels. These rumors were addressed in an e-mail written by Wilson and obtained by The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

"Sadly, when tempers flare, the truth is often the first casualty. A former leader of the Faculty Senate reported that the Chancellor, President, and Board selected the honorary degree recipient [Card]," stated Wilson in the e-mail. Wilson goes on to describe the accusation as, "Balderdash!"

"Andrew Card was nominated by a faculty member and vetted through a committee of faculty, students and staff recommended to the Trustees," he stated. Wilson stated this is a "well-known and well-documented" truth. "There were no changes to the degree list by the Trustees, Chancellor or President. Any suggestion that Card's name was added by the President or Trustees is wholly false," Wilson wrote in the e-mail.

Official or not, students, faculty and alumni have been adamant in their opposition to Card's nomination. In addition to his April lecture that drew mass protest on campus, an online petition against his receiving the degree has been created – totaling 745 total signatures thus far.

Wilson's e-mail mentioned an encounter between a faculty member and UMass-Worcester professor and recent Nobel laureate Craig C. Mello. Mello was on his way to give a lecture at UMass-Amherst last Friday when the faculty member approached him. According to the e-mail, the faculty member asked Mello sign a petition "to have the invitation to Card withdrawn." Mello declined to sign the petition, according to the e-mail.

One Web site claims that Card is, "not eligible for a degree according to University of Massachusetts Policy Doc. T93-060, 'Policy on Awarding Honorary Degrees,' which makes 'only persons of great accomplishment and high ethical

See CARD on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 134

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherol Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jameson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPIES EDITOR Adam Szajgin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Bellineau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
FEATURES EDITOR Melissa D'Amico
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Penz
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolianitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCRAWL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN WAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES, AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

Soldier, student combats military stereotypes mass destruction. We had to be prepared for a chemical threat at all times. They showed us pictures of people who were exposed to chemical weapons, what happens to them," he reminisces. "I just remember sitting in my bunk, 50 guys on each side of an open space. I don't think anyone slept that night. We were just thinking, 'we're going over for the invasion.' They just told us the worst possible case scenario. We're going to get gassed with some shit that is going to melt our skin off and turn our insides to mush.

VETERAN from page 1

He thought to himself, "'I'm 18 years old. What the hell am I doing here? What am I running into?'" I remember looking over to one of my buddies and saying, 'if we get gassed, just put [a bullet] in my head cause I don't want to deal with that shit.' It just seemed like a big game to me – a big war game. I was thinking that it wasn't real combat because I was just out of high school."

Zagami was the youngest of the group. With the lingering insecurities of youth, he felt he didn't measure up with the rest of the older, more experienced battalion. He felt expendable, disposable.

"But they embraced the fact that I was the youngest," he said. "They helped me grow up." They gave him pointers on how to dress, how to talk to girls – things most teenagers learn through trial and error. "It was cool, but we all knew that in a few days we were going to be in the shit." Before leaving for the invasion and before the major briefings, he told his family the little he knew about what was going on before they were to be locked down.

He was going to Iraq, a confusing assignment because he thought he was going to Afghanistan.

"Afghanistan had been in full swing since September 12, really. They told us we were going into Iraq, and we all said, 'OK.'"

Iraq was absolutely foreign to him.

"I knew there were forces being built up in Kuwait. I asked myself, 'Where the hell's Kuwait? It's probably going to be another miserable desert.' I knew nothing about the history of Iraq. All I knew about the Gulf War was the news clippings I saw from first grade. I was just a kid. I didn't read newspapers, didn't watch the news," he explained.

He had no idea why he was going but said it didn't matter. He was signed up, enlisted.

"In the military, it's not about why but [it's about] the guy next to you. The guys around me got together and decided to prepare me for war," Zagami says.

He was prepared by the Army for war, but it was his humor that helped him adjust to the possibility of chemical war.

> "I thought I was going to come home in a Zip-lock bag because we were going to get gassed"

"I thought I was going to come home in a Zip-lock bag because we were going to get gassed," he recalls. "We joked about it then. It might have been sick, but it was how we dealt with it. My lieutenant came up to me and told me this was for real – no game, no reset button. He told me I needed to get my stuff together because we were going. He told me to sit down and really think about what I wanted to do if something were to happen to me. I responded, 'What do you mean?'"

As soon as the plane hit the ground and dropped Zagami's company on the runway, they were immersed into the unknown. The military flight was long and cold, he remembers. The soldiers had sweaters on to fight off the high-altitude chill. The plane's wheels reconnected with land at night, but the desert heat was still a shock.

"It felt like we dropped at a 90-degree angle. It was amazing." With all his possessions strapped to his back and an M-16 under his feet, he stood, picked up his weapon and stepped through the plane's door that separated his field of rye from the obscurity of manhood beyond the cliff.

He broke the first unwritten rule of the Army: he volunteered. Joseph Kennedy Jr. volunteered, and his plane crashed after an unsuccessful suicide mission. His first few days were spent driving, but he was quickly reminded of the volatile surroundings of his presence.

"We were in camp, and a siren went off. Some were for a scud missile attack, others were for a threat of chemical weapons. But, regardless, we all went to our battle stations," he says. The attack was during the night, but he said it was hard to sleep anyway. "We were always going 1,000 miles an hour. We were sleeping in a hole. It felt like someone picked us up and dropped us. The shake was incredible," he explained.

An anti-tank mine had gone off outside the base. The mysterious "they" tried to set it, but it blew up in their faces. He had learned how to disarm them in training, but it was the last thing he wanted to do now. He said to himself, "This is part of my job?" There were mortar attacks, drive-by shootings, and again, he had his doubts.

"Do I really want to do this?" he asked. "All my friends are sitting in college, probably drinking beer and having sex, and I'm here getting shot at and feeling things blow up with a bunch of guys that think I'm just a baby." He thought that he was ready for war after basic training, but it was very different from what he imagined.

But Zagami did get a chance to see his friends' lifestyles for himself. After Iraq, he came to UMass feeling confident he could handle academia, but the transition proved difficult. He pauses trying to find the words to describe Iraq.

"It's impossible to explain," he began. "You'd have to experience it to really know. You'd have to feel the heat. You'd have to wear the same dirty uniform for a month." Although it's difficult for him to explain his life in the war, that is all people wanted to know upon his arrival home.

"I told my family I didn't want to talk about it. They understood. Only certain people kept in contact with me, and you remember them. You remember those who didn't too. They disappeared off the face of the planet," he says.

He shrank from physical contact. It had been a while since he felt a family member's embrace. Being in the Army for so long kept him away from hugs.

Physical contact was limited to a leg looping during sleeping time. If an alarm went off, his movement would wake up the soldier he was connected to and vice versa. "I just needed some space," he says. "And at times, I just wanted to go back – go back to what I'm used to. I get it there.

"We were the first wave to come home. 'What's it like? What's it like? What's it like?' It's all I ever heard. How am I supposed to tell you 14 months of my life in a two minute conversation? It's not even worth it. I told my family, 'Don't ask me what this shit is like. I don't want to relive it.'"

He was approached with the opinions from the community. He didn't care about what George W. Bush was doing because he was simply doing his job. He told them, "You don't get it. You'll never understand."

"I didn't care. I closed up to everybody. I didn't want to talk to anyone other than the guys I had served with," he says.

From home, he came here to UMass. He says he felt like he didn't fit in. He was accustomed to the military lifestyle. He asked an advisor during orientation if he could skip the "ice-breakers," two truths and a lie, games designed to help the shy socialize and come out of their shells. He skipped these, picked his classes, made a schedule and left for the rest of the summer, again insecure and uncertain of what the fall would bring.

He said the advisor told him that they never expected to have combat veterans here. There was no program for students like him.

"I ran into that everywhere I went," he explained. "I'm different from all these kids – different mindsets. Not better, not worse, but different.

> "Don't tell me that I did something wrong over there. I know what I did; I know that I helped people. I touched people who didn't have food, didn't have a home to go to."

From there, he met Jon Schnauber, another military man who was trying to get a student organization off the ground designed to help former soldiers adjust to school.

"I had never met him before, but we were like old Army buddies. I was sitting in a room in the Campus Center filled with Army guys, Navy guys, Airmen, and I said, 'Wow, this is where I fit in.'"

In this setting, he started talking again. He is now the vice president of this organization named VASMA, Veterans and Service Members Association. Zagami got involved after Schnauber initially introduced the idea to him, but prior to writing this article, Schnauber wanted me to identify Zagami as a co-founder of VASMA.

"He just got up and ran with it. He really made things happen," Schnauber said. This is a far cry from the withdrawn soldier who wouldn't talk about his immediate past and had night tremors as the sounds of running outside of his dorm room door brought him back to combat, thousands of miles and months past.

From these meetings, Zagami took on the campus. He was successfully adjusting, he had his moments but was confident. None of the bullets aimed at U.S. Troops had reached him, but he was knocked unconscious three times while in the desert. Once, he took a hammer to the head, another time, a combat boot; he doesn't know what hit him the third time. The hospitals were filled with soldiers blown up and shot. He thought he could handle being unconscious for a minute or two.

But he wasn't fine. In Gold's Gym on University Drive, he suffered a mild stroke. He ate with his sister that night who knew immediately something was wrong. His speech was slurred, facial features off and his writing was incomprehensible. He realized his own mortality and was tired of hiding the aspect of his life that the liberal, social campus he lived on suppressed.

As a result, he began speaking publicly. He was asked to speak from a veteran's point of view with the mother of a killed American soldier. Her name was Cindy Sheehan, and she was famous nationwide for her protests of the Iraq war from her campsite outside of the President's Texas ranch.

"I wanted to preface what she was saying with the fact that there are war veterans on campus. You can have your rally, but be respectful of us." He reiterated, "I'm not anti-war. I'm not pro-war. I'm pro-soldier."

In an editorial featured in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian he said, "This University embraces students from all ethnic, religious and sexual backgrounds. At what point are we going to stop targeting the military for conflicts in Iraq and Afghanistan? The members of the military on campus should not be forced to hide their service. Have your protests, your displays and your outcry's, but remember that it is the troops that allow you to do so."

"We are perceived as barbaric figures. We're seen as killers, as animals," Schnauber says.

"I'd see an anti-war rally and someone would come up to me and say, 'Oh you've been in Iraq? I'm sorry, you won't have to do that again, we'll make sure of it.' Don't tell me that I did something wrong over there. I know what I did; I know that I helped people. I met people, I shook hands. I touched people on the ground who didn't have food, didn't have water, didn't have shoes and met kids who didn't have a home to go to," Zagami adds.

"We put them in shelters and hooked them up with the Red Cross," he says. "Don't tell me that I didn't help them, I mean I know I did, because I saw smiles on their faces; I played soccer with them. You can think that I went over there and did something terrible, but I don't. Don't try to downplay what I've done and tell me that I was wrong to get on a plane, go there, and do my service."

Now, students may not realize the student sitting beside them may have been through a war and now lives with the aftermath of his or her time there. But Zagami will continue to speak against those who lump the blame that is a result of failed policies of politicians onto soldiers who could have signed up out of high school looking for direction.

He said he stopped watching the news from Iraq once he arrived home, claiming that it wasn't close enough to the truth, that Americans were getting selective close-ups of a much larger picture.

"Students aren't getting the correct message from the media," he says. "They don't know what they're protesting because they don't know what's going on over there. No one knows but those who have fought."

Zagami now tells people of his experiences. He accepts interviews from strangers, hoping that a freshman reporter could look beyond the body counts reported on the daily news and into the lives of a soldier who tells his story in a University with the motto: Ense petit placidam sub libertate quietem: "By the sword we seek peace; but peace only under liberty."

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

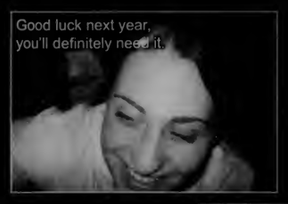
NIGHT EDITOR
Eric Athas

COPY EDITOR
Callie Williams

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

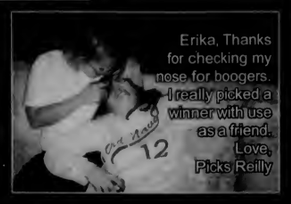
Leave your Senior Will
in the Collegian's 2007 UMass Flashback Grad Issue

One last chance for you to leave your mark on UMass.

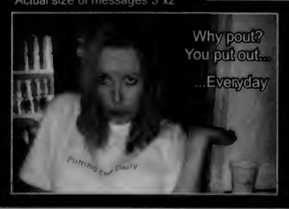


JUST $15 Per message

Surprise your friends, Thank a professor,



Actual size of messages 3"x2"



or tell your graduating class congratulations.

From Your Dorm* To The Airport And Back!
*Condo complex, pick up during the way to the Airport

■ VIP Exclusive Service
■ Door-to-Door Service
■ Charter & Group Service
■ Professional Drivers
■ New, Well Maintained Vans
■ Scheduled Van-Share Service

Call: 253-1350 or Out of Area Toll-Free at 1-800-872-8752
Or Book Online at www.valleytransporter.com

Valley Transporter The Easy Way to the Airport!

Veney claims to be victim of racism soured relationship between Veney and LaFreniere, who declined comment through a University spokesperson. Athletic Director John McCutcheon also declined to comment for this story.

VENEY from page 1

In a meeting between Veney, LaFreniere, assistant coach Mark Gottdenker, ombudsperson Catherine Porter and men's track and field coach Ken O'Brien in November of 2006, the terms for Veney's dismissal were outlined.

According to the demands letter that Melissa Loiodice, Veney's lawyer, wrote to Brian Burke, the Associate General Counsel for Chancellor John V. Lombardi, LaFreniere cut Veney from the team because "she had a bad attitude from day one."

After that meeting, Veney immediately set up a meeting with McCutcheon to appeal her removal. According to the letter, McCutcheon stated "that he received an e-mail from Coach LaFreniere, and that he agreed with her. [McCutcheon] stated that Ms. Veney's scholarship would not be renewed and further refused to say why Ms. Veney was cut from the team when asked."

Veney said she began to feel discriminated against when the coaches began setting different rules for white athletes. Veney cited the contrast in the treatment between her and her throwing partner, Lisa Wilson, a white freshman.

Veney claims that Wilson received preferential treatment from her coaches – LaFreniere and Gottdenker – while LaFreniere chastised Veney for missing practices when she had class conflicts.

According to the letter, LaFreniere told Veney in the fall of 2006 that 4 p.m. practices – which were the standard for Veney throughout her freshman year and into her sophomore year – were no longer happening, and that Veney would be required to attend 2:30 p.m. practices.

According to Veney, LaFreniere told her she had to rework her schedule to attend 2:30 practices after hearing that Veney had class conflicts.

However, Veney saw other athletes showing up for 4 p.m. practices, and immediately confronted LaFreniere, who told Veney that the 4 p.m. practices were cancelled for her and her alone, according to the letter.

Veney cites this treatment as part of a larger trend of discrimination from LaFreniere. After meetings between Veney and LaFreniere resulted in a change of Veney's class schedule to accommodate practice, Veney learned that Wilson, a fellow thrower, was not held to the same standards, and was even catered to by LaFreniere and Gottdenker, according to the letter.

While Veney wasn't allowed to practice at 4 p.m. and was forced to restructure her schedule to attend 2:30 p.m. practices, Gottdenker was more than flexible with Wilson and her practice times, according to Veney.

"This is outright discrimination. [Wilson] is a thrower just like me," Veney said. "I'm a sophomore. She's a freshman. My stats are higher. She's going out on Saturdays to throw the hammer and I'm not getting a phone call? It's ridiculous."

Veney was recruited out of high school by coach Bob Otrando, the conditioning coach for the football team and men's basketball team. Otrando also served as a part-time throwing coach for the women's track team.

Veney said she has a good relationship with Otrando, and they worked together during her freshman year until he was removed from his position as the throwing coach in summer 2006.

Otrando's removal, according to the demands letter, was a result of LaFreniere's personal vendetta against him. Veney believes she was caught in the middle of the "political mess."

Otrando declined to comment.

From that point on, Veney said, her relationship with LaFreniere was tense. She said the two began to argue over talk about her scholarship, which covered $20,000 of the $25,000 tuition.

"In April or May of 2005, Ms. Veney met with Coach LaFreniere," the demands letter reads. "At this meeting, Coach LaFreniere gave Ms. Veney a verbal commitment that if she did exceptionally well as a freshman, she would get a full scholarship her second year. With this in mind, Ms. Veney obtained a tutor and quickly raised her grade point average. Her distances kept rising, and she broke the University shot put record approximately five times . . . Based on this, and Coach LaFreniere's assurances, Ms. Veney decided to ask Coach LaFreniere how she could earn a full scholarship."

Upon hearing Veney's question, LaFreniere started asking questions like, "Why are you asking?" and "Are you only in this for the money? And if you are you shouldn't even be on the team," according to the letter.

Veney said that she explained her financial situation to LaFreniere and that she was willing to work hard to attain the extra funding.

"I can't afford to come here," Veney said. "My mom has the worst credit in the world. My grandmother is too old. It's either out of pocket or through loans."

During her freshman year, Veney set both the outdoor and indoor UMass shot put records. She ranks third all-time in the discus event and won the shot put and discus events twice during the 2005-06 outdoor season.

The Atlantic 10 named Veney Co-Rookie of the Week on April 24, 2006, and she was awarded the UMass/Dinn Brothers Co-Athlete of the Week honor twice – the first time on Jan. 30, 2006, and the second on April 10.

In the outdoor track season, Veney finished third in the shot put event and fifth in the hammer throw event at the Atlantic 10 Championships, and set the school record for the shot put twice during that stretch.

During the indoor track segment of the 2005-06 season, Veney set the school shot put record three times, breaking her own record twice.

Veney thought she had performed well enough to earn the extra $5,000 that LaFreniere had promised in exchange for performing well during her freshman season, and she went to LaFreniere's office before the outdoor season to ask what she needed to do to get the $5,000 added to her $20,000 scholarship.

According to Veney, LaFreniere said if Veney qualified for the NCAA Tournament, then she would get the whole scholarship.

There were two opportunities for Veney to qualify for the NCAA Tournament during the 2005-06 outdoor season, and she had three opportunities in three different events – the hammer throw, the discus and the shot put – to qualify.

The Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference Championships were held on March 3, 2006, as were the New England Championships. Both events were opportunities for Veney and other athletes to qualify for the NCAA Tournament through good performance.

Veney qualified for the ECAC Championships but, according to the letter, LaFreniere didn't enter Veney into the event, citing a lack of coaches to drive her as the reason.

But Veney maintains that Otrando told her he would have signed her up and driven her to the ECAC Championships if he had known that LaFreniere wasn't going to sign her up.

The New England Championship, another event during the same weekend, was another opportunity for Veney to qualify for the NCAA Tournament and get the full scholarship. However, according to Veney, LaFreniere didn't let her go to the New England Championship because "she missed an academic meeting without informing anybody that she wasn't attending," the demands letter states. However, Veney had informed her academic advisor Tracy Drummond she would be missing her academic meeting, and she wanted to reschedule.

But Veney missed out on the New England Championship and her final chance to qualify for the NCAA Tournament and get the full scholarship.

"Because of the unwarranted action and/or omissions of Coach LaFreniere, Ms. Veney, an African-American athlete, was kept from attending the New England meet, her last chance to qualify for the NCAA and to earn a full scholarship," the demands letter states. "Perhaps this is why Coach LaFreniere stopped Ms. Veney from attending."

Veney states in the demands letter that another African-American athlete, Elisabeth Budd, received similar treatment from LaFreniere, who, according to the letter, withheld Budd's compliance papers for the New England Championships until it was too late to file them.

Budd missed out on the New England Championships as well, while three white athletes competed. Repeated efforts to contact Budd were unsuccessful.

However, there are several athletes on the women's track and field team who claim they have not received any discriminatory treatment from LaFreniere.

Kendra Leighton, a junior sprinter and a woman of color, said, "I have not received any discriminatory treatment nor do I know anyone who has."

Sophomore sprinter Dionise Miranda, also a woman of color, had similar remarks.

"I have not received any discriminatory treatment from my coaches nor do I have any recollection of anybody receiving such," Miranda said.

Veney, however, was admittedly frustrated with what she perceived as unfair treatment from LaFreniere. Veney had set UMass records in the shot put and the discus, but she was still going to miss out on the rest of the scholarship because of what she perceived as LaFreniere's discrimination and sabotage.

"When they cut me from the team they said I was making no progress," she said. "You say I made no progress? What else do you want me to do? Do you want me to stand on my head and throw at the same time? Do you want me to jump up and down? Please, tell me."

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenf@student.umass.edu

CELEBRATING HIS HOLINESS THE 14TH DALAI LAMA

FEATURED MUSEUM SHOWS
Aesthetics of the Sacred: The Buddhist Art of Tibet
Installation of a Japanese Buddha Sculpture
Fashioning Tradition: Japanese Tea Wares from the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries

second FRIDAYS
a FREE art experience for all ages

May 11, 2007 4–8 pm
FREE ADMISSION !
ALL GALLERIES OPEN
MUSEUM SHOP OPEN

4–6 pm 2nd Fridays Fun
An art project inspired by a special exhibition about the Japanese tea ceremony will be offered for visitors with children (ages 4+)

6–6:30 pm Scholar on Art
Marylin Rhie, Professor of East Asian Studies at Smith College, will offer a gallery talk on selections from the special exhibition Aesthetics of the Sacred: The Buddhist Art of Tibet

Tues-Sat 10-4, Sun 12-4
Second Fridays 10-8 (4-8 FREE)
Closed Mondays and major holidays

Elm Street at Bedford Terrace
Northampton, MA
413.585.2760

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP

www.smith.edu/artmuseum

Solve your summer storage problems
IN THE NEXT 5 MINUTES!

✓ CHECK IT OFF YOUR LIST!

Rent your unit online right now!
Rent your summer storage unit online at AmherstSelfStorage.com and be done in about 5 minutes—less if you're a fast typist!
Get instant access to your unit as soon as you've completed your online rental.

No standing in line - no last-minute rush!
- Quick online rental
- Minutes from campus
- 24-hour key-code access
- Surveillence cameras
- Easy move-in & move-out
- Clean & well-maintained

Many sizes to choose from:
5 x 5, 5 x 10, 10 x 10, 10 x 15, 10 x 20, 10 x 25, 10 x 30

AmherstSelfStorage.com

UM police target substance abuse

UMPD from page 1

label [of one of the more violent schools in the country] and the need [for increased police presence], which the administration is responding to with additional staffing," Archbald said.

According to Archbald, Vice Chancellor Michael Gargano asked for an increase of police presence on campus. Since then, police added about 325 surveillance cameras on campus at a cost of $500,000. The newly installed cameras played a key role in the arrests and prosecution of several students involved with the December riots.

Since March 2006, five officers have been added to the UMass Police Department – a 10 percent increase from 56 to 61 officers.

Although drug-associated crime plays a lesser role on campus than alcohol, Archbald said there's been a "refocusing by the police department to concentrate on the amount of drug use on campus." The refocusing has included more undercover work in an effort to find drug dealers, with a consequent increase in search warrants, he said.

This is not the first time the campus has reacted to student behavior with more police action. In November 2003, major destruction occurred on campus related to the Boston Red Sox performance in the 2003 ALCS. In those incidents students flipped cars, lit furniture on fire and destroyed other property.

In 2003, police arrested 87 people in alcohol-related disturbances, which increased to 266 such arrests in 2004, according to UMPD. Likewise, the 37 drug-related arrests in 2003 increased to 98 in 2004.

Card degree backed by UMass president standards who exemplify the ideals of the University of Massachusetts' eligible for such an honorary degree." The site, www.petitiononline.com, cites Card's alleged involvement in the Iraq War's selling to the American people.

CARD from page 1

According to a flyer created by the organizers of this Thursday's rally in opposition to Card, "When asked by The New York Times in early Sept. 2002, why President Bush had waited until after his August vacation to begin his 'propaganda' campaign, Card replied, 'From a marketing point of view, you don't introduce new products in August.'"

The petition's Website includes Kevin M. Cummings of the Mathematics and Statistics Department saying, "Andrew Card is a fraud, a liar and a war criminal. As an [alumnus] and a staff member I am offended that this university is awarding a degree to a person who is chiefly responsible for one of the largest political frauds in history. I will never give one red cent to this university again."

"Awarding Card an honorary degree is providing the wrong message to all members of the UMass community. The decision reflects terrible judgment and a lost sense of balance. It honors a man who should be tried for war crimes. Please rescind the invitation. If not, there will be substantial protests at the graduation ceremony," petition signer Elliott Bass adds.

President Jack Wilson addressed potential protestors in his e-mail stating, "We will not tolerate violence or threats of violence at the University. We will certainly be prepared for anyone who introduces violence into our activities. They will be met with arrest and full and vigorous prosecution under the law."

Wilson also mentioned in the e-mail that UMass "will also protect the lawful and peaceful right to demonstrate and to speak out. Peaceful demonstrations are the right of any citizen, and we do our best to protect that right. We owe the students, the faculty, the citizens and ourselves a wonderful graduation day. If we take that away from them, it will not be the fault of Andrew Card. It will be the fault of those who perpetuate the violence and disruption."

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@student.umass.edu

Southwest Spring Fling BBQ

Wednesday, May 9, 2007

Top of horseshoe in Southwest
From 4:30–8:00 pm

Menu:
Boneless Chicken Breast
Sirloin Burger
Natural Casing Hot Dogs
Veggie Burger
Caesar Salad
Marinated Tri Color Fusulli Salad
Fresh Fruit Salad
Italian Ice
Fudge Drop Brownies
Assorted Beverages

Entertainment:
"Battle of the Bands"
hosted by Southwest Area Government

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst

Dining Award GRAND PRIZE WINNER '05

umass.edu/dining

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

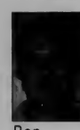
EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MAY 9, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." -Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Voting my conscience



Ben Duffy

As the 2008 presidential primaries heat up, I am less than enthusiastic. There are essentially six major candidates, and I'm not thrilled with any of them. The three major contenders on the Democratic side are Hillary Clinton, Barack Obama and John Edwards. I'm not a Democrat, so I'm watching the GOP more closely. Among Republicans, the big three are John McCain, Mitt Romney and Rudy Giuliani. With only those three to choose from, the real challenge is not to choose the best one, but to choose the candidate who is the least bad.

McCain built his career on ingratiating himself to the media. In 2005, he was the unofficial leader of the so-called "Gang of Fourteen" that originated the bogus "compromise" on judicial nominees. I still haven't forgiven him for that. McCain is also the co-sponsor of the egregious McCain-Feingold campaign finance reform that allowed George Soros to steer so much political power to himself while restricting political speech. Don't even get me started about Senator McCain and illegal immigration.

Then there's Giuliani, the candidate who supports publicly-funded abortions. It isn't enough to slaughter the unborn, he wants me to pay for it too. His campaign slogan ought to be "A woman's body, a woman's choice, the taxpayer's dollar." Great job on 9/11 Giuliani – but you're still a liberal.

And Romney? Our former governor discovered roughly five minutes before the unofficial beginning of his presidential campaign that he was a conservative. Sure, I can understand why a Republican in Massachusetts might have to give ground on some issues, but a system like that will always favor the candidate who is the most willing to compromise his principles. Or perhaps more accurately, it favors the candidate who has no principles at all. In any case, his sudden conversion to conservatism appears wholly dishonest. Romney is the type of guy who doesn't really believe in anything except getting elected.

The type of person who emerges is usually called a "moderate." A better adjective would be "bland," or even "spineless."

Our political system favors weasels over passionate believers. This is especially true in presidential politics. While a politician who represents a small district can take tough stands on issues, she/he will have to amend those tough stands when she/he decides to seek the presidency, the only political office that is determined by the nation at large.

Capturing the White House requires broad support. We're a country of many races, ethnicities, income levels and creeds. We have soccer moms, union guys, ranchers, yuppies, seniors and businessmen. We have the NAACP, the AARP and the NRA. No candidate can please all of these groups, but every group has a say in who our next president will be.

When you combine all elements of our national political atmosphere, the result is the largest, most diverse electoral district on the planet. A candidate will have to tell the Jewish-Americans that she/he supports Israel, the farmers that she/he supports agricultural subsidies and the seniors that she/he will look out for the immediate future of social security.

The type of person who emerges is usually called a "moderate." A better adjective would be "bland," or even "spineless." For this reason, I don't scoff at people who vote for lesser-known candidates within the two parties, or people who venture outside of the two-party structure entirely. Go ahead and vote for Ralph Nader or Michael Badnarik if you want.

The candidate I support for the 2008 presidential Republican nomination is Representative Duncan Hunter of California. Sure, he's a long shot, but I like where he stands on the issues and I respect him as a man. In my estimation, he would make a better president than any of the big six candidates.

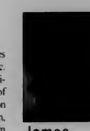
Hunter served his country with honor in Vietnam, having volunteered for the elite 75th Ranger Regiment. When he came home from the war, he put himself through college and law school on the GI Bill while working side jobs in construction. Hunter supports our war effort in Iraq, but no one is going to call this old Army Ranger a "chickenhawk." This particular supporter of the Iraq War and former chairman of the House Armed Services Committee also has a very personal stake in the Iraq War. I'm talking about his son, a Marine lieutenant who has served two tours in Iraq.

Duncan Hunter supports a constitutional amendment that would legally recognize the humanity of unborn children. Such a radical idea puts him "out of the mainstream." He also supports a constitutional amendment that would define marriage as between one man and one woman. Despite the fact that 49 states define marriage exactly that way, he will no doubt be labeled "extreme." His "hard-line" view on the illegal immigration crisis is that we should enforce our laws. He opposes judicial nominees who will legislate from the bench, as well as United Nations power grabs at American national sovereignty.

In other words, he's the conservative that the Republican Party doesn't have the intestinal fortitude to nominate. Rep. Hunter eats liberals for breakfast, lunch and dinner. I'm not going to cast my vote for the lesser evil. I'm voting for Duncan Hunter, and I encourage my readers to check him out.

Ben Duffy writes on Wednesday. He can be reached at bcduffy@student.umass.edu

The crux of the matter is...



James Mathews

Three weeks ago, less than a day after the shootings at Virginia Tech, Max Karson was in trouble. In a women's studies class discussion at Colorado University, he had offered his sympathies to the shooter, Seung-Hui Cho. He was "angry enough to kill," he said, and he understood what would drive someone to do so. A few of his classmates felt threatened, and by the afternoon he had been arrested. The charge was "interference with faculty, staff and students," a full-blown misdemeanor. He spent the night in jail, and by the end of the next day he had been released on bail and suspended from the University.

For a brief period, Karson was national news. He had met with lawyers from the ACLU, and his suspension had become an issue of freedom of speech. Network websites ran short summaries of the chain of events in Colorado. Bloggers of all kinds had a field day with the story, either condemning Karson as a distasteful brat or praising him for speaking his mind. After another week or so, the story disappeared from the national scene. Here in the Pioneer Valley, it remained a hot topic.

As anyone familiar with the Town of Amherst will tell you, the Colorado incident was not the first time that Karson's free speech had gotten him in trouble. Four years ago, as a senior at Amherst Regional High School, he was suspended not one, but three times for distributing offensive material. Karson was the lone publisher of "the Crux," a one page underground newspaper offering commentary on school issues. Each issue closed with a numbered list of "Important Things to Think About." A typical issue's list reads:

"1. Pro-choice, or pro coat hanger? 2. I'm actually gay. 3. Does anyone else want to admit that they're 'on the cross country team?'" In Amherst, Karson's suspensions were rescinded, and "the Crux" faded into memory.

Max Karson, after all, is a product of his environment.

At Colorado University, "the Crux" became "the Yeti." By last October, Karson had stirred up yet another free-speech storm. After Women's groups on campus condemned "the Yeti" as offensive, Karson was reprimanded by the University. A university official was quoted as saying that he was "reviewing whether or not 'the Yeti' is protected as free speech." Local news sources picked up the story, and the ACLU demanded that the University let "the Yeti" be. Until last month's comments, Karson remained a relatively normal student. He is now indefinitely suspended.

Network websites and online magazines aside, Facebook may be the best place to get the "low-down" on Max Karson. The group "Make Friends With the Yeti" features a discussion thread that reveals in quite good detail the chain of events leading to his arrest. The message board for "Free Max Karson" is a lively debate, with colorful comments from students at C.U and schools across the country. "[We] have a right to feel safe and not threatened," writes one student. "I feel extremely threatened…by morons like you who want to restrict free speech," writes another. Although tempers flare on the "Free Max Karson" message board, the discussion is quite intelligent, and at times rather revealing. A dissenting student writes: "there is no way to attempt to humanize the killer at VT. He was a sick nut job and has no right to be compared with humans." The reply is sarcastic: "let's just agree to keep VT in our thoughts and prayers….changing our profile pictures to the Virginia Tech logo makes a BIG difference." As a nation, we do not discuss these issues – not even in the aftermath of Virginia Tech. Even in the small corner of cyberspace that is Facebook, it takes figures like Max Karson to bring them to the fore.

Controversial as they may be, we need such figures. They are few and far between. Aside from Eminem, the iconoclastic rapper and Devil's advocate extraordinaire, we have not seen many. Within the academic world, Karson may be the first. Why do we suffer a lack of provocative personalities? Why, in the wake of events like those that took place at Virginia Tech, was a college student in Colorado the only one to break the ice and begin the discussion of issues that we'd rather push aside? The answer may be closer than we think: Max Karson, after all, is a product of his environment.

Here in Amherst, where Karson was raised, everything is upside down. Ideas that most young people first encounter in college are standard fare at its Middle School. All of the "isms" of the liberal university dialogue are known to it's High School students. What is new and exciting to the undergraduate is "old hat" to the Amherst teen.

It is places like this that produce minds like Karsons. Where most college students find discussions of race and feminism and the likes to be provocative, he has, as they say, "seen it all before." And so, to remain amused or perhaps simply interested, he pushes the proverbial envelope of dialogue. When he does so, he knows the consequences. In a text message to a friend on the day of the Virginia shootings, before his comments in class, Karson described his plans for publication.

"I'm writing about how I can see where he was coming from," he said. "I'm going to get expelled."

James Mathews can be reached at jwmathew@student.umass.edu.

A modest proposal

Debra Capellari

In recent conversations, it has been brought to my attention that what this country needs right now is to reinstate the draft. Yes, you did read that correctly, and no, it's not supposed to be funny. It is becoming more and more apparent that the disapproval rating of the Bush administration's war with Iraq continues to increase, and that the dissent isn't just on liberal college campuses anymore; it's gone national.

However, even though it's increasingly obvious that people are tiring of the war, the efforts to stop the violence are somewhat lacking, some would say, because there is no imminent draft card on its way to people's doorsteps. Apathy has set in, due to the fact that in this present day wartime, being a soldier is optional, not mandatory.

We, on the whole, know how to talk the talk about ending the war, but fall painfully short when we attempt to walk the walk.

Let's backtrack just a little bit to another famous war in American history that caused a social uprising. The Vietnam War, fought throughout the 1960s, is a war that sparked harsh resistance from the American people, especially those who attended colleges and universities. Back then, many of the drafted men grew more and more enraged at the fact that they were expected to fight in a foreign country that they knew very little about, in a war that, at least at the time, seemed to have very little effect on the American public. The notorious "hippie" movement was spawned out of public disagreement with the war. The tie-dye shirts and free love were just side effects of what was actually organized protestation of a war that an American public did not agree with. The hippie movement was more about social issues and less about smoking dope than some people choose to admit.

In the 1960s, the nation's college-aged citizens were busy organizing nation-wide movements in reaction to their protest of the war. Groups like Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) and the Vietnam Day Committee were working nonstop to make sure that their opposition to the war was heard by prominent people in Washington, D.C. Organized marches were coordinated and these types of groups had an extraordinary amount of influence. Members of these groups traveled around the country, signing other people up, getting them excited about having a voice and a say in what was happening in this country.

Flash forward around 35 years or so and we find ourselves in a similar situation. The war with Iraq is commonly compared to the Vietnam War, and has faced similar criticisms from members of collegiate communities. And while you can find a good number of self-proclaimed "hippies" on any given college campus, you may struggle to find the type of old-school hippie who believes in good old fashion protesting to achieve the desired results.

Here at UMass we have a large number of students who have no problem expressing their disgust with the administration's lack of progress in Iraq; we frequently discuss what the options for withdrawal are. The war is a prevalent topic in classrooms and in commonplace discussions. We can certainly claim to have a number of Birkenstock wearing, peace loving, plant loving people. We have a radical student union. A lot of us pride ourselves on attending a liberal University. We have all of the amenities to help to organize a great group of people who know how to incite others to stand up and have a voice.

We have the distinct advantage of being on a college campus where most of the students are like-minded. But what we're lacking is the organized portrayal of our beliefs. We, on the whole, know how to talk the talk about ending the war, but fall painfully short when we attempt to walk the walk. Our attempts at protests are weak compared to those that have come before us. We're apathetic, and it shows.

So, I'm asking the government to reinstate a draft. Consider this a direct appeal to those people in Washington who could actually make that happen. A draft would ensure that people of the correct age in this country were sent cards in the mail that legally bound them to go and fight. A draft would be democratic and would prevent recruiters from targeting those people who feel like the army is the only choice they have to get a good education. A draft would, essentially, level the playing field. Perhaps if college students were faced with the idea of having to really go overseas and fight in this war, we would all step up and fight, instead, for what we believe in.

Deb Capellari can be reached at dcapellar@student.umass.edu.

I'll drink to that

Dan Nicastro

I am 21 years old and I still live in the dorms. It's a long story about why, but nevertheless, I do. While I can't wait to move off campus, I must admit that there really is something to be said about dorm life. It's fun and somewhat comforting to have the ability to walk down the hall and "drop in" on one of your friends. It's also somewhat humbling to know that you can cram pretty much everything you own into a 12-by-20-foot space. Unfortunately, there will be many things I will not miss, namely the ridiculously stringent alcohol policy.

Like I said above, I'm 21, meaning I'm of legal drinking age. Despite this, my roommate and I were written up for possession of alcohol and we were both charged with possession of "alcohol paraphernalia" over spring break.

There was very little alcohol in the room: an empty bottle of Jack Daniels and a 750 of Baileys. The amount of alcohol in our room was within the accepted amount UMass lays out in its drinking policy. The "alcohol paraphernalia" which we were charged with was the possession of three shot glasses, and while these shot glasses were not hidden, they were certainly not displayed prominently. This means the RAs who searched our room would have been forced to examine our belongings rather closely. When we went to our Assistant Residence Director to fight this charge, I claimed responsibility for the alcohol, and because I was within the legal limit of alcohol possession, that charge was dismissed.

However, the possession of three shot glasses is apparently a much more serious crime, as it is a violation of Section II.D.10.f of the University Alcohol Policy, which states "The possession and/or use of drinking paraphernalia or products that promote the abuse of alcohol and/or put the user in a position to consume alcohol irresponsibly is prohibited. This includes but is not limited to funnels, taps and beirut/beer pong tables."

That's quite a policy. Anyone who is in possession of a product which promotes the abuse of alcohol, or could put someone in the position to drink irresponsibly, will be written up and face judicial action. As students, we're pretty much screwed no matter what. This vaguely drawn alcohol policy leaves a gigantic amount of power to those in charge of enforcement. For example, I have several large glasses which, if I wanted to, I could fill with vodka. My guess would be the University (and my liver) considers that extremely irresponsible. Does this mean I (and all of you) should be written up for having containers which hold liquid of any sort? The alcohol policy is so broadly written that it could actually happen.

Rules are supposed to be based on rationality, and the alcohol policy clearly isn't.

Where is the line drawn? What happens if there's a Guinness poster in someone's room? It's clear Guinness is an alcoholic beverage and that the brand is being promoted in this room. Is that a violation of the alcohol policy? Can the RAs or ARDs infer that this poster "promotes the abuse of alcohol?" Seems like they can.

There's also the question of mixed messages being sent by the University. My friends were written up a few months ago for the same charge, "possession of alcohol paraphernalia." However, they got off the hook when they pointed out to the Assistant Residence Director that they were in possession of UMass shot glasses bought from the University Store. I walked into the UStore before I wrote this column and saw three tables filled with so-called "alcohol paraphernalia," including one which was filled to the brim with shot glasses. If UMass is so concerned with our despicable drinking habits, why would they sell objects which are apparently meant to promote the abuse of alcohol?

I understand and totally agree that UMass needs an alcohol policy in place for general safety reasons, to enforce the law and (to an extent) to help promote safe drinking habits. It's no secret that college kids drink to excess, and rules need to be set in place to allow college kids the chance to control these habits. At the same time, rules are supposed to be based on rationality, and the alcohol policy clearly isn't, especially if you're 21. It seems ridiculous that I'm allowed to have alcohol but am denied a means to measure how much I'm actually drinking.

Something needs to be done about this broadly drawn, open-ended policy. The strict enforcement of these rules (which says more about the policy and not the RAs enforcing it) is forcing many students to search for off-campus housing. This may have been the University's goal in enacting the policy in the first place. We are no longer guaranteed four years of housing so what better way to force kids off campus than by crafting an insanely broad, irrational alcohol policy. It worked for me. All I know is that I'm keeping three shot glasses in plain sight in my apartment next year. And there's nothing UMass can do about it.

Dan Nicastro writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at dnicastro@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

HONESTY, NOT MARKETING

The decision by UMass' bureaucrats and board of directors to award an honorary degree to Mr. Andrew H. Card, Jr. ought to be immediately rescinded in no uncertain terms. He should also not be allowed to attend this year's graduate and undergraduate convocations. The chicanery of Mr. Card, which was immortalized in his sentiment that "from a marketing point of view, you don't introduce new products in August" (a comment that refers to the campaign to convince the public of the necessity of a war with Iraq), disqualifies him from such an honor.

Mr. Card lacks honor and integrity. The idea that the United States government ought to treat voters no differently than an audience targeted by a corporation during a marketing drive is contemptuous and plainly contradicts the principles of democracy. Voters ought not be treated as consumers by their government; they are citizens, and the decision to go to war is not comparable to puzzling over whether to purchase a Kia or a Honda. To embrace such undemocratic sentiment warrants scorn, punishment and not commemoration with an honorary degree.

Panayiotis T. Manolelos
UMass alumnus

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." Adlai Stevenson

Should we Card the candidates?

Unite and rescind

Andrew Freeman

One of the lesser-known purposes of academia is to provide moral leadership for society. This comes across through the high ethical standards that professors are held to – they may not lie or commit plagiarism without endangering their careers. Our moral leadership is also conveyed through honorary degrees.

At every graduation, the University of Massachusetts awards honorary degrees to distinguished individuals. Such degrees are to be awarded only to "persons of great accomplishment and high ethical standards who exemplify the ideals of the University." On May 25, Bush's former chief of staff Andrew Card will receive an honorary degree from UMass at Graduate Student Commencement.

Andrew Card worked in the Bush White House until 2006, and he was one of its most important figures behind the scenes. Card handled Bush's schedule and advised him on the political repercussions of his decisions. On The Daily Show, Card described himself as the gatekeeper to the president – he decided which information passed up to Bush. It was Card who, on Sept. 11, whispered in Bush's ear during the reading of "The Pet Goat" in a Florida schoolroom. The chief of staff played a key role in shaping Bush's policies, both domestic and foreign.

Card certainly is not being recognized for any contributions to the University, or to an academic discipline; he has no such achievements

When Bush began the process to go to war with Iraq, it was Card who led the war's marketing campaign, as he described it. He formed the White House Iraq Group, which coordinated the administration's statements about Iraq. All the talk about aluminum tubes, Nigerian yellowcake uranium, smoking guns and mushroom clouds can be laid at his feet. It was a propaganda campaign to drag the American public to war, and it worked.

What's more, Card himself admitted that the campaign was cynical. Asked about the timing of the campaign by a New York Times reporter, specifically why it started after Labor Day, Card remarked, "From a marketing point of view, you don't introduce new products in August." A war that has killed and maimed thousands of Americans, a war that has destroyed many more Iraqi lives, a war that has become an immense tragedy for all involved, was to him no more significant than the release of a new product.

When Card came to UMass in April, he continued to defend the president and all of his policies. He even repeated the thoroughly debunked claim of an Al Qaeda-Iraq link as a justification for the war. Unlike other officials who distanced themselves from the administration after leaving office, such as Richard Clarke or former Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill, Card remains an ardent supporter of the president.

Card is not being recognized by the University for his stint as Massachusetts legislator, for his job as a lobbyist for automotive firms or for his positions in the first Bush and Reagan administrations. He would have received the degree years ago if any of those roles merited honor. Card certainly is not being recognized for any contributions to the University, or to an academic discipline; he has no such achievements.

It is Card's integral role in the Bush cabinet that is being honored. By honoring him, the University is endorsing the Iraq War and all the other works of the Bush administration. The UMass Board of Trustees, led by Chairman Stephen Tocco, presumes to speak for all of us, both students and faculty, in supporting the Bush presidency. They signed off on Card's nomination, and have made no effort to back down from supporting it.

By awarding Andrew Card an honorary degree, UMass administration betrays its own undemocratic tendencies. This past Thursday, a coalition of undergraduate and graduate students, as well as faculty, confronted Tocco at a meeting on campus and requested that the board revoke their offer to Card. Student Trustee Mishy Leiblum suggested a special meeting of the Board on this issue. The chairman disregarded these democratic requests. He argued that the process used to select Card was valid and that he deserved the honor. Tocco offered to discuss revising the process, but would not consider rescinding Card's degree.

While Card is certainly a man of accomplishment, his ethical standards are anything but high. He oversaw a massive campaign of misinformation and deception – any professor or researcher who engaged in a comparable venture would be immediately thrown out of any self-respecting university. To present him with a degree is a condemnation of every virtue UMass stands for, and it would be a black mark on this institution.

There is nothing irrevocable about this process, however. If the people who drive UMass – the faculty, staff and students – voice their opposition to the administration's decision, then it will be reversed. This is an opportunity for all of us to take a stand against the Bush administration and against the Iraq war, and in favor of a more democratic society.

Andrew Freeman writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at adfreema@student.umass.edu.

A rounded statesman

Nick Milano

When Andy Card first visited the University of Massachusetts campus on April 11 to give a speech at the inaugural "Talking Politics" lecture, he was greeted with a wide variety of protestors. From students with signs, to students imitating war wounds, the meaning was apparent: this man helped to mislead the country. Similar protests broke out again when it was announced that Card would be receiving an honorary doctor of public service; in fact, the Massachusetts Daily Collegian ran not one but two editorials on Monday protesting the decision.

In deriding the administration for choosing Card, those opposed have focused entirely on one part of his life in public service, albeit an important part, without considering his marvelous tenure as a Massachusetts state representative and his overall contribution to the country.

Dedicated to cleaning up politics, he was given a chance to make a difference.

Card became nationally recognized as the man who walked into that Florida classroom on that fateful day to whisper those horrible words, "A second plane hit the second tower. America is under attack." But Card was more than just a White House Chief of Staff; he was so much more. A native of Holbrook, Mass., he has spent most of his adult life in public service and jumped right in at a young age. Elected to the House of Representatives in 1975 when he was still several years shy of 30, Card served one of the most effective tenures ever by a Massachusetts state representative.

Dedicated to cleaning up politics, he was given a chance to make a difference when the scandal involving the construction of the University of Massachusetts Boston campus surfaced with two senators, one a powerful Republican and the other a leading Democrat, sent to jail for extortion. In response, Andy Card strode to repair the status quo. Political corruption was so rampant, Dave Denison described it in the Boston Globe as "a time when men called 'Sonny' and 'Toots' were the people to see if you wanted to get something built in Massachusetts."

Massachusetts Inspector General Greg Sullivan who served in the House with Card still considers him "the best state representative I ever served with." He was young and idealistic, but unlike many reformers Card was successful. He teamed with Democrat Phil Johnston to create a commission to study the history of corruption in Massachusetts. Given unparalleled subpoena and witness protection power, this Ward Commission found that of just under half of $17 billion spent on public construction in a 10-year period was spent poorly.

Card refused to stop there; he pushed for the passage of legislative recommendations offered by the Ward Commission. Though he was fought tooth and nail by the commanding Democratic leadership, his determination and willingness to abandon partisan differences resulted in new ethic, campaign finance and public construction reforms that still stand today. For his efforts, he was recognized as Legislator of the Year and given the Distinguish Legislator Award by the Republican Legislators Association and the Massachusetts Municipal Association, respectively.

Card failed in running for governor In 1982, but continued to serve the public. He directed both the disaster relief efforts after Hurricane Andrew and Former President's Bush's transition office and served as the current President's Chief of Staff.

One argument taken by those who oppose the honorary degree is that he should have been rewarded in the early 1960s for his actions in helping to rid Massechusetts of the corruption the Ward Commission deemed was a "way of life in the Commonwealth." Card is being awarded for such meritorious actions, but more so for his whole life of public servitude. His career has been most unselfish, serving the public in capacities people only dream of. Yearly, citizens of the United States become more and more apolitical. Voter turnouts barely eclipse the halfway mark in presidential elections; we were shown up by the French of all people. We need people like Card to not only work in the public sector, but to make it more attractive to people in the future.

Card's goal as a Massachusetts state representative was to return politics to the people – a vision Barack Obama has adopted. Later in life, Card continued to serve the people of the United States in various positions nationally and locally. The University of Massachusetts is recognizing him for his commitment to public service, not because he represents the UMass administration's political agenda. In hearing and reading the words of the protestors, it seems they oppose the award entirely for political reasons, not because Card was a dutiful civil servant.

Nick Milano can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

Don't fear the reaper

Jackie Hai

There's a fairly common sentiment these days that America is in trouble.

Our democracy is ossifying while the public tunes out. With the middle class disappearing, social inequality is on the rise. Individual and national debt are both through the roof. We are overextended militarily and much of the world hates us for our foreign policy. Perhaps most daunting of all right now is the specter of the energy crisis: fossil fuels will soon run out, taking our economy and livelihoods with it unless we find alternative solutions.

All these factors and more are on a collision course that could mean widespread crisis for our nation. But we need not fear the future. The crisis is surmountable.

Collapse is a scary word, but it doesn't have to be.

Why am I so sure of this? Because, as humans, we have done it before. By looking to the past, we find not only evidence of what happens when society gets into trouble, but suggestions for how to get back on the right path.

Ian Kuijt, professor of anthropology at the University of Notre Dame, has written extensively on social change in Neolithic villages 8,000 years ago. Of particular interest is the phenomenon of collapse. What prompts a large population center to fall apart abruptly as the people abandon their life ways and decentralize? One compelling theory, advanced by Kuijt, proposes that there are two triggers: the external, environmental cause and, more importantly, the internal one, driven by members of society.

Traditionally, scholars have focused the most on those external pressures leading to collapse: environmental degradation, diminishment of natural resources, war, disease and other catastrophes. The other half of the equation, which is starting to gain recognition in recent years, involves a significant portion of the community deciding that they wanted change.

Generations of population increase, social segmentation and declining standards of living eventually reached a point where the people said "Enough," and simply picked up and left. 'Ain Ghazal and Basta, major centers of civilization, were abandoned in favor of small, self-sufficient hamlets.

Today, it's happening all over again. We've wrecked the environment, overdrawn our resources and lived in a society considered unjust by many. While we can't exactly pack up and leave anymore (where would we go?), we certainly can reject the failed institutions of power by abandoning what isn't working.

What's not working? Our dependence on fossil fuels, for one and the accumulation of power and wealth in a tiny number of hands, for another. We see the two align when, in the interest of profit, oil companies block legislation that would decrease oil consumption and advance research into alternative sources of energy. They are on a self-destructive path.

As we grow increasingly fed up with the current state of affairs, we should remember that power is ultimately in our hands. Just like in Kuijt's observation about our ancestors, we are the crucial second half of that formula for change. When enough of us want it, change becomes inevitable.

Collapse is a scary word, but it doesn't have to be. We are not automatons in a mechanical system, doomed to be thrown in the gutter when it all comes crashing down. We are not swept up by forces beyond our control. As creatures gifted with rational thought and possessing free will, we can abandon the bad and rebuild on the good.

There's no denying that it was probably easier to instigate change in a village of 300 people than it would be in a nation of 300 million. But we have our advantages too, such as advanced communications technology. We've already seen the viability and power of grassroots organizing, a phenomenon that is bound to gain more traction over time.

What goes around comes around, and there will be no exception made for the people in power today who are botching things up. As for the rest of us, we avenge citizens may have our work cut out for us rebuilding a better society, but we don't need to be paralyzed by fear.

After all, if we've been here before, we can do it again. And that's reason enough to stay optimistic about the future.

Jackie Hai can be reached at jhai@student.umass.edu.

Refuting the RIAA

Michael Dennis

With the recent announcement that the Recording Industry Association of America has issued a new wave of letters to college campuses across the country, fear was stricken into the hearts of students everywhere. After all, it's been postulated by survey after survey that the majority of undergrads download, so one could assume that a lot of individuals have put themselves in harm's way. On the surface, file sharing appears to be a classic case of "everybody else is doing it, so why shouldn't I?" This may be true in a lot of ways; admittedly, it's easier to explain away your musical law-bending when you can confidently turn to the person next to you and chat it up about your favorite torrent tracker.

But dig a little deeper and the downloading phenomenon starts looking more and more like a technological sea change, one led by a new generation that's grown tired of the old way of doing things. That old way is perpetuated by the aforementioned RIAA, the much maligned grandpappy of the music scene.

The recording industry remains the only industry that continuously pursues legal action against its own consumers, which would lead one to wonder if there will be anyone left to buy its products after the dust has settled. It labels downloaders as thieves and categorizes downloading as stealing. It takes a general drop in total sales, which could potentially be attributed to anything from a declining economy to a constant rise in CD prices, and haphazardly and defiantly insists that it's due to illicit downloads (with nary a relevant statistic to back it all up).

And it uses the "struggling artist" image to front the moral battle against file sharing, despite the fact that – as a result of a brutally draconian business model – no one is responsible for starving more artists than record companies. But in spite of its shoddy logic and lack of reasoned arguments, the RIAA has successfully managed to put downloaders on the defensive through the use of sheer aggression and crafty rhetoric.

There are credible and relatively neutral individuals out there who have managed to systematically dismantle the RIAA's claims.

But, believe it or not, there are credible and relatively neutral individuals out there who have managed to systematically dismantle the RIAA's claims. In 2004, Felix Oberholzer-Gee of the Harvard Business School and Koleman S. Strumpf of the University of North Carolina conducted a detailed analysis of the file sharing phenomenon, which still stands as perhaps the most well-known study on the subject thus far. Over a period of time, they studied what they claim to be "a dataset containing 0.01 percent of the world's downloads" and compared this data directly to music sales records in the United States over the same period of time, in order to test the theory (put forth by record companies) that file sharing directly impacts record sales in a negative fashion.

They conducted a thorough empirical analysis using a painstakingly complex set of mathematical formulas and data – in other words, this wasn't your everyday straw poll of 20-somethings. They eliminated the problem of relying on individuals to provide anecdotal data as related to their downloading habits, something that can lead to less-than-straightforward answers. Rather than coming in with preconceived notions and hastily proving them, they dove into a monstrously large cluster of data and looked for some dots to connect.

Connect the dots they did – and then some. As a result of their study, Oberholzer and Strumpf emphatically declared that "downloads have an effect on sales which is statistically indistinguishable from zero" and that their findings were "inconsistent with the claims that file sharing is the primary reason for the recent decline in music sales."

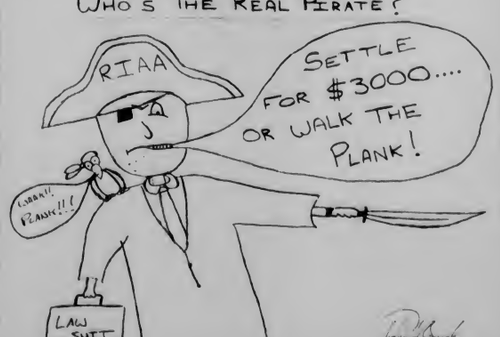
"Even in the most pessimistic specification," they state, "55,000 are needed to displace a single sale." Furthermore, their results led them to believe that "file sharing primarily serves to increase total music consumption." In other words, if you're one of the millions who finds yourself downloading music not to completely replace your purchases, but rather to expand your horizons and discover new music (other than what's being offered by the Billboard charts), take heart. You're onto something.

Oberholzer and Strumpf aren't alone either; numerous other examples of academic studies on the subject are out there. Though few have come to equally comprehensive conclusions, there are some researchers that make claims to the contrary, viewing file sharing as a potential threat to record sales. But do a quick search through an academic database and it's plain to see that the majority of researchers have drawn conclusions that overwhelmingly paint file sharing as, at worst, a nuisance.

These recent findings are significant because they offer a direct antidote to the tactics of the RIAA, which aim to marginalize downloaders and paint them out as being on the fringes of society. There's a reason why they use words like theft and piracy. Thieves and pirates tend not to be nice people. But these aren't black market arms dealers we're talking about here – they're college students.

And while all of this may not offer much comfort to those who open their mailbox tomorrow to find a cheery greeting from the RIAA, it's certainly a start.

Michael Dennis can be reached at mdennis@student.umass.edu



THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MAY 9, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rockin' through the ages

Ian Hunter looks back on his successful, lengthy career

BY JIM FARBER
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

On Ian Hunter's cranky new album, he sings about gutless politicians, clueless voters, scheming preachers and a babbling media.

So why does the music sound so poised and pretty?

"It's about bewilderment," says Hunter of the album's tone. "That, combined with pragmatism."

Don't forget age. At a surprising 67, Hunter can look back from a wry distance at the sort of spit and rage he felt in his youth. Back in his days leading the classic band Mott the Hoople, Hunter penned some of the feistiest rock songs of the '70s, from "All the Way From Memphis" to "Roll Away the Stone," along with barking out the classic hit cover version of David Bowie's "All the Young Dudes." As a solo artist, since 1975, Hunter has offered upbeat staples like "Cleveland Rocks" as well as elegant ballads, like "Ships" (an improbable hit for Barry Manilow).

But it's been six years since Hunter released a CD. Happily, his new one, "Shrunken Heads," out May 15, houses some of his best-formed melodies and most engagingly agitated lyrics to date. It's folk-rock in the best sense of the term, thoughtful and fluid.

Lyrically, Hunter says he lately found himself naturally skewing toward politics. "When you get older, you're more aware of the world," he says.

In the process, he discovered that "America has two languages," he says. "English and bull-[excrement]."

He isn't much more upbeat about the politics of his birthplace, England. "The country has pretty much disappeared under [Tony] Blair," the songwriter says. "And there's a large underbelly of people there who don't give two (expletives) about anyone but themselves."

Hunter's world-gone-to-hell perspective might make him sound like an old coot, if he didn't have such humor about it. Another socially aware song on the album finds Hunter yearning for a time "When the World Was Round," cleverly playing off writer Thomas Friedman's assertion that the planet, in the information age, has become "flat."

Hunter embraces his age on a personal level as well. In one song, he claims he hates the guy he was when he was young and, conversely, admits he now embodies everything he despised as a kid. "When you're young you slag off the old, and when you're old you slag off the young," he says with a laugh. "That's how it always has been and how it always should be."

Certainly, Hunter served his time on the youthful cutting edge even though he was actually a bit older than his peers at the time. Instead of finding his ideal band as a teen, Hunter worked in a factory for eight years and was nearly 30 by the time Mott the Hoople got going in 1969.

"Most guys my age got their shot in the '60s," he says. "I didn't get it until the '70s. So I had to grow my hair long and wear shades to cover it up," he quips.

When Mott first appeared, Hunter's sandpaper voice was compared to Dylan's. "I didn't have a great natural voice, so I went that route," he says. "[Later] I found my own voice."

Mott struggled to find its voice as well. The band put out four mediocre-selling works, marked by as many lax moments as flights of genius. Their label stuck with them through all this, as did a significant cult of fans, an unlikely event today.

"We've lost the loyalty thing," Hunter says. "Bands used to be like football teams: You were a fan for life."

Mott's late breakthrough came just before they went bust. In 1972, Bowie stepped in and let them debut his song "All the Young Dudes," along with producing its like-named CD. The single went on to become a worldwide smash, and an anthem of the glam-rock age. Physically, the band hardly fit the androgynous look.

"We weren't lovely, were we?" Hunter laughs. "But we had no choice. It was either that or back to the factory."

Hunter, and lead guitarist Mick Ralphs, went on to write enduring rock songs, though Hunter still regards the band's history a bit dubiously. "People see more in us than I ever did," he says.

One thing many see is Hunter's rare lyrical perspective. He used the group as a character right in the songs, in the process exploring the heartbreak of rock 'n' roll and the nuances of success and failure. Remarkably, his perspective wasn't self-indulgent but universal, a fact Hunter credits to "not being a corny writer".

"I was in the goldfish bowl and didn't know anything but the band," Hunter says of his subject. "You write what you know."

Hunter continued to do so through a solo career, buttressed by his frequent collaborator, the late guitarist Mick Ronson. After Mott ended in 1975, Hunter moved to Connecticut, where he raised three kids and where he still lives with his wife of 35 years, Trudy. "It's bigger and more relaxed here," he says of the States. "In England everyone hates each other because it's an island; they're too close."

In America, Hunter has found continuing inspiration. In the title song "Shrunken Heads," he addresses the country, and the planet, in a newly engaged way, using the title metaphor to refer not only to small-brained leaders and voters, but to the worship of the dollar, which comes stamped with its own miniaturized presidential head.

"There's so much going on in the country and in the world these days," Hunter marvels. "You really don't know what to write about first."

COURTESY JANE HUNTER.COM

On his latest solo album "Shrunken Heads" Ian Hunter credits his political lyrics to the fact that he is getting older.

Bush forces EPA to deal with budget cuts

BY KATIE MAGINNIS
COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

It's not often that you hear the words "President Bush" and "environment" in the same sentence. For six years now, the Bush administration has been notorious for neglecting to deal with environmental issues. That's OK, though, because we have groups like the Environmental Protection Agency to pick up the slack, right? One might assume that the members of such an agency would be dedicated to its cause and would fight passionately to receive more funding for environmental affairs. However, the recent scandal involving the EPA's Bill Roderick shows that this is not the case.

In February, when President Bush submitted his budget request for the fiscal year 2008, it included a $5.1 million decrease in funding for the EPA's Office of the Inspector General, which would result in the loss of over 30 fulltime employees. The OIG employs about 300 auditors, program analysts and investigators that are responsible for monitoring the EPA's efficiency. It comes as no surprise that Bush would propose such cutbacks for the EPA, as his administration clearly has other goals on its agenda.

Just because the President requests this decrease in funding for the EPA does not guarantee that it will happen, however. What normally happens following the President's annual Budget Request is that the Appropriation Committees of the House and Senate must approve the budget. These committees are designed to enforce the United States Constitution's statement, "No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law." In essence, this allows the legislative branch of the government to control the spending of the executive branch.

The Appropriation Committees usually begin this process in May or June, following the President's request in February. In the past 10 years, neither the House nor the Senate Committee has approved all of the bills in the budget request. With this in mind, it would seem as though the EPA still had a good chance of keeping its funding and employees.

Curiously enough, the EPA's Roderick has interfered with this process and put his agency at an even greater risk of losing employees. Having spent much of his career working with the U.S. Department of Defense as well as the Department of the Navy, Roderick would not seem to be a likely candidate for a management position at the EPA. Nevertheless, in 2006 he was hired by the Bush administration to be the EPA's Inspector General.

On Feb. 9, only four days after President Bush submitted his Budget Request, Roderick sent out an e-mail to EPA employees notifying them of his plans as the Inspector General to deal with this budget cut by closing EPA facilities and laying off dozens of employees.

The fact that Roderick had a plan ready in the case that Bush's budget proposal would be accepted might actually be seen in a positive light, if not for the fact that he acted on this plan before the budget was approved by the Appropriation Committees. Why would a member of the EPA be so quick to accept the downsizing of his own agency, when these cutbacks hadn't even been confirmed yet?

Roderick's premature attempt to drop employees from the EPA was met with suspicion by John Dingell, a member of the House of Representatives' Committee on Energy and Commerce. Warning that Roderick's hasty action could result in an "unnecessary loss of experienced personnel" if the Appropriations Committees ended up not approving the requested budget cuts, Dingell wrote a letter to Roderick himself. This letter was sent on March 22 and it requested proof of Roderick's permission to make these premature cutbacks as well as a 60 day advance notice of any plans to lay off employees.

Adding to the suspicion surrounding Roderick was the information that Roderick received a $15,000 bonus shortly before he made his plans to lay off EPA employees in response to Bush's not-yet-approved budget cuts. When someone who is responsible for overseeing a department accepts a large raise along with the sacrifice of his lower-ranking employees, this should indicate that something is not quite right. In April, the House Subcommittee on Environment and Hazardous Materials responded to this by sending a letter to EPA administrator Stephen Johnson, asking for justification for Roderick's raise as well as copies of any employee cutback documents.

Could it be that the Bush administration purposely placed Roderick into the EPA because they knew that they could rely on him to further weaken this agency? When National Public Radio asked for Roderick's response to this suspicion of his actions, it was said that Roderick was unavailable for comment.

Katie Maginnis can be reached at cemaginn@student.umass.edu.

WEEKLY PINUP

Wednesday May 9

EXHIBITION
About 60 years of printmaking by women artists, such as Mabel Dwight, Anne Goldthwaite and Blanche Lozzell, is featured in the exhibit "Women in Print: Extraordinary Examples from the 20th Century." It presents a wide array of techniques: etchings, wood block prints and lithographs. The exhibit displays the work of both American and European artists and features prints of landscapes, portraits and other genres. It is at the Connection Valley Historical Museum in Springfield and will run through June 24. The tickets are $10 for general public and $7 for students.

MUSIC
The Southwest Area Government brings the annual UMass Battle of the Bands competition to the Southwest Residential Area. The winner will be the opening act for the band Less than Jake on Thursday May 10. The music begins at 3 p.m. and is free to the public.

Friday May 11

EXHIBITION
The exhibit "Excavating Egypt: Great Discoveries from the Petrie Museum of Egyptian Archeology, University College London" features artifacts of Egyptian archaeology starting from the 1880s. Aside from stone sculptures, masks and jewelry, the exhibit also features one of the world's oldest surviving dresses, an artifact that dates back to 2400 B.C.E. Admission to the exhibit is free to all.

FILM/VIDEO
The winners of the 2007 Five College Student Film Festival, which took place on April 27 at Amherst College, will be screened at the Amherst Cinema. Ten separate films will be shown including the individual winners from each college and overall winner with a total running time of 166 minutes. Five College Assistant Professor Film and Video Baba Hillman will be giving an introduction talk before the screenings. Tickets are $5 and the films begin at 9:45 a.m.

Saturday May 12

THEATRE
Play-In-A-Day" is a benefit event for the Campaign for Transforming the Rand Theatre. The participants have 24 hours to create, plan, write, rehearse and perform about a half dozen new plays. UMass alumni Constance Congdon and Edwin Sanchez will be the guest playwrights. The suggested donation is $12 for the general public and $6 for students. The event will start at 8:00 p.m.

CAR SHOW
Parking Lot 11 is the site of the UMass Motorsport Spring Car Show. It's a chance for students to show off their rides and meet the area's biggest gear-heads. Everything on wheels is eligible to win an award with 33 categories including Best in Show, Best Street Rod, Best Chevy and the Sleeper Award. There will also be numerous events, demonstration and vendors throughout the day. Cars can start rolling in at 9 a.m. with a registration fee of $10. The show is free to the public.

Sunday May 13

MUSIC
African drumming and vibrant rhythms will fill Bowker Auditorium at Stockbridge Hall this Sunday during "Percussion Ensemble: Music for Bongos, Marimbas and Glockenspiels." The concert is directed by Professor Eduardo Leandro and will feature Steve Reich's work "Drumming" and Lukas Ligeti's "Pattern Transformations." The cost of the event is $10 for the general public, $3 for UMass students and $5 for all other students. The event starts at 4:00 p.m.

COMEDY
Comedy group Don't Make a Scene is putting on a sketch comedy show this Sunday. Attendees are encouraged to bring friends, family and their mothers to celebrate Mother's Day. The event is free and will be taking place in the basement classroom of Butterfield Hall. The laughs begin at 7:00 p.m.

BUDDAH DELIGHT

A lecture on "The Vitality of Tibetan Buddhist Institutions of Higher Education" will be given on May 11 by Geshe Damcho Gyasten, who is the director of the Institute of Buddhist Dialectics in Dharamsala, India. After the lecture, there will be a small reception with refreshments and some time for discussion. The lecture will take place in Hills (South), Room 267 from 4:00 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. The event is free and open to the public.

Molinari thrives on the other side of plate

MOLINARI from page 10

ing infielders, but struggled to consistently reach base. She'd hit the ball in the same spot and take off as she does now, but the throws of opposing infielders always beat her to the bag, retiring her by less than half a step.

She knew that she would never hit for power. Candice understood the fundamentals of hitting, but the natural physicality necessary to drive the ball simply wasn't there. She also knew she wanted to play softball at the collegiate level. Primarily because she loved the game, but another reason loomed.

"I played basketball at the time, but I knew, obviously, that I was never going to go to college for basketball," Candice jokes. "And, in my family, you either go to community college or you get a scholarship to go to a university. I knew that I had to get a scholarship for softball if I wanted to go to a four-year Division I school. I knew that I would never get there as a [right-handed] hitter."

In short, hitting right handed left her a half-step from playing college softball. So, she started the transition despite the advice of her coaches at the time. She visited batting cages and practiced swinging from the left side of the plate away from her formal team workouts.

The learning curve proved more daunting than she anticipated. The swing felt awkward and uncomfortable at first but eventually, as she developed fluency and comfort from the left side, she took her newly developed skill public.

"At first it was a little weird," Candice recalls. "So I kept practicing for weeks and weeks and I finally went to my coaches and said 'Look what I can do.'

"They started letting me do it in games. So I started off slapping left and if I'd get two strikes or something and they wanted me to hit away, I'd switch back to the right side and I'd hit away right handed."

Candice learned her slapping techniques from a videotape she bought made by Amy Chellevold, who was a four-time All-American at the University of Arizona from 1992-1995 and is widely considered the best slapper of all time.

Although Candice transformed herself into an accomplished and talented slapper, she wanted to become a complete left-handed hitter.

In the months directly after the transition, Molinari struggled to develop an all-around offensive game from the left side of the plate. So she found her way onto a series of travel teams as a reserve player. She pinch ran on occasion and played defensively whenever her team mounted considerable leads. At a national tournament in Illinois, she didn't get much playing time but maneuvered into the lineup enough to intrigue Sortino.

"[My team] went to a tournament in Rockford, Ill., and [Sortino] happened to be there," Candice says. "We were run-ruling a team and whenever we were up in a game I'd get an inning at second base or short-stop. And I don't know, coach saw me make some plays and she saw me run. She went up to my travel ball coach and asked if I'd being willing to go to the East Coast."

Candice actually preferred the chance to play on the East Coast. Growing up in California, she wanted to experience everything the other side of the country had to offer. Sortino contacted Candice after their meeting in Illinois and invited her to Amherst for a campus visit.

While here, and prior to committing to play at UMass, a remark made by Sortino let her know that maroon and white were the colors for her. The coach said she wanted Molinari to break the school's stolen-base record. This meant Sortino saw Candice as a four-year starter because there was no way she could do it primarily as a pinch runner.

"It's an honor to have her think that highly of me," Candice says.

The comment sold the girl who was previously just a reserve on a travel team.

"I saw her playing during her junior year in high school and we were looking for someone fast," Sortino says. "We were genuinely interested and she came on a visit. She wanted to tell me that she wanted to come while she was here, but her and her dad wanted to make sure it was OK with her mom. So they went back to California. She called me the next day. I remember exactly where I was. I had just gotten home from work, it was 7 o'clock at night and she called me and told me she was coming to UMass. I was very happy."

COURTESY PHOTO / UMASS ATHLETICS

UMass senior Candice Molinari is nine stolen bases shy of breaking the program's career record of 103 set by Tracy Osier in 1998.

Once enrolled, the work began. To excel at the collegiate level, she needed to add more than just slapping and running to her offensive game. And if there's any coach that can take a young player's game to the next level, it's Sortino.

Under her tutelage, Candice went from a .268 hitter as a freshman in 2004 to flirting with .400 in her final year at UMass (she ended the regular season at .399). The lack of power that initiated her decision to hit from the left-side of the plate proved the most difficult hurdle in becoming a complete hitter.

Her raw speed and steady improvement as a slapper almost assured her a respectable batting average and a lofty stolen-base total. She had a .279 career batting average and 52 stolen bases in 58 attempts after her sophomore year.

Candice wasn't satisfied.

She worked to perfect her game in the batter's box during the off-season before her junior year. Her speed remained her primary weapon but defending the soft slap becomes easier when an opponent knows to expect it.

She worked on hitting away when she arrived as a freshman and through her second season. The breakthrough came during Candice's junior year. At season's end, her batting average stood at .388, 98 points higher than the .290 clip she ended her sophomore campaign at – it also brought her career batting average to .323. Her work in the batting cage and the instruction of Sortino played a role in her batting average's swell, but Molinari attributes her success to a mental adjustment.

"I just feel a lot calmer and have a better plan of what I want to do [now]," she says. "I see the ball a lot better and know what I want to hit."

Her mental strength and toughness outweighed the disadvantages of her size. Even during her years in youth softball, the transition from right-handed hitter to left-handed hitter never would've happened if she listened to her coaches. She did it for a chance to attend college. And Molinari hasn't wasted her time here. Along with receiving her second straight Atlantic 10 First Team All-Conference nod on Tuesday, the A-10 named her to its Softball Academic All-Conference Team. She graduates later this month with a degree in accounting. This, paired with the work she did in order to roam the outfield of a collegiate softball team, earned her the captaincy for the 2007 season – fellow senior Amanda Acampora also serves as a team captain.

"I think [Candice] is a very visible leader on the field and in or off the field stuff," Sortino says. "I think she provides a role model for our freshmen and sophomores. They can look to her for consistency and I think that's really important when you look at your leadership."

Molinari's final season at UMass isn't over yet. The A-10 Tournament begins today and UMass looks for the program's 19th conference championship.

The Minutewomen enter the tournament with an undefeated conference record and playing the familiar role of favorite. If the Minutewomen hold true to their No. 1 seed and advance to the NCAA Tournament, Molinari will get a few more games before the end of her four years at UMass.

"I have a lot of great memories of my time here," she says. "But I remember my first triple; we were down at the Florida International Tournament. It was my first-career triple as a freshman. I slid into third base and I just got up and I remember smacking [Sortino's] hand. It was the first time she ever called me peanut. It was really funny."

Sortino remembers Molinari's second at-bat in the 2005 A-10 Semifinal against Fordham above all other moments. Molinari turned on a fastball and drove it over the right-field fence for the only home run of her career. She recalls Molinari skipping around the bases and how excitedly her teammates greeted her when she touched home plate.

While Molinari's home run is truly unforgettable for Sortino, Candice has yet to accomplish the one feat the coach laid out four years ago.

Molinari's 95 stolen bases leave her eight short of breaking the school record of 103 held by Tracy Osier. Whether or not she establishes a new record, Sortino feels like her career in Amherst left her among the elite players in program history.

And to think, all of this would be impossible if she stayed on the right side of the plate.

Joe Melomi can be reached at jmelomi@student.umass.edu

Check out dailycollegainsports.blogspot.com for more of the writer's interview with Candice Molinari and Elaine Sortino

Amherst hosts Atlantic 10 Tournament

A-10 SOFTBALL from page 10

Burdeaux advanced to second on a ground out to first, before moving to third after an error by the Bonnies' first baseman. She came around to score the go-ahead run when third baseman Courtney Norene ripped a single to the left side.

After Temple pitcher Brianna Dairy threw a one-hit, no-run bottom half, Temple went home victorious.

CHARLOTTE IS CAUGHT IN THE TOURNAMENT'S WEB

The regular season finished on a high note for Charlotte, who won nine of its last 10 games. After beating Elon University in nine frames in the second game of a doubleheader on Saturday, the 49ers blanked Dayton in both ends of another doubleheader.

Senior Becky Matthews and sophomore Sarah Malene, hitting .347 and .327, respectively, have been the team's top performers this season and they continued their strong play on Saturday.

Matthews concluded the earlier game having gone 1-for-3 with two RBIs and a run scored. The catcher went 2-for-4 in the encore presentation, while adding an RBI and two runs scored.

Malene went 2-for-3 in the first game, with a walk, an RBI and three runs scored. In the second matchup, the second baseman continued her solid day by going 2-for-3 again.

Matthews and Malene were two of the four 49ers named to the All A-10 Team, elected to the second team.

Senior outfielder Kristi Killough and sophomore shortstop Cee Brooks made the first team.

Killough maintains a batting average of .327 (tied with Malene for second) and leads the team with 13 doubles, seven home runs and 37 RBIs.

Brooks carries a .281 average, while having contributed 45 hits (including five homers), 30 RBIs and 31 runs scored.

A NEW STANDARD TO LIVE UP TO

By winning the first game of a doubleheader against George Washington for their 26th win, Saint Louis broke the school record for single-season victories. The previous record of 25, set in 2001, was eclipsed with a 7-4, eighth-inning victory.

Saint Louis lost the second game to GW by the same score.

Four Billikins were given All A-10 honors. Junior Ashley Levan and senior Jill Pursell were named to the first team while junior Lorena Hoccari was named to the Academic All-Conference Team and Nicki Jost landed on the All-Rookie squad. Levan was also named Academic All-Conference.

GRADUATE WITH HONORS

Graduate student Elana Meyers was elected A-10 First-Team All-Conference and co-Student-Athlete of the Year, league officials announced yesterday. The voting was conducted by the A-10's coaches and sports information directors.

This is the second straight year Meyers, an exercise science major, received both honors.

Meyers has led the Colonials to their first conference tournament by finishing second in the A-10 with a .413 batting average and first in the conference with a .532 average against A-10 opponents.

GW will also need the assistance of its other players, like Jackie Yaniga and Chrysanthi Halkiotis, if it wants to beat Saint Louis and make its first trip to the A-10 Tournament a memorable one.

THE FIGHTING FORDHAM

Fordham was consistently second to the Minutewomen throughout the regular season, always a few wins from being the top team. They could never quite reach the top of the A-10 mountain, however, finishing runner-up to UMass.

After starting off the year with three straight losses, Fordham soon went on a tear in which it defeated any team the season's schedule threw in its path. The Rams won 16 consecutive games between March 17 and April 7. They outscored their opponents 119-38 in the streak that helped them secure a good seed in the A-10 Tournament.

Fordham wrapped up its regular season by going 2-2 last weekend. It lost two games to UMass – 6-0 on Friday and 6-3 on Saturday – before taking both ends of a doubleheader against URI on Sunday. The Rams won each game by a score of 7-1. In the afternoon game, junior Allison Store went 4-for-4 with an RBI before blasting a three-run homer in the nightcap.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu

George Washington graduate student Elana Meyers was named First Team All A-10 yesterday. Her .413 batting average was second in the A-10.

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

YANKEE CANDLE
a passion for fragrance
At the Yankee Candle Company, Inc., we care about our employees' success. If you are ready to be recognized for your hard work, come begin a bright career with us!
Where bright careers begin
Job Fair!
Manufacturing & Logistics
Seasonal & Core Opportunities
Wednesday, May 9th
10am - 2pm & 4pm - 7pm
Yankee Candle Fitness Facility next to Yankee Candle Village, South Deerfield, MA
If you are unable to attend please apply in person Mon-Fri 8:30am-5:00pm at: 102 Christian Lane, Wilbraham, MA or online at: www.yankeecandle.com
EOE/AA

Plan Ahead for Next Year
Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

UMass drops game in ninth to Huskies

BASEBALL from page 10

day, out-hitting the Huskies 14-10, but couldn't come through in some key situations with runners on. In the third inning, UMass had runners on the corners with one out, but couldn't convert. Bryan Adamski struck out for the second out, and Jim Cassidy was thrown out at the plate in an attempted double-steal. The Minutemen left nine on base in the afternoon.

"We had chances and we didn't always convert, and that's unfortunate," Stone said. "Maybe it would have been a different situation at the end of the ballgame [had they converted]."

"We had chances to score a lot of runs," captain Bryan Garrity said. "Sometimes you capitalize and sometimes you don't."

Adam Tempesta and Adamski led the UMass offense. They combined for seven of the 10 Minuteman hits.

Adamski had a monster day, driving in three runs on three extra-base hits. His team-leading fourth home run of the season gave UMass a 2-0 lead in the first, and his seventh inning double tied the game at 5-5. Tempesta increased his batting average to .316 (tops on the team) with four singles.

Donovan, Untiet and Karl paced UConn at the plate, as the trio combined to drive in and score six of the team's eight runs. Three Minutemen errors aided the Huskies' cause, as miscues by Lou Proietti, Mitchell Eilenberg and Travis Munsey led to three unearned runs.

"I just thought we were lethargic at the beginning of the game," Stone said. "It got us kind of behind the eight ball."

Eilenberg got the start for the Minutemen, pitching into the seventh inning and allowing five runs (two earned). He hit three batters, allowed six hits and walked and struck out three in 6 1/3 innings pitched. Erik Turgeon started and pitched six innings for UConn, giving up four runs on 10 hits and one walk. He struck out three.

The Huskies first got on the board in the second, answering Adamski's home run with two runs of their own. After Donovan flied to center for the first out, Untiet doubled and moved to third on the error by Munsey. Karl then walked and Matt Burnett reached after Eilenberg mishandled the squeeze bunt scoring Untiet. Adamski made a nice play on a foul pop for the second out, but Harold Brantley, Jr. came through with an RBI single to tie the game at 2-2.

UConn took the lead with a run in the fifth, but UMass answered in the sixth with an RBI single by Garrity. They added another run in the sixth when Travis Munsey's bloop single scored Garrity. Mike Donato was thrown out at third on the play to end the threat.

Once again, the Huskies didn't take long to strike back, as Donovan belted a two-run shot to left-center field for the 5-4 lead. Adamski's double in the seventh tied the game, but it would ultimately be the last run UMass would score.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswa@student.umass.edu.

KRISTAN A. MONTEITH/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore second baseman Adam Tempesta went 4-for-5 against UConn yesterday, boosting his team-leading batting average from .299 to .316. He has 48 hits and 16 runs batted in on the regular season.

KRISTAN A. MONTEITH/COLLEGIAN

Senior Brian Adamski plays both first base and pitcher. His three wins and 3.68 earned run average both rank third on the Minutemen.

Adamski shines in UM loss

ADAMSKI from page 10

did all he could offensively – driving in three runs on three hits, including two doubles and his fourth home run of the season. He gave his team the lead with his two-run homer in the first, and tied things up in the seventh with an RBI double.

"I'll take it," Adamski said, referring to his big day. "Anytime you have three RBIs, it's a pretty good day. It just would have been better in a winning effort."

"I think he's got a lot of ability," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "I expect him to produce at the plate every time he steps in [the batters box]."

The South Deerfield native has done just that, leading the team in virtually all key offensive categories. He leads the team in home runs (four), slugging percentage (.433), on-base percentage (.389), total bases (61) and hit by pitches (nine). He shares the team-lead in doubles (nine) and RBIs (19) and ranks second in runs scored (25), hits (40) and walks (16).

"He's a real threat every time up to get a big hit," Rankin said. "We all love seeing him up there. We have a lot of confidence in him."

That also applies when he's on the hill.

"He's probably been our biggest guy on the mound this year," Rankin said. "He comes into difficult situations and gets the job done. It's easy to play defense behind him, because he goes out there and pumps strikes. He's real confident when he's up there, and we're all confident in him too."

Adamski has made 12 appearances this season, often coming into crucial situations in the late innings. His three saves rank second on the team, while his 3.68 earned run average is third. Remove an outing against Holy Cross at Fenway Park earlier this season – three earned runs allowed in one inning – and his ERA is 2.45.

Adamski throws hard, and features a good slider but only has four strikeouts in his 22 innings of work. But the most important numbers for the senior hurler are his three wins and four walks.

"I just go right after guys," he said. "Walks never help you, so I just stay away from them. If I strike a guy out, it's a bonus. I just work both sides of the plate, and get a lot of movement to try to induce groundballs."

One of this three wins came against UConn, back on April 10. Adamski was a jack-of-all-trades that day – pitching four shutout innings, dropping down two key sacrifice bunts, scoring two runs and driving in another.

Adamski had another monster game just 10 days later, against La Salle. He put the team ahead – for good, as it turned out – in the first inning with a sacrifice fly and added a two-run home run in the third to extend the lead. After Chris Lloyd allowed four runs in the seventh, Adamski came in to get the last nine outs for the save. He allowed one hit in his three innings.

Since transferring to UMass from Tekiyo-Post College, Adamski has been a model of consistency in all aspects of his game. As a junior, he had a 3-2 record, with five saves and a 3.60 ERA, with the latter two leading the team. In each of his first two years at the plate, he hit four home runs and drove in 27 runs – and is virtually on pace for the exact same numbers this season.

"He's swinging a real hot bat," Bryan Garrity said. "Hopefully that lasts the rest of the season, because we need him to hit if we want to win ball games."

The Huskies are just glad that it won't be against them anymore.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswa@student.umass.edu

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

Got bulky trash?
Dump your apartment cleanout garbage in the right place:
Bring your student ID to get in free!
The Amherst Transfer Station
Accepts furniture, mattresses, TVs & computers • Disposal fees apply
740 Belchertown Road (Route 9), 2 miles East of Dunkin Donuts
Open 8am-2pm Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays
For more information, visit www.amherstma.gov/recycling
Or call the Amherst Department of Public Works 413-259-3050

Got bulky trash?
Dump your apartment cleanout garbage in the right place:
Bring your student ID to get in free!
The Amherst Transfer Station
Accepts furniture, mattresses, TVs & computers • Disposal fees apply
740 Belchertown Road (Route 9), 2 miles East of Dunkin Donuts
Open 8am-2pm Tuesdays, Thursdays, & Saturdays
For more information, visit www.amherstma.gov/recycling or call the Amherst Dept. of Public Works 413-259-3050

Minutemen fail to meet unrealistic expectations in '07

Jon Pelland

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team was doomed from the start of the 2007 season. Nothing the Minutemen did – short of winning the NCAA National Championship – was going to please anybody outside of the team.

Expectations were too high for a team that lost its leading scorer, top defender and an outstanding faceoff man. It was evident from that start that these were not the same Minutemen. It may be a while before any team has to play the four top teams in the NCAA Tournament – and even longer before someone beats the top three.

But all things considered, this UMass team did a pretty good job this season with what they had.

It seemed when Sean Morris walked out the door, the Minuteman offense went with him. If not for Doc Schneider and the rest of the defense, this season would have been a whole lot worse.

Since the talent is definitely there, perhaps it's a question of readiness for the offensive players. After a stellar freshman season in which he scored 22 goals, it was though sophomore attackman Jim Connolly would follow Morris as the premier scorer.

That didn't happen – at least not at first.

Against Hofstra and Yale, Connolly was not the same player we saw score eight goals (five against Hofstra alone) in the NCAA Tournament last year. At one point it looked like he didn't want to attack the net. That's pretty alarming for a player who is supposed to lead an offense.

Then he tied his career-high five goals in UMass' first win of the season, an 11-10 affair in which the Minutemen barely escaped Harvard. Afterwards he played consistently for the rest of the season. To his credit, Connolly did have to deal a lot of double teams this season, the same double teams opponents reserved for Morris last season.

Virtually the only help Connolly had was from senior midfielder Brett Garber. He busted out offensively with 26 goals this season, second on the team behind Connolly's 29.

Other than that, there was no one.

Tim Balise showed flashes, but couldn't put it together consistently. His problem is aggressiveness. It wasn't too often that you saw No. 19 cutting to the net.

Even the Minutemen's amazing defense couldn't make up for the lack of offense – and believe me, they were amazing. Led by Schneider, the UMass defense is the reason this team was talking tournament entering last weekend.

No one could score on them. Penn State couldn't score. Georgetown couldn't score. Even the mighty Syracuse could barely beat Minutemen's last line.

They held team's to 7.92 goals per game. Are you serious? That's a ridiculous average. Seven goals in lacrosse is like two runs in baseball or three points in football. UMass should name Schneider, David Von Voigt, Brian Danvers, Sean Krygier, Dan Whipple and Paul Manesis as the team's MVPs.

While the three in front of Schneider deserve much of the praise, Schneider played out of his mind on so many occasions this season. He made so many amazing saves this year that they all blur into one.

You shot it low, Schneider dropped to one leg. You shot it high, Schneider got his stick there and deflected the ball skyward. The latter was key of much of his success. He simply didn't give up rebounds. No matter how hard the shot was, Schneider never deflected it out front, always straight up so it came down gently in his stick.

The kid is ridiculous, but his physical skill isn't even the sophomore's most important trait. Talking to his coach and teammates, it's easy to see that Schneider has become a leader on the team in his short time here.

Next year should be a better season for the Minutemen. Connolly and Schneider will be another year older and the bar won't be set so high.

Jon Pelland is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu

NOCCHIOS on the go
Specials of the Week
Buy 2 Calzones GET 1 FREE
5 FREE WINGS With Purchase of any Large Pizza
(413) 256-4110 Call Now!
Sun-Wed Open 'til 1am
Thur Open 'til 2am
Fri-Sat Open 'til 3am

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		3		7	2
5	6		8
4		7	5				1
	8				1
7	3						8	6
			2				3
	9				3	4		1
					8		6	5
				1	4		8

ACROSS
1 Contradict with evidence
6 Hash
10 "Walk the Line" subject
14 Spout thoughts
15 Vegas rival
16 Biblical preposition
17 Soviet leader (1917-24)
18 Split
19 Hall
20 Class exercise
22 Not absolute
24 Mine outputs
26 Stretched out
27 Do business
31 Actor Waterston
32 Snakelike fish
33 Small pie
35 Break off
39 Packs down
42 Carnival city
43 Swashbuckler Flynn
44 Ford's lolly
45 Destiny
47 November winners
48 Young boy
50 Cloud
53 Genteel
57 Proofreader's mark
58 Voting process
60 River gorge
64 Dog star
65 Coagulate
67 Danger
68 Legal claim
69 Hebrew month
70 Move furtively
71 Disorderly jumble
72 Match film action and sound
73 Middle of a tassel?

DOWN
1 Dice throw
2 Fencer's foil
3 Open receptacles
4 Perfect accord
5 Some choir members
6 Defensive hockey great
7 Salacious look
8 Spiritual
9 Scads
10 Paying lan
11 Nonconformists
12 Hearing apparatus
13 Crossed one's fingers
21 Orderly
23 Swiftly
25 Devour greedily
27 Beret filler
28 __ my lips!
29 Contributions for the poor
30 Court action
34 Carried the burden
36 Diva's offering
37 Carol or ballad
38 Otherwise
40 Birds with pouches
41 Angle
46 Constantly
49 Clears the windshield
51 Go by
52 Whoops it up
53 Domain
54 Early TV bovine
55 Gaias
56 Mover's aid
59 Sentence subject
61 Eye part
62 Baseball team
63 Members of a fraternal order
66 RN's offering

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE HARP
SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
THURSDAY:
On The Rocks
Voted best Neighborhood bar East of the River 2005 & 2006 Valley Advocate Readers Poll
ON TAP & All x-mas Cards accepted
Free wireless Internet!
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"If you have an opportunity to use your voice you should use it."
-Samuel L. Jackson

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

I hate self-indulgent ten-minute songs
Does EVERY album need one? Is there a statement that takes the equivalent of three normal songs to make?
Let's make a deal & band makes a great album, ALL the way through, & I'll listen to the ten-minute track.
You hear me?!

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

ASHLEY'S WONDERING WHEN YOU PLAN ON TRYING A THIRD TIME TO ASK HER OUT REALLY?? SHE IS??
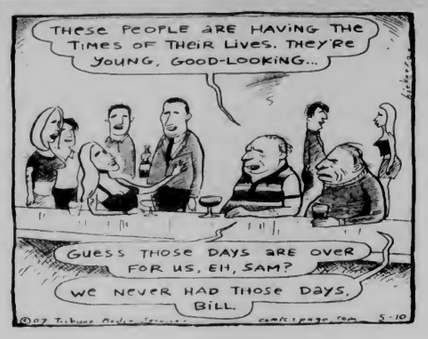
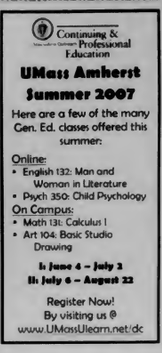
YEAH. I THINK IT'S 'CAUSE SHE DOESN'T WANT TO BE AROUND WHEN YOU DO, GIVEN HOW BAD THE FIRST TWO TIMES WERE.
DID SHE SAY THAT OR ARE YOU JUST SAYING THAT TO BE MEAN?
I'M JUST LOOKING OUT FOR YOU IF I SEE A SQUIRREL HEADING TOWARD THE HIGHWAY, IT'S MY DUTY TO PUSH IT OUT OF THE WAY.
AND THAT'S WHAT YOU COMPARE THIS TO, A SQUIRREL GETTING HIT BY A CAR.
WELL NO, I SAVE THE SQUIRREL. DIDN'T YOU HEAR ME? THE SQUIRREL'S FINE.

THE QUIGMANS By Buddy Hickerson



THESE PEOPLE ARE HAVING THE TIMES OF THEIR LIVES. THEY'RE YOUNG, GOOD-LOOKING...
GUESS THOSE DAYS ARE OVER FOR US, EH, SAM?
WE NEVER HAD THOSE DAYS, BILL.



Continuing & Professional Education
UMass Amherst
Summer 2007
Here are a few of the many Gen. Ed. classes offered this summer:
Online:
• English 132: Man and Woman in Literature
• Psych 350: Child Psychology
On Campus:
• Math 131: Calculus I
• Art 104: Basic Studio Drawing
I: June 4 – July 3
II: July 6 – August 22
Register Now!
By visiting us @
www.UMassUlearn.net/dc

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You will marry a leper. On the bright side, at least they will be easy to spot.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
The sexiness of connected ear lobes is dramatically underrated.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Live today as if each moment were a scene from American Gladiators. You are Nitro.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
There is a big difference between recreational drug use and professional drug use.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
The sad truth is, without mascara you would look like a mole rat.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Convince/bribe your professor to hold class outside and underneath a tree.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Your willpower is strong. You can wake up in the morning and hold in pee for hours.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
As the flowers bloom, watch out for killer bees and fire ants.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Roll down the supple grass of orchard hill until you throw up your own spleen.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Clearly the justice system is working if Paris Hilton has finally been put in jail.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
If your teacher accuses you of being late, ask them to "go to Mo for the official time."

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Make a necklace out of stolen paperclips and act like you're the cock of the walk.

Townehouse of Amherst Condominums
Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC Our Nurses call the shots! Guaranteed 3 ½ to 2 year Full Tuition Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Top of the Campus, Incorporated (TOC, Inc) will hold its Annual Meeting in Campus Center 903, Wednesday, May 23. 2007 at 12:00 p.m.

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Center of town, 1,2,3 bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must call 413-584-4746

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Jobs for the Environment Campaigne Offices in 60 cities! Work with Sierra Club and State Environmental Groups on a nation wide effort to Fight Global Warming this summer. Work with college students from across the country! Make $4000-$6000/ Summer. Career oppurtunites and benefits also available. Amherst office call: 413-256-6434. Boston Office call: 617-292-4810 or Call 1-800-75-Earth for opportunities in other cities. Visit our website at www.jobsthatmatter.org

Summer Job on Martha's Vineyard! Asst. Manager, retail clothing store in Edgartown. Richard 413-575-1579 or email rdwhite27@charter.net

EMPLOYMENT

WORK OUTDOORS THIS SUMMER Full time positions available in your hometown. Earn $8-12/hour Painting houses with a fun crew. Call 888-277-9787 or www.collegepro.com

Brandywine Apts. Needs a certified lifeguard. Full time hours flexible. Must work some weekends. $9.00/ hr Call 549-0600 or stop by office.

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Jobs for the Environment Work with Environment Massachusetts on a campaign to Fight Global Warming and work with great people! Make $400-$600/week. Career opportunities and benefits available. Call Mel at 413-256-6434 Visit our website @ www.jobsthatmatter.org

HOUSE FOR RENT

3 Bedroom, Nice, recently updated. Near Bus stop. Also near Downtown Northampton $1200/month No pets. For June. Skibeski Realty 413-586-1827

SERVICES

BUY ONE, GET ONE FREE Emergency Contraception (EC), prevents pregnancy up to 5 days after unprotected sex. Affordable and Confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992, www.tapestryhealth.org

SERVICES

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

SUMMER SUBLET

Room for rent to sublet over summer Townhouses #32 $400 a month Gas heat, Close to bus stop large room with A/C contact Dan at dexter@student.umass.edu will respond ASAP!

Alpine Commons apartment June-August 15th $2050/month includes utilities. 413-204-9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MAY 9, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Self-taught lefty

After realizing hitting for power was out of the question, Molinari switched things up

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When Candice Molinari digs into the left-handed hitter's batting box at the UMass Softball Complex, the same things echo around the bleachers behind home plate. Spectators gawk at her 5-foot-2 frame and the seemingly careless way she waves her bat while the pitcher moves into her delivery.

But in an instant, everything makes sense.

Just as the pitcher takes that first step toward the plate, Candice makes her move toward first base. The bat slides down her hands and she deflects the ball between the third baseman and shortstop. The play seems so routine. The infield knows its coming and how to defend it, but it doesn't matter. One of them gathers the ball and whips it across the diamond with no wasted movement, but it's too late.

Candice beat the throw – again.

"They have to field the ball cleanly in order to get me out. I know that if I can make them take more than one step, I'm going to beat it out," Candice says. "It puts the pressure on them to make the play."

Candice is a "slapper." Slapping is as much a part of softball as any other form of hitting. Most players who employ the technique aim to get the ball by the two players positioned on the left side of the infield. But most players can't run like Candice can, so for her, the recipe is a little different. When UMass coach Elaine Sortino gives her the sign, she finds the hole, gets it down and runs like hell.

It's a simple formula and Candice used it to establish her own place among the most prolific players in UMass history.

"If the shortstop plays back on her, she can soft slap and slowly roll the ball so that she'll be about three-quarters of the way down the line by the time [the shortstop] touches it," Sortino says. "If they come in, she can slap it by them. So the defense has to make a decision whether to come in or stay back. [Candice] has the bat control to do either one of those things."

At the conclusion of the 2007 regular season, Molinari ranked 10th all-time in hitting (.342), fourth in runs scored (146), 10th in hits (199) and second in stolen bases (95).

But those are just statistics, numbers that reveal the outcome without telling the whole story, the story that began when Candice was 14 in her hometown of Glendora, Calif. – when she was a right-handed hitter.

She possessed the speed that draws bobbles and missteps from oppos-

See MOLINARI on page 7

2007 Average: .399

Career Average: .341

2007 hit totals: 57

Career hits: 199

2007 steals: 18

Career steals: 95

Two-time First Team Atlantic 10

TEMPLE TIMES / MEGAN KELLEHER

Temple first baseman Adrienne Repsher won the 2007 Atlantic 10 Softball Player of the Year award.

Nine from UMass honored by A-10

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts softball team's pitcher, Brandice Balschmiter won her second consecutive Atlantic 10 Pitcher of the Year award yesterday while four Minutewomen, including Balschmiter, earned A-10 First-Team All-Conference honors.

Second baseman Stacy Cullington, center fielder Candice Molinari, designated player Amanda Acampora and Balschmiter earned the award.

UMass coach Elaine Sortino also made the end-of-year awards as the A-10's Coach of the Year.

The A-10 also named first baseman Amanda Morin, left fielder Lauren Proctor and pitcher Bailey Sanders to the All-Conference Second Team. Sanders and shortstop Whitney Williams also garnered All-Rookie honors.

Cullington, Molinari and Proctor also made the All-Conference All-Academic Team.

Balschmiter completed the regular season first in the A-10 in wins (24), strikeouts (218), opponent's batting average (.184), innings pitched (216 1/3) and was second in ERA (1.36).

Cullington – who tied the UMass single-season home run record this year – earned her first All-Conference honors after batting .323 in the 2007 regular season with 14 homeruns and 48 RBIs. The junior also registered a .742 slugging percentage.

This year also marks the first All-Conference Team for Acampora. The senior finished with a .303 batting average and is second to Cullington with nine homeruns. Her 32 RBIs are third on the team.

Molinari earned her second-straight first-team All-Conference honors after leading the team with a .399 batting average. She stole 18 bases this season and knocked in 11 runs.

Morin was one of two players (Whitney Mollica the other) to start all 47 games for the Minutewomen, batting .310 with 22 RBIs and one homerun. She was a member of the All-Conference first team in 2006.

Proctor exploded offensively this season, finishing second to Molinari with a .350 batting average. She hit one homer and drove in 36 runs this season. She made the All-Conference First Team in 2006 after hitting .364.

Sanders entered the 2007 season as the Minutewomen's No. 2 pitcher behind Balschmiter. She went 10-4 in her freshman campaign, going 5-0 against A-10 opponents and recorded a league-best 0.46 ERA against conference foes.

After finishing the 2007 regular season a perfect 18-0, the Minutewomen led all teams with four players on the All-Conference first-team and seven All-Conference players overall.

BRIAN TEUTSCH / COLLEGIAN

UMass pitcher Brandice Balschmiter won her second consecutive A-10 Pitcher of the Year award. She was 24-8 with a 1.36 earned run average during the regular season.

Postseason begins at Complex

Conference tourney comes to Amherst

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's that time again.

The tournament for the Atlantic 10 Conference Championship at the UMass Softball Complex gets underway at noon today with a game between No. 4 seed Temple (17-19, 9-7 A-10) and No. 5 Charlotte (32-21, 8-7). The second game – between No. 3 Saint Louis (26-31, 11-8) and No. 6 George Washington (26-31, 11-8) – begins at 2 p.m. The losers of Game 1 and Game 2 square off at 4 p.m.

Massachusetts (34-12-1, 18-0) breaks out its bats for the A-10 tournament on Thursday, with a game at noon against the winner of Game 1. No. 2 Fordham (38-18, 16-4) plays its first game at 2 p.m. with the winner of Game 2.

A game between the winners of Games 3 and the lower seed of the losers of Games 4 and 5 begins at 4 p.m.

A game scheduled for noon on Sunday between the winners of Games 8 and 9 will crown the newest A-10 Softball Champion.

THE TIME HAS COME FOR TEMPLE

Temple ended its regular season in exciting fashion when a tie forced the Owls to defeat Saint Bonaventure in extra innings on Sunday.

After Jessica Rohn grounded out to third to start the eighth, Katie Burdeaux was struck by a Christine Keleher pitch.

See A-10 SOFTBALL on page 7

Late-inning drama in UM loss

BY ELI ROSENWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Connecticut closer Matt Karl wanted a save opportunity yesterday, so he decided to take it upon himself to make it happen.

Karl, also a designated hitter, stroked a three-run home run with two outs in the top of the ninth to give the Huskies the 8-5 lead, then came in to shut the door on the Minutemen – striking out the side in the bottom of the ninth for his eighth save of the season.

"I was just hoping to hit it hard somewhere, and win the game," Karl said. "They were pitching me away all game so I was looking there, and sure enough they threw it there again, and I made the right swing."

The inning started off slowly for the Huskies (23-23, 6-12 Big East), as UMass (18-21, 10-11 Atlantic 10) reliever Ryan Walczak recorded two quick outs – striking out Dale Brannon and inducing a Larry Day groundout on the first pitch. But Dennis Donovan doubled down the left-field line and Matt Untiet walked, knocking out Walczak and setting the stage for Karl.

UMass coach Mike Stone summoned starter Chris Lloyd into the game, and Karl greeted him with an opposite-field blast to left field for what proved to be the game-winner. Walczak took the loss for the Minutemen, while senior southpaw Ted Garry earned his second win of the year – pitching the seventh and eighth innings for the Huskies.

The Minutemen jump right back into action today, traveling to Boston for a non-conference matchup with the Northeastern Huskies (21-18) at 3 p.m. These teams met earlier in the season, with NU taking a 17-6 decision in the first round of the Beanpot Tournament. The all-time series between the schools will be on the line, as UMass holds a slim, one-game lead at 38-37. The Minutemen have not beat Northeastern since 2003.

UMass had its chances yester-

See BASEBALL on page 8

BRIAN TEUTSCH / COLLEGIAN

Mitchell Eilenberg made the start for UMass against UConn, pitching 6 1/3 innings while allowing five runs.

Adamski contributes in more ways than one for Minutemen

BY ELI ROSENWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's not often that a 6-foot-4, 240 pound player goes overlooked on the baseball diamond. Especially one that is athletic and talented enough to both hit and pitch at the Division I level.

But sometimes it seems like the accomplishments of Bryan Adamski – first baseman and pitcher for the Massachusetts baseball team – don't get as much recognition as they deserve. But after his second monster effort against Connecticut this season yesterday, the Huskies have had a pretty good taste about how good he really is.

His teammates certainly know.

"He's probably the best hitter on the team," senior Bill Rankin said.

Adamski certainly proved that yesterday. The Minutemen fell 8-5 to the Huskies, but the senior cleanup hitter

See ADAMSKI on page 8

BRIAN TEUTSCH / COLLEGIAN

Senior first baseman Bryan Adamski went 3-for-5 with three runs batted in and two runs scored. He now has 19 RBIs on the season, which ties him with Jim Macdonald for first on the team.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SHOWERS : HI: 83 LO: 58 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, MAY 10, 2007

'ALCHEMY' PERFORMED AT UM PAGE 6

UMASS SET FOR A-10 PLAYOFFS PAGE 12

UMass reaches out to veterans

MICHAEL PHELPS / COLLEGIAN

Assistant Dean of Students Eileen Stewart, left, oversees the University of Massachusetts Veterans' Affairs Office, acting as an agent between students and the Veterans Administration. Student veteran Jon Zagami, right, is the vice president and co-founder of the Veterans and Service Members Association (VASMA), a student veteran advocacy group.

Student veterans call for improved University assistance

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

While Jon Zagami, a war veteran, student and a founding member of the Veterans and Service Members Association (VASMA) successfully navigated the transition from army life to college life, he remains a critic of the level of service provided by the University of Massachusetts for military men and women attempting to pursue higher education.

Zagami, a junior resource economics major, hopes that VASMA, a non-partisan organization dedicated to creating a support network of veterans and service members to assist in facilitating the transition from a soldier to a student, will fulfill a role on campus that the university has not for student veterans.

"It's a role that is not only necessary, but a little overdue," Zagami said. "The conflict has been going on now for three or four years and still the school has not implemented a program for veterans to come back here."

Zagami encountered numerous problems when he applied for financial aid and attempting to access the benefits available to him through the Montgomery G.I. Bill when he first arrived at UMass. According to Zagami, he received very little affective assistance from the University.

"I didn't understand when I got my financial aid package from the military why that didn't go to the Financial Aid Office. Why does that go to the bursar? What is the bursar?" he said. "This is way too confusing. Someone needs to break this down for the people that are coming here. That is one of the reasons VASMA was created."

The main function of the Veterans' Affairs Office, the main service provided by the University administration for student veterans, is to help service men and women receive the benefits entitled to them as part of the Montgomery G.I. Bill. A division of the Dean of Students Office, the Veterans' Affairs Office is directed by the Assistant Dean of Students, Eileen Stewart, and assists in handling the required Veterans Administration (VA) paperwork for student service members.

"For any veteran to get his or her benefits going, they need to let us know. They need to come into the office or call us," Stewart said. "Sometimes they will need help doing an application or they'll have some special circumstances which we'll need to talk about."

See VASMA on page 4

Veteran turns war experience into classroom curriculum

BY HOLLY SEABURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"I don't want to return to Iraq" said Lieutenant Colonel David F. Vacchi, "but I would in a heartbeat." Vacchi, Battalion Commander of the University of Massachusetts Army ROTC, speaks enthusiastically when remembering his time with Iraqi communities he helped rebuild. However, he notes that it is an uplifting news story that would never be on the news.

"It was one of the most rewarding experiences of my life," he said. "I taught the Iraqi people, struggled with them and made a difference with them. It was something that is rarely heard of."

Vacchi, a husband and father of Ella, who was 15 months old at the time, was deployed to Kuwait seven months before the war in Iraq began. The time he spent in Kuwait was helpful when he was eventually sent to Iraq during the war and started to communicate with the Iraqis.

"I had developed a focus in the Middle Eastern culture," Vacchi said. "I knew some phrases in Arabic, courtesies and other useful things that immersed me into their culture. I was not afraid."

Vacchi was first sent to Taji, a military base where he was under the orders of his colonel, an "extreme leader with moral and ethic corruption," described by Vacchi as "similar to Jack Nicholson in A Few Good Men."

While in Taji, during the first couple months of the war, Vacchi's leader ordered him to examine an accidental death. While investigating, Vacchi found flaws and exposed them, causing him to become "one of those guys," according to Vacchi. He was inactive for a little while and learned that "we needed intelligence."

In June 2003, just a few months after the United States invasion of Iraq, Vacchi helped to rebuild the city of Tarmiyah. He was granted permission to clean up the city and employ some of the locals. On the first day of work, Vacchi paid about 50 Iraqis $5 a day to pick up trash. On the second day, about 50 more people showed up.

"We realized there was a problem with this," he said. "In that area teachers made only about $1.75 a month. It was absurd that we were paying people $5 a day to pick up their own home."

See VETERANS on page 3

Campus hosts Credit Awareness Day

BY TIM MCCALL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Campus Center concourse will host the first annual Credit Awareness Day today from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Sponsored by the Massachusetts Bankers Association (MBA) and coordinated by three University of Massachusetts student interns, this event will feature a variety of local banks and other organizations offering free information on campus community-related financial topics.

According to Dave Ladetto, senior intern for the MBA, "the purpose of the event is to provide a safe and no pressure environment for students and faculty to seek advice and obtain information about financial wellness."

The event will feature Dave Floreen, vice president of the MBA, giving a presentation titled "Credit Scores and Reporting 101 for College Students" in Campus Center room 174 at 1 p.m.

"We are hoping for a big turn out from the students because we feel that banking and credit scores are rarely discussed on campus, but have a big impact on our lives," Ladetto said.

Besides credit scores, information will be given out on other important topics such as budgeting, loans, investing and identity theft.

"Tables throughout the concourse will be setup where students will have the chance to win an [assortment of] prizes for answering questions on banking and we'll even be joined by SUM ATM mascot," said Michael Leip, sophomore MBA intern at UMass.

"Antonio's will be providing free pizza for students who attend the guest speaker," Leip continued.

The SUM network is a national network for free ATMs.

This is the second year the MBA has sponsored an internship with UMass students, but this is the first annual Credit Awareness Day.

"We wanted to take the internship to new levels this year by reaching out a larger portion of the UMass community," Ladetto said.

The MBA internship has expanded from a low key event last year to hiring three interns this year. Together the three interns were given a $1,500 budget to improve financial understanding on campus.

Ladetto, a communication major, Leip a marketing major and Jocelyn Cash a psychology major were selected from dozens of candidates this past January to represent UMass this year as interns for the MBA.

Chancellor awarded for commitment to UM campus safety

COURTESY MATTHEW WALTERS

Chancellor John V. Lombardi was awarded the "CEO Who Gets It" Award for his contribution to a safe and healthful environment at UMass.

BY MATTHEW WALTERS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

University of Massachusetts Chancellor John V. Lombardi received an award for his outstanding commitment to promoting a safe and healthful working and living environment at UMass.

Lombardi was awarded the 2007 "CEO Who Gets It" Award from the Safety Council of Western New England. The award was presented at the council's 90th Annual Awards Banquet at the Sheraton Springfield Monarch Place Hotel on May 8.

The award was designed to honor a CEO who has created an environment that promotes a culture of safety and who sets the tone that safety is everyone's responsibility.

In a letter to Lombardi, Safety Council Executive Director Gerry Sousa said, "The University of Massachusetts Amherst has long been such an organization. You clearly understand the importance of promoting safety in the work place and your director of environmental health and safety, Don Robinson, has been an active member of our council."

The Safety Council of Western New England is a chapter of the National Safety Council and pre-

See LOMBARDI on page 4

Library renovations draw more students

BY PETER AXTMAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Students hustling with final exams and papers are pouring into the W.E.B. Du Bois Library, where foot traffic has swelled since the creation of the Learning Commons — more than doubling student use in one measure – and library and university staffs are hustling to meet the increased demand.

According to library gate count figures, in fall 2006, 28 percent more students used the library compared to fall 2005. The fall 2006 numbers are 78 percent above those of the fall of 2004, before the Learning Commons opened in October 2005.

By December 2006, 111,826 users visited the library, up from 95,132 in December 2005 and 63,049 in December 2004, according to gate count figures found on the library's Web site, compiled from a study conducted by consultant Gordon Fretwell.

See LIBRARY on page 4

COURTESY UMASS LIB

By May of 2006, only seven months after the Learning Commons opened at the W.E.B. DuBois library, 125,356 people had entered the library during the last academic year – up from 58,499 last year

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 135

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Achas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherd Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jameson Porter
ADVERTISING, PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPIES EDITOR Adam Seagrn
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
FEATURES EDITOR Melissa D'Amico
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pent
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolanitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonyakiakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Rob Greenfield

COPY EDITOR
Joe Meloni

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Study finds addictive habits reinforced by nicotine use

By Matthew McCabe
The Pitt News (U. Pittsburgh)

PITTSBURGH — Nicotine is not only addictive itself, according to a recent University of Pittsburgh research study, but it also enhances the pleasure a smoker receives from his or her environment.

The 15-year study concluded that smokers derive enhanced pleasure from their surroundings when they smoke.

The study, conducted by principal researchers Anthony Caggiula, chair of the psychology department, Eric Donny, assistant professor of psychology, and Alan Sved, chair of the neuroscience department, concluded that nicotine increased interest in stimuli in test subjects.

According to Caggiula, the research was conducted using rats, which were taught to administer nicotine to themselves, as opposed to interacting with the stimuli without nicotine in their systems.

SCT

A 15-year study found that smokers derive enhanced pleasure from their surroundings when they smoke.

The original work for the study was brought about through the professors' interest in the addictive qualities of cigarettes. Cigarettes affect the lives of millions of Americans, Caggiula said. "We were interested in trying to understand how nicotine works."

The first cigarette for many smokers is not pleasurable, and often induces coughing or gagging, Caggiula noted.

However, the conclusion of the study is that the nicotine in cigarettes has what is known as a reinforcement-enhancing effect. Put simply, it makes the act of smoking, itself, addictive.

Donny conducted a follow-up study based on the larger conclusions of the research project.

He gave 30 adult smokers cigarettes with little or no nicotine, according to a press release. The participants' interest in the cigarettes maintained for a week or more, even without the presence of nicotine. According to the press release, Donny concluded that the smokers derived pleasure from the act of smoking itself, as opposed to the nicotine.

Amherst Police log

Man speeds, gets lectured

Tuesday
May 8

1:46 p.m.

A man reported that his car has been stolen from Fisher Street. He said that he attended a party Saturday in town and parked his vehicle at the listed location. After the party, the man decided he shouldn't drive back and left his car. He returned Monday to find that his vehicle was no longer there.

5:56 p.m.

Residents on East Hadley Rd. reported a breaking and entering. The suspect is the residents' son, who entered their home and stole approximately $150 worth of DVDs.

7:45 p.m.

A reporting party called to complain about a neighbor who consistently speeds in the area on his red motorcycle. Police contacted the driver and talked to him about speeding laws.

11:41 p.m.

Luis Enrique Perez, 30, was arrested for failing to stop/yield and for possession and intent to distribute four oz. of marijuana. Police stopped Perez on Amity St. for the traffic violation, and found small plastic bags of marijuana in equal quantities.

Wednesday
May 9

12:41 a.m.

Scott Curtis Ferreria, 22, was arrested for disorderly conduct and destruction of property at Delano's on North Pleasant St. Ferreria was uncooperative when escorted out of the bar, pushing the doormen and eventually breaking a large window costing about $250.

- Compiled by Holly Seabury

Mother-daughter crime team arrested for robbery in hotel

A mother and daughter have been arrested for stealing from an out-of-town businessman they met in a bar. The man from Texas told police he met 34-year-old Eugenia Garrison and her 14-year-old daughter in a local bar Monday night and brought them back to his hotel room. He saw the girl grab $360 from his dresser and make a run for it.

"When he tried to detain the woman, the young girl, she indicated that she was going to claim rape," Sheboygan police Lt. Jeff Johnston said.

A hotel employee heard Garrison and her daughter talking about rape and called police.

Officers found Garrison and her daughter at the Wal-Mart next to the hotel and determined there had been no assault.

Garrison admitted taking the money, Johnston said. She and her daughter were arrested for misdemeanor theft. They have not yet been officially charged.

Johnston said he didn't know why the Texas businessman asked the 14-year-old to his hotel room.

There was no evidence that he had committed any crime, he said.

"He just indicated that they'd been out and met each other at the bar, and went back to, in his words, 'hang out,'" Johnston said.

– Associated Press

Bush to veto bill calling for end of war funding during summer

AP

Democratic leaders expect that President Bush will veto a proposed House bill designed to stop funding for the Iraq war after July.

WASHINGTON — The White House threatened on Wednesday to veto a proposed House bill that would pay for the Iraq war only through July a limit Defense Secretary Robert Gates said would be disastrous.

The warnings came as Gates also told reporters that his evaluation of force levels in Iraq in September will not lead to a rapid troop withdrawal, and that at least some U.S. forces are likely to be in Iraq for a protracted period of time.

He said he didn't know if it will take 25,000 troops or another number, but it would probably include intelligence officers, logistical support and air power, and they would be needed to maintain stability in the war-wracked country.

"The evaluation in September will not lead to a precipitous decision or actions, but would point us in a new direction — either because the surge is working, or because the evaluation is that it's not," said Gates. Earlier Wednesday, he told senators he would consider reducing U.S. troop levels in Iraq in the fall if the Iraqi government begins to make progress.

Defiant Democrats leaders on Capitol Hill, meanwhile, wrestled with how to support the troops but still challenge President Bush on the war. Bush has requested more than $90 billion to sustain the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan through September.

"With this latest veto threat, the president has once again chosen confrontation over cooperation," said House Speaker Nancy Pelosi.

House Democratic leaders are pushing legislation that would provide the military $42.8 billion to keep operations going through July, buy new equipment and train Iraqi and Afghan security forces. Congress would decide shortly before its August recess whether to release an additional $52.8 billion to fund the war through September.

"In essence, the bill asks me to run the Department of Defense like a skiff, and I'm trying to drive the biggest supertanker in the world," Gates told senators Wednesday. "And we just don't have the agility to be able to manage a two-month appropriation very well."

The veto threat came from White House spokesman Tony Snow, traveling aboard Air Force One with Bush to tour tornado damage in Kansas.

"There are restrictions on funding and there are also some of the spending items that were mentioned in the first veto message that are still in the bill," Snow said.

House members planned a vote Thursday, just two days after David Obey, D-Wis., chairman of the Appropriations Committee, briefed White House chief of staff Josh Bolten on the plan.

The stern White House response reflected the high stakes involved for Bush, who is struggling to beat back congressional skepticism about his Iraq strategy. In recent days, Bush has tried to shore up support by personally reaching out to moderate Republicans and Democrats.

Democrats face their own uphill battle. Pelosi, D-Calif., and Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., say they want to provide troops the resources they need. But other Democrats are pushing to cut off funds for the unpopular and costly war.

Democratic leaders acknowledge the new Iraq bill might pass in the House only to sink in the Senate, where Democrats hold a slimmer majority and are more reluctant than their House counterparts to restrict war funds.

In testimony before the Senate Defense Appropriations Subcommittee, Gates left open the possibility of bringing troops home soon, even as the Pentagon orders deployments that could maintain a buildup of U.S. forces in Iraq through the end of the year.

"If [we] see some very positive progress and it looks like things are heading in the right direction, then that's the point at which I think we can begin to consider reducing some of those forces," Gates said.

Senators pressed Gates on when a decision will be made.

"What are the prospects for having some light at the end of the tunnel, to see some encouragement which would enable the Congress to have the fortitude to support the president and go beyond September and the full funding of the $500 billion?" asked Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa.

Gates replied: "I think that the honest answer is, Senator, I don't know."

Gates told the panel that proposals for a short-term funding bill would be very disruptive and "have a huge impact" on contracts to repair and replace equipment. And if Congress votes in July to pull the plug on war funding, "I would have to shut down significant elements of the Department of Defense in August and September because I wouldn't have the money to pay salaries."

As the House moved out alone on its Iraq proposal, Reid met for about an hour Wednesday with Bolten and Republican leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky.

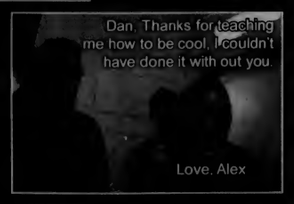
According to a senior administration official who attended the session, the meeting was mostly about the process of getting a bill through both chambers and to the president. There also were some substantive discussions about content that the official would not discuss.

The White House wants Democrats in the Senate and House to better coordinate where they want to go with a bill, but this is not preventing Bolten from talking about specifics in the meantime.

– Associated Press

Leave your Senior Will
in the Collegian's 2007 UMass Flashback Grad Issue
One last chance for you to leave your mark on UMass.

JUST $15 Per message



Surprise your friends, Thank a professor,

Actual size of messages 2"x3"

or tell your graduating class congratulations.

Call 545-3500 or email thecollegian@gmail.com to place your ad

Celebrate Graduation in Style!

Delivery: 413.549.0077
Telephone: 413.256.8923
413.256.8924

Panda East
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine

Featuring:
• Vegetarian Options
• Lunch Specials
• Sushi Bar
• "Light and Healthy" entrees

~ Elegant, Relaxing and Upscale~
We Bring China Town to You!

Monday - Thursday: 11:30am - 10:00pm
Friday & Saturday: 11:00am - 11:00pm
Sunday: 12:00pm - 10:00pm

Visit us at: www.pandaeastamherst.com
103 North Pleasant Street Amherst, MA

Teacher pleads guilty to charges of sex with student

By Dyan T. Lovan
Associated Press

TOMPKINSVILLE, Ky. — A former teacher charged with having sex with a 14-year-old middle school student and running off to Mexico with him pleaded guilty Wednesday to a sodomy charge.

Angela Renee Comer, 28, would serve 10 years in prison under her plea agreement, in which the prosecutor agreed to drop most other charges. Besides one count of third-degree sodomy, Comer pleaded guilty to one count of custodial interference.

She had faced up to 20 years on each of four counts of first-degree unlawful transaction with a minor and up to five years each for two counts of third-degree sodomy.

Comer said in an interview with the Associated Press after the court hearing that she was glad to avoid a trial, which had been scheduled to start Thursday.

"A trial is very stressful for everyone, and I just want this to be over," she said.

Comer entered the courtroom wearing jeans and an orange jail T-shirt and answered a series of questions from the judge before entering the plea.

Police said Comer had a sexual affair with the boy, who is now 16, and took him without his guardian's permission. Authorities found Comer, her young son and the teen in Nuevo Laredo, Mexico, on Jan. 10, 2006.

The boy's grandmother watched as Comer entered the plea. The boy, who was not in court Wednesday, was removed from her care after the incident and placed in a foster home, she said.

"I'm relieved that it's over. This has been going on for 16 months and I don't think anyone should have to wait that length of time. It's been very difficult for me," the grandmother said.

The Associated Press is not using the grandmother's name to protect the identity of the boy. It is the policy of the AP not to identify victims of sex crimes in most cases.

The grandmother said the boy is a high school sophomore now. He's embarrassed by the incident and has had little contact with his family since he was moved into foster care, she said.

"He doesn't want to come back here, because he says they'll judge him," she said.

Comer said she expects to be eligible for parole after serving 24 months of the sentence. She said she also will be required to complete a sex offender treatment program that takes from 12 to 18 months. Comer has been in jail for the 16 months since her arrest.

Comer also said since her arrest her ex-husband has not permitted her to see her 5-year-old son, who is autistic.

Women continue to earn less

By Lizeth Cazares
The California Aggie (UC-Davis)

DAVIS, Calif. — Despite years of gain in the workplace, a new study shows that come payday, it's still very much a man's world.

Using data from the 2005 U.S. Department of Education and firsthand interviews, the American Association of University Women (AAUW) Educational Foundation, an organization that promotes gender equality in the workplace, shows that after one year out of college, women earn 80 percent of what equally educated men earn. The gap continues to widen 10 years after graduation, with women earning 69 percent of what their male counterparts make.

Even when taking into account motherhood, work hours and type of career, the study shows that women are still paid substantially less than men. This inequality in pay rates has a lasting effect throughout a woman's life.

"In part, pay equity is simply a matter of fairness," the study states. "When women are paid less than men are for comparable work, women have few resources to support themselves and their families. Some women experience real deprivation as a result of the pay gap, especially when they enter their retirement years."

The study also shows that a woman's career choice has an effect on salary. Women who major in more "male-dominated" careers such as engineering, mathematics and physical sciences tend to make more than women who work in education, health or psychology.

But even when choosing a higher paying job, researchers say women are still affected by the gap.

"In education, a female-dominated major and career, women earn 95 percent as much as their male colleagues earn. In biology, a mixed-gendered major, women make only 75 percent as much as men," the study states.

AAUW stressed the important role of the government in ensuring equality in the job market. "Despite the progress women have made, gender pay equity in the workplace remains an issue," said the study. "Improvements to federal equal pay laws are needed to ensure that women and men are compensated fairly when they perform the same or comparable work."

Janie Hickok Sires, spokesperson for the California Department of Fair Employment and Housing, said those who feel discriminated against because of their gender should first speak with their employer.

"We suggest using an internal procedure to file a complaint," she said. "But if they just can't, they can contact the department through our communications center."

While the department has not conducted any studies based on gender discrimination, statistics show that 1,842 gender discrimination complaints were filed between 2004 and 2005.

At the University of California, Davis, several campus organizations work to promote equality in the workplace, even before students graduate.

Caldeba Lomeli-Loibl, gender education specialist for the UC-Davis Women's Resource Center, said the center has several programs motivated to help women become more assertive and men become more aware and concerned about this issue.

"The Women's Resources and Research Center is committed to working towards financial equality through our programs and workshops on salary negotiating, confidence in the classroom, self-esteem in the workplace and academia, our 'Women on the Verge' series [for women about to graduate] and one-on-one financial advising for staff women," Caldeba said in an e-mail interview.

Veteran teaches college course

Lieutenant Colonel David T. Vacchi, who returned from Iraq in March of 2004, is now teaching 'Iraq: Understanding a Complex Country in Complex Times,' at UMass.

VETERANS from page 1

Three months later, Iarmiyah was a changed place and Vacchi was sent East to a city named after Imam Hussein with a large population of Shi'a, as well as Sunnis.

In order to launch local government, repair schools, medical buildings and other establishments in the city, Vacchi helped construct a way for both Shi'a and Sunnis to work together.

"No one could believe that something like this happened," Vacchi said of the two rival political groups working together. "The news only sees the bad or lack of civilization in these areas; it is rare to see the good."

In nine months, Vacchi created stability in the city. No suicide bombings or deaths in general occurred during that time. The real mission, he said, "was to keep everyone alive."

But not everything Vacchi encountered in Iraq went smoothly. When he spoke up to higher ranking officers about employing locals to help rebuild communities, his idea was shut down. Then, only four days after returning from duty in the cities, Vacchi was ordered to investigate a complicated situation in the city of Baqubah.

A local blew himself up at the same time a different local was murdered.

Vacchi's mission was to prove they were different people, and the only way to do it was to dig up the body.

"This was an extremely frustrating assignment," Vacchi said. "As the Iraqis dug up the body, they were singing and crying together. I knew it was a difficult and even disrespectful thing for them to do. I openly cried with them, and they saw that it wasn't me who wanted to do this. If the officers who gave me this order knew the Iraqis' culture better, they would never have asked anyone to do this in the first place."

In March 2004, after working and struggling with the Iraqi people for a year, Vacchi was sent home two weeks early because those in charge of him believed he was suffering from battle stress.

"I wanted to stay; I wanted to make a difference," he said.

Upon returning to the U.S., Vacchi settled back into to his life. Ella was three years old at that point and still remembered who her father was.

"My wife would show her pictures of me each night before bedtime," Vacchi said. "When I returned, I was surprised to see Ella run up to me in full recognition of who I was."

Three years later, Vacchi and his wife gave birth to their son Brian, now three months old.

Ella, now six years old, and her new brother may be pleased to know that Vacchi is ready to retire from the Army and intends to continue teaching at UMass.

His class, Iraq Understanding a Complex Country in Complex Times, is offered each semester and helps students understand the diverse cultures and history of one of the oldest civilizations in the world.

The course covers women's rights, the rise of Saddam Hussein, ancient Iraq, family traditions and the contemporary war.

Vacchi notes that the class is not pro-war or an ROTC class; instead it is an explanation of the complexity of the war and of Iraq.

Now at UMass and aware of its war veteran group, the Veterans and Service Members Association (VASMA), Vacchi hopes for less discrimination against veterans on campus. He finds that the group is very valuable, as it is for vets by vets, and not political.

"The best thing we can do for vets," said Vacchi, "is to create an environment for which they can dream."

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury@student.umass.edu

Coming Soon!
The UMASS FLASHBACK GRAD ISSUE 2007
Get yours the last day of classes!
Including the best of 2007, top 10 lists, flashbacks, and countless memories

Worcester & Franklin Spring Fling
BBQ
Friday, May 11, 2007
Quad north of Worcester
From 4:30 – 8:00 pm

Menu: Grilled Chicken
Pulled Pork Sandwich
Hamburgers
Vegetable Kebobs
Garden Burgers
Cole Slaw
Garden Salad
Red Potato Salad
Bluewall Cookies (assorted)
Fresh Fruit Salad
Ice Cream Novelties
Assorted Beverages

Entertainment:
"Deep Pockets"
(winner of the Battle of the Bands at Taste of UMass)

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices

Students respond to library renovation

LIBRARY from page 1

By May 2008, only seven months after the Learning Commons opened, 125,386 people entered the library — up from 58,499 the previous year.

"In the spring semester, after spring break, [library usage] starts to pick up and will crescendo up until the reading period, right before finals," Alling said. "That is our peak time. Of course during finals, we're very busy. We'll have lines for computers until 1:30 or 2 a.m., at that point."

On many evenings, no public computer goes unused. Students are packed in to use the facility's hardware and software, and to consult librarians and technology staff on how to best use the facilities. With parking enforcement suspended most evenings, students are parking along the access paths to DuBois, giving the sense of a facility filled to capacity.

Renovations to the main floor of the library, now designated the "Learning Commons," seem to have fueled the library's resurgence. The refurbishing of the floor, once lined with wooden desks and chairs, elicited positive reactions from librarians and students.

"The library staff feels [the library] has been reenergized," Alling said. "It was pretty quiet, but people are really coming back now."

In a survey conducted by library administration on March 14, 2006, over 90 percent of respondents said that their overall impression of the renovations was very favorable, while just below 30 percent said their thoughts about the Learning Commons were somewhat favorable.

"I used to not study at all at the library, but the changes have caused me to use it more often. Now I study there approximately five hours a week," said Brendan Kemp, a senior computer systems engineering major.

Matthew McVickar, a senior Japanese major, agreed. "I really like the new Learning Commons and I've started to use the area a lot more than the coffee shops that I used to use."

On the other hand, success has also led to some concerns about crowding. In a Learning Commons focus group report, students aired concerns about lack of available work spaces as traffic growth continues.

Daniel Schwartz, a senior sport management student, griped about public computers being busy and long waits in lines for their use, complaints to which library administration is seeking to respond, according to Alling.

"Obviously, we don't have enough computers for everyone and we probably never will since there are 18,000 students on campus," she said. "But we're working on creative ways to make the most of what we do have."

One such innovation is the new ability for students to print to Learning Commons printers from remote locations, one measure the library has implemented to alleviate some congestion around library computers.

Another complaint is that the Learning Commons is too loud and too unlike a traditionally quiet library environment because of the laid-back atmosphere.

Schwartz said, "It's always crowded at the Learning Commons and I dislike how much noise there is."

Zach Denver, a senior communications and political science major, added, "I think if there was more private space for students, I would want to use the Learning Commons more."

Alling said the staff has considered the concern about noise. "We're aware of that, but the space was designed so people can collaborate and work together. For those people who do want silent or quiet space, we're trying to extend those options to the second and third floor."

Quiet study space, with new furnishings and Wi-fi hook-ups, has been added on both floors, and both facilities seem to be running at capacity during evening hours.

That's been a good addition, according to Richard Rogers, faculty advisor to the Provost for Undergraduate Education. "It was clearly something the students wanted. It's nice to be loud and crazy sometimes, but it's also nice to get away from that because it can be too much like the dorms."

The Learning Commons has also been useful for teachers, who view it as an extra resource, said Rogers, who teaches a statistics class. Students can use an array of licensed software in the Commons without purchasing the programs themselves, he said.

"It's a real savings to the students and it's not that big of an inconvenience when there are so many computers," he added. "I'd like to see more [teachers incorporate the Learning Commons] and revamp their assignments so students can take advantage of collaborative learning and all the resources in the Commons."

An integral part of the Learning Commons and the library has been the Procrastination Station, the new dining facility on the entrance level.

The Learning Commons at the W.E.B. DuBois library will enter a second phase of renovations in the fall of 2007, designed to improve heating, ventilation, air conditioning and sprinkler systems.

Alling said, "We wanted to make it so that students would never have to leave, and having food and drink available to them is a big part of that."

Another way in which the library has attempted to improve is the recent replacement of all lights in the building to more energy-conserving bulbs, according to Terry Warner, assistant director of library administrative services.

Learning Commons renovations will enter a second and final phase this fall, according to Warner.

"The renovations will improve heating, ventilation, air conditioning and sprinkling systems in the Learning Commons," Warner said.

Despite starting in the fall, Warner does not anticipate any inconvenience to students.

Rogers added, "Most of us will notice nothing, but [when it's finished] there will be improved air quality and circulation. It hurts to have to pay [for the renovations] because the first million, you could see visible changes, but this is more infrastructure work, which is less visible."

Alling said the library would like to honor students' requests to stay open 24 hours, seven days a week as opposed to the current 24 hours, five days a week — but that will require more funding.

Lombardi accepts safety award

LOMBARDI from page 1

sented the award for the third time. The council raises awareness and distributes information to prevent and control unnecessary illness, injury and death.

The award comes two years after ABC News Primetime reported that UMass Amherst campus had the highest rate of violent crime on a campus of its size.

"The University of Massachusetts' environmental safety and health policy signed by Chancellor Lombardi clearly communicated that the safety and health of the entire University community, including students, faculty, staff and visitors, is a core value of the institution," Robinson said.

UMass' Dan Matta was very happy about the award and said, "In my four years at the University I have seen considerable progress in terms of safety and credit this to the Chancellor's policies. This is a well deserved award for Chancellor Lombardi."

Don Mattar can be reached at dmattar@student.umass.edu

UMass veterans critical of University's lack of resources

VASMA from page 1

According to Zagami, the resources provided to the military community at UMass through the Veterans' Affairs Office are inadequate to meet with the current spectrum of needs required by the student veteran community.

"There could be some guidance; there could be a veteran counselor there full-time," Zagami said. "Dean Stewart does not have the ability to fulfill that role because [the university] gives her so much extra to do on top of being a veterans agent."

Zagami would like to see UMass supplement the Veterans' Affairs Office with a full-time staff member or place a permanent staff member in charge of the office.

According to Stewart, many of the resources and services for veterans that the Veterans' Affairs Office is unable to supply are provided by the federal and state level VAs. Stewart criticized the VA for not providing UMass with clear direction towards what services could and should be provided for student veterans.

"It's hard for us to make that good connection with [the VA] and their services," Stewart said. "They're doing it strictly through their own system and it doesn't interact very well with campus' yet."

Stewart had attempted to create an outreach program for student veterans staffed by former military personnel with VASMA, but was denied approval by the VA, which she described as a "huge federal bureaucracy."

"[The VA] is not totally geared up for immediate needs on campus," she said. "That could change as the Iraq War goes on. More and more veterans will be coming back to universities."

Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life, Michael Gargano, stressed the university's past and present receptive attitude toward veterans and service members. In an e-mail statement he said the university welcomed veterans and service members since its inception.

"One of the most historical influences on higher education was implementation of the G.I. Bill. This legislative mandate provided thousands of service men and women with the access to a bachelor's degree," Gargano said. "At UMass-Amherst, we support the federal legislation and provide a campus community of services to assist in the transitioning of all students into the academic and co-curricular programs and services."

According to Zagami, there is no official university operated "transition team" for veterans joining the campus community, but he praised the individual efforts of staff members at UMass Housing and Residence Life, University Health Services, Financial Aid Services and the Physical Plant for "bending over backwards" to help student veterans both adjust to college life and negotiate University bureaucracy.

VASMA is currently working with the administration on a number of new programs for student veterans and service members, including a housing initiative that would give members of the military the option to live together in the future, according to Zagami. Before that, members of VASMA had worked closely with Prevention Specialist Danny Wertheimer at Health Services to tailor existing substance abuse programs to the needs of student veterans.

It is Zagami's hope that VASMA will be able to work with closely with the University in the future to design more programs specifically targeted to those having served military, including a new and separate orientation process for veterans preparing to attend UMass. According to Zagami, the current New Student Orientation process, which lumps service men and women together with younger students, most having just recently graduated from high school, is one that is difficult for veterans to relate with.

"What we would like to see the University do is take our orientation process and let us reach out to the veterans and service members before they even set foot on campus here," Zagami said. "It's much easier to [prepare a veteran for UMass] on a one-on-one basis than to do it in a large crowd where they walk around campus with kids that are eighteen years old with their parents."

According to Vice Chancellor Gargano, the administration has already approached University Reserve Officer Training Corps (ROTC) commanders with the idea of providing an augmented orientation process for veterans and service members in addition to the normal summer orientation program.

Members of VASMA are also working with the administration to create a more inclusive Web site for veterans with links to Federal and State VAs, the UMass offices for admissions and financial aid and other on and off campus resources.

"The Web site will enable all veterans, either already on campus and or exploring what university to attend, to access key and important information at a time that is convenient to them," Gargano said.

The Web site will be operational by late summer, the Vice Chancellor said.

With the growth of VASMA and the increasing collaboration with the University, Zagami hopes that future programs will allow veterans an easier transition from military life to UMass and enable them to avoid some of the mistakes he made.

"I don't think the school was prepared to have a combat vet right out of Iraq or right out of Afghanistan come back here. They didn't have any policies implemented for us," Zagami said. "We want people to be able to hold their head high and say, 'yes, I'm a veteran and there is someone fighting for my rights as a veteran.'"

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@student.umass.edu

YOUR FUTURE IS WITHIN REACH
And so is the money to pay for it
College expenses should not be a roadblock for your future. Stay on track with an alternative loan from Campus Door. Get up to $250,000 to pay for college and make no payments until 12 months after you graduate. Apply online today at campusdoor.com to receive an approval usually in less than a minute. Spend your time planning for your future, not worrying about how to pay for it.
You have the will. We have the way.
campusdoor.com
campusdoor
All rates are subject to credit approval. Programs, rates, terms and conditions are subject to change without notice. Offer not valid in all states. Campus Door and Campus Door Services are the property of Campus Door Inc. and/or its affiliates. Lender is Lehman Brothers Bank, FSB. Member FDIC. All Rights Reserved. Equal Opportunity Lender.

17-year-old cultivates cash crop on vacant police property

A 17-year-old boy was growing marijuana on vacant property owned by Ocala's deputy police chief, authorities said.

Deputy Chief Greg Graham said he was told about the plants by neighbors on Saturday. He had bought the lot two months ago as an investment, the Ocala Star-Banner reported. Deputies with the Martin County Sheriff's Office confiscated nine potted marijuana plants on the lot.

Graham said he has known the teen, who was not identified because of his age, for several years.

"I have no idea why he picked my property," Graham said.

A neighbor witnessed the teen in the wooded lot on Friday, according to a sheriff's report. The lot was about 100 yards from the teen's home. The neighbor said the teen's presence on the lot seemed suspicious.

While the investigators were on the property, they spotted the teen walking toward it, according to the report. The teen admitted to investigators that the plants were his and that he smokes marijuana.

He also had pictures of the marijuana plants on his camera cell phone, according to the report.

The teen was charged with cultivation of marijuana and taken to the county's Juvenile Assessment Center.

Associated Press

Nine potted marijuana plants were confiscated by police.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MAY 10, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

On the Card controversy

Andrew "Andy" Card, the former Chief of Staff of the Bush Administration, is getting an honorary degree from UMass, and our campus is up-in-arms. His speech in April angered students, and now the University is growing louder in protest. These protests have taken the form of 'Die-ins', as well as organized meetings. Now, as the time of graduation rapidly approaches along with Card's official acceptance, disgruntled resistance has reached a crescendo.

For those who are unfamiliar with Card's career and accomplishments, he started as a corruption-fighting Massachusetts State Representative, making an unsuccessful run for governor in 1982. Afterward, he worked in both the Reagan and Bush administrations and as a lobbyist in the automobile industry. Most recently, Mr. Card found himself appointed Chief of Staff for current president, George W. Bush, in 2001. Though he resigned last year, it is due to this position in the White House that such controversy emerged on our campus.

Dissidents to his honorary degree depict Card as a talking head of the Iraq War. Being in charge of the White House Iraq Group, he played an important role in lobbying the necessity of war to the American people. Going on the UMass-Amherst website, one can see the criterion for the selection process includes a statement that candidates "shall be persons of great accomplishment and high ethical standards who exemplify the ideals of the University of Massachusetts." Protesters argue that an honorary degree winner represents the University, and with it the student body – by giving Card a degree, we affirm and support the war in Iraq by association.

For some here on campus, this is enough to get them up in arms with a picket sign, and these same people will try to convince others to do the same. But the truth is, if you are not already emotional over Andy Card, chances are you never will be. Furthermore, there is no group compelled to come out and speak for his merits. One can parallel the situation to the present two moods of the United States public regarding the War in Iraq – either we are ignited or we are ignoring. In our country, there are less openly opposed, and even fewer are gung-ho.

At UMass however, to complement our reputation as a progressive university, there are better percentages of those ignited against and opposing the war. The recent 'die-ins', meetings and writings are all indicative of a student body that, if not indifferent, has a distinct distaste for our country's operation overseas and all who represent it. But despite this notable amount of objection, calls for rescinding are not being heard by our school administration.

At a recent Faculty Senate meeting, Chairman of the Board of Trustees Stephen P. Tocco refused to allow a review for the Card decision. In a room cluttered with both students and teachers, along with clapping approval at the suggestion for a meeting on the subject, the higher-ups would have nothing of it.

Quite simply, the Andy Card situation proves this democratic institution to be not so democratic after all. Despite these prevalent protests and formal requests to reconsider the nomination, no progress has been made. As a result, the situation has come to a head. The administration will not stand down, and neither will those opposed, a group comprised of not only students, but faculty as well. Now things are getting ugly as protests at graduation commencement have been planned, giving anyone who opposes the Iraq War in the general area (and this is Massachusetts we're talking about), to come on down and show it.

What could have been a nice commencement will now be turning into a circus, a shame on our school that could still be easily avoided if student's voices are heard. Though this challenge isn't from every individual at our University, the silence spurs from indifference rather than support. But as students, we shouldn't be self-conscious if we haven't chosen a side on the Andy Card issue or Iraq, because we're in good and plentiful company. We should be self-conscious if we sit idly by as the University gives out honorifics that do not reflect the overarching opinion of the student body. We should be self-conscious if we let those in charge refuse to acknowledge those who pay, work and live at this institution.

The decision of whether or not Andrew Card gets a degree should be ours, and it isn't.

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

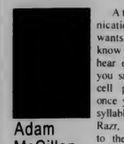
Poll Question:

Should the University of Massachusetts rescind its offer to give Andrew Card an honorary degree?

Cast your vote online at dailycollegian.com

Yes | No | Who Cares?

Hold the phone



Adam McGillen

A telecommunications giant wants you to know that it can hear every word you say on your cell phone and once you utter a syllable into your Razr, it belongs to the company to do with as it pleases.

In a new take on our First Amendment rights, Verizon now claims that in handing over customer's calling records to the U.S. government the company was merely practicing free speech.

Say what? I know it is hard to believe but Verizon wants to shirk the responsibility of protecting its customers' information in order to save its big business butt. The company is willing to sacrifice the integrity of the First Amendment to achieve that end, essentially calling the Electronic Communications Privacy Act (ECPA) unconstitutional.

Verizon is abusing the First Amendment, and bending the meaning of free speech to save their profits.

The ECPA, enacted in 1986 by the U.S. Congress, established protections on information transmitted across computer networks. It prevents the government from intercepting e-mail messages or wiretapping cell phones without a warrant. According to Verizon, because the information given to the government was truthful, it represents an act of free speech and therefore the company is free to help the Bush Administration use warrant-less wiretaps to track any American with a cell phone (i.e. you).

Those text messages you send to your friends, planning that party for this weekend, asking your older buddy to buy you some alcohol, maybe just telling your boyfriend or girlfriend how much you love them, those are all private communications, right? Wrong.

Verizon hopes to have the lawsuit brought against it thrown out. If the company succeeds; your privacy will be threatened gravely by text messages and any other form of telecommunications that you use.

Feels a little like "1984" doesn't it? You will have Big Brother hanging from your belt or bouncing along in your purse in no time.

Along with that Orwellian theme, President Bush and his administration are actively seeking to save Verizon and other telecommunications juggernauts from legal liability. The Bush administration is providing a nice little back up plan if Verizon's free speech argument fails. The act pushing its way through Congress states that telecommunications companies who disclosed customer information to the government following Sep. 11th will receive retroactive immunity, freeing the companies from further prosecution.

Perhaps the most frightening aspect of Verizon's ploy is how Americans perceive free speech. We saw free speech in action not too long ago when Don Imus referred to women on the Rutgers basketball team as "nappy-headed hoes." Distasteful? Yes. Illegal to say? No. If Verizon used derogatory speech about its customers that would be a different story and would rightly fall under the company's First Amendment rights.

But Verizon did a much more insidious thing; it went behind the backs of its customers and revealed information that was protected from warrant-less inspection by the government. Taken to the extreme, Verizon is essentially arguing that when a customer hands over personal information or passes information over its network the company takes ownership of said information and is free to disclose that information to whomever it pleases. Under this logic Verizon has the right to not only give your call records to the government, but to "freely express" your Social Security Numbers, credit card numbers, e-mails and just about anything, however they wish.

They could publish a Web site that listed all of its customers' names with SSN and bank account information right beside it, and then exclaim "Free Speech!" as justification.

Verizon is abusing the First Amendment, and bending the meaning of free speech to save its profits, rather than admitting their mistake and helping to save Americans from the precipice they now stand on.

To invoke free speech as justification for an illegal act is despicable. Our nation may be at war, and Verizon may have released information about its customers in order to help the cause, but its actions fall nothing short of traitorous to the American people.

What good is a war to protect the American way of life if we must destroy the Constitution that lays at its foundation in order to achieve victory?

Adam McGillen can be reached at amcgille@student.umass.edu

Sending a grave message

Greg Collins

Regardless of whether you think the name of the UMass Republican Club-sponsored Abortion Graveyard this week is hyperbole, the message it conveys should resonate in the souls of all UMass students and faculty. Human beings should honor the precious lives of unborn children, starting at conception, by ensuring their right to be born, and thereby upholding God's natural law that all people are born on the same level of creation.

This message should be considered seriously by abortion rights activists on campus and nationwide. Supporting their conception of reproductive justice, by which women have the right to abort unborn children, denies the possibility that all people are created equal and have equal rights.

Unborn babies, and all human beings, are not just the biological result of a woman's pregnancy cycle.

Contemporary abortion rights supporters diminish this point by arguing that women have a right to control both their own bodies and the unborn child's body during the gestation period. Since the baby is inside the woman's body, the logic extends that the woman should be the only person with jurisdiction over it.

Yet this overlooks that unborn babies, and all human beings, are not just the biological result of a woman's pregnancy cycle. On a deeper level, they are gifts of creation on loan from God. These babies do not just belong to the mother or father, but to all of humanity and God. And they belong not in the sense of proprietary entities but spiritual manifestations.

If unborn children are merely the property of a woman, as abortion activists suggest, then they should not be seen as gifts in and of themselves, but rather as a means to achieve desirable ends for the biological parents. For instance, if these ends entail being relieved of the financial strains of supporting a child, then it is quite logical to abort the unborn baby.

Problems arise for abortion rights supporters when the issue of equality comes up. Every unborn child deserves to have life, regardless of its sex, race, ethnicity, mental status, or of the socioeconomic background of the child's biological parents. For instance, should a baby be aborted if it is known he will have a severe mental disease which he will live with for the rest of his life?

Abortion rights supporters will express extreme sympathy for the child but ultimately conclude that the woman has more of a right to terminate the pregnancy than the child has of being born. This rejects the notion that all human beings are created equal. If reproductive rights activists believe that individuals are born not only with different talents and abilities, but also with more intrinsic worth than others due to biological or material variables, then of course they will deny the possibility that all human beings have an equal right to life.

If rights are only defined by human beings then the equality of the human race is susceptible to being subjugated by people who do not want to abide by God's law but by subjective sentiments. Rejection of God's natural law enables people to justify aborting unborn babies because they will grow up in poverty or because they have Down syndrome. Additionally, it allows people to classify a person's essence based on its personal criteria of what constitutes human dignity.

In contrast, we should judge the essence of a person not on tangible characteristics but on deeper conceptions of its internal being, the most important element being his or her soul. Many modern-day liberals and libertarians on this campus and throughout the country dismiss this suggestion as idealistic philosophical and religious banter with little application to reality.

It becomes much more real when we think about whether we could have been the babies subject to abortion, but not in the sense of experiencing oppression at the hands of doctors. Rather, in the sense that we would not have been treated as human beings with equal rights and of equal creation at the hands of God. Consequently, we would have been deprived of using our God-given talents, whether this is intellectual, artistic or athletic ability, for the good of humanity.

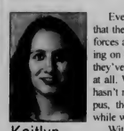
The failure to ensure that human beings are able to use their physical, spiritual and intellectual potential is an unequivocal rejection of the concept of a human soul. This soul exists and is unique to every human being created on Earth. It allows us not only to recognize and apply our God-given abilities to the real world, but it also distinguishes human beings from other animals by enabling us to conceive of living life to fulfill a higher purpose instead of merely pursuing pleasure and abstain from pain and difficulties. Just because the existence of a soul cannot be scientifically proven does not mean it is not present in all human beings.

Unborn babies should not be viewed as a clump of cells or as physical property. Instead, they should be seen as spiritual gifts from God with unique souls inside their internal being. Because they are born on the same level of creation, they should have an equal right to life.

This is the real message behind the Abortion Graveyard.

Greg Collins writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu

A sobering situation



Kaitlyn Silva

Every student has probably heard that the administration and local police forces are trying to cut down on drinking on campus. Most of us don't think they've managed to get the job done at all. While the large police presence hasn't really affected drinking on campus, they have affected what we do while we are drinking on campus.

With the UMPD and the Amherst police officers roaming the campus every night, scouting for drunken students, walking through campus has become a strict art form. No matter how many beers you've had, how good your day was or how exciting your conversation is, you know what to do when you see an approaching vehicle. You keep your eyes on the ground and your voice low, if you decide to speak at all. If there's a police officer in that vehicle, they can't do much. However, speaking loudly or making a sudden movement might just lead to an interrogation.

Who would have thought that upon arriving at the UMass campus that traveling by foot at night, whether tipsy or completely sober, would be a task shrouded in intimidation?

Whether we'd like to admit it or not, the University's rough tactics have taken a toll on the student body.

I'm not much of a drinker myself, but I have a strange quirk. I revel in watching fellow students who aren't at the bars (because they're not old enough and their fake ID isn't convincing anybody) stumbling down the streets of campus. There's something very amusing about seeing people who think they look cool, when in reality they look utterly ridiculous.

As Cinco de Mayo came and went, I felt as if I was incomplete. This is supposed to be a monumental night of parties throughout the nation, so I expected to see masses of foolish underage party-goers. Besides one obnoxious quartet screeching its way down Orchard Hill, the night was a disappointment. Students that passed by seemed unusually calm and collected for even a regular Saturday night.

The lack of a public display of drunken idiocy is not necessarily a bad thing. It means that there are fewer students at risk of being injured in their moments of stupidity, like when they try to climb the tallest tree they can find and black out in the middle of their adventure.

But this hasn't come about because students want to avoid the dangers of the outdoors, they want to avoid the police officers on campus. Students have argued against the larger police presence even before the December riots on campus, citing that it would have no real effect. In one way, in the case of drunken chaos in public it seems that we have been proven wrong. Whether we'd like to admit it or not, the University's rough tactics have taken a toll on the student body.

Think about it, this past weekend was what most colleges refer to as May weekend. On this campus our spin-off is Bowl Weekend in Orchard Hill. In the minds of administrators, the weekend is meant to unify the campus for one last respectable hoorah before the stress of finals kicks in. For students throughout the nation, this has become an infamous party occasion involving lots of alcohol.

Off campus, the weekend was celebrated in its normal fashion. If you weren't involved in any of this activity, just look to your typical social networking sites like Facebook and you'll probably find photos of your intoxicated friends all over the place.

On campus the story was different. Bowl Weekend went off without a hitch and everything was quiet for the most part. Surely there was some pre-gaming in the dorms before events like the Bowl Dance started, but sometimes it's hard for others to tell the difference between drunken tomfoolery and outrageous yet sober fun. At quieter events during the weekend students stayed smart. They knew that area government events would require a large police presence, so if they went to the event after having a few too many beers they would likely end up in trouble with the police.

Once again, police presence manages to keep trouble at bay. As Southwest Week finishes up with a concert and a dance we're likely to see more police monitoring us than ever before. The increased number of police officers will certainly help keep students safe, but it doesn't do much for our comfort level.

Whether we've been drinking or not, students should feel comfortable walking across campus. Students who have been drinking are walking rather than driving, so the police should learn to be more lenient. Students walking around campus at night without a drop of alcohol in their system should not have to feel targeted. They shouldn't feel as if bumping into a police officer could cause unwanted issues. Campus safety is one thing, but total campus control is completely different.

Kaitlyn Silva can be reached at kmsilva@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, MAY 10, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Art student practices 'Alchemy'

Gallery displays unique, sculptural works

Art major Tim Gough is showing his senior thesis project "Alchemy" at the Student Union Gallery. It features the gown shown above made from 36,200 thumbtacks.

BY KATE NOCERA
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Tim Gough never planned on being an artist. In fact he thought of art as much more of a pastime than something of a career choice.

"I knew that people went into pre-law, pre-med, or studied economics," he said, "but I never thought that you could go into art."

It seems as if Gough has found his way "into art." The opening reception for his senior thesis project "Alchemy" was held Tuesday night. The show displayed four sculpture pieces of Gough's that proved he was, indeed, an extraordinary artist.

The first immediately visible piece was a gown installed in the center of the gallery. Upon entering the gallery, the gown catches the eye, as it is shiny and metallic. Closer inspection is then warranted and it is revealed that the piece is made entirely from thumbtacks. Gough is clearly very proud of this work, and he should be – it's flawless.

When asked how he conceived of the gown piece Gough said, "I was just looking for a new material to work with. I found the pattern [for the dress] at Joann Fabrics and just started working with the thumbtacks. It worked." Gough is proud to state that the gown contains 36,200 thumbtacks.

He is almost as proud to say that another one of his sculptures contains 62,000 polystyrene beads. This sculpture is a beautiful, draping display of beads.

A tower of binder clip rings stands near the thumbtack gown. It is the only piece that really needs to be installed and has been displayed at several other art shows.

Gough laughed and said, "My girlfriend and I have gotten really good at putting that thing up and taking it down."

He said he got the inspiration for the tower from being bored in classes when he was in grade school, and fiddling with his binder clips. Everyone has been bored at one point or another in class, but Gough, ever the artist, turned that boredom into a creation.

Gough is shy and soft-spoken, but clearly very proud of what he's accomplished in his years here at UMass. In January of 2004, Gough was frustrated with the way his college career was panning out. Out of this frustration he applied for the B.F.A program, thinking that maybe if he could do art as his major it would make college more worthwhile.

"The application due date was Feb. 15, so I just spent that entire break drawing, and I had never drawn before," Gough said.

Gough was accepted to the program and spent his time taking classes and attempting to find which medium he wanted to work with.

"I had never done sculpture until I was in the program," he said in regard to sculptures. "I had done some woodworking, so on some level I knew I wanted to work in 3D."

Gough clearly has found his niche, and masterfully portrayed the unique ability to create in three dimensional spaces.

The concept of alchemy is an ancient art that sought to transform metals into gold by using philosophic and scientific practices. Gough's pieces bring metallic elements and ordinary objects to create his art.

"I want to make that the ordinary person can appreciate, not just the professor or art student. With my pieces you can identify the materials and you are familiar with them and that brings a sense of connectedness to the piece," he said.

The idea of turning lead into gold is metaphoric for this exhibit as Gough has done just that, taking the ordinary and making it priceless. The exhibit is on display at the Student Union Gallery until Friday, May 11. The hours of the gallery are from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Kate Nocera can be reached at kate.nocera@gmail.com.

Abolitionist 'Amazing Grace' strikes chord

"Amazing Grace" follows the story of British abolitionist William Wilberforce throughout his battle to end slavery. The film encounters the "Amazing Grace" song author, John Newton, as he is an ally of Wilberforce.

BY COLIN GETTY
THE COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

POTSDAM, N.Y.

Sometimes a good movie comes along that you never hear about on TV, with a title that throws you off and you only end up seeing it because it's the only thing left at the movies. When you hear anything called Amazing Grace, your mind immediately goes to the church lady who sells cookies at the bake sale. When the movie isn't loaded with violence and action, it's not as exciting as it may sound.

The movie is based on the events toward the end of the 18th century when the abolitionist movement was taking place in Britain. It follows the famous abolitionist William Wilberforce in his mission to abolish the English slave trade for its inhuman treatment of the African people.

As a young and popular liberal representative in the House of Commons, Wilberforce has an up and coming political career ahead of him. However, he, bored by the politics, chooses to lie in the grass and study botany. His friend, William Pitt, and leading abolitionist, Thomas Clarkson, convince him to take up the cause of the slave trade and fight for its abolition. This leads to years of petition, bills and struggle that ends up amounting to nothing due to political tension caused by the French Revolution and Napoleon's rise to power.

Amazing Grace begins some [illegible] after Wilberforce started his crusade. Once a popular representative in the House of Commons, he is now degraded for his unpopular stance on the negative slave trade. He falls ill from years of struggle and sacrifice for the cause, and resides in his uncle while he recovers. There he meets a young woman, Barbara Spooner, also an abolitionist, and he tells her of his struggle over the past years. The movie goes into several flashbacks as we see the evolution of Wilberforce's crusade against the slave trade.

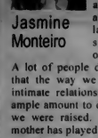
Barbara convinces William to once again take up the cause of abolition, and after marrying, William returns to the House of Commons, to once again fight for the abolitionist cause.

At one point in the film, Wilberforce talks to John Newton, an old preacher converted from years of being a salesman on a slave ship. Newton is, of course famous for writing the song "Amazing Grace," and the movie shows the true meaning of the song and the background in which it was written, without shoving religion down your throat.

The movie is rooted deeply in the historical fight for abolition in Britain. It is a different take on slavery then what is seen in U.S. history. The movie focuses much on the political motives and backdrop to slavery, as well as the slave trade, instead of the actual use of slaves. As a result, very few Africans are ever seen in the movie, and movie loses some of its humanity motive for abolition. Still, the movie is meant to show the politics, not the experiences of slaves.

While Amazing Grace may not be a hack-and-slash action-packed adventure, it is a movie that has a lot to it. It portrays well the legislative battles in British Parliament, and the divided views held at the time over a controversial attitude. It just goes to show that even movies can't be judged on their titles.

In the beginning ... there was your mom's love



Jasmine Monteiro

Seeing as Mother's Day is right around the corner I've been thinking a lot about mine and what a large impact she's had on my life. A lot of people don't realize that the way we handle our intimate relationships has an ample amount to do with how we were raised. I know my mother has played a part in the way I've viewed and handled my relationships. In fact, seeing as that could potentially be a bad thing, I wholeheartedly give her all the credit.

It's also true, however, that I never would have expected I'd think the way I do now back in high school. When we're young, we shy away from discussing our affairs with our parents because what do they know anyways? They know a lot, too much actually, enough to make you cringe when you're older because you know when they're going to say it – "I told you so."

Nobody likes to hear 'I told you so', but we should accept the fact that sometimes they will be right and sometimes we won't be. It's also true that when living situations aren't so ideal, it can make future relationships more confusing. I remember in high school my mother hardly ever said the right thing. She often panicked in certain situations and lashed out at me. While it aggravated my raging 16-year-old self, I always knew she meant well.

I think she was always depending on my father's 6-foot-4, 250-pound frame to simply frighten the hormones out of any boy that came to my doorstep. But with the unexpected life of a single mother, those plans soon changed. Even to this day she would say, "Those boys are lucky your father isn't here. Oh yeah, if your father was here..." And she never actually finished the statement, she just kind of laughed, but we both knew what she was getting at.

There are many different things we have to deal with when we are young that may, unfortunately, affect the way we love when we get older. Sometimes we can cling onto unhealthy relationships or push away healthy ones. It's so uncertain.

But one thing is for sure; we all love differently because we all know different ways of love. I think I know how to love unconditionally, because I've been loved unconditionally by my mother (and my "other mother," who isn't really my mother, but she might as well be).

Some people don't know what it's like to love and lose; others know far too well. So we can't expect everyone to understand how we love, how we grieve and why we shed tears. We can't always understand what others have gone through; we just have to be willing to try. And don't expect someone to change for you; people change when they're ready, if they ever are. I learned that from my mother too; that and the fact that she can't wait for grandchildren even if she expects to for at least another 10 years.

I believe that we will never learn to love the way a mother loves, but it's an important thing to observe. They love us unequivocally and selflessly take care of us, sometimes before they even know our names.

A mother will always forgive us when we hurt them (sorry mom) and more importantly they will accept us for who we are. The only way you will ever learn how to maintain a healthy relationship is to dig deep into the most honest and sincere relationship you've ever had, which may be sitting right in front of your eyes.

Sometimes it's easy for us to feel lonely when we're denied the love we work so hard for. When we can't seem to grasp the love we've always hoped for, usually the love of a significant other. We want someone to fill a void that we can't seem to fill on our own. We may not find it, we may scare it away when we do or we may just completely ignore it. But one thing is for sure for me anyways; my mom is always willing to put up with me. And that kind of love is all right with me.

Jasmine Monteiro can be reached at jmonteir@student.umass.edu.

Songs transport listener to better places

One student on the power of music to lift spirits

BY MICHAEL CARTWRIGHT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In one of his final "In These Times" columns, the late Kurt Vonnegut claimed music was the only proof he needed for the existence of God. While it's doubtful the agnostic Vonnegut was being absolutely sincere, music lovers must surely understand what is meant by such a statement.

Where would you be without music? What would you do without it? How many times has music saved you? Apart from a half-dozen whiskey sours or morphine intravenous, what else has the implausible ability to alter your entire mood in a matter of minutes, or even seconds?

A dispirited soul could be lying down on a bed, staring hopelessly upwards at a bland white ceiling, a ceiling it believes so tragically resembles its life. But then, put on The Who's "Baba O'Reilly," and let Roger Daltrey and Pete Townshend progressively take over the room. Suddenly, that same soul might be up and about, ready to conquer the world. It seems unthinkable, but it has happened, and every so often, music makes it possible...

I hadn't exactly had the most eventful summer up until that point in June 2006. At the young age of 21, I had fallen into a dreaded routine. Of course, a routine is innately droning and monotonous, and I'd like to think routines are meant for those who wear suits, have real jobs and live in the "real world." But sadly, apart from the shirt and tie, that was me.

I would get out of bed, put on a pot of hazelnut and drive to work listening to the classic rock of WZLX with nothing to look forward to except my lunch break. I would ride home from work again listening to WZLX. I was supposed to be uplifted by songs played during the station's self-proclaimed "attitude adjustment hour," but personally, these 60 minutes always seemed to be one enormous piece of false advertisement. Was my life mirroring my current radio station of choice, as it never seemed to provide anything exciting and new?

My life was in dire need of a breath of fresh air. When I opened my mailbox at the beginning of June, I finally got that much needed spark. Concealed in a small packet, was a glossy three-day ticket to The Bonnaroo Music Festival. Over the next week or so, maps were drawn out, a car was packed to the point of explosion and "the crew" was assembled.

At that point in time, all of our lives seemed to be equally mundane. We were all anxious to escape the daily drudgery, and to experience an uninterrupted weekend of the music we loved.

To the apposite tune of Tom Petty's "The Great Wide Open," a rickety 1996 Mercury turned left out of a gravel driveway in Massachusetts, and began its marathon expedition to Manchester, Tenn.

As the dashboard's electronic clock flickered with change, the aged auto kept on rumbling down Route 81. The muffler roared, and the exhaust huffed and puffed as it crossed the Mason-Dixon Line to the sound of Les Claypool's "I'm Headin' South." The old car was steadily approaching its destination: a 700-acre farmland, located in a relatively barren expanse of The Volunteer State.

A woman's gradual exhalations were drowned out by the snoring of two men; all three of them were sound asleep in the backseat. The sun had not yet risen. The weather outside was dim and dreary, and Beck's "Sea Change" played from the inside of the car, perfectly matching the atmospheric mood of the interior with the exterior. The driver's bloodshot eyes remained open thanks to an occasional word spoken by an equally languid traveler in the passenger seat. We were struggling to stay awake in a district of Tennessee ironically called Coffee County.

The car's struggling engine kept on, its tires were almost bald and its gas tank was almost empty. The only things giving life to this dilapidated vehicle were its two barely conscious passengers and the collection of CDs they had brought along for this epic road trip.

A specific rule was drawn out for this journey: a piece of music could be played only if there was a chance it could be heard during the upcoming weekend. And so, this grand excursion was complemented by an award-winning soundtrack. Road trippers sang along to the eclectic sounds of newcomer Matisyahu, absorbed the wistfulness of Radiohead, banged seat cushions and headrests to Elvis Costello and harmoniously recited the words of Conor Oberst, the independent music scene's poet laureate. Music was constantly of utmost relevance.

At times, passengers would even hilariously over-intellectualize a song being played. One member of the caravan, likely under some sort of chemical influence, compared Death Cab For Cutie's "I Will Follow You into the Dark," a song unarguably about love and the preparation of death, with preparation of the "glorious rebirth" we were all about to experience in a few hours.

After almost a full day of being crammed inside a small mass of glass and metal, this small group of music enthusiasts had finally arrived at its desired destination. We had been through an unfathomable amount of scratched CDs, a couple of iPod batteries and a rather depressing Waffle House.

The 18 long hours in the car were made bearable simply because of music; the recorded music being played from the car stereo and the eagerly awaited live music soon to come.

The Cougar slowly drove through Bonnaroo's entrance gate, just as its radio almost simultaneously lost all reception, and the last remaining iPod batteries had died. It was naturally of little concern though, as over 80 hours worth of live music stood before us, ready to be inhaled.

A day of enjoyable live music had passed.

It was half past 10 p.m. on Saturday evening. We found ourselves in a haze of smoke, hovering in the middle of obscurity. It had been dubbed a new age Woodstock, but for all of us, The Bonnaroo Music Festival became something all its own in that very moment. We could do nothing except float amongst the ocean of people that surrounded us. We were nearly still in a silent sea of 75,000 spellbound spectators.

The band currently onstage had the complete attention of each and every soul in the crowd. An aura of unpredictability graced the concert, as the audience could only imagine which songs would be played before the show came to a close. No one knew what was coming, because in 19 years, no one ever has. This band has never played the same set list twice, ever.

We may have been lost in darkness, but Thom Yorke's unique voice was like a familiar stranger; a guiding light illuminating a path to rapture.

During the entire show, we moved no more than a few inches. We were practically standing in the exact spot we had been at the start of the show, still basking in Radiohead's personal blend of beautiful agony. Again, all of this was made possible by music, music that took us up and down the extensive emotional spectrum.

Johnny Greenwood's guitar had us drifting away on a bed of clouds, only to be thrown against a bed of nails without warning seconds later.

Thom Yorke's voice tore the crowd's collective heart from its chest, letting it dangle in the air for a moment before carefully placing it back into its body, completely unharmed. The show was over. The lights went off. It was pitch black. And we had never seen things so clearly.

We were fortunate enough to take in a wealth of different bands that weekend, but only that band could be described as totally unparalleled. Only that band effortlessly encapsulated the purpose of music. It was then we understood, more than ever before, that music meant the world to us.

I suppose it occasionally acts as a mother or father, offering sound advice, letting us know what we must do in order to survive in this world. At other times, it simply serves as a good friend, holding us up whenever we might be struggling to find support elsewhere.

In the course of that memorable weekend in June, we had experienced a necessary reawakening.

And I am now sitting here, happily writing about this affecting experience, but I ask true music lovers, where would I be if I didn't have that weekend to revitalize myself?

Where would we be without music?

Michael Cartwright can be reached at mcartwr@student.umass.edu

Radiohead, above, played an awe inspiring set at Bonnaroo Music Festival last summer. The festival and the music it features stuck with one UMass student.

From Your Dorm* To The Airport And Back!
central campus, pick up during heavy travel time
■ VIP Exclusive Service ■ Professional Drivers
■ Door-to-Door Service ■ New, Well Maintained Vans
■ Charter & Group Service ■ Scheduled Van-Share Service
Call: 253-1350 or Out of Area Toll-Free at 1-800-872-8752
Or Book Online at www.valleytransporter.com
Valley Transporter The Easy Way to the Airport!

CELEBRATING HIS HOLINESS THE 14TH DALAI LAMA
FEATURED MUSEUM SHOWS
Aesthetics of the Sacred: The Buddhist Art of Tibet
Installation of a Japanese Buddha Sculpture
Fashioning Tradition: Japanese Tea Wares from the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries secondFRIDAYS a FREE art experience for all ages
May 11, 2007 4–8 pm
FREE ADMISSION !
ALL GALLERIES OPEN
MUSEUM SHOP OPEN
4–6 pm 2nd Fridays Fun
An art project inspired by a special exhibition about the Japanese tea ceremony will be offered for visitors with children (ages 4+)
6–6:30 pm Scholar on Art
Marylin Rhie, Professor of East Asian Studies at Smith College, will offer a gallery talk on selections from the special exhibition Aesthetics of the Sacred: The Buddhist Art of Tibet
Tues-Sat 10-4, Sun 12-4
Second Fridays 10-8 (4-8 FREE)
Closed Mondays and major holidays
Elm Street at Bedford Terrace
Northampton, MA
413.585.2760
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP
www.smith.edu/artmuseum
Advocate

BRUEGGER'S BAKED FRESH DUO
We've never done anything halfway. Until now.
Any Half "Tossed For You" Salad
Any Half Sandwich (on your choice of bread)
Any Cup of Soup
©2007 Brueggers Enterprises
— Choose any two* for only $6.29 —
*(Soup & Sandwich, Soup & Salad, Sandwich & Salad)
FREE WiFi!
Amherst
170 N. Pleasant Street
413-253-5713
We accept the OCMP card!
WITH THIS COUPON
$4.99 The Complete Classic Breakfast Wrap with a Medium Coffee
BRUEGGER'S BAKED FRESH
PLU 503 One coupon per person. Not valid with any other offer. Only original coupons will be accepted. Prices do not include tax. Valid at all participating locations. Expires 5-31-07.
WITH THIS COUPON
$1.99 For a bagel with cream cheese and a small coffee
BRUEGGER'S BAKED FRESH
PLU 499 One coupon per person. Not valid with any other offer. Only original coupons will be accepted. Prices do not include tax. Valid at all participating locations. Expires 5-31-07.
WITH THIS COUPON
$1.00 OFF Any Brueggers DUO
BRUEGGER'S BAKED FRESH
PLU 502 One coupon per person. Not valid with any other offer. Only original coupons will be accepted. Prices do not include tax. Valid at all participating locations. Expires 5-31-07.
WITH THIS COUPON
$4.99 DOZEN
BRUEGGER'S BAKED FRESH
PLU 619 One coupon per person. Not valid with any other offer. Only original coupons will be accepted. Prices do not include tax. Valid at all participating locations. Expires 5-31-07.

'Lucky You' not directed at audience

COURTESY WARNER BROS.

Curtis Hanson and Eric Roth are screenplay writers known for great work, but their latest "Lucky You" starring Drew Barrymore and Eric Bana falls flat with clumsy dialogue.

By Sohrel Rezayazdi
The Daily Iowan (U. Iowa)

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Sleazy leather jacket on his back, Canon digital camera in his hands, Huck Cheever (Eric Bana) struts into a Vegas pawnshop. He haggles with an elderly pawnbroker over the camera — he wants $300, she'll only put up $150. Huck won't go down easy. A professional poker player, he uses card logic to argue his case, speaking in poker analogies as if it were his first language.

"You work this hard at your day job?" the woman asks him. She has no idea. Such is the opening scene of "Lucky You." Such is the entire film.

It's hard to imagine two accomplished screenwriters, Curtis Hanson (L.A. Confidential) and Eric Roth (The Insider), sitting down at a laptop, blank screen before them, and saying, "All right, let's just pack this thing with poker metaphors."

Yet such an exchange must have taken place to create Lucky You, a misbegotten blend of card-shark drama and family/relationship melodrama.

Rest assured, director Hanson treats us to references of relationships "folding" and men who "hustle a 10" and "commit to zero."

Coming off a one-two guilty-pleasure punch (8 Mile and In Her Shoes), Hanson takes his low-fi, unambitious style to an extreme in Lucky You. The story of a reckless poker player's shot in the 2003 World Series of Poker, the film charts Huck's misadventures with his new squeeze Billie (Drew Barrymore) and his hazily developed beef with his poker-ace father (Robert Duvall).

Oh, and the film's essentially a travelogue for Las Vegas.

Ever since L.A. Confidential, Hanson has shifted his focus to endearing, unpretentious films that stick to genre conventions. 8 Mile, if you remember, is little more than Rocky with rapping, but only the soggiest of wet blankets would deny the film's charm.

With Lucky You, however, Hanson stretches his old-fashioned appeal thin, revealing the film's clumsy character development and dialogue. Characters endlessly psychoanalyze each other: We hear from an array of sources that Huck is a "blaster" when it comes to poker, yet he "plays it pretty tight" when it comes to real life.

Lucky You isn't affable in its simplicity – the effect for which Hanson is going — it's silly at best and inadvertently funny at worst (note all the above dialogue snippets).

Far less than 8 Mile, Hanson builds suspense by capturing the essence of his subject. For the most part, he avoids fast-cutting, dissolve-heavy montages of poker players squinting their eyes and going "all in" on every hand. Inherently suspenseful and boring, poker is an odd spectator sport, and Hanson's slow-burn poker sequences capture the vibe.

While this low-key style borders on naturalistic, Hanson's narrative couldn't be more artificial. At one point, Huck wins a key hand, only to learn the bumbling dealer misdealt a card. At another, Huc steals Billie's money for no apparent reason other than to contrive a false confrontation.

When characters aren't addressing themes of loneliness and emotional distance via poker metaphors, they're doing the same for themes of technological growth and generational disconnect. Hanson crafts this thematic concern with slightly more tact, given that his traditionalist film represents the ways of the old colliding (unsuccessfully) with the new. This bit of meta-filmmaking, in the end, only reminds us of the gifts that writer/director Hanson squanders on Lucky You.

Fill the summer with a wealth of musical delights

COURTESY WENDY LYNCH

Adam Levine, above, is the lead singer of the band Maroon 5, whose sophomore album "It Won't be Soon Before Long" drops May 22.

By Nick Hornung
Arizona Daily Wildcat (U. Arizona)

TUSCON, Ariz. – Whether you'll be staying around town, partying with friends or traveling to some far-off destination this summer, you're going to need a soundtrack for your adventures. Here are 10 upcoming albums guaranteed to make your summer rock.

Maroon 5 - "It Won't Be Soon Before Long"

Pop-rock band Maroon 5 hopes to dispel any one-album wonder rumors with its sophomore release. The band's first album since 2002's "Songs About Jane" promises to have a less sexy-rock feel and a sexier electronic feel. Thankfully, the band didn't wait until the album's release and have given fans a taste of what to expect with the explicit first single "Makes Me Wonder." (May 22)

Ozzy Osbourne - "Black Rain"

The grandfather of heavy metal returns with his first solo album since 2001's "Down to Earth." He claims that he was completely sober for the recording process this time, but we should probably take that with a grain of salt. Combined with the announcement that the Ozzfest festival will be free this year, this album could be a big musical comeback for Ozzy, provided we can figure out what the hell he's saying. (May 22)

Municipal Waste - "The Art of Partying"

Need a musical backdrop for nights of beer-fueled mayhem and destruction? Municipal Waste has you covered. The group's blend of '80s thrash metal and hardcore punk is a hell of a lot of fun, and if its previous album, "Hazardous Mutation," is any indication, this record will be a blast, too. (June 12)

Pig Destroyer - "Phantom Limb"

If you're looking for something a little louder (OK, a LOT louder), look no further than Pig Destroyer, which makes some of the most brutal and devastating metal imaginable. It created an unholy mix of grindcore, death metal and thrash on 2004's "Terrifyer," and with "Phantom Limb" it's looking to maintain its title as the heaviest band in the land. Warning: Putting this CD next to any indie rock albums on your shelf may cause them to burst into flames. (June 12)

Queens of the Stone Age - "Era Vulgari"s

Josh Homme and Co. are back with their follow-up to the outstanding "Lullabies To Paralyze." These guys always have a few tricks up their sleeves, but you can expect the record to be full of lots of great riffs and bizarre lyrics. Besides, how can something with an album title like "Era Vulgar" be anything but awesome? (June 12)

The White Stripes - "Icky Thump"

Setting aside the weird album title for a moment, Jack and Meg White are always full of surprises. Their last album, "Get Behind Me Satan," was a hodgepodge of different genres and styles and their most ambitious work to date. Their ability to combine catchy tunes with great musicianship means that this album will definitely be one of the most anticipated releases of the summer. (June 19)

Smashing Pumpkins - "Zeitgeist"

Sure, D'Arcy and James probably won't be a part of the new Smashing Pumpkins project, but this reunion is still a pretty big deal. Details on the album are pretty sparse, but the return of this band will really have people talking. Will it be a classic like "Siamese Dream" or "Mellon Collie and the Infinite Sadness," or a flop like "Machina: The Machines of God"? Stay tuned. (July 7)

Against Me! - "New Wave"

After being delayed a couple of times, Against Me! is finally releasing its long-awaited fourth album, and its first on a major label, which was considered by fans a very controversial move. The band's tried out a few new tracks on the road, and they sound pretty good, especially the politically charged "White People For Peace." (July 10)

Bad Religion - "New Maps of Hell"

These California punk legends may be getting up in years, but after more than two decades as a band, they can still play louder and faster than bands half their age. With a lengthy track list, you can probably expect short and energetic blasts of punk rock, and most likely some choice words about the Bush administration. (July 10)

Tegan & Sara - "The Con"

These identical twin sisters from Canada often juxtapose sunny pop melodies with songs about failed relationships and heartache, but there are bound to be a few upbeat songs to brighten your day. Their 2004 album "So Jealous" was full of great songs like "Walking With a Ghost," and "The Con" will surely be just as fun and catchy. If you decide that you can't get enough of these two, look for Tegan's guest vocals on the new Against Me! album. (July 24)

To all students of the Stockbridge School of Agriculture

You are invited to an end of the academic year celebration

Saturday, May 12 from 2 to 4 p.m.
Come to the Amherst Pub
15 East Pleasant Street

Pizza, soft drinks and more are compliments of the alumni of Alpha Tau Gamma fraternity

Bring your Stockbridge student ID

Visit dailycollegian.com to see audio and video slide shows from concerts and interviews.

The Psychological Services Center (PSC) will be offering
FREE ANXIETY AND DEPRESSION SCREENINGS
for members of the campus and local communities on
Friday, May 11th, 2007 from 9AM to 5PM
This event is part of National Anxiety and Depression Awareness Week (May 6 through May 12)

Speak confidentially with a clinician about the symptoms of and treatments for anxiety and depression.
No appointments are necessary. We will be providing free validated parking in the UMass Campus Garage. Please call 545.0041 or visit www.umass.edu/psc for more information.

For information about travelling to UMass, parking, and bus service, you can visit www.umass.edu/visitorsctr For more information about National Anxiety and Depression Awareness Week, visit www.freedomfromfear.org For more information about the Psychological Services Center, please visit www.umass.edu/psc.

MOVING ON? POTTER'S Auto & Truck Rental
Rent a Truck or Cargo Van
Starting at $19.95
Special Reduced Rates Monday to Thursday
• Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston, New York & New Jersey
• One Way Rentals
• Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
• Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

Got bulky trash?
Dump your apartment cleanout garbage in the right place:
Bring your student ID to get in free!
The Amherst Transfer Station
Accepts furniture, mattresses, TVs & computers • Disposal fees apply
740 Belchertown Road (Route 9), 2 miles East of Dunkin Donuts
Open 8am-2pm Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays
For more information, visit www.amherstma.gov/recycling
Or call the Amherst Department of Public Works 413-259-3050

SPRING SIDEWALK SALE
Wednesday, May 9-Sunday, May 12
20%-80% savings
ZANNA
Women's Clothing, Shoes and Accessories
Downtown Amherst

Grand slam caps Owl win over 49ers

TEMPLE from page 12

ed an 0-1 pitch into left field, over the netting, over the scoreboard and out of the UMass Softball Complex, into the parking lot behind the field.

"It was exciting to see someone who's been dying to get into the lineup and has been working so hard [do well in a crucial game]," Dickson said. "It brings tears."

The grand slam made the score 8-0, which ended the game on run rule. It mandates that if a team is leading by eight runs after five innings, the game is called.

James did not see much action during the regular season, getting most of her time as a pinch hitter. However, it was because of the honesty of a teammate that James got the nod against Charlotte yesterday.

"I actually had one of our athletes come up to me today and say, 'Coach I just don't feel like I should hit,'" Dickson said. "That's amazing when you have a player pretty much say, 'Do what's best for the team, I don't think you should put me in.'"

Although Dickson did not say who the player was, Amanda Carver was surprisingly absent from the lineup. The junior started 31 of 37 games for the Owls, batting .233 with one homer and three RBIs.

James finished the day 1-for-2 with four RBIs and two runs scored.

"We've been seeing it [from James]," Dickson said. "She's been proving herself in practice and me and the other coaches were saying, we're probably going to put her in this tournament."

As it turned out, James got her opportunity a little earlier than expected, and it worked out for her and the rest of the Owls.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

Billikens nip GW, Fordham up next

SAINT LOUIS from page 12

in Heet to make the score 3-0.

The inning ended when Richard was thrown out trying to swipe third with Appenfeller at the plate.

In the top of the fourth, George Washington started to show signs of life. Graduate student Elana Meyers who was elected A-10 First Team All-Conference and co-Student-Athlete of the Year on Tuesday took ball four on a pay-off pitch from Ashley Levan. Caroline Howe then strolled to the plate, looking to make something happen and roped a ball down the third base line. An error by Pursell in left field allowed Meyers to score and Howe to reach second on her base hit.

GW did not wait before again making noise, as junior Colleen Kegler sent a solo homer into the bleachers in center to make it 3-2.

The next batter, outfielder Jackie Yaniga, struck out swinging but reached base when the ball got past catcher Nicki Jost. The junior got to second on a sacrifice bunt by Katie Miller and reached third on the single to right by Kaity Harbour, who was pinch hitting for Carrie Higdon. Yaniga finally crossed the plate on single to shortstop by Meyers.

The bleeding was clotted when Ernst fielded a ground ball and tagged the runner going to second, but GW had tied the game at three.

The Colonials quickly took the lead in the top of the sixth, when designated player Hilary King hit a solo home run to make the score 4-3.

Tori Sensi then reached first after being struck with a pitch from Levan. The sophomore was told to take seat, however, when Jost threw her out trying to steal second.

The bottom of the sixth was one of the last chances for the Billikens to battle back – and they used their opportunity well.

Dillinger led her team off by reaching base on a throwing error by Meyer, who made two errors on the day. After Appenfeller flew out to left and O'Connell grounded out to third, Conway pinched hit Jenna Renner for Schmidt. The freshman then belted a two-run homer to left, giving her team the 5-4 lead.

The Billikens tried to add some extra runs when Pursell smacked a double into the right-field corner, but a foul out to first base by Heet squelched any hopes of a healthy insurance policy.

Saint Louis did not need it however, as Levan retired GW to guarantee her team a spot in the 2 p.m. game against the Rams today.

"Fordham's tough," Conway said. "Fordham's the second-best team in the conference and they're a good-hitting team and I think our pitching can shut them down."

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY GEORGE WASHINGTON ATHLETICS

George Washington sophomore second baseman Tori Sensi led the team offensively with two hits in its first round loss to Charlotte.

UM faces TU in round two

SOFTBALL from page 12

middle of the Maroon and White batting order has produced all season, but the bottom of UMass' order made a few dents of its own on the scoreboard.

Last weekend, junior Samantha Salato hit her third home run of the season and freshman catcher Jessica Serio had five hits and six walks in 13 plate appearances.

Despite the presence of Serio and fellow freshman Whitney Williams, the Minutwomen boast more postseason experience than any team in the conference. Amanda Morin, Candice Molinari and Amanda Acampora are all seniors while Lauren Proctor and Stacy Cullington begin their third A-10 Tournament in the game with Temple.

Even the three sophomores likely to start, Balschmiter, third baseman Whitney Mollica and Salato all played key roles in UMass' run in the A-10 and NCAA Tournaments last season.

With 199 hits, Molinari is one hit shy of 200 for her career ... After tying the single-season home run record, Cullington hasn't homered in her last five games. She hit two off Temple hurlers earlier this season ... While it is certain Sortino has worked out a player in team workouts, it is still unclear who UMass' backup catcher would be if Serio suffers an injury. Emily Wehr is still out of action with a hip injury.

Fordham vs. Saint Louis

After outlasting George Washington yesterday, the Saint Louis softball team takes on No. 2 seeded Fordham today at 2 p.m. GW's loss ended the Colonial's first-ever A-10 Tournament appearance.

The Rams visited SLU for a doubleheader with the Billikens on April 15. After a close first game, Fordham won 6-3, the Rams trounced the Billikens 15-3 in Game 2. Fordham shortstop Erin Fisher drove in four runs with two home runs in the five-inning affair.

Freshman Nicole Ayres allowed three earned runs in the winning effort for Fordham On the season, Ayres was 15-4 with a 2.03 earned run average.

When Fordham visited UMass last weekend, Ram coach Bridget Orchard held her rookie from action opting, instead, to go with Sara Kinney. Fordham had already locked up a bye in the first round of the A-10 Tournament, so if UMass and Fordham meet in the final of the tournament, UMass will likely see Ayres for the first time.

49ers on life support

With its 4-2 win over GW yesterday, the Charlotte softball team avoided elimination after losing to Temple to start the day.

If the 49ers hope to capture the A-10 crown, they'll need to win the rest of their games. They could potentially play five more games between today and Saturday.

Today, the 49ers will play the higher seeded loser of Game 4 (UMass and Temple) or Game 5 (Fordham and St. Louis). Charlotte dropped both games to UMass and another pair to Fordham but split with SLU. The series between the 49ers and Temple was canceled due to rain, the series was not made up.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu

COURTESY OF UMASS ATHLETICS

Junior second baseman Stacy Cullington has played in all 47 games this year for the Minutewomen. She leads the team in home runs (14) and RBIs (48). Her .323 batting average ranks third, and her .459 on-base percentage is tops on the team.

Got bulky trash?
Dump your apartment cleanout garbage in the right place:
Bring your student ID to get in free!
The Amherst Transfer Station
Accepts furniture, mattresses, TVs & computers • Disposal fees apply
740 Belchertown Road (Route 9), 2 miles East of Dunkin Donuts
Open 8am-2pm Tuesdays, Thursdays, & Saturdays
For more information, visit www.amherstma.gov/recycling or call the Amherst Dept. of Public Works 413-259-3050

SKYPLEX
Springfield's Hottest Nightclub
3 Clubs & 3 DJ's All Under One Roof!!!
"LA & NYC Nightlife comes to Springfield"
Thursday - 18+ College Night "Hot Body Contest"
Friday - 18+ "Underground Electronic Dance Party" Downstairs
"Top 40" Upstairs
Saturday - 21+ "Party VIP Style"
WANTED: Hip Young Promoters/Hosts • Earn $$$$
Calling all DJ's
Do you do campus and house parties? Looking for a chance to work at the HOTTEST Nightclub? Here's your chance to become a Club DJ! Signup online at www.info.skyplex.us
18+ $2.00 off admission before midnight with this ad
21+ FREE admission before midnight with this ad
code:umass
10 Stearns Square Springfield, MA 413-827-9000

Charlotte still alive

George Washington first team eliminated from tournament

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Charlotte softball team stayed alive in the Atlantic 10 Championships by knocking out George Washington with a 4-2 victory yesterday at the UMass Softball Complex. The 49ers capitalized on the Colonials mistakes by scoring four runs in the fourth inning.

Charlotte	4
GW	2

The Colonials started the rally in the top of the second, when designated player Hilary King walked after an 11-pitch at-bat. She advanced to second on a throwing error and moved to third after a sacrifice bunt. Junior second baseman Tori Sensi delivered an RBI single to give GW a 1-0 lead.

With GW runners on second and third with one out, junior pitcher Christy Murray got out of the jam. She struck out senior first baseman Kaity Harbour and then got junior pitcher Katie Miller to fly out.

Murray found herself in trouble the next inning, with shortstop Elana Meyers on third and two outs, but she struck out King to end the inning.

In the bottom of the third, GW looked to be rolling when Miller pitched a 1-2-3 inning – but in the bottom of the fourth the momentum shifted. Senior catcher Becky Matthews hit a short blooper between the shortstop and the left fielder, and stretched it into a double.

"I think the big thing for us is that we continue to run the bases well and be aggressive," Charlotte coach Aimee DeVos said. "Were always looking to turn it up and stretch a single into a double."

With a wild pitch thrown by Miller, Matthews advanced to third. Unable to find the plate, Miller walked sophomore shortstop Cee Brooks. Going with the aggressive gameplan, Brooks stole second. Then designated player Lauren Schmitz tied the game with an RBI single, scoring Matthews. Brooks scored on a throwing error to give the 49ers the 2-1 lead.

"There going to make an error [and] were going to move up on them," DeVos said. "I think that's something when you have good team speed like we do, you can put a lot of pressure on the defense. If we can make things happen that way then were going to play that kind of ball all day."

The 49ers added two more runs with an RBI single from senior first baseman Kaycie Jones and a sacrifice fly by sophomore third baseman Jenny Rumbles.

With a three-run advantage, Murray found herself in more trouble in the top of the fifth inning. Murray struggled at the start of the inning, giving up a single to junior outfielder Chrysanthi Halkiotis and hitting Meyers with a pitch. The runners advanced to second and third after Murray got the force out at first. King struck again with an RBI single, scoring Halkiotis.

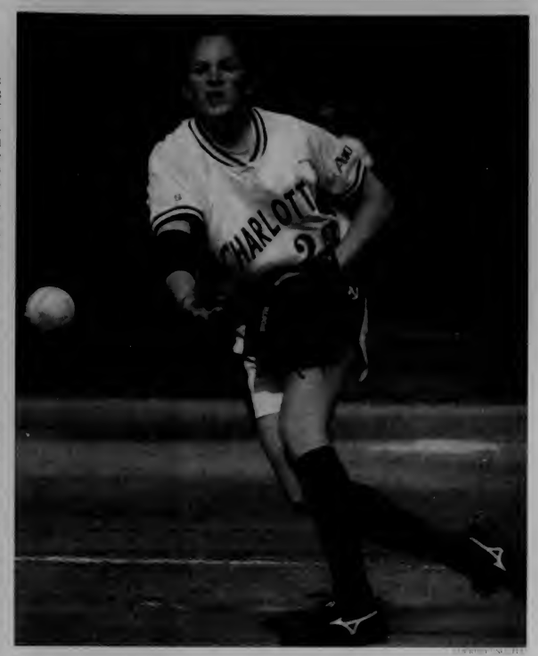
With only one out and the runners in scoring position, the 49ers needed a game-changing play. Junior catcher Colleen Kegler filed out to shallow left field and Meyers tagged up from third. 49ers junior left fielder Emily Forbes threw a strike to Matthews. Meyers, who is twice the size of Matthews, collided with her head-on at the plate. Matthews was knocked to the ground, but she held onto the ball for the inning-ending double play.

"That was awesome," DeVos said. "When she can hold on to that ball that just got the momentum going on the team and it fired everybody up and squashed the rally. It was a big time play."

Murray went seven innings, surrendering two runs on five hits, as she closed out the game in another nail-biting situation. With two outs and runners on second and third, Murray fooled King with a change-up to end the game.

"I think one of her biggest things is keeping the hitters off-balance," Aimee DeVos said. "Her change-up was on and she had people swinging at things. They didn't know what was coming next."

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.



Pitching a complete game for Charlotte in its 4-2 win over George Washington, senior pitcher Christy Murray struck out eight batters and only allowed two runs. It marks her 16th victory of the season.

Postseason still in reach for UMass

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With six conference games remaining, the Massachusetts baseball team ranks seventh—one spot out—in the race to get into the Atlantic 10 Tournament held in Dayton, Ohio, starting on May 23.

The top two seeds – likely to be Charlotte and Richmond – in the six-team field will earn a bye in the first round. That leaves 12 teams battling for the final four spots. At 13-8 in the conference, Fordham and Rhode Island are likely in. Xavier (12-9) and St. Bonaventure (11-9) currently hold down the last two seeds.

UMass (18-22, 10-11 A-10), Saint Louis (9-11) and George Washington (9-12) appear to be the only remaining teams in the conference still in contention for a post-season berth. La Salle and Temple are 8-13, Dayton and Duquesne are 7-14 and Saint Joseph's is last in the A-10 at 5-16.

UMass Baseball

The Minutemen have two series left in the regular season, one this weekend at home against Saint Louis and another the following weekend at Xavier. The Maroon and White are the first team out – 1 1/2 games behind the Bonnies and two behind Xavier – in the playoff chase, but they have three chances against the Musketeers to gain ground.

INJURY ISSUES

The Minutemen had been relatively healthy the first half of the season but have been hurt with injuries as of late especially to their pitching staff. Closer Aaron Smith has not pitched since April 22 against La Salle, when he went 1 2/3 innings in relief. He has been in street clothes for the past few weeks. Smith still leads the team with five saves.

UMass has also been shorthanded in the rotation, as junior ace Jim Cassidy has been out since his start on April 28 with tendonitis in his throwing arm. Cassidy has been held out on the mound but continues to bat second as the regular designated hitter for the Minutemen. The junior right-hander leads the team in both wins (five) and earned run average (3.35) but has struggled at the plate with a .175 batting average.

The lineup has been affected as well, with Jim Macdonald still sidelined with a broken finger. He's been out since April 14 when he appeared in both games of a doubleheader against George Washington. Despite missing the past 16 contests, Macdonald still ranks in a tie for second in RBIs on the team with 19.

HIGH-RANKIN

Senior center fielder Bill Rankin has enjoyed quite the week for the Minutemen. Rankin had perhaps his best day at the plate yesterday, going 3-for-4 with four RBI, three runs scored and a walk against Northeastern. His home run, triple and single left him a double shy of hitting for the cycle. His big day propelled him into the team-lead in RBIs this season with 20.

On Monday, UMass honored Rankin, he won the academic award for his 3.465 grade point average in marketing. That distinction came after a tremendous weekend in the field against Richmond, in which the center fielder made several run-saving catches against the Spiders. Rankin also scored the game-winning run in the first game of that series, and was mobbed at home plate by his teammates.

TO ERROR IS HUMAN

What makes baseball so unique is that fans often get to see things they've rarely, if ever, seen before on the diamond. One such situation arose in Friday's game against Richmond.

In the sixth inning, Richmond's Joe Mahoney hit a pop fly to third baseman Ryan Franczek in foul territory. The ball hit Franczek's glove, but he was unable to hold on as the ball fell to the ground and extended Mahoney's at-bat. The official scorer charged him with an error. A few pitches later, Mahoney was retired on a pop out to second baseman Adam Tempesta.

Senior center fielder Bill Rankin had three hits and four RBIs in yesterday's loss. He also finished only a double away from the cycle.

After the third out in the inning, UMass freshman pitcher Joe Bastow came up to the press box – per the request of the UMass coaching staff – and said that the error should be taken down, based on the fact that Mahoney didn't ultimately reach base in his at-bat.

The official scorer told Bastow to thank the coaching staff, but that the error would stand – citing Rule 10, Section 16a in the NCAA Official Baseball Rules Book, which states, "an error is charged against any fielder [pitchers included] for each misplay that prolongs the time at bat of the batter, or the time as a runner of a base runner or permits a runner to advance one or more bases."

Since the dropped ball by Franczek prolonged the at-bat, the official scorer correctly followed the rule book and charged Franczek with the error.

Bastow came back to the press box again an inning later, this time with a handwritten note. The note read, "The foul ball is only an error if he reaches base or extends an inning. We do know the rules. That is coming from [UMass] coach [Mike] Stone." The letter is signed by UMass pitching coach Mike Sweeney.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu.

Minutemen lose high-scoring game

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Two non-conference rematches in consecutive days did not bode well for the Massachusetts baseball team, as it dropped both games that served as a tune-up for its final seven games of the season – six of which are crucial Atlantic 10 games that will decide the team's postseason plans.

UMass (18-22, 10-11 A-10) scored six runs in the top of the eighth to cut Northeastern's lead to 16-11, but that was as close as it would get. The Minutemen dropped their third straight game Wednesday, (17-12). It marks the second time the Minutemen have lost to the Huskies this season.

NU	17
UMass	12

The Huskies bats got to Mike Dicato early, scoring nine runs off the sophomore in the first four innings. On the other side, Northeastern's Aaron Greenblatt pitched a solid game in his first-career start.

Greenblatt (1-0) allowed five runs (four earned) on four hits and two walks in seven innings of work. Meanwhile, Dicato (0-7) was pulled after allowing nine runs on nine hits and two walks in only 3 2/3 innings for UMass.

Northeastern snapped a season-high five-game losing streak in the process, and its early run support for Greenblatt was a clear-cut sign that the team was tired of losing. The Huskies took a 6-1 lead after the third inning, thanks to a pair of home runs from Mike Lyon and Frank Pesanello. Lyon hit a three-run shot to right-center field in the second inning, putting his team up 5-0. It marked his 10th home run of the season.

Pesanello added to the power hitting in the third, hitting his eighth home run of the year with a solo shot that gave the Huskies a 6-1 lead after three innings. Northeastern hit its third of four home runs when Dan Milano hit his team-high 12th homer of the season driving in two of the Huskies' three runs in the fourth inning, and making it a 9-3 game.

After a scoreless fifth inning, the teams combined for 17 runs in the final four innings. UMass outscored Northeastern 9-8 in those final innings, including six in the eighth, but it wasn't enough to get back in the game.

UMass scored six runs on six hits in the eighth, but the rally fell short. David Gustafson hit his fourth home run of the season in the bottom half of the inning to give the Huskies a 17-11 lead.

Mike Donato led off the top of the ninth with his first home run of the season, but Northeastern closer Bobby Carrington retired the next three batters to record his second save of the season.

Bill Rankin and Mike Donato gave UMass its best production at the plate yesterday, each hitting a home run. Both outfielders went 3-for-4, with Rankin driving in four runs and scoring three, and Donato driving in three and scoring two.

The Minutemen head back to Amherst for their last four home games of the season, starting Friday against Saint Louis, and concluding with a non-conference game against Quinnipiac. They finish the regular season the following weekend at Xavier.

Danny Picard can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu.

They practically wrote the book on Couple & Family Therapy.

Who better to learn from?

The Master's Degree in Family Therapy (MFT)

Choose to learn from one of the best and most experienced family therapy faculties in our new two-year Master's in Family Therapy program. Council for Relationships – for 25 years a leader in the field – has joined with Thomas Jefferson University – one of Philadelphia's most respected healthcare institutions – to provide students with a diverse and stimulating learning environment. You'll learn from, and work closely with, experts in the field of couple, family and sex therapy. Be part of the excitement – and together, let's write the next chapter!

Thomas Jefferson University | Jefferson College of Health Professions

COUNCIL for Relationships

For more information, Call 1-215-503-1044 or visit www.jefferson.edu/mft

Where are YOU living next semester?

CHECK OUT PUFFTON VILLAGE!

Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1,2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis courts.

PUFFTON VILLAGE

1040 N. Pleasant St. #410
Amherst, MA 01002
413-549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Seven O's

EVERY WEDNESDAY:
♦ KARAOKE ♦
♦ LIVE BANDS ♦
FRIDAY, MAY 11TH, 2007:
RED GRENADE
SATURDAY, MAY 12TH, 2007:
TOTAL RECALL
♦ STUDENT BAND WANTED ♦
NEED A PLACE TO PLAY? COME TO SEVEN O'S!

ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-6788
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
NEXT TO CLIFFSIDE APTS.

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

2		3	8	7	9
				5			9
1			4	2				7
		1				6	8
				1
	2	4				1
4				9	2			6
	9			8
			6	3	1	5		9

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Movers and shakers
6 Press down
10 Knocks lightly
14 White heron
15 Spicy stew
16 French she
17 Secret
18 Leibman and Howard
19 Anthracite, e.g.
20 Kind of code
21 Track gathering
22 Old instrument
23 Silent actor
25 Determines
27 Some relatives by marriage
31 Ho or Pardo
32 Have a bite
33 Clan symbol
35 Lahr and Lance
39 Tiny particle
41 Pyle of Mayberry
43 Not common
44 Choir member
46 Gets out of bed
48 Mobster's rod
49 Diner's bill
51 Holy places
53 Harsh critics
57 Aloe
58 Feed the kitty
59 Lamenter's words
61 Accumulate
65 Composer Stravinsky
66 Put on
67 MacDill AFB site
68 Dismal
69 The Swedish Nightingale
70 Loose robe
71 Kernel
72 Ionic Leitch
73 German state

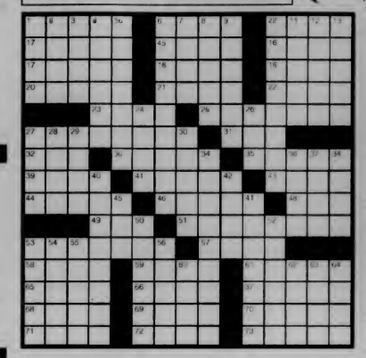
DOWN
1 Star of "Sleepy Hollow"
2 Shrek for one
3 ___ go brag!
4 Overhaul
5 Salon artist
6 Harasser
7 Soothing balm
8 Exploded a vein
9 Displayed a public notice
10 Lounge chair
11 Spoken
12 Serving dish
13 Monica of the courts
24 Synthesizer inventor
26 Corn holder
27 Usher's destination
28 London gallery
29 Harrow's rival
30 Penultimate tennis round
34 National park in Colorado
36 Prego rival
37 Disney World transportation
38 Collectors groups
40 Acted maternally
42 Aubergnioes of "Boston Legal"
45 "Norma ___"
47 Tend to an itch
50 Donnybrooks
52 Hacienda hot meal
53 Pre trial secunters
54 Rolling Stones hit
55 Rock
56 Title role for Valentino
60 Myriad
62 Book after Joel
63 Health resorts
64 Rice wine

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

the Moan and Dove

before you leave for the summer please come see us we miss you

themoananddove.com
460 West St. • Rte.116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1 am every day



I KNOW I GOT SKILLS, I KNOW I GOT SKILLS, AND I KNOW YOU GOT COMICS

SO WHY HAVEN'T YOU SUBMITTED THEM YET?

COLLEGIANCOMICS @YAHOO.COM

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Beauty of whatever kind, in its supreme development, invariably excites the sensitive soul to tears."

-Edgar Allen Poe

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK BY JOSH SHALEK

Do you ever wish you could have tentacles
Nope
Think for a minute
I don't need to! Tentacles are obsolete
What about dental floss? Like a shark or Spinosaurus?
I don't want floss, either
And You sure? You could look like this
OH

YOUR OCMP PART 1 BY BORIS CRAGMESITER

THE QUIGMANS BY BUDDY HICKERSON

"Tell me you didn't feed little Scruffy this tainted dog food."

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Enter a beauty pageant using Skip-it as your talent.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Attain stardom by starting a kazoo band that only plays Maroon 5 covers.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Break it down with an old school hand stand contest in the middle of campus.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
If you were a plant you would be an eggplant or possibly a radish.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Find a formal function on campus and fill your pockets with all their food.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Impress your professor by making your next big paper a palindrome.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Fill up 450 whoopie cushions and drag them to Mahar. Let the fun begin.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Share kind words with a new found pen-pal incarcerated in a nearby penitentiary.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
One of life's tragedies: Avril Lavigne was born in Canada and cannot be president.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You're gonna have to try harder then that if you want to beat the champ.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Do not be distracted by the flesh parade on campus, focus on academics.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
All you need is a soft pillow and a big bowl of white rice smothered in maple syrup.

Chicago Pizzaria

Free Delivery!

PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!

NOW OPEN FOR LUNCH!
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 11am-2am
Thurs-Sat: 11am-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

PRESERVE UMASS HISTORIC BUILDINGS
The campus administration plans to demolish a number of historic buildings on the Amherst campus. Some of these buildings are of local, state, or national significance. There has been no independent, professional historic or architectural assessment of the Amherst campus buildings. About 60 UMass alumni, retired and active faculty and staff members, and friends of the campus have asked Chancellor Lombardi to put a hold on demolition and to approve a proposal that has been drafted to secure private funding for a professional assessment. Members of the campus community who wish to be recorded as supporting this effort should send an e-mail to the Corresponding Secretary of Preserve UMass, larson@tei.umass.edu.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC Minor in Leadership and get paid for it! Graduate as an Army Officer full time/ part time after college www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Top of the Campus, Incorporated (TOC, Inc) will hold its Annual Meeting in Campus Center 903, Wednesday, May 23, 2007 at 12:00 p.m.

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,900/Mo www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Jobs for the Environment Campaigne Offices in 60 cities! Work with Sierra Club and State Environmental Groups on a nation wide effort to Fight Global Warming this summer. Work with college students from across the country! Make $4000-$6000/ Summer. Career oppurtunites and benefits also available. Amherst office call: 413-256-6434. Boston Office call: 617-292-4810 or Call 1-800-75-Earth for opportunities in other cities. Visit our website at www.jobsthatmatter.org

Summer Job on Martha's Vineyard! Asst. Manager, retail clothing store in Edgartown. Richard 413-575-1579 or email rdwhite27@charter.net

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext 162

EMPLOYMENT

Moving. Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must call 413-584-4746

WORK OUTDOORS THIS SUMMER Full time positions available in your hometown. Earn $8-12/hour Painting houses with a fun crew. Call 888-277-9787 or www.collegepro.com

Summer Jobs for the Environment Work with Environment Massachusetts on a campaign to Fight Global Warming and work with great people! Make $400-$600/week. Career opportunities and benefits available. Call Mel at 413-256-6434. Visit our website @ www.jobsthatmatter.org

EMPLOYMENT

Brandywine Apts. Needs a certified lifeguard. Full time hours flexible. Must work some weekends. $9.00/ hr Call 549-0600 or stop by office.

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

SERVICES

BUY ONE, GET ONE FREE Emergency Contraception (EC), prevents pregnancy up to 5 days after unprotected sex. Affordable and Confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992, wwwtapestryhealth.org

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

SUMMER SUBLETS

Room for rent to sublet over summer Townhouse #32 $400 a month Gas heat, Close to bus stop large room with A/C contact Dan at dexter@student.umass.edu will respond ASAP!

Alpine Commons apartment June-August 15th $2050/month includes utilities 413-204-9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

Submit Your classified online! It's easy, just visit www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, MAY 10, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen take aim at Owls

UM carries undefeated A-10 record, win streak into playoffs

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When the Massachusetts softball team traveled to Philadelphia, Penn., on April 20 and 21, junior Stacy Cullington safely reached base in all eight of her at-bats. The Owls walked her four times in the first game, but decided to go after her in Game 2. She responded by hitting two home runs and walking twice.

The Minutewomen hope Cullington produces like she did in April right now, when UMass takes on Temple in the quarterfinals of the Atlantic 10 Tournament at the UMass Softball Complex – the game begins at noon.

The No. 4 seed Owls rolled over No. 5 Charlotte yesterday, 8-0, in five innings. Seldom used freshman Shannon James hit a grand slam in the bottom of the fifth inning to clinch the victory by run rule for Temple.

UMass coach Elaine Sortino knows about the potent Temple bats, the Owls led the A-10 in hitting with a .306 team batting average. Sortino, however, has a pretty good option to combat the Temple offensive attack.

Sophomore ace Brandice Balschmiter is likely to start the game for the Minutewomen. She was 24-8 overall during the regular season, recording a perfect 13-0 mark against A-10 opponents.

Against the now-two-time defending A-10 Pitcher of the Year this season (Balschmiter won the 2007 award on Tuesday), she was 1-0 with a save. She allowed three hits in 8 2/3 innings pitched, with one earned run and six strikeouts. Her win came in the first contest of the weekend, a 5-1 win for the Minutewomen.

She matched up with Temple pitcher Ashley Smuda. Smuda held the Minutewomen to three runs through seven innings before the Minutewomen pulled away late in the game.

A-10 Player of the Year, Adrienne Repscher, provided the lone run for the Owls. Her seventh inning homer was one of the 11 she hit on the season.

Against Charlotte yesterday, she reached base three times with two hits and a walk.

Tomorrow's game will feature a matchup of A-10 Player of the Year and A-10 Pitcher of the Year. She was 1-for-3 against Balschmiter with the home run earlier in the season.

The top-seeded Minutewomen enter the tournament on a 23-game winning streak. Their last loss came on March 19 to Florida Atlantic in the back-end of a doubleheader.

The streak is basically irrelevant in the postseason, however. But the high level of play and confidence achieved and sustained by the Minutewomen in the 50 days since their last loss must carry over if UMass hopes to repeat as champions.

Prior to, and in the early stages of the run, freshman pitcher Bailey Sanders wasn't the same pitcher she currently is. While Balschmiter has good career numbers against Temple, it isn't out of the realm of possibility that she'd struggle against a formidable offense like that of the Owls.

Offensively, the Minutewomen appear as strong as ever. From one to nine, the UMass hitters look strong and approaching, if not at, their peak. The top and

See SOFTBALL on page 9

CRISTIAN C. MEZA/COLLEGIAN

Steadying their focus for today's A-10 Tournament game, sophomore pitcher Brandice Balschmiter and the Minutewomen face the Temple Owls at the UMass Softball Complex. UMass won the only two meetings this season, winning 5-1 and 7-4 back in April.

Temple rolls over Charlotte

James delivers big blow in one-sided affair to advance

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

There was certainly no shortage of dramatics in Game 1 of the 2007 Atlantic 10 Championship.

Fourth seed Temple knocked off fifth-seeded Charlotte, 8-0, to advance to the winner's bracket in the second round of the double-elimination tournament.

Temple will face top overall seed Massachusetts today at noon. The Minutewomen swept the Owls earlier this season, 5-1 and 7-4 on April 20 and 21 in Philadelphia, Penn.

Charlotte moved to the loser's bracket, playing the loser of Game 2 between Saint Louis and George Washington, in Game 3 yesterday.

"All the pieces are coming together," Temple coach Casey Dickson said after the game. "Everything that we've talked about. We've had a lot of challenges this year."

Three different Temple players went 2-for-2 with a walk, including 2007 A-10 Player of the Year Adrienne Repsher, Anna Rico and Brittany Burks.

"I told [the players] we've faced all the toughest things and not to change anything," Dickson said. "Just warm up the same, talk the same, and we're really trying to keep it that way."

Temple	8
Charlotte	0

The Owls broke a scoreless game in the bottom of the second inning. Rico bunted onto first and then stole second. After a Shannon James walk, Burks smacked a 1-2 pitch into left field, driving in Rico from second. Left fielder Emily Forbes made it a close play at the plate, but catcher Becky Matthews couldn't handle the throw, and Rico slid past her safely.

Temple scored again in the third on a strange play that appeared to shake the 49ers out in the field. After Repsher doubled to left field, she advanced to third on a Katie Burdeaux ground out.

Courtney Norene then struck out swinging on what should have been the third out, but a passed ball kept her a live on the basepaths. Then, an error on first baseman Kaycie Jones, kept the inning alive. Repsher scored on the play, making the score 2-0.

The Owls continued to chip away in the fourth, scoring another run to pull away, 3-0. Burks doubled to left with James on first, putting two runners in scoring position. Natalie Wagner then grounded out to third, scoring James on the play.

In the fifth, Temple pulled away and effectively closed out the game. Repsher opened the inning with a double off the center field wall. Burdeaux followed suit, doubling down the left field line, scoring Repsher from second. With Lauren Coutu pinch running for Burdeaux, Norene reached on a fielder's choice.

Rico then reached base again, this time after getting hit by a pitch. What seemed like a foul ball off the handle of the bat was ruled a dead ball, and Rico was given first. The umpire inspected one of Rico's fingers, and saw sufficient evidence to send her to first base.

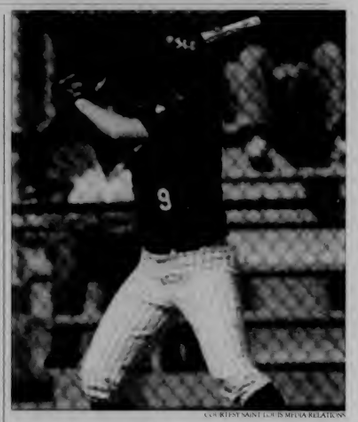
Charlotte coach Aimee DeVos protested the call adamantly demanding, "What is this, show-and-tell?" DeVos kept mum on several other questionable calls, but did not hesitate to question the umpire in this situation.

James – making just her seventh start of the season – wasted little time taking advantage of the bases-loaded situation. She blast-

See TEMPLE on page 9

COURTESY OF TEMPLE MEDIA RELATIONS

Temple junior left fielder Brittany Burks had two hits in the Owls' 8-0 win over Charlotte in the first round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament yesterday. The Owls take on top-seeded UMass today at the UMass Softball Complex, game set for noon start.



COURTESY OF SAINT LOUIS MEDIA RELATIONS

Saint Louis senior Jenna Renner hit a pinch-hit home run to send the Billikens to a 5-4 win over George Washington yesterday.

Renner's heroics in sixth propel SLU

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

There was no shocker in store for the second game of the Atlantic 10 Tournament yesterday as No. 3 seed Saint Louis pulled off a 5-4 win against No. 6 George Washington.

The Billikens are now scheduled to play Fordham (38-18, 16-4 A-10) tomorrow at 2 p.m.

"It was a nail-biter up and down. But, that's kind of been our season," Saint Louis coach John Conway said about the win. "I wouldn't think we were out of the game. When they went up I didn't think we were out of the game because that's the way we've been playing all year."

SLU	5
GW	4

The Billikens drew first blood in the top of the second when, with one out, sophomore Annie Dillinger hit a solo home run to dead center field.

Senior Allison Appenfeller then earned a walk from GW pitcher Lisa Cohen.

After freshman Rachel O'Connell struck out looking, things got a little sloppy at the UMass Softball Complex.

Infielder Brittney Schmidt laid down a bunt back to Cohen, who misfired to first base. Appenfeller reached third base on the errant throw and scored on another error, this one by second baseman Christy Ernst. As a result of the two errors, Schmidt made it all the way to third. Senior Jill Pursell then struck out looking to end the inning.

In the bottom of the third, Rachel Heet led things off with a double to right field. After getting two consecutive flyouts, Cohen surrendered a single up the middle to freshman Shana Richard, bringing

See SAINT LOUIS on page 9

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

T-STORMS : HI: 81 LO: 49 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, MAY 11, 2007

Opinions clash on merit of former athlete's allegations

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Jordan Veney, a former thrower for the University of Massachusetts track and field team, announced Wednesday that she plans on filing a lawsuit against the University on the grounds of discrimination if it does not reinstate her partial scholarship that she agreed to when she came to UMass in 2005.

Veney claims that UMass women's track and field coach Julie LaFreniere discriminated against her through a series of actions that barred her from attaining the extra $5,000 for a full scholarship.

Deborah Hawkins-Mattar, the mother of African-American freshman sprinter Stephanie Mattar, and former sprinter Marissa Kay Callahan have come forward backing Veney's claims about LaFreniere's unfair treatment of minorities on the women's team.

And two athletes from the women's track team – long distance runners Erin O'Donnell and Eilis Kierans – are supporting LaFreniere and believe the allegations to be false.

"[The allegations] are completely the opposite of reality," Kierans said. "[LaFreniere] is not a racist. She acknowledges people of all talents no matter what race or color you are."

Repeated efforts to get in touch with LaFreniere and Mattar were unsuccessful.

Mattar has been receiving discriminatory treatment from LaFreniere, according to Hawkins-Mattar.

Hawkins-Mattar went on to discuss her daughter's relationship with LaFreniere, which she described as rocky since Mattar came to UMass in late August.

"Stephanie is African-American, and Julie [LaFreniere] has this perception of us," Hawkins-Mattar said. "When we speak what we feel, we intimidate. So now, Stephanie is a problem."

O'Donnell, when asked about Mattar's relationship with LaFreniere, replied, "Julie [LaFreniere] would not tolerate laziness or people not showing up to practice. That would be the only thing she ever got mad about."

"I'm really angered and shocked that this is happening," O'Donnell added. "[LaFreniere] has helped me in so many ways and went out of her way to help me when I transferred here as a sophomore. She goes out of her way to

See ALLEGATIONS on page 3

UMass speaks out

Students protest University's decision to give Card degree

BY MICHELLE OSORIO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Students and staff at the University of Massachusetts made their stance clear yesterday afternoon, as dozens of people gathered on the ramp outside of the Whitmore administration building to protest the administration's decision to present Andrew Card with an honorary degree at this May's commencement.

Graduate students led the march into the administration building and into Chancellor John V. Lombardi's office, blocking the hallways with bodies and chants.

Graduate student Justin Jackson, who will be receiving his Master's degree in history this month, helped to organize the demonstration. He also attended the Faculty Senate meeting last week, where Chairman Stephen Tocco spoke in favor of Card saying the claims by the students of his so-called war criminal status, were untrue and unfair as an opposition to Card's speech last month.

Students from the Graduate Student Senate were joined by faculty members and large undergraduate support. Protestors held signs and loudspeakers from which several professors and graduate students spoke from their perch on a bench.

Jackson said there won't be any physical violence at the graduate commencement, but that they will work to disrupt the ceremony if Card is given his degree.

"We are not going to lie down while they impose this on us," Jackson said.

Former Student Government Association president Elvis Mendez also spoke about the administration's "disregard for the people" and failure to follow its own logic and the requirements for an individual to receive an honorary degree from the University.

"We are not in the business of giving degrees to war criminals," Mendez said.

Counter protestors were also present, holding Bush Cheney signs, though they did not go inside the building. Graduate student Ed Cutting believes the protest would better serve the removal of Robert Mugabe's honorary degree instead of placing the blame of the war on the shoulders of a former Chief of

See PROTEST on page 3

Students and faculty rallied outside the Whitmore administration building in protest of Andrew Card's honorary degree yesterday.

UM Republicans support Card

BY HANIF MATIN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The range of interest about the pending honorary degree that the University of Massachusetts is awarding former White House Chief of Staff Andrew Card is broadening, as more students in favor of awarding Card the degree are being heard.

Dozens of UMass students and faculty angrily protested the decision to award the honorary degree to Card yesterday afternoon, but there was a minority of Card supporters who made their voices heard.

Students supportive of Card who attended the rally included Edward Cutting, a 41-year-old graduate student, who held up a large neon sign that read, "Pro Card." Cutting said that Card deserves an honorary degree for his work as a Massachusetts legislator.

"This degree is being given for his public service achievements, and he deserves it. There seems to be no tolerance for conservatives on this campus," Cutting declared.

"There is a lack of political diversity here," he added. "Republicans are people, too, and people on this campus just want to protest us for any reason."

EVAN TRINLEY/COLLEGIAN

Supporters of the University's decision to award former Chief of Staff Andrew Card with an honorary degree led a counter-protest yesterday.

In contrast, graduate student Kyle Brady said he did not want the attention of Card, the media or protestors at his graduation.

"I have family flying in all the way from Arizona for my graduation, and I don't want it to be ruined by having a controversial figure like Card, all these protesters and media people there. I just want to have a peaceful graduation like everyone else. I didn't ask for all this," Brady said.

While UMass President Jack Wilson vigorously defended the nomination of Card for an honorary degree, the ques-

See RALLY on page 2

Campus offers free mental health resources before finals

BY EMILY E. NICHOLS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Students, faculty and staff facing end-of-semester anxiety or depression have the opportunity to benefit from free screening sessions being conducted today by the University of Massachusetts' Psychological Services Center (PSC).

"Anxiety symptoms come in many forms, including intense fears about specific situations or items [phobias]; unexplained panic attacks, and compulsive behavior related to obsessive thoughts," according to Christopher Overtree, the director of PSC.

"Common symptoms of depression include extreme sadness, decrease in pleasure and agitation," he added.

According to Overtree, "Anxiety and depressive disorders are among the most common of all mental illnesses, afflicting more than 19 million Americans each year."

Anxiety and depression can be particularly prominent during finals week, and at other times of increased stress. Sophomore nursing major Amy Jagelski said, "Anxiety and depression [are] a significant problem during finals, because it's a student's last chance to raise his or her grade for the semester. It's very hard to manage stress."

"Students get stressed, and begin to have symptoms similar to the symptoms of anxiety and depression," Overtree said. "At that point, resources such as the PSC are beneficial in seeking out help, the treatments of stress are closely related to the treatments of anxiety and depression," he added.

"Medication is not the only option," Overtree said. "Psychotherapy, exercise, changes in dietary habits, and other forms of counseling can help in the reduction of stress."

The PSC, the teaching clinic for the University's clinical psychology program, offers low fee psychotherapy and psychological assessment services to members of the campus and local communities. The free screenings are scheduled as part of National Anxiety and Depression Awareness Week, which ends today.

The Freedom from Fear Foundation, a national organization that hosts National Depression and Anxiety Week sponsors the free screenings. The PSC is contributing personnel time and resources to participate.

National Anxiety and Depression Screening Day, Overtree said, is "An opportunity to raise awareness about these serious psychological conditions, and hopefully, to reduce the stigma that is often associated with mental health treatment."

The PSC started a new pro-

See DEPRESSION on page 3

Students share experiences with war

Woman describes life after brother's death in Iraq

BY JAMIE MASON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts sophomore, Rebecca Hart, was asleep when a priest, a police officer and a service member from the Army arrived at her house at 6 a.m. to give her family the news of her brother's death.

John Hart, an Army Private First Class, was killed in Iraq on Oct. 18, 2003 during a guerilla attack at the age of 20.

"My parents came into my room and woke me up. They threw a box of tissues on my bed and said, 'John died,'" Rebecca said.

John usually called home and told his family what he wanted in his next care package, generally powdered Gatorade, but a week before he died when he called home he had different things on his mind. He asked his father for help, because he was nervous about the lack of armor that he had, and said that his chest plates did not fit. He also was concerned about the lack of protection soldiers had riding around in trucks, his sister said.

After Hart's death, his father become active in trying to get more vehicular protection and body armor for soldiers in Iraq, and still continues his efforts today. Her mother has also begun volunteering her time to work in VA hospitals and with soldiers who have Post Traumatic Stress Disorder, said Hart.

At the age of 19, just after he completed high school in Bedford, Mass., John joined the military, because it was something he had always wanted to do.

Rebecca describes her brother as "everyone's friend." She remembers him as a nice guy, who always listened to other people's problems and helped them. She was a freshman in high school while he was a senior, but they never fought while they were in school together. John still has his Honda Civic in which he decorated the steering wheel in tank stickers that spell out "Hart", even though it is broken down in the driveway and no longer works.

Rebecca has not brought anything of her brother's to school with her because then people ask questions and it's a "conversation killer," she said. At home, she has his stuffed rabbit from his childhood and his bowtie from prom in her room.

See VETERAN on page 2

MICHELLE OSORIO/COLLEGIAN

Navy veteran and University of Massachusetts Republican club president, Brad DeFlumeri, served overseas on active duty for 20 months. He is shown here sitting in front of this week's pro-life display on campus.

Republican club president remembers service overseas

BY KATE OLESIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"I grew up in ... a lower middle class city, pretty drug infested and run down. I didn't go to school at all. I worked and I got into some pretty bad habits when I was about 19 or 20. I didn't see myself going to college anytime soon so I joined the Navy."

This is the story of University of Massachusetts junior Brad DeFlumeri, who was on active duty for 20 months and overseas on the USS Enterprise CVN 65.

"In all honesty I didn't have a good experience in the Navy," said DeFlumeri.

This is not to say that DeFlumeri was never enthusiastic about joining the Navy and serving his country. A political science student passionate about politics and current issues, he entered the Navy primarily because of the events of Sept 11th and the strong feelings that many others in the nation expressed, explaining, "I really wanted to be a part of that."

Before joining the Navy, DeFlumeri had worked since his junior year of high school at Toys "R" Us and eventually became a manager. He was not making nearly as much money in the Navy as at his old job.

"By the time I joined the Navy I was making almost twice as much there [Toys "R" Us] as I was in the Navy so it was an adjustment in the financial sense. On the other hand I was obviously doing something a bit more noble," said DeFlumeri.

DeFlumeri acknowledges some other benefits of enlisting for instance, money to pay for college and the possibility of receiving a decent paying job in the future.

"Generally my thinking was that I'm not going to come out of the Navy any worse than I went in so hopefully I can emerge from

See NAVY on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Issue 136
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Eric Athas
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sheryl Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jameson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Adam Stagnin
Editorial Editor Tucker Merrick
News Editor Matt Belliveau
Sports Editor Danny Picard
Sports Editor Jon Pelland
Features Editor Melissa D'Amico
Circulation Manager Jeff Perri
Asst. Business Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Nicole Paddester
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Sydney Towne
Assistant News Anna Doliamitis
Assistant News Nicole Boonjakuakul
Assistant Editorial Brendan Hall
Assistant Sports Jeremy Rice
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 A.M. and 3:30 P.M.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Rob Greenfield

COPY EDITOR
Courtney Souza

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Woman's outlook on life changes after death of brother

VETERAN from page 1

According to a Boston Globe article, "Iraq death spurs push for Humvee armor," John was in the 173rd Airborne Unit as a trained paratrooper. He was in Iraq for three months before his death.

"He was excited up until he got his shipment date, then he was like, 'wow, this is real,'" said Rebecca, who thought that her brother would be fine in Iraq.

Because there was so many people in Iraq, Rebecca was not expecting her brother to be one of the soldiers to die. "It can happen to anyone," she said.

After her brother's death, Rebecca described her self as angry.

"I was frustrated," she said. "I'm not angry so much anymore. It's been three and a half years."

At UMass, Rebecca does not feel very connected to other students. "Nobody has had that experience. It's hard to connect," she said.

Hart often feels like an outsider on campus, experiencing discomfort and feelings of isolation. "There is definitely a group of people on campus that makes you feel not connected, and anyone who supports the war is in that group as well," she said.

"There are people that I don't want to talk to about it, and that I don't want them to know who I am or what I am about," Rebecca said.

During her freshman year she walked into the Campus Center to find a protester holding an anti-war sign and making anti-war comments.

"I walked out of the Campus Center and wanted to go back inside and break the sign over his head," she said.

Rebecca was concerned that if she had said anything to the protester that nobody would have joined her in agreement and that people who have thought she was crazy.

"I feel like everyone here is very anti-war and anti-Bush, which is fine. People can have their opinions and they can voice them. I just wish people would be a little more respectful in their protests, because you never know who is walking around," she said.

Rebecca believes that protestors like the ones that she encounters on campus should ask more questions and try to know more about the people that they might be offending.

"When I hear about recruitment lists being stolen, stuff being defaced, the protesting of the ROTC, it just makes me think that there is nobody here that I would think is great," she said.

Hart thinks that she might not fit in anywhere, even if she transferred, because not too many other people have experienced what she has in losing her brother.

Coming to UMass has helped Hart move on from the loss of her brother; she said that some people have been supportive, but others have not.

Hart said that she does not have a stance on the war, but she feels that she supported the war even before her brother died. "I think that my opinion would have changed anyway, even if my brother was still alive," she said.

In the politics classes that she takes she does not say much. "I don't want the class to turn into, 'don't say that because she's right there,' because that's uncomfortable. It's hard, but I am used to staying quiet," she said.

Rebecca thinks that her outlook has changed since her brother's death. "You need to do what you want to do. You need to do your service, no matter what it is. With my brother it was serve in the military. I have not found my place yet, but when I do I will know it. I believe that you should put yourself out there and help other people," she said.

Jamie Mason can be reached at jmason@student.umass.edu.

Republican club president remembers service overseas

Michael Phillips/Collegian

Veteran Brad DeFlumeri, who was honorably discharged from the Navy and is now active in the Veterans and Service Members Association (VASMA), is calling upon the administration to better support student veterans.

NAVY from page 1

the situation and have a decent path in front of me for a nice life."

Unlike the Army or the Marines, many naval units, especially DeFlumeri's, did not experience much combat. The only aspect that came close was the general-quarters drills, which ran once or twice a week, where the ship had to simulate preparation for an attack or an invasion.

His ship was an aircraft carrier which participated in fly-over missions to bomb terrorist targets. A rumor on the ship was that one of their pilots had exterminated al-Zakari, a prominent terrorist figure. For DeFlumeri and the rest of the crew, although they were not engaged in combat, they felt as though they had contributed to a piece of the war effort.

"Even though it was on my ship, I mean, the things that the department does support the pilots being able to carry out those missions so in a sense everyone is working for the same goal…and I would like to think I had a little part in the war even though I wasn't on the ground fighting."

There are thousands of jobs that have to be performed on a ship out in the middle of the ocean or even while in port. As for working, there is a required shift that one must work and the rest of the day is free time. DeFlumeri names a few jobs that he was required to perform, including being an inventory specialist for parts on the ship and running a small store called the "C-Mart" where paperwork was processed and parts for the ship were given out to Navy men. Individuals would have to maintain financial accountability for those parts.

This is where he ran into some serious problems. "On my shift during my deployment the people I worked with started getting investigated for basically stealing money from the Navy."

Since the jobs they performed gave them access to many parts and objects that were vital to the ship, several men, including DeFlumeri, were accused of stealing parts and selling them.

While under suspicion, DeFlumeri and the others accused were not permitted to leave the ship under any circumstances, even when in port. The worst part for DeFlumeri was waiting approximately three months to go before his commanding officer to hear whether he was going to receive a dishonorable discharge and be sent to military prison.

"You hear horror stories about the military justice system and how they basically throw their own over the ship, so to speak. You don't know what to expect and at least I had a sense of if this goes as bad as possible what is my recourse? It's not like I can call up the ACLU [American Civil Liberties Union] from my ship and say, 'you know, my civil liberties right have been violated and we're over in the Persian Gulf, can you help?'"

DeFlumeri was acquitted and received an honorable discharge. Though he attests to the fact that he did not have a stellar experience with the Navy, he is currently actively involved in the Veterans and Service Members Association (VASMA) and was elected president of the Republican Club on Tuesday night.

DeFlumeri is passionate about his views but does not seem to force them upon anyone. He recognizes that he is in the political minority, having very conservative views on a campus that is relatively liberal. When asked about some of the groups in his Facebook.com profile, including "I Eat Liberals for Breakfast," he laughs and says, "Yeah, I'm pretty passionate about politics."

While DeFlumeri does not agree with many students' views about certain issues, he takes pride in the fact that he does not protest certain events, as he and others feel as though it is hurtful to veterans on campus.

"For instance the Andy Card event…was more disrespectful to veterans on campus…Making a mockery of veterans who were injured…I think that's disgusting…The other side of the spectrum has things like Queerfest, but we don't make it a point to protest their events even though we don't agree with their types of views." DeFlumeri said.

However, DeFlumeri and many members of the student body have one thing in common: a dislike of some of the policies of the administration, "We collectively don't think that the administration takes the needs of veterans seriously."

In becoming involved with VASMA, an organization which supports the needs of veterans on campus, the members have attempted to institute a number of programs that would benefit veterans. Members wanted to send care packages to UMass students on active duty overseas and, according to DeFlumeri, the administration would not fund the project.

In addition, a proposition by DeFlumeri and members of VASMA to establish a floor somewhere on campus reserved for students of war, those in ROTC programs or those somehow associated with the military was immediately shut down by the administration. Furthermore, he mentions that there have been cases in which money that were supposed to be allotted to students who have the GI bill are processed by UMass and money has been lost and not given to these students.

"It's an unfortunate case that veterans have to be thrown under the rug, because everything is 'protest the war,'" he said.

All these experiences have shaped DeFlumeri in a big way. "It was like a rebirth. It was unbelievably refreshing to be back in the U.S. and to have that experience past me and behind me so to speak and I pretty much emerged unscathed with an honorable discharge … It pretty much didn't kill me so it made me stronger," he said.

No matter what happens in his academics and in the rest of his life, DeFlumeri insists that no experience will ever compare to his experience in the Navy.

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@student.umass.edu.

Dean's memo intends to set record straight on Card issue

RALLY from page 1

tion of who's responsible for the nomination – and who's moved it forward remains murky, and became even more so in a memo from Janet Rifkin, the Dean of the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences.

On Sunday evening, Rifkin wrote to a group of interested faculty and administrators, stating that while she didn't exactly nominate Card for the award, she didn't try to block it either.

In a memo written in the passive voice, which obscures who took the lead in the nomination, Rifkin wrote: "Many of you have asked my role in this process. To set the record straight: 1. Card's nomination for an honorary degree was not initiated by me. 2. Early in the fall semester, I was asked whether an honorary doctorate of public service would appropriately fall within the purview of CSBS. I responded in the affirmative.

"3. When later informed that Card's candidacy was indeed to be put forward, I was asked as Dean of CSBS to sign the letter of support. I agreed to do so. 4. I wanted to let you know that I will neither be hosting nor conferring the honorary degree upon Andrew Card during the Commencement ceremonies."

The Psychological Services Center (PSC) will be offering
FREE ANXIETY AND DEPRESSION SCREENINGS
for members of the campus and local communities on
Friday, May 11th, 2007 from 9AM to 5PM
This event is part of National Anxiety and Depression Awareness Week (May 6 through May 12)
Speak confidentially with a clinician about the symptoms of and treatments for anxiety and depression.
No appointments are necessary. We will be providing free validated parking in the UMass Campus Garage.
Please call 545.0041 or visit www.umass.edu/psc for more information.
For information about traveling to UMass, parking, and bus service, you can visit www.umass.edu/visitorsctr For more information about National Anxiety and Depression Awareness Week, visit www.freedomfromfear.org For more information about the Psychological Services Center, please visit www.umass.edu/psc.

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
Schedule for Fri 5/11/07 - Thurs 5/17/07
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
cinemark.com

Coming Soon!
The UMass Flashback Grad Issue 2007
Get yours the last day of classes!
Including the best of 2007, top 10 lists, flashbacks, and countless memories

Second protest planned if student demands not met

PROTEST from page 1

Staff.

"Everyone knows honorary degrees are given to someone with a fancy name so they will come speak at graduation and the media will cover it. They give them to people that can personally give money to the University or raise it," Cutting said.

Sociology professor Gianpaolo Baiocchi likened the administration's actions to the fast-food chain Wendy's, saying the CEO of UMass was putting a human finger in the chili of this May's commencement.

"We are a public University. We belong to Massachusetts not political agendas," Baiocchi said. "The world community thinks this war is a disaster so why are we honoring it?"

After the speeches that drew attention from several classrooms in Herter, which also held a banner from its second floor balcony testifying to Card's war criminal status, Jackson read the petition that would later be hand delivered by dozens of students to Chancellor Lombardi.

The petition contained over a thousand signatures from students and faculty seeking to appeal to Lombardi's "sensibilities." The paperwork also stated the administration has 96 hours from yesterday to release a public statement to the press and UMass students retracting Card's honorary degree.

Chancellor Lombardi has yet to comment on behalf of the administration on this matter. Chancellor Lombardi did not speak to students yesterday but sent out a representative. Protestors are planning to convene outside Whitmore next Tuesday at 12:30 p.m. once more if the administration does not give in to their demands.

Michelle Osorio can be reached at mosorio@student.umass.edu

Protesters at yesterday's rally against Andrew Card's honorary degree read aloud a petition signed by 1,400 students and faculty members, and threatened to hold future protests.

Man impersonates brother, acquitted of rape charges

By Denise Lavoie
Associated Press

BOSTON — A woman who had sex with her boyfriend's brother in her darkened room late one night claimed she was raped, saying the man tricked her by impersonating her boyfriend.

But the state Supreme Judicial Court disagreed Thursday, citing a half-century-old state law that says it is not rape when consent to sexual intercourse is obtained through fraud or deceit.

The high court said the state's rape law defines rape as sexual intercourse compelled "by force and against [the] will" of the victim. The court cited a 1959 ruling it made in another case in which it found that fraud cannot be allowed to replace the force required under the law.

The SJC noted that the state Legislature has had "ample opportunity" to change the rape statute to include fraud or deceit, but has not done so.

"Fraudulently obtaining consent to sexual intercourse does not constitute rape as defined in our statute," the court said.

Thursday's ruling came in the case against Alvin Suliveres, a man accused of raping his brother's girlfriend in Westfield in January 2005.

The woman told police she was asleep alone in the bedroom she shared with her longtime boyfriend when a man came in, climbed into bed and had sexual intercourse with her, according to the SJC decision.

The woman said that during the intercourse she believed the man was her boyfriend. Had she known it was the defendant, she would never have consented, she said.

Suliveres claimed the sex was consensual, telling police the woman came to him while he was asleep in another room and invited him to her bedroom to have sex, court documents said.

Opinions clash on allegations

ALLEGATIONS from page 1

help people."

The primary conflict between Mattar and LaFreniere, according to Hawkins-Mattar, originated with the reduction of Mattar's $20,000 scholarship after an injury sidelined her in the fall of 2006.

LaFreniere, according to Hawkins-Mattar, cut her daughter's scholarship in half after Mattar's legs began to bother her, and believes LaFreniere was reckless in her handling of Mattar's scholarship money.

According to Hawkins-Mattar, LaFreniere said that the reason that Mattar's scholarship was being reduced to $10,000 was that "Stephanie didn't have the heart and Stephanie didn't do what she should have done."

Hawkins-Mattar wasn't sure if LaFreniere was alluding to on-the-field performance or behavioral issues. According to Hawkins-Mattar, LaFreniere also told Mattar that if she performed well enough during the next semester, she would get the $20,000 scholarship back. Veney claimed that LaFreniere promised to reinstate her scholarship as well, and Hawkins-Mattar believes that her daughter's experience and Veney's experience are very similar, and represent a trend of racial discrimination from LaFreniere.

"At this point with the scholarship, I don't even trust those people because I feel they're racist," Hawkins-Mattar said. "I feel that there is a clique that Julie [LaFreniere] controls."

Kierans and O'Donnell, however, believe that LaFreniere is not a racist and they never seen LaFreniere discriminate against anyone on the team.

"Julie [LaFreniere] is the most non-judgmental person you will ever meet," Kierans said. "Jordan [Veney] used racism as a weapon against her."

Kierans commented further on Veney's situation.

"You come to practice with a good attitude because it's part of being a team," Kierans said. "If you don't, you're going to be dismissed."

Kierans, however, admitted to not seeing or interacting with Veney during Veney's time on the team.

Callahan, an Asian-American UMass graduate who competed for the track team from 2001 to 2005 as a sprinter, claims that she too was mistreated by LaFreniere at the tail end of her career with UMass.

Callahan also believes that minority athletes are treated noticeably worse than non-minority athletes on the women's track team.

"During my four or five years that I was there, I knew a lot of black athletes who walked on and performed really well and they ended up leaving the team because of Julie [LaFreniere]," Callahan said. "I know she tends to give all of the black athletes a harder time."

LaFreniere took away Callahan's $1,000 partial scholarship after her junior year, because, according to Callahan, she felt that Callahan was not in shape and she hadn't competed at all.

However, Callahan claims that LaFreniere told her to take time off after the first semester of her junior year in 2004, then took her scholarship away because she had taken the time off that LaFreniere instructed her to.

"She kept me out of competition and then told me to take time off," Callahan said. "And when I came back she took my scholarship away because I hadn't competed and I took time off.

"When she took the scholarship away, she could have given at least some chance to redeem myself, but there was none," Callahan added.

While Callahan believes that LaFreniere treated the African-American athletes noticeably worse than the other athletes, she also feels that LaFreniere feels a need to control the athletes on her team.

"[LaFreniere] likes to control everyone that she can," Callahan said. "And people she can't control she goes out of her way to find a way to control them. And usually scholarships are the best way to control people."

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenf@student.umass.edu

Clinic offers low-cost services

DEPRESSION from page 1

gram in September of 2006 to provide psychological assessments at a reduced cost, learning disability and psychological evaluations.

Since its inception, the program has provided more than $35,000 of free and reduced-fee care.

"The program is one of several new initiatives intended to increase access to mental health services in the Pioneer Valley," Overtree said, although the PSC has offered low-cost psychotherapy for adults, children, and couples since it first opened in 1963.

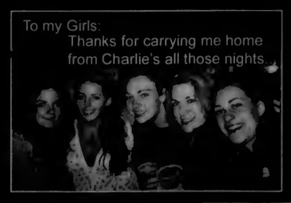
The free screenings will be available from 9 a.m. to 5p.m. in 123 Tobin Hall.

Students and others may make appointments by calling (413) 545-0041.

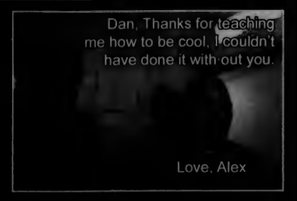
The clinic is also open the rest of the year, to provide mental health services at low rates.

Want to write for News in the fall?
e-mail us at news@daily-collegian.com

Leave your Senior Will
in the Collegian's 2007 UMass Flashback Grad Issue
One last chance for you to leave your mark on UMass.



Just $15 Per message
Surprise your friends, Thank a professor,



Actual size of messages 2"x3"

or tell your graduating class congratulations.
Send your photo and statement to thecollegian@gmail.com or stop by 113 Campus center for payment info

Worcester & Franklin Spring Fling BBQ
Friday, May 11, 2007
Quad north of Worcester
From 4:30 – 8:00 pm
Menu: Grilled Chicken
Pulled Pork Sandwich
Hamburgers
Vegetable Kebobs
Garden Burgers
Cole Slaw
Garden Salad
Red Potato Salad
Bluewall Cookies (assorted)
Fresh Fruit Salad
Ice Cream Novelties
Assorted Beverages
Entertainment:
"Deep Pockets"
(winner of the Battle of the Bands at Taste of UMass)

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Grand Prize Winner '05
umass.edu/diningservices

Photos by Chris Moriarty and Sarah Gagne

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, MAY 11, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

We all have our share of regrets

Brad Leibowitz

As the year comes to an end, it seems only natural to reflect on the past few months. As I sat back thinking about the good times I have had with friends and the numerous amounts of people who will forever be a nameless face or a faceless name, I couldn't help but think of all the things which might cause some feelings of regret.

Luckily enough, there isn't a single event which I regret; except one. Like most juniors in college, I was looking forward to my 21st birthday (it came on April 16th) for obvious reasons. I was supposed to go out to a bar, legally, with friends, and not have to worry about anything for the night. Somehow, as the night went on, this notion did not hold true.

Stupidly, the designated driver decided to skip off to a girl's house, leaving my friends and myself with the keys to his car. At first, I didn't think much of this...again, I was turning 21. I didn't have to drive. Sadly though, my friends were more intoxicated than I. Foolishly, because I didn't feel drunk, I got behind the wheel.

I should have known better. We all have regrets.

As it would go, I got back to campus (a 35-minute drive) without any problems. However, while pulling into a parking space I got pulled over for a broken tail light on my friend's car. I blew a .13 blood alcohol content level. The legal limit is .08.

Like most kids, I grew up believing I was a good kid. Like most kids, until something hits home, you don't think it could or would happen to you. Currently, I can't drive a vehicle for 30 days. Following this, I have a court date to see what other punishment will be handed down.

In life, you have to take responsibility for all your actions.

Again, like most kids who mess up, I am hoping for something light...something to not tarnish my otherwise clean record. Yet, in the face of this issue I find a terrible problem.

Recently, Paris Hilton was sentenced to spend 45 days in jail for driving with a suspended license (due to a DUI charge). To go along with this, people like Lindsay Lohan and Mel Gibson have all gotten in trouble for drunk driving. To fix it, they went to rehab.

For a given amount of time, these folks will go to a clinic to fix their problems. They go to rehab, and society at large simply accepts they have changed and moves on. Instead of frowning upon the original action, we idolize celebrities for committing an illegal action, falling down and then stepping up once more through rehab.

We do this because we are a society that believes the return from the fall creates the greatness in the man. This is a very dangerous lesson.

In the end, kids who look up to celebrities that go through the aforementioned process, might fall into the same pattern. They might grow up thinking the illegal action isn't bad. They are being taught that as long as there is rehab, they can come out stronger and better. They are being taught this instead of being taught to avoid the original action all together.

As someone going through this process, I'll let you in on something. In my life, I don't regret much. However, if I had a time machine, I would take back my 21st birthday. I regret that night and my actions. All of my friends have been telling me my arrest wasn't primarily my fault. All have told me it rests on the friend who didn't fulfill his designated driver responsibilities and who neglected to get his tail light fixed. I have agonized over this.

They are wrong.

In life, you have to take responsibility for all your actions. It doesn't matter what someone else did or didn't do, at the end of the day, it's you in the mirror. Taking responsibility for your actions rather than running from them is a far greater lesson and a far more agonizing process than putting the blame on others. This is the problem with rehab in our culture.

Rehab allows the wrong-doer to alleviate his or her responsibility by placing the blame on others and by being told that it isn't his or her fault. To go along with this, once the law breaker is out of rehab, our culture embraces them as a better person, when in fact the opposite is true. Rehab is a free pass. Not taking claim over your actions is a free pass.

In jest, taking responsibility for your actions and the consequences that follow teach and allow you to grow as a person much more than rehab ever would. Once you accept responsibility, morality takes over, and that in of itself, the pain it will cause, is rehab.

At the end of the day, am I sorry? Yes. I am sorry I have to look my parents in the eyes and have them know I didn't think better. I am sorry I have to rely on others and ask for favors to go places. But most of all, I'm not sorry that I chose not to blame my friend for what happened.

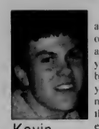
I regret my actions because of the consequences which they have brought. I regret having to look myself in the mirror every day and tell myself, "I let my parents down. I let myself down. I thought I knew better. I was taught better."

Finally, I have to admit to myself, that although I knew better and was taught better, at the end of the day, I chose to disregard my teachings and ended up with these consequences. They're all mine. No one else's. I blame myself. Regrets, we'll have some.

This is mine.

Brad Leibowitz can be reached at bleibowi@student.umass.edu.

Take advantage of what you're offered



Kevin Pascucci

Over my last four years here at UMass, I've learned a number of valuable lessons. You should always show up to take exams, you shouldn't eat DC food that has been out for more than one day and you should take advantage of the many different social opportunities this campus has to offer. From free events to clubs and organizations, UMass gives every one of its students an equal opportunity to get out and experience whatever they choose to. Unfortunately, too many students choose to not take advantage of these opportunities.

Now I understand that it's much easier to spend your days sitting in your room and working on your World of Warcraft character, but just imagine for a second that there's more out there than video games and television. These things might be important to you, but they shouldn't be your entire college experience.

Think about how many people there are to meet that go to this school. Having such a large student body, UMass offers each one of us a chance to meet all different types of people. In addition, we are given access to the five college system, giving us even more options when it comes to events and programs.

For any of us who live in the dorms, we are well aware of the constant socials that are organized by your local housing councils. Now I acknowledge the fact that having RA's knock on your door all the time to make sure you are attending a social can be rather annoying. With that said, I think it's good for everyone to at least go to one of these socials. If nothing else, go so you can potentially get some free wings.

In addition, students are given numerous opportunities to go to a number of events that happen on campus, whether they are anything from a concert to a hypnotist. I know I've had a number of memorable nights going to such events with friends. I know our campus is big, but I'm pretty sure walking to the Fine Arts Center or the Student Union is very do-able.

Had I not taken the initiative, I would have definitely missed out on a lot of good experiences.

Many of the events that are put on here at UMass are usually free to students as well. UMass understands that college students aren't usually rolling in the dough, and the fact that most events are free makes it even easier for students to go out to these events.

During the beginning of my junior year, I saw a poster for a group called University Productions and Concerts. It seemed liked something that I would be interested in, and I decided to go to a meeting and check it out. I've now been helping the group organize and run concerts for the last two years, and have made a number of friends that I probably would not have otherwise. Not only that, but I got to meet Mr. Belding from "Saved by the Bell" during the Spring Concert because of it. Had I not taken the initiative, I would have definitely missed out on a lot of good experiences.

Another perk to getting involved here on campus is gaining something to put on your resume. Whether you help organize an event or simply take part in a group that meets once a week, they are all things that can be shown to potential employers. It's nice to be able to show that you spent your time being active and gaining valuable experience that can potentially be applied to a possible job opportunity.

When you graduate from this school, and look back upon your years here, wouldn't it be nice to be able to feel like you accomplished something here, or at least some good memories? As I said before, there's a time for spending time in your room doing whatever it is that you like to do, but there should also be time to get out and interact with others. If you like playing video games so much, at least go out and join the video game club here on campus. I'm not exaggerating when I say that there is a group for mostly anything you can think of, so it's always worth your time to look into it.

With all the money that you (or your parents) are paying for you to be here, you might as well take advantage of all that this fine university has to offer. After I graduate this month, I'm sure I will look back and miss having so many activities readily available to me. The real world is not so convenient, and this is why it's so important for us to take advantage of all the opportunities we have now.

Kevin Pascucci can be reached at kpascucc@student.umass.edu

Here's a case of selective listening

S.P. Sullivan

There's a reason Al Sharpton should run for president every four years.

It's not because Sharpton would make a good president, though with the current cast of characters, it seems like less of a bad idea every day. Running for president keeps Sharpton busy – he doesn't have time to demand the heads of Duke lacrosse players or crucify Don Imus when he's involved in the debates. I cave him to his own devices and he might even end up practicing a little differently than he preaches.

Should Rev. Al Sharpton have to apologize for his recent remarks about presidential hopeful Mitt Romney?

Sharpton, still wringing his hands from throwing blows at Don Imus over his off-color statements, is in hot water himself these past few days over comments he made about Mitt Romney and Mormonism.

"And as for the one Mormon running for office," said Sharpton of Romney, during a recent debate with writer Christopher Hitchens at the Celeste Baros Forum, "those that really believe in God will defeat him anyway."

I'm not really sure if this comment was meant as a joke; it seemed to have gotten a few laughs, anyway. Perhaps Sharpton was trying to flex his comedic muscle and comment on the Christian nose-thumbing that has been going on with many Christian voters saying they'd be uncomfortable voting for the Mormon Romney.

If that were the case, I wouldn't have an issue with Sharpton's comments. I've made my fair share of off-color jokes. But then again, I'm not Al Sharpton, destroyer of all that is politically un-correct.

If Sharpton were being ironic, the comment would be defendable. But something tells me that that sort of irony escapes people like Sharpton, who are obsessed with semantics and deciding which words are allowed and who's allowed to use them. Sharpton's comment was bigoted through and through.

So should he be slung up to the rafters; forced to beg for forgiveness of half the state of Utah and attend an emergency conference moderated by Jon Corzine? No. I wouldn't put Sharpton through half of the pageantry involved in his media crusades. Sharpton should apologize, realize that he's not perfect after all, and move on. But his bigoted statement serves as just another example of supposed "human rights" advocates who can't see much further than the immediacy of their own cause.

It's mind-boggling that someone as attuned to racial and cultural sensitivity as Sharpton would even think to make such an overtly bigoted statement with a microphone right in front of his face. But all too many of the folks who espouse diversity-without-question are all too often the ones who only see injustice when it happens to folks like them.

All too many of the folks who espouse diversity–without–question are all too often the ones who only see injustice when it happens to folks like them.

A white girl gets hit by a drunk-driving illegal immigrant and Bill O'Reilly's all up in arms, but he doesn't care about the Rutgers basketball players who are so upset about the comments made by some old white guy whose opinion doesn't matter to them anyway. And those basketball players don't care about the plight of the Asian advocacy group taking on two shock-jocks from New York for making a prank phone call to a Chinese restaurant. But that Asian advocacy group wasn't too interested when Al Sharpton made comments about Mormonism, and maybe some of them are Protestant or Baptist so they wouldn't vote for a Mormon, anyways. It's easy to see bigotry when it happens to us, catching ourselves in the act is what usually proves difficult.

These are not bad people, after all. Sharpton especially has proved his worth to society despite his tendency towards overzealousness. Although he tends to cry racism if he has to wait in line at the dry cleaners too long, every now and then he'll strike a chord where there is an actual evil afoot (there is plenty).

Many are familiar with his protest against police brutality and racial profiling of Guinean immigrant, Amadou Diallo, and likewise his advocation of gay rights and actions against animal cruelty. Sharpton, however, has now lumped himself with around half of Evangelical Christian voters, who say they wouldn't feel comfortable voting for the Mormon Romney. (Apparently Sharpton and the like missed the memo that 'Mormon' is another term for a member of the Church of Latter Day Saints, a Christian sect.)

I'm not the most politically correct person on the planet - but I don't claim to be. It's people like Sharpton who should mind their p's and q's if they're going to be watching everyone else like politically-correct hawks.

But maybe if we all stop trying to dig up discrimination where it doesn't really exist - on Comedy Central and rush-hour radio shows - we can ensure that the Amadou Diallos of the world have someone to fight the good fight for them when bigotry does rear its ugly head.

S.P. Sullivan writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at spsullivi@student.umass.edu

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

ON CARD CONTROVERSY: SPEAK FOR YOURSELVES

Once again I am ashamed to be a University of Massachusetts Amherst student. The recent controversy over the honorary degree being awarded to Andrew Card is being blown out of proportion. A select few of the student body which includes the SGA, GEO, Daily Collegian, and other liberal groups on campus, are trying to take away an honor from a man they simply disagree in policy with. These groups claim to promote diversity, but anyone with a different point of view, like Andy Card, they try to belittle and disrupt there speeches.

We cannot let this small fraction of the school's population force their own beliefs on everyone else. Their argument against Card is that he was a Chief of Staff under the Bush Administrative and led the White House Iraq Group. Since Card worked for Bush, the Iraq War, and is a Republican he is considered a criminal and does not deserve an honorary degree from UMass. Because these students do not agree with the Iraq War does not mean that Card should not receive an honorary degree. Believe it or not, there are students at UMass that believe the Card should in fact receive the degree and there are students out there that do not agree with Card politically but have no objection to him receiving an honorary degree.

I hope that the Chairman of the Board of Trustees Stephen P. Tocco, Chancellor Lombardi, and other administration officials do not let a small portion of the campus promote their personal agenda at the expense of the University of Massachusetts Amherst and its students.

Jesse Conklin
UMass Student

WHO IS THE REAL VICTIM?

I am outraged with the hurling racism allegations made by my former teammate Jordan Veney towards our track and field coach.

This is this just another example of pulling the overused "race-card". This particular situation is nothing more than a mindless actor seeking attention to escape the personal responsibilities of an athlete.

What Veney did not consider was the race card is a powerful weapon and it should be used very carefully. Not with haste. Fighting the stigma of being the "racist coach" will forever remain a dark looming shadow for Julie LaFreniere.

For those who don't know coach LaFreniere its easy to take Veney's side of the case. But, I assure you, LaFreniere is one of the least judgmental adults I know. Her career has been built on treating all her athletes with complete respect. Not only has she succeeded in developing us as athletes but she has helped us build confidence to accomplish many things we never imagined we could do.

There is no doubt that Veney's performances were outstanding. But LaFreniere cut Veney from the team because "she had a bad attitude from day one." Like any other coach, LaFreniere does not tolerate athletes who do not represent the team in a professional manner.

Never has there been an incident of racial discrimination on our team that I'm aware of. We do not live in a uniform society. Racial differences exist. But in the past three years I've been here, segregation and discrimination has never been a problem for the Umass track team.

Yet, Veney claims that several other anonymous members of the track and field team can attest to discriminatory treatment of others or have experienced discrimination. Perhaps if these athletes feel they are discriminated, they should come forward with their complaints before creating such incriminating allegations. We all know our coach and teammates would listen.

Veney said she began to feel discriminated against when the coaches began setting different rules for white athletes. It's inevitable that everyone on our team will have a class conflict. None of the distance runners can meet at the same times during the week. LaFreniere runs multiple practices to ensure everyone gets their workout in. She is more than flexible with every athlete.

LaFreniere recognizes each of our individual strengths not just in track but in life. She is available to us everyday and encourages us to come to her with problems. I can talk to her about anything from a roommate conflict to dealing with one of my mother's psychotic episodes. She is more than a coach. She is a mentor. LaFreniere has no kids of her own. In some ways, we are her children. And she instinctively takes on a nurturing motherly role. I've had several coaches in my career as an athlete and never had I been able to make such a deep personal connection.

How do you defend yourself from something so shockingly unexpected? Of course, anyone refusing comment raises suspicion. So, why hasn't LaFreniere commented to the press?

Fear.

In today's society, the mere perception of being a racist is probably one of the worst things anyone could deal with. We need to consider who the real victim is here.

I'm hoping Veney doesn't go through life suing her employers when she fails to meet their standards. That is not a good habit to get into.

Erin O'Donnell
UMass Student, Track and Field Team Member

Poll Result

Should the University of Massachusetts rescind its offer to give Andrew Card an honorary degree?

Conducted online at dailycollegian.com

Yes	No	Who Cares?
47%	37%	16%

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, MAY 11, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Socially-conscious singer plays Noho

Talented Dennen shares not only music, but social issues

By Olga Deshchenko
Collegian Staff

Brett Dennen, foreground, and his drummer Randy Schwartz, background, are coming to Northampton's Pearl Street Ballroom Saturday as a part of Dennen's first headlining tour. He was last seen on John Mayer's summer tour.

John Mayer bragged about him to Rolling Stone magazine. In fact, Mayer was so impressed that he hand-picked him to be the opening act on his summer tour. He is compared to legendary artists such as Bob Dylan, James Taylor and Paul Simon. In his 20s, he seems to be just a red-haired kid with a guitar.

Once Brett Dennen's voice is heard, however, it is easy to see what all of the buzz is about. Dennen is gushing with invigorating musical talent that places him on a higher notch than most other artists in his genre. Dennen's idiosyncratically bohemian voice blended with folk rock and indie sound is what has allowed him to book performances all over the world.

Hailing from Oakdale, Calif., Dennen has released two albums that are full of uplifting and bright guitar riffs and lyrics. His self-titled debut album was released in 2004, followed by "So Much More," which came out in 2006 on Nashville-based Dualtone Records.

His latest album features singles such as "Ain't No Reason" and "The One Who Loves You Most," hits that were well received by his growing ring of fans. The press and mainstream music culture are also beginning to catch on to Dennen's work as he tours England, Canada, and the United States.

"I'm really into this kid, Brett Dennen, who I heard at the Hotel Café in Hollywood," said John Mayer to Rolling Stone. "He may get lumped in with the Jack Johnson feel-good-barefoot thing, but he's so much different than that. He's timeless - he's probably 25, but he seems like he's 25 in 1972. He paints these gorgeous pictures, musically, where you think, 'I want to hear his voice, I want to hear that guitar, and I want to hear those melodies.' I put him on as a head clearer."

Artwork created with the help of a guitar and a voice is not the only kind Dennen specializes in; his artistic expressions can also be seen through his paintings with pastels and water-

See DENNEN on page 7

Dark Star Orchestra delight deadheads

By Morgan-ann Rousseau
Collegian Staff

The Dark Star Orchestra, above, is a Grateful Dead tribute band that takes its shows the extra mile. It not only covers Grateful Dead tunes, but entire set lists selected especially for the venue and length of each concert.

Tomorrow night at 8:30 p.m. a Grateful Dead tribute band, Dark Star Orchestra, will perform at the Pearl Street Ballroom in Northampton, Mass.

One of the more remarkable things that keep fans coming back to Dark Star shows is their recreation of the Grateful Dead's original set list arrangements. In addition to their attention to historic detail, the band has a knack for imitation.

DSO co-founder, lead guitarist and vocalist, John Kadlecik has a voice that bears an uncannily resemblance to that of the late Grateful Dead legend, Jerry Garcia. The other members that make up the group are; harmonic vocalist Lisa Mackey, drummers Dino English and Rob Kortiz, bassist and co-founder Kevin Rosen and guitarist Rob Eaton.

Any Grateful Dead fan lucky enough to be present at their 1960s shows is likely to experience deja vu at tomorrow night's venue. DSO's performance captures, with as much accuracy as any musicians could pull off, the nostalgic spirit of The Dead's musical presence.

Kadlecik first stumbled onto the idea of performing complete Grateful Dead shows in the early 90s, after thumbing through the 1990 edition of "DeadBase," John Scott's compendium of Grateful Dead shows. However, because the idea failed to capture the interest of fellow musicians, Kadlecik's idea wasn't put into motion until 1997. Having shelved the idea, Kadlecki continued to bounce around the music scene.

"I was able to talk the band I was in at the time, Hairball Willie, into playing an entire second set as a contest," said Kadlecik, "... But that was pretty much it for a while." Kadlecik went on to play with Uncle Jon's Band, before forming his own band, Wingnut.

When Kadlecik met keyboardist Scott Larned in 1997 the two realized they shared the mutual ambition of bringing to life actual Dead set recreations. It was then that Kadlecik knew the project was sure to take off. "I had heard great things about Scott back when he was playing with the Junction. So I called him, and when he said 'I've got this idea about covering entire shows out of DeadBase,' I knew something was going to happen," said Kadlecik.

Once the rest of the band members were recruited, the name Dark Star Orchestra emerged after the group held a brainstorming session. Shortly after the band's formation, Larned said the band offered a sort of historical perspective of what it might have been like to attend a Grateful Dead show in their hay day. Sadly, in April of 2005, Larned died of a heart attack in Virginia while touring with DSO.

According to their website, darkstarorchestra.net, picking a Dead show date for any given evening is "a complicated affair," as venue space or curfew restrictions can effect what DSO is able to play, which may be attributed to the "lengthy" Dead songs.

The DSO band members are known for their down-to-earth relationships with fans, and at times mingle with fans after their set. Their Web site welcomes e-mails from fans. Their e-mail inbox is said to overflow with requests for songs, and additional shows, with all messages apparently read and considered.

Tickets for tomorrow night's show are $22.50 in advance and $25 at the door. Call (413) 586-8686 or order tickets online at www.iheg.com.

Morgan-ann Rousseau can be reached at mroussea@student.umass.edu.

UMass Night at the Pops

Philanthropist Jack Blais, Chairman Stephen P. Tocco, President Jack M. Wilson, UMass Medical School Dean Terence R. Flotte and Nobel Prize Winner Dr. Craig C. Mello celebrated the University of Massachusetts Night at the Pops last night, Thursday May 10, at a reception held beforehand. The sold-out concert honored Dr. Mello of the University of Massachusetts Medical School who was given the President's Medal, the University's highest award.

North Gallery displays exhibit 'What is Love' through June

"The Orange Band," above, is a portrait by artist Alex Katz. It is one of a series Katz did that focused on his wife Ada, and it can be seen at the North Gallery on campus.

By Christina Fong
Collegian Staff

Questions of love, loss and everything in between are raised in "What Is Love: Selections from the Permanent Collection." Located in the North Gallery, a small niche in the University Gallery, the student-curated exhibition features predominantly contemporary art, and explores many avenues of love. The assortment of artists highlighted includes Garry Winogrand, Harry Callahan, Nam June Paik and Diane Arbus.

Curator Julie Thomson, a current M.A. candidate of Art History '07, organized the exhibition as a part of a graduate art history seminar, On Love and Loss in Art History, taught by Professor Mario Ontiveros. She showcases a variety of paintings and photographs to compliment the seminar, all of which were selected from the University's permanent collections.

Thomson opens the Gallery Talk session with how she has two playlists on her iPod: Love Songs and Not Love Songs. She references times when all people want to listen to are love songs and times when all people want to listen to are anything but love songs, which garnered a consensus among the group. This introduced a familiar element of the casual and often complex presence of love in people's lives. The title of her exhibition came from the Shangri-La's song "What Is Love."

The exhibition starts off with Elliot Erwitt's "Jackie Kennedy at Funeral," a photograph of loss Thomson purposely chose to begin with. For her the photograph was "the perfect intersection between love and loss." The black and white photograph captured a very poignant moment at the end of a highly publicized relationship.

The photographs, paintings, and drawings that follow explore several forms of relationships with oneself, God, partners, and strangers. "The Orange Band" by Alex Katz is a portrait of his wife Ada. Through this up-close view of her through Katz's eyes, an intimate relationship is depicted in the painting. Katz continually painted his wife over the years with increasing age visibly reflected in her features.

Across from "The Orange Band" is "Changes and Disappearances" by John Cage. The abstract piece contains several randomly placement lines and curves. Thomson intentionally placed it across from Katz's piece to mirror the change each portrait of Ada undergoes.

The tour ended with "Clock, 5e" by Peter Saul. Created with colored inks and crayon, it looked as though it could've been drawn by a child, although content is much more complex than one could fathom. The abstract images and mismatched color choices leave the drawing open to a myriad of interpretations.

The group that attended the Gallery Talk was comprised of several friends, colleagues, Art History students, and art appreciators. A few spoke up to voice interesting comments and raised insightful questions about Thomson's selections. It contributed to small discussions encouraged by Thomson. An observation of how the exhibition consists of only contemporary art had one person wondering whether this reflected Thomson's contemporary views.

Another question raised was whether the lack of a question mark after the title "What Is Love" was intentional. Thomson replied stating the entire exhibition could in essence be considered the question mark, leaving room for many readings and interpretations of the selected works.

Although several pieces might leave people bewildered and confused, most of them are provocative and carry a great deal of meaning on the subject of love and loss. Thomson's successfully curated exhibition opened Thursday, April 19 and will continue to run until Sunday, June 3.

Christina Fong can be reached at cfong@student.umass.edu.

Pearl St. hosts Dennen Saturday

DENNEN from page 6

colors. Dennen's work has been displayed and sold in art galleries in California. His paintings are also featured throughout his album "So Much More."

"Love Speaks," a three-month tour that Dennen has embarked on with his drummer, Randy Schwartz, is currently hitting cities across North America. Dennen hopes to do a little more than simply share the songs from his most recent album with the audience.

"I am very proud of this tour, 'Love Speaks,' and I want to let you know how important it is to me," wrote Dennen on his MySpace.com blog. "Not only is this our first headlining tour, this is a tour to raise consciousness and to connect people with non-profits in their communities. At most of these shows, there will be representatives of one or two non-profits from that local area. They will be there to inform people about some of the local issues, how they are working towards making positive change and how anyone can get involved. On behalf of everyone who buys a ticket, we will be donating a portion of our profits to each organization."

Through being home-schooled for most of his life, Dennen has gained an appreciation for education that nurtures ingenuity. As an artist and an advocate for social welfare improvements, Dennen has helped found the Mosaic Project, a California-based program that brings a diverse group of children from different socio-economic classes together for peace education twice a year. As the Mosaic Project's music program director, Dennen is responsible for creating a curriculum, as well as writing songs that students will learn.

The "Love Speaks" tour will arrive to Pearl Street Ballroom in Northampton this Saturday at 8:30 p.m. The Animal Liberation Orchestra (ALO), a band that recently released their new album "Roses and Clover," will be co-headlining the show with Dennen. Lucas Reynolds of Blue Merle will be the opening act for the show. The tickets are available in advance or at the door for $15.

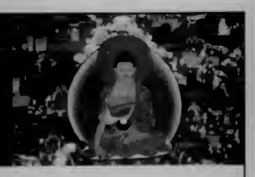
Olga Deshchenko can be reached at odeshche@student.umass.edu.

Brett Dennen is more than just a red-headed guitar player. He draws lofty comparisons to Bob Dylan and James Taylor.

Check out dailycollegian.com for audio and video slideshows

CELEBRATING HIS HOLINESS THE 14TH DALAI LAMA

FEATURED MUSEUM SHOWS
Aesthetics of the Sacred: The Buddhist Art of Tibet
Installation of a Japanese Buddha Sculpture
Fashioning Tradition: Japanese Tea Wares from the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries



second FRIDAYS
a FREE art experience for all ages

May 11, 2007 4–8 pm
FREE ADMISSION !
ALL GALLERIES OPEN
MUSEUM SHOP OPEN

4–6 pm 2nd Fridays Fun
An art project inspired by a special exhibition about the Japanese tea ceremony will be offered for visitors with children (ages 4+)

6–6:30 pm Scholar on Art
Marylin Rhie, Professor of East Asian Studies at Smith College will offer a gallery talk on selections from the special exhibition Aesthetics of the Sacred: The Buddhist Art of Tibet

Tues-Sat 10-4, Sun 12-4
Second Fridays 10-8 (4-8 FREE)
Closed Mondays and major holidays

Elm Street at Bedford Terrace
Northampton, MA
413 585 2760

SMITH COLLEGE
MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP

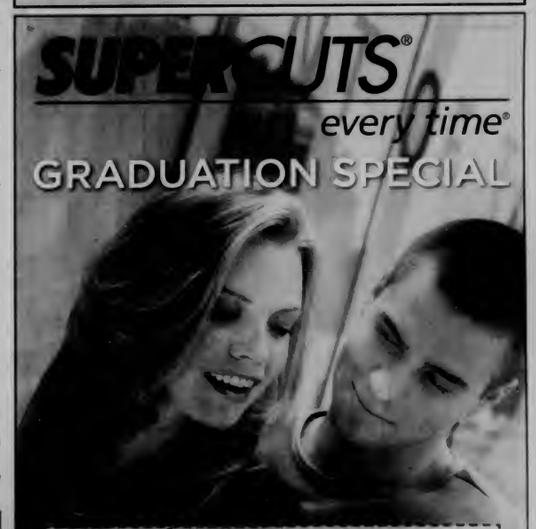
www.smith.edu/artmuseum

Advocate

SUPERCUTS®
every time®
GRADUATION SPECIAL



$2 off
ADULT HAIRCUT
(reg. $13.95 or more)
SUPERCUTS®
Coupon valid only at participating locations. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. One coupon per customer. Present coupon prior to payment of services. ©2007 Supercuts, Inc. Printed U.S.A.
Offer expires 07/1...
GSHC

Amherst Plaza
181 University Drive, Amherst, MA
(413) 259-1135
Come in and receive a free bottle of
Paul Mitchell's Awapuhi shampoo
(while supplies last)

Cullington emerges as star for Minutewomen

CULLINGTON from page 12

that I wouldn't let myself bat."

Both Cullington and Sortino agree that Cullington was physically ready to play collegiate ball when she left California for the East Coast. But mentally, there was plenty of work to be done. Plenty of learning, plenty of preparing, and plenty of time for Cullington to convince herself she really is that good a softball player.

Sortino worked with her put her mental game on-par with her physical game, waiting for the rest of her to catch up. But rather than focus on selecting better pitches to swing at, or knowing where to throw the ball in a given situation, Cullington was caught up in her last strikeout, or the error she made on the last play. And it stifled her development.

As her sophomore season progressed, Cullington began to let the thought of a "Sophomore Slump" creep into her head. Whether she wanted to call it that or not, she was slumping in her second year with the team. But putting those fearsome words together only heightened the problems she faced.

"The more I tried not to have a sophomore slump, the more I did, and I'm going to kill whoever put that thought into my head," she jokes.

Throughout the season, Sortino refused to let Cullington believe that anything remotely close to a sophomore slump was happening to her. The long-time softball coach and NFCA Hall of Famer has coached so many players that she knew it was all in Stacy's head.

Eventually, everything Sortino said began to sink in. Even before the 2006 season came to a close, Cullington climbed her way out of the rut she spent most of that spring digging into.

In the regionals of the NCAA Tournament, held in Amherst last spring, Cullington had a breakthrough.

It first showed up in the second round against Lehigh. Cullington went 0-for-2 in the game, but the pair of walks she drew in extra innings showed just how much patience she gained since the start of the season.

After grounding out in the first inning and striking out swinging in the fifth, Cullington took a team-first approach to her third at-bat.

With two on and one out in the eighth inning of a scoreless game, the Patriots opted to intentionally walk UMass' cleanup hitter, KJ Kelley, loading the bases for Cullington. Instead of dwelling on the pressure of being the batter Lehigh chose to attack, she realized what she could do to get the Minutewomen ahead.

She battled her way into a 3-1 count and watched the fourth ball hit the catcher's glove. The walk forced in the first run of the game.

The two teams battled back and forth, and in the 10th, her number was called again. After Kelley drew a walk of her own, Cullington fought the count full and loaded the bases with her second consecutive walk.

UMass went on to score four runs in the innings and held on for the 6-4 victory.

In the final game of the tournament, the Minutewomen met the Patriots again. This time, it all came together for Cullington.

Cullington has thrived as the Minutewomen's No. 3 hitter, batting .325 this season and hitting a record-tying 14 home runs.

Stacy Cullington's junior season has been her best yet. The second baseman improved her batting average 77 points from 2006, hit nine more home runs and doubled her RBI total from 24 to 48.

After watching a third strike come across the plate in the second, Cullington was determined to make it work for her in the fourth.

With a 1-0 lead and two outs, Sortino pulled Cullington aside before the at-bat.

"I had done nothing [leading up to the at-bat]," Cullington says. "[Sortino] came up to me and said, 'Listen, we need you. You need to wake up and stop getting in your own way. And when she throws an outside pitch, just swing at it.'"

"[Sortino] came up to me and said, 'Listen, we need you. You need to wake up and stop getting in your own way. And when she throws an outside pitch, just swing at it.'"

"I went up in my next at-bat and said to myself, 'Just swing.' I meant don't strike out, but I told myself to 'just swing.'"

Cullington liked the first pitch she saw and drove it right back up the middle, keeping the inning alive. A speedy Michea Holness came out to pinch run for Cullington, and came around to score to extend the UMass lead. It was exactly what Sortino had been looking for.

"It was just a good hitter doing what they do best – being patient, and going with the pitch," Sortino says, recalling the moment immediately.

The Minutewomen held on for the 3-0 win and advanced in the NCAA Tournament.

Instead of looking for the grand slam, or worrying that she would be the third out of the inning in a tight game, "Big Red," as she's known to her teammates, did exactly what the team needed her to do, not what she wanted to do.

When the season was over, the Minutewomen had fallen to Northwestern in a best-of-three series in the NCAA Super Regionals. That was the end of May. By the time the 2007 season had come around, Cullington found her confidence.

Now a junior, she realizes she can no longer worry about what she is doing on the field. She has a large role in the leadership of the team, and helped in the development of players like freshman Whitney Williams, who now occupies the shortstop position Cullington often played the last two years.

Cullington spends less time thinking about her own at-bats, the groundballs that come to her side and the home run record she was inadvertently chasing, and more time thinking about how the team will get past Fordham in today's Atlantic 10 Semifinal.

"It's more about the team and not me struggling with my own stuff," Cullington says. "Freshman year I was come-and-go with my confidence, and then sophomore year it wasn't there.

"But this year, I don't have time to think about my own confidence because I'm worried about the team. I can't focus on myself as much as I have in the past because I have a responsibility to the team. I think I just finally realized that."

The Minutewomen are once again in the NCAA hunt and are currently battling in the A-10 Championship. But this time, Cullington is no longer one of the youngsters worried about the little things. She's focused on the next opponent and making it to the next round.

And along the way, she's become one of the cornerstones of a powerful UMass offense.

But would her breakthrough junior year, which had her in the running for A-10 Player of the Year, have happened if Cullington hadn't experienced her tumultuous sophomore campaign? Probably not.

As one of the team's MVPs of the 2007 season, she says she has no regrets.

"I'd like to say I would go back and change it, but I think if I did, it would make me different than I am today," Cullington says. "I highly doubt that if I was this mature as a freshman, my physical skills would have allowed it. I needed to go through those two years to have my mental breakthrough."

The Minutewomen have returned to the postseason this year, and once again, they need their red-headed slugger out there making plays.

And this time, she knows just what she needs to do.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

Check out dailycollegians-ports.blogspot.com for more of the writer's interview with Stacy Cullington and Elaine Sortino

CASH FOR BOOKS

Additional Buyback Locations

Textbook Annex
May 14-16, 9am-4pm
May 17-18, 9am-5pm
May 19, 11am-4pm
May 21-24, 9am-5pm

Hampden Dining Commons
May 17-18, 10am-5pm
May 19, 11am-4pm
May 21-23, 10am-5pm
May 24, 10am-2pm

Campus Center Concourse
May 14-16, 9am-4pm
May 17-18, 9am-5pm
May 19, 11am-4pm
May 21-23, 9am-5pm
May 24, 10am-2pm

UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619

We'll buy your books back for up to 66% of the purchase price!

efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.

Minutewomen down Owls

SOFTBALL from page 12

ly didn't have the last time we played them. I was able to get ahead with it and throw it on different counts."

A-10 Player of the Year, Adrienne Repsher was held to one hit in the game, a single down the left field line in the fourth. In the first, she struck out swinging. She hit a solo home run off Balschmiter when the two met on April 20th.

She came close to going deep again of the conference's two-time Pitcher of the Year, but the ball curved just foul as it sailed over the left field fence.

"A-10 Player of the Year that was definitely on my mind," Balschmiter said of pitching against Repsher again. "I saw the one long, foul ball I gave up [in the earlier at-bat], but I just didn't want it to go fair."

The Minutewomen struck early, scoring two runs in the first inning, and never let up. After a walk and a hit batter loaded the bases, senior Candice Molinari scored on a groundball to the second baseman, beating the throw to the plate and leaving the bags full.

Amanda Acampora's sacrifice fly to right plated Stacy Cullington, who walked earlier in the inning.

Candice Molinari went 2-for-4 in UMass' 8-0 win over Temple. Her fifth-inning single ended the game by the run rule.

Temple held the Minutewomen scoreless in the second, but aggressive base running brought in three more runs in the third.

Cullington led off the inning with a double to left center, and then Proctor drove in Jackie Teman who pinch ran for Cullington – in with a triple to left center.

Proctor sent a 1-1 pitch just over the reach of center fielder Anna Rico's glove and toward the wall, making the score, 3-0.

The triple knocked Temple pitcher Brianna Dairy out of the game. Temple coach Casey Dickson sent Ashley Smuda to the circle to try to salvage the game, but she faired no better against the Maroon and White bats.

Smuda walked Whitney Mollica, the first batter she faced, leading to the fourth UMass run.

With runners on the corners, Sortino decided to go for the double steal, and UMass executed it perfectly. Catcher Krystle Metzler fired to second as Mollica stole. Proctor then began a delayed steal, stopping halfway down the base path.

That caused second baseman Natalie Wagner to hurry the throw to the plate, and the ball sailed toward the first base side of the plate. Proctor scored easily and Mollica strode to third with a 4-0 score.

After Acampora struck out for the first out of the inning, Samantha Salato blooped a single into left field, bringing Mollica in for the fifth run.

UMass continued to threaten with two runners on, but were held to five runs after three innings. The Minutewomen continued to attack the Owls in the fifth inning, and did enough to call it an early day.

Acampora led off the inning and reached on an error by Wagner, who bobbled the grounder in front of second base. Davina Hernandez then replaced her as a pinch runner.

After Salato moved Hernandez to second on a ground out, catcher Jessica Serio smacked a line drive single up the middle that landed in front of the center fielder. Hernandez headed for home and easily beat the throw from Rico in center.

Sortino clearly saw something in Smuda's pitch arsenal that she liked and exploited it. Whitney Williams hit and 0-1 pitch to the same spot Serio hit hers. Carly Morin – running for Serio – scored easily on the play.

"We just bought into the plan – that's what we try to do everyday," Sortino said. "I thought [our] pitch selection was excellent."

Amanda Morin then loaded the bases with a single to left center, bringing Molinari to the plate for her fourth at-bat. The senior did not disappoint, slapping a 1-0 pitch down the left field line, just past the third baseman to put UMass up, 8-0, and ending the game by run rule.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

Fordham advances, meets UM today

FORDHAM from page 12

quiet in the second, as neither squad scored a run.

The Rams opened the floodgates in the third when they pushed five players across the plate.

Henry started things off with her second hit of the day on a single to shortstop. A triple to dead center field by Andrews scored Henry and tied the game at 2. Andrews scored when Twarowski reached on a fielding error by Saint Louis second baseman Brittney Schmidt.

After catcher Allison Store struck out swinging, the Rams again benefited from sloppy infield play as a poor throw by shortstop Brittney Schmidt allowed sophomore right fielder Megan Waldron to reach.

A conference at the mound with SLU coach John Conway did not help pitcher Ashley Levan. She gave up a three-run home run to freshman Erin Fisher, making the score 6-2.

After the home run to left, Conway substituted Lorena Floccari for Levan.

Levan (12-10) finished the day with 2 1/3 innings pitched, six hits and four earned runs.

Conway's plan got the Billikens out of the jam, as Floccari (10-14) retired two of the next three hitters to end the inning.

She went 2 1/3 innings, allowing five hits, two earned runs and striking out two.

The Rams continued to hack away in the fourth, however. Henry walked to start the inning and was sent to third on a double down the right-field line by Andrews. Henry crossed the plate on a sacrifice fly to center by Twarowski.

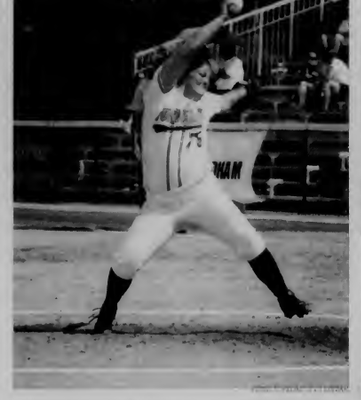
After Store again struck out looking, Waldron reached on an error for the second time in the game, moving Andrews to third. Store scored on the single to the right side by designated player Mary Beth Puccio. The barrage of runs stopped when Puccio was tagged out going from first to second on a ground ball from Hansen.

Fordham wrapped things up the next inning when, with two outs, Andrews slid into second, narrowly beating the throw from left field. A single to left by Twarowski brought Andrews around to score, ending the game.

The Billikens play the Charlotte (34-22) today at noon and the Rams square off against Massachusetts (35-12) at 2 p.m. in a semifinal game.

"We just hope to try to keep [the players] focused. We set our goal at the beginning of the year – to get here and get a chance to go to the NCAAs," Orchard said. "We're trying to get them to take it one game at a time."

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu



Surrendering only two runs, though none were earned, freshman pitcher Nicole Avers led the Rams' 10-2 rout of Saint Louis.

UMass gets creative on basepaths in win

OFFENSE from page 12

It doesn't matter how you get on," Molinari said. "You don't have to get a hit. We had a lot of really good at-bats from some of the girls in the lineup today."

Drawing directly from this formula, Mollica faced a groundball to second base. Owl second baseman Natalie Wagner scampered to her right and gathered the ball. She headed home with her throw to get the force out, but Molinari slid across the plate just before the ball reached the plate.

Without the benefit of a ball hit out of the infield, the Minutewomen took a 1-0 lead. After showing off their team speed with Molinari's bunt and the aggressiveness by beating the throw home on a groundball to second base, senior Amanda Acampora stepped to the plate hoping to show off UMass' penchant for the long ball.

However, after Acampora fell behind 1-2, she displayed another of the team's strengths – coaching. Young hitters often lose themselves in the glory of home runs and RBIs, but Sortino preaches the need for mid-at-bat adjustments. Initially, Acampora looked to drive the ball, but after falling behind, putting the ball in play became her objective.

Dairy tried to get a pitch just off the plate by Acampora in hopes of drawing a called third strike from the umpire. But Acampora shortened her swing and lifted the pitch into right field. Cullington raced home, doubling the UMass lead.

The versatility of the UMass offense provided another rally for the Minutewomen in the third. Cullington sent a liner past Temple shortstop Jessica Rohn bringing junior Lauren Proctor to the plate. Proctor deposited a pitch over the head of center fielder Anna Rico for a triple. On the play, Jackie Teman, who ran for Cullington, scored from second base.

After Mollica walked, she promptly tried to steal second base. Temple catcher Krystle Metzler threw to second, Proctor broke for the plate as soon as Metzler released the ball. Rohn cut the throw off and immediately fired the ball back to Metzler. Proctor stopped and began back to third base. But Rohn's throw got by Metzler. Proctor scored easily on Rohn's throwing error.

"We just try to see what the defense is going to do and get a read," Molinari said. "If they're going to throw down and we have a fast runner on third base, we can get a break. It depends on what the defense does; we just try to take advantage of their mistakes."

Molinari embodies the UMass offense. From the plate, she can hit away, slap or bunt and because of this, the defense never really knows how to play her. With runners on first and second in the bottom of the fifth inning, Molinari came to bat with UMass up 7-0 – one run away from ending the game due to run rule.

Temple's Courtney Norene played Molinari in, looking for a bunt or a slap. Sortino saw this and gave her captain the sign to hit away. Molinari went with the 2-1, outside pitch and lined it down the left-field line, ending the game.

The Minutewomen take on Fordham today, a team they defeated twice last weekend. Since the Rams saw UMass earlier this season, they should fare better than they did the first time they met. But from what we saw yesterday, scouting reports don't mean much when you're facing the Minutewomen.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

Sophomore Samantha Salato went 1-for-1 yesterday with one run batted in. She also walked in a 17-pitch at-bat in the first inning.

To all students of the Stockbridge School of Agriculture

You are invited to an end of the academic year CELEBRATION

Saturday, May 12 from 2 to 4 p.m.
Come to the Amherst PUB
15 East Pleasant Street

Pizza, soft drinks and more are compliments of the alumni of Alpha Tau Gamma fraternity

Bring your Stockbridge student ID

Come Enjoy the Valley's Best Ribs, Chicken, & Pulled Pork

Try the world famous unlimited hot and cold bar which includes:
BBQ Ranch Beans, Spicy Rice, Collard Greens, Steamed Glazed Sweet Potatoes, Honey Mustard Potatoes, Cole Slaw, Tri Potato Salad, Corn and Black-eyed Pea Salad, Homemade Soup, and much more!

All take out dinners included a choice of three items from our hot and cold bar and all sandwiches come with a sample of two sides!

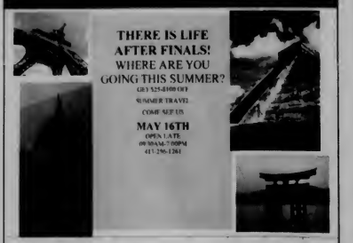
BUB'S BAR-B-Q "Pig Out To Us!"
Children's Menu Available
www.bubsbbq.com
Route 116 • Sunderland, MA
413-548-9630

Got bulky trash?
Dump your apartment cleanout garbage in the right place:
Bring your student ID to get a free bag!
The Amherst Transfer Station
Accepts furniture, mattresses, TVs & computers • Disposal fees apply
740 Belchertown Road (Route 9), 2 miles East of Dunkin Donuts
Open 8am-2pm Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays
For more information, visit www.amherstma.gov/recycling
Or call the Amherst Department of Public Works 413-259-3050

DISCOUNT MATTRESS
LOWEST PRICES IN THE VALLEY!!
FORMERLY SLEEPY HOLLOW
The only thing that has changed is the name
(413) 253-BEDS (2337) RT. 9 Amherst
SUN-MON: 12-4 TUES-SAT: 10:30-6

Remember when you felt like this?
Find it again...
UMASS
Haigis Mall bus stop•10:00 am
Amherst College
Converse Hall bus stop
10:20 am
for the FREE
Sunday shuttle
to Dwight Chapel
Dwight Chapel
885 Federal Street Belchertown, MA 01007 • 413 256 8089
www.dwightchapel.org • Pastor Emmanuel Hoppo
We're praying in Christ - come grow with us!

STUDENT TRAVEL
see the world with STA Travel



Final meet for UM

Godinho and Co. head to New England Championships

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The finish line is in sight for the Massachusetts men's and women's outdoor track teams. The Maroon and White are headed to Dartmouth for the New England Outdoor Track Championship, for their final meet of the season.

Every athlete competing had to meet certain qualifications in his or her event in order to be eligible to appear in the New England Championships. This is where the best athletes from each team will get a chance to compete against athletes from all over New England.

"These will be the best athletes we've got on the team, and we are hoping that they perform at the highest level for their final meet of the year," said UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien.

Athletes from 65 schools will compete this weekend during the two-day meet. Whether a school is Division I, II or III is irrelevant, because the New England Championship is the only meet in the country to allow schools from all three divisions to compete against one another.

Because this is the final meet of the season, the main focus during practices was to insure that the athletes were well-rested and to re-emphasize the fundamentals.

"We had to take a little time to recover from the Atlantic 10 meet, after the high level of effort that the team exerted," O'Brien said. "Now we are just touching up some of the skills we'll need, while focusing on rest and refinement."

Both teams are coming off a disappointing performance at the A-10 Championships with the men's team placing eighth out of 11, and the women's team finishing 10th of 11.

The men's team has a great deal of depth in 5,000-meter race. Five athletes met the qualifications to compete in that event, including Daniel Barry, Andrew Mulvaney, Nils Fischer, Jonathan Pierce and Andrew McCann. The qualifying time for men running the 5-K was 15 minutes, 0.24 seconds.

All three of the men's relay teams are rated in the top five, as they have been a strong point for the Minutemen all year long. The 4x100 consists of Nathan Barksdale, Manny Harris-Lopes, Ian Hackney, Brian Miller and Andrew O'Donnell.

Barksdale, Harris-Lopes, and O'Donnell will also be running in the 4x400, along with James Godinho, Kevin Ianetta, and Gerald Phelan.

The 4x800 team features Kevin Murphy, Ryan Durkin, Peter Fortunato, Benjamin Hunkeler, Mark Mariano, Chris Masse and Ryan DiOrio.

The Minutewomen did not have as many qualifying athletes as the men. The women's team struggled through much of the 2007 season, but the group does have a few bright spots.

Mary Serdakowski will be running both the 100 and 400-meter hurdles. She is ranked sixth in the 100-meter hurdles, and seventh in the 400-meter hurdles. Last week at the A-10 Championships, Serdakowski set personal records in both events, running the 100-meter hurdles in 14.46 seconds and the 400-meter hurdles in 1:04.09. The fastest time in the 100-meter hurdles was 14.20 seconds.

Freshmen Brittany Bakanowski and Alexandra Haller also qualified for the 400-meter hurdles.

Britt Canfield, who also competes for the women's soccer team, is scheduled to run in the 400-meter dash.

Christina DeRosa, the star distance runner for the women's team, will be noticeably absent from the New England Championships. She is traveling to Princeton, N.J., to compete in the Eastern College Athletic Conference Championship.

She is the only UMass athlete competing at the ECACs, which are more exclusive than the NLCs.

The ECACs will be held the same weekend as the New England Championships, but the team is traveling as a group to Dartmouth for the NLCs.

However, DeRosa has been dominant in her events, the 5,000- and 10,000-meters, so women's coach Julie LaFreniere is personally taking her to Princeton for the ECACs.

"I'm excited about taking her down there, she deserves to go because she has worked very, very hard," said LaFreniere.

The weather forecast this weekend predicts sunny days with temperatures around 70 degrees.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Earning points for UMass at last week's A-10 Championships, senior James Godinho finished eighth in both the high- and long-jump events.

Rowers cap season in Philly

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts rowing team caps off their season this weekend at the Dad Vail Regatta in Philadelphia on the Schuylkill River.

UMass will be facing over 30 crews from all around the country this weekend. Last year at the Dad Vail Regatta the field included teams such as San Diego, Purdue, Colgate and Villanova. However, familiar conference foes Fordham and Saint Joseph's will also join the competition this year.

In last year's regatta, the varsity eight reached the championship race, taking second behind Saint Joe's, who won the even with a time of six minutes, 41.58 seconds and the second varsity eight took third in its championship race, falling to Buffalo in first place and Bucknell in second. The novice eight boat was fifth in its race with a time of 7:15.2.

With a strong, medal-earning performance at the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference Metro Cup regatta last weekend, the varsity eight boat looks to anchor its team.

Massachusetts coach Jim Dietz will enter five boats at this year's regatta – the varsity eight, second varsity eight, the novice eight, the lightweight eight and the novice four.

Dietz believes that this lineup has a strong chance of bringing home the championship. However, according to Dietz, it will take some effort to accomplish this feat, despite being projected as one of the stronger crews in the regatta.

"We are definitely one of the favorites going into this," Dietz said. "We've got a good shot at winning that team trophy if we can get all of our boats to the finals."

Like the Atlantic 10 Championships, the Dad Vail Regatta will feature a point system, which means that the team's boats are scored collectively. Earlier in the season, UMass faced Colgate and Holy Cross in head-to-head matches, but this regatta will likely determine the best overall squad.

While the major championships have passed, Dietz takes the philosophy that every regatta counts.

"This is something where you're hoping to build on next year," said Dietz. "The more competition that we get for our kids, the better."

A lack of time on the water has been a recurring theme for the Minutewomen, but the circumstances this time are a bit different. Dietz admitted that this put his team at a disadvantage, compared to many of the NCAA Tournament-bound crews at this weekend's regatta, which row competitively for longer.

"One of the advantages of the schools that get to go to the NCAA's is that they get to race that much longer," Dietz said. "We're lucky that this regatta comes before finals so that we are able to do it and keep working on the water as long as possible."

This will also be the final chance to race for the graduating seniors. Co-captains Gabrielle Papineau and Tara Guinan, along with two-time A-10 academic All-Conference and two-time Student Athlete of the Year, Abby Lively will race for the final time in Maroon and White this weekend.

Papineau and Guinan have been staples in the varsity eight boat this year, and Lively contributed to the lightweight eight and lightweight four boats that have only been together since the beginning of this season.

The lightweight eight are coming off of a second place finish last weekend at ECACs in a two-crew race against Buffalo.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Murray, Killough thrive, 49ers eliminate Temple from A-10s

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This time around for Temple, there were no heroics off the bat of Shannon James and no complete game shutout against Charlotte in the right arm of Brianna Dairy. This time around, it was the Kristi and Christy show for the 49ers in their 8-2 win over the Owls yesterday at the UMass Softball Complex.

Charlotte's (34-22) victory avenged Wednesday's 8-0 opening-round loss to Temple (18-21) and propelled the 49ers into the semifinals in the loser's bracket of the Atlantic 10 Tournament. They face Saint Louis today at noon.

"It's awesome that we're still here and going to play on Friday," Charlotte coach Aimee DeVos said. "We lost our first game but the inside joke on our team is that we're sending everybody home. We're in the loser's bracket, so it's going to be our job to take everybody back home."

Christy Murray lasted all seven innings on the mound for the 49ers, allowing two runs (one earned) for her 18th win and 15th complete game of the season. Kristi Killough also enjoyed a big afternoon, pacing the 49ers at the plate (3-for-4, three RBIs) and in the field with a pair of spectacular catches in right field.

"We were looking for a little payback, so it was pretty sweet," Murray said after the game. "It made it so much sweeter [to beat Temple]. We didn't play all that well [on Wednesday], so we wanted to come out and show them who Charlotte is. What they saw the other day was not us."

After tossing a shutout on Wednesday against the 49ers, Temple's Brianna Dairy lasted 1/3 of an inning in yesterday's contest. Owls coach Casey Dickson pulled Dairy after she allowed two of the first three batters to reach, replacing her with Ashley Smuda. Temple escaped the top of the first down 1-0 (RBI single by Killough) courtesy of an inning-ending double play.

The Owls answered in the bottom of the inning with a run of their own but failed to further capitalize on three Charlotte errors in the frame.

"That was huge, because we were able to shut that down," DeVos said. "We put three errors up in the inning and it was looking like we were going into the same direction we did [Wednesday] against them. It just shows we got a lot of composure."

"That was pretty crucial," Murray said, echoing her coach. "I think that kind of set the momentum for the rest of the game."

The 49ers escaped another jam the very next inning, as the Owls stranded the bases loaded with one out. Murray ended the threat herself, striking out A-10 Player of the Year Adrienne Repsher to end the second.

Charlotte continued its momentum to begin the third, exploding for five runs off Smuda. The inning started quickly as the last two batters in the order – Emily Forbes and Jenny Rumbles – each singled. The 49ers loaded the baves after the Owls were unable to make a play on Sarah Malene's grounder to second.

Three of the next four hitters delivered for Charlotte – most notably Killough's two-run single and Sierra Brooks' two-run double – to capture the lead for the 49ers, 6-1. The five-run deficit was the closest Temple would get for the remainder of the contest.

The effort of the 49ers please DeVos, especially that of Murray and Killough.

"We showed up today ready to play and hit," she said. "[On Wednesday] we got hits, but they just weren't timely. But today we were ready to go and we drove in the runs when we were in scoring position.

We also got tremendous pitching and our outfield probably had one of the best days they've had all year.

"Murray has been outstanding this year and she's on fire right now," she added. She has a lot of heart and a lot of desire out there. Killough stepped up almost every single time at the plate. She made some great plays in the outfield, too. She's the hardest working hitter on the team, and it showed today."

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu.

Charlotte outfielder, Kristi Killough went 3-for-4 with three runs batted in for the 49ers 10-4 win over Temple yesterday.

From Your Dorm* To The Airport And Back!
*central campus pick ups during heavy travel times

- VIP Exclusive Service
- Door-to-Door Service
- Charter & Group Service
- Professional Drivers
- New, Well Maintained Vans
- Scheduled Van-Share Service

Call: 253-1350 or Out of Area Toll-Free at 1-800-872-8752
Or Book Online at www.valleytransporter.com
Valley Transporter The Easy Way to the Airport!

HATS OFF TO GRADUATES!
COME CELEBRATE WITH US AT Salem Cross Inn
— RESTAURANT —
Route 9, West Brookfield, Massachusetts
The perfect setting for a special gathering.
Call now to book your party!
Groups of any size welcome!

TO MAKE RESERVATIONS
(508) 867-2345
www.salemcrossinn.com
EMAIL: info@salemcrossinn.com

Solve your summer storage problems
IN THE NEXT 5 MINUTES!
✓ CHECK IT OFF YOUR LIST!
Rent your unit online right now!
Rent your summer storage unit online at AmherstSelfStorage.com and be done in about 5 minutes—less if you're a fast typist!
Get instant access to your unit as soon as you've completed your online rental
No standing in line - no last-minute rush!
- Quick online rental
- Minutes from campus
- 24-hour key-code access
- Surveillance cameras
- Easy move-in & move-out
- Clean & well-maintained

Many sizes to choose from:
5 x 5, 5 x 10, 10 x 10, 10 x 15, 10 x 20, 10 x 25, 10 x 30
AmherstSelfStorage.com

amherst cinema
MAY 11-17:
YEAR OF THE DOG
"A stealthy Sweetness..." Kevin Crust L.A. Times
Official Selection Sundance Film Festival
Daily: 2:40, 5:00, 7:30, 9:30
★★★ S.F. Chronicle
Fri, Mon, Wed: 2:00, 4:30, 6:50, 9:15
Sat, Sun: 4:30, 6:50, 9:15
Tue: 2:00, 4:30, 9:15
Thu: 2:00, 4:30, 9:30
AFTER THE WEDDING
"Blasts Laughter & Tears" USA Today
Fri: 2:20, 4:45, 7:15
Sat: 2:20, 4:45, 7:15, 9:45
Sun: 2:20, 4:45, 7:15, 9:45
Mon-Wed: 2:20, 7:15, 9:45
THE NAMESAKE
Thu: 2:20, 7:15
SO MUCH / SO FAST Sat, 2:00
Tue, 7:00
JULES & JIM Sun 5/13, 2:00
Fri 5/11 9:45

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

2		3	8	7	9
				5			9
1			4	2				7
		1				6	8
				1
		2	4				1
4				9	2			6
	9			8
			6	3	1	5		9

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Prickly plant
7 Fore's opposite
10 Crow's-nest site
14 Take into custody
15 Adversary
16 Sore
17 City of waltzes
18 Second place
20 Psychic letters
21 Moderately slow
23 Lennon's wife
24 Look
26 Lend a hand
27 Spinning toy
29 Granted as due
33 Opposite of starboard
36 Scott Joplin's genre
39 Customary
41 Iroquois League tribe
42 Civil enforcers
43 Least relaxed
45 Envision
46 Is beholden to
47 Add sugar to
49 Flushed
51 Small battery
52 Junket
56 Egg cells
58 Golden ager
62 Pitcher's stat
63 Achieved on one's own
65 Viennese tongue
66 Leslie Caron title role
67 Fleeting poorly
68 Exults maliciously
69 Cameo stone
70 Some Fr.
71 Australian city

DOWN
1 Settings for spelunkers
2 Spring up
3 Thin pancake
4 Sawbuck
5 Annapolis inst.
6 Sluggin' Musial
7 Scared to death
8 Institution establisher
9 Big lop
10 West of Hollywood
11 Parthenon site
12 Steer clear of
13 Keyboard goof
19 Lepidopterist's equipment
22 Challenge
25 "The Dance" painter
28 Rolling in riches
30 Broad
31 Pile up
32 Railroad station
34 Quickness contest
35 Genealogical image
36 ___ Rooter
37 From the top
38 In most cases
40 Cheney predecessor
44 Idle talk
45 Notable achievement
48 Art stands
50 Actor DeLuise
53 Hire a new crew
54 Really ticked
55 Colorful violet
56 Nobel institute city
57 Streak of ore
59 Reclined
60 Ova
61 Have confidence in
64 Straighten out
66 Fishing pole

DARK STAR ORCHESTRA
FRI. MAY 11 • 8:30 PM DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM - BALLROOM
BRETT DENNEN, ALO
plus Lucas Reynolds of Blue Merle
SAT. MAY 12 • 8:30 PM DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM - BALLROOM
Pearl Street Nightclub 10 PEARL ST. NORTHAMPTON
GRACE POTTER & THE NOCTURNALS
plus Clayton Sabine
THU. MAY 17 • 10:00 PM DOORS OPEN 9:30 PM
20 CENTER ST. NORTHAMPTON
THE DISCO BISCUITS
SAT. MAY 19 • 8:00 PM DOORS OPEN 7:00 PM
CALVIN 19 KING ST. NORTHAMPTON
WIN TICKETS!
E-mail your name & favorite band to streetteam@ihEG.com
TO PURCHASE TICKETS OR FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL
WWW.IHEG.COM or 413-586-8686

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"The Edge... there is no honest way to explain it because the only people who really know where it is are the ones who have gone over."
-Hunter S. Thompson

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shaler

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

OH, HEY HERMAN
I SEE WELL IT WAS A MEMORABLE RUN
INDEED.
WAIT, WHEN DID THIS HAPPEN?
DON'T WORRY, I'M NOT ASKING YOU OUT AGAIN STRANGER, TERRIBLE THINGS KEEP HAPPENING WHEN I DO, SO I GIVE UP. I'M MOVING ON
JUST NOW. SERIOUSLY, YOU HAVE THIS WEIRD GIFT OR SOMETHING

THE QUIGMANS By Buddy Hickerson

"My salon guy said they're running out of human hair styles, so I could be the first to explore the animal kingdom."

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Pump yourself up with a heavy duty Enya session. Get ready to rumble.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
It's very arrogant of you to think you are interesting enough to have a blog.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Ignore any stern talking-to you may recieve for having your music too loud.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Get a really ugly dog and tell everyone it is a rare breed of dingo.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
The world has reached a consensus: Ben Folds needs to eat more meat.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You should not be breeding. I recommend you keep your genes in your jeans.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Your so hot the sun wears human-block to protect from your rays of insanity.

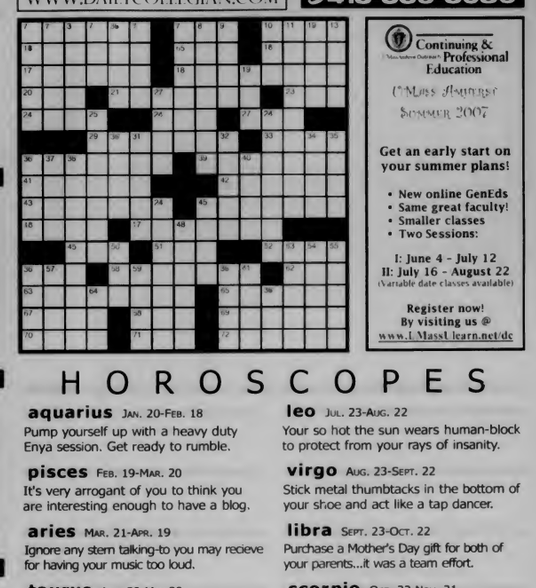
virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Stick metal thumbtacks in the bottom of your shoe and act like a tap dancer.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Purchase a Mother's Day gift for both of your parents...it was a team effort.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Your body will expel frightening amounts of sweat. Carry an extra t-shirt please.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Wear overalls all weekend and claim you are the conducter of the party train.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Ask the smoothie place to make a Blue Wall buritto into a delicious iced beverage.



Continuing & Professional Education
UMass Amherst
Summer 2007
Get an early start on your summer plans!
- New online GenEds
- Same great faculty!
- Smaller classes
- Two Sessions:

I: June 4 - July 12
II: July 16 - August 22
(Variable date classes available)

Register now! By visiting us @ www.LMassLearn.net/dc

Avoid sunburn...write comics.

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC All money going to school and none for the weekend? We pay you to be a student and learn leadership www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Top of the Campus, Incorporated (TOC, Inc) will hold its Annual Meeting in Campus Center 903, Wednesday, May 23, 2007 at 12:00 p.m.

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Center of town, 1,2,3 bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Handyman, Housecleaner, landscaper, Now and for summer. $10hr+ 549-1578

HELPDESK & COMPUTER SUPPORT TECHNIACIAN Seeking reliable fulltime undergraduate, able to left 50 pounds, with valid driver's license. Friendly with excellent communication skills and prior PC support a must. Fulltime for summer 2007 and parttime for fall 2007. Submit resume and cover letter to helpdesk@gw.housing.umass.edu.

WORK OUTDOORS THIS SUMMER Full time positions available in your hometown. Earn $8-12/hour Painting houses with a fun crew. Call 888-277-9787 or www.collegepro.com

EMPLOYMENT

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must call 413-584-4746

Promotional Salesmodels needed for summer! Wanted: attractive and energetic individuals to work as promotional salesmodels in Western Massachusetts this summer. $20-25/ hr Must be 21+. Please send resume and recent headshot to: amihos@prestoncorp.com

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Jobs for the Environment Campaigne Offices in 60 cities! Work with Sierra Club and State Environmental Groups on a nation wide effort to Fight Global Warming this summer. Work with college students from across the country! Make $4000-$6000/ Summer. Career oppurtunites and benefits also available. Amherst office call: 413-256-6434. Boston Office call: 617-292-4810 or Call 1-800-75-Earth for opportunities in other cities. Visit our website at www.jobsthatmatter.org

Summer Job on Martha's Vineyard! Asst. Manager, retail clothing store in Edgartown. Richard 413-575-1579 or email rdwhite27@charter.net

EMPLOYMENT

Brandywine Apts. Needs a certified lifeguard. Full time hours flexible. Must work some weekends. $9.00/hr Call 549-0600 or stop by office.

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Summer Jobs for the Environment Work with Environment Massachusetts on a campaign to Fight Global Warming and work with great people! Make $400-$600/week. Career opportunities and benefits available. Call Mel at 413-256-6434. Visit our website @ www.jobsthatmatter.org

SERVICES

GET ONE FREE, when you buy two packets of birth control and be ready for the summer. Affordable and Confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992, www.tapestryhealth.org

SUMMER SUBLET

Room for rent to sublet over summer Townhouse #32 $400 a month Gas heat, Close to bus stop large room with A/C Partially furnished contact Dan at dexter@student.umass.edu will respond ASAP!

Alpine Commons apartment June-August 15th $2050/ month includes utilities. 413-204-9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

Summer Sublet Puffton Village 3 bdrm air cond. Partially furnished rent negotiable Call John 774-239-8937

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, MAY 11, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

One down . . .

Balschmiter shines, UMass advances

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

The stage didn't change for the Massachusetts softball team, and neither did the results.

The top-seeded Minutewomen defeated Temple, 8-0, in five innings, on their home turf in the second round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament. UMass faces second-seeded Fordham today at 2 p.m. The winner advances to the title game on Saturday.

Pitcher Brandice Balschmiter was once again stellar in the circle, throwing five innings of shutout softball. The sophomore gave up three hits and walked one while striking out seven.

"I felt pretty comfortable out there," Balschmiter said. "We had a lot of runs. That's always nice to pitch with."

Temple came into the tournament as one of the A-10's best-hitting teams, during the regular season, and it proved that against UMass in two losses in Philadelphia, Penn., earlier this season.

On Wednesday, the Owls pounded Charlotte's pitchers for eight runs of their own, but were shut out by Balschmiter.

"I think Brandice was more effective with a few more of her pitches [than her last meeting with Temple]," Sortino said. "She worked to get ahead in the count, and I think there's a comfort level for a pitcher in having some familiarity with who you're pitching to."

Balschmiter echoed her coach's comments.

"I just had more of my pitches going," she said. "I had my changeup today, which I real-

See SOFTBALL on page 9

Massachusetts sophomore ace Brandice Balschmiter pitched five scoreless innings in UMass' 8-0 win over Temple yesterday. She struck out seven Owl batters while allowing three hits.

Versatile offense leads UM past Owls

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

Atlantic 10 Player of the Year Adrienne Repscher of Temple swung and missed at a 1-2 offering from Massachusetts sophomore ace Brandice Balschmiter. The strikeout ended the top of the first inning.

As the nine Minutewomen sprinted off the field and congregated outside their dugout, a palpable energy shot through the UMass Softball Complex when the perennially defending A-10 Champions broke huddle. A perfect regular season against conference opponents meant nothing now — the playoffs had started. And the Minutewomen didn't hesitate to prove who the class of the A-10 was.

A bunt single registered by senior Candice Molinari went into the scorebook as the inning's lone hit. But when Temple pitcher Brianna Dairy jammed freshman Jessica Serio, coaxing a weak popup out of the UMass backstop to end the inning, the scoreboard read 2-0.

Teams have to prepare for UMass' bats when they come to Amherst, but good teams are those who consistently manufacture offense without big hits. After the Molinari single, UMass coach Elaine Sortino and the Minutewomen went to work on the Owls.

Dairy jumped ahead of junior Stacy Cullington and looked to put the conference's leading home run hitter away, but Cullington had other ideas. After getting a piece of pitches just off the plate, extending her at-bat, Cullington took an outside pitch for ball four.

With two strikes, Dairy tried to pound junior Lauren Proctor inside but came in too far. The pitch struck Proctor on the right arm to load the bases for sophomore Whitney Mollica.

"We try to focus on stringing them all together.

See OFFENSE on page 9

Out of her head, over the fence

Cullington's breakout season took a mental breakthrough

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

Throughout most of the 2006 softball season, Stacy Cullington would walk out of the UMass Softball Complex feeling frustrated and disappointed. Frustrated with how she played that day, and disappointed in herself.

Cullington's sophomore season with the Massachusetts softball team was not going how she, or anyone else, expected.

In 2005, the Encinitas, Calif., native burst onto the scene as a freshman for UMass, batting .311 with seven home runs and 25 RBIs while splitting time between second base and shortstop.

But something happened before the following season, and the learning curve went flat. Cullington returned from a summer at home in California and just could not find her swing.

She limped her way to a .248 batting average, her home runs (five) and RBIs (24) dipped and she was not getting on base nearly as much. It was clear she was not the same hitter as the year before.

"I was a mental case," Cullington says. "Coming off [my] freshman year, you come back as a sophomore, and you think you know everything. But then you get a wake up call that, no, you really don't."

That wake up call came when Cullington realized the hits just didn't come as easily in Year 2. She nearly doubled her strikeout total from her freshman year, leading the team with 42.

Cullington knew she could hit the ball — she was a two-time offensive MVP at her high school, San Dieguito (Calif.) Academy, and was an offensive leader for the Minutewomen as a freshman, but for some reason the more she swung, the more she missed.

No, her problem wasn't physical. The adjustment she needed to make was mental, UMass coach Elaine Sortino watched Cullington struggle through her sophomore year, but now watches her junior thrive, in her best season to date.

"I think last year, Stacy had no patience whatsoever, and I think that's the difference in her," Sortino says. "She's learned that you have to be patient, particularly as a hitter."

If you watched Cullington swing the bat this year, you'd never know she had fallen into what so many refer to as the "Sophomore Slump."

Cullington is currently hitting .325 and leads the team with 48 RBIs. She tied the team's single-season home run record with 14, and has also cut her strikeouts down to a career-low 21 this season.

"I feel more confident, more mature," Cullington says. "It seemed like it happened without me even knowing it. I guess that's how it's supposed to happen."

The reason Cullington didn't know that her turnaround was happening is that it started as soon as she stopped thinking about it. In 2006, No. 13 was concerned about No. 13.

After a standout freshman season, Cullington thought she was ready for it all. Those thoughts were quickly dismissed the following season and were replaced by worries about the last game, the last at-bat, the last pitch.

She couldn't shake it, and as the season progressed, it just got worse. The 2006 version of the Minutewomen went farther than any team since the late 90s. But as the Maroon and White chased its fourth-ever Women's College World Series appearance, Cullington was still chasing her swing.

Like any freshman, Cullington spent her rookie season getting acclimated to college softball. With no expectations coming in, she learned from Sortino and the other coaches, and thrived on her physical abilities alone.

As a sophomore, Cullington had to handle a larger part of the game mentally, and she also returned to Amherst with expectations of her own.

"I just got so low," Cullington says, "and it was my own fault. It wasn't that I couldn't hat, it was

2007 Stats

Batting avg: .325

Home runs: 14

RBIs: 48

Slugging percentage: .746

On-base percentage: .463

See CULLINGTON on page 9

Shortstop Erin Fisher hit her seventh home run of the season and drove in four runs in Fordham's 10-4 win over Saint Louis yesterday.

Fordham tops SLU, Minutewomen next

By Dominic Poli
Collegian Staff

Game 5 of the 2007 Atlantic 10 Softball Championship ended in the fifth inning on a run rule yesterday, as Fordham defeated Saint Louis, 10-2.

Starting pitcher Nicole Ayres (17-14) recorded the win. The freshman combined with senior Sara Kinney (14-10) for all five innings pitched, as well as three hits and six strikeouts.

"I think they both did a great job," said Fordham coach Bridget Orchard. "We ask [Ayres] to get groundballs and we got them — we just had trouble playing them. And Kinney came in and she did an excellent job of shutting down [Saint Louis]."

The Billikens (27-32) came out swinging in the top of the first when, with one out, sophomore Rachel Heet shot a double into left field. After catcher Nicki Jost struck out swinging, Christy Ernst reached first on a walk. Freshman designated player Shana Richard then hit a groundball to second baseman Stephanie Mott. Ernst paced in front of the ball until the last instant, causing Mott to mishandle it and the ball to enter right field. The throw to nail Heet at the plate was not in time and Fordham went up 1-0.

The Billikens got their second run when freshman Annie Dillinger singled to right, bringing in Ernst. Senior first baseman Allison Appenfeller then grounded back to Ayres to send it to the bottom of the frame.

Fordham (39-18) did not waste any time responding, as senior left fielder Krystle Henry poked a single into left. After sophomore Melissa Andrews followed up with a single to left of her own, Henry came home to make it 2-1 on a hit by Allison Twarowski.

Each team kept the other one

See FORDHAM on page 9

Billikens in town against Minutemen

By Danny Picard
Collegian Staff

There are only two things that could happen to the Massachusetts baseball team in its final seven games of the season, four of which are at home.

It could show up for the final six Atlantic 10 games of the year against Saint Louis and Xavier and move into that sixth and final playoff spot, or it could waste a perfect opportunity to knock off its last two conference opponents and miss out on the postseason once again.

UMass (18-22, 10-11 A-10) currently stands in seventh place in the conference, two games behind St. Bonaventure in the loss column for the sixth and final postseason spot

The Minutem[illegible] first of their final [illegible] today at 3 p.m. [illegible] Louis at Earl Lorden Field. [illegible] the three-game [illegible] Quinnipiac on Tuesday [illegible] out the regular season [illegible] games at Xavier.

Nothing is set in stone for UMass, Saint Louis or [illegible] Other than Charlotte and Rhode Island, who hold the No. 1 and 2 spots in the standings respectively, the rest of the other teams can be caught in the win column.

Xavier (12-7, 1-[illegible]) [illegible] weekend series with La Salle at the 10th place team, while Saint Louis (9-11) is only a half game behind UMass for seventh place.

This weekend could decide the Minutemen's [illegible]

"[illegible] something," senior captain Travis Munsey said. "We control our own destiny pretty much, so hopefully we can get the leaders to step up and get the job done.

"Obviously we want to win every game but like I said, we have to try not to worry about what the other teams are doing, and we should be fine."

Chris Lloyd and Jared Trent are scheduled to make the first two starts for UMass, but the pitcher for Game 3 is still up in the air. Joe Cassidy has been a mainstay in the team's weekend rotation all season but a recent shoulder injury has UMass coach Mike Stone unsure if he wants to risk him getting hurt while the severity of the injury has not yet been [illegible] best starting pitcher. He holds a 5-1 record and a team-high 3.35 ERA in seven starts. If Stone decides not to send Cassidy to the mound, Mitchell Filenberg and Rory McDonald look to be the front-runners for the start.

The Billikens are coming off a 3-2 loss to Saint Joseph's on Sunday, but have won two of their last three games heading into the weekend. Saint Louis could have some rust coming into Amherst, however, as it's had this whole week off because of final exams.

The Minutemen should expect to see Dave Sever and Eric Rohr starting the first two games for Saint Louis, while either Ryan Bird (0-4) or Brock Hewitt (0-8) will be on the hill for Game 3.

Danny Picard can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu

Junior catcher Bryan Garrity and the Minutemen face conference rival Saint Louis in a crucial A-10 series this weekend.

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SUNNY : HI: 74 LO: 48 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, MAY 14, 2007

Veney, SGA to hold forum

Plan to discuss allegations of discrimination

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

At 3 p.m. this afternoon, the Student Government Association (SGA) will host a press conference in the Dukes Room of the Student Union with former athlete Jordan Veney, in regards to her removal from the University of Massachusetts track team because of what she believed to be racial discrimination.

Veney announced last week that she sent a letter to the University asking for the rein-

See VENEY on page 4

UMass senior Jamison Pereira (left in photo 1) is a member of the UMass ROTC and is a United States Army cadet. He and fellow senior, Cadet Frank Zhu ride in a UH-60 Blackhawk helicopter. Cadets Thomas Flanigan (left), Ross Lockwood (center) from Norwich University and Cadet Pereira are seen after graduating from U.S. Army Airborne School in Fort Benning, Georgia.

From classroom to battlefield

Cadet prepares for duty after graduation

By Melissa D'Amico
Collegian Staff

This article concludes a six part series on student war veterans.

"Yes, I am nervous about graduating. Anyone who says they aren't nervous is lying. But I am also excited," said Jamison Pereira. "I hear other seniors talking about the jobs they have lined up, and they don't seem very excited or anxious. I can't imagine that I am very ready to go, and I am glad I chose the path I did."

Jamison Pereira is a 23-year-old senior studying Business Management at the University of Massachusetts. Like most seniors, Pereira is finishing up classes and preparing for graduation and the future. However, unlike many other college seniors who are looking back on the last four years of their lives, remembering the Thursday nights partying and sleeping in late, Pereira can look back and think of jumping out of Black Hawk helicopters and hours dedicated to leadership training.

Jamison Pereira is a United States Army cadet and member of the UMass Army Reserve Officer Training Corps (ROTC). In two weeks, following graduation, Pereira will be commissioned and enter into active duty with 173rd Airborne Brigade, his top choice for placement and eventually join them in Italy.

Pereira first joined UMass Army ROTC in 2003 during his freshman year, after thinking about transferring to West Point Military Academy or the Naval Academy.

"I decided to try ROTC and then ended up staying here because I was able to do the same thing here as I would at the other schools," he said. Since then, much of his college experience has been structured around his involvement with ROTC and the U.S. Army.

"ROTC is really like a four-year long screening process where you learn basic infantry training as a means of evaluation," said Pereira.

The first two years of training are mainly aimed at teaching leadership skills and battle tactics. Junior year, however, is the evaluation year. Members are placed into a variety of leadership positions and are evaluated on leadership skills by officers from throughout the country. During a student's senior year, they are ranked across the country, and this ranking is a major factor in determining which branch of the military students are able to enter.

Although he admits that his parents were initially hesitant about his decision to join the Army, joining was something he had always wanted to do, and Pereira knows that they are happy with his decision because he is happy.

Being a member of UMass ROTC has made Pereira's college experience different from many other students. The leadership skills Pereira has developed through ROTC has made him even more confident within his study of management.

"The Army is about people."

See VETERAN on page 4

SGA tries to solve textbook problem

By Lauren Pabst
Collegian Correspondent

AMHERST — Students are selling their books back this month — many of them at a substantial loss. But textbook prices seem likely to rise again this fall as students, faculty, the publishing industry and bookstores can't seem to fix the problems that push prices up.

Already, students at the University of Massachusetts and similar institutions spend an average of $900 on textbooks each year, according to the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group. From March 2005 to 2006, the costs of college textbooks went up six percent, according to the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS), they went up another eight percent this past year. Although BLS offers no projection for next year, there's little doubt that as

See TEXTBOOKS on page 3

'Pops' for UMass

Nobel Laureate Craig Mello of the UMass Medical School received the President's Medal, the University's highest honor, from UMass President Jack M. Wilson at the event UMass Night at the Pops last Thursday.

South American animal grown right at home

Hadley Farm breeds and cares for alpacas

By Krista Cosco
Collegian Correspondent

This is the place where the unique alpaca roams. It is just off the road going to the University of Massachusetts that is a city within itself, where the word zoo is used to describe social lives rather than the home of these animals. Here is where students learn veterinary principles, while still able to see the brick of the library and the cement of freshman towers — the intersection of college life and wildlife which seem to be one in the same.

Here is the Hadley Farm, home to the rare alpaca and gateway to the University.

UMass is a school with an infamous reputation, both for partying and for the ensuing riots that erupt after certain sporting events. The school may not be known for its animal science research or its testing on monkeys in Tobin Hall, but it does have a serious and well-developed Animal Studies Program.

The school offers equine and livestock studies and employs 22 faculty members in the Animal Science and Pre-Vet department, where 86 students graduated from it in 2006. UMass was built as an agricultural school in 1863 and the remnants of its natural background are still alive today.

The Hadley Farm seems like any other farm. It has green grass, stables, animal droppings and an enormous American flag hoisted up in the center. It houses animals,

See ALPACA on page 3

The Hadley Farm of UMass is home to 19 alpacas who are cared for by the students of the Animal Science department. Alpacas are highly valued animals that can be sold for $600 to $40,000 because of their easy maintenance.

Farm reaches out to Puerto Rican youth

By Nicole Bourjaily
Collegian Staff

HOLYOKE — From 100 feet away, this four-acre piece of land looks like a plot of dirt and grass with old wooden sheds scattered through out. But take 30 steps towards it and you can see rows of cilantro, strawberry vines and garlic plants speckle the brown soil with deep green.

Take an even closer look and discover that among these verdant rows of crops are youth farmers working the land.

They are the cultivators bringing life to Tierra de Oportunidades, or Land of Opportunity, one of the farm sites of Nuestras Raices Inc., an organization that uses urban agriculture to promote community development in Holyoke.

The organization enriches the local community with Puerto Rican traditions by allowing farmers to bring their skills from home and apply them towards agriculture and economic growth in Western Massachusetts.

And with Tierra, second generation Puerto Rican youth are able to continue their family farming heritage by being the sole farmers of this plot of land.

"There are about 11 youth[s]," said Eric Toensmeier, Tierra de Oportunidades Farm Director. "They are apprenticed to a staff member and work within smaller groups to get more personalized attention. We're trying to steer people in public toward college, that's a nice aspect of the group, but we're working on that," he said.

Toensmeier explained that the youth are responsible for daily farming tasks — cultivating the land, watering and weeding the soil, planting seeds, taking care of the farm animals and maintaining the farm plot and the greenhouse located at the heart of the site. The youth aspect of Nuestras Raices has been a part of the organization since the organization's start in 1992.

Each youth member, whose ages range from 14 to 18, comes to the farm around 3 p.m. after they get out of school. For at least two hours every day, except Friday and Sunday, they help garden and grow fruits, herbs, vegetables and flowers, which are all sold for retail at the Holyoke Farmers' Market. Not only do they work with hand soil, but they also learn how to cultivate land along the Connecticut River.

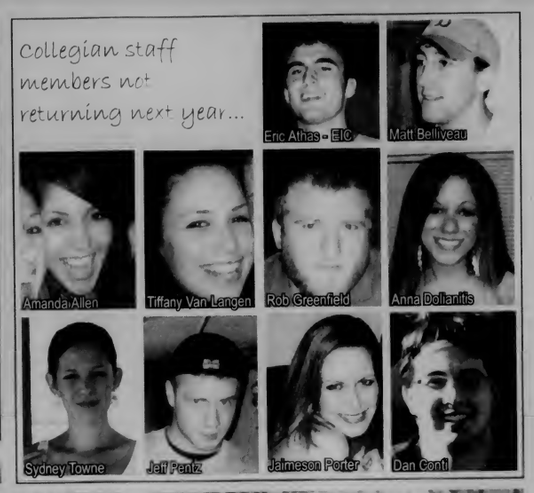
"We come straight from school," said Youth worker Yadira Almeda, 14. "This is something I want to keep doing because we grow organic stuff and sell it to the community for an affordable price. We're making the community healthier and better; I think that's good, and it gives me more responsibilities." They are assigned different tasks throughout the farm each time they come in for work or continue work on on-going projects, like planting seeds into the soil, which takes two to three weeks, said Almeda.

The youth also help out at a neighboring farm site, right next to Tierra — 26 acres of land divided into smaller plots owned and maintained by adult farmers.

Almeda said that she's learned how to measure soil beds from helping out on the plots some of her family members own.

"We have horses, chickens, pigs, goats on the other

See FARM on page 4



Farewell Collegian Class of 2007!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Issue 137

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Eric Athas
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sheryl Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jaimeson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Adam Stagin
Editorial Editor Tucker Merrick
News Editor Matt Belliveau
Sports Editor Danny Picard
Sports Editor Jon Pelland
Features Editor Melissa D'Amico
Circulation Manager Jeff Pentz
Asst. Business Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Nicole Poddester
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Sydney Towne
Assistant News Anna Doliantis
Assistant News Nicole Boonjakuakul
Assistant Editorial Brendan Hall
Assistant Sports Jeremy Rice
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call 545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

Night Editor
Matt Belliveau

Copy Editor
Callie Williams

Production Supervisor
Amanda Allen

Professors use more online texts to teach publishing becomes increasingly expensive, students will feel the pinch again.

Textbooks from page 1

Yet nothing – not student government efforts, not pleas to faculty from the manager of the Textbook Annex, not the interest of well-meaning faculty – seems to produce coordinated efforts to reduce costs. Yet, some faculty are moving more of their coursework to online sources for which students pay little to no additional charge, denting part of the inevitable, skyrocketing rise.

Two years ago, UMass' Student Government Association worked with Follett, the contracted UMass Amherst textbook vendor, in an effort to create a textbook rental program. The three-year program required a commitment from professors to use the same edition for six semesters, which would save students money up-front by allowing them to rent the text for half the cost of the purchase.

The idea seemed to have the potential to save students some money, according to Mishy Leiblum, a graduate student in labor studies who is a student representative to the UMass Board of Trustees.

"We were excited about the program," she said, "but it never came to be."

The problem: asking faculty members to use the same edition from year to year got in the way of the contract. As knowledge evolves from year to year, so do textbooks. Professors did not want to lock themselves into using one edition when that edition might not reflect the latest in the field, so the proposed pilot failed.

Though the SGA-Follett rental program failed, some book purveyors still try to give students a better deal by attempting to coordinate as best they can to re-use books that aren't yet out of date. But here, too, frequently-changing editions exert a similar effect on the prices at which books can be resold – and, therefore, what students must pay.

As Phil Olson, the director of the Textbook Annex, described the process, "When we receive a textbook request from a faculty member for the following semester for the same textbook, we offer 50 percent of the new price until we reach the number needed for next semester.

"The key ingredient is getting that information from the faculty soon enough to be able to offer 50 percent," Olson said. "Each year students spend close to $6 (million) on books and receive about $1.2 (million) in return. Our goal is to reach the $2 (million) mark."

But some faculty members aren't sure they'll be teaching the same course, or may wait to read student reviews while considering what texts work best for the class, according to Associate Professor Stephanie Luce. Because class evaluations frequently aren't available to faculty until two weeks after the buy-back period, that information is unavailable in time to make a difference in what the Textbook Annex must order, she said.

Moreover, the e-mail from the Textbook Annex that goes out to faculty requesting them to identify books they'll use the following semester doesn't always connect with the intended recipients, Luce added.

"It may not register with the faculty the direct impact it has on buybacks," she said. "Professors have a separate schedule when selecting what edition will be used and may not recognize the importance of getting information in on time."

With the problem of increasing costs, advances in technology may be the next front in saving students' money. Some professors seem to be opting to use online sources instead of published readers or books. Some 200 courses currently use online resources or electronic reserves, which can be accessed at the library, according to the resource center at W.E.B. Du Bois.

According to Robert Moll, a professor of computer science who tries to use online sources, "Faculty chooses books, not students, and faculties are less sensitive to price issues. Publishers still don't quite get the advantages of online books. Their sales models are still built around a 'bookstore' model, and that involves giving 32 percent of the gross cost of the book, to the bookstore," he said.

As more professors look online for teaching resources, the press to reduce the price of traditionally-published sources remains.

The Public Higher Education Network Of Massachusetts, or PHENOM Coalition recently traveled to the State House in Boston, asking legislation to freeze tuition and address the costs of textbooks.

But with the exception of online-accessible materials, there seems to be no clear answer at the moment to how to bring down the prices of textbooks students must have to get through school.

Lauren Pardi can be reached at lpardi@student.umass.edu.

UMass farm home to Alpacas

Alpaca from page 1

has that distinct smell of horses and the sounds of donkey yelps and horse trots reverberate through each barn.

The Hadley Farm, however, has something no other barn has – the nation's first undergraduate Camelid Studies Program. The Camelid (the species name for alpacas) Study at UMass is run by Dr. Stephen Purdy, its goal is to teach undergraduate and graduate students about the veterinary practices for the development of healthy animals. Dr. Purdy is an experienced camelid practitioner and has a vast amount of knowledge about the animals. Students of the Camelid Program are taught hands-on at the farm by Dr. Purdy and get to work with the animals directly.

The term alpaca is fairly unknown among college students, unless he or she is an animal science pre-vet major. UMass is known for its Isenberg School of Management or its riots, whether from the Red Sox World Series success or the defeat of the Minutemen in the national title game. Behind where these Minutemen play their football games is a world unknown to many.

The Hadley Farm's Camelid Program is to animal science pre-vet majors what Curry Hicks Cage is to track runners. It is a practice forum, where students learn what they need to know to go on and be successful in their field. With knowledge of alpacas, a student is being taught an expensive lesson. By managing an alpaca farm, one could make up to $50,000 per year.

The interesting correlation between UMass athletics and alpacas continues with Julie Lafreniere. She balances her roles as girls cross country track coach, alpaca owner/breeder and Border Terrier dog breeder quite fairly. Lafreniere coaches during the day, takes care of her extremely demanding dogs and also finds time to care for her 17 alpacas.

Lafreniere's office in Curry Hicks Cage is covered with track photos and her desk is adorned with a plaque that reads "1992 Cross Country Coach of the Year." When she turns on her computer, a picture of an alpaca appears on the screen. Information about the animals rolls off her tongue as she explains that the importation of alpacas is closed right now. She speaks highly of these animals and wants the alpacas to be her job when she retires.

"I like to be busy," she says. "I'm not the type to just retire." Sitting in her office looking up her alpaca Web site, one can see her passion for these animals and the significance of them in her life. She buys, sells and breeds them.

"I do all of it," she says, and is proud of it.

Alpacas are the animals to purchase if one wants the thrill of buying and selling without "getting involved in the stock market," said Lafreniere. The animals can be sold from $600 to $40,000 and are a breeder's dream. With their thick fur and easy-maintenance lifestyle, they are bought and sold quite frequently.

"It is a rich person's hobby," said Katharine Berthaume, an animal science student at UMass. The expensive quality that these animals possess gives them a sense of importance to human being. But alpacas do not feel the same sense of affection towards people. They are not people-animals, they are alpaca-animals. They feel comfortable in herds, with mothers and their babies always close for comfort.

The Hadley Farm itself is a vast expanse of rolling greens and stables that house the animals. It is home to horses, donkeys, cows, sheep, goats, pigs and the rare alpacas. The animals roam in the fields and are taken care of by those affiliated with the University. There is an abstract sense of nature versus nurture here at the farm. The animals have their natural environment of grassy fields, while being nurtured by subdivisions of animal science majors from UMass.

At a lab run by Dr. Purdy, his students cut the alpacas' toenails and check their body scores to make sure they are healthy. The seven girls at the lab herd the 19 alpacas into the barn to begin their work. Once all are together, the girls have to struggle with the 150-pound animal to get their tasks accomplished.

The alpacas body scores are taken by grabbing the fur on their backs and ranking them one to five (one being emaciated and five being fat).

"This is a measure of how much flesh they have on them," explained Dr. Purdy. A male alpaca named Moose was only at a two, and a female Hershey was only 2.5. Dr. Purdy replied "that is a little light," and he will have to think about what they are going to do. The animals struggle to get free, kick and scream like little kids throwing tantrums at a toy store.

The two pregnant females are left alone for the most part, especially Yulita who is due in September.

"She's psychotic when she is pregnant," Dr. Purdy says. Gemma, the other pregnant female is due within the next week and is carefully watched. Dr. Purdy then leaves to get his vaccines for the animals. Their medication is injected into them while they are held by two or three girls. Screams and especially spit fly from the alpacas' mouths.

Spitting is their defense cry and the remnants of saliva cover the barn walls. Dr. Purdy and the students then did behavior testing to see which, if any, of the alpacas want to mate. Two of the males are taken out and walked on a leash toward the females. Everyone observes to see his reaction. Neither of the male alpacas was interested in the females and walked through as if the girls were not there. There will no chemistry for today, and the animals were let back to do what they pleased.

Ninety percent of all alpacas still live in their homeland of South America. There is a small percent that now live in the United States and Australia. From this small number, there are approximately 25 at Hadley Farm. These animals eat, sleep and reproduce just miles from the UMass campus.

On windy days, the smell of horses wanders into the Southwest residential area where every student then begins to complain. How does this urban campus begin to feel like rural farmland? It is because of Hadley Farm. This is the only reason that most know of the farm but have never been there themselves. The research done there is critical to the learning experiences of animal science pre-vet majors.

So outside the lines of the University lays a piece of farmland that cultivates both livestock and knowledge. Most students are oblivious to the subculture that has been growing at their University since its establishment. The alpacas represent both the development of the University and the roots of its foundation.

Krista Cosentino can be reached at kcosentino@student.umass.edu.

Coming Soon!

The UMass Flashback Grad Issue 2007

Get yours the last day of classes!

Including the best of 2007, top 10 lists, flashbacks, and countless memories

Leave your Senior Will

in the Collegian's 2007 UMass Flashback Grad Issue

One last chance for you to leave your mark on UMass.

Just $15 Per message

Surprise your friends, Thank a professor,

Actual size of messages 2"x3"

or tell your graduating class congratulations.

Send your photo and statement to thecollegian@gmail.com, or stop by 113 Campus center for payment info

Puerto Rican farm enriches Holyoke with latin agriculture side," said youth leader Angel Ortiz, 17, who's been with the group for 10 years. "The farmers take care of these animals; they have their own piece of land and take care of what is on their land, like vegetables. They sell it to the farmers' Market, Mr Plaza and give food to the slaughterhouses."

FARM from page 1

Both sites, according to Toensmeier, have grown rapidly in abundance in less than three years.

"The four-acre farm we got in fall 2004," Toensmeier said. "Then, the 26 acres next to it, we got access to last spring around June. So this is really the first year we've been able to raise crops out there." Toensmeier holds a series of workshops for candidates who want to plot land at the larger site. The future farmers have to take classes during the winter in business planning and the production aspect of farming.

But for the youth workers, the process is different.

"When I first started, it was just an interview," explained Almeyda, who's been with Nuestras Raices for two years this August. "They ask questions in front the rest of the youth. But this year, it's not a youth program anymore – it's a job. We had a job fair in January and February; they called us back and we filled out applications," she continued. "They told us about the jobs and how it was going to be. Then they called me back in February and told me I got the job."

Almeyda explained that before getting paid for the work, it was all done through volunteering. Fifty volunteers from Hampshire College, University of Massachusetts, Smith College and Holyoke Community College can be seen on the farm at a time, Almeyda said.

"Word of mouth works really well," said Toensmeier on how people become involved with the organization. "We have a lot of people who want to do stuff for us than we have space available for. Otherwise, we spread the word at festivals, carnivals, advertise on the radio."

Almeyda heard about the organization through her cousins, some of whom had been working there for 10 years. Other workers like Angel Ortiz heard about it through friends who were already working with the group.

Nuestras Raices also extends a hand to neighboring schools to strengthen their community participation.

"We bring a lot of programs out to the farm," Toensmeier explained. "[William J.] Dean Technical High School is right there, and a lot of the classes walk down on tours, and we work with other youth programs as part of the Holyoke Youth Task Force."

The organization works with UMass in various ways. They are connected to the Student Run Goat Group of UMass' Livestock Studies, which runs a goat herd on campus. They're also involved with UMass' 4-H program, help with livestock production in UMass' Animal Science program and are an extension of the Holyoke Planners Network Community Outreach Partnership Center sponsorship – a grant that gives UMass money to work with community organizations.

"It makes me proud to be a part of this group," said Almeyda. "I realize that I'm helping out my community, and it makes me feel good. The people I work with are fun to be with. You don't mind coming here and working for however many hours. I think it matures you more, it helps you learn. You learn about plants, what's healthy, what's not," she said.

"I feel good about my community work," Ortiz said. "It's taught me leadership, keeps me a busy guy, always knowing what to do every time we go somewhere and volunteer."

And busy they will be in the coming months.

"For the youth in the future," Toensmeier said, "they're going to be running a petting zoo with Caribbean-heritage breed livestock, raised in Puerto Rico. We're raising traditional animals so people buy the food and feed the animals at the Farmers' Market," he added. "We're also working with the Environmental Restoration Project, removing a bunch of weeds along the river and planting a lot of native fruits and trees and using goats and pigs to clear the land, sticking to the traditional Puerto Rican farming processes."

Nicole Bonnichsidal can be reached at nbesbon@umass.com.

Check out photos of the youth workers on the audio slide show at dailycollegian.com.

Veney, SGA to hold press conference statement of her $20,000 partial scholarship, plus an extra $7,000 that Veney believes she earned through her performance on the track team.

VENEY from page 1

Veney, an African-American sophomore, claims that UMass coach Julie LaFreniere racially discriminated against her when she competed for the track team during her freshman season in 2005 and the first semester of her sophomore season.

In conjunction with the SGA, Veney and freshman Stephanie Mattar – also African-American – will hold a press conference to voice their concerns about what they believe to be a trend of racial discrimination on the women's track and field team.

"I'm ready to go out there and tell people what happened," Veney said. "I'm comfortable telling the truth, and that is what it's going to be. I'm not afraid to tell what happened. I'm not afraid to open my mouth in public about my situation.

"As of now, I'm not happy with the way the administration has been handling things, and I'm not happy with the zero responses that I'm getting," she added. "I was supposed to get a response from my demands letter last week, and I think that [the administration] is downplaying it because they are waiting for things to settle and blow over. Well, it's not going to blow over."

SGA President Aaron Buford will make an opening statement to begin the press conference and will be followed by testimony from Veney and Mattar claiming that racial discrimination exists on the track team. A question-and-answer session will take place after Veney and Mattar speak, and the press conference will conclude with a closing statement.

"I think it will be great for the members of the UMass community to hear directly from the athletes," said former SGA Trustee Mishy Leiblum, who helped to organize today's press conference. "They will see for themselves the evidence that [the athletes] have and the different documentation that they have."

On Veney's Facebook.com homepage, she posted the press conference under the 'Event' section and 50 guests have confirmed attendance, including tennis player Michele Spiess and former basketball guard James Life.

"Over the course of several years certain trends have been detected involving the discrimination of student-athletes of color within the UMass Track and Field Programs," says the description of the press conference on Veney's Facebook page.

Veney's recent allegations have drawn both supporters and critics, with two athletes on the track team – long-distance runners Eilis Kierans and Erin O'Donnell – coming to LaFreniere's defense; several others close the program backing Veney.

Mattar's mother, Deborah Hawkins-Mattar, recently suggested that her daughter was the victim of LaFreniere's racial discrimination, and another former track team member, Marissa Kay Callahan, also claimed that "[LaFreniere] tends to give all of the black athletes a harder time."

Another former member of the women's track and field team, Emily Moses, recently voiced her concerns for the state of the UMass track program. Moses was a sprinter who ran the 400- and 500-meter races for LaFreniere from 2001 to 2003 – her freshman and sophomore seasons.

"[LaFreniere's] decisions and the way she was coaching us were weird in our view," Moses said. "She wasn't making decisions that would further the team and help the team win and make the team's reputation better. I don't know why that is, but she definitely singled people out in the way that it made them worse competitors."

Moses, who identified herself as "Middle Eastern," isn't sure whether LaFreniere is racist or not, but Moses objected to LaFreniere's treatment of certain athletes.

"If someone doesn't outright say the n-word or do something obviously racist, it's hard to know where to draw the line," she said.

"But there are patterns, and it's important to recognize those patterns for what they are," Moses added. "If a coach is being unfair to people and doing weird things like kicking people off of the team and taking away scholarships when they've been breaking records and doing great things for UMass and the women's track team, then I think that's a huge problem in and of itself whether the person is black, white, whatever."

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu.

Cadet prepares to join Airborne Brigade

VETERAN from page 1

said Pereira. "The Navy is all about boats, the Air Force is all about planes, and the Army is about managing people. It's much like running a business-managing people, their well-being, finances and motivating them to do what's needed. Even if I wasn't going into the Army, you could place me in any situation where I have to manage people, and I'd have the confidence to do it."

ROTC requires a significant amount of time commitment, and although it can be tiring, Pereira believes it has been the right choice for him. Senior year in particular has called for a lot of time dedication, since the senior class running most of the training for the younger classes.

Although, with the year winding down, the training is not as time-consuming during high points in the year; seniors may find themselves working from 5:30 a.m. until 10 p.m. A normal day may consist of morning workouts followed by ROTC courses, regular academic courses, leadership labs, as well as evaluations of the junior class and staff meetings.

"Some training, like going to Fort Devens, takes months of planning and preparations," said Pereira.

Devoting so much time to his work within ROTC has had an effect on his life as a college student. Although he continues to work hard at excelling in his academics, his relationship with friends and other students outside of ROTC have been affected.

"You can't always do the same things as other students, and you have to tell your friends that you can't go out on Thursday nights because you have to get up at 5 a.m. the next morning," he said.

Despite the fact that some soldiers may think it can become difficult to have strong relationships with civilians the longer you are in the military, many agree that it is important to maintain these ties.

"It may seem easier just to hang out with military friends, but it is also nice to separate yourself from that every once in a while and relax. That was also one of my reasons for staying at UMass," said Pereira. "I'm able to have really different conversations with different friends. Some I talk to about international relations, while others I can just talk to about bars and classes."

As Pereira has progressed into his senior year, he continues to learn even more about himself and his leadership skills than he has in the previous three years.

"As much as I have learned about training and tactics last year, I have learned a lot more this year from teaching, evaluating, and assessing others," said Pereira. "It really defines your skills as a leader, and has helped me 10-fold."

Changing from being the person who is being evaluated, during junior year, to being the person conducting the evaluations has helped Pereira recognize the importance of all the training he has been through.

"I can see how last year I used to get frustrated with the seniors with what they made us do, but now, being a senior, I realize that all these things were done for our own good," said Pereira. "I'm glad I had to do the training I did as a junior, and now I just kind of smile when I see juniors getting frustrated with me because I know it will help them."

One of Pereira's most memorable moments throughout his training over the past four years was his final jump at the U.S. Army Airborne School. It was a night jump, everything was pitch black and the pilots got to use night vision gear.

"You can't see anything, but you can feel yourself being blown around by the wind. Then, when you finally land, and you realize that you haven't broken anything, it's amazing," said Pereira. "That's when I realized I wanted to go into an airborne unit."

Even though taking on a leadership position within the military has been what Pereira has been training for throughout the past four years, the reality of its approach is still very surreal.

"Suddenly it hits you that once this training is over, you are going to be a leader in the Army," said Pereira. "Within ROTC you can make mistakes, and you are put into situations where you will make mistakes so you don't make the same ones when it really counts. Once you are in the Army though, any mistake will be real, and the consequences with be definite. It can make you nervous, but it's also very exciting."

Initially coming into ROTC, Pereira expected to be "cold, wet and miserable," and although he believes these expectations have been met at one point or another, his experiences have been both beneficial and memorable.

Jamison Pereira will graduate from UMass confident in his abilities both as a student and a leader.

"I have no real regrets, and although I think about how I could have been nice and comfortable at home throughout all of this training, I couldn't have asked myself to do anything else," he said.

Melissa D'Amico can be reached at mdamico@student.umass.edu.

Cadet Pereira and his radio operator during a training exercise at Leadership, Development and Assessment Course in Fort Lewis, Washington.

Cadet Pereira and some of his squad mates from Oregon University and University of Utah rest after training exercises in Fort Lewis, Washington. In two weeks, Cadet Pereira will enter into active duty with the 173rd Airborne Brigade.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

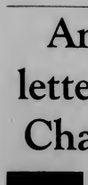
EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MAY 14, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

An open letter to the Chancellor



Jeff Napolitano

Dear Chancellor Lombardi,

This Andrew Card fiasco is really beginning to get on my nerves. I've had to spend the last couple of weeks attending meetings and rallies, as well as signing petitions to try to convince you that your decision (rather, your recommendation to the Board of Trustees) to award a prominent war criminal an honorary degree was "wrong." I have schoolwork to do, I have a new baby son I should be spending time with, but instead I have to waste my time making a public case that you – as an intelligent and supposedly moral man – have made a very bad mistake in giving an honorary degree to a very bad man.

You have claimed that the administration should stand by its offer, because this is not a "political" decision. That is such a tremendous load of bull that it almost doesn't deserve comment. Neither I, nor do the majority of students, staff and faculty who are appalled by this University's offer, believe that giving an honorary degree to George W. Bush's right-hand man is anything but political. Card was the Chief of Staff for the Bush administration, one of the primary actors in the White House Iraq Group (WHIG), which sold the war and invasion of Iraq to the American people, and was implicitly involved in the manipulation of such evidence. As the "gatekeeper" to Bush, he certainly had a part to play in the criminally negligent response to Hurricane Katrina, as well as the reports from the intelligence agencies before 9/11.

We don't care if Mr. Card is credited with helping you appropriate some funding for UMass projects – we don't care if tomorrow he were to dig into his own personal bank account and give a billion dollars to UMass. Getting money for this cash-strapped school does not wash off the blood of hundreds of thousands (perhaps millions) of people from his hands. Furthermore, we should not prostitute ourselves and our dignity by bestowing degrees upon those who have clearly made no real contributions to academia.

You have a long history of not listening to what people want – people who study, teach and work here.

But you have a long history of not listening to what people want – people who study, teach and work here. Two years ago, you rejected a majority of the recommendations of the Campus Commission on Diversity – after you had promised them you'd implement them all. Last year, you claimed that implementing the "Faculty 250 Plan" was your "number one" priority, yet you've cut the number of faculty to be hired through that plan in half and unilaterally funneled off the rest of the money into other projects. You've been complaining about the lack of money for this school since you've been here, but in the last two years you've increased the salaries of administrators – not student workers, staff nor faculty – by nearly 50 percent. And, despite your failures, and your cries of poverty, you took a $100,000 raise last fall, bringing your total salary to over $349,000 (more than twice as much as the governor's own $141,000 salary).

What is most striking to me over your tenure here in the last few years is the lack of any democratic process and any accountability. The SGA, GSS (Graduate Student Senate), GEO (graduate student union) and the MSP (the faculty union) have all passed motions (some unanimously) condemning both the process by which this award was given and the man to whom it is being awarded. Next week, the faculty, through the Faculty Senate, will very likely pass a similar motion. If the undergraduate students, the graduate students, the folks that work here, the faculty and even some administrators are vehemently opposed to Card being granted this honorary degree, what does it say about the people that run our school?

Instead of having a nice, pleasant commencement for graduate students, you and the Board of Trustees decided to embarrass this school by making it overtly political. No one, particularly those graduating students, wants to spend time and energy to demonstrate at what is supposed to be a day of congratulations and achievement. But you (and the Board of Trustees) are giving an award to a man who has been involved in some of the greatest crimes and travesties of our generation – most significantly the greatest crime of all: the international crime of aggression (illegal invasion).

I'm telling you that students and faculty are drawing the line. Tomorrow, an even greater crowd of students and faculty will gather at the ramp at Whitmore at 12:30 p.m., and we will again demonstrate our opposition to this dishonorable man being given the highest honor our University can offer.

We hope that the voices and actions of the people for whom this school exists resonate across this state, this country, and the world.

Jeff Napolitano can be reached at jjnapoli@lrrc.umass.edu.

It's an upper-crust campaign for '08

Melissa Garber

The 2004 presidential campaign cost a whopping $1.2 billion, according to the Washington Times. The 2008 presidential candidates are well on their way to exceeding that record-breaking number. Opensecrets.org, a Web site operated by The Center for Responsible Politics, reported that Hillary Clinton, the leading spender so far, has already raised $36,054,568. In the first three months of campaigning alone, the presidential candidates have raised $150 million.

But just where is this money coming from?

Every election season, candidates shell out billions of dollars on their own campaigns along with their smear campaigns. In 2004, John Kerry and George W. Bush each received $74.6 million in public funds.

Several candidates running in 2008, like Clinton and John Edwards, have turned down public funds for their primary campaigns to avoid the financial limitations imposed by receiving the taxpayers' money.

USA Today reported that when candidates participate in the public campaign funding system, they are subject to limits and disclosure rules. Candidates who forgo public funds can raise unlimited private dollars.

For the most part, campaign finance reform is a joke. For candidates to spend over a billion dollars on their campaigns is a gross example of excess. Billions of dollars do not need to be wasted every election year. The presidential race has become a business, with only those who can afford it in the running.

The presidential race has become a business, with only those who can afford it in the running.

Edwards told USA Today that he wasn't going to receive public funds because he needed "to have the funds to be competitive." A presidential election should not be based on the wealth of individual candidates. Nor should the public's tax dollars be wasted on candidate's campaigns.

Broadcast television and radio airwaves are publicly owned and regulated by the FCC. The FCC has little control over cable news but the big three network news stations – CBS, ABC and NBC – are all operating on the public airwaves. Instead of candidates spending obscene amounts of money to advertise, why can't they each be allotted an equal amount of time to state their case on the public airwaves?

The presidential race is important enough for networks to give candidates the airwaves for free. Even cable news should concede. It is in the public's interest to hear what presidential candidates have to say without being influenced by how often they can afford to say it.

A candidate's financial status should not be a determining factor in their ability to run for president. The fact that Clinton can raise the most funds and therefore has the ability to sell herself as a candidate far more efficiently than the candidate with the least funds, Mike Gravel, is an abuse of our country's democratic process.

We as Americans are supposed to believe that any citizen can run for president, not just the wealthy elite. It would be a small step in legitimizing our country's presidential race to give candidates equal time to campaign on the public airwaves.

Presidential campaigns should be fair and equal; the public doesn't benefit from candidates' unnecessary spending.

The money spent on campaigning should be used to improve education or healthcare.

It should be used to help rebuild New Orleans and the towns in Kansas and Oklahoma that were devastated by recent tornadoes and flooding.

For every $1.2 billion spent on campaigning, the New York Times reported that $600 million of it annually could be spent immunizing the world's children against the measles, whooping cough, tetanus, tuberculosis, polio and diptheria.

What is more important to the American people: a successful smear campaign or a campaign to treat curable diseases all over the world? Do we want healthcare for all Americans and increased funding for education or do we want to see the wealthiest presidential candidate's face plastered all over our television screens?

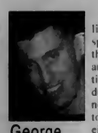
Candidates could use this allotted time on the public airwaves to show Americans what they have done and explain what they will do for our country instead of wasting time and money to demonize their opponents. Candidates' policies should speak louder than their smear campaigns.

The money raised by candidates should be used to better Americans' lives. Presidential candidates should prove their ability not through how successful their commercials are; rather through the amount of public service projects they commit themselves and their campaign finances too.

We deserve better.

Melissa Garber can be reached at mhgarber@student.umass.edu

That's all, UMass



George Kennedy

This is going to sound like a commencement speech, but where does the time go? It has been an amazing, crazy, sometimes tough, but a never dull four years. I could not think of a better place to spend my college years either. I may have not had the best grades, but as Frank Sinatra sang, "I did it my way."

It seemed like just yesterday I was at Philips Street watching Cold Duck Complex perform on the back deck of a house, only to be bombarded with pepper spray. I remember trying to be suave and "kick it" on frat row. We have seen the celebrations following three Super Bowls and a World Series. A few things I need to get off my chest.

By the way Mom, yes, I did swim across the campus pond when the Sox won the World Series...I swam it twice actually. Yes, Alex and I went on that road trip in the middle of the semester to see the Rolling Stones and Pearl Jam in Pittsburgh, but it was the Rolling Stones and Pearl Jam! I don't regret it, but I just thought you should know.

I remember trying to be suave and "kick it" on frat row.

To all those on my floor freshman year: for the record, the only people that thought all are nicknames were cool were us. My friends at home would laugh when I talked about Dave the Rave, Todd the Bod, or Dan the Man. J. Conor "Creep" Storie and Kevin "Hub" Kristof were the first two that I met here playing Beirut in the basement of a frat until we were the last ones there.

Ted, my roommate for three semesters and without a doubt my best friend here (sorry to anyone who thought they were it, you were wrong). We ran those round robin's – three in one semester may be a Washington Hall record. Just once it would have been nice to have hosted a round robin and not have you drunk as a sailor after 25 minutes. I mean it when I say that there is no one that I would rather have as a roommate than you. Hold it down while I'm out in the real world. I'll be checking in on you to make sure you are!

Brendan "Red" Hall: Great strides have been made in the way of hair replacement technology. I love to rip on you and hear you respond in kind. It has been an honor and a privilege writing for the Collegian under your guidance and always helpful advice.

Kuda, the big bloke, the lad from across the pond. Since you have not graduated yet, I can technically give you a shout out, but you have you better soon! Crashers Rule #176: Walk into a room, own the room. You make a great partner in crime, my friend.

Michael "Beast" Grinshpun, I know you can't read, so have Red read this to you. The rips back and forth are the stuff of legend. The 45 minute session of ripping on Lindsay's boyfriend is still the funniest thing I have ever witnessed.

Seth. What can I say my friend, you trucked all of my gear almost 30 blocks down Manhattan, paying a homeless man to help you. That could be one of the coolest things anyone has ever done for me. I still owe you a dinner for that, man.

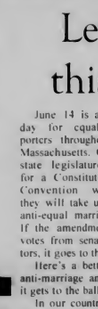
I wish I had a whole page to give shoutouts to everyone who deserves it, but I'll try to do my best. Marina (Maaarriiinaaa!), Big Jim, Yan P, Trish, Bee-Dunn (quit your 'clowning around') Sol (keeping it classy for all of us sinners), The 'gents of ZBT for treating me like an honorary member, Kristin (be good to my bro or you'll have to answer to me), there really are so many people and I am running out of room, so if I forgot to mention you, you know what you did.

My brother Alex, you could have gone to any school in the country, but you chose to come here and I am truly glad you did. Living with you is great, and I am definitely coming back to harass you until you graduate.

My 'thanks-you's would not be complete without thanking my mother. Mom, you are the person that made all of these terrific memories possible. You have been a terrific mother and while I have never sat through one of your classes, I know you are a great teacher by the lessons that you have taught me. I am sorry that I did not spend as much time as I could have working on my grades, but a lot of my greatest life lessons I learned around campus, but outside of the lecture hall. These lessons have prepared me to take one just about anything that life can throw at me. Whether I learned in or out of the classroom, is that not what college is for? Now that I am taking on the "real world," the only goal other than being successful is to make you proud and do right by you. (Dad, don't get too jealous, I love ya too. Hopefully next year I won't have to sneak into the Marathon to run it.) I am still going to try and make you and Dad proud, while cherishing the memories from my years at UMass.

George Kennedy can be reached at gkennedy@student.umass.edu

Let's not marry this amendment



Matt Giancola

June 14 is a very important day for equal-marriage supporters throughout the state of Massachusetts. On that day, the state legislature will convene for a Constitutional Convention where they will take up an anti-equal marriage amendment. If the amendment gets just 50 votes from senators and legislators, it goes to the ballot in 2008.

Here's a better idea: kill the anti-marriage amendment before it gets to the ballot.

In our country, we take pride in the fact that we live in a democracy and have the right to vote. We collectively decide who we want to represent and lead us. People have fought and died throughout American history just so they could enter the election booth. But a population should not vote for or against the civil rights of a minority of the population. Imagine what would have happened had inter-racial marriage been placed on the ballot in the 1950s, or the question of slavery to the ballot in Mississippi in the years following the Civil War.

To those who still think gay and lesbian citizens should be given second-class status in this country – get over yourselves.

The majority is not always right.

The process to get a Constitutional amendment adopted is a strange one. Only 50 members of the state legislature and senate are needed to vote for the amendment in two consecutive years. It then goes on the ballot in the following year. This means that a minority of the legislature can dictate what passes.

Talk about un-democratic. At the last convention, only 62 members of the legislature voted against giving all citizens the right to marry who they love, but it was enough to move it to the next round.

I'd like to remind these 62 representatives what has happened since 2003, when the Massachusetts Superior Court granted gay and lesbian couples the right to marry – nothing. People have gone on with their lives as they always have. There has been no eruption of a culture war in the streets of Worcester or Marlborough. Boston hasn't fallen into the sea and Springfield is still, well, Springfield. In fact, according to the United States Census Bureau, Massachusetts has the lowest divorce rate in the country, while the self-professed bastion of moral authority – the south – has the highest.

There have been a few rumors as to how the majority of the legislature will kill the anti-equality amendment. One is that legislators who vote against civil rights will lose the money for their pet projects in their districts. Aside from being in the convention period, the state is also working on the budget. While this may be a bit of a back-handed way of killing the amendment, it's a good idea. These people need to realize that liberty is not a political football. If a small, mischievous faction of the legislature wants to deny gay and lesbian citizens their rights, they shouldn't benefit from the perks of holding office and receive the money for a park or bridge in their hometowns.

While the thought of putting liberty to the ballot should make all citizens nervous, if it does indeed happen, there is good reason to believe the people of Massachusetts will vote in favor of individual liberty regardless. According to a poll by the Boston Globe in 2005, 56 percent of residents were in favor of gay marriage. Opponents of full marriage rights have lost their elections around the state. State Rep. Marie Parente (D-Milford) – a loud advocate against gay marriage – lost her seat in the primary to a young pro-equality lawyer.

To those who still think gay and lesbian citizens should be given second-class status in this country – get over yourselves. I'm tired of the holier-than-thou attitude that some people in this country take when it comes to morality. You say you base your beliefs on whatever's written in the Bible. You tell us you can quote it chapter and verse as well. Since I know you're going to say Leviticus, why don't you tell us what else is written in that book? You know, the part where thieves get their hands cut off and children can be killed by their parents for the most banal of violation. Clearly you aren't following everything written down in there, so stop using the Bible as a crutch for your hatred; it wasn't made for that.

If we are really out to create a more perfect society; whether in the eyes of God or through the rule of law, we must base our ideal in a few principles – the idea that everyone should be treated equally under the law, that no one is above the law and that defending freedom for all is one of the most noblest acts we can undertake.

More of America has come to accept gay and lesbian citizens as just as deserving of the rights and privileges that everyone else has access to. But bigotry cannot be stamped out with one court's ruling, and if we are ever to hope to live a truly tolerant society, we will have to open our hearts and remain vigilant when liberty is under siege.

Matt Giancola can be reached at mgiancol@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MAY 14, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Riverdance hoofs it to the Mullins

Cultic mythology alive in dance

BY MORGAN-ANN ROUSSEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For the first time ever in Amherst, the original international phenomenon "Riverdance" is set to showcase its one-of-a-kind Irish step show. The performance will run May 21-May 23 at the Mullins Center at the University of Massachusetts.

The show is produced by Moya Doherty and directed by John McColgan, with musical composition by Bill Whelan.

The performance is essentially a blend of dance, music and song that draws on Celtic mythology and Irish traditions, capturing audiences of all ages and cultures. Breathtaking not only in its sheer visual spectacle, "Riverdance" enchants with emotion and sensuality that haunts long after the curtains close.

Irish-born Niamh O'Connor (her first name is pronounced "nee-iv") is one of the original members of the "Riverdance" cast still performing with the show. She began her professional Irish dance career in 1995, when she was chosen for "Riverdance" at the Point Theater in Dublin, Ireland.

There are three different "Riverdance" productions currently touring around the world. Until three years ago, O'Connor danced in The Corrib Company's production, which is touring the United Kingdom and mainland Europe in 2007. During her time there, O'Connor performed in such nations as Scandinavia, Japan, New Zealand, Australia, China and all over Europe and North America. Since then, she has happily worked for the North American touring production of "Riverdance," called The Boyne Company. "It's great for me to be here," said O'Connor, "I love seeing the world." The third is The Foyle Company, which performs in Ireland every summer.

Considering these dancers perform eight shows per week, it's safe to say that their job is physically demanding — dancers only get one day off per week while traveling.

"We rehearse before the show every evening, to make sure everyone is together and knows what position they're in," said O'Connor, adding that the dancers undergo a special intense rehearsal every few weeks as well.

When O'Connor was four years old, her mother, who was a former dancer, put her in Irish step dancing classes at the Inis Falga Dancing School in Dublin with the hope of teaching and preserving the Irish cultural heritage. However, O'Connor said that there was no professional Irish dancing on any scale at that time, "Riverdance" being the first. "Now children have something to aspire to, but back then I didn't have that," said O'Connor.

The Riverdance production currently has three different companies touring around the world, and has been running strong for 12 years.

Niamh O'Connor is the only original member of the Riverdance cast still touring with the production.

Between 1988 and 1994, she studied with Marie Duffy and danced competitively, winning numerous medals in the Leinster, All-Ireland and World Competitions in both solo and figure dancing.

Shin splints are the most common injury for "Riverdance" dancers, who endure many strain injuries because of their tap performances.

"I have some [problems] because I've been doing it for so long. After every performance, we put ourselves in ice buckets up to our knees. It's painful but it does the job," said O'Connor. She went on to say that the ice keeps injuries at bay. "Your legs tire. Prevention is one of the key things, rather than trying to treat [the injury] when it arrives."

O'Connor said that she has stuck with "Riverdance" for 12 years because she loves performing and being on stage. "It's the best show that I could possibly be in to do what I do. If I move to another show, I wouldn't be doing myself any justice."

O'Connor said that when "Riverdance" opened in 1995 most dancers stayed with the show for an average of seven or eight years, but there are sometimes changes in the cast. Because of injuries, people may leave the troupe, or be transferred

See RIVERDANCE on page 7

Noho gets strummed

Kaukonen performs at Iron Horse Music Hall

BY MICHAEL HARDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On Thursday night, former Jefferson Airplane guitarist, Jorma Kaukonen, performed a fantastic set as yet another great day cooled into the bright night. The Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton was jam-packed well before Kaukonen and mandolinist Barry Mitterhoff stepped onto the stage. The food and beer were flowing nicely in a festive crowd of people ranging in all ages, including a pack of hippies who looked like they just stumbled out of the forest after a 40-year hike.

Right around 8 p.m., Kaukonen and Mitterhoff strode on stage to a thunderous, standing ovation. While his days with the Airplane and Hot Tuna involved electric guitar experimentation, these days, Kaukonen is fully concentrated on acoustic country blues. Many consider him the leading practitioner of the finger picking style of play, he also runs the Fur Peace Guitar Camp in Ohio.

Kaukonen and Mitterhoff, who played a plethora of instruments aside from his mandolin, jumped into their two-hour set immediately. The set list included mostly country folk and blues standards, such as "I Know You Rider" and "There's A Table Sitting In Heaven." The grace and ease at which they played their songs transported the crowd to a farmer's porch.

Former Jefferson Airplane guitarist, Jorma Kaukonen, performed at the Iron Horse Music Hall on Saturday night.

Both musicians are the cream of the crop at what they do, and the entire crowd gobbled up every note that they played. Kaukonen and Mitterhoff would joke in-between songs about each other and their past experiences. They even joked about creating a "Geezer Idol" to combat "American Idol."

The song, "Gridlock Blues," was a pounding, grit-filled song that built up in pace until they just stopped and said "thank you." As the crowd cheered, Kaukonen gave a sly look at Mitterhoff as they jumped right back into the song, which forced the crowd to yell even louder.

In "Death Don't Have No Mercy," the mandolin and Kaukonen's voice teamed up to create a darker shade of the blues. The gruffness of Kaukonen's voice can be compared to Johnny Cash's.

"I Know You Rider" had the

See KAUKONEN on page 7

Dennen does Pearl St.

Talks on road-life and beauty of the world

Up and coming musician, Brett Dennen, has been compared to song writers like Bob Dylan and Paul Simon, and said he considers those musicians his heroes.

BY OLGA DESHCHENKO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On a sunny Saturday afternoon, the Pearl Street Ballroom in Northampton looks almost unnatural without a crowd on its hardwood floors. The mere presence of one component — an artist on stage — promises that this venue will return to its innate state and host a concert that evening. On this particular night, the venue and its audience would be in for an exceptional musical treat, thanks to Brett Dennen, a co-headliner who was doing his sound check on stage.

"All Tom Petty, all night," said Dennen to his band mates. Having listened to Petty's greatest hits on the way to the show, Dennen goes through his sound check by recapturing the sound of an artist he highly admires. A bit of Celine Dion's "My Heart Will Go On," is also played, a song that puts a smile on the face of drummer Randy Schwartz.

When Dennen went to college in Santa Cruz, Calif., he began his studies to be an artist, but later switched his major to Community Studies and Social Change which explores sociology, community action, theory and social movements.

"I switched my major because art is something that I will always have," said Dennen.

While in school, Dennen also had the opportunity to combine his passion for music and social change.

"I was looking for a non-profit to work with because I had to do a six- month long field study, said Dennen. "I found these two women who wanted to start a non-profit and the three of us started this program that brings students from the bay area from different schools together in an outdoor setting for a week at a time. They educate each other about who they are and what makes them who they are. They learn about things like non-violence and conflict resolution."

Dennen is still involved with this program, which is called the Mosaic

See DENNEN on page 7

Lesh to play rural N.Y.'s Mountain Jam

BY MATTHEW SOLOMON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

From June 1 – June 3, the gorgeous Hunter Mountain in rural, upstate New York is the hot spot to be. The Mountain Jam Music Festival will take place, and will surely be a wild trip for all in attendance.

The site of this shindig is going to be held in the beautiful Catskill Mountains at the base of a world-class ski resort. There is nothing quite like listening to a concert from the top of a mountain when the band is set up at the base. It's like straddling a line with nature on one side and man on the other.

Mountain Jam will offer performances by some of the very best musicians in the world along with a competitively selected group of up-and-coming musical acts. The host of this three-day gathering is Warren Haynes (Gov't Mule, Allman Brothers, Grateful Dead) and he is going to be making the show very pleasurable for a whole lot of people, for the third year in a row.

Hunter Mountain is located approximately two hours from Amherst, which makes it a prime festival site for University of Massachusetts students who are looking for all the fun of the bigger festivals like Bonnaroo without the many hours devoted to traveling. Its timing is also very convenient since it's in the very beginning of the summer, before many students have to start working.

This festival isn't simply a lowly substitute for Bonnaroo, it's going to be a three-day extravaganza full of great people, rocking music and fun activities for all ages. The lineup this year is better than ever, including the likes of Umphrey's McGee, Robert Randolph & the Family Band, Michael Franti and Spearhead, G. Love & Special Sauce, Ozomatli, Tea Leaf Green, Gov't Mule and just added Phil Lesh & Friends (Lesh, Haynes, John Molo, John Scofield, Steve Molitz), just to name a few.

Lesh and friends in particular is a very exciting last-minute addition since this all star group rarely assembles to play, as a result of their busy touring schedules. Lesh and friends in fact tour quite frequently; however, the names of his friends often change. This particular gathering of friends is quite the tasty treat.

Rarely does Lesh assemble to play with guitar legends Scofield and Haynes at the same time. This should prove to be an extremely exciting performance in which many old Grateful Dead tunes will most likely be revamped, restructured and revitalized. This will be Lesh and Friends' only festival appearance of the entire summer, so all you Deadheads out there need not miss this.

Another exciting band at this year's Mountain Jam is the energetic and shape shifting Umphrey's McGee. They are at the peak of their musical career and seemingly nothing can slow them down. They have gone through some very rough times as of late, including the death of a close friend and a divorce; yet, they have only used this to fuel

See MOUNTAIN JAM on page 7

Former Grateful Dead bassist vocalist Phil Lesh will perform at this summer's Mountain Jam Festival with his band, "Phil Lesh and Friends."

Strange-Creek flowing to Greenfield, Mass.

40-plus musical acts to perform at camp

BY MORGAN-ANN ROUSSEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The 5th Annual Strange-Creek Campout is gearing up to take place on Memorial Day Weekend, with doors opening on early Saturday, May 26.

The venue for the music festival is Camp Kee-Wanee in Greenfield Mass., and offers guests trails, pavilions and music cabins. Strange-Creek entails two nights of camping with hours of live musical entertainment. Adding to the musical aspect of the festival are several other activities sure to keep all fest-goers amused. This includes fire twirlers, community bonfires, craft and food vendors selling clothes, jewelry, tapestries and glass blown pieces, to name a few. The venue is further livened up by rock gardens, artist demonstrations and body art.

Headlining artists are Max Creek and Strangefolk. Other performers include The Ryan Montbleau Band, The Hodge, Juggling Suns, Bruce Mandaro Band, Rev. Tor, Fungus Armungus, Otherwise, Nate Wilson Group, The Breakfast, Northern Light Tribe and the Jack Miller Band, plus several more. All together there are 40 different musical artists lined up to play the festival over the weekend, averaging to 20 shows each day.

This will be the third Strange-Creek visit for University of Massachusetts. "It is big enough that it has a variety of things constantly going on and yet small enough that you feel safe with your surroundings and with the people," said Dartmouth nursing major, Rachel Hill, who said that it is one of her favorite music festivals.

Hill went on to say that whenever the headlining bands are not playing, festival-goers can find various musicians set up all over the venue "just jamming out."

Another unique and refreshing aspect of the venue is a shallow stream that is located behind the camping area, allowing people to cool off. In past years, people have piled up rocks in the stream, creating elaborate rock formations. "The steam is so shallow that a lot of times you will see people take chairs and set them in the water to cool their feet and catch a breeze," said Hill.

Some convenient features on-site are running water, hot water showers and flushing toilets that are open 24 hours a day, not to mention a first aid tent and security.

Strange-Creek is sponsored by Wormtown Trading Company, which also hosts festivals such as Garden of Eden, Camp Creek and Wormfest. One of the Strange-Creek organizers, Mark Blanchette, said that they limit ticket sales to two thousand, a cap which generally comes close to selling out. He said they're expecting at least 18 hundred people at this year's Strange-Creek. "It's small enough to have a fun family vibe but big enough to be a party," said Blanchette.

A new feature this year is The River Worm Café, which is an open-mic venue hosted by Dave Brunyak of Northern Light Tribe. "It is great that the camping is held in the woods because there are things set up all throughout the trails," said Hill. Every year Vermville sets up the "Yellow sub" deep in the woods and displays light shows and other kinds of visual stimulation. This year there will be an Optical Delusion Light Show, which will use projector screens. There will also be canvas walls set up with hundreds of paint brushes and glow-in-the-dark paint for people to express themselves creatively.

The Strange-Creek music festival in Greenfield will be held at Camp Kee-Wanee, a venue ripe with unique activities such as light shows, open-mics, body art and more.

Every year the charity organization Strangers Helping Strangers holds a food drive and collects thousands of non-perishable food items for local charities.

Ticket prices are $65 if purchased by May 18, $75 if purchased by May 25 and $85 on the day of the show. Children under the age of 12 are admitted for free. Family camping and kids cabin entertainment is also offered at Strange-Creek, adding to its enticement as a family-friendly festival. A portion of all ticket proceeds benefit Camp Kee-Wanee. Strange-Creek gates open at 8 a.m. on May 26, and close at 1 p.m. on May 28.

Morgan Rousseau can be reached at Mrousseau@student.umass.edu

Dennen plays intimate set

DENNEN from page 6

Project, and is the program's music director, a position that fits him well. There is a constant trail of music that flows out of this artist, who finds there is a pattern to his songwriting.

"Usually what I do is I come up with a little melody or a little hook, and then I sit down with a piece of paper or a computer and just write as many lyrics as I can to that melody," said Dennen. "A whole bunch, more than I'll ever need for that song. Then I sit with a guitar and work with that melody and those lyrics. What I try to do is slash and burn, kind of cut away everything that I don't need to make the point that I want to make," he added.

This writing process has filled up two albums that led him through his recent three-month North American tour called "Love Speaks." Dennen is now on a smaller pick-up tour across the country, a set of shows that he is more than happy to play.

"I just love being with my friends on the road and having fun. The world is beautiful," said Dennen. "It is always fun to go to new places, revisit places we have been to before and connect with people in every town."

Having toured extensively in the past two years, a set of essential items has found its place in Dennen's luggage.

"I always have lots of Yerba Mate (a Southern green tea), good music, lots of paper for writing and drawing," explained Dennen. "I have a lot of Vitamin C, because it is important not to get sick while you are on tour. I also have a lot of random things you find at a health store, like licorice and ginger roots. I always, always have to have a book of poetry by Pablo Neruda and Ahmed Rami and sandals," he added.

A single Internet search for this artist will bring up similar results: he is usually compared to legendary songwriters such as Bob Dylan and Paul Simon.

"It feels incredible to be compared to those artists, but I can't make the same comparisons," said Dennen. "They are my heroes and to me, they make the best music ever made. I definitely do some things to try to sound like them, but I am at no way at that level. That is the music I listen to the most, so I think some of it trickles down from my ears to my fingers."

At Saturday night's show Lucas Reynolds of Blue Merle warmed up the crowd for the co-headliners The Animal Liberation Orchestra (ALO) and Dennen. The crowd began to slowly pour into the venue, as Reynolds shared personal stories with the audience.

By the time ALO began their performance, groups of devoted fans surrounded the stage and filled the atmosphere of the venue with energy and excitement. ALO played a long and impressive set, encouraging people to participate by clapping and singing along. The crowd was an inconsistent age mix, proving that ALO's music appeals across generations. Almost everyone in the audience was dancing, and those who were not were on the verge – it was difficult to simply stand still.

Dennen's melodious songs and frequent interactions with his fans cooled down the crowd as the night neared the end. He utilized the musical talents of all the members of ALO, who came out on stage and helped him entertain. Dennen dedicated his set to all the mothers of the world, in honor of Mother's Day.

His brief conversations with the audience gave his set an intimate feeling, as if Dennen was playing for a group of good friends. The sincerity of his performance made the crowd feel appreciated as Dennen successfully transferred the results of his songwriting to the audience.

Asked to imagine a scenario where he would only have enough time to share one song with the world, Dennen chose "American Tune" by Simon.

"I can name a bunch, but I'll stick with my first instinct," said Dennen, "because 'American Tune' sums everything up."

Olga Deshchenko can be reached at odeshche@student.umass.edu

Acclaimed show going strong

RIVERDANCE from page 6

back and forth between the three production companies, but in general there isn't a large turnover of dancers.

She is currently one of the only remaining cast members who performed at Radio City Music Hall in New York for the first time in 1996, and she also holds the record for the greatest number of performances in the show by any cast member. She took part in the opening ceremony for the Special Olympics, which took place in Dublin in June 2003.

O'Connor said she feels the show has been running strong and successfully since it started because of all the different elements, not just the dancing. "There is award-winning music, Russian ballet dancers, wonderful singers, five piece bands and flamenco dancers. The show has something for every age group," said O'Connor.

Amazingly enough, between touring and rehearsing, O'Connor finds the time to study Advanced Interior Design with the Regency Academy of Fine Arts in London. "Luckily I have the whole morning and the afternoon to study. Many of the performers study to be Irish dance teachers," said O'Connor. Her interest in art and design sprouted before she joined "Riverdance." "When I was 18, I loved design and wanted to go to art college. When I got older, I realized I should."

There are 67 members in the Boyne Company, including 41 dancers made up of 32 Irish dance troupe members, six Russian folk dancers, two American tappers and one Spanish Flamenco dancer. The ages of performers range from 19 to 32. The company estimates that their dancers go through about 10 pairs of shoes per year, no surprise considering that there is an estimated 10 thousand individual steps per dancer in each show.

The wardrobe department of Riverdance is responsible for 685 costumes, and 800 individual costume accessories for the show.

Since the onset of "Riverdance," the company has played more than 9,000 performances throughout 32 countries around the world, traveling a distance equivalent to the moon and back, more than 500-thousand miles.

Tickets for the upcoming performances at the Mullins Center start at $47.50 and go up to $60. They're available at the Mullins Center box office, Ticket Master, or by calling 413-733-2500.

Morgan Rousseau can be reached at Mrousseau@student.umass.edu

A former Airplane jams at 66

KAUKONEN from page 6

crowd standing, dancing and singing along to what is an all-time favorite jam song. The only Airplane song they played was "Good Shepherd," and it definitely rocked.

While Kaukonen was the main bill, Mitterhoff kept right up with him. Mitterhoff took over most of the soloing duties, and one solo during a Merle Haggard tune left everybody stunned, including Kaukonen. After the song, he joked that he almost forgot to keep playing because of the solo.

At 66 years old, Kaukonen seemed far removed from the 1960s, but he did throw in a few jokes about himself from that time period. At this point, he seems to be enjoying the rural country life and just playing his guitar.

Kaukonen's recently released album, "Stars in My Crown," is a well crafted, meandering collection of music that is receiving much praise. The Fur Peace Guitar Camp information can be found at www.furpeaceranch.com for those who might be interested in trekking out to Ohio for some great lessons. Also, anyone who is traveling down to the Bonnaroo Music Festival this year can see him play with Jack Cassady in their blues band, Hot Tuna.

Michael Hardman can be reached at Mhardman@student.umass.edu.

Gov't Mule to Jam

MOUNTAIN JAM from page 6

their fire. They have been able to use their rocky experiences in life as inspiration and have unified together as a band to create some intensely soulful musical material. They're at the point in their musical career where they are just beginning to be known as veterans of the rock world, whereas even just a year ago they were still up-and-coming, so this is obviously a band to look out for.

Another act to check out is the funky and politically rebellious sounds of Michael Franti and Spearhead. Franti is an extremely talented song writer with beautifully written, socially conscious lyrics and a rocking band to back him up. He tends to play in the daytime and spreads cheerful vibes to his crowds like rippling ocean waves caressing anyone and everything within reach.

Robert Randolph and The Family Band is probably one of the most talented ensembles in the world of music today and yes, they will also be at Mountain Jam. Listening to Randolph is like listening to the reincarnation of Jimi Hendrix but on the slide guitar (he will sometimes play a regular guitar as well). His fusion of rock and heartfelt gospel church music has given him a distinct and powerful sound that would make even George W. Bush want to "get down."

Hailing from New Jersey, this group brings an energy that will blow your mind from the first booming note until the last. The bass player, Danyel Morgan, is also an amazing musician himself. He has a frantic sounding slap bass technique and a voice that can match the pitch of Michael Jackson himself. He is quite possibly one of the best bassists in the world and the fact that he has such an amazing voice just goes to show that he is a versatile double threat which brings a whole different element to the ensemble.

Gov't Mule is another band not to be missed at this year's festivity. This is Haynes' own personal project in which he is truly able to take the wheel and put the pedal to the floor. His southern-rock sound is beautifully crafted. He uses this band mostly to play his own songs which are powerful and soulful. Musically and lyrically this group is very impressive. Don't be surprised if he rips some jaw-dropping solos during this set and maybe even brings up a special guest performer to jam with.

The fact that this is going to be smaller than Bonnaroo and other more well-known festivals allows the atmosphere to be slightly more laid back, family friendly and clean at Mountain Jam. Drinking water, wash stations, showers, outdoor portable toilets and indoor toilettes will all be provided courtesy of the Mountain Jam organizers. These are all convenient amenities not common at larger festivals. Craft vendors, food vendors, packaged beer, pay telephones and ATMs will all be available at the campsite as well.

Matthew Solomon can be reached at Msolomon@student.umass.edu

SUPERCUTS®
every time®
GRADUATION SPECIAL
$2 off
ADULT HAIRCUT
(reg. $13.95 or more)
SUPERCUTS®
Coupon valid only at participating locations. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. One coupon per customer. Present coupon prior to payment of services. ©2007 Supercuts, Inc. Printed U.S.A.
Offer expires 07/15/07.
GSHC
Amherst Plaza
181 University Drive, Amherst, MA
(413) 259-1135
Come in and receive a free bottle of
Paul Mitchell's Awapuhi shampoo
(while supplies last)

UM captures A-10 crown

SOFTBALL from page 12

fence and Acampora rolled into second with a one-out double. Freshman Jill Andrews's pinch run for Acampora but wasn't on the bases too long. After battling to a full count, sophomore Samantha Salato blooped a pitch over the head of SLU second baseman Christy Ernst scoring Andrews from second to tie the game.

"[Salato] has really come on of late. I think the last couple weeks of the season she was giving us great at-bats," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said.

The pair of Minutewomen who committed the second-inning mistakes found themselves in the middle of the action again in the bottom of the third.

Williams led the inning off with a textbook piece of hitting. After SLU pitcher Stacy Gillette got two strikes on her, she took the 2-2 pitch down the left-field line for a double.

Down one, Sortino typically plays for the tie with a runner in scoring position. But when senior Amanda Morin stepped to the plate following Williams' double, Sortino refused to give the Billikens an out. Morin swung away and rolled a ball toward SLU shortstop Brittany Schmidt. The ball took Schmidt deep into the hole before she could gather it. Schmidt held onto the ball as Morin touched first base without a throw. Molinari then tried to accomplish two things at once. With runners on first and second, she looked to move them both over with a bunt. But whenever Molinari lays down a bunt, she's looking for a hit.

She dropped the bunt directly in front of home plate and took off to first. An SLU defender picked up the ball and looked to third, but could do nothing with it. Molinari reached on a fielder's choice and the Minutewomen had the bases loaded for with no outs for Cullington.

Cullington's at-bat provided an array of motion. First there was disgust on Cullington's part. Early in the count, she swung and missed at a Gillette offering. The UMass slugger was visibly annoyed with herself and backed out of the box.

Humor followed disgust. After Cullington let a pitch pass for ball three, she tossed her bat toward the UMass bench and took off for first base. After realizing the count she walked backed to the plate as matter of factly as she could.

Things eventually worked out for the A-10 leader in home runs. The next pitch was an inside fastball and Cullington turned on it. She sent the pitch over the scoreboard just past the left-field fence and with it broke the UMass and A-10 single-season home run record with her 15th of the season.

"I had two strikes already and I wasn't going to let her get it by me again," Cullington said. "[Breaking the record] is awesome. I'm very thrilled to be remembered that way. It's just a relief. I don't need to think about homeruns. I don't have to get asked about it anymore. I'm thrilled to death, but what's more important that we won."

The grand slam gave UMass a 5-1 lead and the Minutewomen weren't done. Junior Lauren Proctor singled up the middle after Cullington's grand slam. Mollica moved her to second with a bunt. Acampora looked to bring Proctor home, but SLU pitcher Lorena Floccari, who replaced Gilette after the grand slam, jammed her, forcing a weak foul pop out to first baseman Appenfeller.

Almost out of the jam, Floccari threw two straight balls to Salato. Salato knew Floccari had to throw a strike so she sat on the fastball. She got that fastball, just off the plate and lined by the second baseman, the ball hit the ground and took off straight through the right-center field gap to the wall. Proctor scored from second base and the Minutewomen took a 6-1 lead.

"I'm really sure where [the pitch] was," Salato said. "I think it was outside though. I see [Floccari's] ball really well. I had two balls and I was just thinking swing at the first strike. I saw it was outside and went with the pitch."

At inning's end, the Minutewomen led SLU 8-1. Balschmiter allowed two runs in the top of the fourth. The second run came around when Rachel Heet turned on a pitch from Balschmiter. The ball hit the right-center field wall on the fly missing a home run by inches.

In the fifth inning, the Minutewomen had scary moment. Ernst laced a pitch right back to Balschmiter. The ball struck her, getting a piece of her rib and hand. After she was down for several minutes, the big right-hander got up and finished out the inning – and the game.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

BRIAN TEHRANI/COLLEGIAN

Amanda Morin had one hit and scored a run in the team's seven-run third inning, helping the Minutewomen capture the A-10 Championship.

Samantha Salato had two hits and two RBIs against SLU.

Minutewomen flash offensive versatility in win the game. In both of those instances, UMass' hits did all of the damage. They scored the six runs on eight hits and only a few errors by the weak Temple defense.

OFFENSE from page 12

The team's semifinal win over Fordham showed off another ability of UMass coach Elaine Sortino's offense. The patience displayed by all nine hitters led to both walks and better pitches to hit. While UMass' offense ranks among the best in the conference, it also benefit from the mistakes made by its opponents.

The fifth inning of UMass' semifinal win over Fordham began with the score at 0-0 and featured just one hit from the Minutewomen. But when the Rams recorded the third out of the inning, UMass led 5-0.

Initially, runs scored as a result of the opposition's miscues discredit the value in the eyes of those casually observing the game. But the fact that the Minutewomen consistently find themselves in a position to take advantage of the inevitable mistakes made by their opponents proves it's more than just a series of coincidences.

By working themselves into good hitter's counts and staying aggressive on the base paths, the Minutewomen force their opponents to make quality plays and quick decisions to get them out.

But in its win over Saint Louis in the A-10 Championship game, UMass didn't wait for an error by a Billiken infielder. The Minutewomen took the pitches up in the zone from SLU pitcher Stacy Gillette and drove them in every direction.

"We knew [Saint Louis] was going to try and [pitch us high]," Molinari said. "We knew if we laid off the up pitch they'd have to come down. So we were looking down all day and looking for pitches around our thighs and handle the ball like we usually do."

The depth of UMass' lineup provides the versatility. At times when its most powerful hitters struggle, those who rely on speed and contact can do the damage and the opposite applies.

"It's not like the top of our order is the strength," sophomore Samantha Salato said. "It's one through nine, everyone hits. Everyone's capable of hitting. I mean, [nine hitter] Whitney [Williams] got [the third-inning rally against Saint Louis] going. So it's not just the top of our order. We're all strong hitters."

Salato's performance on the day echoed the words of Molinari as well. In her second at-bat, after SLU's pitcher threw two high pitches out of the strike zone, Salato took the first pitch she got in the strike zone to right-center field for a triple.

The same is true for sophomore shortstop Whitney Williams. All season, her ability to get on base from the nine spot in UMass' batting order led to RBI opportunities for the top of the Minutewoman lineup.

Salato (.320) and Williams (.300) rank third and sixth in batting average, respectively.

In the fifth-inning rally, Williams got two hits in the inning. Her double down the left-field line started the streak of five straight runners to reach base. She also singled through the right side of the infield to drive in the seventh and final run of the inning.

With the NCAA Tournament looming, the Minutewomen need production from every bat in their lineup. Six of the nine regular hitters for UMass enter tomorrow hitting above .300.

While Saturday's performance wasn't perfect, Thursday's win over Temple showed off what the Minutewomen are truly capable of when they're are their best. Six of the nine regular hitters ended the A-10 Tournament hitting over .300.

Typically, the top of a batting order gets on base, the middle drive them in and the bottom of a lineup just does what it can. But for the Minutewomen, things are a little bit different.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

Birth in Super Regionals at stake

TOURNAMENT from page 12

bracket. The tables occupied by players, coaches and staff erupted when hosts announced that UMass would play host once again.

"The athletic department did an amazing job with hosting regionals last season," senior captain Candice Molinari said. "It's really exciting that we get to host again. It's always great to stay on our home turf. Our fans are the best out there, so the longer we get to stay home, the better."

The Minutewomen view the NCAA Tournament as a chance to prove themselves every season. Last season, UMass was one win away from the Women's College World Series before losing consecutive games to Northwestern.

If UMass hopes for a return trip to the second stage of the NCAA tournament, the Super Regionals, it will likely need to get by Oklahoma.

The Sooners (52-6) enter the tournament ranked third nationally and fresh off a Big 12 Championship.

The location of the school allows the Sooners more practice time during the year and stronger competition, things the Minutewomen must do without. Regardless, the Minutewomen, owners of the nation's longest winning streak (26 games), are excited to host the tournament.

"We're thrilled to be home and not have to worry about traveling across the country," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "We're looking forward to being a good host and, hopefully, having some great crowds come out to see some great softball.

"This is the march we've wanted to make. This is what we've worked for, to get into the tournament and to make a march to the [Women's] College World Series. And we know it's going to be tough. We know what it's going to take, but this is what we dreamt of."

While the Minutewomen are confident they can advance far into the tournament, no one has more respect for the Big 12 Champions than Sortino.

"They're very good. I watched them play a couple times this year on [television]," Sortino said. "They've got great hitting, good base running and very solid pitching and defense."

The Minutewomen enter the national tournament, playing the best softball they've played all season. But Sortino commented that if the Minutewomen hope to repeat and improve upon last season's success, they will need to step up their performance.

"We have to play like we played [in the first game of the A-10 Tournament]," against Temple," Sortino said. "We've got to take great care of the softball. We can't extend innings to people by making mistakes."

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

Celebration on hold until after NCAAs

RICE from page 12

Oklahoma coming to the Pioneer Valley.

Last season, the Maroon and White won its first four NCAA games, and was five outs away from advancing to the Women's College World Series (WCWS).

This year's version of the Minutewomen remembers the feeling of being so close to the end, and is closing in on it again.

When the game was over, the team barely celebrated. It was almost as if the players and coaches were treating the A-10 title as a formality, something they had to get out of the way before they went on to bigger things.

"This is just one step to where we want to go," Balschmiter said on Saturday. "We want to keep going. We're almost expected to win [the A-10 Championship] every year."

And now that it's out of the way, Colgate, Long Island and Oklahoma are the next steps on the ladder.

The Sooners may be a huge hurdle to overcome, but in this writer's opinion, the 2007 Minutewomen are more equipped to reach the WCWS than any UMass team since Danielle Henderson was in the circle – back when the team still played behind Totman Gymnasium.

Not only is this team as loaded offensively as any year prior (.307 batting average), but the defense has improved enough to no longer be the Achilles' heel, and freshman hurler Bailey Sanders is a more than adequate No. 2 pitcher to Balschmiter.

If Balschmiter can't get it done blowing away opposing batters with 70 miles-per-hour fastballs, Sanders should be able to catch them off guard with her numerous movement and off-speed pitches.

Although it's been tossed around that putting Sanders in after Balschmiter got hurt in the A-10 title game to get her some post-season experience (she was in the bullpen, waiting), the statement Balschmiter made to the rest of the team by staying in the game was invaluable.

"It's going to take a lot more than that to take me out [of the game]," Balschmiter said about her decision to stay in. "I'm in it for the long haul. I'm in it for [my teammates]. I'm doing everything for them."

Anyways, Sanders should be ready to go if called upon down the road. It almost seems as though pressure situations just slide right off her. From the time each player steps into the batter's box until she's pointing to the outfield giving the number of outs while the batter walks to the dugout, Sanders never stops smiling on the field.

That's something UMass coach Elaine Sortino is well aware of, and she won't hesitate to throw Sanders into the fire if necessary.

In an April 14 contest against Charlotte, Sortino had Sanders going into a one-run game to close out the win in the seventh inning.

UMass stretched it to three runs before Sanders got to the circle, but it's clear that Sortino trusts her young hurler in crucial situations. And if Balschmiter was too hurt to continue on Saturday, Sanders would have been standing in that circle without a second thought.

"[Balschmiter] said she could go," Sortino said. "But Bailey was ready to come in at a moment's notice. She had everything going in the bullpen."

It doesn't hurt that the Minutewomen have been playing almost every game at home for the past month and will have at least one more week at the UMass Softball Complex before they have to travel again.

UMass is the hottest team in the nation (26 consecutive wins) and has won its last 32 at home. Despite a general lack of quality competition since early in the regular season, this team is in prime form at the right time.

They struggled against some of the nation's best, but that's to be expected from a northern team who, at the time, had yet to step on its own field because it was still buried under a foot of snow.

Still, the Minutewomen picked up quality wins against teams like California, DePaul and San Diego State. They also took No. 4 Texas A&M (who came to Amherst last year for the NCAA Regional last year) into extra innings.

Three months later, every player from the top of the order to the bottom is heating up. Candice Molinari, Stacy Cullington, Lauren Proctor and Amanda Acampora have been stellar at the plate all season.

Now Whitney Mollica, Amanda Morin, Jess Serio and Whitney Williams are picking it up as well. Samantha Salato has quietly put together a very strong sophomore campaign, and might be the team's unsung hero, coming up with timely hitting in key spots.

The Minutewomen didn't celebrate their conference championship since they knew they had to work to earn it, there are other things on their minds, namely, Oklahoma City – site of the 2007 WCWS.

"There's one place where we'll celebrate this year," Sortino said. "We've just got to keep walking forward."

The Minutewomen may have passed on their first chance to celebrate postseason glory, but don't worry, they have the talent to be celebrating in early June, in the one place Sortino will let them celebrate, Oklahoma City.

Jeremy Rice is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

Got bulky trash?

Dump your apartment cleanout garbage in the right place:

Bring your student ID to get in free!

The Amherst Transfer Station

Accepts furniture, mattresses, TVs & computers • Disposal fees apply

740 Belchertown Road (Route 9), 2 miles East of Dunkin Donuts

Open 8am-2pm Tuesdays, Thursdays, & Saturdays

For more information, visit www.amherstma.gov/recycling or call the Amherst Dept. of Public Works 413-259-3050

Come Enjoy the Valley's Best Ribs, Chicken, & Pulled Pork

Try the world famous unlimited hot and cold bar which includes:

BBQ Ranch Beans, Dirty Rice, Collard Greens, Oranged Glazed Sweet Potatoes, Hickory Smoked Potatoes, Coleslaw, Dill Potato Salad, Corn and Black-eyed Pea Salad, Homemade Soup, and much more.

All take out dinners included a choice of three items from our hot and cold bar and all sandwiches come with a choice of two sides.

BUBS BAR-B-Q "Pig Out Lounge"

Children's Menu Available
www.bubsbbq.com
Route 116 • Sunderland, MA
413-548-9630

Bat, pen supply softball star with inspiration

Junior Lauren Proctor, a star on diamond and in classroom

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It seems kind of ironic – a collegiate softball player majoring in journalism and English, who wants to cover music instead of sports. But that is exactly the case for Massachusetts junior left fielder Lauren Proctor.

The equation may seem a little stranger when one considers her pedigree. Her stepfather, Richard Restuccia, played professionally for the Milwaukee Brewers before wear and tear on his shoulder forced him into retirement. But it's not just papa Proctor, however. Her mom is just as big a sportsaholic.

"They are sports nuts. I'll give them a call and they're saying, 'Today we're watching the Atlanta Braves and then we're going to watch this sport and this sport,'" Proctor says. "And so I'll be talking to them and my mom will be, 'Yeah. Home run!'" Proctor says.

Despite this overwhelming upbringing into the wide world of sports, Proctor thinks she would rather write about concerts and tattooed guitarists than sports games and Major League outfielders.

And she isn't wasting any time getting experience and perfecting her craft.

So far, she has already gotten her foot in the door with multiple music publications like Performer Magazine, a publication for which she writes about artists coming out of the area. But this 21-year-old likes to keep busy – so she spreads herself around. She also writes for www.talkofnewyork.com, a hip-hop site run by Black Entertainment Television photographers, which receives 104,000 unique visits a day. The site allowed her to interview people like Tyrese, Clinton Sparks (Diddy's DJ) and Fantasia.

Proctor also works for Skope Magazine – an internationally circulated magazine that just agreed to a distribution deal with Barnes and Noble.

She also writes promos for Existence Records, an electronica label out of Canada that just had a release featured on iTunes Canada, UK and Japan, reaching No. 8 on the Japanese charts.

But Proctor doesn't stop there.

She is also in the process of starting an online music magazine called Thrill Music Mag. It will cover all musical genres and is set to launch Sept. 1. She says she has stories lined up with artists ranging from My Chemical Romance to Justin Timberlake and Amy Winehouse. The Web site will feature a section called "Listenmakers" that will feature highlight artists who aren't necessarily "chart-famous."

"I love writing about music. I've always loved music and in high school I made it a point to find new bands before they got famous. I feel lucky that I've found something I truly enjoy so much," she says. "My parents have definitely encouraged me to be a sports writer, but I guess I feel a different calling with my life. I love sports and have really enjoyed playing but just don't necessarily see sports journalism in my future."

No matter what kind of a career her future holds or what kind of doors her diploma opens, Lauren knows that right now she plays for UMass softball – and that's all that matters. Her team just won the Atlantic 10 Championship for the 13th time in 14 years – and 19th overall – and the Minutewomen have no intention of stopping there.

It was announced during the NCAA Division I Softball Selection Show on ESPN News yesterday that UMass will host the regionals of the NCAA Tournament for the second year in a row.

"I think it took us a little while to get going and to figure some things out, which is natural. But, I would say, that we're doing well," Proctor says.

It didn't take Proctor long to figure things out, as she was a key factor in the Minutewomen's success from day one.

Heading into the further depths of the season, she maintains a batting average of .367. Over the course of the season she racked up 33 runs, 54 hits, 40 RBIs and a .503 slugging percentage. She is the epitome of a solid player – though she does not lead the team in any of the aforementioned categories, she is consistently in the top two or three and she will always come through in the clutch.

"[Lauren] is as timely as anybody," UMass coach Elaine Sortino says. "She's probably one of our best hitters with runners in scoring position this year. She's solid."

Though Proctor's .306/.386/.500 numbers may jump off the stat sheet to the casual reader, they are still the result of the steady progress she made since first donning the maroon and white.

She started all 54 games of her freshman season, finishing fourth on the team – and ninth in the A-10 – with a .322 batting average. By the time this season ended, she accumulated 27 runs scored, 47 hits (including three home runs) and 31 RBIs. She also garnered a slugging percentage of .466 and an on-base percentage of .555.

She continued her excellence during her sophomore year, again starting in all 57 games. She mustered a .364 batting average to accompanies her 39 runs scored, 60 hits, 20 RBIs and a .419 on-base percentage.

Her outstanding numbers earned [illegible] selected as a preseason All-[illegible] by ESPN The Magazine All-[illegible] Softball Coaches Association All-Region, Atlantic 10 All-Tournament team, first-team Diamond 10 All-[illegible] conference and [illegible] All-Conference.

[illegible] accolades have the ability to make any player look down her nose at her peers – but not Proctor. Her good work in amount statistics or awards has not her the attention of the entire rest of the sports world but rather is just how well day-in and day-out Lauren [illegible].

"I would say that I work for the [illegible] team and to help the team and hopefully the team will do well in the end, but those types of honors are just an added bonus," she says. "It's nice to get that recognition, so it's just a bonus for all the work that happens."

While the adjustment moving from the West Coast to the East Coast might pose difficulty for most young students, it was no problem for Proctor, who is used to uprooting and relocating.

Born in Phoenix, Ariz., she moved to Pismo Beach, Calif. After finishing her sophomore year of high school in the picturesque California city, her family again picked-up and moved this time to Redmond, Wash. After Lauren tossed her high school graduation cap into the air, her father's job as a regional manager for a sprinkler company forced them to pack their bags and move to La Jolla, Calif.

Whether it was this constant relocating at such a young age or the company that met her at UMass, Proctor did a terrific job of adjusting from the laid-back atmosphere of California to New England.

"I think that move in the middle of high school really helped me embrace a new place and the team was amazingly welcoming," she says. "[Sortino] made a point to make sure that I understood that I would be a key player from the very beginning and it was a great transition."

Where a young, aspiring college athlete chooses to attend school depends very heavily on the coach doing the recruiting and Proctor couldn't be happier that Sortino sought her out.

During her recruitment, the two would talk on the phone for hours at a time. Proctor says her coach shows genuine interest in who her players are and really tries to understand them. Anything they shared over the phone held true once Proctor arrived at UMass – nothing is fake with Sortino.

"The coach I talked to over the phone during my recruiting period is the same coach that has been here," Proctor says.

Sortino is relentless on her players. She wants the very best out of everyone that sports a Minutewoman jersey and expects them to eat and drink nothing but UMass Softball. And this legacy that gripped Proctor actually stretches throughout the United States.

"I talked to some other coaches and Jackie Joseph of Michigan State said, '[Sortino] is legendary.' She used that word, 'legendary' and that's when I kind of realized, 'You know what? She is,'" Proctor says. "She's a great person, a great coach. I couldn't ask for more.

"She is tough on us, but I think it's because she wants us to succeed. She has the belief that if you're going to succeed in the classroom, you'll also succeed on the field and so you have to bring your work ethic to every aspect of your life."

It usually takes just the right coach to ease the initial blow of the college jump and Sortino did just that. But, of course, Proctor's teammates deserve some of the credit.

This season's version of the Minutewomen formed a bond that is rare among modern-day sports teams. It's a no-pressure, low-key atmosphere, where the girl at the locker next to yours is not just your teammate, but also your friend.

"It's a great group of girls," Proctor says. "We have a really healthy team culture where everyone's friendly, everyone is really respectful. There's not a lot of seniority issues. It's really a model team – one of the best teams that I've ever played for."

Oh, and did you know Lauren Proctor speaks Spanish?

It's true.

While growing up in Arizona, she had a nanny from Mexico City named Tupe. With Tupe knowing only Spanish, Proctor was brought up learning the language. When Tupe stopped working for the family, however, Proctor knowledge of Spanish depleted, so she took courses at U-Mass in order to pay homage to the person who helped raise her. In fact, she plans on getting a Spanish minor.

"It's always come fairly easily and it's something that I'm really passionate about. So, when you're passionate about something doing the work for it never seems like work," she says.

That equals a double major in journalism and English with a minor in Spanish. That will be a pretty impressive resume when applying to Oxford. Her dream is to go there for grad school for her PhD and she plans to apply to become a Rhodes Scholar. She knows it is a longshot, but that will not stop her from going for her dream.

In fact, she plans to get an early start by heading over to Trinity College at Oxford for part of the summer to study. While there, she will probably indulge in a little traveling, training and maybe even working with Softball U.K.

But, whether she is learning Spanish in the U.S. or using American English in England or covering Nas for a living, Proctor is going to make noise with something other than her bat in the future. She will use the same diligence and hard work she does on the softball field to achieve whatever dreams lie within her grasp.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

Junior Lauren Proctor ranks fourth in school history with a .352 batting average. In her three seasons in left field for UMass, she has scored 90 runs, recored 161 runs, driven in 91 runs and collected 217 total bases.

In her junior year at UMass, Lauren Proctor has a .367 batting average, 54 hits and 40 runs batted in. She has started all but one game in left field for the Minutewomen this season.

From Your Dorm* To The Airport And Back!

*central campus pick-ups during heavy travel times

- VIP Exclusive Service
- Door-to-Door Service
- Charter & Group Service
- Professional Drivers
- New, Well Maintained Vans
- Scheduled Van-Share Service

Call: 253-1350 or Out of Area Toll-Free at 1-800-872-8752
Or Book Online at www.valleytransporter.com

Valley Transporter The Easy Way to the Airport!

STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION UMASS AMHERST

You are cordially invited to attend the

UMass Amherst

Commencement Ball 2007

Enchanted Voyage

Thursday, May 24, 2007 • 9:00 p.m. - 1:00 a.m.

Student Union Complex

Formal Attire - Cash Bar

Light Hors d'oeuvres • Desserts • Dancing • Horse & Carriage Rides

$20 per person

Tickets may be obtained at UMassAlumni.com/students,
Alumni Association Office, Memorial Hall (545-2317), or
Student Alumni Association table on the Campus Center Concourse April 25-26, May 1-3, and May 8-10

Commencement Ball 2007 is supported by:

UMass Amherst Alumni Association • Alumni Student Loan Consolidation Program • Coca-Cola
Student Alumni Association • Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life • Auxiliary Services
Housing and Residential Life • College of Engineering • College of Social and Behavioral Sciences
School of Nursing • College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics • Commonwealth College
Isenberg School of Management • Dean of Students Office • College of Humanities and Fine Arts

UMass concludes season in Philadelphia

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts rowing team capped off another season of tremendous ups and downs at the Dad Vail regatta in Philadelphia. The Minutewomen did not figure into the victory, however. Purdue stole much of the spotlight with two first-place finishes and one third-place finish, more than any other crew. Both Cal-Long Beach and Ohio State were the only crews with a first and second-place finish.

Out of the five boats that the University of Massachusetts put on the Schuylkill River this weekend, only the varsity eight boat finished in the top three in its respective race.

However, UMass coach Jim Dietz believed that his two varsity boats made it to the final races with relative ease.

"Every step went according to plan, Dietz said." "It was pretty easy for our two varsity boats to make it into the finals, we kind of new that. We kind of knew who was going to be faster through the first day or so, you can look at the times from one race to the next [to figure out who the fastest boats were]."

The two varsity boats that made it to the championship race in their respective classes were the varsity eight boat and the lightweight eight boat.

The UMass novice four boat won its first heat in a time of eight minutes. They narrowly beat second-place San Diego by five seconds and George Mason was just behind, at a time of 8:06. However the lightweight four boat would come in fourth-place in the semi-finals, falling one second behind the third-place boat from William and Mary, which finished in a time of 7:40.

The UMass novice eight boat placed second in its preliminary race behind the boat from Philadelphia, which won the race in a time of 7:05. The Maroon and White would fall in the semi-finals, however, finishing fourth at a time of 7:03, three seconds behind third place Alabama.

UMass' second varsity eight boat finished third in its heat with a time of 7:01, beating out second-place Temple and third place Bryn Mawr. In the semi-finals, UMass again came away with a third-place finish, beaten by first-place Buffalo and second-place Saint Joseph's.

Dietz attributed the success of the Minutewomen to finishing their races strong at this weekend's regatta. At least in the second varsity eight race, there were at least thirty teams involved, making it that much tougher for teams to win.

Tara Guinan, captain of the rowing team, explained that there was a certain process that her boat followed starting with the race on Friday, en route to a third-place finish in the finals.

"We won our heat, but I think that wasn't our strongest race," said Guinan. "I think that we were just kind of trying to get into the groove for the upcoming weekend. We were racing the fastest crews there. But I think that we just kept with that type of rhythm in our rowing."

Guinan also articulated that in Saturday's races, her boat got into "race mode." Before their race in the finals, the women of the varsity eight boat talked over what they did in the previous two races and what they needed to do better. This planning led to their fastest start off of the starting line all season and the fastest rate of the season, which was approximately 36 strokes per second.

Senior Maria Arcari described the scrambling required of the lightweight eight boat in order to race this past weekend. Freshman Laura Silverman replaced Annie Malinkevich, because the senior had a prior academic engagement. The lightweight eight boat finished three seconds behind first-place Lehigh in its heat, only to finish in fifth place in the finals.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

Captains provide leadership for successful crew season

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

Enough with the idea that nobody likes to watch crew.

If you attend one of the Massachusetts rowing team's races, maybe you would change your tone. As any woman on the team will tell you, it is nothing short of an honor to suit up for the Maroon and White and push your body to the absolute limit on the water.

UMass coach Jim Dietz has been at the helm of the program for over 10 years and has much to boast about. Since the inception of the Atlantic 10 Women's Rowing Championship in 1996, UMass has won 12 straight A-10 titles and is a force within the region.

Much of the Minutewomen's success over the past four years in particular can be attributed to the team's current captains, senior Tara Guinan and graduate student Gabrielle Papineau.

Gabrielle has been involved with Minutewomen rowing since she transferred here as a sophomore. Enjoying her experience at UMass so much, Gabrielle decided to pursue her master's degree in kinesiology.

It says a lot about the program that a woman like Gabrielle would join the team. She hails from Ottawa, Ontario and has rowed competitively for many years, even contemplating a spot on the Canadian National Rowing Team.

However, the chance to row at one of the most competitive programs in the northeast was very alluring to her.

"In the region, it was top-dog and you went into races and you had such a solid team that you came out on top and really got to experience winning," Papineau says.

With a little hesitation and trepidation, Papineau accepted her captainship. She admitted that there is a certain feeling that everything rests on the shoulders of the captain, which can be rather intimidating at times. She alluded to the fact that Dietz gives her and Guinan significant independence. However, with independence comes great responsibility.

"When it comes to being captain, you are responsible for the other 60-some-odd women on the team and with that responsibility, you learn a lot about the women on the team and about working with such a group and problem-solving," Papineau says.

Papineau also says that she tries to commit herself wholly to the team and be an emotional leader of her teammates. She also knew that it would help her grow as a person as well, making captaincy less of a burden. It's a great honor and a testament to Papineau's work-ethic and dedication to the team.

One need only look at why she is back at UMass as a grad student. She was convinced to obtain a master's degree in kinesiology, a common area of study among rowers, due to the close relationship between the major and sport.

An aspect of captainship is to serve as a role model and a resource for her teammates. The adversity that Papineau has encountered in her tenure at UMass has never been something that she faced alone. Whenever herself, or any woman on the team encounters a problem, her teammates are never far behind.

Yet there are times when an individual must face a situation alone. Papineau has suffered from a number of injuries at UMass – a circumstance where a teammate can only do so much. She says that there are times during the season where she encounters something that she calls "whole-body tendonitis." Papineau attributes the condition to the repetitive motion of rowing.

With a year-long season, there is little time for rest. One must get into the trainer's room, ice the injury, rehabilitate and rest whenever possible – if at all possible – all the while keeping up with whatever training the injury will allow.

A person can only do so much when the mind is willing, but the body is weak. But the reason Papineau came back is simple – she just wasn't done.

"I really felt at the end of last year – which was my third year – that I hadn't done everything that I wanted to do," Papineau says. "I wasn't finished at UMass. I wanted more racing experience, more time with [coach Dietz] and more time with the team because it really is a great experience."

In her time as a student-athlete at UMass, Gabrielle exhibited the kind of dedication and perseverance that is both refreshing and inspiring. With the rest of the women on the team learning from her as a captain, the future looks bright for the program.

Guinan has been with UMass rowing since her freshman year. She is a marketing major from Poughkeepsie, N.Y. Tara has participated in the sport of rowing for over 10 years – an impressive feat, given that she isn't even 22 years old.

Just listening to Tara speak about rowing would inspire even the most meager of rowing fans. However, she probably would not be rowing for the Maroon and White had it not been for teammate Ellen Maskrey. Guinan was having second thoughts about rowing at the collegiate level and thankfully, Maskrey saw her in class one day and approached her about the subject.

Guinan understood the leap that she took from rowing in high school to rowing on the collegiate level.

"When you get to a Division I level, you really have to step up and realize that to be the best takes more than putting in the regular time that you do in high school," Guinan says. "You really have to invest and almost have it become your life because it's one of the top priorities on your list."

Sharing in the sentiments of her co-captain, Guinan extolled her coach for his work-ethic. Guinan spoke about how Dietz wanted the most for his rowers and how he works with them whenever they wanted to put in time on the water.

She mentioned that his ever-encouraging nature never leaves him satisfied and he always takes joy in seeing the progression of each individual rower.

Coming off of an injury-plagued junior year in which she red-shirted the entire spring season, Guinan was very shocked to even be nominated as a captain. But she embraced the role with open arms. Like Papineau, Tara wanted the best for her teammates and worked very hard to ensure that they gave it their all.

Guinan also noted that she and Papineau strove to establish a strong team bond this year. By the words of each captain, they both felt strongly about the togetherness of the team.

"I think that Gab and I have really tried our best to have people understand that they could give more, that they have the ability to give more and that they really just need to believe in themselves and know that they are capable of doing these things," Guinan says.

Although many of the intangibles of rowing cannot be taught, the rowers must have learned a thing or two from their coaches. Guinan credits Dietz and his assistants with a lot of the success that she has today

"Jim [Dietz] is great. He's always been the person you could always go to, and if you want extra workouts, he'll give them to you," Guinan says. "He'll always let you have your independence, but he always wants you to work hard.

"[The two new coaches this year] Connie [Kirsch] and Heather [Putnam] just got onto the team this year and they both have came into the University and turned our team around a little bit this year, setting up our workouts and always being there for us, and always listen to our problems almost like a therapist, but they've really built this team up to be so much better."

The motto of this year's team has been "step it up" and with both captains ending their collegiate careers, the coaches will be hard-pressed to find two women like Papineau and Guinan to do that next year. However with coaches like Dietz and his assistants, the Massachusetts rowing team has nothing to worry about.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

CASH FOR BOOKS

Additional Buyback Locations

Text Annex	Hampden Dining Commons	Campus Center Concourse
May 14-16, 9am-4pm	May 17-18, 10am-5pm	May 14-16, 9am-4pm
May 17-18, 9am-5pm	May 19, 11am-4pm	May 17-18, 9am-5pm
May 19, 11am-4pm	May 21-23, 10am-5pm	May 19, 11am-4pm
May 21-24, 9am-5pm	May 24, 10am-2pm	May 21-23, 9am-5pm
		May 24, 10am-2pm

UMass Amherst University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619

We'll buy your books back for up to 66% of the purchase price!

efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.

UM wins critical A-10 series against Billikens

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

It didn't take four hours or 15 innings to decide things this time.

The Massachusetts baseball team needed just nine innings yesterday, beating Saint Louis 2-1 to capture the series against the Billikens. The victory for UMass came after Saturday's marathon 4-2 loss and Friday's 5-1 win.

Despite the series victory, the Minutemen (20-23, 12-12 Atlantic 10) still find themselves in the seventh spot in the conference, and one spot out of a playoff berth. UMass is within one game of both St. Bonaventure (12-11 A-10) and Rhode Island (13-11 A-10). The Maroon and White have just three games remaining in the A-10 schedule, next weekend on the road against Xavier.

Sophomore starter Tim Comiskey maneuvered his way out of jams in key spots, pitching 6 2/3 innings of shutout ball. The right-hander picked up his third win of the season, allowing three hits and seven walks, while striking out four. Fellow sophomore Mike Dicato pitched the last 2 1/3 innings for the Minutemen, allowing one run on one hit, in what was his second save of the year.

"We were hoping that somebody would step forward and give us a good effort, and he did," UMass coach Mike Stone said, referring to Comiskey's outing. "He pitched better than he has all season, and we needed that. If we didn't get that we would've been in trouble."

The Minuteman offense struggled against Billikens' (14-36, 10-13 A-10) starter Ryan Bird, managing only six hits and one walk – but the two runs they scored were all that was needed. In the first inning, shortstop Lou Proietti singled, stole second and went to third on a past ball. Ryan Franczek followed with a walk and Adam Tempesta drove in Proietti on a fielder's choice to second.

UMass registered its other run in the sixth, with a little two-out rally. After Proietti and Franczek grounded out, Tempesta singled to center and stole second base. Bryan Adamski followed with a double down the left-field line, scoring Tempesta for what would be the game-winning run.

"It wasn't much, but it was timely," Stone said, regarding his offense. "I know we can do better, but for some reason [on Sunday and Saturday] we just didn't swing it. The hit by Adamski was big, and the run in the first by Lou got us started."

The Billikens had chances against Comiskey, but failed to convert – leaving eight runners on base. Their best chance came in the sixth as Comiskey lost his command and walked the bases loaded, bringing up first baseman Ryan Johnson. But Comiskey settled down at just the right time, inducing Johnson to fly out to right.

"He just kept his composure," captain Bryan Garrity said. "He found ways to get batters out when we needed it, and that was huge for us."

Comiskey walked the leadoff man again in the seventh, but got a key groundball off the bat of Ziggi Moore that Proietti made a nice play on to turn the double play. The next batter singled and that was the end of Comiskey's day, as Dicato came in and held on for the save.

SLU scored its only run of the game in the ninth, when Greg Rodgers laced a home run to right field to lead off the inning and pull the Billikens within one. But Dicato retired the next three hitters to preserve the win.

"We got great pitching," Garrity said. "You could tell the pitchers really wanted to win this game, and that's why we won."

Bird was the tough-luck loser for the Billikens, pitching a complete game in the loss. In eight innings, the senior right-hander allowed two runs (one earned) on six hits and one walk. He struck out four in the afternoon and his record dropped to 0-5.

Even with the tough loss on Saturday, Stone was pleased with the way the series turned out.

"I think we struggled a little bit to play our best this weekend, but we still managed to take the series," he said. "And you got to feel good about that."

Senior Day is up next for the Minutemen, as the team's seven seniors (Proietti, Travis Munsey, Bill Rankin Bryan Adamski, Chris Lloyd, Rory McDonald and Frank McPherson) will be honored prior to Tuesday's home game against Quinnipiac.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu

Sophomore Mike Dicato pitched 2 1/3 innings of relief against Saint Louis on Sunday. He surrendered only one run while preserving the 2-1 victory. It was his second save of the season.

Finishing the 2007 outdoor season, the Massachusetts men's track team finished in 11th place out of 37 at the New England Championships last weekend.

NE Championships wrap up outdoor season

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's and women's track and field teams finished the 2007 outdoor season this past weekend at the New England Championships, hosted by Dartmouth College. The men placed 11th, while the women finished in 31st.

The Minutemen entered this meet hoping for a better outcome after a disappointing eighth place in the Atlantic 10 Championships. The men placed 11th out of 37 teams while competing in a variety of events.

The men's relay teams had high expectations and managed to keep their reputation alive this weekend. The 4x800 meter relay team of freshman Ryan Diorio, sophomore Peter Fortunato and juniors Ryan Durkin and Kevin Murphy finished second with a time of 7 minutes, 38.40 seconds. The 4x400 meter relay team of Nathan Barksdale, fifth-year senior James Godihno, senior Manny Harris-Lopes and Andrew O'Donnell finished in 3:17.05, placing third. The 4x100 meter relay team finished eighth in 42.74 seconds. The team consisted of freshmen Andrew O'Donnell, Ian Hackney and Brian Miller, as well as junior Nathan Barksdale.

In the 5,000 meters, freshman Jonathan Pierce placed fifth with a time of 14:56.64. Junior Nils Fischer placed 11th in 15:12.44, while freshman Andrew McCann finished close behind at 15:15.72, placing 13th. Freshman Andrew Mulvaney finished in 17th and Daniel Barry was right behind in 18th.

Sophomore Jesse Regnier had a seasonal best performance in the 3,000-meter steeplechase and placed fourth with a time of 9:16.61. Freshman Sonny Gamble also competed in the 3000 meter steeplechase and placed 14th with a time of 9:33.45. Tyler Cotto competed in the 110-meter hurdle preliminaries and finished 10th with a time of 15.39 seconds. Miller placed 13th in the high jump with a height of 6 feet, 1.25 inches.

The Minutewomen placed 31 out of 34 teams at the New England Championships. The Maroon and White went into the meet not having as many competing athletes as the men's team and were also missing distance runner Christina DeRosa.

Mary Serdakowski, a graduate student, placed seventh in the 100-meter hurdle finals with a time of 14.91 seconds. Serdakowski also competed in the 400-meter hurdle preliminaries where she finished 14th in 1:05.60

Freshmen Brittany Bakanowski and Alexandra Haller also competed in the 400-meter hurdles. Bakanowski had a seasonal-best time of 1:06.19 and placed 20th. Haller finished a couple of seconds behind at 1:10.12, good enough for 29th place.

The 4x800 meter relay team also competed at the New England Championships. The team finished 14th with a time of 9:46.25. The team consisted of juniors Jennifer Curtain, Britt Canfield and Ashley Davidson, as well as freshman Nicole Serapiglia

The Minutewomen were without distance star Christina DeRosa, who was the only UMass athlete to compete in the ECAC Championships that were also held last weekend at Princeton University.

DeRosa traveled to the competition for the first time in her career. She placed fifth last Friday in the 10,000 meters. DeRosa ran the event in a time of 36:28.04, the second fastest time of her career. DeRosa competed in the Championships after earning first place at the Atlantic 10 Championships last week.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu

Log onto dailycollegian.com for video interviews with members of the UMass softball team.

Got bulky trash?
Dump your apartment cleanout garbage in the right place:
Bring your student ID to get in free!
The Amherst Transfer Station
Accepts furniture, mattresses, TVs & computers • Dumpster fees apply
740 Belchertown Road (Route 9), 2 miles East of Dunkin Donuts
Open 8am-2pm Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays
For more information, visit www.amherstma.gov/recycling
Or call the Amherst Department of Public Works 413-259-3050

MOVING ON?
Rent a Truck or Cargo Van
Starting at $19.95
Special Reduced Rates Monday to Thursday
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston, New York & New Jersey
• One Way Rentals
• Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
• Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

An editor's farewell to the MDC

PICARD from page 12

had never jumped off the Texas Rangers' lifeboat and tried to swim to Boston, you would not be reading this right now.

I'm a diehard sports fan – always have been, always will be. I can argue my life away on any topic. I just never knew how much I enjoyed voicing my opinion in print, until the A-Rod-to-Boston rumors got serious.

Other than busting my behind for a few tips on weekend nights, I had plenty of free time on my hands. I became so enthralled with the A-Rod trade rumors that I began to use some of that free time by writing columns on a not-so-functional desktop at home.

The funny part was these columns I wrote were never published anywhere. It was all for fun – nothing more, nothing less. That's when I knew.

Finishing college then became part of my future because I knew I was a good writer, and I knew I had the sports knowledge and experience to turn my sports writing career into a reality.

Arriving at UMass in the fall of 2004, I changed my major from education/political science to journalism. I joined the Massachusetts Daily Collegian towards the end of spring 2005, and it's been nothing short of a successful move since.

My biggest break came last May, when I became the Pedro Gomez for Roger Clemens. I went beyond collegiate-level reporting, contacting Clemens' agent, Randy Hendricks, and he gave me more information than I had ever intended to get on Clemens' potential return to the Red Sox. And, while we all know how that didn't work out for the second consecutive year, it was quite the thrill and got me a good amount of publicity.

I always told myself that if I was ever captivated by a certain story as much as I was the A-Rod trade, I would put the full court press on it. And that's exactly what I did.

The hope that I had in 2003 as a non-student gave me the confidence to take advantage of all my opportunities. Unfortunately, along the way, some people don't have that same confidence in you.

After meeting with Tommie Joyner, an Assistant Director for Career Planning in the Career Services department, in the fall, you would have thought there was little hope for an aspiring sportswriter who was just looking for advice on how to construct his résumé and cover letter.

You're supposed to be walking out of Career Services with a positive outlook on your future, not questioning whether everything you'd done to that point was completely meaningless. That's the way I felt after talking to this guy who was supposed to be of some help.

Joyner told me two things during our meeting. One, was that The Boston Globe "wouldn't even want to see me" until I had some experience at a smaller paper. Two, was that "none of my stories were better than anyone else's," so I shouldn't mention my Clemens pieces in either my résumé or cover letter.

Talk about the worst possible advice I've ever been given in my entire life. In fact, it's those exact two things that have carried my success in this business.

Little did Mr. Joyner know that I had already done a full summer of work in the Globe sports department prior to meeting with him, covering high school games, working in the office and writing features for the City Weekly section. And in fact, yes, my Clemens pieces were better than what most other college writers would be able to put on their résumé.

But who would have thought a sportswriter for "just a college newspaper" would be already writing in the sports section for one of the largest newspapers in the country while still in school? Or what collegiate-level reporter would be getting all sorts of information from Roger Clemens' agent?

Usually I would never give credit to someone who isn't good at what they do, but Joyner deserves a special thank you for giving me so much bulletin-board material in just one meeting.

This type of situation would have taken a hit on most people's confidence. Instead, I turned it into a positive, and I've been thriving off it ever since. But don't get me wrong, at some point there was anger and frustration. And I did question my place in the sports writing world.

But I never lost hope. I never lost sight of the fact that this "advisor" wasn't going to make my bed for me, and I certainly wasn't going to let a few pathetic comments get to my head. After all, it wasn't too long ago that I was completely out of school with little sign of a successful future.

For some reason, whenever I got down, I would remember Al Leiter's comments in the ninth inning of Game 3 of the 2004 ALCS when the Red Sox were all but swept by the New York Yankees.

"I'm pretty sure, that at some point this season, the Boston Red Sox have won four games in a row," Leiter said on the MLB on Fox broadcast.

Some fans saw that no team had ever come back to win a best-of-seven series after being down 3-0. Those with hope realized that if they could squeeze out a win in Game 4, Pedro would throw in Game 5 at home and Big Schill would have another shot in Game 6, leaving anything possible for Game 7.

You see, there are some people that just dream. There are others that dream with the "confident expectation of its fulfillment."

It's the positive anticipation that's needed to succeed. It's what keeps me going to this very day. It's the single greatest thing in the world.

It's called hope, and without it, I wouldn't be here bidding you farewell.

Danny Picard was a Co-Sports Editor and a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu

This lady loves Comics...

but her obvious insanity makes her a less than stellar role model.

Avoid Crabs:
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

			3			8	1
	9					7
2	8	4				3
8	4		9			5	2
				3
	3	9			5		6	7
		8				6	7	9
		7					3
	6	3			7

Quote of the Day

"Get busy living, or get busy dying."

-Tim Robbins in "The Shawshank Redemtion"

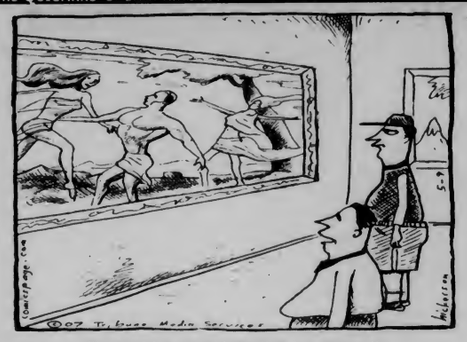
Welcome To Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shalek

I'd here for a gust of wind to scatter these papers I spent all day on(Janiza)
Right, Ernesto! I'd here for it to rain on my real art! It only appears it's in non-waterproof ink!
Greet, it's her
I guess reverse psychology doesn't work on the weather

The Stalker Imperative By Dan Beadle

I WOKE UP TODAY, AND I FORGOT EVERYTHING THAT MATTERED.
I CAN BARELY RECOGNIZE MY FACE IN THE MIRROR...
IS THAT POSSIBLE?
I'VE LOST SOMETHING, OR SOMEONE...
SOMEONE THAT I MIGHT NOT BE ABLE TO GET BACK.
BUT I HAVE TO TRY.
I LOVE YOU.

The Quigmans By Buddy Hickerson



"I would appreciate it a lot more if it had a funny little caption at the bottom."

Quote of the Day

"Get busy living, or get busy dying."

-Tim Robbins in "The Shawshank Redemtion"

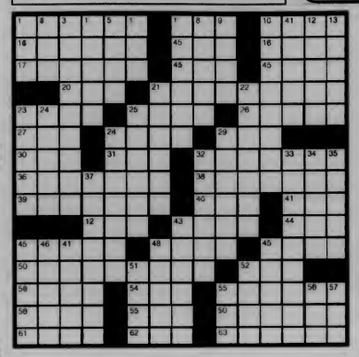
Across
1 Injure
7 ETO leader
10 Goes bad
14 Sports venues
15 Broadcast
16 Molecular building block
17 Hair mess
18 NBC classic
19 Bangkok man
20 Capp and Capone
21 Most shoddy
23 Wise person
25 Nectar gatherers
26 Willful injuries
27 Caesar's hail
28 Castle material?
29 Bear's lair
30 Neighbor of Aus
31 Colony critter
32 Knew beforehand
36 Daughter of King Minos
38 Cool refresher
39 More severe
40 Brief life?
41 Slick stuff
42 Letters in math proofs
43 Blanc and Blount
44 Negative word
45 Island feasts
48 Painful
49 Olympic ruler
50 Tax evaluators
52 Lawn moisture
53 Mongrel
54 Literature scrape
55 Early release
58 Simpson boy
59 Vote against
60 Loved
61 ___ gin fizz
62 Hosp. sections
63 Like Zorro

Down
1 CD alternative
2 Southern constellation
3 Diverse group
4 Corner
5 Guys' dates
6 Map dir.
7 Went quickly
8 Consumes supper
9 First name in mysteries
10 Distributed fixed portions
11 Different
12 Raise a glass to
13 "N.Y.P.D. Blue" co-star Jimmy
21 Midpoint
22 Music systems
23 Heroic tales
24 Stave off
25 Prohibited
28 Sorrow
29 Easily led
32 Threadlike structures
33 Mason's task
34 Vowel quintet
35 Disney and Whitman
37 David of "Scream"
43 Large eels
45 Young sheep
46 Ordinary
47 Jetson's dog
48 Underwater scanner
49 Goose eggs
51 Rational
52 Arp's art movement
55 Shriver or Dawber
56 Marvin and Remick
57 Byrnes of "77 Sunset Strip"

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

DELANO'S
$5 Pitchers
$2 Vodka Well Drinks
Get Your Butt Downtown!
"The Heart of downtown Amherst"



Continuing & Professional Education
UMass Amherst Summer 2007
Here are a few of the many Gen. Ed. classes offered this summer:
Online:
• English 132: Man and Woman in Literature
• Psych 350: Child Psychology
On Campus:
• Math 131: Calculus I
• Art 104: Basic Studio Drawing
I: June 4 – July 12
II: July 16 – August 22
(Variable date classes available)
Register Now!
By visiting us @
www.UMassULearn.net/dc

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Find a bike cop on campus and tell him you are truly sorry that his horse died.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
It's time for a cage match between you and geometry. Do not fear the octogon.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Being completely obsessed with magical dragons leads to many dates.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Do not underestimate the power of pesto. It is potent and virile.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
At this point there is only one thing that can motivate you: leather pants.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Chicks will dig you if you act a wee bit vulnerable. Maybe make your lip quiver a bit.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
It is only a matter of time before Nas bequeathes his one mic unto you.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Row, row, row your boat gently down the toxic cesspool known as the campus pond.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Tell professors that you are an athiest and therefore do not believe in finals.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Harvest a heap of lovely smelling lilacs for your stinky and rank room.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
All the flashcards in the world will not make up for your inability to read.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
If you need a new loofa find a good stick and catch a toy poodle.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
Now open for lunch!
HOURS
Sun-Wed 11am-2am
Thurs-Sat 11am-3am
DELIVERY • P.U. • K.P.
(413) 549-6073
150 Pearing Street
Next to Potter's Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Preserve UMass Historic Buildings The campus administration plans to demolish a number of historic buildings on the Amherst campus. Some of these buildings are of local, state, or national significance. There has been no independent, professional historic or architectural assessment of the Amherst campus buildings. About 60 UMass alumni, retired and active faculty and staff members, and friends of the campus have asked Chancellor Lombardi to put a hold on demolition and to approve a proposal that has been drafted to secure private funding for a professional assessment. Members of the campus community who wish to be recorded as supporting this effort should send an e-mail to the Corresponding Secretary of Preserve UMass, larson@tei.umass.edu.

Announcements

Like no other course, Army ROTC Join the wave of your generation's willingness to serve our country No strings attached! Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Top of the Campus, Incorporated (TOC, Inc) will hold its Annual Meeting in Campus Center 903, Wednesday, May 23, 2007 at 12:00 p.m.

Apartments for Rent

28 Stockbridge St. 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,900/Mo www.amherstlincolnrealty com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing. 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Employment

Handyman, Housecleaner, landscaper, Now and for summer $10hr+ 549-1578

HELPDESK & COMPUTER SUPPORT TECHNIACIAN Seeking reliable fulltime undergraduate, able to left 50 pounds, with valid driver's license. Friendly with excellent communication skills and prior PC support a must. Fulltime for summer 2007 and parttime for fall 2007. Submit resume and cover letter to helpdesk@gw.housing.umass.edu.

Summer Jobs for the Environment Campaigne Offices in 60 cities! Work with Sierra Club and State Environmental Groups on a nation wide effort to Fight Global Warming this summer. Work with college students from across the country! Make $4000-$6000/ Summer. Career oppurtunites and benefits also available. Amherst office call: 413-256-6434. Boston Office call: 617-292-4810 or Call 1-800-75-Earth for opportunities in other cities. Visit our website at www.jobsthatmatter.org

Employment

Promotional Salesmodels needed for summer! Wanted: attractive and energetic individuals to work as promotional salesmodels in Western Massachusetts this summer. $20-25/ hr Must be 21+. Please send resume and recent headshot to: amihos@prestoncorp.com

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must call 413-584-4746

WORK OUTDOORS THIS SUMMER Full time positons available in your hometown. Earn $8-12/hour Painting houses with a fun crew. Call 888-277-9787 or www.collegepro.com

Brandywine Apts. Needs a certified lifeguard. Full time hours flexible. Must work some weekends. $9.00/ hr Call 549-0600 or stop by office

Employment

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Summer Job on Martha's Vineyard! Asst. Manager, retail clothing store in Edgartown. Richard 413-575-1579 or email rdwhite27@charter.net

.Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Summer Jobs for the Environment Work with Environment Massachusetts on a campaign to Fight Global Warming and work with great people! Make $400-$600/week. Career opportunities and benefits available. Call Mel at 413-256-6434. Visit our website @ www.jobsthatmatter.org

Services

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Services

GET ONE FREE, when you buy two packets of birth control and be ready for the summer. Affordable and Confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992, www.tapestryhealth.org

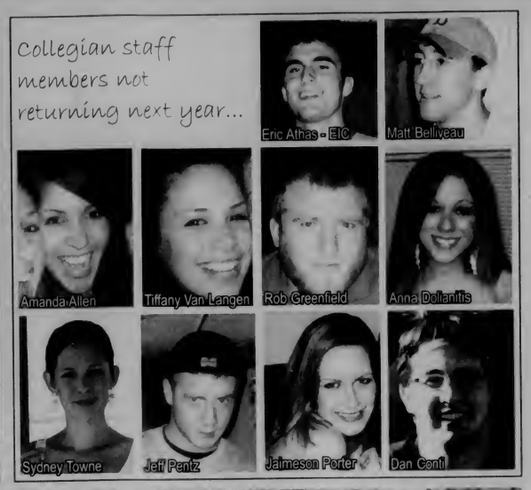
Summer Sublet

Room for rent to sublet over summer Townhouse #32 $400 a month Gas heat, Close to bus stop large room with A/C Partially furnished contact Dan at dexter@student.umass.edu will respond ASAP!

Alpine Commons apartment June-August 15th $2050/month includes utilities. 413-204-9519 or jennaw@student.umass.edu

Summer Sublet Puffton Village 3 bdrm air cond. Partially furnished rent negotiable Call John 774-239-8937

Collegian staff members not returning next year...



Farewell Collegian Class of 2007!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MAY 14, 2007

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen take first step

Maroon and White win 19th Atlantic 10 Championship

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When the bottom of the third inning began during Saturday's Atlantic 10 Championship game, the Minutewomen and Saint Louis were deadlocked at 1. When it ended, the game was over.

The tournament host Minutewomen (37-12-1) defeated the Billikens (29-33) 9-3, clinching the program's 19th A-10 Championship and 13th in the last 14 years.

Throughout the tournament, a series of big innings propelled the Maroon and White toward victory.

The trend continued on Saturday, a seven-run third inning gave UMass an 8-1 advantage.

SLU added two more in the fourth inning, but couldn't get any closer. UMass sophomore Brandice Balschmiter pitched a scoreless fifth, sixth and seventh to seal her third win of the weekend and the tournament's Most Outstanding Performer award.

UMass	9
SLU	3

Despite earning the distinction, Balschmiter struggled early in the championship game. An error by junior Stacy Cullington on a double steal by the Billikens allowed SLU's Annie Dillinger to score.

Dillinger reached on a fielder's choice after Shana Richard walked to lead the inning off. Allison Appenfeller followed with a ground-ball up the middle, shortstop Whitney Williams ranged to her left to collect the groundball, but put too much on the flip to second base. The ball sailed over the glove of Cullington and into center field. Senior Candice Molinari backed up the play keeping Appenfeller at first, but Dillinger continued on to third.

On the ensuing pitch, Appenfeller broke for second base. UMass catcher Jessica Serio threw down to second base. Upon Serio's release, Dillinger broke for home plate, but hesitated when Cullington intercepted the throw and headed back to third base. Cullington fired the ball to third to pick Dillinger off, but the throw got by third baseman Whitney Mollica and Dillinger headed home, scoring the day's first run.

Balschmiter struck out two of the next three batters to end the inning and the Billiken threat.

The Minutewomen tied the game in the next half inning. Senior Amanda Acampora ripped a 2-2 fastball to left-center field. The ball hit the top of the

See SOFTBALL on page 8

Balschmiter steps up after going down

For a moment, it seemed like the entire world had come crashing down on the Massachusetts softball team.

The Minutewomen's ace lay on the ground, clutching her side, after a line drive came right back at her in the fifth inning of the Atlantic 10 Championship.

Jeremy Rice

Brandice Balschmiter carried her team to the NCAA Super Regional round last year and was poised to do the same thing this year.

For a moment, it looked like the Minutewomen's postseason chances had vanished. Instead, Balschmiter got up, threw a handful of warmup pitches and got back to work – striking out the next two batters.

The Minutewomen looked hungry and determined from the start of the A-10 Tournament, but never more than that moment, when Balschmiter got up, brushed herself off, put her teammates back on her shoulders and continued to trudge towards the NCAA Tournament.

UMass will host the regional round of the tournament for the second straight year, this time with No. 3

See RICE on page 8

Offense 'passes torch' during big innings

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In the first two games of the Atlantic 10 Tournament for the Massachusetts softball team, the Minutewomen showed off the versatility of their offensive attack.

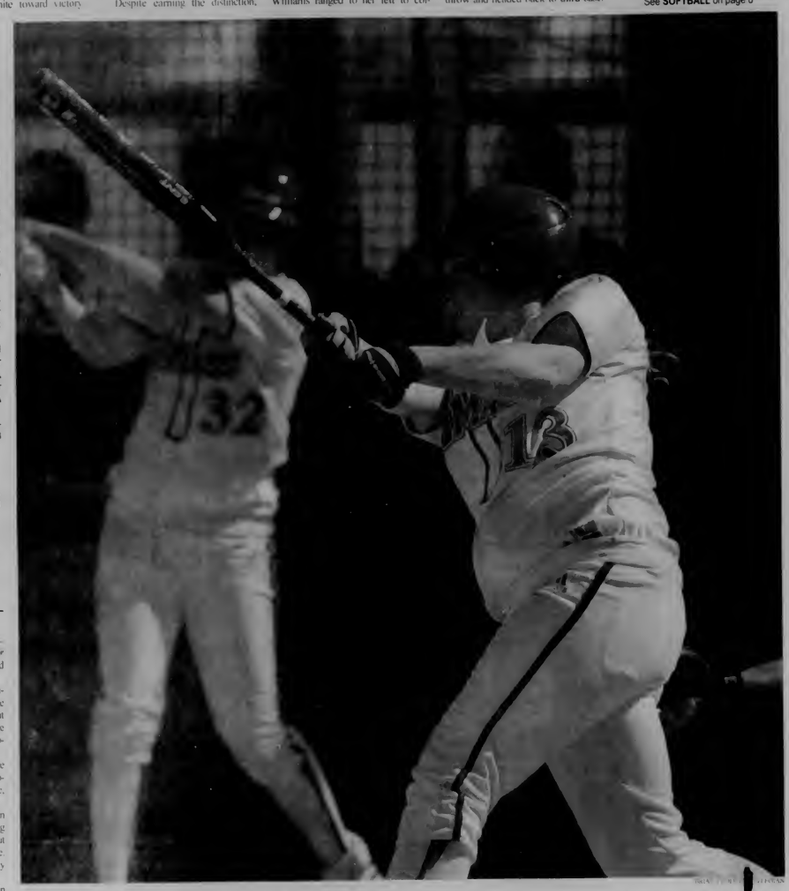
Throughout the tournament, the UMass players casually preached the team's offensive mantra of "passing the torch." Obviously, they'd prefer to string hits together, but in postseason tournaments, scoring chances don't come around very often. So whether it's timely hitting or a bobbled groundball, you can't waste a chance to score runs.

"If they're putting good pitches on the plate and we're passing the torch with hits, that's even better," senior captain Candice Molinari said. "Anyway we can get on base, score runs, move runners, however we can do it."

Against Temple in its first game, the Minutewomen scored two first-inning runs. Molinari began the inning with a bunt single. The ball traveled less than three feet, but it was long enough for her to run the 60 feet to first base. A walk, a hit batsman, a fielder's choice and a sacrifice fly later, UMass led 2-0.

The Minutewomen put six more runs on the board in

See OFFENSE on page 8



Displaying her power in the batter's box, junior Stacy Cullington hit a grand slam in the third inning to propel the Minutewomen to a 9-3 victory over Saint Louis Saturday at the UMass Softball Complex. The win gave UMass its 19th Atlantic 10 Championship.

Brandice Balschmiter
A-10 Tournament Most Outstanding Player

RECORD:
3–0

ERA:
0.73

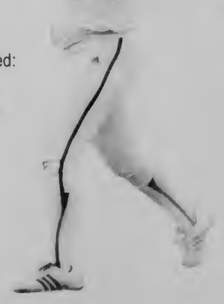
Strikeouts:
28

Innings pitched:
28

2007 Record:
27-7

2007 ERA:
1.31

2007 WHIP:
0.87



Members of the UMass softball team react to the announcement that the Minutewomen were selected to host regionals of the NCAA Tournament.

UM plays host to NCAA Regional

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For the second consecutive year, the Massachusetts softball team will host the regional portion of the NCAA Tournament. UMass welcomes top-seeded Oklahoma along with third-seeded Long Island and fourth-seeded Temple.

The Minutewomen's first game is Friday at 1:40 p.m. against Long Island University of the Northeast Conference.

The team gathered at the Hangar Pub and Grill on University Dr. in Amherst yesterday afternoon to watch the NCAA Division I Softball Selection show on ESPN News. While analysts discussed the top teams in the tournament, the Minutewomen waited to see if they would host the tournament again.

While discussing Oklahoma, the hosts moved directly into presenting the

See TOURNAMENT on page 8

With hope: An editor's farewell

Danny Picard

Hope is a funny thing.

It is defined in most dictionaries as a "wish or desire accompanied by confident expectation of its fulfillment." It's usually the anticipation of something positive. It's a way of life. But more importantly, it's the single greatest thing in the world.

Without hope, I certainly wouldn't be gracing you with my final column before being thrown into "the real world." That's because I wouldn't even be in college.

So before you read on, I must warn you. This column isn't about what the Massachusetts baseball team did over the weekend. You're not going to find quotes from Travis Ford, Marnie Dacko, Sam Koch or Mike Stone – coaches from teams I have covered at UMass. For this surely isn't about them.

It's about me. And that's a first.

For the past two years, I've committed my collegiate career to sports writing. Game previews, recaps, sidebars and features – most of which you probably never read. And the only reason I didn't quit after covering a few field hockey games is because you have to put in your time and move up the ranks, but all the while, there is a certain sense of satisfaction that you get when a player and his or her family is truly touched by something you wrote, regardless of how popular the sport is.

That's what gets you through the dark days of covering UMass teams that students could care less about.

But there was always hope, even when things weren't going so well. Even when I was technically a college dropout for a year.

Becoming a sportswriter wasn't always the plan, believe it or not. In fact, writing was so distant from my mental state while at my first school, I didn't even consider it to be a conceivable goal. That was when I attended Assumption College, but shortly dropped out due to personal issues.

I moved back home, in South Boston, and lived there for a full year. Working as a barback at a local restaurant, I had completely lost my way. As I struggled to search for answers, my motivation came from an unexpected source.

Put it this way, if Alex Rodriguez

See PICARD on page 11

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

WINDY : HI: 86 LO: 61 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | TUESDAY, MAY 15, 2007

SPORTS STAFF DRIES THEIR 'MISTY EYES' PAGE 16

POWTER'S DEBUT FALLS SHORT PAGE 8

New UM building proposed

BY PETER AXTMAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

According to University of Massachusetts officials, a new building in the heart of campus that would house communication and journalism is in the early stages of discussion. The building will work to improve the departments' ability to recruit students and faculty.

The facility, which would replace the tennis courts near Tobin, would be part of an $833 million campus building maintenance and construction package. This would be in addition to the $719 million already committed to capital projects, according to a report released by UMass last week.

"In the center of campus, we are looking to put an academic building. The project started out as a low-scale, temporary swing space to bring faculty in while we work on other buildings," said Jim Hunt, Communications Manager for Facilities and Campus Planning, "but the plan has changed now to make this into a true academic building and a permanent structure. That hopefully includes – again very

See BUILDING on page 5

SGA holds forum on discrimination

Former athlete Jordan Veney, left, and freshman sprinter Stephanie Mattar, right, raised concerns of racial discrimination within the UMass women's track and field team yesterday in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union.

Veney, Mattar address racial issues at UM

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Student Government Association (SGA) held a press conference yesterday in conjunction with former athlete Jordan Veney and freshman sprinter Stephanie Mattar to discuss their recent allegations of racial discrimination from UMass women's track and field coach Julie Lalreniere.

The press conference was part of Veney's ongoing battle with the University over scholarship money. In November, Lalreniere cut Veney from the women's track team and Veney, an African-American, believes that racial discrimination was involved in Lalreniere's handling of the situation.

Veney appealed Lalreniere's decision to Athletic Director John McCutcheon, who sided with Lalreniere. Veney then sent a letter to the University asking for the reinstatement of her $20,000 scholarship. The University received the letter on April 27 and has yet to respond. Veney said

See VENEY on page 4

SOM uses business model for healthcare

BY DAVID HUMPHREYS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Americans are listing health care as the nation's most important problem after the War in Iraq in a recent poll– and a working group at the University of Massachusetts Amherst is doing something about it.

By applying a quality control program first developed in American industry, the UMass working group is seeking to improve the quality of health care and control costs at the same time, according to Soren Bisgaard, interim dean of the Isenberg School of Management.

The quality-control program, called Six Sigma, was born at Motorola, Inc. in 1979, when two engineers, noting that electronic pagers the company manufactured were failing at unacceptable rates, applied statistical techniques to improve the quality of the manufacturing process.

Since then, the Six Sigma process has been applied in an array of fields to improve quality and control costs. Bisgaard said he's convinced the process can work well in health care, as well – the field which Americans consistently are listing as their most important concern after the Iraq war.

In fact, a report the Institute of Medicine (IOM) published in 2000 estimated that between 44,000 and 98,000 people die each year in the United States as the result of preventable medical errors. "Even using the lower estimate," the report said, "preventable medical errors in hospitals exceed attributable deaths to such feared threats as motor-vehicle wrecks, breast cancer, and AIDS."

Such errors, the report says, cost the nation between $17 billion and $29 billion per year in additional care to rectify the errors, lost income and household productivity, and disability — not counting a loss of trust in medical systems.

The IOM report recommended tackling these issues with renewed leadership, attention and resources – some of which came together at UMass as Bisgaard hosted a workshop for health care experts focused partly on applying the Six Sigma process in health care settings to improve health care quality while controlling the costs.

"Because of poor quality [there can be] hospital acquired infections…administrative errors…and other quality problems that make health care more expensive and less satisfactory to the customers," said Bisgaard.

Part of the problem, added Selena Kaplan, a registered nurse and graduate student in nursing and public health who assisted in setting up the workshop, "We need to address healthcare quality management on a system level and not as a series of unrelated pieces. When we design a process with the expectation of re-evaluating and changing it as our needs change, we save time and effort in the long run." Such efforts may help reduce not only the concerns Bisgaard raised, but time wasted in handling patient information, and patient wait times.

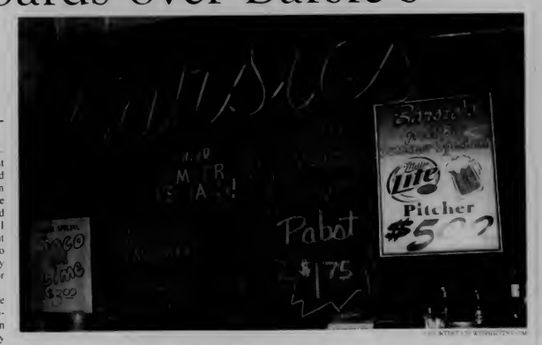
Bisgaard said that if health care

See HEALTHCARE on page 4

Boards over Barsie's

Students miss historic Amherst bar

BY REBECCA CAREY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT



Recently closed, Barsie's was a favorite among Amherst locals and students alike. The former staple of uptown Amherst is now the site of Judie's Restaurant's expansion.

It was a warm, sunny August day filled with promise and excitement. I graduated from Agawam High School that June as part of the class of 2003 and now was starting college. I told my mom I'd behave, but I couldn't wait to be able to go out drinking and not worry about sneaking in my front door two hours past curfew.

My pink plaid Abercrombie shorts were not the most appropriate moving attire and soon having to adjust them every few steps while carrying boxes of clothes was getting annoying. Paired with baby blue Adidas running sneakers and a simple white tank top, I had convinced myself that the outfit made sense: cute, but still seemingly effortless. I had planned it for days.

When I reached 202 Cance, a low-rise in Southwest, Kate Bryan was already there unpacking with her parents. After the formalities, we soon realized we had a lot in common. We both had baby blue comforters for our extra-long twin beds, we both had the same HP Pavilion laptop, and while I unpacked my blue and pink plastic margarita glasses, Kate pulled out her margarita mix and bottle of tequila. Her parents laughed; my mom didn't. She had gone here in the late 60s, when Southwest was first built, and was well aware of the kind of debauchery that occurred in that area of UMass.

* * *

In 1983, Sean Tagan was a 20 year-old sophomore at UMass. He had been working at Barsie's, an uptown Amherst bar for a while now and was pulling in good money, earning $150 a night. Between working four to five nights a week and attending classes, he made time to experience Southwest: kegs in the elevators of dorms, an abundance of drugs and spring weekends when alcohol distribution trucks would pull into the area, dropping off up to 100 kegs of beer. The Zoo was in full force, and Sean enjoyed being part of the exhibit.

* * *

For me, freshman year was a blur of Thirsty Thursdays and hung-over Friday mornings. When I did make it to class, which was usually a discussion, I was less than participatory. After a night filled with shots of Admiral Nelson's and Popov vodka, I was lucky to be sitting upright and not feeling the urge to vomit. Friday nights we usually went to Phi Sigma Kappa, a fraternity that was deemed acceptable by our older, sopho-

See BARSIE'S on page 3

Cookout on the Quad
Northeast residents enjoyed grilled food and a live band at yesterday's 'Spring Fling Barbeque,' hosted by UMass Dining Services.

Cyclist receives concussion after truck runs over head

MADISON, Wis. (AP) A delivery truck ran over a cyclist's head, leaving him only with a concussion and a mangled helmet. Ryan Lipscomb, 26, was shaken up, especially after he saw the condition of his helmet.

"I didn't see it coming, but I sure felt it roll over my head," he said. "It feels really strange to have a truck run over your head."

Lipscomb, a graduate student in medical physics at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, was riding swiftly down a bike path in Madison Friday afternoon. As he approached an intersection where he said he had a green light, he noticed the truck preparing to make a right turn in front of him.

The truck wasn't going to stop, Lipscomb said, so he slammed on his brakes, flipping his bike and landing in the street.

A moment later the truck rolled over his head — and kept going.

His black Giro helmet was flattened, tread marks visible on the cracked frame.

Lipscomb was taken to the hospital and released about three hours later.

"I'm OK except for a concussion," he said Friday night.

Police initially declined to call the incident a hit-and-run, saying it was unclear whether the driver knew someone had been hit. But Sgt. Bernie Gonzalez later updated the accident report to include the designation.

Lipscomb said he was already in the street as the truck was turning.

"The truck driver definitely would have known," he said.

"You know when you run over a curb and my head was definitely higher than a curb."

A message left for police spokesman Mike Hanson was not immediately returned Sunday.

—Associated Press

A Petition to Revoke the Offer of an Honorary Degree to Andrew H. Card, Jr.

We, the undersigned members of the faculty of the University of Massachusetts Amherst, support graduate students in respectfully requesting that all relevant University administrators and administrative bodies, including but not limited to the University President, the Board of Trustees, the Chancellor, and the Dean of the Graduate School, immediately revoke the offer of an honorary degree to Andrew H. Card, Jr., former White House Chief of Staff from 2000 to 2006 and head of the White House Iraq Group, as Card is not eligible for a degree according to University of Massachusetts Policy Doc. T93-060, "Policy on Awarding Honorary Degrees," which makes "only persons of great accomplishment and high ethical standards who exemplify the ideals of the University of Massachusetts" eligible for such an honorary degree.

Asian-American Studies
CN. Lee, Director
Afro-American Studies
Ernest Allen, Jr., Associate Professor
John Bracey, Professor
Mamisha Sonba, Associate Professor
James Smethurst, Associate Professor
Bill Strickland, Professor Anthropology
Jean Forward, Lecturer
Laurie Godfrey, Professor
Susan M. DiGiacomo, Post Doctoral Fellow
Krista Harper, Assistant Professor
Julie Hemment, Assistant Professor
Elizabeth Krause, Associate Professor
Enoch Page, Professor
Robert Paynter, Professor
David Samuels, Assistant Professor
Alan Swedlund, Professor Emeritus
Jacqueline Urla, Associate Professor
Art, Architecture and Art History
Jeremy Boyle, Assistant Professor
Michael Cieblyn, Professor
Jeanette Cole, Professor
Copper Giloth, Associate Professor
Peter W. Houlihan, Lecturer
Susan Jahoda, Professor
Joseph Krupczynski, Assistant Professor
Thom Long, Associate Professor
Kathleen Lugerich, Associate Professor
Sigrid Miller Pollin, Professor
Max Page, Associate Professor
Roseanne Retz, Professor
Lale Schlapp, Lecturer
Richard Yarde, Lecturer
Astronomy
Judith Young, Assistant Professor
Biology
Peter Alpert, Associate Professor
Zane Barlow-Coleman, Lecturer
Tobias Baskin, Associate Professor
Richard Bogatti, Professor
Magdalena Bezanilla, Asst. Professor
Steven Brewer, Assistant Professor
Ana Caicedo, Assistant Professor
Elizabeth Connor, Professor
Gerald Downes, Assistant Professor
Casey Fagerstrom, Research Fellow
Tina Fetches Research Fellow
Peter Houlihan, Lecturer
Rolf Karlstrom, Associate Professor
Joseph G. Kunkel, Professor
Wei-Lih Lee, Assistant Professor
W. Brian McConnas, Professor
Randall Phillis, Associate Professor
Jeffrey Podos, Assistant Professor
Margaret Ann Riley, Professor
Otto L. Stein, Professor Emeritus
John Willoughby, Post-doctoral Researches
Tom Zoeller, Professor
Biochemistry and Molecular Biology
Robert Zimmermann, Professor
Building Materials & Wood Technology
Dave Lumeyj, Assistant Program Director
Paul Piette, Professor
Center for Latin American, Caribbean and Latino Studies
Gloria Bernabe Ramos, Associate Director
Chemical Engineering
Demetrios Matsoukas, Professor
Civil and Environmental Engineering
David Ashfield, Professor
Sanna Eigas, Associate Professor
Communication
Carolyn Anderson, Professor
Benjamin Bailey, Associate Professor
Matt Castaneda, Associate Professor
Paula Chakravartty, Assistant Professor
Leda Cooks, Associate Professor
Henry Geddes, Associate Professor
Bruce H. Gerster, Lecturer
Stephen Gencarella, Assistant Professor
Janice Hanten, Professor
Gina Henderson, Associate Professor
Sut Jhally, Professor
Maxwell Mcombs, Professor
Martin Projansky, Professor
Sarah Projansky, Associate Professor
Penny Stewart-Amos, Professor
Joyce Terpstra, Assistant Professor
Jeffrey Ulin, Assistant Professor
Computer Science
Richard Eikenberry
Yannis Chotiros, Professor
Andy Exley, Professor
Weibo Gong, Professor
Ramesh Sitaraman, Associate Professor
Don Towsley, Distinguished Professor
David Kulp, Assistant Professor
Victor Lesser, Professor
Brian Levine, Associate Professor
Robert Moll, Professor
Eliot Moss, Professor
Natural Resource Conservation
Charlie Schweik, Associate Professor
Economics
Michael Ash, Associate Professor
Lee Badgett, Associate Professor
James Crotty, Professor
Gerald Epstein, Professor
Nancy Folbre, Professor
Gerald Friedman, Professor
Mwangi Wa Githinji, Assistant Professor
Melissa Gonzales-Brenes, Assistant Professor Carol Horn, Professor
David Kotz, Professor
Woojin Lee, Assistant Professor
Robert Pollin, Professor
Arslan Razmi, Assistant Professor
Lisa Saunders, Associate Professor
Peter Skott, Professor
John Stifler, Professor
Education
Maxinanne Adams, Professor
Theresa Austin, Associate Professor
Flavio Azevedo, Assistant Professor
John Carey, Associate Professor
Allan Feldman, Professor
Margaret Gebhart, Associate Professor
Ronald Hambleton, Distinguished Professor
Ruth Harman, Lecturer
Sangeeta Kamat, Associate Professor
Barbara Madeloni, Lecturer
Robert Maloy, Lecturer
Marge Magouirk Colbert, Assistant Dean and Lecturer
William Matthews, Professor
Gary Mahaney, Associate Professor
Robert Maloy, Professor
Kathryn McDermot, Associate Professor
Gretchen Rossman, Professor
Clement Alexander Seldin
Florence Sullivan, Assistant Professor
English
Jenny Adams, Assistant Professor
Deborah Cahn, Professor
Stephen Cinegman, Professor
Suzanne Daly, Assistant Professor
Justine Dymond, CPT Director
Emily Farrell, Professor
Ann Higgins, Lecturer
Ruth Jennison, Assistant Professor
Charles Moran, Professor
Sabina Murray, Assistant Professor
Asha Nalkatni, Assistant Professor
Hoang Phan, Assistant Professor
Jordana Rosenberg, Asst., Professor
Jenny Spencer, Professor
Ron Welburn, Professor
Adam Zucker, Assistant Professor
Food Science
Robert Lewn, Professor
Geosciences
Raymond S. Bradley, Professor
Michael Dolan, Adj. Professor
Piper Gaubatz, Assoc., Professor
Douglas Hardy, Professor
Lynn Margulis, Professor
Rutherford H. Platt, Professor History
Christian Appy, Assoc. Professor
Audrey L Altstadt, Professor
Carlin Barton, Professor
Joyce Berkman, Professor
Joye Bowman, Professor
Anne Broadbridge, Assistant Professor
Brian Bunk, Visiting, Assistant Professor
Richard Chu, Assistant Professor
David Glassberg, Professor
Francoise Hamlin, Assistant Professor
Michelle Herder, Visiting Lecturer
Jennifer Heuer, Assistant Professor
John Higginbotham, Professor
Bruce Laurie, Professor
Barry Levy, Associate Professor
Laura Lovett, Professor
Gerald McFarland, Professor
Maria Miller, Associate Professor
Richard Minear, Professor
Alice Nash, Assistant Professor
Brian Ogilvie, Associate Historian
Barry Qualls, Professor
Stephen Platt, Assistant Professor
Charles Rearick, Professor
Lee Richards, Professor
Heather Cox Richardson, Associate Professor
Sigrid Schmalzer, Assistant Professor
Mary Wilson, Professor
Joel W. Wolfe, Associate Professor Journalism
Karen List, Professor
Ralph Whitehead, Professor
Judaic and Near Eastern Studies
Olga Gershenson, Assistant Professor
Susan Shapiro, Associate Professor
Kinesiology
David Marquez, Assistant Professor
Labor Studies
Harris Freeman, Lecturer
Tom Juravich, Professor
Stephanie Luce, Associate Professor
Eve Weinbaum, Associate Professor
Languages, Literatures, and Cultures
Bruce Baird, Assistant Professor
Neuissa Balce, Assistant Professor
Maria Soledad Barbon, Assistant Professor Barton Byg, Professor
Susan Cocalis, Professor
Alvin Cohen, Professor
Laszlo Dienes, Professor
Francesco D'Intorno, Professor
Andrew Doonan, Assistant Professor
Arthur Figliola, Lecturer
Sherif Harbison, Lecturer
Jan Hirks, Lecturer
David Lenson, Professor
Sara Lennox, Professor
Roberto Ludovico, Assistant Professor
David Lenson, Professor
David Maddox, Professor
Elizabeth Mazzocco, Professor
Sarah McGaughney, Lecturer
Stephen Miller, Assistant Professor
William Moebius, Professor
Jose Cornelas, Professor
Michael Pagel, Assistant Professor
Elizabeth Petroff, Professor
Amanda Seaman, Assistant Professor
Harry Seelig, Associate Professor
Curtis Small, Lecturer
Reiko Sono, Visiting, Assistant Professor
Rhonda Tarr, Professor
Julio Velez Sainz, Assistant Professor
Legal Studies
Stephen Ayers, Professor
Thomas Hilbink, Assistant Professor
Bernie Jones, Assistant Professor
Jerrold Lemnsky, Professor
David Medinoff, Assistant Professor
Mary McClintock, Adjunct, Professor
Linguistics
Rajesh Bhatt, Associate Professor
Kyle Johnson, Professor
Angelika Kratzer, Professor
Joe Pater, Associate Professor
Tom Roeper, Professor
Elizabeth Selkirk, Professor
Margaret Speas, Profess
Management
Iqbal Agha, Professor
Maria Calas, Professor
Herman, Fong Lecturer
Dina D. Freedman Lecturer
Linda Smircich, Professor
William Diamond, Professor
Dorron Goldman, Lecturer
Ronald Katren, Associate Professor
Ray Pfeiffer Jr., Associate Professor
Melissa Woodward, Associate Professor
Mathematics and Statistics
Robert Kusner, Professor
Hans Johnson, Assistant Professor
Ivan Markovic, Professor
John Staudenmeyer, Assistant Professor
Hadi Susanto, Visiting, Assistant Professor
Eduardo Cattani, Professor
James B. Humphreys, Emeritus, Professor
Markos Katsoulakis, Associate Professor
Jenia Tevelev, Assistant Professor
Tom Weston, Assistant Professor
Mechanical and Industrial Engineering
Kourosh Danai, Professor
Ramagopal Mettu, Assistant Professor
Tony Ellis, Research Fellow
Music
Brett Aarden, Visiting, Assistant Professor
Aviam Kolker, Lecturer
Natural Resources Conservation
Scott Schlossberg, Post-doctoral Researcher
Alexander Schneyer, Lecturer
Nursing
Peter Blood, Assistant Professor
Renee Dannefeld, Project Co-ordinator
Jenny Foster, Assistant Professor
Mary Christine King, Associate Professor
Ann Sheridan, Emeritus, Professor
Edward Tessier, Assistant Professor
Lisa Wolf, Assistant Professor Philosophy
Louise Antony, Professor
Lynne Baker, Distinguished, Professor
AnnFerguson, Professor
Pete Graham, Assistant Professor
Kevin Klement, Associate Professor
Hilary Kornblith, Professor
Joseph Levine, Professor
Gareth Matthews, Professor
Eileen O'Neill, Professor
Physics
Marc Achermann, Assistant Professor
Hael Collins, Senior Post-Doctoral Res. Associate Stanley Hertzbach, Professor (Associate Dean)
Robert Hallock, Professor
David Kaelor, Lecturer
Krishna Kumar, Professor
David Kawall, Assistant Professor
Narayanan Menon, Associate Professor
Anthony J. Paparo, Lecturer
Mark Tuominen, Professor
Jennie Traschen, Professor
Stephane Willocq, Associate Professor
Prasen Wong, Professor
Plant, Soil, and Insect Sciences
Frank Mangan, Associate Professor
Stephen M Rich, Assistant Professor
Political Economy Research Institute
James Heintz, Associate Research Professor Political Science
Sona Ahmarez, Professor
John Bingham, Professor
Barbara Cruikshank, Associate Professor
Carlene Edie, Professor
Eric Einhorn, Professor
John Hird, Professor
Peter Haas, Professor
MJ Peterson, Professor
Dean Robinson, Associate Professor
Sanjoy Roy, Associate Professor
Karl Ryavek Emeritus, Professor
Nicholas Xenos, Professor
Psychology
David Arnold, Associate Professor
Katherine Fite, Professor
Nancy Freger, Professor
Elizabeth Harvey, Associate Professor
Maureen Perry Jenkins, Associate Professor
Sally Powers, Professor
Susan Whitbourne, Professor
Nilanjana Dasgupta, Associate Professor
Rebecca Ready, Assistant Professor
Christopher Overtree, Director, Psychological Services
Resource Economics
Thomas Stevens, Professor
Scandinavian Studies
Sherrill Harbison Lecturer
Public Health
William Bartosh, Assistant Professor
Aline Gubrium, Assistant Professor
Lisa Wexler, Assistant Professor
Sociology
Doug Anderson, Professor
Gianpaolo Baiocchi, Associate Professor
Michelle Budig, Associate Professor
Dan Clawson, Professor
Jay Demerath, Professor
Emily Erikson, Assistant Professor
Robert Faulkner, Professor
Naomi Gerstel, Professor
Sanjiv Gupta, Associate Professor
Agustin Lao-Montes, Assistant Professor
Jennifer Lundquist, Assistant Professor
Gerald Platt, Professor
Suzanne Model, Professor
Joya Misra, Associate Professor
Amy Schalet, Assistant Professor
Randal Stokes, Professor
Millicent Thayer, Assistant Professor
Donald Tomaskovic-Devey, Professor
Robert Zussman, Professor
Michael Lewis, Professor emeritus
Theater
Gilbert McCauley, Assistant Professor
Patricia Wainer, Professor
Priscilla Page Lecturer
Woman's Studies
Arlene Avakian, Professor
Dayo Gore, Assistant Professor
Mihan Kang, Assistant Professor
Banumathi Subramaniam, Associate Dean HFA/Associate Professor

Faculty members and other members of the University of Massachusetts community who wish to add their names to this petition may do so at:

www.petitiononline.com/no4card

For information on the opposition to the Card nomination, visit: www.umassgss.org/AWC .

For information on the coalition opposing the Card nomination, contact: umassantycard@gmail.com

The following organizations endorse a petition to revoke the offer of an honorary degree to Andrew H. Card, Jr.:

Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP)
Graduate Employee Organization (GEO)
Graduate Student Senate (GSS)
Student Government Association (SGA)
UMass Anti War Coalition
UMass Amherst Students for Peace
Campus Anti War Outreach Caucus (CAWOC)
Palestine Action Committee
Political Science Graduate Student Association (PSGSA)
Sociology Graduate Student Association (SGSA)

Boards over Barsie's: Students miss historic area bar more guy friends. The culture of Southwest was overwhelming, and I was struggling to keep up.

BARSIE'S from page 1

Even though I could barely handle the countless games of Asshole and Beirut, I couldn't help but feel like I was helping to perpetuate all the drinking. I was the only one of my friends at the time with a fake ID, which made me one of the few distributors of alcohol to most of Cance's second floor. Our friend Nick would drive Kate and me to the liquor store, pull into parking lot next door and jump out. He and Kate would wait while I drove his beat up '88 Toyota Camry next door and walked in, cool, calm, and collected. I couldn't take out my list because that would be too conspicuous, so I was forced to remember everyone's order. It was usually just a bunch of Busch Light 30s; but sometimes it got more complicated, like when people felt like splurging, it would be on a handle of Captain Morgan's among other things. The ID was fool-proof and rarely got questioned.

* * *

Leading a double life soon got tiring for Eagan. School started to seem pointless since he was making so much money bartending, so he dropped out and focused on work. From four to seven every night, lines filled North Pleasant Street for "happy hour," which meant half-priced drinks. Eagan soon found himself befriending a lot of Amherst police who patrolled the area in front of the bars. He had found his niche in the Amherst party scene, parlaying the beverages.

* * *

Sophomore year, most of our friends moved off campus into places like Townhouses and Puffton Village, apartment complexes comprised mostly of UMass students, and known for their party scene. Kate and I moved up to room 446 Cance. We spent most of our time at themed parties. Nick's birthday that year was a "Pimps and Hoes" party at his friend's house on North Pleasant Street. In the spring, it was "Golf Pros and Tennis Hoes" in Townhouses. When the cops came to break it up, one of them explained to Nick that he, "just didn't feel right about arresting someone wearing argyle." That's how it is at UMass — a party will either end up with a good story, handcuffs, or both.

There was definitely a reason to party that year when the Red Sox won the World Series for the first time in over 80 years. Not being a big baseball fan myself, I was part of the minority during the Southwest celebrations. I knew it was better to be a self-proclaimed baseball neophyte rather than a girl wearing a pink Red Sox hat walking around talking about how cute Jason Varitek is. Admittedly, I had purchased one of these hats and only wore it a couple of times. I learned my lesson after hearing some of my guy friends making fun of those girls.

> The old man started crying and Eagan said this was the single most important moment that made him interested in the bar he dedicated his life to.

Southwest security had been on high alert since the riots the fall before during the play-offs when the Red Sox lost to the Yankees. That night had started off innocently enough, a few people filing into the quad in front of Washington dorm shouting, "Yankees suck!" but it soon escalated to a mass of students hell-bent on igniting rolls of toilet paper on fire and throwing them up in the air, tipping cars over as if they were worthless property, and igniting lounge furniture from the dorms. I was inside before the riot police had come out in full-force but was out there long enough to witness not only countless acts of vandalism but also needless displays of drunken girls in desperate need of attention as they took off their tops and started making out with one another while they sat on guys' shoulders. It was like cheap porn, but no one was getting paid.

* * *

The UMass that Sean Eagan knew was much different. Bands like the Grateful Dead and the Allman Brothers Band played shows at venues like the Fine Arts Center, the football stadium, and even by the campus pond. Everyone was there for a good time; and according to Eagan, the ZooMassers of today wouldn't have been able to handle it back then.

Eagan had been working at Barsie's for quite some time and had really made it his home. One day, in 1990, he was getting ready to open up the bar at noon when an old man presumably in his mid-70s approached the door.

"Can I help you, Sir? We're not open yet," Eagan said.

The man explained that he had graduated from Amherst College in 1940 and that he didn't want to come in. Instead he handed Eagan a 10 cent "Barselotti's" token. The original owner Andy Barselotti used to sell these tokens 12 for $1. The old man started crying and Eagan said this was the single most important moment that made him interested in learning about the history of the bar he now dedicated his life to.

In 1929, a year before the Great Depression, Andy Barselotti moved his small store that sold mostly fruit, candy and ice cream from the corner of Amity and North Pleasant Street to the Knights of Columbus building on North Pleasant Street. In 1933, the 18th Amendment, also known as Prohibition, was repealed and Barselotti was granted one of the first liquor licenses in the area. Barselotti's Café was established as a bar exactly one week after Prohibition ended.

In 1953, the bar moved to the "Trott Block" on North Pleasant Street, the former site of Amherst Taxi, and "Café" was dropped from the name. Barselotti and his girlfriend Lil were running things until the early 1960s when his nephew Ed Corsiglia took over.

In the 1970, the bar went through three new owners. Early in the decade, Corsiglia sold the bar to Eddie Montovani, the owner of Mike's Westview Café, another local watering hole. In 1974, it was sold to Don Lamoureux, and in '79, Bobby Whitlemore. The Barselotti's exchanged ownership for the last time in 1983 when Whittemore sold it to Judie's Restaurant, which had been located next door since 1977. The new owners, Mary and Nancy Jenal, decided to give Barsie's, which it had come to be known as, it's first face lift since the 1950s. They added windows along the left side of the building as well as a large front window to replace the previously closed off view of the street. High tables were put in place of the booths, and a small kitchen was added to the area that previously housed a pool table. Food service at Barsie's wasn't very popular, and after only a year, the kitchen closed,

> Every Wednesday night, I was drunk and singing along to Mr. Big's 'Be with you' and continuously shouting, 'Oh my God, I love this song!'

leaving the bar to serve its sole purpose — alcohol and nothing else.

Barsie's became the center of what later became known as uptown Amherst. With its neon pink sign, those who didn't know the bar knew that they were in an area where drinks, food, and recreation were the center of all activity. For the next 23 years, along with Delano's and Time Out, which later became McMurphy's, Uptown Tavern in 1997, Barsie's helped to designate the territory which has now become "club-sidewalk," the après bar hot spot for local college students. When Antonio's pizza opened in the late 90s, the area was complete. Drinks followed by "hot cheese upfront" became the staple of most nights out.

* * *

As a junior at UMass, most of my friends were turning 21. Kate and I moved to Brandywine Apartments with our friend Sara McElroy. Sara turned 21 in November, and Kate and I both had fake IDs so we frequented the uptown Amherst bar scene along with all of our friends of legal drinking age. At UMass, any night of the week is game for drinking; it's not just reserved for Thirsty Thursday or the weekend. The Guitar Dudes at McMurphy's played a big role in expanding the socially accepted drinking weeknights to Wednesdays. Soon, UMass students started lining up around 10 o'clock to hear two middle-aged men play songs that they admitted they barely knew on acoustic guitars. They'd substitute real words for vulgar ones, and everyone loved it, including myself. In addition to butchering every pleasured wedding reception anthem, the Guitar Dudes sang a lot of Tenacious D songs which are basically on the same level of class as all the others. Yet, who am I to criticize? Every Wednesday night, I was drunk and singing along to Mr. Big's "Be With You" and continuously shouting, "Oh my God, I love this song!" every time they started playing a new one. The Guitar Dudes played the same set list every week and even repeated songs during the course of the night.

* * *

Eagan loved being a part of the college bar scene. "Working in a college town, you keep getting older every year, but the students, they stay the same age. It's great," he said. Being around that age group kept Eagan young, and he was able to know what kind of music was popular and what people were up to. He liked not only his contact with college kids, but just the sheer amount of heads he saw on a daily basis. He met some of his

See BARSIE'S on page 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 138

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jamieson Pieter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPIES EDITOR Adam Seagrist
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Bellveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
FEATURES EDITOR Melissa D'Amico
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Peritz
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dobanitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonpakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeremy Rice
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALMA LEE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADCASTING SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADDITIONAL HISTORY AND INFORMATION, CALL MEMORYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Bellveau

COPY EDITOR
Jamie Mason

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Tiffany Van Langen

To the World's Best Customers:
Thank you for joining us.
It has been a pleasure to serve you.
To the seniors—best of luck,
we are going to miss you.
DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices
GRAND PRIZE WINNER '05
RESIDENTIAL
YCMP
*Seniors on the meal plan can use the meal cards at the Bluewall on Friday, May 25 and May 26, Saturday

SOM group applies business practices to healthcare problem

HEALTHCARE from page 1

prices continue to rise at the current rate, "health care is going to be too big of a burden to society."

In 2005, total health care spending cost $2 trillion, or $6,700 per person, and made up 16 percent of the gross domestic product (GDP), according to the Washington, D.C.-based National Coalition on Health Care (NCHC). At this rate, by 2015, health care expenditures will equal $4 trillion and comprise 20 percent of the GDP, the group said.

The problems and costs will accelerate as the baby boom generation ages and requires more care, Kaplan said.

Bisgaard said that health care experts may be able to improve the quality of care by using new technology and innovative ideas to reduce medication errors and unnecessary medical procedures. One analytical means to do so, he explained, is to follow the five stages the Six Sigma model, to correct quality problems while providing a stable working environment.

The five stages of Six Sigma, he said, are: define, measure, analyze, improve and control (DMAIC), a process that he said can provide a solid base for working through a problem, no matter what a company's specialty. He said that Six Sigma only works if there is a focus on a specific issue or problem.

Six Sigma is a fairly new implementation in hospitals and other health care-related industries. In 2002, a Red Cross hospital in the Netherlands started using Six Sigma to solve problems, according to a 2005 article written for Six Sigma Forum Magazine by Bisgaard, Jaap van den Heuvel and Ronald J.M.M. Does.

Results at the hospital from applying the model included shortening the length of stay for chronic obstructive pulmonary disease patients (COPD), creating a standard payment policy to medical suppliers, reducing the number of incorrect invoices by temp agencies and reducing the number of invoice mistakes, decreasing the length of children's stay by allowing parents to "room-in" overnight, and reducing the number of patients on expensive and sometimes-unnecessary intravenous antibiotics by administering such medicines orally, the article said.

Using Six Sigma, the patients received better care while the hospital saved over $400,000 annually.

"We are beginning to see [Six Sigma] really work in health care," Bisgaard said. He sees technical innovation ahead that "can make [health care] more effective, efficient and better," Bisgaard said. One such innovation, he said, is in retail health care.

Retail giants such as Wal-Mart and CVS are installing walk-in clinics in some of their locations, where patients can receive treatment for minor injuries, common illnesses, and the filling of prescriptions, according to MinuteClinic, Inc., a Minneapolis based firm specializing in installing and operating such clinics.

Retail health care availability might "provide a health care that is more efficient and provide low cost service to a broader segment of society," Bisgaard said. "I don't want to judge how well it works…but it is those kind of things [retail health care] we need to experiment with to find more efficient ways…[for] providing health care," he said. "As soon as we start to experiment with various ways of doing it, over time we will figure out better ways of delivering health care."

Bisgaard said that it's important to improve the health care system without a major overhaul, but through changes made directly to the system. Both incremental improvements that gradually refine procedures and breakthrough changes, on the order, for example, of what MinuteClinic proposes "go hand in hand [toward improvements]," Bisgaard said.

Americans appear ready for such change. In a 2003 ABC News poll, 34 percent of Americans said they were dissatisfied with current health care costs, and 59 percent worried about affording health care in the future.

Bisgaard seems convinced that once the quality of health care systems are improved by Six Sigma processes, costly errors will be minimized and the direct cost to patients and society can be lowered. "When you improve the quality, you automatically reduce the cost," he said.

Bisgaard's workshop last Friday at ISOM pulled together campus participants from nursing and public health, management, and medical and medical process specialists from the Pioneer Valley. Participants included his two European co-authors, and others from three universities and eight different health care organizations, he said.

"We expect this to be the first of several workshops where we are going to educate each other about what we can do…in heath care quality."

The United States currently has a publicly and privately-funded mix of health care. While government-funded programs such as Medicare and Medicaid cover older people and many, but not all of the poor, most health care insurance is funded by employers or directly by individual subscribers.

Because prices of health care for individuals are very expensive, many people and families who do not have coverage at the workplace are unable to afford adequate, or any, health care.

According to a report by the U.S. Census Bureau issued in 2006, 15.9 percent of the population had no health care in 2005.

David Humphreys can be reached

Nudists reach out to Connecticut youth

WOODSTOCK, Conn. (AP) — Here's the naked truth about nude recreation: The people who practice it aren't getting any younger.

To draw 20- and 30-somethings, nudist groups and camps are trying everything from deep discounts on membership fees to a young ambassador program that encourages college and graduate students to talk to their peers about having fun in the buff.

"We don't want the place to turn into a gated assisted living facility," said Gordon Adams, membership director at Solair Recreation League, a nudist camp in northeastern Connecticut that recently invited students from dozens of New England schools to a college day in hopes of piquing their interest.

The median age is 55 at Solair, where a yearly membership is $500 for people older than 40, $300 for people younger than 40 and $150 for college students.

The Kissimee, Fla.-based American Association for Nude Recreation, which represents about 270 clubs and resorts in North America, estimates that more than 90 percent of its 50,000 members are older than 35.

"If a young person is enlightened enough to go to a beach or resort, they'll find that they're outnumbered by people who are not like them," said Sam Miller, 32, a medical student in Riverside, Calif., who is helping to plan a youth ambassadors workshop being held next month in Orlando, Fla. "Oftentimes they won't go back for that reason."

No one is quite sure why nudity, at least the organized version promoted by the AANR and similar groups, is such a tough sell for younger people.

"I think people think that we're all hippies," said Laura Groezinger, 22, of Billerica, Mass., who grew up visiting Solair with her family.

"Other people, I don't know the right way to say this, but they think it's more sexual, kind of. They don't understand just the being free with your body and being comfortable."

Money is also an issue. As nudist resorts become increasingly upscale, catering to baby boomers and retirees with plenty of disposable income, they're less affordable for college students and young families.

"There's a financial barrier, and I think it's important for resorts, if they want young people around, to recognize that and cater to them with discounts or free days," Miller said.

Only a handful of students attended Solair's recent college event, held on an overcast 60-degree day that prompted many to bundle up in sweaters rather than shed their clothes.

-Associated Press

SGA holds forum on discrimination

VENEY from page 1

that she will wait until the end of this week before suing the University on the grounds of racism and discrimination.

Yesterday's press conference, held in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union building, featured Veney, Mattar, former sprinter Elisabeth Budd, and men's track team member Manuel Harris-Lopes sharing their concerns about alleged discrimination within the track program.

"The SGA is hosting this forum because we have been aware of racial discrimination within the athletic program for some time, particularly with the women's track and field team," said moderator Malcolm Chu. "After considering the issue at hand, it has become clear that the athletes here today have a thoroughly legitimate concern."

Veney followed with her statements, which described the series of events that led up to her removal from the team in November, events that she felt represented a pattern of discrimination from LaFreniere.

"This [press conference] is step number two in my overall case revolving around the University and the track program," Veney said. "Step number two is this press conference, which is to get the word around that what's going on should not have gone on, and to support the people who it has happened to who cannot speak, are speaking now or just don't know what they want to do."

Mattar spoke after Veney, and cited several instances that, according to Mattar, illustrate LaFreniere's discrimination.

"I feel that I have been discriminated against and set to a different standard than the white athletes on the team," Mattar said.

Mattar's scholarship was recently reduced to $10,000 from $20,000 and LaFreniere, according to Mattar, said that the reduction was the result of a lack of contribution to the team.

"As far as the statistics are concerned, I am the best middle distance runner on the team," Mattar said.

When Mattar asked LaFreniere why her scholarship had been cut in half, LaFreniere replied that she had no statistical evidence to back up her statement, according to Mattar.

Budd ran for the women's track team from 2002 to 2006 as a sprinter and was UMass' top sprinter in the 500-meter race and the 400-meter race during her junior season.

Budd, however, didn't receive any scholarship money until her junior year, despite posting the Minutewomen's best time in the 400-meter race in her freshman year, and placing consistently in the top 10 competitors in A-10 Championship events during her freshman and sophomore seasons.

Budd also claimed that friction existed between her and LaFreniere from the start.

"When I was a freshman, Julie [LaFreniere] told me that I would never amount to anything, and that I would be allowed to participate just because I ran in high school. This is far from the first incident that I know of."

Members of the women's track and field team were present in matching black UMass polo shirts. After the press conference, several members of the women's team refuted Veney and Mattar's allegations.

"I would never call my coach a racist," said Troyanah Evans, an African-American sprinter and jumper on the women's team. Evans did say that communication between the different pieces of the athletic department needed improvement, and could have led to Veney and Mattar's present situation.

"There should be communication between coaches, trainers and the athletic department, and there's not enough of that," Evans added. "I wouldn't say that Julie is a racist."

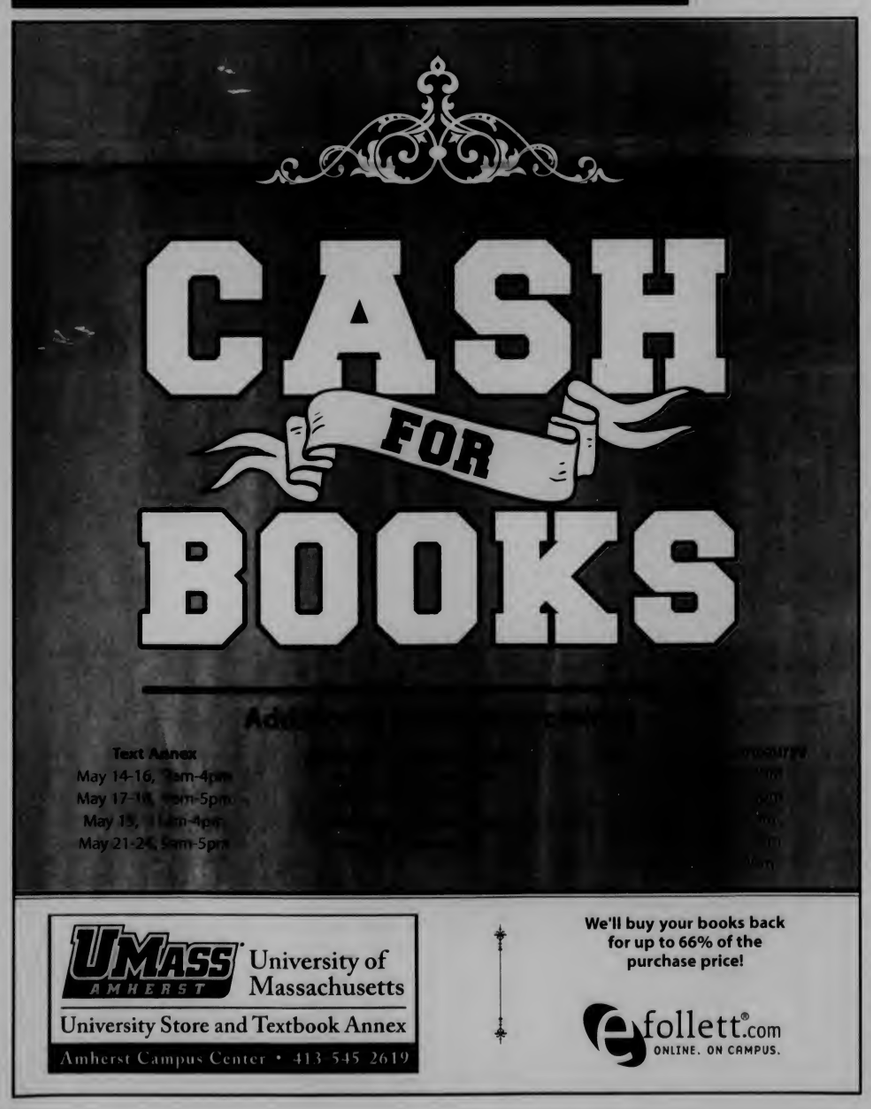
"For someone to be racist…that's a really loaded word," said Dionise Miranda, an African-American sophomore sprinter. "For Julie [LaFreniere] to be racist I feel like she would have had to discriminate against all of us [African-Americans] and taken away all of our scholarships."

Jennifer Curtin, a middle distance runner, believes that the revoking of scholarships isn't anything specific to African-Americans on the women's track team, though she wouldn't disclose the names of any white athletes who had their scholarships either reduced or taken away.

"There have been white girls that have been kicked off of the team and their scholarships removed," Curtin, a Caucasian, said after the press conference yesterday. "If you have a bad attitude then that is one of the deciding factors."

Rob Greenfield can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu

Want to write for news in the fall?
e-mail us at news@dailycollegian.com



Barsie's: Students miss historic area bar

BARSIE'S from page 3

best friends through the bar, as they were salesmen or representatives from alcohol distribution companies. Eagan saw Barsie's as part of his youth, filled with lots of girls, lots of drinking, and "lots of other things," he explains with a laugh.

Before he was old enough to experience the bar for what it was, Eagan had visited Barsie's to play pin-ball with friends around the age of 13. His baseball coach at the time, Don Lamoureux, was the owner, and the boys loved to go there as they were immersed in the cigar smoke from older locals who made Barsie's their frequent afternoon watering hole. During that time, going uptown was an exhilarating experience. The left side of the road that housed bars like Quicksilver, which is now Delano's, was filled with "easy rider types" who were rough bikers who dropped acid. Eagan wasn't allowed to walk on the left side of the road.

• • •

The next summer, I moved from Brandywine to Puffton where I would spend the rest of my time at UMass. My friends and I spent most of our time drinking $2 pints of Honey Brown and playing Naked Photo Hunt, a computer game with two pictures of tacky half-naked women from the 80s in which you had to figure out what one picture had that the other one didn't. It was a good way to pass time during the lazy, warm summer nights at Barsie's, when the few students living in Amherst during the summer would wander in.

It was a relaxing time in uptown Amherst when bars were quiet enough that you could hold a conversation and getting ready meant doing little more than throwing on a pair of flip-flops and a hooded sweatshirt in case it got cold.

That fall, one of my roommates, Jessica Pierce got a job at Barsie's. This gave us the perfect excuse to spend most of our nights there. When school is in session, all bets are off in uptown Amherst.

Soon you are inevitably drawn into a world where everyone has slept with the boyfriend or girlfriend of someone you know, and girls strut down North Pleasant Street as if they were participants in some warped beauty pageant in which, instead of a swimsuit or formal wear competition, it was a cold weather booty-shorts competition. High-heels and leggings covered the contestants of the war of the X-chromosomes, in which there are no winners, simply girls who either walk that inevitable walk-of-shame back to their apartment or girls who make it home in one-piece, cell phone, ID, and lip gloss still in their tiny jewel covered clutch.

With Jessica working at Barsie's, I felt like I was given access behind the velvet rope. My other two roommates and I bypassed any line to get in and rarely had to show ID. Although the bouncers didn't know my name, they knew my face and more importantly, they knew I was Jessica's roommate. After a while, Jessica started dating Gregg Joyce, another bartender at Barsie's who had worked there since 1999. With Jessica and Gregg both behind the bar, I never had to ask for another Tanqueray and Tonic and never got kicked out when they called last call around 12:30 a.m. Barsie's had become my sanctuary in uptown Amherst. Although I was surrounded by the usual obnoxious drunken debauchery, I was part of a privileged class of bar-goers — those that knew the people who worked there.

On November 27, 2006, Gregg Joyce and another Barsie's bartender, Gus Carleson were working at their second job for the Amherst Department of Public Works. It was approximately 8:30 a.m. and they were making their usual trip to Starbucks, located a few buildings down from Barsie's. Looking over at the bar, something peculiar caught their eye: a man on a ladder doing something with the pink neon sign.

"They're finally fixing the sign," Gregg said to Gus.

Gus replied, "I bet you we're closing."

In recent times, rumors made their rounds among the Barsie's staff that the bar was closing to make way for an expansion of Judie's Restaurant. These rumors hadn't gained much merit as the expansion was seen as something that would happen in the distant future.

At 9:28 a.m. that morning, Gregg got a call from Sean Eagan and he immediately knew it was bad news. "Why else would he be calling so early?" he thought. When he hung up with his boss, Gregg immediately called Jess.

"Me and Gus have some bad news for you."

"No!" she wailed into the phone.

"Yup, we're closed."

Gregg knew Jessica would be upset. The two guys had been driving toward Puffton; and when they pulled into the parking lot outside of 548, Gregg looked to his friend. "I'll be right back," he said.

> That weekend I didn't go out. My sanctuary was gone. Our sanctuary was gone. All of those Barsie's regulars had lost their niche.

Jessica's first thought was that she would have to move back home. After all, working one weekend at the bar paid her rent for a month.

"I specially around the holidays, it was a swift kick in the ass," Gregg explained. Although they had known on some level that the bar might be closing at some point, they were in no way ready to hear it had actually happened.

That weekend I didn't go out. My sanctuary was gone. Our sanctuary was gone. All of those Barsie's regulars had lost their niche. Not just the drunken UMass or Amherst College students but those people who have lived in Amherst all their lives and come back to Barsie's to relish in the fond memories of their youth had lost something substantial. People like that 70-year-old man who started to cry, people like Sean Eagan who had spent the last 23 years of his life there, behind the bar and loved it.

The expansion of Judie's Restaurant had originally been set for completion in April, but now won't be totally finished until the fall of 2007. The newly renovated space will be twice as large, with a capacity of 160 from the original 93 seats. Not much will change in the restaurant itself, but the new space will house a bigger bar area and possibly the neon pink "Barselotti's" sign.

Sean Eagan currently owns the Barsie's name and is planning on opening a new and improved bar sometime in the future. He hopes to create a restaurant/bar type establishment, much like The Pub, The Hangar, or Rafters; where people in Amherst can come for dinner and stay for drinks. "Bars like Barsie's are a dying breed, there's just too much working against them," he said. It was non-profitable to get hardly any customers until 11 or 12 at night when the college crowd makes it uptown.

• • •

Graduation is weeks away and the majority of my time is spent completing assignments, finishing up reading I've procrastinated in doing all semester and enjoying what time I have left in Amherst. Although walking around uptown is now a much different experience. A cell phone in one hand and a Starbucks soy vanilla latte in the other, I pass the place where Barsie's used to be. No window, no stools, no taps, no bar — just a half-built wooden fortress slated to be the new location of a bigger Judie's.

Those old Barsie's regulars need not worry, though.

"So what will you miss about the bar?" I asked Eagan.

"Oh, I'm not so sure I've got it out of my system yet," he grinned.

Building proposed

BUILDING from page 1

pre-planning, nothing is in stone yet — auditorium space and housing for communication and journalism."

According to Michael Morgan, retiring Chairman of Communication, "Nothing is definite, but plans are being discussed because [the University] know[s] they have to get people out of Bartlett [which houses the journalism program] for a year or two because Bartlett needs serious repair work. They know that [the communication department is] at its limit, and Machmer Hall is in seriously terrible shape."

The new building would be used initially as temporary housing for departments currently in Bartlett Hall while that building is renovated, according to Morgan.

After the Bartlett renovations are finished, the journalism department would remain in the new facility while communication would shift its operations from Machmer to the proposed building, he adds. The journalism program, formerly an independent department, is now part of the communication department.

Departments now housed in Bartlett include art history, English, journalism, philosophy, women's studies and the writing program.

Morgan says that administrators hope to act soon. "We want to get it done quickly because we want to get those departments out of Bartlett, because it needs work desperately."

Determining when construction on the potential building might commence is difficult, said Hunt.

The building would alleviate communication's space crunch in Machmer and would aid the moving forward of the Amherst 250 plan, which had been designed to replace diminished faculty lines following budget cuts earlier this decade.

The communication department has been one of the more active departments within the Amherst 250 plan.

The plan, outlined by Chancellor John V. Lombardi, had been intended to procure 50 tenure-track faculty in each of five years, to replenish faculty ranks.

The proposal as Lombardi outlined it has lagged, impeded by a shortage of state funds and the need to revive a sagging campus infrastructure. The delay has been criticized by the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) and by the Student Government Association (SGA).

In its early stages, 27 faculty were hired to begin teaching in Fall 2006, and 25 of 32 searches commissioned for faculty jobs to begin in Fall 2007 have resulted in successful offers, according to Andrew Effrat, Associate Provost for Faculty Recruitment and Retention.

Morgan said that communication conducted six nationwide — and in some cases, global — searches over the past two years, turning up an aggregate of four hires, two in each year.

With four successful searches out of the six that were authorized, the communication department has achieved a 66.7 percent success rate. The rate is successful considering that MSP President, Max Page, who is also an associate professor of art and an adjunct associate professor of history, considers a 50 to 60 percent success rate in faculty hires to be high.

Though the communication department could use more faculty and is authorized to conduct two more Amherst 250 searches, department faculty are unsure if their infrastructure can support the growth.

"If we hire more people at this point, we literally have nowhere to put them," said Morgan. "We have lots of staff, lecturers and part-timers all doubled, tripled and quadrupled-up [in offices]. We have teaching assistants on top of each other."

"There is literally no place to put people, so [the school] has to be able to put some resources into space. Also, you cannot put people into shabby offices, so some money needs to be spent on that. It's an investment in more faculty."

The new building would allow communication to continue its growth as part of the Amherst 250 plan by providing a state-of-the-art facility and a greater faculty capacity.

"It would be fantastic. We're just incredibly excited by it. We cannot go anywhere. We cannot progress, and we cannot grow without it. We need the space desperately," said Morgan.

He says that the new building would allow communication to continue steady growth of Amherst 250 faculty by two or three members for a few years more, as opposed to limiting when the department can hope to add talent to its roster of professors.

The project is in the pre-planning stage, according to Hunt, and the University is conducting discussions about design, feasibility and cost.

SUPERCUTS®
every time®
GRADUATION SPECIAL
$2 off
ADULT HAIRCUT
(reg. $13.95 or more)
SUPERCUTS®
Coupon valid only at participating locations. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. One coupon per customer. Present coupon prior to payment of services. ©2007 Supercuts, Inc. Printed U.S.A.
Offer expires 07/15/07
GSHC
Amherst Plaza
181 University Drive, Amherst, MA
(413) 259-1135
Come in and receive a free bottle of Paul Mitchell's Awapuhi shampoo
(while supplies last)

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MAY 15, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Editor in brief

Eric Athas

I was at a birthday party when I found out I was going to be the editor in chief of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian this semester. It was my girlfriend's little sister's seventh birthday party, and I can remember getting the phone call alerting me of my new job. I tried socializing with my girlfriend KJ's relatives, but I must admit, my head felt like a tornado and my hands wouldn't stop trembling. I went to grab a slice of pizza but realized the butterflies in my stomach wouldn't have it. It was December 29. My mind was already in the Campus Center basement. I was excited.

UMass here I come.

At the end of my senior year of high school my college decision came down to UMass and one other school. It was a difficult decision, but there was one factor that gave UMass the edge – I heard it had a decent daily newspaper I could write for. Katherine Lemons, my high school journalism teacher told me all about it. She attended UMass as a graduate student and remembered reading this newspaper called "the Collegian."

She suggested I get involved.

I went to the Collegian newsroom as soon as I arrived at UMass and –to my surprise – got my first news story assigned to me. The editor assigned me a story about Christoffer M. Carstanjen, a computer research analyst who worked at OIT. Carstanjen was onboard flight 175 on September 11th, 2001. He was killed when his plane slammed into the second tower.

It was, at the time, the three year anniversary of 9/11. Like a true amateur I jotted down a list of questions I would ask one of Carstanjen's former colleagues at OIT on a spiral notebook. I rehearsed the questions over and over again in my head. After the interview, I wrote the story, and e-mailed it to the Collegian news editor.

The next morning I rushed to the nearest dining commons and picked up a copy of the Collegian. My story was nowhere to be found. The following Monday morning I did the same thing. I ran down the stairs of my dormitory. I power-walked towards the DC. I weaved through the line of college students to the newspaper rack and once again, and picked up that day's Collegian. There was my story. Right on the front page. I smiled, and then my eyes caught the byline.

UMass reflects on lost colleague
By Erica Athas, Collegian Correspondent

ERICA! I finally made it to the front page of the Collegian – as a girl! A few jokes from my friends and family followed, and about 170 articles later, I'm over it. I don't think I'll ever forget seeing Erica Athas in print though.

The Collegian: My life

The next six semesters of my college would be spent primarily at the Collegian. I had the time of my life covering UMass sports. Whether it was cross country, swimming, softball, football, or basketball, it was always exciting. Driving 16 hours straight with two friends in a two-door Honda Civic to cover the UMass-Appalachian State national championship game in Chattanooga, Tennessee – and then turning around and driving straight back to Amherst was fun and miserable at the same time.

During my sophomore and junior years I began to focus on the news aspect of the paper. I cannot explain the thrill of covering this university. This transitioned me into becoming the managing editor, and then editor.

My experience as the editor was both the greatest time of my life and the most stressful. There were the sleepless nights, the frantic phone calls, the angry confrontations, and the frightening nightmares. There were the compelling interviews, the exhilarating stories, the hilarious pranks, and the incredible people. Through it all, I'd do it all again in a second.

There were the compelling interviews, the exhilarating stories, the hilarious pranks, and the incredible people. Through it all, I'd do it all again.

I've said this before, and I still believe it: The current staff of the Collegian is the best staff this paper has seen in years. Ok, I'm biased in this sense, but me being editor aside, I'm serious. I want to thank everyone, but of course in the newspaper business we have this thing called space, so I can't do that. I appreciate anyone and everyone who has worked with me throughout the years at the Collegian.

I'm only a junior though, which means I will be returning to UMass as a student next year. Although I will not be an editor, I plan on staying involved at the Collegian. My hope is to focus on in-depth projects I can dedicate time to. Regardless of the number of articles I write, and however many bylines I obtain with future employers, I will always have that moment in the morning. It's that moment when I run down the stairs of my apartment and head for the nearest newspaper rack. There's no better feeling than seeing your name in print. Lets just hope there's not an "a" at the end of "Iric" anytime soon.

Eric Athas was the Collegian editor in chief. He can be reached at eathas@student.umass.edu

Define: adulthood

Debbie Friedman

When I was younger, all I ever wanted was to be grown-up. I played house, pretended to be a doctor, and sometimes just sat for hours, enamored by the dial pad of an old, unplugged phone my parents gave me. I never had a concrete idea in my head about what an adult was, but I knew that I wanted to be one. Someday.

Now, I face that day, as does every other graduating senior. Together we stand, at the edge of a cliff, looking out at something so incredibly unknown. Going backwards is not an option. The only way forward is to jump.

So we'll freefall into a new era, a new life, and a new identity. Where we'll land, or what our lives will look like when we get there is unclear. All that is certain is that when we do land, we'll be considered "adults."

Maybe growing up is just accepting that there isn't an explanation for everything.

However, what that really means is perhaps the most unclear thing of all. Being an adult, and acting "grown-up" are subjective ideas, difficult to define, and impossible to fully comprehend. Just ask anyone what the word actually means and you'll find an array of answers, each one more different from the last.

This became evident to me after talking with several members of my family, both young and old. While the youngest members were not all that interested in answering my question, offering a "do I have to answer this?" type response, I did learn a little bit. For my 11-year-old cousin Ellie, being a grown-up meant you had a lot of nice stuff.

"It's when you have a car, a job, and a cool cell phone," she said.

My 13-year-old cousin Maddie felt that you become an adult when you "realize what you want to do with your life."

Thinking back, I could remember feeling similar. Yet, with age, you quickly find out that not all adults have a cool car, job, cell phone, or a clue what they want to do with their life.

As the answers progressed to the teenagers in my family, maturity and decision-making became a common theme. For my cousins Scott and Eric, both freshmen in high school, growing up meant becoming mature enough to make good decisions, as well as learning how to tell the difference between right and wrong.

My 17-year-old sister said you're an adult when you "take full responsibility for your actions." While ideally these answers seemed right, I thought of more than a handful of "adults" who had less than stellar decision-making skills and warped concepts of responsibility.

Moving on to the actual grown-ups in my family, I found the answers became a bit more introspective, as one would expect.

"You become an adult when you accept the fact that you are no longer a child," my dad said.

For my mom, being an adult meant "accepting the fact that you are supposed to put other people before yourself."

To my Aunt Kathleen, it meant "knowing how to make the right decisions, even when they're hard."

Then there were a couple answers that were a bit more simplistic.

"You are an adult when you make the switch from bubble gum to extra sugarless," my Aunt Janice laughed.

"It's when you can afford to buy expensive, bottled, imported beer," my dad added.

With each new answer, my head only spun more, leading me to believe that my nine-year-old cousin Warren may have had the best response when he shouted from his bicycle, "How the heck should I know?"

His candor made me wonder how anyone could possibly know what it means to be an adult, or if there even is such a thing.

While there are qualities our society attributes to being grown-up, such as maturity and responsibility, what it feels like, or when it takes place seem to be completely relative.

Seeking reassurance to my realization, I looked to the wisest members of my family. Sure enough, they told me exactly what I knew deep down all along.

"You can't put an age bracket on it," my grandfather said.

My grandma felt similarly saying, "Some people are adults at 10, and some never become one."

And my great aunt Theresa, still spunky as ever at the age of 81, put it all together when she said, "I think you never know."

"Life happens. You wake up one day, and there you are. Some people will recognize it. Others will not," she stated with ease.

After hearing those words, searching for a definition suddenly seemed extremely unimportant, because the youngest and oldest members of my family proved how we all enter and leave this world never knowing the answers to life's greatest questions.

Therefore, maybe growing up is just accepting that there isn't an explanation for everything. And perhaps the only real difference between a child and an adult is the knowledge of how to find comfort within oneself when facing the unknown. In that case, we have no reason to fear the "adult" label because we have the power to define what it means.

Coming to that definition won't be easy. But it will happen. Someday.

Debbie Friedman was a weekly columnist. She can be reached at dfriedm@student.umass.edu.

Coming full circle

Chris Eckel

I remember my graduation day like it was yesterday. Older friends teased me telling me, "Welcome to the real world, it's sink or swim from here on out." My parents warned me that school was going to get much harder, and if I didn't bear down on my studies, I might have to drop out. My teacher also gave me some words of advice. She told me to stop drawing on people. Yes, graduation from preschool was quite the big step for me, and I'm sure it was a significant move for all of you as well.

High school graduation was a bit of an experience too, but I feel like nothing really compares to what's happening to us this week. Sure, there are some things that all graduations have in common, like the reality that we will have to leave certain things behind. Food – one of those things. We're supposed to eat and drink more mature things as we grow up. When we left pre-school, it was time to bid farewell to fluffernutters (with the crusts cut off, of course) and Teeni drinks for lunch. When we leave college, we're supposed to quit drinking beer for breakfast. (Or at least, drink a more expensive brand of booze for brunch). Of course, I was still eating peanut butter and fluff throughout high school, so hopefully I'll grow past the beer thing a little more quickly.

Very few people can plan out those parts of their lives, and for those of us who can not, life has all of a sudden gotten slightly intimidating.

Personal fashion is another thing that changes as we go through this transition marked by graduation. Pre-school is all about individuality: bright yellow rubber boots, jester hats, and dirty sweatpants. High school, on the other hand, is all about conformity. If you're not wearing the right shirt in the right color made by the right company, you might as well forget about getting an invitation to the big party. By the time most of us reach the end of college, it's all about individuality again: sandals in the winter and witty t-shirts rule the day.

They say everything in life is cyclical. Well, here comes the downer part of the cycle. It's time to be a fashion lemming and dress like everyone else again. You'd better make sure that suit or skirt is conservative enough, or you'll be out of a job before you know it. Unless, of course, you work at an Internet startup, but right – very few people can plan out those parts of their lives, and for those of us who can not, life has all of a sudden gotten slightly intimidating.

Now, for the first time, we're going to be on our own, and planning takes a back seat to shuffling paperwork at the office, bills at home, taking the stained shirt to the dry cleaners, and trying to find a date. It's while rushing from the dry cleaners to speed dating at Chili's that I think we'll finally realize how overwhelming life can be when we have to take care of everything ourselves. The real world can be rather nerve-racking.However, I have faith that I can handle it, and I know you all are going to get through it all as well. After all, we survived four-to-six years at UMass, and that's not easy.

We survived riots and DC food and budget cuts and all-nighters. Each step of the way, we learned something new, and we found out many important things that we can put to use in our lives. College has made us smarter, and it it's made us stronger. We UMassers are ready for the next step; let's get out there and make the real world our playground. And when people ask you how you got so far, don't forget to tell them how big a role UMass played in your eventual success. Good luck, class of 2007.

Chris Eckel was a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at ceckel@student.umass.edu

DO YOU LIKE TO DRAW COMICS?

Because we're going to be needing 'em next semester!
Send an e-mail to collegianeditorial@yahoo.com.

Westside meets Mass., guy

Amherst. I had never even heard of the town until I started looking into the public university system in Massachusetts during my latter years of high school. If I hadn't known that it was a town's name, I would've easily glanced at the word and mistaken it for a violet quartz gemstone – you know, Amethyst (I know the two words don't really resemble each other, but, like, I'm totally a Valley girl that, like, doesn't know anything).

Nicole Boonjakuakul

But after living here for four years, this town has really turned into a jewel, a diamond in the rough whose surface I had to scratch at to make it sparkle.

The plane landed into Bradley International Airport in Hartford, Conn. on Aug. 31, 2003. I peeked through the plane's window, and all I could see was...green. I remember thinking that I had never seen so much lush in my entire life. I grew up in Los Angeles – San Fernando Valley (yes, the place where Valley girls are made) – a place where gated communities and housing complexes replace land in a matter of months; seeing land so verdant was quite a shock.

I sat anxiously in the passenger seat of my mom's rental car as she drove up Route 9 towards campus. The only sights I saw were the gloomy sky above, a bison farm to my left, and broken down houses with potholes in their driveways.

Suddenly amidst the flat land, the W.E.B. DuBois Library rose, as well as the Southwest towers. It was like a mini-metropolis – my new haven for the next four years of my life.

I remember moving everything into my claustrophobic room in Sylvan – the walls are made of cinderblocks painted white, need I say more – and hearing, "Wicked this, and wicked that, guy."

Wicked? Guy? Not only was my Massachusetts-slang cherry popped at that moment, but I became overwhelmed with the realization that I had a lot of adjusting to do.

And adjust I did – to the fanaticism of Red Sox Nation, to the obsession with Dunkin' Donuts, to the elimination of the pronunciation of the letter 'R' in the English language, just to name a few.

And adjust I did – to the fanaticism of Red Sox Nation, to the obsession with Dunkin' Donuts, to the elimination of the pronunciation of the letter 'R' in the English language, just to name a few. But these few are things that have become endearing to me. Somehow thinking about not having Massachusetts and its people in close proximity is making me short of breath.

"Wait, you're from California? And you came to UMass???" YES.

I never understood why that was so hard to believe. I'm sure there are people at UC-Santa Barbara or Davis saying the exact same thing to you, dare I say it, "Massholes" who moved to California (I heart "Massholes", bee-tee-dub, so I meant that in no way offensive). If you've grown up on one side of the country, it's not that farfetched to want to explore the country at opposite ends.

Either way, I'm going back to California (please don't start singing the Biggie song). And for those of you who are curious as to "what [SoCal] is like," I'm going back to streets that are lined with palm trees, not maples or pines; where winters drop down to a "freezing" 45 degrees, yet people still bust out their scarves, mittens and peacoats;where from a bird's-eye view, you could see 20 different freeways intertwine and outline town residential areas; where luxurious cars are driven by wanna-be luxurious people. It's almost what you see in the movies, but not quite. People do move at a slower pace, but that's because they're too sun-baked and toasted from laying out at the beach.

Sometimes, I feel like people at home see things with dollar signs as pupils. Everything is about how much you spent on this pair of jeans, or a purse, or sunglasses. When it's nice out, people aren't seen jogging everywhere, or playing Frisbee, or barbequing. They're seen driving in their air-conditioned Escalades and Hummers with the windows rolled up.

Amherst was literally a breath of fresh air from the Los Angeles yellow smog.

At home, I can't drive less than two miles and end up along the beautiful [Connecticut] River. I can't take drives on windy back-roads and admire the breath-taking foliage when Fall arrives. I can't step out of the car to go try to pet the cows on the farms behind, and around, UMass. I won't be able to feel on-top-of-the-world like I do when I'm standing at a rock's edge at Skinner State Park overlooking the entire Pioneer Valley, which I highly recommend. I won't be able to gulf down breakfast food from Stables or Roosters after a hard night's drinking.

But I'm leaving the snow, the bloom of spring, the falling of the first autumn leaf for a toss up between sunshine and rain year-round. I'm leaving the thick heavy political climate. I'm leaving some of the best professors and mentors any student could ask for. I'm leaving some of the most genuine people I will ever meet – so full of life, character, wit.

You all know who you are, and even if you don't, just know that this California girl thinks all you "Massholes" are wicked amazing.

Nicole Boonjakuakul was an assistant news editor. She can be reached at nicsboon@msn.com.

Go out and find your own paradise

Brendan Hall

It was August of 2004, in the balmy, sticky, wee hours of the night, somewhere in the Hollywood Hills, and I thought I'd found paradise in some stranger's backyard.

One of my closest friends, Chris, and I had made it a nightly tradition during my week-long trip to Los Angeles to roll up to a random spot in the city, bust out some lawn chairs and a 30-rack and take in the serenity of a breathtaking view.

We thought we'd seen it all by this point. We'd stood at the edges of cliffs on the Malibu shores, cruised the sprawling Sunset strip, feigned gang signs at night in Inglewood, and basked in the plain ole' silliness of Venice and its merry psychopath inhabitants.

But it was here, hidden just below a random backyard on Allview Terrace, where time stood still. Unscathed Hollywood sign to our immediate left, neon city skyline to the distant right, submerged in the dim, starry skies above.

Damn.

Chris and I called our girlfriends at the time – hey babe, guess where I am? If this wasn't the most beautiful thing we've seen in our young lives, then we had to tell the ladies in our lives that we missed them. Dearly.

When you're 19, there's this sense of invincibility. You're young. You're free. You lack regard for caution or authority. The world is just ahead of you, your innocence just jilted you last Thursday. At this age, life's best exploits seem to only come after you've broken the rules.

Trespassing? Ha.

And we slaughtered that 30 amidst the quiescent haze.

Paradise.

That same summer, the Michael Mann film "Collateral" hit theatres. In the movie, Jamie Foxx plays a cab driver named Max, who keeps a postcard of a tropical island attached to the inner part of his car's visor. Whenever times get stressful, or he just wants to chill out, he flips down that visor and in his mind he's on that island, without a care in the world.

Bad day? It's all good, paradise is here.

I say all that to say this: seek out your own private paradise.

It might be the fluorescent, tranquil backdrop of a metropolis that never hits the sack, or it might be a plastic grocery bag like that dope from "American Beauty." But find it, and supplant that image in your head. Never forget it.

Like Mike Jones says: "You don't work, you don't eat; you don't grind, you don't shine."

Stick it in the visor of your car if you have to.

'Cause the world ahead of us is seary, baby, and we're going to need every ounce of sustenance we can get our mitts on. You thought being on your own has been fun these last four years? Sorry, but the hangover's coming, and it's a nasty one. This next phase of our lives will be fun in hindsight, but in the meantime it's Hell.

And then there's the great American job search. You think you're walking straight into some fancy $100,000-a-year office job with great employee perks? This ain't Princeton, friend. We're starting out at the bottom of the pole, and we've got to grind our way to the top.

But for Christ's sake, breathe easy.

I myself will be interning at a respectable newspaper in Florida, but don't get it twisted. There's sun, there's beaches, and there's probably some beastly-good orange juice too, but my crystal ball still says just one thing about my future:

There's going to be a lot of bad days.

And I assume the same applies to you.

Because responsibility sucks.

Damn.

That's why it's important to stay as stress-free as possible through this next phase of our lives. Make the most of your next step, but don't forget to keep a cool head all the while. When the day is getting drastic, close your eyes and just think back to the most beautiful scene you've seen. You'll be there in no time.

And your mind will thank you.

Like Mike Jones says: "You don't work, you don't eat; you don't grind, you don't shine."

Keeping in tradition with former sports editor Jeff Howe, here is my Collegian Senior Will. Hell, half these people aren't even Collegian people, but guess what? It's my Senior Will. And these are my best friends. Deal with it.

This list is limited to my peeps at UMass – or, at the very least, the ones that visit on high frequency. Here goes:

Platinum – Nicole Boonjakuakul
Pabst – Jon Pelland
Heavyweight Championship Belt – Kim Walsh
Urlacher – Toan Trinh
Westside Connection – Chris Sargoy
Beast Mode – Mike Grinshpun
Chris Paul – Eli Rosenswaike
Hot Lunch – K
A little drank on me – Hans Pierre
Pokah – Oakie
Homework – Trisha Catallozzi
LP – Rikidulous
Mayonnaise Monthly – George Kennedy
Jacket – Lindsay Hawley
Wii – Khalil Dijbo
Top Hat – Julian Thomas (stay strong, kid)
Buffalo, N.Y. – Kuda Chidzonga
Treehouse – Twigz
Everett, Mass – Chris Cleveland
Utah Jazz highlights – Dave Bier
My lawn – Cliff Schochat
Philly – Evan Violette
Sex and the City – Marina Spencer
Wilco – Sonia Gloss
Bagebag – Jill Eldridge
Rap Mix – Bart Arhin
Mahoney – Joe Meloni
Crown – Mike King
Wicked beeahs guy – Danny Picard
Peanut butter and jelly – Davey George
Attention – Sarah Ryan
Sonic Youth – Tim McCall
Amor – Gina Santarpio
Networking – Steve Games
Longmeadow, Mass. – Chrissy McLean
BQ – Kristin Koscielski
Just live your life – Alex Kennedy
Raptor Jesus – Adam Szajgin
Ice-9 – S.P. Sullivan
Led Zeppelin – Dave Walsh
And last but not least, Tucker Merrick, thanks for not killing me this semester.

Brendan Hall was an Assistant Ed/Op Editor and previously a member of the Sports staff. He can be reached at bchall@student.umass.edu

This is the real deal

I picked up my cap and gown this week, with my bright yellow tassel, free textbook annex cup and UMass cell phone pad holder for cars, and it hit me.

Jamie Mason

I am leaving UMass. I brought home this graduation outfit and placed it on the floor where it is still sitting.

My roommate picked hers up too, and tried it on, as they told us to, to make sure that it fits. Other friends have worn theirs around. I have not.

I am not ready to put it on, because it will mean that it is real. I have thought about graduation now and again in the past four years, always feeling like it was so far away. Now that it is here, I don't know what to think.

I am leaving friends behind and doing something that I have always dreamed of doing, but that I always thought and was told was impossible.

The day is planned. After graduation, my roommate and I are having family and friends over to our apartment for cake and other food. Later that night, some of my family will go out to dinner. The next day I am packing my car and moving to New York City. It's all set.

So why won't I try on my cap and gown?

I guess I thought that this would feel different when I was going to graduate, like I would be a different person, with a job waiting for me and a fabulous future ahead of me. Well, the truth is that there is no job waiting for me. I am moving to a whole new place, where I know very few people, and taking a great risk.

I am leaving friends behind and doing something that I have always dreamed of doing, but that I always thought and was told was impossible. My mom told me a few years ago not to move to New York City; because it was going to be hard to find a job, place to live, and it was going to be too expensive. Other people have told me not to go because I am too young to, not only be moving to New York City, but also in with my boyfriend. To the people that have been a little less than supportive, I say, it is my decision – and all I ask for is your support in case the plan fails.

I am taking a chance, but I am also fulfilling a dream that I have had since before high school.

I am making it happen, and it's terrifying.

Although I am scared, I am ready to move on. I feel that UMass – especially the journalism program, studying abroad, working on campus and writing for the Collegian – has prepared me to take the next step and enter the competitive world of journalism.

My advice to people left at UMass: it's true what people tell you, take advantage of your time here because it goes by fast. Although it's stressful to be busy with all of your classes, you must plan ahead to make things happen at UMass. Do an internship, write for the Collegian, study abroad, take advantage of everything that this school has to offer you. No one is going to come up to you at UMass and make you do it – you have to do it for yourself. And even though it's hard, I believe that it will make it easier to navigate through the world in the future.

Thank you to everyone who has been there throughout the years. I will miss you and we have to keep in touch, not just say that we are going to.

Jamie Mason was a copy editor and staff reporter. She can be reached at jlmason@student.umass.edu.

REST YOUR TYPING HANDS THIS SUMMER, WE'RE GOING TO NEED SOME QUALITY LETTERS TO THE EDITOR!
Editorial@dailycollegian.com

What kept me here

My first and last time writing for the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, and I'll be honest right off the bat, if I could go back and choose another undergraduate university, I would consider it.

I hated disliked UMass. I was constantly reminded by professors and my parents that most incoming freshmen had a hard time adjusting to the college lifestyle. I also knew that was complete bull. UMass wasn't for me and shortly after I realized that, I immediately began filling out transfer paperwork to a handful of schools. I was that close.

Sheryl Wolnik

I began working at the Daily Collegian during that same semester. I began as a copy editor, editing articles for a few hours twice a week. I remember the first paper that printed my name. I grabbed a handful of them and brought them home to show my family one weekend. I was ecstatic.

Becoming involved at the school newspaper changed what could have been a hasty and regretful decision.

Within the next four years, I would often ask myself what I was doing at the Collegian.

I didn't learn until much later that it wasn't going to be easy. I didn't realize that I had accepted a position unaware of the kind of criticism the newspaper received. The newsroom is certainly a trying place to work. I was working here as a freshman when the Collegian editors made the decision to run graduate student Rene Gonzalez' column attacking Pat Tillman, shortly after Tillman's death. I was an editor when the Collegian published the headline "Student kills over chain necklace," in reference to the murder of a fellow student and friend, Franklyn Nwachukwu. The students here have been through a lot.

Still, I defend what comes down to most people as a few sheets of paper, with misspelled headlines and incorrect facts, usually some grammatical errors and maybe pictures that don't quite correspond with stories. I've watched dedicated writers and editors within the past four years, people looking forward to a career in journalism and who are extremely passionate, crumble underneath pressure and harsh criticism. The staff and writers have two difficult tasks at hand – every day. They not only have to find out what's going on in the community, they also have to present what they've learned, and are expected to do it accurately and perfectly. I think they're some of the hardest working students on campus.

I have been rooted in a profession that I simply love being a part of, in a place where people similarly sacrifice weekends home with family, nights in Amherst Center with friends, concerts, hours and hours of sleep, grade point averages, entire semesters, sanity, meals, exam grades, and relationships. I've been a part of and contributed to a newspaper that thousands of people read, a paper that informs the community, a newspaper that features the amazing talents of its students.

The staff members the Collegian have become great friends of mine. They've certainly put up with a zany girl, who might be considered fairly moody, and usually pretty harsh when dealing with any type of error. But, they've also been people who have kept me on my feet, who have encouraged me and supported me in other contexts. The staff here is passionate, dedicated, and proud of the work they do and it has made me become more and more proud of the work I do. I've learned that while it's easy to chide others for mistakes, it's harder to learn that you'll continuously make your own. When time has left, and you're leaving, it's then you realize the appreciation for the doers in this world, for the people who become part of something, even if at first, the feat seems impossible.

My impossible feat was giving the University of Massachusetts a chance. Becoming involved at the school newspaper changed what could have been a hasty and regretful decision.

I have nothing extraordinary to offer as far as advice goes, except to become involved. This world has become a place where people feel hopeless and helpless, as though their efforts contribute nothing. If you sit back and attend classes, maybe read a book, and study for that exam, you're not doing enough. Something as small as contributing to your University makes all the difference. You might become more appreciative of the place where you live, study, and bide your time.

As a senior, who is definitely not looking forward to life's design, enjoy your time at UMass. Become part of something, no matter how insignificant it may first seem.

You may find that you like exactly where you are.

Sheryl Wolnik was night copy supervisor. She can be reached at swolnik@student.umass.edu

Will the 'Real MC' please stand up?

Keeping it straight, here is some honesty about the goings-on at UMASS—your school of choice—and about the Real MC which runs things at this university.

Michael Haley

Okay, no suspense: the Real MC is the ritual and social dynamics of this place. The university administrators push the Real MC's buttons. So the Real MC at UMass is actually a thing that the university bigwigs let loose on us – a kind of a hostile cybernetic force here dictating our fate. Indeed UMass is a very scary place at times. Tell your university to look itself in the mirror once in a while. You know, the way you and I do every morning to see if we are fit to go out and function in this world. Tell it to shave once a day so to speak. The powers that be at UMass are arrogant souls—and I use the word souls pejoratively—who think they are so special that they never have to look themselves in the mirror. Carly Simon did not even cover that much arrogance in her "You're So Vain" song.

Call it Cyborg U here. The university just keeps trying to crush us. Ask yourself truly: Is this a nice cozy warm collegiate environment? Do you sense that those to whom you have invested your education have any vision to make your school compassionate? Hey, warmth is allowed you know. Texture counts. Warmth could be the case if the UMASS honchos were inclined to rosy up the atmosphere. Instead, there is an endless stream of cliquism apparent. The university wants us separate. Or, alternatively, put it this way: The Real MC is at work, dragging us along in its ritualistic wake. At Cyborg U. Hey UMASS bosspeople: things can and should be much better. Now. The funny thing is about dragging us though—we don't go anywhere except in circles. When it comes to students, it's all about inertia at UMASS. In many ways, we are held back from going forward. Our voices echo in the wilderness.

How many "mics" are there at UMASS? Just one... for the Real MC.

By the way, the university chiefs will even tell you some of their procedures are bad, but they will also insist on uttering word droplets like: "things take time to fix you know. And don't you young college students have all of the time in the world?" Uh, pardon me university guy, I've heard this tune before.

Tick tock. The university bigwigs sit cocooned in their offices, singing la de da, la de da.

Meanwhile, we're all divvied up here. Thanks to the Real MC. Divided: University from students. Faculty from students. Students from students. Even within the university administration vortex, one hand does not know what the other is doing (problem is they don't care that much).

UMASS reflects the ills of society at large instead of being a beacon for that society—and for us.

Some facts of life here, courtesy of the Real MC:

Tuition is sky-high and (so is parking). (I've veroxing cost us students.)

Academic grievances and student grievances in general take a lifetime to be heard, and when they are heard, they are heard callously.

•Student TAs need a second job.

•Practices like student evaluations divide students from faculty (students should comment on academia through a different method).

•Campus workers routinely get the wage shaft.

All of the above bullets represent lack of compassion.

While the university cyborgs persist in performing their cybernetic act, students should more seriously try to band together and reverse the prevailing social dynamics, instead of perhaps idly wondering what to do. We students significantly outnumber and can out-think the cyborg. The faculty show no inclination to take a leadership role in helping us. Think like this: A student has to do what a student has to do.

Students collectively can become the Real MC at UMASS.

Michael Haley can be reached at mhaley@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MAY 15, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NEW MUSIC TUESDAY

COURTESY MUSICSPOTS.COM

Recent Rock and Roll Hall of Fame inductee Patti Smith's latest album "Twelve" is a compilation of cover songs from the past 50 years including a cover of the Jimi Hendrix song "Are You Experienced?"

Smith's cover album fails to live up to original releases

BY STEVEN STAFFORD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Patti Smith, known as one of the best lyricists in punk music for decades, released an album of cover songs on April 24 that is simply entitled "Twelve." Taking a break out of her schedule of antagonizing the Bush Administration and getting inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, the aged songbird honors some of the greatest songwriters of the rock era. Some of the song choices might pleasantly or unpleasantly surprise her fans, though her voice remains as distinct as it has ever been.

The lead-off track is a fantastic interpretation of the Hendrix classic "Are You Experienced?" which takes the trippiness to a whole new level. Though no one could do justice to his guitar-playing or his pure ability to rock out, Smith manages to milk the song for all of its psychadelia. Strangely enough, she follows the Hendrix cover with "Everybody Wants to Rule the World," a Tears for Fears classic from the 1980s of a completely different mood.

Though a valiant effort, her attempt at The Rolling Stones "Gimme Shelter" is not up to par and does not contribute anything new to the song nor the canon. It remains too close to the Stones original, and despite her throaty vocals, her voice just does not work because the listener finds himself longing for the Stones shouting harmonies. She gets an A for effort, but a C for execution, which happens to be a pattern which develops over the course of the CD.

In contrast to the first song, she manages to suck the psychadelia out of the Beatles "Within You Without You," which is no small feat. It is interesting, however, to hear a version without Indian instruments. Producer Emery Dobyns seems to have intentionally gone for a dry recording, and it appears that the goal was to deliberately remove the hypnotic cadence of this George Harrison composition. Nonetheless, it remains a beautiful song, despite the apparent inconsistencies between the lyrics and the music canvas. The differences between versions makes it all the more interesting of an effort, meriting the recording with originality that her "Gimme Shelter" lacked.

She sings "White Rabbit" much better than the original version, with the emotion and intensity that made songs like "Because the Night" enduring as well as endearing. Choosing to cover such music legends as Bob Dylan, Stevie Wonder, Paul Simon and Nirvana on the same album is bold, to say the least. History has shown that Americans tend to like original popular songs just fine and view new attempts at time-honored standards with skepticism, rarely taking them seriously. It may be that this album is a mere exercise in vanity as it seems so many cover albums are, but Patti Smith is as good a singer as any to handle the job.

Unfortunately, she overestimates herself and her prestige, taking a stab at the unthinkable and covering "Smells like Teen Spirit." As all other remakes of this roaring alt-rock anthem have, Smith's attempt falls far short, a slow yawner sure to be skipped on a second listen, even though it concludes with a vivid free-verse poem about the stresses of today's youth. Perhaps this is just more evidence of the 60-year-old's pride, perhaps it is a sincere if self-important expression of her feelings. Either way, her style may ring false with those unfamiliar with her past work. And though she walks on sacred ground and sacred toes for rock fans, Smith has never been one to fear controversy, and her devotees will likely welcome this addition to her catalog with open arms and ears.

Steven Stafford can be reached at sstafford@student.umass.edu.

70s rockers Mott the Hoople re-release dated popular album

BY STEVEN STAFFORD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The band that started so-called Glam Rock with their early 70s smash hit "All the Young Dudes," have released a remastered, polished version of their popular disc "Mott." After a little less than 15 minutes of fame and fortune, British rockers Mott the Hoople soon burned out, never able to duplicate the success of their David Bowie-penned masterpiece. But, as is far too often the case, success can bear little to no resemblance to the actual quality of one's work.

Mott is everything like "All the Young Dudes," with shimmering guitars, howling vocals and decadence fit only for the 1970s. None of the songs on this disc are nearly as memorable or as hummable as their sole mainstream triumph, and this is precisely why the public quickly tired of these English boys while hanging on Bowie's every word. In other words, this feels like an album of bad ripoffs of "All the Young Dudes" or "Ziggy Stardust."

The standout track of the record is "Honaloochie Boogie," an upbeat, feel-good single, even though the listener probably doesn't know what it means. The sing-along chorus conjures images of flower-children of rock's past, clapping along to the beat.

"Violence" sounds cut from a Big Star album, or a lost Led Zeppelin song, devoid of originality. The worst part is that it isn't even catchy, which would have made the pointless fiddle in the background forgivable. The saddest part is that it seems like a genuine effort at social commentary, most likely ruined by the brain cell genocide of touring and partying as was a la mode of the day. While anyone can agree that violence is detestable, this band has nothing unique or profound to say about the matter.

COURTESY ROLLINGSTONE.COM

British rockers Mott the Hoople remastered their album "All the Young Dudes" for an entire generation of music fans to enjoy. However, many listeners will tune out this dateted album.

MOTT THE HOOPLE

"ALL THE YOUNG PEOPLE"

SONY RECORDS

2/5

The sixth track, "Drivin' Sister" proves that it is hard to compose an intelligent tune about automobiles, even decades before rap's current domination of the charts. However tremendous the fuzz-box guitar tone, jangling piano walks all over it, and the song is just corny beyond repair.

Following this is the rambling "Ballad of Mott the Hoople," detailing the struggles of the life of Rock touring, which, frankly, is about as cliché as it gets to the listener of 2007. Luckily, Mott recovers on "I'm Cadillac," the catchy, nonsensical following song, a seven-minute journey between soft acoustic plucking and Badfinger distorted guitar shredding. Though it seems to lack direction at times, the band sticks to a reliable rising-action, fading into "I Wish I Was Your Mother," a beautiful, melodic, mandolin-oriented track. The song stands out for its Dylanesque vocals, and unique instrumentation. Though it strays far from their Bowie-glam rock-out formula, it brings depth to the album as a whole.

The disc concludes with a couple filler tracks, a demo and a live cut, an effective denouement, or perhaps more appropriately a nadir. It makes the listener of 2007 wonder why this is being rereleased, especially when popular music today is just an umbrella term for over-produced amelodic pop and Southern rap (usually about throwing D's on an automobile).

Nevertheless, it might not be a bad CD to buy your parents while you download "Does Your Chain Hang Low" illegally on Limewire. Their generation grew up with Lynard Skynard and Led Zeppelin, and they are the only age group able to appreciate Mott the Hoople, and see just how bright of a flash in the pan they were.

Steven Stafford can be reached at sstafford@student.umass.edu.

WMUA Top Ten May 15, 2007

1. [illegible] "Ruff Draft"
2. [illegible] EYES "Cassadaga"
3. [illegible] JEFF "Return of the Magnificent"
4. [illegible] "Wars"
5. [illegible] MOUSE "We Were Dead Before the Ship Even Sank"
6. STANDING NUDES "Ghost Story"
7. CLIENTELE "God Save The Clientele"
8. LOVE [illegible] "Mosaic"
9. ANTELOPE "[illegible]"
10. HOT [illegible] "The Underground is a Dying Breed"

WMUA FM 91.1

How to survive four days of Bonnaroo

Tennessee festival promises to keep audience entertained

BY MORGAN-ANN ROUSSEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The 6th annual Bonnaroo Music and Arts Festival will take place from June 14-June 17 in sunny Manchester, Tenn. With less than a month left, there are roughly 80, 000 festival-goers planning their journey to this unforgettable weekend event.

This year's headlining artists will include The Police, Tool, The White Stripes, Widespread Panic, Ben Harper, the Innocent Criminals and The Flaming Lips.

There will be more than 80 musical artists on the stages, and more than 30 artists performing in the various café tents. The comedy tent will feature a dozen comedians, including Comedy Central big names like Lewis Black and Dave Attell.

The Police are known to be one of the defining rock bands of the 1970s and 1980s, however their sounds remains strong enough to place them as a headliner at this year's Bonnaroo, alongside other leading names in the music industry. Fellow performer Ben Harper recently said, The Police are one of the Bonnaroo artists he is most looking forward to seeing at this year's event.

A band with a significantly heavier tone, Tool, is a headliner that is sure to add to Bonnaroo's diverse layers of musical delivery. Their dark, instrumentally emotional songs and haunting stage spectacle hint that this band will be a remarkable evening performance sure to rattle up the weekend's rhythm.

Southern rock band Widespread Panic has survived for 20 years by constantly creating vigorous and original live performances in their tours. In 2005 Widespread topped off the weekend with a set that had many home-grown fans stomping in the mud with ecstatic pleasure.

The White Stripes is yet another sharp turn in the artist line-up. The garage-band style duo aim at a more youthful audience than the above mentioned, as do artists like Ben Harper and the Innocent Criminals. However, this year's lineup offers so many options that everyone's preferences are sure to be honored. Some more prominent musical acts to be featured are Bob Weir and Ratdog, The Decembrists, The String Cheese Incident, Gov't Mule, Allman Brothers and Kings of Leon, to name a few.

All of these fantastic happenings will take place in "Centeroo," the main area in the festival grounds, separate from the parking and camping area. The Centeroo will open at noon on Thursday, June 14, and will remain open for 24 hours per day until 1 a.m. on Monday, June 18. However, antsy early birds can arrive to the campground at 7 a.m. on Thursday, June 14.

Within Centeroo there is a multitude of tents and vendors, as well as five stages, the "What" stage being set aside for the biggest musical acts. The large venue and campsite makes this festival an arduous on-foot trek. Considering Bonnaroo is held on a 700-acre farm, it is no surprise that the area of the campsite closest to Centeroo is about two-thirds of a mile.

While the music is the binding force of Bonnaroo, there is no denying that so much of the memory making takes place in the campground. Late-night adventures, alone or with friends, make for excellent stories – ones you would never tell your grandchildren. The "counter-culture" influence of certain mind-altering substances is undeniably present in the eyes of fellow Bonnaroovians, but with it shines a sense of camaraderie. A neighborly attitude takes over the entire campground, one that is fueled by a mutual exhilaration. There is an ever-present security in the idea that if someone runs out of coals for their barbeque, they will be taken care of.

At this year's festival, there will be a series of community centers, called "pods," which will each feature an interactive art exhibit staffed by a group of "Bonnaroo Ambassadors," who will assist festival-goers all weekend long.

For many, Tennessee is a long way from home. For Massachusetts residents the trip can take up to 20 hours by car, not to mention the three to six hours spent waiting in line to get in. By the time cars are parked and tents are sprung, stress should be set aside for comfort and relaxation. By packing right (and packing light) festival-goers can stay comfortable, regardless of how far from home they are. Plan on bringing raingear – that is a basic facet to attending a spacious, open venue in the plains of Tennessee.

In previous years, most notably 2004, rain caused so much mud that it was thigh- high in some areas of the festival, due to humidity, spontaneous and short-lived thunderstorms, which are quite common. Ponchos, galoshes and old sweatshirts make for comfortable quick-fixes to an otherwise miserable run-in with the weather.

On the reverse side, Tennessee's relentless heat is an imperative factor when preparing for the festival. With all-day-long sunshine, and very little opportunity for shade, festival-goers should not hit the road without adequate amounts of sunscreen, sunglasses, hats and umbrellas. Fresh water and containers, fruit and coolers are a smart way to avoid dehydration. Light tapestries or old sheets are a bonus when spending a day in the sun – ideal for both taking a mid-day rest between sets, or drenching with water and draping around the body for some hardcore refreshment.

The festival itself takes the overwhelming heat into consideration, and does well at providing aquatic relief. A typical mid-day sight inside the venue consists of crowds, old and young clustered in and around a massive water fountain that pours out thousands of gallons of recycled water. There are several sporadically placed water stations for both bathing and drinking, not to mention trucks that sell bags of ice for about $3 each. Another way to find refuge from the rays is by stopping into one of the many tents set up, such as the comedy tent or vendor tents. There are also massive canopy tents set up around the venue, all spraying water mist.

While there are port-a-potty facilities available, it is wise to bring plenty of your own toilet paper, as well as hand-sanitizer. Flashlights, radios, bug spray, sneakers, tarps and trash bags are also key elements to sanity. And with nearly 20 hours of non-stop music each day, as well as round the clock lunacy rustling in the campsites, you will want to hang on to as much sanity as possible.

Tickets are currently priced at $214.50, plus a service charge of $21.85 per ticket as well as any additional shipping charges.

Morgan-ann Rousseau can be reached at Mrousseau@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY MUSICSPOTS.COM

A crowd of at least 80,000 people is expected to attend this year's Bonnaroo Music Festival. This is the festival's sixth year and the lineup is more diverse, featuring a variety of musicians such as the reunited band The Police.

Black Crowes reunite for tour and new album this summer

BY JEREMY FOWLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After selling two multi-platinum albums and having one of the most shifting line ups in all of rock 'n'roll the Black Crowes are reformed and hitting 2007 with force.

Since there first release in 1990 called "Shake Your Money Maker," the Black Crowes have been receiving critical acclaim as one of the greatest rock bands ever. This album had numerous hits including "She Talks To Angels" and "Hard To Handle," which was a cover of a Otis Redding song from the 1960s.

The Black Crowes have played with such bands as AC/DC, Aerosmith, and most recently Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers. In 2000, they also played a show with Led Zeppelin guitarist Jimmy Page. They played songs spanning both of their catalogues tackling such tracks as "Heartbreaker" and "Whole Lotta Love" from Led Zeppelin.

However, they have not escaped their share of band controversy. They have had members on a rotating basis ever since they became a band, under the name "Mr. Crowes Garden." The only consistent members that have stuck around are brothers Chris and Rich Robinson. Rich plays guitar for the group while Chris is the bands electrifying front man. Chris has one of the most unique classic rock voices in music. He is a mixture of classic southern rock vocals with the swagger of Mick Jagger.

The year 2006 marked a comeback for the Black Crowes. After taking a four year hiatus they played a sold out show at Madison Square Garden on New Year's Eve ringing in '06 with a bang. They spent most of 2006 touring across the United States playing sold out shows nation wide reminding fans of why the Black Crowes are one of the best live rock 'n' roll bands ever. They ranked at number 92 on VH1's list of the greatest Rock 'n' Roll bands ever.

This year the Crowes are set to attack the United States again as they get ready for the '08 release of their new album. Their summer tour includes a stop at the Pines Theatre at Look Park in Northampton. It will be the Crowes first return to Northampton after their surprise performance in 2005 under the name "Mr. Crowes Garden." They will be performing hits spanning their entire 17 year career including the feel good anthem "Soul Singing" as well as classic southern rockers like "Remedy" and of course their famous ballad "She Talks To Angels."

The Crowes hard rocking blues style is sure to please fans of any genre. Their guitar licks remind many of Lynyrd Skynyrd and Chris Robinson swagger on stage commands a presence that most front-men today cannot achieve. Although the numerous line-up changes may have affected the bands chemistry to a degree, it is definitely not enough to deter anyone from not going to see them over the summer. It will be a refreshing change from the rock shows that are popular today with bands that act like rock stars, but rule the pop charts. The Crowes put on a rock show reminiscent of the classic bands that defined the genre. With the ever changing line up, this could be your last chance to catch one of the greatest true rock 'n' roll bands that ever existed.

Jeremy Fowler can be reached at jrfowler@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY ROLLINGSTONE MAGAZINE

Over the past 16 years The Black Crowes have gone through many line up changes, but have remained one of rocks most prominent bands.

Powter's debut album falls short

BY STEVEN STAFFORD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Following up a hit single with a hit album is always hard, especially for the first time Canadian Daniel Powter's smash "Bad Day" is quite the acto follow, since the track became a radio staple across Europe, Canada and then finally America. To the chagrin of Warner Brothers, he has yet to duplicate this feat.

However, he has given the world another solid album of piano and falsetto pop music that you'll be sure to hear in dentist offices, malls and elevators wherever you go. The first song, for some reason called "Song 6," is catchy, relying mostly on piano and strings. It walks a fine line between the unrepentant chick-rock of James Blunt, and the nerdier Ben Folds. It seems like Daniel Powter is the boring guy in between these two on the soundtrack spectrum. Though not as good, his super-high voice and almost goofy use of falsetto calls to mind Adam Levine of Maroon 5, or the sleepy vocals of Chris Martin. Overall, the song feels good, pleasant, lacking the predictable melancholy of the genre, yet still declaring to the world that "this is music that girls listen to in the car while drinking coffee, sunglasses optional."

"Free Loop" uses much more interesting chords, which it makes up for with a forgettable, cliché melody. Somewhat unlike his style, Powter double-tracks his voice on this one, and makes good use of varied textures, particularly in the contrast of the piano and the late-60s synthesizer. While this is also very forgettable, that doesn't mean there's anything wrong with it; nothing is broken, but nothing is working, despite its subtle guitar sound. This seems to be the trend overall on this album, one example being the closer, "Give me Life," which cranks up the falsetto-meter to eleven. Don't say you weren't warned.

In case the listener had forgotten who this Canadian was, the crushing hit "Bad Day" comes on just in time, an all-around well-done track. No one is going to call it manly, but it's still great anyway.

"Suspect" follows with a country-flavored rock-out as Powter apes Brian Johnson's 1980s screech. Despite his best efforts, Powter can't make this thing funky (sorry) despite using the unexpected minor subdominant chord in a strange context. The organ shimmers like it's 1969 again, the wah-wah pedal screams like Hendrix is alive, but the over-processed, computer-drenched lead vocal reminds the listener that it is, in fact, 2007.

Powter has the audacity to use a hip-hop beat on "Lie to Me." True to form, however, his melodies are predictable, and the falsetto is ridiculous. "Jimmy Gets High" is even more ridiculous, telling the story of a boy who "lives off rock 'n' roll," and our narrator abuses his upper range (yet again) in the chorus.

Steven Stafford can be reached at sstafford@student.umass.edu

STUDENT TRAVEL
see the world
with STA Travel

Got bulky trash?
Dump your apartment cleanout garbage in the right place:
The Amherst Transfer Station
Accepts furniture, mattresses, TVs & computers • Disposal fees apply
740 Belchertown Road (Route 9), 2 miles East of Dunkin Donuts
Open 8am-2pm Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays
For more information, visit www.amherstma.gov/recycling
Or call the Amherst Department of Public Works 413-259-3050

To all students of
THE STOCKBRIDGE SCHOOL OF AGRICULTURE
You are invited to an after the last day of the academic year
RELAXATION
Tuesday, May 15 from 7 to 9 p.m.
Come to the Amherst PUB
15 East Pleasent Street
Sandwiches, burgers, soft drinks and more are compliments of the alumni of ALPHA TAU GAMMA fraternity
Bring your Stockbridge student ID
STOCKBRIDGE FOREVER

Hair By Harlow
SALON & DAY SPA
EXPERIENCE...
- Rejuvenating facials
- A variety of massages
- Nail pampering
- Hair design

Brazillian Waxing!
220 NORTH PLEASANT STREET
AMHERST, MA 01002
PHONE (413) 253-8897

Medical MD & Veterinary Degree Programs
Making World-Class Physicians & Veterinarians Today, For Tomorrow's World
- Programs to meet the needs of high school and college graduates
- More than a half century old well-recognized and established European medical and veterinary universities
- Programs recognized by the National Committee on Medical Education, Accreditation, and the U.S. Department of Education.
- 100% financial aid is available. The U.S. government provides subsidized loans to qualified students in our programs
- Approved by New York Medical Education Board for clinical training in the state of New York. (A state with a high number of residency positions)
- Medical and veterinary clinical clerkships training in the USA.
- Smaller class size with traditional European tutorial style education
- Programs offer opportunity to earn dual degrees MD PhD, MD MBA, MD MSHA, MD MPHA, etc.
- Much safer campus environment, compared to many campuses in the USA, allowing retaining and strengthening of cultural identities
- English language curriculum matches to major American medical and veterinary schools
- An excellent opportunity for hands-on participation for extensive training and experience
- Alumni holding very good positions all over the USA.

When it comes to medical & veterinary education, our programs set standards for excellence. With cooperation from European universities, Hope Medical Institute brings you a unique, unmatched opportunity at your doorstep.

APPLY NOW!
For the FALL 2007 or SPRING 2008 Term
For more detailed information, please contact us at:
HOPE MEDICAL INSTITUTE
11835 Rock Landing, Newport News, VA 23606-3575
PHONE: (757) 874-3333 * FAX: (757) 874-5661

Massachusetts college graduates are now required to have health insurance.
(Good idea.)
If you're graduating and staying in Massachusetts, you're required to have health insurance. And it's now more affordable than ever for recent college grads, and easier to get, through the state's Health Connector. That's where you can compare plans, get information, and choose the right plan for you. Call or visit our website.
1-877-MA-ENROLL
MAhealthconnector.org
CommonwealthConnector
Health Connector

MISTY-EYES from page 12

seriousness, I hope I'm the last writer you work with who ends up pissing off a certain person that ends up calling the Collegian every second demanding retractions and apologies. Good luck next fall in whatever you're going to be up to.

I'd also like to thank the two other departing members of the sports staff: Picard and Pelland. Along with Greenfield having the unenviable task of editing all my wraps, sidebars, columns and whatever else I ended up turning in. Good luck to both of you.

Jeremy, I can't think of a better guy to take over as sports editor. You're truly the right guy for the job and I look forward to working with you and the rest of your cronies (also known as the new assistant sports editors) come September.

Other than that, I don't have really too much else to say. It goes without saying the sports staff turned out a really good product this year and this year's edition of "The Score" is something everyone should be proud of. Well, that is the people who actually got to write a story for the issue.

Entering the year, I thought I'd be able to get the hang of sports writing pretty quickly. Little did I know I'd be served a huge piece of humble pie throughout the year as it turned out there is a lot more to writing a quality sports story than meets the eye. (humble pie wasn't the only thing I've eaten this year in my continuing weight accumulation since the end of high school, but we can leave that story for another day).

In closing, I had a lot of fun (most of the time anyways) covering the wonderful world of UMass sports and can't wait to get another crack at it this fall.

Mike Connors

Tennis

Neil Everett

"Howzit!"

Well, I came into this semester skeptical that I'd be writing for the Collegian, but everything worked out in the end. Over the summer, I sent in a couple samples of my writing, but ultimately took absolutely zero initiative and focused on less productive endeavors.

In all honesty, I have to say that my experience working at the paper this semester has been great. In the beginning, I usually wanted to spend my time on other things than finding out who won the day's tennis match and then writing a recap, but it became easier and easier as the semester progressed.

Without the help of certain individuals, this transition would not have been so smooth. I mainly want to thank the three editors, Jon Pelland, Danny Picard and Jeremy Rice for helping me learn the AP style and just improve my overall writing. I want to thank Jeremy in particular, as he edited most of my articles and gave me more advice than anyone (I swear I'm not just writing this because you'll be the sports editor next year).

I also have to thank a couple members of the UMass women's tennis team for making my job easier, Coach Judy Dixon, though not always pleased with my scathing attacks upon her team, was always willing to talk to me. She once even told me that she was ready to hunt me down on campus if I didn't get in contact with her. In addition to the coach, I have to thank Masha Pozar for allowing me to interview her for my feature story. She was one of the most polite people I've dealt with at the university, and I must say she is a class act.

From here, I'm not exactly sure what I'm supposed to be writing, so I'm going to hope for a far-fetched scenario in the NBA.

If all goes to plan, my beloved Celtics will win the lottery and draft Greg Oden. From here, they'll face the Chicago Bulls in the Eastern Conference Finals. They'll defeat them in seven games and my buddy Pete will continually sob into his Kirk Hinrich jersey for days. This alone would pretty much make my college experience complete.

Until then, I'm going to spend my summer moving furniture with men who love nothing more than alcohol, cigarettes and profanities. I'll catch most of ya next year, and for those who I won't, good luck in the game of life.

Justin McGrail

Skiing
Tennis

Trey Wingo

"I'm not picking on you. It's my job!"

"It's not easy being green". These are the immortal words of Kermit the Frog. This is a song about being different in the world but they took on a whole new meaning this year. As long as I can remember I've been a Boston Celtics fan. I was born during the '86 playoffs, the last time the Celtics won it all. So it's only fitting that I support my favorite basketball team.

This year was rough. There's no two ways about it. A franchise record 18-game losing streak, a GM who dealt away the Rookie of the Year for a point guard with a shaky jump shot and a guy who doesn't even play anymore but is still getting paid by the team, and many of the team's young stars going down with injury for part of or the entire season were some of the things that capped of the 2006-2007 season for the Boston Celtics. The only bright spot was second year player Gerald Green absolutely dominating the Slam Dunk Contest at this year's All Star Weekend.

There might be light at the end of the tunnel though. Because of the 18-game losing streak and just not being able to close out games, the Celtics earned the second worst record in the league. That means the only team that has more ping pong balls in the lottery drawing is the Memphis Grizzlies. If things go the Celtics' way, then we could either see Greg Oden or Kevin Durant decked out in green and white and playing at the Garden next year. I can't even wait.

Either one of these guys could bring the team back to the days when we took 11 titles in 13 years. Bill Russell was the guy then and hopefully Oden and Durant can be the guy now. Last time the Celtics were in this situation it was 1997. A power forward by the name of Tim Duncan from Wake Forest was projected to go number one. The Celtics had the worst record in the league and were statistically most likely to land him.

It didn't happen. San Antonio won the lottery and the rest is history. I hope that doesn't happen again this year because I will seriously break my allegiance to the Celtics if I see Danny Ainge draft the ugliest player in the NCAA, Joakim Noah.

And don't even get me started with Doc's extension and Ainge's eye for "great" talent. Now with that out of the way let's get to the rest of the staff.

Meloni: I wouldn't be here if it wasn't for you. You told one of my roommates that you were looking for someone to cover skiing and knew that skiing and snowboarding were my scene. So I came down and you referred me by name to Jon and Jeremy, who hooked me up with my first beat. We were in the same Journalism 300 class with Bill Israel.

Like Danny said in last year's version, I recommend that every aspiring writer take that class with him. He's a great motivator and maybe the work load gets to be a bit much but it's all worth it when you leave and people notice how polished your writing is and you know it's because of him. Meloni, you're a great writer and maybe swimming and diving isn't the most thrilling sport to cover but you make it fun to read and that's why you're so good at what you do.

Jon: First off, thanks for hooking me up at the Blue Wall. Every swipe is precious and you're helping a poor frat boy in need. So for that I thank you. I also want to thank you for taking a chance on me. We'd never met before and you heard my name from Meloni and gave me a beat the first time I walked in there and it's been great ever since. You've got a great eye for good writing and I hope I get to read your stuff in big publications real soon.

Danny: Great column yesterday. Thanks for telling me I suck when I need to hear it. That's a great motivator and I don't think you'll be a plumber for the rest of your life. You were able to come back from a year away from school and be a sports editor. I think you won't have any trouble finding a job in the "real world".

Jeremy: I can't wait to work with you next semester. You've been great in showing me how things run around the office. You have huge potential to be a great editor and I can't wait to see it first-hand next semester.

Dom: You're a great writer and a great guy. You've always been friendly to me and it means a lot. Being a new guy in a new place can be rough sometimes but guys like you make it easier to feel comfortable and accepted. Not only do you write a thousand articles for sports but you write great Ed/Op pieces. I hate the Westboro Baptist Church too.

Eli: You're a great guy and a great writer. Even though you hate on me because I like the Red Sox, I can overlook that. I can't wait to work with you next year.

Connors: It was great working with you on tennis. You wrote some great stuff and I hope we can split a beat again next semester.

To everyone else on staff that I didn't mention: I'm sorry I didn't say anything. I had a great time working with everyone. I might not know everyone that well but hopefully by the next one of these I can write something about everyone.

Theta Chi time

Corey Dineen a.k.a Matt Millen: You took the best player in the draft and subsequently ruined it for everyone else. I'm proud of you. We're bringing the Penthouse back to its rightful image. I can't wait for next semester. It's going to be on another level. Live it up kid.

DeMayo: Welcome to the best semester of your college career. You're going to love living with myself and Corey. I'm excited to see what you can bring to the table and make our chapter even better than it already is.

Zapata: That intro was for you. We suffered through this season together and hopefully next season our fortunes will be better.

Shane-O: I'm mad that you're moving out but I'm glad you got a single. You've put so much into Theta Chi since you've been here and you deserve that single.

Sam: You're a great President. Keep working hard and everything will pay off before you know it. South Beach was on another level and I can't wait for next year's Spring Break. I got a 28 on my Wii Fitness yesterday. That's garbage.

Pete: This semester was definitely the most fun I've had with you. Being able to go uptown with you guys, bringing Brick for swims, and just hanging out on the deck with everyone has been awesome. Even down in Florida when I drank at all the bars with you guys was one of the greatest memories I'll have with you and all the other seniors.

Giraffe: You save babies and you're a custodial engineer. That's pretty much the coolest thing ever. You're always there when I need something and you're a wicked cool guy to talk to and hang out with.

6'10" Ken: Don't think I forgot about you playa. Watching Raw with me in the Penthouse during pledging was something I looked forward to every week. I'm glad that I got to take you to your first live show and it was a pretty good PPV, even if Cena lost in his hometown. You always get me something on my birthday when you're poor just like the rest of us. You go out of your way to be a great big brother and that means a lot to me. I have to carry that on to my two little brothers and I wouldn't have it any other way.

Quill: You're a smart guy and no one gives you credit for it. You've been a great influence on me and a lot of other new guys. You're a great Marshal and I'm glad I got to go through your program.

The rest of the seniors: I'm going to miss all of you when you graduate. Every one of you has shaped my experience at Theta Chi. You guys made my college career what it is. When people ask me about Theta Chi, I tell them it's the best decision I've ever made and it's because of you guys.

To the rest of the undergrads: You guys are all awesome. We have a great bunch of new guys that are definitely capable of keeping this house going long after I've graduated. Living in the house is going to be wicked fun next semester and I'm looking forward to it.

One last thing:

Grace: You've made this semester amazing and I couldn't ask for anything more.

Melissa Turtinen

Track and Field

Linda Cohn

"He's so clutch, and he doesn't even know it."

Well this is the end of my first semester writing for the Collegian and so far it's been a great experience. I want to thank all of you guys for welcoming in the lone girl to write for sports and allowing me to become "one of the guys," well kind of. I'd also like to thank Steve for telling me what time to be down at the sports desk to talk to Jon about writing for sports, because if you hadn't told me I wouldn't be writing anything.

I want to say good luck to Jon and Danny with whatever you guys are going to end up doing and thanks for being amazing editors. Sunday night meetings were always enjoyable to see what you guys were going to say next. Good luck again, and congratulations on graduating.

I'm looking forward to next year and writing for the Collegian again and also to live in Alpha Chi with some pretty sweet girls, but I'll miss all of the seniors especially Katy Dye, good luck to you all and congrats.

Scott Feldman

Track and Field

Brian Kenney

"One run will score, two runs will score..."

When I look back on this year, I will remember it as the year I figured out what I want to do with my life. I had always been a pretty huge sports fanatic, and I had always read about sports like it was my job, but being a reporter never even crossed my mind. That was until I found out my buddy Mike had joined the collegian as sports reporter. He asked me to help him draft for the Collegian NBA fantasy league. The draft went pretty well and team Telfair is Innocent wound up with a pretty talented squad, (and you guys all laughed when we picked an injured Pau Gasol, he was out for less than two months) Little did I know that day would wind up having a major impact on my life.

Between making each pick, I grilled Mike about how he got a job writing for the paper. He told me he was a journalism major and that he just walked in their office and they let him write. The idea of actually writing about sports as a career sounded amazing, and I decided to become journalism major. Mike no longer writes for the Collegian, but he was the guy who pointed me toward the Daily Collegian, the place that hopefully will launch me to a career in sports. For that I felt I had to mention him.

Due to a tremendous workload that fall, I decided to wait until the spring semester to finally walk in there. When I first walked in there, I was intimidated. I got assigned to track and field and was told for my first assignment to write a season preview. My thoughts at the time were; "Ok what am I supposed to do now?" "Where do I go and who the heck am I supposed to talk to?" My first article wound up being a mess; I didn't schedule an interview and wound up struggling for six hours to grind out 500 words.

Sink or swim right? After that first article, I felt I had sunk pretty hard and I nearly quit. Luckily for me, the staff took me aside, gave me some encouragement and told me how much their first articles sucked, I decided I'd give it one more shot and stick with it. I'm so happy I did I got to meet some really cool people,.

Danny: You are one funny kid, this place just isn't going to be the same without hearing that South Boston accent yelling at the TV during Sox games. My biggest regret is that I didn't get to know you better before you graduated. I know wherever you wind up after graduation, you're going to do great.

Jon: Thanks for putting up with me this semester. I missed at least half of those sports meetings thanks to my job, barely knew how to write and probably spent half my time in the newsroom bugging people with questions, but somehow you never once got annoyed or angry with me (or you hid it really well). That in itself is an achievement to be proud of.

Jeremy: You are the guy who really taught me the nuts and bolts of reporting. I remember a couple months ago when I wandered in here looking to write, you were the first person I talked to and the person who actually assigned me to a beat. I can't imagine how dumb you thought I was when you read my first article. But you took the time to sit down with and explain clearly what I did wrong, and how to fix it. You pretty much have been my mentor this year, explaining concepts I'd never heard about, like passive voice and AP style. You are pretty hardcore about editing my articles, but I appreciate it immensely even I don't always show it. Danny and Jon might be leaving as editors, but with you replacing them, I know the sports section is in good hands.

Eli: You had one of toughest beats of the year. Mike Stone was a subject that always came up during the sports meetings (well the ones I made it to). I think you're a great reporter and probably going to be one heck of an assistant editor next year, but you have got to write more columns. Getting to hear your opinions and thoughts on sports should not be a privilege restricted only to people you meet. They might be offbeat sometimes (I will never forget when you tried to argue that Tim Wakefield is not a pitcher because he only throws knuckleballs) but they are always interesting, so make sure everyone gets to hear them.

Dom: It wasn't easy filling your shoes as the track correspondent, but I'm sure glad you left behind your archives. You have no idea how valuable you have been to me during my short stay at the collegian. Reading your old articles about track from last year gave me insight into where I should start. I basically followed your footsteps and used your old articles as a guideline for what information I had to get. Thank you so much for all your help, even if you didn't know you gave it.

I haven't mentioned everyone who I'd like to, but I got a twenty page paper due tomorrow and it's late already. I guess I'll close by saying I'm looking forward to next year, because I know being here is only going to get better.

Mike Gillmeister

Rowing

John Buccigross

"Ooo, that looks like it hurts. Easy for me to say, I'm wearing makeup."

The only freshman on sports, oh man. I came onto the Collegian this past semester, terrified as all get-out. I still have that mentality, but whatever.

While writing for the sports section, my grades have dropped, I have developed an addiction to coffee and my confidence is nonexistent, I couldn't be happier.

Writing for the women's rowing team has been both an honor and a privilege. This is probably the most sport in the Massachusetts program. I would gladly go-to-bat for the sport of rowing any day of the week. Nobody thinks that this topic is interesting because nobody takes the time to go to a regatta and watch these women pour out Maroon and White in their blood, sweat and tears. But enough about that – on to the staff.

Jon-I enjoyed learning from you when A-10 notebooks was my first work for the Collegian. You gave me a base for AP etiquette and I am forever grateful. I hope that you are successful in whatever you do in the future.

Danny-You've got to have Red Bull running through your veins, no two ways about it. Danny, Danny, it's not what you think. I truly respect you as a writer, and an editor. Not to discredit any of my peers, but your love and dedication to the behind the scenes aspect of sports writing is incredibly impressive, good luck.

Rob-Your columns were always informative, innovative and interesting to read. I've not spoken to you at length at any time, and I believe that I am at a disadvantage because of this. Good luck.

Jeremy-Your vast knowledge of grammar and AP formatting cannot be stated without mentioning that you are a toddler. You will be carded until you are 40, sorry. But seriously, you have been the person that I have gone to for constant advice. Without your guidance, I would not be the writer that I am today without your help. See you next year.

Eli-I'd shake your hand, but my hand would probably slip like Romo's. It had to be said. I admire your philosophy about not liking any hometown teams. Yes, I just singled you out to whoever reads this, ah well. No but really, the fact that you developed a completely original affinity for certain teams is very respectable. Working with you next year should be a very educating experience for me.

Meloni-You suck, your arrogant, obnoxious and crass. I can't wait to learn from you in the coming years. I want to have the bold writing sense that you so frequently use in your articles. I am truly envious. It will be a pleasure working with you in the future.

Kingsies-I admire your amiable nature and ability to get the job done, no questions asked. I know that you will be easy to work with in the future and in no way will I take my job lightly. I have one last thing to say to you. "Tewaaraton Trophy is Narrowed to..." or should I say, "Tewaaraton Trophy list Narrowed to 17." Check the website, poor kid.

Dooley-You live down the hall from me and I can count the times that we've talked on one hand. I look forward to working with you in the future.

As the only freshman on the sports staff, I feel the need to call-to-arms all able-bodied sports enthusiasts to write for the Collegian next year. See anyone on staff.

Log onto www.dailycollegian.com for more coverage of the Massachusetts softball team as it competes in the 2007 NCAA Tournament. The Minutewomen take on Long Island Friday at 4:30 p.m.

Log onto the Daily Collegian Sports Blog at dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com for more coverage of all UMass Sports.

MISTY–EYES from page 13

Seriously though, you set a great example for all of us lowly staff writers. I feel like the section is at its best right now. Jeremy, King, Eli and I will do our absolute best next year to improve it. The fact that we haven't used a single wire story this semester speaks to the level of dedication of our writers and we all learned that from the example you set at the top. I feel like I've come a long way this year, considering I had no idea what a sidebar was in September. The advice you gave me while editing my 500-word field hockey game stories molded me into the writer I am now. I can honestly say that I've learned more from you about sports journalism than I could ever hope to learn from any professor in any classroom.

In November, when a certain angry parent wanted my job because I told the school that his daughter had a bad season, you stood behind me. From that point on, I've always considered you more than just my editor and boss. Good luck at the Globe next semester, make sure to tell your buddy Dan about this kid Meloni at the Collegian.

Jon Pelland – Firstly I'd like to thank you for going to Las Vegas over Spring Break. Rochester was phenomenal. Well actually no, Rochester sucked, but covering the NCAA Tournament was unreal and none of it would've been possible if not for your obsession with a certain overrated musician.

I'm glad you and I moved beyond the awkward head-nod status we were on prior to this year and I really hope you get that job in Connecticut – no one deserves it more than you. Like Rob, sitting with you while you edited rewrote my field hockey stories in September taught me so much about tight writing and style. But whether you like it or not, defense is paramount. It can enGergize a team. Sorry, I had to.

The roadtrips to BC and BU this year were great times, but waiting with King for you and Jeremy to finish your little wrap and side in the Agganis media parking lot was not great times. It, in fact, sucked and I will never forgive you. By the way, your house is huge. And who could ever forget the moose. I'm convinced that thing wasn't dead and got up to exact revenge on the girl who drove into it immediately after we took off.

On a professional note, you are the layout guru and I'd like to apologize in advance for next year's phone calls seeking advice. What you did with my Molinari feature was phenomenal, almost as phenomenal as my story was. The thing is, if I hadn't learned as much as I did while working under you, I would never have been able to write like that.

Thanks a lot man, it won't be the same without you next year. By the way, talk to Perk, I could use an A in that class.

One more thing, when's the wedding?

Danny Picard – I would first like to ask what you know about shutouts? I imagine it's a lot since you covered men's soccer and baseball. And Mr. Perfect sucks. The Ultimate Warrior would waste him, great headline by the way.

Telling me to take 300 with Bisrael, great advice, I picked AP up really quickly. After I had that down, everything fell into place.

Unfortunately I cannot say that about most pearls of wisdom you unleashed upon me this year, especially your affection for a certain promiscuous demographic that frequents a certain watering hole uptown. Thanks for the drink by the way.

I apologize for ever telling anyone that I am from Boston. Although to my defense I'm sick of explaining where Stoughton is in relation to Boston to people from New Jersey or Maine.

I remember back in November, Rob said something about you that really changed the way I thought of you. We disussed where you started at the Collegian and how far you made it in such a short period of time. Then Rob said, "Danny's the type of kid that you have to respect because everything he has, he's worked his ass off to get."

When I read your column in Monday's paper, everything made more sense. I knew bits and pieces of your story, but hearing you tell it as only Danny Picard can, really got the message across. Congratulations on getting this far, even if you start collecting Social Security in about an hour, you did it. You deserved that job in Minnesota more than broad, trust me.

Danny Picard will always be a Collegian columnist.

Jeremy – "It's gon' rain."

It took me four hours to finish my first swimming sidebar because Jeremy Rice decided to quote everyone's favorite cartoon weatherman for two hours. Good work boss. Now for those of you (and by "you" I mean the people reading this, one of which I call mom, the other of which I call Kristi because she reads everything for some reason) who don't know, Mr. Rice is going to be the Sports Editor next year. I am one of his assistants and I will not be getting paid. So I would like apologize to you (Rice) for all the instances I bring up that fact and proceed to demand half your salary.

Now if the Springfield Republican's Dick Baker has his way, Jeremy will lose his job and suffer a demotion to the Massachusetts men's and women's cross country beat. Although that is not likely to happen, I can hope – can't I? Me and King would so be better at hockey. I'm writing the Dan Meyers feature whether you like it or not. Why don't you write another Chris Davis feature, we've only had two so far. Third time is the charm if I can use a cliché.

Shut up Eli.

Hockey is going to be phenomenal. I'll be sure to get a booster chair for your seat and request a kid's menu with chicken fingers and hot dogs for the media meal.

Warcraft sucks. Air five.

Eli Rosenswaike – Gotta love affirmative action, huh? For those of you who do not know, UMass baseball coach Mike Stone's favorite Collegian writer is not a black man, although I believed him to be for the first seven months of our friendship. I apologize to the black community for this mistake. Although we cannot deny that the ambiguity of his race has certainly provided a few (hundred) instances of humor when Jesse Jackson-wannabes ask if we have any black writers on staff.

Despite what everyone says when you aren't around, you're a great kid Eli. Don't let BJ tell you any differently.

I have to get you out more next year, but if Nicole couldn't do it, I certainly won't be able to.

To close, I would like to say that the White Sox suck and Tony Romo can have it. I can't wait until Brandon London catches a 25-yard touchdown pass over Terrence Newman as time expires to beat your precious little Cowboys.

By the way you sequester juries not point guards – even Kim Benton.

Michael King (Kingsies) – Kingsies is always plural. He is like moose, but unlike the moose on the Pike because he is not dead – at least not yet.

Thanks for not going to Buffalo with me, it made me look so much better than you. As if my writing doesn't do that already. Evan Swisher is a beast and should've been male athlete of the year seeing as his team won a championship and no one else did.

Have fun maintaining your little 3.945 GPA next semester Kingsies. I'm not sure if Amir will take "I was at the Collegian until 2:45," as an excuse for not turning in your homework. Just make the move to journalism already. Why would you want to be rich and have a corner office when you can be broke and freelance for the Greenfield Recorder?

Speaking of the Recorder, UMass foul No. 3 Gary Forbes, his second personal fourth team, PLAYER CONTROL FOUL.

With all the insults aside, that fateful day when The Godfather, Jon-Jon and Danny made the decision to stick the two of us on swimming was probably the most important day of the year. We worked really well together man and I'm happy we pushed each other like we did. Yarworth and Newcomb – not Hixon – thanked me for all the work we did when I was at A-10s. Your Rappe feature was beast and your women's A-10 preview was so much better than my men's A-10 preview.

Stop saying word. Word is my word and I will not allow you to steal my word.

Hockey's mine.

"Gaaaat it!" – Rich Eisen

Dom Poli – Marnie Ducko is a great woman, but she is not a queen of anything, unless Danny would like to add something. Good work this year man. But please, buy some shoes next year; the sneakers with the shirt and tie just aren't working.

If the softball team makes its way to the Women's College World Series, I better see your ass next to mine in Oklahoma City.

Kevin Dooley – Keep rocking the Kevin Dooley face and don't let Katelyn Orlando get to you. Get your ass down here more next year. I spent three months in the Garber Field Press Box with you and I know nothing about you.

Steve Games – Write more.

Mike Connors – Clutch. You stepped in for us at times this semester. Get ready over the summer. I expect big things from you next year. Four features a week and a team notebook every Wednesday. Go.

Justin McGrail – Thanks for coming down you did some nice work with skiing. Push yourself a little more next year. We're going to need some people to step us since we're losing Rob, Danny and Jon.

Melissa Turtinen – Why the hell does it say "Melissa Crawford Turtinen" when you e-mail us? Stop putting two spaces in between your sentences.

Scott Feldman – You did a great job with the A-10 Baseball Notebooks. Have a good summer buddy.

Mike Gillmeister – Take off the damn Aviators. You wrote a crew feature, you win.

Contrary to popular opinion, there a few other sections of the Collegian than sports. We have a news section and they work pretty hard. Matt Belliveau, Nieole Boonjakuakul and even Anna Dolianitis are the editors of the Daily Collegian's news section – brought to you by the Associated Press.

Congratulations on graduation Nicole, Matt congratulations with retirement. Anna…I got nothing. But you're leaving and that is just not cool.

Tim, you're not getting a beat next year. It's hard enough trashing every musician that get within 200 miles of UMass. Especially with that new staff of yours, just remember to always keep a page open for us since you know, we actually write stories.

Brendan, good luck in Jacksonville, I'm sure we'll hear all about the first Byron Leftwich walked by you or cut you off in traffic.

ERIC ATHAS IS THE MAN.

After some careful deliberation, I realized there are two groups of people I really should thank.

The kid who arrived in John Quincy Adams dorm was not the same kid whose manifesto appears before you. I needed some instruction, not on what college was like or things I need to.

I needed to learn how to be myself.

I had no idea how to do that. And I probably still wouldn't if it wasn't for one fateful night in September of my freshman year. A group of guys on my floor took me in. They showed me what to drink and what not to drink. How to get around campus and what classes to take. Peters, Leddy, Bono, Chris and the rest, I love you guys. Good luck with all of your jobs in lives. While the Collegian taught me who I want to be, you all let me know it was OK to be who I am.

And to the next group, Brian, Petey and Seany – my "roommates." Thanks for a great year boys. HEY, HEY…NOT ON MY WATCH! NO PERSONAL PHONE CALLS!

Harry, I guess your OK to.

I am officially an editor now, my first order of business … fire Eli, football is mine.

Michael King

SWIMMING AND DIVING
WOMEN'S LACROSSE

SCOTT VAN PELT

"A USEFUL SHOT LAD, USEFUL.."

Without a doubt, coming down to write for the paper is the best thing I've done in my time at UMass. Rob, Jon, Danny and Jeremy, you guys definitely pushed me a lot this year and I've improved faster than I could have ever imagined. And thanks to the slew of guys who quit during the fall, so I could have their beats. Starting off in the fall with my beat as A-10 women's soccer notebooks, I think I've made some serious progress.

Rob Greenfield – As the godfather of the sports section, you've provided as good leadership as anyone could ask. I always appreciated how you would take a break from a puzzling layout to read one of my A-10 notebooks that I had done a day in advance. I will never forgive you for not giving me a fall beat. Just kidding. But seriously.

But I don't know what I'd do without your sarcastic stare from across the newsroom, with your ridiculous laugh following some corny insult.

Have fun writing for that paper this summer. Oh, and please stop quoting the same three movies over and over again.

But I owe it all to you. If you hadn't put that flyer in Worcester DC last spring advertising for sports writers, I probably would never have come down to the paper.

Don't think you can get out of coming back to work in the spring semester either.

Jon Pelland – You were definitely a great mentor for the fall's new class of writers. And thank you for going to Vegas during spring break with your girlfriend and sister instead of covering the Mass Attack in the NCAAs. I'm still waiting for feedback from my absurdly long wrap, by the way.

I hope you find a job real soon, since I know mom and pop Pelland are sick of supporting ya.

Most of all, thanks for teaching me a new way to speak the English language. Who knew that adding –sies to every word could be so much fun? The headline of the year: "Vinnies tells Coltsies to Serewsies. DMB 4 life. Ba Ba BA.

Danny Picard – One thing I can always say is that your stories make me laugh every time. There are so many quotes I'd like to share, but very few are fit for these pages.

You've definitely helped me grow as a sports writer and I hope you find a legit sports writing job soon, because you deserve it. Hopefully the job market won't be too brutal on ya, kid. Just take it one game – I mean day – at a time.

Jeremy Rice – I'm not worried about the leadership of the section next year and you're the reason why. Though, it's going to be hard to maintain our high standards.

We had some fun hockey road trips – I'm looking forward to being the official Collegian hockey chauffer next year I guess, I'll tell you right now, I'm not driving to Clarkson/St. Lawrence next October, but everything else is fair game.

I can't wait to see how you destroy football next year, especially since you go into a depression whenever the sport is not in season.

Joe Meloni – Starting out on swimming and diving with you was probably the best thing that could have happened to me. I remember not having a clue what to do during our first interview of the women's swimming coach. I was as visibly shaken as you were when we saw that dead moose on the highway on the BC hockey road trip. Thanks for giving me some guidance, even though you're completely intolerable.

The Rochester trip was definitely a good time and I have a feeling we'll be doing a lot more of that next year. But hockey, you can have it.

Here's hoping that you'll stop bragging about how you never have any school work to do. Hopefully for your sake, your professors aren't reading this, especially Roche.

You know were supposed to cover both the men's and women's swimming and diving teams, right? Not just Evan Swisher.

For the love of god, learn how to write over the summer. But I'm glad we've been able to become friends instead of just colleagues. (insert cliché here)

Eli Rosenswaike – I don't like you. By this time next year you'll probably have passed former sports staffer Brendan Hall as the writer to step on the most coaches' toes. But I'm hoping we'll have a chance to work on a beat together before it's said and done.

Just don't write a 2,000 diatribe of the football team next year until you watch them play at least a couple of games.

Dom Poli – I'm looking forward to working with you more next year. You've done some good work this year, especially your feature stories. If I ever need to figure out how to say something in a different way, you're definitely the one to ask.

Steve Games and Kevin Dooley – It was definitely a pleasure working with you guys on the women's lax beat. Just keep writing and improving and good things will come.

And thanks to Dooley for destroying the field hockey beat while managing to upset two players and their parents. Nice.

Games, hopefully you won't have to go back to playing basketball against men next year.

Young guys and gal – We have our work cut out for us next year to live up to the great section we put out everyday this semester. You guys are as important to the staff as anyone else and we need you to keep working hard and writing some great stories. The best thing to do is write as much as you can and just keep improving.

Domenic Poli

WOMEN'S SOCCER,
WOMEN'S BASKETBALL,
SOFTBALL

RECE DAVIS

"MIGHT AS WELL FACE IT, HE'S ADDICTED TO GLOVE."

Ah, the Misty-f yed section. Has it been a year already? This means I have spent two years at the Daily Collegian. It seems like just yesterday when I strolled into the newsroom September of my freshman year and asked Jeff Howe for a beat. I got one about a month later and have enjoying every minute since.

Unfortunately though, we have to say goodbye to some departing seniors.

Jon, thanks so much for everything. You were always there when I needed you for something. I never felt shy or embarrassed to ask you something and that is really important. Good luck with the job hunt, I know you'll find a place somewhere.

Danny, the same exact thing goes for you. Thank you for all of your help for the two years I've known you, buddy. Thanks for all the insight and advice you've given me – I promise I won't forget a word of it.

Both of you guys have been tremendously helpful over the past two years. You guys always listened to me and help me in any way possible. And, for all of that, I truly thank you.

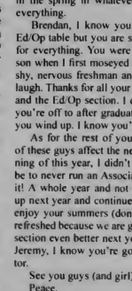
Rob, I know you've got the Co-Op at the Boston Globe next fall. The newsroom won't be the same without you. I know you're going to do great there. Thank you for being an amazing sports editor and managing editor – you really helped my transition form the track beats to the bigger sports. I look forward to seeing you in the spring in whatever capacity. Thanks again for everything.

Brendan, I know you made the jump over to the Ed/Op table but you are still a sportswriter. Thank you for everything. You were probably the friendliest person when I first moseyed into the Collegian office as a shy, nervous freshman and you are always good for a laugh. Thanks for all your help – with the sports section and the Ed/Op section. I don't know for certain where you're off to after graduation, but good luck wherever you wind up. I know you'll do great.

As for the rest of you…we can't let the departure of these guys affect the newspaper at all. At the beginning of this year, I didn't know how feasible it would be to never run an Associated Press story – but we did it! A whole year and not one AP! We have to keep it up next year and continue what these guys started. So, enjoy your summers (don't get killed) and come back refreshed because we are going to try to make the sports section even better next year if at all possible. Oh, and Jeremy, I know you're going to be a great sports editor.

See you guys (and girl) in the fall.

Peace.



Steve Games

CROSS COUNTRY
TRACK AND FIELD
WOMEN'S LACROSSE

STEVE LEVY

"HE WOULD STAY IN THE GAME … HE'S A HOCKEY PLAYER."

How many students actually got to play on the Mullins center floor? I had that opportunity to play on the floor with the women's basketball team as a practice player. I hope the NCAA doesn't ban male practice players. I enjoyed the team practices because the players and coaches always told us that we made them better. Those practices weren't easy though, those girls wanted to beat us bad, they literally beat us up. I had the task of covering Tamara Tatham a lot more than I wanted to. On every play I either got hit by an elbow or had a nice long scratch on my arm. I had to have the trainer bandage me up a couple of times. The one bad thing about playing against women is their long finger nails. You might come down with the rebound, but your also coming down with a long deep scratch on your arm. The team and the coaches were awesome and I hope they can make a run a solid run in the Atlantic 10 next year.

When I wasn't practicing with the team I covered the cross country and winter track team. It was tough because I only saw them in action twice. I also covered the UMass women's lacrosse team. That was a good experience getting to sit up in the press box and pretend I was important for two hours.

In my first year at the Collegian I gained a ton of experience and learned a lot. I would never have thought that I could write 600 word articles in 45 minutes, I always thought of myself as a little slow, but I guess with the help from my editors things change. To Rob Greenfield, good luck next year at the Globe and have fun covering Everett football- they are nasty. To John and Danny, you guys did an awesome job the entire year I hope you guys get jobs somewhere so you can hire me in two or three years. And Brendan Hall, I didn't work with you in sports but thank you for all your tips about getting a summer job. And for the rest of the sports crew, it was fun working with you guys this year, but I am glad it is summer time. School is hard. See everyone next fall.

Kevin Dooley

FIELD HOCKEY
TRACK AND FIELD
WOMEN'S LACROSSE

KARL RAVECH

"TWO WORDS… YARDWORK!"

Since no one probably knows who the hell I am, I should probably introduce myself. Hi, my name is Kevin Dooley and I covered field hockey, track and field and women's lacrosse this year. You don't remember reading me or any of my stellar contributions to this paper? Well, that's understandable because even I sometimes forget that I covered these sports, so don't feel too bad about it. If you're ever bored this summer, you can look up my articles online to read the first ever field hockey team notebook or the now infamous field hockey column which has resulted in me fearing for my life every time I pass by Garber Field.

I want to thank Greenfield for having the confidence to hire me as a writer for the Collegian sports staff last summer and thus beginning my relationship with the field hockey team. Or maybe someone had a gun to his head when he made the decision to hire me. But in all

See MISTY–EYES on page 11

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
…or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the UMass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

MISTY–EYES from page 14

I definitely learned a lot about writing and reporting from covering the Mass Attack alongside you in the Mullins Center. Your attention to detail and your writing style were guh-ross. And thanks for your patience training me to be an editor, I'm sure it was a pain in the ass, but I think I came out of it OK.

I hope I didn't embarrass you too bad in front of Toot with the whole Mike Quick thing. I think I'm over it now – and I think Toot is too. It's too bad neither of us made it to Rochester, but at least we know hockey is in good hands for the next couple of years with Tweedle Dee and Tweedle Dum.

Anyway, good luck this summer finding a job – maybe you'll be over at the Gazette with Vautour and we'll see you around UMass after all. If not, keep in touch, man, we'll miss ya. I'm calling the Dick Baker lock – you'll be writing somewhere by the time the Collegian opens up again in the fall.

Danny – My first memories of the Collegian were covering field hockey with you last year. I don't know if you were as nervous back then as I was, but we've both come so far since then. Covering Sam Koch and the Kochheads was a good time this fall. I don't think I'll ever meet a more sarcastic coach.

Your Roger Clemens stuff was just awesome. I don't know how you got the in with Randy Hendricks, but great job man. That stuff was really special to see in the Collegian.

Don't let Jason Yellin get to you. He'll still be kissing Travis Ford's ass while you're out writing or talking on the radio

Just like with Rob and Jon, thanks for everything you did to make me better. I hope everything goes well with the Globe this summer. I know you'll get work when that's over. You're too damn good for some paper not to pick you up. Just stick to your formula: 500 words. No quotes.

It's going to be a little more boring down here without you making cracks about who you fought, who you almost fought, and who's not going to come walking through that door. Like I said before, don't be a stranger. Hopefully I'll see you around.

Eli – For the love of God man, be nice. Sorry I had to say it. But really, you stepped it up this year and you really earned your spot as an assistant sports editor. Covering football should be a blast in the fall, but if you even think about ripping on Don Brown, I'll throw you out of the McGuirk Stadium press box.

Really though, you're writing gets better all the time and I'm looking forward to working with you next year as editors. It think you're going to do a great job, and I've got all the confidence in the world in you, Joe and King to get the job done night in and night out.

It's going to be a lot of work, and your social and academic lives will suffer. But it'll be worth it. And I know you're up for it, if you can keep from pissing off every coach UMass has under contract. There's only so many beats, you know.

Joe – Air Five – 100. We did it.

Joe Meloni can write, in case you haven't heard. You really impressed this year. You came down as a junior (Who the f is this?) and made up for lost time. If I didn't know it, I'd never guess you've only been here a year. Also, how the hell are you older than me? I never would have guessed that either. You're one goofy S.O.B. and we're going to tear up that hockey beat next year.

Your column on Patty Shea blew me away. I couldn't believe someone with so little experience down here could produce something so well-written. But it really was great. And the controversy it stirred up was priceless. Just remember, I was the one that wrote that "great feature" on Becky Letourneau they loved to talk about, Sarah Williams: Rookie of the Year.

Road trips with Pelland were definitely more fun with you and King along for the ride. And I know he appreciated the extra gas money. Next time, we'll hit the moose ourselves, I know how much you liked that.

Finally, remember to actually send your stories to the sports email. Just because it's done and saved on your laptop, doesn't mean we can print it in the paper.

Kingsies – You came on faster than even Joe did. You didn't even have a beat in the fall, and already you're assistant sports editor, although, I'm somewhat morally opposed to the whole idea, since you're a business major.

Don't forget, me and Joe don't have cars, so you're going to have to drive us to all the hockey road games. And no, you still can't write, but keep the Hockey East notebooks going those are great.

And please, stay the hell away from UMass Hoops. Don't even read it. Just forget it exists.

Dom – You did really good work for us this year, and although I appreciate your use of wild metaphors, I'm glad you learned to cut down on them. You showed that you are in fact no flash in the pan.

We're going to need you around next year working hard as always. I'm looking forward to next year. See you in the fall.

Games – Mr. Women's basketball. I really saw good stuff from you this semester. You did a great job covering women's lacrosse. Just know that you'll have to pick between the women's basketball practice squad, and the women's basketball beat. Choose wisely.

Dooley – When you woke up in time for our 5 p.m. meetings, you did a good this year. Just remember the difference between a notebook and a column. No ripping on women's lacrosse in the team notebook. See you next year.

To the new guys – All of you have really impressed in the short time you've been here. Connors, McGrail, Feldman, Melissa and Gillmeister, you've all worked hard for us this semester learning the ropes and figuring out Collegian style.

You all had plenty of time to get acclimated to the way Collegian Sports runs and I'm expecting big things from all of you in the fall. Like I said, we've got big shoes to fill with Rob, Danny and Jon leaving, and we really need you guys to help us pick up the slack. Stick with it down here. Ask any of us that have been here a while, it really is worth it.

Cheryl – Thanks for putting up with me this year. I'm sure I was a pain in the ass at some points, but it was fun.

Belliveau – Thanks for not making fun of my first few awful printouts. I know they sucked and you were pretty nice about it, so thank you for not crushing my confidence.

Athas – Just like last year, thank you again for helping me join the Collegian. If it wasn't for us living on opposite ends of Hamlin Hall, who knows if I would have made my way down here.

You did great things as editor in chief this year. I'm sure you'll be doing great things wherever you are next semester.

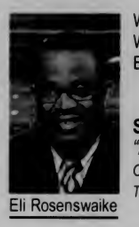
To the news section – sorry for knocking on you guys about the AP counts and everything. It was a one-sided running joke – thanks for having such a good sense of humor about it. You know we love you guys.

Chris, Amanda and Tiffany – Thank you guys for all your help and effort this semester. You all made my transition to editor a little smoother. You really know what you're doing, and thanks for all the help.

To everyone I mentioned and everyone I didn't, for some reason I have trouble getting across what I mean with stuff like this. I always know what I want to say, and then forget it when the time comes.

I love this newspaper and every day I've spent working for it. Thanks to everyone for making it such a good time.

Finally, to my girlfriend Ashley, life sucked without you here this semester. I don't know how I got through it without you. I was so busy that it was probably for the best. I'll need you next year though, when I'm coming home late every night after working on The Score and everything else. I might have to borrow your van a couple times too.



Eli Rosenswaike

WOMEN'S SOCCER,
WOMEN'S BASKETBALL,
BASEBALL

STUART SCOTT

"AS COOL AS THE OTHER SIDE OF THE PILLOW"

When I first came to UMass, my parents constantly told me to get my butt down to the Collegian. Being the stubborn guy that I am, it took me a while to finally heed their advice.

And I'm glad I did. For it was the best decision I've ever made.

I was at the paper briefly last year to cover women's tennis, but I really didn't feel at home until this year. And that's because of all the special people that currently work their now, who made the time I spent down there so memorable. And boy, did I spend a lot of time down there.

And the countless hours I spend at the dungeon next year – as one-of-three assistant sports editors – won't be nearly as good due to the fact that some of my all-time favorite people are moving on.

Rob Greenfield – In the case of the 'Collegian godfather', I won't really miss him at all. I'll just miss that laugh. Seriously though, you mean so much to the paper as a whole and I know you mean a lot to just about everybody down there. That's certainly the case for me.

I have so much respect for you; certainly as a writer, reporter and editor – but most importantly as a person. It's scary to think that you're just a junior like I am, and that you've accomplished all that you have. But there's no question you deserve it more than anyone I know.

I just want to say thanks for everything, good luck at the Boston Globe (you don't need the luck) and I hope that we stay in touch. Your Jasme column was dead-on by the way, don't let anyone tell you otherwise. One last thing…let's just save time by giving me the money for Fantasy Baseball right now. We all know I'm going to walk away with the title, just like I did in basketball.

Jon Pelland – I had so much fun working with you; it's just too bad we never got to work together on a beat. That would have been a treat. I just realized that rhymes, and sounds really stupid. Whatever. I don't really have any material to make fun of you with, but I'm sure you have plenty in store for me.

I'll never forget your mini-tirade at Rafters. Well, mainly because I have it on video. I won't forget the ultra-rare drunk photos of me that you took at the Collegian Bar Crawl. Well, because I immediately untagged myself when I saw that you posted them.

But most of all, I won't forget how great of a person you are. Good luck in the future, and thanks for everything Jon. You know I won't forget it.

Danny Picard – I would say that I had fun working with you during the spring covering baseball, but I don't actually recall you writing anything besides your Clemens column. Only kidding. Actually, I'm not. Because I did in fact write every preview, wrap, sidebar and column. But it's all good.

I had a blast going to Fenway with you to cover the Beanpot. Those car rides were an absolute treat. Finally, someone that shares my love of Kelly Clarkson. You know, this whole year was a blast, listening to your one-liners on a daily basis. You're easily one of the funniest kids I've ever met, and I had a lot of fun working with you.

But kid, lose the green sneakers already. And speaking of green, you owe me $20 bucks. And I know you have it, because your bookie hooked you up with considerably more than that.

I respect the hell out of you, and I wish you all the best. Keep working hard and I know you will be rewarded.

Joe Meloni – You're probably my best friend here at the Collegian. But I'm not going to lie, sometimes I think you're 'one french-fry short of a happy meal,' if you know what I mean.

If I hear 'Tony Romo is a flash in the pan' one more time, I'm going to flip. He made the Pro Bowl in his first season as the starter and he'll be there next February. Mark my words.

I'm glad we got one more year together at the paper. That means one more year of 'Sortino love fests,' 'you can have it,' requests for 'be a paper,' and your trademark fist pump. And who could forget about your 'oh my god' when Steve Buckley came down for a visit.

But as much fun as that was, nothing tops (or ever will) the comment you made to me in BJ's class. That day I realized that after months of friendship – you still didn't know what my race was. But that's another issue, foe another time.

Hopefully twenty years from now, when you come to visit the Collegian, someone will say 'oh my god, it's Joe Meloni.'

I know I will.

Jeremy Rice – Just this once, I'm going to be nice Jeremy. But only because I don't have much material to make fun of you about.

I'm looking forward to another year working with you (unfortunately for all involved, working under you) and I know that the sports seetion is in good hands under your leadership. I've been thinking about my favorite future sports editors, and I've narrowed it down to…??????

You know what? Screw it, this 'being nice' things just isn't for me. Basically, what I really think is that you and your leadership suck. It's a joke that I have to be an assistant editor, while a stiff like you is editor. How's that for nice? Lay off Romo, and I'll be nice. Deal?

We didn't get along for the first few months here, but I'm real glad that I got to know you better as time went on. I can't wait working with you next year.

Michael King – You damn overachiever. A junior in SOM and already an assistant sports editor. Maybe you're too good for us. Maybe you should go to a newspaper that prints in color.

But I called the Harvard Crimson, and they don't want you. So you have to stick it out here next year with me, Joe and Jeremy. And we're all glad that you are.

But dude, get a real major. A degree in SOM won't get you anywhere. The sooner you realize it, the better. I just hope next year when you finally move on from being a lowly teenager, you will stop being Meloni's lap dog.

Congrats on the promotion. Keep in touch this summer hot-shot.

Domenic Poli – I can't believe I got stuck with you covering two beats this year. What luck, huh?

In all seriousness, I had a lot of fun – and learned a lot of things while working with you this past year. I looked up to you when I first got to the Collegian and I strived to work nearly as hard as you.

If you just continue with that work ethic, you will accomplish a lot of great things. You're already well on your way.

Josh Friedman – J.M, I hardly knew ye. I wish you still worked here. Covering basketball with you was classic. I just want you to know that I think you're a terrific writer, and I wish you all the luck in the world. Keep in touch, kid.

Kevin Dooley, Justin McGrail, Melissa Turtinen, Scott Feldman, Mike Connors, Mike Gillmeister and Steve Games – Unfortunately I didn't get to hang out with you guys (and girl) all that much, but I enjoyed the time that I did get to.

All seven of you better be back down here next year, or I'll hunt you down.

Hey, I'm not all about sports. I did write one ed-op column and three news stories. Here are my farewells to the other sections of the paper…even though we all know that the sports section drives this paper.

Nicole Boonjakuakul, Matt Belliveau and Anna Dolianitis – Ah, the news staff. You girls (and guy) think the news section is the front page of the paper, but you have it mixed up. The sports section is the front, while the news is the back.

I just have one question for you three. What time does the Associated Press call into the office to give you their word counts?

In all seriousness, I love all of you. Nicole – my roommate this year – especially. Inevitably we butted heads a few times, but I have so much respect for you. I love you and I always will. I wish you the best, and we'll be sure to keep in touch.

Matt, I know you're like at least 35-years-old, but that's no excuse to be leaving the paper. It would be an understatement to say that you will be missed.

I first got to know you in McBride's class a while back, and I've had a lot of great times hanging out with you ever since. There's a reason everyone down here loves you. You're a great person and you were such a huge asset to this paper for so long. Don't be a stranger Matt.

Anna, my Valentine. We've gone through our fights, but who hasn't? Maybe for next year I'll give you a vanilla teddy bear to go with chocolate Eli. If you play your cards right, maybe the real Eli will give you a second chance. Haha, anyways, make sure you poke your head down here from time to time next year. Love you, have a good summer.

Brendan Hall – I finally realized why Rob has those gargantuan headphones that block out all surrounding noise. He was trying to drown you out.

Only kidding. You may be a little loud, but this place wouldn't be as much fun without you down here. Thanks for being supportive and encouraging. You will definitely be missed. Good luck with everything

Eric Athas and Sheryl Wolnik – My favorite editor in chief and my favorite night editor. We don't know each other all that well, but I just wanted to tell you Eric that I have nothing but the utmost respect for you. You put in so much time and effort into the paper, and we're all better for it. Thanks.

Sheryl, the one that got away. I'm sorry that Anna stole me away from you, but it's about time that you get over it. There's always a place for you in my heart, so don't worry. Thanks for everything, I really appreciate it. Good luck in the future and drop by frequently for visits.

Everyone else – I certainly forgot a lot of people, and for that, I'm sorry. People like Tim McCall, Derrick Perkins, Tucker Merrick, Michael Phillis, Amanda Allen and Toan Trinh to name a few. Thanks for making this year that much better.

Conclusion – My father once told me that many of my long-lasting friendships would come from the people I met at the paper. For once, he was 100 percent correct.

This year at the Collegian was so special to me, and I have all of you to thank for it. I just hope next year is nearly as good as this year was.

Joe Meloni

FIELD HOCKEY,
SWIMMING AND DIVING,
SOFTBALL

SUZY KOLBER

"I WANT TO KISS YOU."

I had no idea who I was before this year.

Rob Greenfield assigned me to field hockey over the summer and I didn't really know how to respond. I did my best with beat throughout the season and the progress I made over the season definitely pleased me. When the coach got fired, I wrote a column expressing my disgust. I got a few threatening phone calls and complaints about what I wrote.

That's when I knew.

I wrote the following after very little sleep and on a rush from two iced coffees. Iced mochas from Cafe Pura Vida are better than regular iced coffees, not too light, from Dunkin Donuts.

I should start with my father who shelled out well over $1,000 this year so I could travel around up-state New York to cover the A-10 Men's and Women's Swimming and Diving Championships and the NCAA Hockey Tournament for this God forsaken publication. Thanks pop.

Mom, the only person who plugs me more than me is you. Thanks a lot. I love you.

Now to the people I've spent the last nine months sitting around a crowded newsroom with. I've learned more about myself – and gained more Facebook friends – since my tenure here began than I did in the first 18 months I spent at UMass.

Hey, I'm not all about sports. I did write one ed-op column and three news stories. Here are my farewells to the other sections of the paper…even though we all know that the sports section drives this paper.

Nicole Boonjakuakul, Matt Belliveau and Anna Dolianitis – Ah, the news staff. You girls (and guy) think the news section is the front page of the paper,

See MISTY–EYES on page 12

Come Enjoy the Valley's Best Ribs, Chicken, & Pulled Pork
Try the world famous unlimited hot and cold bar which includes:
BBQ Ranch Beans, Dirty Rice, Collard Greens, Oranged Glazed Sweet Potatoes, Hickory Smoked Potatoes, Coleslaw, Dill Potato Salad, Corn and Black-eyed Pea Salad, Homemade Soup, and much more.
All take out dinners included a choice of three items from our hot and cold bar and all sandwiches come with a choice of two sides.
BUBS BAR-B-Q "Pig Out To Bubs"
Children's Menu Available
www.bubsbbq.com
Route 116 • Sunderland, MA
413-548-9630

From Your Dorm* To The Airport And Back!
*call if camper - pick up - during heavy travel time
VIP Exclusive Service
Door-to-Door Service
Charter & Group Service
Professional Drivers
New, Well Maintained Vans
Scheduled Van-Share Service
Call: 253-1350 or Out of Area Toll-Free at 1-800-872-8752
Or Book Online at www.valleytransporter.com
Valley Transporter
The Easy Way to the Airport!

MISTY-EYES from page 16

And when someone tells you it's "impossible" to get into a Red Sox game, you only have to look as far as 2004 to see that couldn't be further from the truth. Fenway is my backyard. I've been sneaking into games since I was eight. But what happened during the 2004 ALCS and World Series went beyond what I did in my younger, more mischievous years.

Me and a few of my friends went over to check out the scene before Game 4 against the Yankees, and ended up buying a standing room ticket for $25. Of course, one of our good friends worked the new right field seats, so he snuck us up there. People actually left the game early, and we were able to move all the way up behind first base to see Dave Roberts steal second.

Even better, the same crew went into the Pens for Game 5. We cut the line to buy tickets before the game, and were able to buy $50 standing room tickets, and took advantage again of the right field seats.

There were no standing room tickets to be found for Game 1 of the World Series, so me and my buddy, Nick Collins, snuck in in the most unconventional ways.

Nick just ran by the ticket scanner after he was patted down by security, and I was stuck in the street by myself. After a few failed attempts on my part, the mentality quickly turned from "if I was going to get in" to "how I was going to get in."

Well, in fact, if you look at the new black net that prevents people from hopping the fence in the very back of the RemDawg section, rest assured that it's because I led the way for a Fenway fence climb for arguably the biggest game in recent Red Sox history at the time.

But this piece isn't about me, yesterday's column was. And again, read it if you haven't, because that's about as serious and emotional as you'll sever see me. I love self-promotion. Did I already mention that?

"It's never iffy if it's Griffey."

If I shall, I must commend our sports staff for doing a great job this year.

Pelland – I would have loved to cover the hockey team with you, but I had to jump on the bigger beat – men's basketball – while it was available. But sharing the sports editor position with you was a great experience, even though I had my foot out the door far earlier than expected. In my mind, we really turned the section around, but with plenty of thanks to Rob for showing us the ropes first. But lastly, I want to thank you, Jon, for taking the cake on being the biggest Facebook creep I know. You earned it.

Rob – "By the way, it's never good to be in here." That comment from you answered my question as to why you had called me into the war room after my first week of editing. I'll admit, I messed up big time on that day's paper. But your criticism really woke me up, and for that I am extremely grateful. I'll be seeing you at the Globe this summer, so there's no "goodbye" here. Oh yea, remember that Atlantic City trip we were pumped for at the beginning of the year? That turned out to be a pretty good time . . . . .

Belliveau – You squeezed the best quote of the year out of James Life. But you're still a bug. I'll never forget the time you called me after I put my first section out, and told me that I put the wrong score for the UMass football game. Nice prank, seriously. And I will forever remember that you said two weeks ago that you would trade Manny Ramirez for Carl Crawford. I guess that's why you're not a GM.

Hall – Good luck in Jacksonville. You worked extremely hard to get your co-op at the Globe, and I'm sure I'll be seeing you around in there too. Seeing you over in ed-op everyday was a bit strange this semester, but you're still a sports guy at heart, and that's good to know.

Athas – Talk about moving up the ranks guy. You handled everything the right way, and I think sometimes that quality goes overlooked. I'm not sure if you want to get back into sports, but you should. It's not often that you can get the "boss" to laugh at a few jokes along the way, but you certainly knew how to separate yourself from work and play, and you earned so much respect from me because of that. Do me a favor. Try to get an editor position at a big time newspaper and hire me down the road. Then maybe I'll be able to finally learn how to put pictures on the website.

Sheryl – Have you found any mistakes on my printouts yet? When you do, let me know. We shared the toughest Bill Israel class together two years ago, and Bill would be proud that we ran the show some nights down here at the Collegian. Who would have thought, sitting back in that small room in Bartlett, that we'd be such big players at the very college newspaper he was preparing us for? Wow, time flies huh? Good luck with everything.

Jeremy – We started covering field hockey together last year. Hard to believe I'm handing the ranks over to you not much longer. You'll do a great job. I mean, you trained and knew more about the graphics computers than me, so you'll be fine. Just keep a short leash on the three new assistants. Let them know their role. Good luck.

Eli, King and Meloni – The three stooges of Collegian Sports in my mind. That's not a bad thing. I love the three stooges. Just don't go beating each other up next year. But seriously, you guys earned your spots as editors. Keep up those beast Hockey East notebooks, King. Eli, take it easy on coach Stone. I know he hates us, and he doesn't understand that we don't take the "just a college newspaper" approach, but forget about him. If he doesn't want the coverage, don't give it to him. But if they ever become a good team again, they'll be looking for coverage.

Dom – You've been here just as long as me, and you are a very good writer. I just think you need to keep it simple at times, but not all the time. You also are very creative. Don't let that part of you go. You have a few more years at the Collegian, but I hope you use the extra time to search for an internship somewhere. Don't spend four full years down the Collegian, or you may pull your eyes out.

Dooley, Gamcs, Turtinen, McGrail, Gillmeister, Feldman, Connors – You guys need to all come back next year in full swing. Nothing more to say than just keep your heads up, and apply for the assistant positions next year as well, all of you. Some of you I know better than others, which is my fault, for I should have done a better job of getting to know you all much better. But I didn't, and I apologize for that. Anyways, Good luck.

Amanda, Chris and Tiffany – Without you guys doing your magic in the graphics room, our paper would look brutal. So a special thanks goes out to you as well.

"Yahtzee!"

I'd like to finish this by giving a special thanks to my parents. My mother and father have been a huge influence on my everyday life. Without them, none of this would be possible. I've always said if I made it to the bigs, that the first thing I'd do is buy them a place down the Cape, and that mindset hasn't changed, but it may take a few more years.

And to my grandmother, she is my saving grace. She has always been there through the tough times, and has always been the first person I talk to. What she means to me and the rest of the family goes beyond words. She truly is my guardian angel.

Other thank yours must go out to Bill Israel, who taught me everything I know about journalism. Barbara McGlynn also must be thanked for constantly putting up with my annoying e-mails. And she always seems to get back to me immediately. I don't know how she does it, but thank you.

And last, but not least, my friends from home. I'm not going to talk long about you guys, mainly because you don't even see the Collegian, but thanks for being the same sarcastic wise guys that you've always been. Thanks for never changing, and remaining loyal. I'll be back in no time, so tell Guy to start a "Pic's Special," in memory of my illustrious lifeguard career that has finally come to an end.

You know, I was in a shoe store in Atlantic City while covering the A-10 Tournament back in March, and I got some of the best advice from an old man placing thrown around shoes back in their respective boxes.

"There's nothing wrong with being pleasant," the man said with a smile, almost as if knowing he had one of the worst jobs in the world.

I think about that phrase every day. It's something to live by. Try it sometime.

Well, that's a wrap. I'm out. Peace.

Rob Greenfield

MANAGING EDITOR
FOOTBALL
MEN'S BASKETBALL
MEN'S LACROSSE

CHRIS BERMAN
"WHOOOP!"

How do I do this without using any clichés? How do I articulate what the last three years at this paper has meant in my life – personally and professionally without spewing unoriginal words that have been uttered by thousands? The truth is: I don't think it's possible, because there aren't enough words in the dictionary for that sort of thing. But I do know that the Daily Collegian has been a huge part of my life at UMass for the last three years, and that saying goodbye for good is far from easy, and will approach extreme difficulty.

I entered the Collegian in the second semester of my freshman year without any writing experience beyond class papers and personal typing rants about LeBron James and how overrated he is. The first time that I wrote something resembling a newspaper article was in the basement of my old house on 57 Windermere Rd. in Newton, Mass. It was inspired by LeBron's entrance into the NBA and Jackie MacMullan's column on LeBron's first visit to training camp. "Overkill? Nah . . ." read the headline. It articulated my thoughts about LeBron and the crimes of hype (of course, in a much more elegant and intelligible fashion that I still couldn't touch with a 30-foot pole) and helped me to get started down the path of the keyboard.

It is hard to think about how not-so-long-ago those times were. I was 17 then and I'm 21 now. Not that much time has passed in the big picture, but it seems like nine lifetimes ago, personally and professionally.

And that is the context of this article and this moment. I'm currently sitting at my desk in the Collegian during the last night of publication for this year, and the first semester of this year, along with the rest of my college years, vanished from my rearview mirror during the craziness of the daily gri. It is only now that I've looked back and tried to analyze and contemplate, to remember and reflect.

And it's hard to put something like this down on a page, where words can only describe the outer surface of true experience, like the one I've had at the Daily Collegian over my three years at UMass. As far as the writing goes, I have improved mightily from my days over incoherent rants about professional sports. But this time at the Collegian would be nothing without the people that made every day a blast, and working until 2 in the morning every night something that I didn't dread. So, to all of you who I have met and spent time with over the last few years in the Dungeon, thank you. Here are the individual rip jobs. Just kidding. But seriously. Here they are.

Anna – I put you first on my list, you're welcome. I'm still waiting for my next Anna Nicole update. Is she frozen, yet? Are her relatives fighting over her assets/remains/children? I will miss the constant questions about putting ridiculous Associated Press stories on the inside pages of our so-called respectable newspaper. Of course, it is because of those stories about dead deer sex that our paper is still alive and well. I don't know what you are doing next year, but we need to have that convo because I would like to keep in touch.

Nicole – I'm sorry I spelled your last name wrong on the Newsroom contact list. I'll never forgive myself.

Matt Un-Belliveau-ble – Kid, how you doin, how ya been, how are things, what's up. I'll be seeing ya all over the place for a long time, so there's no need for a long goodbye, because I hate goodbyes. (tears). Didn't think I'd end up at 228 Henry St., but it was one of the best decisions I've made (or Kate made, either one). You made everything a lot easier in Amherst for me, big guy, but I still own you in NBA Trivia, because you wanted a rematch but you didn't really want a rematch cause you still haven't challenged me. Pavussy.

Eric "can't do m" Athas –

Our circulation is 6,000 but since our paper is free that means that each student reads it 2.5 times so that means that our circulation is really 20,000 and I can't believe that I go to an Ivy League school because I'm really not smart at all.

You are the golden god of objectivity and the holy beacon of all things rational. You kept me in check for the last year and prevented me from saying anything that I regretted. For that, I am eternally grateful. One of the best things that's has happened to this paper is you getting the Managing Editor job. You are the best Managing Editor and Editor in Chief that this paper has had in a long, long time, and that's no exaggeration. I have the ultimate respect for you as a person and your ability as a reporter and an editor. I know you are destined for some great things, in journalism or otherwise. Hold on, I have to go out to the satellite truck for World News.

Jeremy Rice-O-Roni – We gave you a lot of shit when you started up and you had your errors as we all do. But I am firmly confident in your abilities the run the section and captain the goon squad. You have improved tremendously as a writer and an editor, and your Gullington feature is the proof. That is really good writing, and I know you can't wait to cover that football team. Just take the goggles off when you do. Hahahahaha. I know you're pissed right now cause I said that Don't lie. I'm just kidding, though. You'll do a great job, just like the great job you've done as an assistant this semester in a tough and unexpected situation. Good luck next year. Believe me, I'm going to let you do your own thing, unlike some other past editors who couldn't let go. Have a blast next year with football. It's the best time you'll have writing at the paper.

Jon "Can't it be both?" Pelland – Under "deceased" I'll write my name and under "sex" I'll write. "No thanks, I'm dead." It's bulletproof.

YOU SUCK. I think we did really well with the editing piece this year. The writing piece was also good as was the Score piece and the content piece, and I think on Tuesday it was more like Wednesday and on Friday it was more like Monday and Thursday was more like Saturday . . . what? As one wise man once told me, if you live in the past you die in the present. Brandon, how does getting suspended feel?

We were really innOVative but we put the wrong emPHAsis on the wrong syLLABle. It's pretty much a mute point by now. Jesus Christ, I am ashamed to have worked next to that god awful room for two years.

Dirty Jerz, Dirty Jerz and more Dirty Jerz. I think I logged more miles on the Jersey Turnpike than the Mass Turnpike this year. Vince Lombardi rest stop was our second home. I think I owe them about 500 dollars in stolen newspapers. Hofstra, Towson, Navy, UNH, Villanova. I think that's it. Oh yeah, Chattanooga, the back hair of the United States.

I'm surprised that we made it through this year with the "room-clearer" in town for a last hurrah. But honestly, I didn't think that I'd find as good friends as I have found working here at the Colleeg, but I was proven wrong. Good times were had by all this semester, and it had nothing to do with making fun of a certain person in media relations, although that contributed mightily to the experience. You are a great person and a great writer. You have improved 1000 percent in a very short period of time, and I know that you with your talent you will find a job to utilize it somewhere. Even if it seems going to east of nowhere to start up. I know that we'll keep in touch, big guy, and maybe we'll end up working together again sometime, which would be the best thing to happen to sports journalism – ever.

Danny "my name isn't Pee-cahhhhhd" Picard – Kid, I didn't think I would be working with somebody so close to Roger Clemens. If I had a choice for Roger Clemens coverage of you and the Globe, kid, you hands down. Hendricks would be emailing you as Roger was inking his new contract. I know you knew he was going to announce that he was going back to the Yankees during that game. You just wanted to let the old guy have his last moment in the sun. Good man.

But seriously, no I'm kidding, but really, you are one of the hardest workers and most disciplined and amenable (a.k.a. able to take criticism and make yourself a better human) people I know, while also putting the "go f yourself" in there once in a while. I still can't believe that we made it back from the Bronx alive, and that either of us got our stories in that night without an assist from a higher power. You will be fine in the real world, because there aren't many people willing to do whatever it takes to make it, and you have that without question. I'll see you this summer in Globe country. We'll bring each other in to close things up. Paps kid. Paps.

Eli – Just lay off the "I hate everything about everybody" stuff for a while, would ya? Nah, that makes you go, without that you're as useful as a poopy flavored lolly pop. I'm still going to beat you in fantasy baseball this year. I know it. And I'm going to be back to harass you when I do. So much fun. I can't wait until Barry Bonds and Sammy Sosa die of old age and steroid use. But you will do great next year as an assistant, as long as Rice doesn't squash your spirit with his tyranny.

Meloni – You are a great writer and will continue to improve with time and experience. When you started out you took a long time writing articles and got stressed a little too much with the little things, but that subsided and you have really emerged as a consistent talent for the newspaper, which is all because of your dedication and hard work. I'm proud that you have come so far and done so much in a short period of time, and I think that, like me, you have developed yourself as a person through the Collegian. Just don't make fun of King for like, three seconds. I dare you. I hope that when you become my boss that you will save a space for me at one of these papers or magazines one day. Just remember the little people, alright? Congratulations on the assistant position, and I expect frequent updates on the state of the paper next year. I'm a phone call away if anybody needs to vent at any point. And there will be a lot of those moments next year. Trust me.

Kingsies – Yo, you're not that little security guard working in Sylvan anymore. Now you're a leaf in the wind working at the Collegian and spewing your filth onto the Collegian pages and poisoning our beautiful content. Wow, that was unnecessarily harsh. It just comes to me when I think about you. Wow, burned again. I'm on a roll.

But seriously (transition) you are a fantastic writer and you have made more use of Hockey notebooks than any person in the history of hockey notebooks, and that is a result of your ambition and your talent. Continue to improve your vocabulary and your style writing, as well as your reporting skills. Like I told Meloni above, just save me a spot when I apply for a job at your newspaper in the future.

Sheryl – I really didn't know you before this year and that's weird because we both were around. But it has been great to get to know you and it is just dumb that we didn't hang out a little earlier in life. Wherever you end up, keep in touch. It would be a tremendous waste of a friendship if we go separate ways for good. And you are too talented to not find a job somewhere, so even though it is stupid and ignorant for me to say not to worry about finding a job, but I'm completely confident that someone will want a person with your tremendous talents. And you're blunt. And a nice person. Get that straight, don't let anyone tell you different.

Toan – You are a great photographer and have a great personality. Get out to LA, would ya? You have been a tremendous addition to the newspaper, and the newspaper went to a new level with your photos and your photo department. You have seriously made an unbelievable impact on the people in the newsroom and added a completely new dimension to our newspaper. And you have been great to have around for those of us who got to know you this year. Please keep in touch, and let me know how things are going next year. I'll be looking for you in VII in no time!!!!! Send me some photos every once in a while. Good luck with whatever you do, and I'll be stopping by to heckle you next year.

Phillis – Your sports photos made the section look so much better this year and I hope you continue with your sports next year and stop doing all of this unimportant stuff like shooting photos of veterans of war and stuff. Slacker.

Suzy Sweatpants – Sounds good to me!!!!!!! I can't wait to see you hammered out of your mind. It'll be non-stop entertainment. But you have saved me on so many occasions in the graphics room that I think I owe much of my sanity to you and your graphics skills and your bubbly personality. The only time I think I saw you angry was during the UMass Flashback, and that was yesterday. Out of two years, that's pretty impressive.

See MISTY-EYES on page 14

Tim McCall – I will talk music with you any day of the week, and twice on Sunday. Bob Dylan still can't hold a candle to Bruce Springsteen.

Tucker, Brendan, Sean – Do some real reporting, would ya? I'm just kidding, but seriously, pick up a recorder sometime.

Derrick and the new news staff – Fight the good fight. And no Franklin Gothic. Ever. I'm just kidding. Do what you want. But seriously, no franklin gothic.

Jeremy Rice

ASSISTANT SPORTS EDITOR
MEN'S SOCCER
HOCKEY
SOFTBALL

JOHN ANDERSON
"HE'S RUNNING LIKE PEOPLE ARE CHASING HIM. AND THEY ARE!"

So, I guess I'm taking over in the fall. Honestly, I have no idea how that happened. Last I remember I was covering field hockey, nervously asking Patty Shea questions in her office.

Now I'm the sports editor, and I gotta say, I'm a bit nervous once again. I'm following three guys who did a fantastic job turning this section into something we can all be proud to say we are a part of. And now it's my job to keep that going.

When I came back to school in the fall, I knew I needed to get better, and I was anxious to get started. I spent most of my summer (when I wasn't working the graveyard shift at FedEx – I still don't know how that happened) watching the World Cup, trying to learn the game of soccer as quickly as possible.

The Collegian I came back to was not the Collegian I left the previous spring. Rob brought direction to the sports section, and I bought into his plan (to use a sports cliché) with everyone else. I was excited to be on the so-called No. 2 beat, and it was a challenge to cover a sport that I not only was unfamiliar with before hand, but also admittedly didn't like at all just a year before.

As the season wound down, Jon asked me to cover hockey for him. I hadn't really thought about winter beats that much, at least not enough to figure out what I might be covering. But was I was psyched to jump to a sport I really loved. It wasn't football, but it was close.

All the road trips, arguing with Dick Baker, accidentally screaming at an almost-goal, the moose, carting Joe and King along everywhere – all stuff that are turning into great college memories I'll never forget.

I'll be rooting for the Mass Attack to get back to the NCAAs – not because I'm a homer – I just want another chance to cover an NCAA tourney game.

Once spring rolled around, I got to witness Joe's one-way love affair with Candice Molinari. I still haven't gotten to cover a tournament game. The Collegian shut down for the summer one week too early.

This semester isn't even over and already I can't wait to get down to the newsroom and start working on the Back to School issue. I've been thinking about who to write about for The Score since February.

To Rob, Jon and Danny, on behalf of everyone returning to the Collegian next year, I pledge to keep this place running strong, and I don't see any reason to bring our AP-free streak to a halt.

The notebooks, the sidebars, the great features and the tight layouts will continue next year. Other than your bylines missing, this place won't look like anyone has left.

On top of that, I thank all three of you for making me a better writer, reporter and editor. I know I had you guys worried earlier this year, but I hope I've put those worries to rest. I've built up a lot of pride in this paper this past year and I know I wouldn't be this good without you guys. Next year I know I'll just get better, and I'll help make everyone else better the same way you did for me.

To everyone coming back, we've got a lot of work ahead of us, but it should be fun. We're all doing what we want to do, watch sports, and then talk about them non-stop. Who wouldn't want to do that?

This semester started with me and Picard watching Sam Koch and the soccer team not score any goals. I don't know how many halves of Patriots football I missed for futbol. I still remember hearing that the Bills scored on a fumble recovery on the first play of the season. I almost left the soccer field to find a TV.

Then I got Jon Quick's name wrong. Now he's in the pros. Guess I won't be making that mistake again – 25 dunkaccinos and eight cups of Dippin' Dots later, I'm still trying to convince Pelland that I'm not 10 years old.

Then I spent the spring with Joe and Dom cowering in fear of Elaine Sortino. And to this day, I am so happy I stuck with softball and didn't take baseball. You're welcome, Eli.

Anyway, that's all for me, now for you guys…

Rob – I know it's Joe's joke, but you really are the Godfather of sports. You built this section into what it is. Truly, thank you for everything. You helped me get better and you were hard on me when I needed it. I hope I've shown you everything you need to see from me for next year.

It's too bad I never got to cover a beat with you. Other than the endless Rolling Stones songs on road trips, it would have been a lot of fun. I always liked getting your take on sports and everything else, especially Bill Simmons.

Also, on a personal note, I don't really think there were a lot of mistakes in the score. I just wanted Nick Belanger to talk about it and what happened with the cover, I swear it was with good intentions, so don't hold it against me buddy.

I was so impressed with everything you wrote this year. It's like you're already a seasoned veteran. Regardless of what UMass Hoops and all the e-mailers think, everything you wrote was professional and so well done. From your football stories, to the Stephane Lasme column, to covering lacrosse, I and everyone else looked up to you this year, and you were the undisputed leader of Collegian Sports, and we would have followed you anywhere.

Good luck with the Globe, I'll be looking for your byline. I hope you'll stop by from time to time next year. It'll be good to hear from the Godfather every now and then.

And any time you want a rematch in Madden, I'll gladly kick your ass again. I can see that smirk and nod right now as you're reading this, and it only makes me want to play more. Bring that brilliant defense, I'll burn it up just like I did at Belliveau's.

Jon – I probably spent more time with you than anyone else this year. I had a great time listening to the Red Hot Chili Peppers over and over on the way to hockey games. That was a fun season and I'm glad we got to cover a beat together before you're outta here.

Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY:
♦ KARAOKE ♦
♦ LIVE BANDS ♦
SATURDAY, MAY 19TH, 2007:
SHUT UP & DANCE
♦ STUDENT BAND WANTED ♦
NEED A PLACE TO PLAY? COME TO SEVEN O'S!
ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-6700
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
NEXT TO CLIFTROCK APTS.

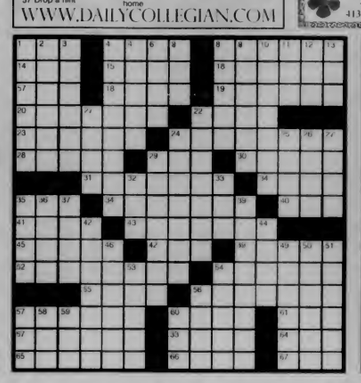
Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

6				5		7
1			6	3	2
	8		5		1
	8		7	3
7						2
		4	1			6
		9		8		2
	6	1	3			8
8		7				5

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Blue
4 Skewer
8 Sanctify
14 Wharton deg
15 That smarts!
16 Lacking in force
17 High mountain
18 Without cost
19 Hacienda hot meal
20 Supposed to be such
22 Promo offering
23 African fly
24 Tweak
28 Standee's handgrip
29 Female sib
30 Extend a subscription
31 Lodging for young travelers
34 Dreadful
35 Feathery scarf
38 Lingers
40 Rocky pinnacle
41 Invitation letters
43 Hewlett's partner
45 Lotion ingredients
47 Golf gadget
48 Tiny amounts
52 Drenching rain
54 Split, as with an ax
55 Univ residence
56 Credit cards
57 Drop a hint
60 Principal
61 Greek letter
62 Citrus fruit
63 Porker's comment
64 Blunder
65 Peril
66 Gymnast Korbut
67 Bread for a Reuben

DOWN
1 Suffers a stinging pain
2 Most skilled
3 Neat and elegant
4 Sentimental feeling
5 Blender setting
6 Chilled
7 Definite article
8 Frequently
9 Tool for enlarging holes
10 Reduced to a lower rank
11 Attorneys' org.
12 Feeling poorly
13 Born in Rouen
21 Jazz slate
22 Find unpleasant
24 More ferocious
25 Component part
26 Pianist Peter
27 Wide-mouthed pitcher
29 Layer
32 Tree fluid
33 Mermaid's home
35 Small nail
36 Norwegian capital
37 Declare openly
39 Island nation
42 Not yet settled
44 Bucks mates
46 Mooch
49 Shred
50 Room full of birds
51 Well-listened
53 Command
54 Resist separation
56 Bucket
57 Singer Stewart
58 Period
59 Irish Sea isle
60 Bovine comment



THE HARP
SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
TONIGHT · Trivia Night
WED · Open Mic Night
(all are welcome)
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar
East of the River 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate Readers Poll
OCMBEA all Credit Cards accepted
Free wireless Internet!
163 Sunderland Rd. · N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-9000 · www.theharp.net

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"There's never enough time to do all the nothing you want."

-Calvin from Calvin and Hobbes

BEST OF WOMBAT By Neil Bryer

SEE, MY COMICS ARE LISTED IN ALPHABETICAL ORDER BY TITLE. THEN NUMBER ORDER BY ISSUE. THEN I CONSIDER THE CONDITION OF EACH BOOK AND REFER TO MY PRICE GUIDE TO LIST THEIR VALUES.
WOW, NEIL. YOU REALLY DO HAVE A LOT OF FREE TIME ON YOUR HANDS, DON'T YOU?
THIS IS WHAT HAPPENS WHEN YOU DON'T HAVE A GIRL FRIEND

BEST OF WOMBAT By Neil Bryer

WOW, JOHN CHECK OUT ALL THESE DVD S! AND ONLY 5 BUCKS EACH!
"PUSS IN BOOTS"?
A CHRISTOPHER WALKEN CLASSIC
I DEFY YOU TO FIND ONE GOOD MOVIE IN THIS LOT
OHHH GIGLI
WHY ARE WE STILL FRIENDS?

BEST OF WOMBAT By Neil Bryer

THAT'S WHEN I REALIZED THAT THE MOVIES HAVE LIED TO US. I MEAN WHERE ARE ALL THE FLYING CARS THEY PROMISED US?
UM, I'M NOT SURE THAT WAS A PROMISE NEIL
YEAH, IT WAS MORE LIKE WISHFUL THINKING
I HAD AN ORAL CONTRACT WITH "BACK TO THE FUTURE PART II" IF DOC BROWN CAN T LIVE UP TO HIS END OF THE BARGAIN THAT'S NOT MY FAULT

BEST OF WOMBAT By Neil Bryer

I CAN'T BELIEVE JOHN WON'T LET ME DATE HIS GIRLFRIEND AMANDA IS SMART AMANDA IS BEAUTIFUL AMANDA IS
HERE'S YOUR BACON AND EGGS, HON
SO ABOUT AMANDA?
WHO?

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You have turned into an academic android. Stop all work, drink tea.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
The fun has just begun, keep living the dream and wiping properly.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Reading days should be devoted to the articles found in pornographics magazines.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Destroy all evidence this paper ever existed and immediately wash your hands.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Avoid laughter whence eating rice as the grains may burst from your nostrils.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Your dreams of becoming a member of the Pen 15 club are destined to come true.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
For centuries, the masses will ask "How on Earth did one tiny Adam get so amazing?"

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You and Oscar the Grouch have a lot more in common than a worm named slimey.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
The aching that you feel in your loins is less about lust and more about a virus.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
This is your last dance with the devil. He is tired and his hooves are getting sore.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You will spend the entire summer living among a pack of wild and vicious sheep.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
In an effort to enjoy the scent of flowers, you will encounter a swarm of killer bees.

You have broken the sacred trust of Sir Sean Connery, have a nice summer but remember... he'll be waiting.

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Like no other course, Army ROTC Our Nurses call the shots! Guaranteed 3 ½ to 2 year Full Tuition Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Top of the Campus, Incorporated (TOC, Inc) will hold its Annual Meeting in Campus Center 903, Wednesday, May 23. 2007 at 12:00 p.m.

APARTMENTS FOR RENT

Center of town, 1,2,3 bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherst-lincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin Jun, July, Aug or Sep. First Come First Serve. Get Them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Handyman, housecleaner, landscaper, Now and for summer. $10hr+ 549-1578

Staffing Now is helping UMass students find work in office and accounting related jobs. Come by on Tuesday, 5/29/07 to get that permanent or summer position you've been searching for with benefits! Full job descriptions at www.staffingnow.com

HELPDESK & COMPUTER SUPPORT TECHNIACIAN Seeking reliable fulltime undergraduate, able to left 50 pounds, with valid driver's license. Friendly with excellent communication skills and prior PC support a must. Fulltime for summer 2007 and parttime for fall 2007. Submit resume and cover letter to helpdesk@gw.housing.umass.edu.

EMPLOYMENT

Promotional Salesmodels needed for summer! Wanted: attractive and energetic individuals to work as promotional salesmodels in Western Massachusetts this summer. $20-25/ hr Must be 21+. Please send resume and recent headshot to: amihos@prestoncorp.com

Summer Jobs for the Environment Campaigne Offices in 60 cities! Work with Sierra Club and State Environmental Groups on a nation wide effort to Fight Global Warming this summer. Work with college students from across the country! Make $4000-$6000/ Summer. Career oppurtunites and benefits also available. Amherst office call: 413-256-6434. Boston Office call: 617-292-4810 or Call 1-800-75-Earth for opportunities in other cities. Visit our website at www.jobsthatmatter.org

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Job on Martha's Vineyard! Asst. Manager, retail clothing store in Edgartown. Richard 413-575-1579 or email rdwhite27@charter.net

Moving: Local Moving Company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must call 413-584-4746

WORK OUTDOORS THIS SUMMER Full time positions available in your hometown. Earn $8-12/hour Painting houses with a fun crew. Call 888-277-9787 or www.collegepro.com

Brandywine Apts. Needs a certified lifeguard. Full time hours flexible. Must work some weekends. $9.00/ hr Call 549-0600 or stop by office.

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Summer Jobs for the Environment Work with Environment Massachusetts on a campaign to Fight Global Warming and work with great people! Make $400-$600/week. Career opportunities and benefits available. Call Mel at 413-256-6434. Visit our website @ www.jobsthatmatter.org

SERVICES

GET ONE FREE, when you buy two packets of birth control and be ready for the summer. Affordable and Confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992, www.tapestryhealth.org

SUMMER SUBLET

Room for rent to sublet over summer Townhouse #32 $400 a month Gas heat. Close to bus stop large room with A/C Partially furnished contact Dan at dexter@student.umass.edu will respond ASAP!

Summer Sublet Puffton Village 3 bdrm air cond Partially furnished rent negotiable Call John 774-239-8937

Thank you ladies, we'll miss you!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

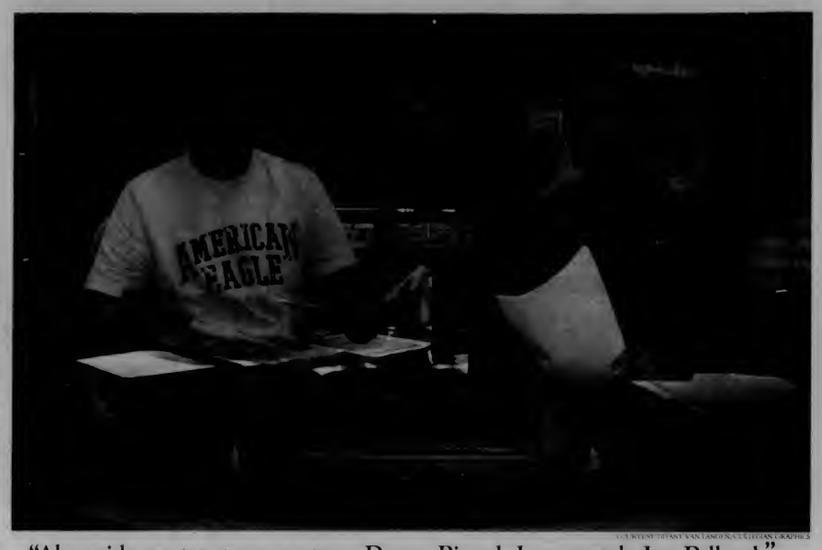
TUESDAY, MAY 15, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Misty-Eyed Memories: 2006-07

Jon Pelland

SPORTS EDITOR
FOOTBALL
HOCKEY
MEN'S LACROSSE

DAN PATRICK
"Dare I say ... en fuego."



COURTESY TIFFANY VAN TASSEL/COLLEGIAN GRAPHICS

"Alongside my tag-team partner, Danny Picard, I am merely Jon Pelland."

Four years ago I came to UMass knowing exactly what I wanted to do. It just took me a little longer than expected to actually carry it out. I came to Amherst dead set on becoming a sports writer at the Daily Collegian. But somehow by the time spring of sophomore year rolled around I still hadn't written a single article.

Efforts were made. I ventured down to the newsroom once or twice to try and get a writing position, but nothing panned out. My shyness got the best of me and I never followed up those visits with anything substantial. It sucked, I really wanted to write but couldn't get past the first step.

Then finally I went to one of the weekly sports meeting to introduce myself for the final time. That half-hour or so was pretty awkward. I sat there while the sports editor, Bob McGovern, talked about the week ahead and went around to each staff writer, finding out who was writing what on which night.

Then came the moment of truth. Bob got to me and asked who I was, so I swallowed hard, introduced myself and said I really wanted to write for the paper. 'Want to cover tennis?' was the next thing out of his mouth. The thoughts racing through my head went something like this: Jesus Christ I don't know anything about tennis so how the hell am I going to write about and I don't even like tennis. 'Sure' I responded quickly because my desire to write heavily outweighed my thoughts.

After the meeting, Bob brought me aside, gave me the UMass media relations telephone number and said my first article – a preview of the weekend – was due the very next night.

Needless to say, my first article in the Daily Collegian was not Pulitzer material (March 24 to be exact). I had no clue UMass even had a tennis team, let alone how they were doing, or who was on the team or what even goes into a preview. So I came down and it I was hooked. I had so much fun writing that first preview that I dedicated the rest of my collegiate career to the Collegian.

These past two-plus years have been some of the busiest, but most fun of my life. Sports writing has taken me down the eastern seaboard and back up again. I've covered some amazing teams (2006 UMass football) and some even greater games (UNH I and II, national championship). But most importantly, I've grown up a lot spending endless hours in the dungeon and I've met some pretty amazing people.

Journalism professors and Career Services advisors can get pretty depressing when talking about the field of journalism – yeah thanks for the pick-me-up – but there really is nothing else I can picture myself doing 10, 20 years from now.

My one and only

Smokin under the railroad bridge
I used to ride my bike down that old dirt hill
First time I kissed you I lost my legs
Bring that beat back to me again

Chrissy – You're probably the No. 1 person I have to thank for being in this position right now, hunny. I've been more than stressed and freaked out because of the Collegian on so many occasions this year and you've put up with all of it. Thanks, hun, for all your support. I can think of so many times this year when I could have snapped, but you kept me in line.

Don't worry about next year. No matter where I am nothing is going to change between us. I know you want an "essay", but you know how I feel about you babe. I love you.

Collegian people

Smokin' under the railroad bridge
I used to ride my bike down that old dirt hill
First time among I'm among good friends
Bring that beat back to me again

I mentioned above that writing the past few years has introduced me to some amazing people. Many of them work right beside me every night at the Collegian and I'm sure the friendships I've made down here will last a really long time.

Sports Staff in General – I just wanted to tell you guys that you all did an amazing job this year. You guys were great when Danny and I were Rob's assistants and continued that when we took over for the big guy – I thank you for that. Every time we were in a bind, a bunch of you came forward and really helped us out. I think the No. 1 reason we did such a good job this year is because of the dedication and love for the paper I know most of you share.

Seriously, give yourselves a pat on the back for us not using an AP all spring long – that is legit crazy. In your free time (if you have any this time of year) go hack the archives from the past few years and see what separated us from them. We all joke about how the sports section is the most important, but we all know that it actually is.

– This year was a lot of work for me, but at the same time it was the best. Again I thank you guys for everything.

Rob – It's the big guy. What can I say, last year when we were paired for men's soccer I knew absolutely nothing about you. You're still in my phone as Rob Greenfield even though we're totally on a first-name-only basis. And going along with the honesty thing – I was pissed when Jeff hired you as an assistant last winter. But it really was the best thing for the paper. Danny and I could have never done the job we did this semester without you in the fall. It was great, and a change of pace, for someone to care about the paper enough to take steps to make the best it can be everyday.

Contrary to a very vocal minority, you are a pretty damn good writer. I didn't do it, but somebody must have taught you how to write during the fall. It was so funny when the clowns on UMassPoops.com said you wrote the Lasme column because you were looking for fame because there is so much of that to grab hold of as a Collegian writer.

Whaddya comin' on to me? Every time I drive by a Knights Inn I can't help but think of the one in Laurel, Md. For my first-ever Collegian road trip that was pretty damn fun. I don't know if you know this, but t here is a Knights Inn in West Springfield. "We got you down for one bed, but you want two?" That guy totally got the wrong impression as soon as we walked through that door at 1 a.m. Navy blues. Seriously who starts rooting for a loss in the second quarter just so he can use the headline in the paper?

It was absolutely hilarious how out-of-place you were in Chattanooga. Those people hated you for killing Jesus. If Chattanooga in December doesn't get you into the Christmas spirit, nothing will. Oh yeah, and for the record, it was you and Big Dan, and not me, having a snoring contest at the Choo-Choo. You two battling back and forth made for one of the worse night's sleep of my life and it still was nothing compared to the Towson trip.

– UMasssssss goal by No. 3 Brett Gaaaaaaaarrr rrrrrrrrrrbbbbberrrrrr, assisted by No. 30 Bobby Haaaaayesssssss. We were both so burnt out from hockey and basketball I still don't know how we made it through the lacrosse season, but somehow we managed. Yeah, this section is going to be as short as our attention span was for lacrosse.

And you, you're a fahckin' editah.

Danny – It feels like yesterday that me and you were in the graphics room and Ginny almost killed us because we thought we accidentally deleted the sports template on the first night we were using it. Not to mention the time some one made that raunchy declaration about the graphics room couch. Remember coming in here in August and not having a clue as to what was going on or what we were doing, and now it's May and we're graduating.

I'm just going to say we beasted the sports section this semester. I gave a lot of the credit to our clown writers, but even more goes to the two of us.

It sucks we didn't get to cover a beat together this year because I bet it would have been a great time. With your ability and hilarious personality, you don't have much to worry about. One way or another you're going to find something.

Belliveau – Ba ba baaaa kid. What you doing? How you been? This year was definitely your shot to ditch that news section and jump on board with the best section at the paper, but once again you missed the boat. But, seriously, don't worry about it because we'll just rent a car in Montana. Not going to lie, I was so embarrassed when you called me out on that, I really thought you were 25. I was only a year off, that's not too bad.

It really is too bad we didn't get more chances to hang out. I guess I can see why you'd rather spend your weekends in Saugus. Actually that statement was a lie, you definitely should have stayed in Amherst more often.

Athas – I don't think I ever told you this, or maybe you already know, but not everyone was as happy as I was when you were hired as managing editor last winter. Like I said to Rob above, it was probably the best thing that has happened to the Collegian in a long time. You seriously dedicated your life to the paper from the time you got that job and kept it going this semester as the editor-in-chief. Looking through past years, this semester's papers were the best, all around, that I've seen.

Stick to the coffee or you'll lose your girlish figure.

Danny Picard

SPORTS EDITOR
MEN'S SOCCER
MEN'S BASKETBALL
BASEBALL

KENNY MAYNE
"Your puny ballparks are too small to contain my gargantuan blasts! Bring me the finest meats and cheeses for a clubhouse feast!"

Jeremy – So this is where in years past the outgoing editor threatens the incoming editor not to screw up the section next year, but I'm not going to do that. I know you'll keep up the pace we set, you included, this year. The only thing I'm worried about is that there'll be way too much hugging in the newsroom. There's a fine line between being nice and being creepy.

Hockey was a lot of fun and I think you grew a lot as a writer over those six months. You learned the meaning of objectivity, that's for sure. I think you've got all the puck-almost-crossing-the-goal-line yelps out of you. Good luck with Dick Baker next year, hey, just think you can make the new guy on the beat sit next to him instead of you every time. Wasn't I right when I told you that would be the only thing I'd do the same. Have fun with hockey next season. As you're learning with softball now, sports are so much better your second time through. Say hi to Toot for me.

Meloni – You're such a fake Italian. What guido is whiter than snow and has hair more red than a tomato? Seriously.

I must say you came a long way from your quoteless, paramount field hockey positional breakdown – the one you wrote even though we already had one. It was great to see how hard you worked during the early stages of the fall semester and believe me when I say it is all paying off now. But this isn't it for you. I didn't give Jeremy the traditional warning because I saved it for you. Keep working hard because I don't want to see you falling into a comfort zone because, without a doubt, you improved the most and the most rapidly out of anyone down here this year.

I know we're not doing the "leaving stuff to people" this year. But I give you Dave Matthews and his amazing band. They're all your's.

Eli – You did a lot of learning this semester, and I hope it pays off for you going into next year. Listen to Jeremy when he tells you to be nice, just turn down all the hugs– creepies. I think you'll be fine, that talent is definitely there.

Kingsies – Look at you big guy, moving up all fast and everything. It was crazy how you came in here and went from not having a beat in the fall, to beasting swimming in the winter and women's lacrosse in the spring. Keep it up King because if you look a few years down the line…

Amanda and Sheryl – What are you doing? How you doing that? How, How you doing that? You look like a blueberry. Your hair looks stupid. Baxter, hark twice if you're in Milwaukee. Who DAT be? Who my baby-daddy be? Love you Sheryl.

Big Red – It's too bad we didn't get to hang out as much this year, but I guess that can slide seeing as though we were both focusing on the careers and you weren't here for half the year. Good luck in the future, big guy.

Dom – I know this year was tough on you at times, but I really hope you stick with it and keep working hard. I'd pretty much give up anything to be in your shoes right now and have two more years down here. Make the best of it.

Games – I was a little worried during the early winter months that maybe your heart wasn't in this, but that may have just been because you were sick of cross country. Once you got women's lacrosse you really surprised me with your dedication and want to write.

Dooley – Next year is going to be a key year for you. I hope you use it wisely and really improve you're writing because I think you can be a really good sports reporter.

Newbies: McGrail, Connors, Melissa, Gillmeister, Feldman – I was really happy to see you're all coming back next year. The Collegian is really going to need you.

Thanks to everyone else in the newsroom and everyone who's helped me along the way.

Days when all we did would never end
Screamin' down that old dirt hill
Bring that beat back to me again

Former Co-Sports Editor Jon Pelland was here

I am proud to leave UMass as a member of arguably the greatest intramural team in school history. Team Ramrod won its second Intramural Hockey Championship in three years back in November. And it wasn't just two championships. It was complete domination.

Ramrod consisted of: Tom Blackney, Brett Blanciforti, Tony Brennan, Chris Cobb, Jeff Daddio, Sean Degnan, Marc McCabe, Kevin Morrissey, Brian Murphy, Donnie Murphy and last but certainly not least, Leo Rusk. I missed our tender's birthday Sunday because of the Collegian, but he deserves the MVP. Leo was the savior to our suspect defense and backchecking on many occasions, and just proved that solid goaltending is in fact the key to a championship.

Unfortunately, we couldn't do damage in the men's league postseason this year. We were extremely reminiscent of the Cincinnati Bengals, without the likes of Donnie and Chief, thanks to a few legal issues. But it's alright, we still handled our games with the most class in the league, and for that, I am proud.

In the end, it's all about respect. And what I learned in my three years at UMass is that you won't find much of it in Amherst.

I'd like to see 95 percent of the people in this town/school to spend a day in South Boston. I'd like to see Tommy tough guy on club sidewalk try to shoulder someone outside of Striggies on a Saturday night. And Harry hustle at Charlie's, I'd like to see him walk into the Seapoint and challenge someone to "20 bucks a ball."

You see, where I come from, there's actually something called loyalty and respect, something that I struggled to find during my time in Amherst, and something I won't miss.

Off topic, how about them Panty Sniffers? We made it to the Final Four of last year's Intramural softball playoffs, but this year we were sent home early. I only made it to one game, thanks to the Collegian, but I felt like I needed to give the boys a final shout out. Since I couldn't be at the last game, and if you're reading this, do me a favor.

In the words of our ace Mike Christopher, get in close, and give it one final sniff, boys.

But someone tell Chris Adams that just because our team name was "The Panty Sniffers," that doesn't mean we actually have to do it. Sick bastard.

"I am amused by the simplicity of this game."

If you didn't read my farewell column in yesterday's paper, please do so. Also, this would be a good time to promote my live sports talk show every Monday and Friday from 4-6 p.m. It's called "In the Crease" and you can listen by going to Sportsjuice.com. Even interact by sending e-mails during the show to Inthecrease33@gmail.com. You can also find the link on my blog at dannypieard.blogspot.com.

I love self-promotion.

I also love 2004. That was the greatest year of my life. If I were to go today, I would die a happy man, knowing that no other year will be greater.

See MISTY-EYES on page 14

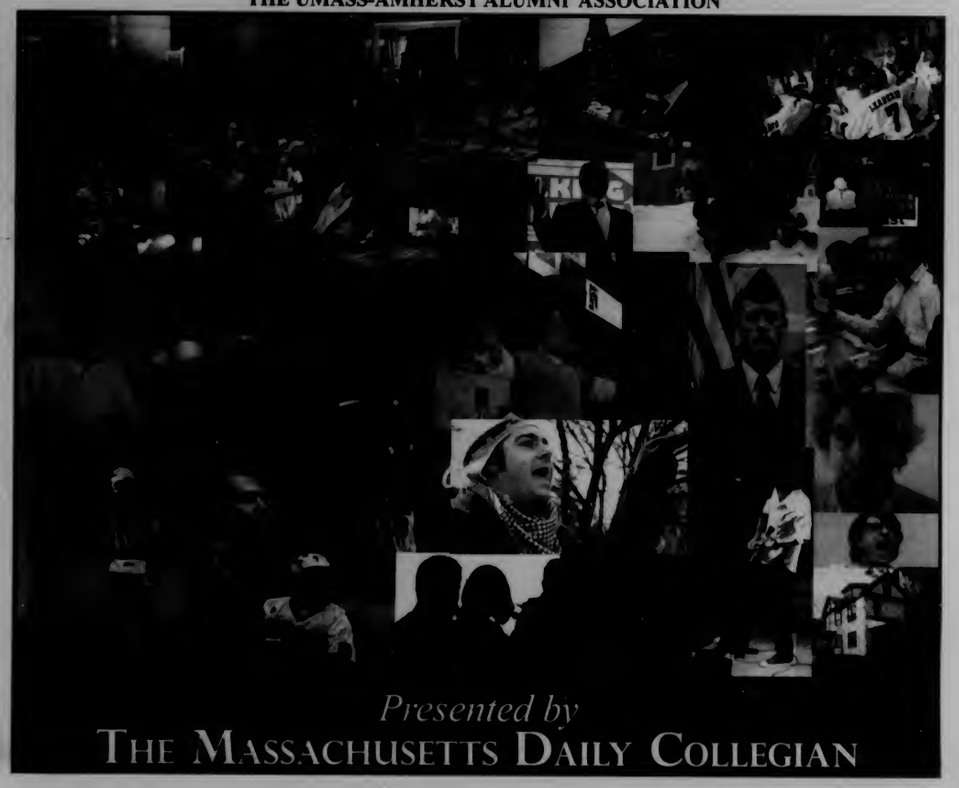
THE 2006-2007 UMASS

FLASHBACK

The Year in Review

BROUGHT TO YOU BY
THE UMASS-AMHERST ALUMNI ASSOCIATION



Presented by
THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Your Alumni Association: Your New Best Friend

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

To celebrate your graduation and start of your career, the Alumni Association offers you a first-year membership at half-price: just $20.

The Alumni Association is your avenue towards career and social networking, valuable discounts and privileges, and a way to stay in touch with friends and the UMass Amherst campus. Check it out!

STUFF EVERYONE WANTS

- Free lifetime UMass Amherst Alumni email address
- Free profile, access and search capabilities in the online Alumni Directory (Use it to look up friends, stay in touch with classmates, network with fellow alumni in your career field or where you live.)

DISCOUNTS & BENEFITS

- Discounted auto, renters and home insurance through Liberty Mutual
- Discounted health insurance and one year free life insurance through Marsh Affinity Group
- Discounts on hotels, car rentals, Jos. A. Bank clothing, movie tickets, ski lift tickets, merchandise and more!
- American Airlines offers members up to 10% savings on airfare, and 5% on any land components, when booking vacation packages

THINGS TO DO

- Discounted admission to Alumni Career Services professional development & networking events
- Free membership in your local Alumni Club

BRAIN FOOD

- $100 off KAPLAN Test Preparation classes

Meet Your Alumni Association

Win $1 000 FREE Snacks, FREE Graduation Gift

Go to UMassAlumni.com for detailed information and to join now!

You were. You are. UMASS.

Thank you for taking the time to pick up your copy of the 2007 UMass Flashback brought to you by the UMass Amherst Alumni Association. First of all, I would like to address the purpose of this year's graduation issue. At a school as large as UMass, it's hard to put something together that truly embodies a yearbook-like collaboration of pictures, events and testimonies that apply to everyone. Let's be realistic. In the fall of 2006, enrollment numbers for UMass-Amherst undergraduates totaled almost 20,000 people. With such a large number of individuals in one university, how can it be possible to share the same memories and experiences? However, there are elements of common unity existing amongst us as UMass students that, despite our large size, tie us together during our college careers and will continue to do so throughout the rest of our lives. It is these elements that we aim to present to you in our Flashback, taking a closer look at what we as students lived through during our time at UMass.

I would like to personally thank the Collegian Executive Board for our teamwork and leadership in making this issue possible. It required the efforts of every department working hand-in-hand to produce a successful final project. I would also like to extend many thanks to the UMass-Amherst Alumni Association for supporting our guide through their sponsorship. With over 206,000 alumni worldwide, the Alumni Association continues to strengthen the lifelong bond between the university and its alumni, to help shape the future of UMass-Amherst and enhance the academic and social experience of the University's student body. Along with providing scholarships and grants to recognize outstanding students, the Alumni Association succeeds in organizing many successful events reuniting UMass alumni every year. Through their endorsement of our guide, they have lived their message by providing us with something tangible to remember our own time in Amherst by.

Not everyone will remember the person they were sitting next to in McGuirk Stadium that Saturday afternoon Dec. 2, 2006, but I think it's safe to say most of us remember the thrill of witnessing UMass' victory over UNH. We as a UMass generation have experienced exciting and unique events during our years here that have left us with cherished memories. While these memories will most likely fade over time, they will never truly leave us. I hope you will hang onto your copy of the 2007 UMass Flashback as a testimony of everything you'll want to remember from your time at UMass. What ultimately brings us together as a student body is not simply what we have learned or experienced individually, but more importantly what together as a school we bring with us as we live our lives serving as the face of UMass and representing our university to the rest of the world.

Thanks for reading,

Jaimeson Porter
Advertising Manager
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Table of Contents

Pg. 4-6	Top 10 News Stories of the Year
Pg. 7	Yearly Individual Awards
Pg. 8	Photos of the Year
Pg. 9	Tribute: Remembering the deceased
Pg. 10	Top 5 UMass Sports Moments
Pg. 11	Yearly Sports Awards
Pg. 12	Coaches of the Year, Breakout Athletes
Pg. 13	Notable Senior Athletes
Pg. 14	Guide for after Graduation
Pg. 15	Concert of the Year

THE 2007 UMASS FLASHBACK

Brought to you by
THE UMASS AMHERST ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Editor in Chief Eric Athas
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sheryl Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jaimeson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston

Editorial

Art Editor Morgan-Ann Rousseau
Assistant Art Editors Sydney Towne, Tim McCall

Editorial Production Amanda Allen
Photo Editor Toan Trinh
Photo Credits Keith Toffling, Amin Ebtesham, Cristian Gomez, Christopher Moriarty, Michael Phillis
Copy editor Sheryl Wolnik

Business

Advertising Representatives Emily Nichols, Nicole Puddester

Production

Graphic Design Amanda Allen

The UMass Flashback is published annually by The Massachusetts Daily Collegian. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College News in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been headquartered since June 1964. For advertising rates and information, call 413-545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Top 10 UMass News Stories of 2006-07

1. THE RIOT

When the Division I-AA Championship game between the University of Massachusetts and Appalachian State came to an end on Dec. 15, the next hour would translate into months of investigations, arrests and expulsions. About 1,800 students poured into the Southwest plaza following UMass' 28-17 loss. The students broke windows, threw rocks and damaged the campus. Over $100,000 in damage was later reported. During the riot, someone dropped a jug of liquid from an upper floor of the John Quincy Adams dormitory, and it came within feet of hitting Chief of Police Barbara O'Connor. Eleven people were arrested the night of the riot. While the riot occurred at the conclusion of the fall semester, its consequences would become the biggest story of the spring semester. The UMass Police Department conducted a thorough investigation in the months following the riot. Using YouTube videos, Facebook and MySpace photos, as well as video from security cameras, the UMPD charged an additional 57 people in connection of the riot. The University has taken disciplinary action as well. Since the riot, five students have been expelled, 28 suspended and 22 have received deferred suspensions. Eight students have been removed from UMass housing.

2. ANDREW CARD'S HONORARY DEGREE

In April, it was announced that Andrew Card, the former Chief of Staff to the Bush administration was nominated to receive an honorary degree during the graduate commencement. The announcement outraged many members of the University, including faculty and staff. On Thursday, May 10, a protest took place against the nomination. Led by graduate students, people marched from Whitmore Administration Building to Chancellor John V. Lombardi's office. While rumors circulated about the legitimacy of the nomination, UMass President Jack Wilson said the nomination process was not flawed in any way.

3. VIRGINIA TECH SHOOTING

One of the horrifying news stories of the year affected the entire world, including UMass. When Seung-Hui Cho shot and killed 32 students, and then shot himself at Virginia Tech, safety measures at universities were reevaluated. UMass officials held a meeting in the days following the shooting to discuss the incident, and a survey was sent to all undergraduate students looking into the possibility of e-mail warnings in the event of an emergency. Many members of UMass also banned together to remember the victims. A vigil was held on April 19 and student organizations including the Central Area Government and the Alpha Epsilon Pi fraternity both held fundraisers for Virginia Tech

HATS OFF TO GRADUATES!
COME CELEBRATE WITH US AT Salem Cross Inn
— RESTAURANT —
Route 9, 260 West Main St., West Brookfield, MA
Great food, Great setting, Great time! Call now to book your reservation!
Groups of any size welcome!
(508) 867-3345
www.salemcrossinn.com

4. THE IRAQ WAR HITS HOME

As the Iraq war continues to heat up politically, the lives of UMass students are also being altered by the war. UMass Lance Cpl. Eric P. Valdepenas, 21, of Seekonk, Mass., was killed in Iraq on Sept. 4, 2006. Valdepenas was a student at UMass, who put his academic career on hold in December 2005. Valdepenas was a pre-major in mechanical engineering. His vehicle was hit by an improvised explosive device (IED) in the Al-Anbar Province of Fallujah and two other servicemen were also killed in the attack, according to the United States Defense Department. The team had been conducting combat operations against anti-Iraqi forces in the area, according to the Marine Corps. Valdepenas was a machine gunner in the 1st Battalion, 25th Marine Regiment reserve unit, also known as "New England's Own," based at Fort Devens, Mass. From May 7-11, The Daily Collegian ran a five-part series profiling student veterans at UMass.

5. PROFESSOR MELLO WINS THE NOBEL PRIZE

Craig C. Mello, Ph.D., of the UMass Medical School in Worcester, Mass., was awarded the Nobel Prize in Physiology on Oct. 2, 2006. Mello, along with his colleague, Andrew Fire, Ph.D., of Stanford University, discovered that a form of ribonucleic acid in charge of genetic data "can silence targeted genes." Since Mello was awarded the prize, he has been the face of UMass.

6. VENEY CLAIMS RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

Jordan Veney, a former thrower on the University of Massachusetts track and field team, sent a letter to the University appealing her recent removal from the track team and the termination of her scholarship. Veney cited discrimination as one of the reasons for her removal, and is asking the University for a $23,500 scholarship – up from her original agreement of a $20,000 partial scholarship – as compensation for what she believes to be discriminatory treatment from the coach, Julie LaFreniere. Veney said that she will take legal action against the University and the employees involved if her scholarship is not reinstated.

7. MARQUIS FILES LAWSUIT AGAINST UMASS

When Fall semester grades were released, one student was very unhappy. Brian Marquis, a 50-year-old legal studies and sociology double-major who is a registered paralegal, filed a lawsuit in January against UMass. The dispute is over the final grade Marquis received in Philosophy 161: Problems in Social Thought, a course he took during the Fall 2006 semester. Marquis alleges his exams, papers and participation grades for the semester equal 92.1, not 84. He said he deserves an A- in the course and is charging the University with 15 counts, including violation of the First Amendment and breach of contract.

Congrats to the Class of 2007 from Bub's BBQ
Come Enjoy the Valley's Best
Ribs, Chicken, & Pulled Pork
Try the world famous unlimited hot and cold bar which includes:
Children's Menu Available
www.bubsbbq.com
Route 116 • Sunderland, MA
413-648-9650

8. HATE CRIME ALLEGATIONS LEAD TO CAMPUS-WIDE DISCUSSION

On March 1, UMass student Tony Brennan was arrested for assault and battery and allegedly making homophobic remarks to the victim. According to the UMass Police Department, officers initially responded to MacKimmie Residence Hall at 12:06 a.m., Feb. 28 to aid the victim of a serious assault and battery. The early investigation determined that the victim, a 20-year-old UMass student, was assaulted by another male student making homophobic remarks in the Southwest Residential Area. The victim, listed as a member of the 2005-06 UMass men's swim team, was later transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital for treatment after suffering severe injury to his face, including a fractured eye socket and a concussion during the assault. Friends of Brennan who were present during the alleged assault, claim no homophobic slurs were made. Regardless, the incident resulted in outrage from the UMass gay community. Students, faculty and administrative officials gathered in an open forum on March 6 to discuss the incident and possible solutions to insure that a similar crime will never happen again.

9. UMASS AGREES TO PURCHASE FRAT ROW

After three years of negotiations, UMass finally struck a deal to purchase five pieces of property on North Pleasant Street, also known as Frat Row. In April 2006, residents of three Greek houses were informed that the houses would be vacant following the Spring 2006 semester. After UMass signed a purchase-and-sales agreement, the houses were demolished in October 2006, and the land will officially belong to the University in a matter of months.

10. CAMPUS DORMS BURGLARIZED

Two suspects broke into several campus dorm rooms on March 13 and stole thousands of dollars worth of electronics. The alleged larcenies occurred at the Brooks, Baker and Webster Residence Halls. The suspects, whose pictures were captured by dorm security cameras, allegedly were falsely soliciting money for the Avon Cancer Fund.

PROFESSOR OF THE YEAR: CRAIG C. MELIO

QUOTE OF THE YEAR

"We have no intentions of stopping until we've identified every single rock thrower and every single person who is responsible for the damage."

—Patrick Archbald, Deputy Chief of the UMass Police Department on the Dec. 15 riot

MOST INFLUENTIAL STUDENT: JUSTIN JACKSON

Justin Jackson is a graduate student in the UMass History Department. Jackson was not afraid to voice his opinions this year as he led most of the campus protests against the Bush administration during the 2006-07 academic year. Jackson also protested numerous UMass administrative policies.

Photos of the Year

BY MICHAEL PHILLIS

BY SARAH GAGNE

BY MICHAEL PHILLIS

Remembering...

A tribute to students who died during the 2006-07 academic year.

Noach Brad Skikne, 22

Died in a fatal car accident on Amherst Road on his way home after previously stopping to give first aid assistance to people involved in another motor vehicle accident.

Malvika Mookerjee, a senior from Newton, Mass.

A member of the Sigma Delta Tau sorority died after a long fight with a heart condition.

Kyle Brito, of Onset, Mass.

A freshman animal science major, was a talented dancer and gymnast, and a member of the UMass Coed Cheerleading Team.

Lance Cpl. Eric P. Valdepenas, 21, of Seekonk, Mass.

Was killed in Iraq on Sept. 4, 2006.

Jordyn C. Teixeira, 19, of Dartmouth, Mass.

Was killed during the summer when she fell off the back of the Vespa scooter she was riding.

Terry Moulder, a 45-year-old University Without Walls student at UMass

Died on Dec. 15. Moulder was remembered by her friends and colleagues as a kind person who had a great sense of humor and some wild one-liners.

Jennifer Marie Flanders, of Bourne, Mass.

Died in November after a courageous battle with cystic fibrosis. Jennifer was a member of the junior class and studying nursing.

Top 5 UMass Sports Moments of 2006-07

NO. 1: UMASS VS. UNH

UMass wide receiver Brandon London finishes what turned out to be the game-winning drive for the Minutemen with a 31-yard touchdown catch from Liam Coen in the third quarter. London, arms extended, broke the plane of the goalline and the Minutemen took a 21-17 lead in the biggest football game on the UMass campus since 1998. The Minutemen won, 24-17, to advance to the national semifinals against Montana.

NO. 2: UMASS VS. ALABAMA

In the first round of the National Invitation Tournament, the Minutemen, after getting taken to overtime by the Alabama Crimson Tide at the Mullins Center, stole the victory with some last-second drama provided by sophomore point guard Chris Lowe. Lowe drained a floater at the buzzer to give UMass the 89-87 win.

NO. 3: UMASS BEATS MONTANA IN FOOTBALL, BC IN HOCKEY ON SAME NIGHT

The No. 3 Massachusetts football team defeated the No. 2 Montana Grizzlies on Dec. 8 on the road in Missoula while UMass hockey fans watched the Minutemen beat the Eagles on the ice, 2-1, at home. At the Mullins Center, the jumbotron featured live coverage of UMass football during the intermissions.

NO. 4: UMASS SWEEPS MAINE IN CONSECUTIVE WEEKENDS

The Massachusetts hockey team beat Maine in four straight games - the first series clinched home ice in the first round of the Hockey East playoffs, and the second series came in a rematch in the Hockey East Quarterfinals.

NO. 5: CULLINGTON BREAKS SINGLE-SEASON HOME RUN RECORD, UMASS WINS A-10 CHAMPIONSHIP

The Massachusetts softball team won its 19th Atlantic 10 Championship on the back of a grand slam from junior second baseman Stacy Cullington, who broke K.J. Kelley's single-season home run record of 14 in the process.

2006-07 Sports Awards

MALE ATHLETE OF THE YEAR

Jon Quick

UMass goaltender Jon Quick backstopped the Mass Attack to the best season in program history. Quick posted a 19-12-5 record for UMass. His .929 save percentage ranked fifth nationally and his 2.16 goals-against average placed among the national leaders. Quick made 59 saves in a two-game sweep of Maine in the final weekend of the regular season, clinching home-ice for the Minutemen.

FEMALE ATHLETE OF THE YEAR

Michele Spiess

Michele Spiess won 79 percent of her singles matches and 72 percent of her doubles matches during her UMass career. She was selected as the Player of the Year by the Atlantic 10 in both her junior and senior seasons.

TEAM OF THE YEAR

UMass Football

The Massachusetts football team made it all the way to the National Championship game before losing to Appalachian State, 28-17, in Chattanooga, Tenn. It marked the first time the Minutemen made it to the national championship since 1998. The Minutemen won the Atlantic 10 Championship, clinching the title in a victory over Maine at home in the penultimate game of the 2006 season. UMass had several seniors that made substantial impacts on the team during the season, including two offensive players that were recently signed by NFL teams after the draft concluded. Tailback Steve Baylark rushed for four straight seasons with over 1,000 yards on the ground, and signed a two-year contract with the Arizona Cardinals.

ROOKIES OF THE YEAR

Bryan Hogan, men's soccer

Sarah Williams, field hockey

2006-07 Sports Awards

COACHES OF THE YEAR

Don Brown

Elaine Sortino

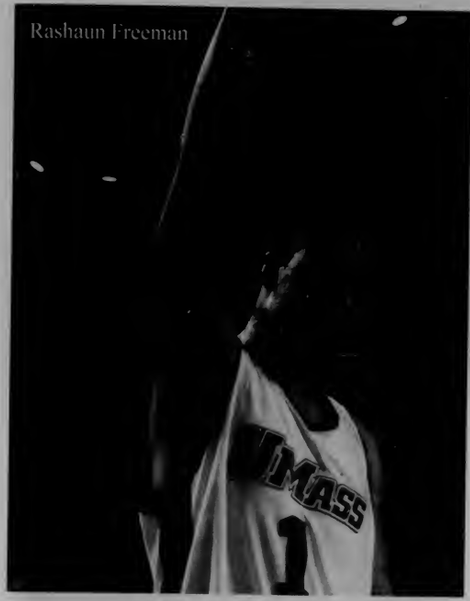
BREAKOUT ATHLETES

Stephane Lasme

Stacy Cullington

Notable Senior Athletes

Rashaun Freeman



Tamara Tatham

This page is dedicated to the senior athletes for their hard work and commitment during their time at UMass. Good luck with your future endeavors, and congratulations from the Collegian Staff.

Evan Swisher - Men's swimming
Brandon Thomas - Men's basketball
James Life - Men's basketball
Christian Koegel - Football
Bryan Adamski - Baseball
Mike Herald - Men's swimming
Andrew Recchione - Men's lacrosse
Rush Hawkins - Men's Skiing
Nadia Villaroel - Women's soccer
Stephanie Barrett - Women's soccer
Samantha Sepulveda - Women's lacrosse
Amanda Acampora - Softball
Amanda Morin - Softball
James Ihedigbo - Football
Candice Molinari - Softball
Brandon London - Football
Brett Garber - Men's lacrosse
Brian Jacovina - Men's lacrosse
Mark Matheson - Hockey
Matt Anderson - Hockey
Liz Lovejoy - Women's swimming
Steve Baylark - Football

How-To: Guides after Graduation

How To: Write a Resume

When drafting your resume, be sure to keep these tips in mind.

- Fit it all onto one page.
- Be consistent with fonts and bullets.
- Keep it simple. Make it as neat and easy to read as possible.
- List your education first, followed by your job experience.
- Put your contact information at the top, where it's easy to find.
- Don't forget to proofread!

How To: Successfully Interview

When preparing for an interview, be sure to keep these tips in mind.

- Research both the company and the position you are applying to.
- Get good driving directions and leave plenty of time to get there.
- Dress to impress.
- Prepare answers to questions you are likely to be asked.
- Take your time answering questions. Think them through.
- Don't be afraid to ask them questions.
- Send your interviewer a thank-you letter within 24 hours.

CONCERT OF THE YEAR: DAVE MATTHEWS AND TIM REYNOLDS

Congratulations Class of 2007!

The 2007 Daily Collegian Staff

UMass-Amherst

Welcome Incoming Freshmen

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

Orientation Edition | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | SUMMER, 2007

Former site of Frat Row to be sold to UMass

UM Alums celebrate demolition

By Eric Athas
Collegian Staff

November 16, 2007

Frat Row is officially no more.

The five houses on North Pleasant Street have been demolished, and the sale of the parcels to the University of Massachusetts is imminent, according to an official involved in the deal, who celebrated the demolition this past weekend.

The houses, which were built in the 1890's and early 1900's, were razed one-by-one over the last three weeks. The razing is part of a purchase-and-sales agreement between UMass and Alpha Tau Gamma, Inc., the company which currently owns the land. After ATG, Inc. seeds the land, the University will buy it for $2.5 million.

"All of the houses are gone," said Jim Mulcahy, treasurer of ATG, Inc. and an alumnus of the UMass Stockbridge School of Agriculture.

The process is not finished, though. According to Mulcahy, ATG, Inc. still has to remove the houses' foundations. He said after that happens, the holes will be filled with gravel, soil will be placed over it, and the dirt will be seeded.

The demolition began on Tuesday, Oct. 24 with the house at 395 North Pleasant St. The final house was razed on Saturday.

To celebrate the completion of the demolition, Mulcahy, along with several Stockbridge alums and ATG, Inc. members gathered on campus.

"We had an alumni gathering there on Saturday, we all toasted, with Coca-Cola mind you," Mulcahy said. "This was just to stay up there and tell old stories about the house, what we did in the house, it was great, it was a wonderful time. It was a celebration and it was sad, but it's great."

Mulcahy said the demolition has been a long time coming, and that he is anticipating the completion of the sale sometime in the near future.

"We know that the University has appropriated the money and we know it's coming," He said. "You'd like everything to be done, you'd like it to be over, but it'll happen."

Mulcahy said ATG, Inc. originally wanted the demolition to take place in the summer, because there would have been less traffic in Amherst and around campus.

The process began in the fall however. On Tuesday, Oct. 17 workers had to dig holes on North Pleasant St. to disconnect the houses' domestic water lines and large sprinkler lines. Mulcahy said this was the final procedure before the destruction could occur.

One factor that slowed down the demolition process took place on Sept. 24, when trespassers entered the five vacant houses in the early hours and set fire to an old couch in the building located at 375 North Pleasant St.

MICHAEL PHELPS/COLLEGIAN

The University of Massachusetts reached an agreement with the former owner of Frat Row, Alpha Tau Gamma, Inc, to purchase the land for $2.5 million.

BusinessWeek Ranks SOM

By Will McGuinness
Collegian Staff

March 13, 2007

It may not take a business major to know the value of getting the most bang for one's buck, but the 3,131 undergraduate students enrolled at the University of Massachusetts' Isenberg School of Management are doing just that, as the school has been ranked highest overall among undergraduate, public business schools in the Northeast.

In BusinessWeek magazine's annual survey, "The Best Undergraduate Business Schools," the Isenberg School of Management was listed above all northeastern public business schools and 58th in a comprehensive, nationwide poll.

The college's Web site, www.isenberg.umass.edu, makes known that the school has issued more than 30,000 degrees since its first graduating class in 1949 and offers these degrees in concentrations from six departments. These include accounting and information systems, finance and operations management, hospitality and tourism management, management and sport management.

According to Isenberg School of Management Communications Director Lou Wigdor, the survey was not only based on statistical data, but also responses from the graduating seniors of each respective school and answers from corporate recruiters. Students answered questions about but not limited to quality of faculty, curriculum and extracurricular activities, which accounted for 30 percent of the rating process. Twenty percent was aimed at corporate recruiters who answered inquiries pertaining to quality of graduates, curricula innovation and career services.

"This milestone reflects our concerted efforts to prepare our students for success in the global economy," says Dean Soren Bisgaard. "I am extremely proud of our faculty, staff and especially our students".

"A major part of my decision to come here was the high ranking of the business school," senior Adam Lohnes adds.

BusinessWeek based much of its statistical data on class size, starting median salary of recently graduated alumni [$46,500], and faculty/student ratio [29:5]. The survey also graded the quality of the school's students in categories such as average SAT [1186], ACT and average time spent on school work.

The magazine commented that it holds the sports management program in especially high regard, yet critiques, "internships outside of accounting and finance are difficult to find." Senior sports management major Eric Whisman agrees with this assessment.

"We get e-mails about internships, but most seem to be in finance. The sports management program is great, but it's hard to find internships or get valuable advising," Whisman says.

Undergraduate Dean Carol Barr says, "Our achievement represents a total team effort by an exceptionally talented and engaged faculty, staff and student body. Our undergraduates are exceptional both academically and as leaders in a vibrant learning community.

"The BusinessWeek survey is a welcome acknowledgement of the many things that we are doing well, but is also valuable because it gives us strategic information that will allow us to continue our quest for continuous improvement," Barr says.

COLLEGIAN

The Isenberg School of Management topped the list of northeastern public business schools and placed 58th in a nationwide poll.

UMPD utilizes Web sites to identify riot suspects

Photos, videos may lead to more arrests

By Eric Athas
Collegian Staff

January 29, 2007

After reviewing photos, video footage and student tips from last month's riot, the University of Massachusetts Police Department has identified about 70 more suspects, and 80 to 90 students total could be prosecuted in this case, according to police.

Ten students were arrested the night of the riot, five of which were later expelled. Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald said the investigation into the riot has led to more suspects.

"We have no intentions of stopping until we've identified every single rock thrower and every single person who is responsible for the damage," said Archbald.

A team of detectives and line officers have been investigating the Dec. 15 riot and about 70 more suspects have been identified, said Archbald. He said detectives used photos from networking Web sites Facebook.com and MySpace.com, and videos from YouTube.com, an online video Web site to identify suspects.

The Hampshire District Attorney's office is currently reviewing those cases, said Archbald.

The riot took place following the UMass football team's 28-17 loss to Appalachian State in the Division I National Championship in Chattanooga, Tenn. According to a police report, more than 1,800 students gathered onto the plaza of the Southwest residential area shortly after the game concluded around 11:10 p.m.

As police tried to control the mass of people, "many projectiles, including rocks, bottles, full beer cans, trash cans and other objects were intentionally thrown at police," states the report.

Eleven people were arrested, 10 of which were students, and five of those students were expelled from the University. Two officers were injured during the riot and several others reported bruising afterwards.

The report also stated a "projectile identified to be a one gallon container of liquid , believed to be water, was dropped from an upper floor of JQA on the west side of the quad." The projectile reportedly came within feet of hitting UMass Police Chief Barbara O'Connor.

Since that night, the UMPD has been using photos and video to identify more people involved in the riot. A mass e-mail was sent out to all UMass students on Dec. 18 seeking information regarding the riot.

The e-mail included a link to the UMPD's Web site, which posted

See RIOT on page 3

KATHLEEN A. MEZZA/COLLEGIAN

Over 1,800 students gathered in the Southwest residence area after the UMass football team lost the Division I National Championship game.

UMass to improve crisis preparedness

By Will McGuinness
Collegian Staff

April 19, 2007

As the events of Monday morning settle in, college students nationwide are fully beginning to comprehend the deaths of 33 of their own, and sympathize with the others affected by the shooting.

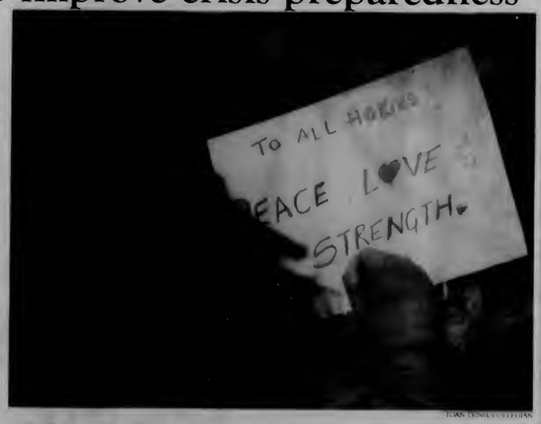
However, as the tragedy begins to sink into the American psyche, questions simultaneously arise as to how such an event could happen, and how, if possible, it could be prevented.

With a population of 25,000 enrolled students, Virginia Tech closely resembles the University of Massachusetts population, but UMass student -and Fairfax County, Virginia native - Emily Trayers feels the resemblance is deeper.

"Virginia Tech and UMass are similar; both are large state universities with and international student communites, and we are both comforted by the comfort of rolling hills," she said.

Trayers, a native of the same county as a large number of the Virginia Tech students, also said that "the

See VTECH on page 3



JOAN TENNYSON/COLLEGIAN

The Religious Affairs Committee and the Center for Student Development and Campus Life held a vigil for the victims of the Virginia Tech shooting that drew approximately 600 people to the Campus Center.

Former UM athlete threatens lawsuit

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

May 9, 2007

Former Massachusetts track and field star Jordan Veney sent a letter to the University of Massachusetts through her lawyer last week to appeal her recent removal from the team and the termination of her $20,000 scholarship.

Veney, an African-American, cited racial discrimination as the reason for her removal.

UMass women's track and field head coach Julie LaFreniere cut Veney from the team in November and took away her $20,000 partial scholarship, effective at the end of the semester.

Veney is asking the University for a $23,500 scholarship over the next two years of her enrollment, which covers the full scholarship that, according to the letter, Veney should have received for this last academic year. The demands letter informed the University that it has 10 days to respond to Veney's request before she will take legal action "against the University and the employees involved."

If the University complies and grants her the $23,500 scholarship for the next two years, Veney said she will return to UMass next year. If not, Veney will file a lawsuit against the University on the grounds of racism and discrimination.

On Monday, Veney will hold a press conference in conjunction with the Student Government Association (SGA) to shed more light on what she believes to be discriminatory treatment from the coaches of the women's track and field team, specifically LaFreniere. The press conference will be held at 3 p.m. in the Dukes Room of the Student Union.

"I've been aware of what's going on with the track team," said former SGA Student Trustee Mishy Leiblum, who organized the press conference. "There is a clear pattern of racial discrimination on the women's [track] team and it seems

See VENEY on page 3

MEAL PLAN NEWS

For Over 12 Years UMass Students Have Been Eating Off-Campus... And Loving Every Bite.

Off-Campus Meal Plan
By Dana Zucker

For over 12 years, the UMass born OCMP meal plan has virtually transformed campus dining, or should I say off-campus dining not only here, but nationwide. Since UMass Alumni David Diana started the Off-Campus Meal Plan over 11 years ago, it has been the primary form of payment off-campus for UMass and 5 college students alike.

The Off Campus Meal Plan (OCMP) card enables students to eat at area restaurants so they do not have to worry about having cash on hand. Parents do not have to worry about where their money is being spent. More than 60 Amherst Area restaurants are signed up with OCMP including the Antonio's Pizza, The Loose Goose Cafe, Panera, Chili's, Subway, Judie's, and Ben & Jerry's.

"When Tanya calls me up and asks for OCMP meals I am delighted. At least I know where my money is going"

New incoming freshman Greg, who is moving into the dorms this upcoming fall, said he would most likely use the OCMP card as a supplement to his on-campus meal plan. "It would be more convenient than having to bug my parents for money," Greg said. "It would be nice not having to carry around cash and plus, I occasionally eat out or order delivery." Greg added he was somewhat worried about his food options in the dorms. "I think I will like the dorm food, it seems pretty accommodating, but I know I will be venturing out in town a few times a week," Greg said.

Michael Hauke, the Director of Marketing and also a UMass graduate states that OCMP is not only convenient for students but also easy for parents. They know exactly where the money is being spent. "Students don't have to worry about not having enough cash on them or afraid to use the credit card too much. Its very easy to use...and there is the added bonus for students of receiving tons of discounts from restaurants." One mother of a former UMass student and OCMP card holder reports "When Tanya calls me up and asks for OCMP meals I am delighted. At least I know where my money is going, whether it is to Chili's or Judie's. I know Tanya is eating well, not partying or buying clothes." Vivian Sami, mother of Tanya a former UMass student.

Sophomore Mike Hersey said he uses the OCMP card to keep track of money easier. "Food gets real expensive and cooking ... takes too much time," Hersey said. "I get sick of eating a lot of the same things so it's cool to diversify what I eat."

[redacted]
[redacted]
aug 29 OCMP FALL PLAN BEGINS
[redacted]
sep 4 1st day of classes
[redacted]
dec 14 Last day of classes
[redacted]
dec 17 Final Exams Begin
[redacted]
dec 24 OCMP FALL PLAN ENDS

THE OFF-CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
Feeding UMass Students Since 1995

With Over 70 RESTAURANTS, you can eat what, when and where you want. For more than 11 years, OCMP has been the primary form of payment off-campus for UMass & 5 College Area Students.

To register for OCMP, please call 888-211-6267 or go online to www.OCMP.com.

Reminder!

OCMP begins taking orders for Fall Semester JUNE 1st. Please make note of this and call us if you have any additional questions.

Call or Visit 24/7

888.211.6267
OCMP.com

Former track star claims to be victim of discrimination

VENEY from page 1

like somewhat of a trend."

Two or three other athletes, including Erik Hoagland, a member of the men's team, will also speak about their experiences with discrimination in the program, Veney said.

Veney claims that other members of the track and field team, who can either attest to discriminatory treatment of others or have experienced discrimination in the track program, submitted comments to be read at the press conference on the condition of anonymity.

In the demands letter, Veney claims that LaFreniere "only exhibits her racism if and when her athletes of color refuse to kiss up to her."

Veney cites in the demands letter several other African-American teammates who received similar treatment, which "confirmed her suspicion" of LaFreniere being a racist.

The conflict stemmed from a soured relationship between Veney and LaFreniere, who declined comment through a University spokesperson. Athletic Director John McCutcheon also declined to comment for this story.

In a meeting between Veney, LaFreniere, assistant coach Mark Gottdenker, ombudsperson Catherine Porter and men's track and field coach Ken O'Brien in November of 2006, the terms for Veney's dismissal were outlined.

According to the demands letter that Melissa Loiodice, Veney's lawyer, wrote to Brian Burke, the Associate General Counsel for Chancellor John V Lombardi, LaFreniere cut Veney from the team because "she had a bad attitude from day one."

After that meeting, Veney immediately set up a meeting with McCutcheon to appeal her removal. According to the letter, McCutcheon stated "that he received an e-mail from Coach LaFreniere, and that he agreed with her. [McCutcheon] stated that Ms. Veney's scholarship would not be renewed and further refused to say why Ms. Veney was cut from the team when asked."

Veney said she began to feel discriminated against when the coaches began setting different rules for white athletes. Veney cited the contrast in the treatment between her and her throwing partner, Lisa Wilson, a white freshman.

Veney claims that Wilson received preferential treatment from her coaches - LaFreniere and Gottdenker - while LaFreniere chastised Veney for missing practices when she had class conflicts.

According to the letter, LaFreniere told Veney in the fall of 2006 that 4 p.m. practices - which were the standard for Veney throughout her freshman year and into her sophomore year - were no longer happening, and that Veney would be required to attend 2:30 p.m. practices.

According to Veney, LaFreniere told her she had to rework her schedule to attend 2:30 practices after hearing that Veney had class conflicts. However, Veney saw other athletes showing up for 4 p.m. practices, and immediately confronted LaFreniere, who told Veney that the 4 p.m. practices were cancelled for her and her alone, according to the letter.

Veney cites this treatment as part of a larger trend of discrimination from LaFreniere. After meetings between Veney and LaFreniere resulted in a change of Veney's class schedule to accommodate practice, Veney learned that Wilson, a fellow thrower, was not held to the same standards, and was even catered to by LaFreniere and Gottdenker, according to the letter.

While Veney wasn't allowed to practice at 4 p.m. and was forced to restructure her schedule to attend 2:30 p.m. practices, Gottdenker was more than flexible with Wilson and her practice times, according to Veney.

"This is outright discrimination. [Wilson] is a thrower just like me," Veney said. "I'm a sophomore. She's a freshman. My stats are higher. She's going out on Saturdays to throw the hammer and I'm not getting a phone call? It's ridiculous."

Veney was recruited out of high school by coach Bob Otrando, the conditioning coach for the football team and men's basketball team. Otrando also served as a part-time throwing coach for the women's track team.

Veney said she has a good relationship with Otrando, and they worked together during her freshman year until he was removed from his position as the throwing coach in summer 2006.

Otrando's removal, according to the demands letter, was a result of LaFreniere's personal vendetta against him. Veney believes she was caught in the middle of the "political mess."

Otrando declined to comment.

From that point on, Veney said, her relationship with LaFreniere was tense. She said the two began to argue over talk about her scholarship, which covered $20,000 of the $25,000 tuition.

"In April or May of 2005, Ms. Veney met with Coach LaFreniere," the demands letter reads. "At this meeting, Coach LaFreniere gave Ms. Veney a verbal commitment that if she did exceptionally well as a freshman, she would get a full scholarship her second year. With this in mind, Ms. Veney obtained a tutor and quickly raised her grade point average. Her distances kept rising, and she broke the University shot put record approximately five times . . . Based on this, and Coach LaFreniere's assurances, Ms. Veney decided to ask Coach LaFreniere how she could earn a full scholarship."

Upon hearing Veney's question, LaFreniere started asking questions like, "Why are you asking?" and "Are you only in this for the money? And if you are you shouldn't even be on the team," according to the letter.

Veney said that she explained her financial situation to LaFreniere and that she was willing to work hard to attain the extra funding.

"I can't afford to come here," Veney said. "My mom has the worst credit in the world. My grandmother is too old. It's either out of pocket or through loans."

During her freshman year, Veney set both the outdoor and indoor UMass shot put records. She ranks third all-time in the discus event and won the shot put and discus events twice during the 2005-06 outdoor season. The Atlantic 10 named Veney Co-Rookie of the Week on April 24, 2006, and she was awarded the UMass/Dinn Brothers Co-Athlete of the Week honor twice - the first time on Jan. 30, 2006, and the second on April 10. In the outdoor track season, Veney finished third in the shot put event and fifth in the hammer throw event at the Atlantic 10 Championships, and set the school record for the shot put twice during that stretch.

During the indoor track segment of the 2005-06 season, Veney set the school shot put record three times, breaking her own record twice. Veney thought she had performed well enough to earn the extra $5,000 that LaFreniere had promised in exchange for performing well during her freshman season, and she went to LaFreniere's office before the outdoor season to ask what she needed to do to get the $5,000 added to her $20,000 scholarship.

According to Veney, LaFreniere said if Veney qualified for the NCAA Tournament, then she would get the whole scholarship. There were two opportunities for Veney to qualify for the NCAA Tournament during the 2005-06 outdoor season, and she had three opportunities in three different events - the hammer throw, the discus and the shot put - to qualify.

The Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference Championships were held on March 4-5, 2006, and the New England Championships were held the weekend before. Both events were opportunities for Veney and other athletes to qualify for the NCAA Tournament through good performance. Veney qualified for the ECAC Championships but, according to the letter, LaFreniere didn't enter Veney into the event, citing a lack of coaches to drive her as the reason.

But Veney maintains that Otrando told her he would have signed her up and driven her to the ECAC Championships if he had known that LaFreniere wasn't going to sign her up.

The New England Championship was another opportunity for Veney to qualify for the NCAA Tournament and get the full scholarship. However, according to Veney, LaFreniere didn't let her go to the New England Championship because "she missed an academic meeting without informing anybody that she wasn't attending," the demands letter states. However, Veney had informed her academic advisor Tracy Drummond she would be missing her academic meeting, and she wanted to reschedule.

"Because of the unwarranted action and/or omissions of Coach LaFreniere, Ms. Veney, an African-American athlete, was kept from attending the New England meet, her last chance to qualify for the NCAA and to earn a full scholarship," the demands letter states. "Perhaps this is why Coach LaFreniere stopped Ms. Veney from attending."

Veney states in the demands letter that another African-American athlete, Elisabeth Budd, received similar treatment from LaFreniere, who, according to the letter, withheld Budd's compliance papers for the New England Championships until it was too late to file them. Repeated efforts to contact Budd were unsuccessful.

However, there are several athletes on the women's track and field team who claim they have not received any discriminatory treatment from LaFreniere.

Kendra Leighton, a junior sprinter and a woman of color said, "I have not received any discriminatory treatment nor do I know anyone who has." Sophomore sprinter Dionise Miranda, also a woman of color, had similar remarks.

"I have not received any discriminatory treatment from my coaches nor do I have any recollection of anybody receiving such," Miranda said.

Veney, however, was admittedly frustrated with what she perceived as unfair treatment from LaFreniere. Veney had set UMass records in the shot put and the discus, but she was still going to miss out on the rest of the scholarship because of what she perceived as LaFreniere's discrimination and sabotage.

"When they cut me from the team they said I was making no progress," she said. "You say I made no progress? What else do you want me to do? Do you want me to stand on my head and throw at the same time? Do you want me to jump up and down? Please, tell me."

Photos, video may lead to arrests

RIOT from page 1

photos of the riot. Below the photos read the caption, "If you recognize anyone from the following images or have information about the Southwest disturbance, please contact the University Police."

Archbald said many students came forward to police with photos and videos. He said students took photos using their cell phones and later handed the photos over to police.

"I think there is a pretty good sized contingent of students out there who are very upset about the damage that was done that night," said Archbald.

Students also copied photos from Facebook.com and MySpace.com and offered those up to police, said Archbald.

Last summer, 325 new security cameras were placed around campus and in all residence halls. Archbald said video from those cameras, along with student interviews, have helped in the investigation.

He said the large size of the Southwest area of campus, coupled with the amount of people involved, forced police to review video footage in the month following the riot.

"They've been a valuable tool for us in this particular investigation, because we only made the 10 arrests that night, that's all we identified," he said. "The footage that we've been able to take in terms of tracking a particular suspect from one area of Southwest to another, we've been using all the technological resources we have at our disposal."

Although Archbald said the investigation has been successful so far, he noted that it put a strain on the UMass Police Department during the normally easygoing month of January.

"It's really drained our resources," he said. "In a normally quiet January, we have been working extremely hard."

During the riot, sections of the campus were damaged. Over 100 windows were broken, and the University had to account for roughly $100,000 in damage. A dumpster was thrown into bushes, rocks and chairs were thrown at windows and the area was littered with garbage.

"There's no doubt in my mind that the vast majority of students here value their education, and take pride in the University, and they see the damage that's devaluing their diploma," said Archbald. "Taking pride in damaging something that many people are working towards building up is a phenomenon that I can't understand."

The use of cameras to catch suspects has been a common method of investigation in the past, said Archbald, but this case required it more than ever. He said the use of technology is prevalent around the country.

"Whether it's at the mall or the bank, or a public way in a downtown city, quite a bit is recorded now," said Archbald. "We're just a microcosm of what is happening nationally, where technology is helping law enforcement in many ways."

UM to improve crisis prevention

VTECH from page 1

healing process for V-Tech students has already begun."

In light of the shootings and the parallels of Virginia Tech and UMass, UMass Director of Environmental Health and Safety and Special Assistant to the Vice Chancellor of A&F for Emergency Preparedness, Donald Robinson, commented on UMass' ability to respond to a shooting of that magnitude.

"The role of the EOC is to support the response to any incident," Robinson said. "This is referred to as an all-hazards approach.

"From the EOC we should have access to all communication modalities on campus," he added. "We are continuing to review and improve the communication systems and will closely monitor the VT situation to see if there are additional areas for us to improve upon."

Trayers reflected, "Terrorism and random violence know no race, no gender and no generation."

When asked about UMass' plan against something of this enormity, Robinson said, "We have spent considerable time on the issue of emergency preparedness."

He stressed the importance of informing the students as quickly as possible if such an occurrence should arise.

UMPD Chief of Police Barbara O'Connor said of the University Police officers' ability to react to the situation, "UMass police are trained in responding to active shooter situations, we have a plan and proper equipment as well as a full scale disaster plan. That said, as an open campus, we can plan, prepare and work towards prevention, but no one can guarantee complete security."

Deputy Chief of Police Patrick Archbald added, "if a person intends to do harm to themselves or someone else [be it one or in the case of VT, many others] and it's not brought to the attention of authorities before the harm is carried out, this is impossible for us to intervene to prevent the harm. Once the harmful act is being carried out our efforts at UMPD are then fully directed on minimizing and stopping the harm."

"To inform people on the scale that we are discussing here, one must use technology to be effective and timely," he added. "E-mail is, of course, the most likely method of notification. The use of dorm phones is not a good use of time/effort. Many students do not have their dorm phones set up. Each police cruiser is equipped with a public address system. This is a device that could be used if needed."

While the country may attempt to point a finger, Trayer said that "they [Virginians] are more interested in finding meaning, then finding blame.

"I have a renewed affection and appreciation to my home state," Trayer said that everyone she knows is safe and OK. Speaking largely on the issues of their luck and the incident's affect on the nation, she declared, "We recognize that although this tragedy occurred in Virginia, it has a universal pain. If there is a lesson we can learn from this horror, perhaps it is to live our lives with greater purpose. We just cannot walk away from this next week, when the media coverage ends. We have to remember how vulnerable we are and how precious our lives are. Today I am a Virginian, as we all are."

"Events such as those at Virginia Tech touch all of us in higher education and remind us of the vulnerabilities that are present on any campus," said UMass Chancellor John V. Lombardi in a statement released yesterday.

"Although we have been spared the direct impact of this tragedy, we can nonetheless share in the pain of loss experienced by our colleagues at Virginia Tech," Lombardi added.

Welcome Students!

Delivery: 413.549.0077
Telephone: 413.256.8923 413.256.8924
Fax: 413.253.1173

Panda East
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine

Featuring:
- Vegetarian Options
- Lunch Specials
- Sushi Bar
- "Light and Healthy" entrees

~ The best of both worlds~
10% discount with student ID cash purchases only

Monday - Thursday: 11:30am - 10:00pm
Friday & Saturday: 11:00am - 11:00pm
Sunday: 12:00pm - 10:00pm

The Off-Campus Meal Plan
We Proudly Accept OCMP
888-211-6267 - www.OCMP.com

Visit us at: www.pandaeastamherst.com
103 North Pleasant Street Amherst, MA

Welcome to Award Winning
UMass Dining Services. We are expecting you.

DINING COMMONS
Worcester, Franklin, Hampshire, Hampden and Berkshire

CAMPUS CENTER STUDENT UNION COMPLEX & CENTRAL ORIENT

CAFES AND CONVENIENCE STORES

State of the Art Berkshire Dining Commons
Continuous dining from 7am to midnight*
Grab 'n Go and Breakfast-on-the-Run
Create your own stir fry and noodle bowl stations
Many healthy options including vegetarian and vegan.
Theme specials including Restaurant Night and Taste of UMass
Premium nights with Steak & Lobster
All-you-care-to-eat Sushi and Dim Sum Brunch Kosher Dining
Five College Meal Exchange Program
Free nutritional consultation with our registered licensed dietitian
* Monday-Thursday at Berkshire

Bluewall Eatery
Bluewall Café
Marketplace Café
Starbuck's Cart
Hatch Food Court
Outdoor Concessions
Mullins Center Concessions

Pita Pit at Worcester
Southwest Café
Whitmore Café
Physical Plant Café
Worcester C Store
Franklin C Store
Hampden C Store
Mini Store at the Student Union
Hertter Hall
Library Coffee Kiosk – Procrastination Station
Thompson Hall Coffee Kiosk

Be A Local Hero
Seafood WATCH
2007 Loyal E. Horton Awards First Place – Menu Concept
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
YCMP

umass.edu/diningservices

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

SUMMER, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." -Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Making the 'right' decision

Ben Duffy

The easiest way to tell the difference between a liberal and a leftist is that a liberal cheers against his country only when a Republican is in the White House, while a leftist cheers against his country all of the time.

Take the 1999 Kosovo War, for example. If you'll remember correctly, the man in the White House at the time was Bill Clinton, a man who liberals believed could do no wrong. The Clinton State Department was unable to rally the UN Security Council to support the operation, so Clinton simply went ahead with it over international objections. The veto-wielding Russian Federation would have squashed any such mission to Kosovo if it had been given the chance, and it continued to protest the operation until its end.

If you believe that all military actions must be explicitly sanctioned by the almighty United Nations, you'd have to conclude that the Kosovo War was illegal under international law. So if the war in Kosovo was illegal, does that make Clinton and his administration "war criminals?" If you ask a liberal that question, he will say no. Ask a leftist, and he will say yes.

Therein lays the difference between a liberal and a leftist. Liberals are constantly contradicting themselves, and it's quite easy to prove that they lack any true principles. Their appraisal of any particular action hinges on who's doing it. The good guys (Democrats) are always right, and the bad guys (Republicans) are always wrong. Simply change the party in power, and liberals will change their minds on just about everything.

Leftists on the other hand, are a lot more consistent. They're consistently wrong, venomous, anti-American and misguided, but at least they're consistent. No matter who is in power, you can expect the leftists to take to the streets denouncing this guy or that guy as a "war criminal."

Liberals did not seem bothered by the lack of a UN mandate in 1999. By 2002 however, the approval of the UN was deemed absolutely imperative

Liberals did not seem bothered by the lack of a UN mandate in 1999. By 2002, however, the approval of the UN was deemed absolutely imperative. President Bush went to the UN and pleaded his case to a corrupt international body. He finally secured UN Resolution 1441 with the unanimous consent of all 15 nations in the UN's governing Security Council. It clearly stated that Iraq was in material breach of its 1991 ceasefire, as well as 16 subsequent resolutions, and that Iraq had one final chance to come clean with UN inspectors. Iraq failed to do so.

Suddenly, some UN member states got cold feet. They had seemed so forceful with their ridiculous 17th resolution. But when you've cried wolf 16 times, people like Saddam Hussein don't take you seriously anymore.

That's doubly true when Saddam has key members of the UN and UN member states on his payroll through the Oil-for-Food Program. While all opposition member states claimed that they were against the war on principle, there is ample evidence that the real reason they wanted the dictator in power was because of monetary interests related to oil and weapons trading. The opposition members of the UN Security Council didn't oppose the war because Saddam lacked weapons of mass destruction but because they were on his payroll. In any case, 500 WMDs have been found in Iraq since 2003.

Bush went ahead with the war anyway. Was it illegal? Perhaps, but I don't really care. I oppose any attempt to turn over our national sovereignty to the UN, especially in its current state. If the Iraq War has proven anything, it's the incompetence and corruption of that international body. They were wrong about Kosovo, and they were wrong about Iraq. In both cases, disreputable member states such as Russia, China and France tried their best to shelter the despots Milosevic and Saddam. Study the history of the UN for awhile and you'll find that sheltering despots is what they do best.

I sometimes wonder if this entire mess in Iraq could have been prevented if Saddam had actually believed that the UN meant business. What if the UN had acted after the first resolution? What if they hadn't taken bribes? Could this have been resolved peacefully?

For all of you liberals out there who say that this war in Iraq is illegal, I say go arrest Bill Clinton. Arrest Wesley Clark, the supreme NATO commander in Kosovo and hero of the Democratic Party's left-wing. Once they're being taken away in handcuffs, we can discuss what to do with Bush and Rumsfeld. And to all of you leftists who say the same thing, I would say that the legality of the war is debatable, even if it is an incredibly stupid debate. The important point is not whether we did the legal thing, but whether we did the right thing.

Lack of a UN mandate may make a war "illegal," but it doesn't make it unjust, and it certainly doesn't mean that the war lacks the "unique legitimacy" that Kofi Annan is always talking about. The "unique legitimacy" we seek can never be procured from a body as illegitimate as the UN.

DO YOU LIKE TO DRAW COMICS?

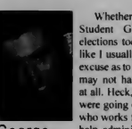
WE ARE LOOKING FOR YOU!

THE COLLEGIAN NEEDS EDITORIAL COMIC ARTISTS FOR NEXT SEMESTER!

GET YOUR ARTWORK PUBLISHED!

Send an email to editorial@dailycollegian.com

Low turnout, low expectations



George Kennedy

Whether you knew it or not, Student Government Association elections took place last week. You, like I usually do, probably had some excuse as to why you didn't vote. You may not have even had any excuse at all. Heck, I didn't even know they were going on until a friend of mine, who works for the SGA, asked me to help administrate one of the voting booths.

Let me first say for the purposes of dispelling any spin that I am not affiliated with the student government and my allegiance lies with no candidate. From this position, I have made some observations.

Most specifically was the incredibly low number of voters. We had to be reminded by election officials to encourage people to vote because if less than five percent of the student body voted, the elections would lose their official legitimacy.

To make matters worse, one of the candidates intended to detract from the legitimacy of the election itself. The other election administrator and I had been warned that a voter was trying to gain access to a ballot without a UCard and was trying to take a picture of this act. Sure enough, after not too long a voter came in saying she didn't have her UCard but wanted to vote, at which point she was told to come back when she had her UCard. Right behind her was a man taking pictures with his camera-phone. These people were believed to be associated with one of the candidates and were trying to illegitimize the election.

To those students involved with this little sting operation: Get a life! Who are you, the Hardy Boys?

Chancellor of Elections Sarah Morgan could not comment due to an ongoing investigation of the culprits.

To those students involved with this little sting operation: Get a life! Who are you, the Hardy Boys? This isn't a Nancy Drew mystery; it's an election, one that these individuals were trying to devilify and, by doing so, probably hurt their candidate's chances of winning. How does one win an election that isn't even considered legitimate? It's kind of hard. Election numbers on campus are so low now that doing something like trying to discredit the legitimacy of the election itself cannot help those candidates associated with those trying to discredit it. Perhaps even less people would vote if they heard allegations of voter-fraud and numbers would slip below that dangerous five percent.

This begs the larger question: Why don't students vote in SGA elections? There is the common reason that is given that most of the student body just doesn't care about the SGA. Why don't students care? Is it because the SGA has little power to truly affect things that are important to the student body? The SGA does not have the authority to cut down the number of police present on campus or have a say on spending decisions (like subsidizing some of our textbooks instead of buying an undercover police Dodge Charger). Does the SGA not have the power to affect the decisions because of the nature of the SGA? Perhaps because we do not vote and SGA represents so few of the student body (14 percent in this election), the school administration takes their actions and demands with a grain of salt.

Perhaps it is also because candidates run on platforms that have nothing to do with the formative powers of the SGA. Matt Giancola ran on the platform that UMass must divest from Darfur and the genocide in Sudan. It is an atrocity that the United States has not done more to try and address this issue, but for an SGA presidential candidate to run on this platform is just another reason why students don't vote. I am opposed to the genocide, but I also know that if you are running for a political position you talk about what you can do, what you can affect. What you do not do is play on people's emotions and run on something that people feel adamant about.

Of course people are against genocide. Is Giancola's competition going to say: "Well, on the other hand I support genocide, the voters demand a choice!"? This platform is foolish because you are running on the platform of something you can do nothing about. Not because you do not want to, but because in this position, you cannot. No physical action was offered as a way to do anything about the genocide. Giancola should have come out and said if he were SGA president he would have fundraisers to send money to groups that actually play an international role in trying to help the people of Darfur. That would have been acceptable. Either way, you have to be able make a claim and keep your word.

In order to get students voting again, you have to give them results. It is OK to start small, as long as it is something to keep your word on.

Take the dining halls, for instance. The school has done a great job with the newly renovated Berkshire Dining Commons, but it seems like you can never find a fork when you need it. If a candidate ran on the platform that he would make sure there were always forks at the DC, even if he/she personally restocked the fork trays his/herself, they would have done a simple yet profound thing. They would have run on the platform of what had the power to control, made a claim and followed through on that claim.

The wicked Wikipedia

Andrew Freeman

Last semester I wrote a brief paper on the subject of technological determinism for a science history class. As this concept was completely unfamiliar to me, I went to the free online encyclopedia, Wikipedia, for a definition. I was subsequently admonished by the TA and warned on the unreliability of that Web site. Such experiences are growing more common, contributing to debate over Wikipedia.

Wikipedia is the chief project of the non-profit Wikimedia foundation. This organization has the goal of "providing free knowledge to every person in the world," according to one of its documents. Much of its work is performed by volunteers, and it relies primarily on donations to operate, collecting $1.3 million last year alone. Other projects include a dictionary, library and curriculum materials, all freely available online.

Wikipedia allows users to write and edit articles on any subject. This has resulted in an amazing proliferation of information, far more diffuse than any print encyclopedia. However, the ease with which individuals can change entries creates the potential for abuse. Inaccurate information can be inserted into an article, turning it into a vehicle for misinformation or propaganda.

Recently, the history department of Middlebury College banned students from citing Wikipedia as a source in papers. This decision, reported in The New York Times, was prompted by a professor of Japanese history whose students wrote erroneously about the Shimabara Rebellion on an exam. They overstated the role of Jesuits in this incident, based on faulty information on Wikipedia.

The issue of historical accuracy on Wikipedia is particularly contentious, since history often plays an important role in modern political debates. Two years ago, one of my history professors introduced the subject of Wahhabism, an Islamic movement, by having us read the Wikipedia entry for it. Subsequent readings and lectures revealed that most of the article was incorrect – it misrepresented the beliefs espoused by Wahhabis. These errors are significant because Wahhabism is often incorrectly blamed for Islamic terrorism.

The internet is full of disinformation and propaganda, which infiltrates sites like Wikipedia.

Wikipedia has methods for combating inaccuracy. Users can discuss changes to articles on the Web site's forums, report vandalism or abuse or correct errors themselves. Over a thousand entries are semi-protected, meaning that they cannot be edited except by registered users.

A system of rules, enforced by users and administrators, govern the site. The most important is that articles should been written from a neutral point of view, focusing upon facts for which there is consensus. Debates over an issue should be presented, but should not be the main focus of the entry. Moreover, articles should be based on sources, whether online or in print, allowing for verification of claims.

There is a conscious effort to improve Wikipedia. Some articles are tagged, requesting that an expert revise them, such as the entry for the Shimabara Rebellion. Considering the democratic nature of the Web site, the call for expert assistance is ironic.

Wikipedia represents the Internet's potential for the democratization of knowledge. Information, rather than being a restricted, proprietary commodity held by elites, becomes free and widely accessible. The whole notion of the "expert" falls into question, as anyone with a computer can cultivate specialized knowledge and disseminate it to millions. With thousands of contributors revising each others' work, the community can collectively perfect information, thereby advancing a more accurate understanding of the world.

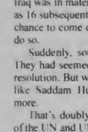
In practice, this theory falls apart. The Internet is full of disinformation and propaganda, which infiltrates sites like Wikipedia. Moreover, many specialized concepts are not discussed or not analyzed in detail, while there is a profusion of pop culture and pornography. Information becomes a sprawling mass, and parsing the useful from the useless requires a hierarchy – it requires experts.

For this reason, the Internet does not yet pose an existential threat to academia. Academics are respected as sources and their works are cited in Wikipedia. They are even called on to contribute.

In fairness, one finds some of the same problems in a university as on Wikipedia. Vandals deface books or bathrooms here, just as they attack articles online. There can be disinformation in lectures and textbooks, and conspiracy theories abound. I received an email last week about professors who suspected the government was complicit in Sept. 11th.

No institution can credibly claim a monopoly on the truth, because truth is an ideal, one that can never be achieved in totality and one that people often deviate from. In the future, Wikipedia may become as reliable as academic journals, and it is certainly affecting our lives in the present. Technological determinism, by the way, is the belief that technology, on its own, can change society, and Wikipedia provides an excellent example of this.

America's next top President



Debbie Friedman

In today's day in age, you pretty much have to be a Kajillionaire to run for President. In fact, the title, "President of the United States of America," is now more like a commodity that is sold to the highest bidder than an honor bestowed on the most deserving and qualified individual.

As a result, the majority of citizens are held back from running, while the most privileged members are given even more advantage than they already have. This goes for any political office, but is the most apparent on the Presidential level.

Clearly, it is a real problem because when we allow money to run the show – we limit our choice in candidates and create a race that must begin over two years before ballots are even cast.

If running for president was not such a fundraiser, candidates would be more diverse, and the race would be made shorter, limiting the ridiculous drawn out hysteria that swarms around the contest.

Unfortunately, most people don't believe there is anything we can do to alleviate this problem. After all, money runs most things, and there is no way to change the way capitalism influences the democratic process. Others say we should have stricter campaign financing reform laws, but it isn't likely that reform will get much accomplished. And a few point to the system in Britain as a solution, where regulations and campaign terms are much more limited than here.

But I say, let's do something really radical. Let's take away the money, suits, press conferences and debates and start a competition. It's time to transform the Race for the Presidency into a literal competition where contenders battle for the hearts and minds of the American people. Picture the Amazing Race meets Who Wants to Be a Millionaire. Combine that with Fear Factor, and fuse it all together with Dancing for the Stars. I'm talking the competition to end all competitions, where candidates compete over an eight week period in all the events Americans want to see – from swing dancing and eating cow tongue, to answering trivia and racing around desolate parts of the world. It could have some jazzy title like "Who Wants to Run the Free World?" and air on C-Span, since they could definitely use a ratings boost.

The Presidential election is already one big popularity contest, so I think hosting the campaigns in a reality game show format makes more sense. It would allow candidates to really wow Americans by showcasing their hidden talents and totaled at the end of the competition. That number would serve as way to identify front-runners of the race, but Americans would still have the final say in casting their votes for President.

The Presidential election is already one big popularity contest, so I think hosting the campaigns in a reality game show format makes more sense.

It's time to give up the dream of having a population who actually cares about political issues greatly affecting their lives. That just isn't going to happen. So instead of everyone wasting their time and money, let's hand presidential politics over to the genius minds in reality television. All that would be required is a quick little revision to the constitution and a Nielsen ratings test to make sure the show would be profitable to advertisers (though I have no doubt that it would be a huge attention grabber).

I also have no doubt that if our electoral process was transformed into this competition, voter turn out would soar-especially if we allowed voters to cast their ballots via text message, like they do on American Idol. And the more people involved in the democratic process, the better our democracy will be. Therefore, we should do whatever it takes to get people to the polls, even if it means reducing the Presidential election down to a gratuitous event that has no political substance whatsoever.

I realize people are going to think I'm completely insane for suggesting that the respectable election for President of the United States of American take shape in such a bizarre, tacky and ridiculous manner. But to those critics I say, presidential politics is already bizarre, tacky and completely ridiculous. So, why not at least make it fun to watch?

physical strengths, instead of blabbering on about political visions and throwing around big words in their incredibly long speeches. Honestly, most Americans don't care what Barak Obama plans to do with social security, but they'd love to see how many Japanese beetles he could fit into his mouth. Americans would also rather watch McCain and Hillary go at it in an inflatable jousting ring than hear their empty promises about improving healthcare.

And instead of hearing candidates go on and on about how they are going to find some miraculous solution to the mess in Iraq, we could find out who knows the most about '80s pop culture trivia or see who does the best mambo. After each contest, a panel of celebrity judges could award the candidates a score, which would then be

WRITE FOR THE COLLEGIAN!

The Daily Collegian will be hiring staff writers and columnists for the fall semester.

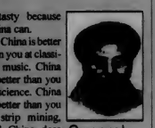
Request an application: editorial@dailycollegian.com

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Forget ab out Russia, this is the real deal.

Oh China, my China



General Tso

I bet you think you're pretty clever, Western Civilization. I bet you think you're the tops, the end result of thousands of years of forward-moving innovation in science and technology and that you've come to where you are through plague, through war and through natural disaster, retaining your dignity to the end. Well, sure, whatever. China did it first.

A navy of unforeseen power able to patrol the high seas and search the corners of the Earth? Good idea, 16th century Europe. China did it first.

An innovative printing device, sure to revolutionize the world of thought and the power of the written word? Wowza, Gutenberg, you're a real genius. China did it first.

Gunpowder? Did you say gunpowder, Sir Roger Bacon? How clever of you. Go kill some people. China did it first. China always does it first.

I don't think I've made my point clear. Yes, China does it first, but more importantly, China does it big. America must think it's on top of it all, with its picture-perfect Hoover Dam in its precious Grand Canyon, but America couldn't even forever destroy one of the Earth's greatest treasures if it tried. When China builds a dam, China does it big and China does it wherever China wants. China will not think twice about displacing you. When China speaks, you listen.

George W. Bush probably thinks he's pretty smart, with his plans for enclosing an entire border by way of an unprecedented system of fencing, but he's got nothing on China. China laughs at Bush, and China laughs at his pitiful fence. China did it first, China did it better and China did it with hard labor and bricks. China does what it wants, when it wants. China controls the weather.

This Is not a joke. Al Gore is not so clever after all. He is worried about global warming. Do not worry about global warming. China has it covered. When the time comes, China will displace thousands of its own people and destroy vast quantities of unexplored archaeological sites in order to construct an air conditioner of epic proportions. It will be visible from space. China is visible from space. If China wanted to not be visible from space, China would take care of it. China is fully capable of pitching a tent.

Kyoto Protocol? China does not need your protocol. China invented the paper that you wrote it on.

You may think that I am being ridiculous, or that I am exaggerating the strange tendencies of a nation both absolutist and populist whose long dynastic legacy has led to the institutionalization of social and economic policies that reveal both a reverence and distrust for its people? This is not the case. China is awesome. China does it first, China does it bigger and China does it better.

I repeat: China does it better. When China comes to your country to play basketball, China is taller than you and China wins. When China decides to export its traditional foodstuffs to the world market in a greasier, dumbed-down form, China does it without a brand name. China doesn't need a 30-foot sign, and China doesn't need a drive through. China doesn't need a military-level satellite computer program to best locate its stores, because China knows that you want that food. China made it tasty just for you, but not really. China made it tasty because China can.

China is better than you at classical music. China is better than you at science. China is better than you at strip mining, and China does not care what you think. Kyoto Protocol? China does not need your protocol. China invented the paper that you wrote it on. When China writes its own protocol, you will know, because China's protocol will be visible from space.

China is also better than you at protesting. When knowledgeable Americans run around in roll-necked sweaters shaking daisies in the barrels of guns, China stands in front of a tank. China is epic. Deal with it.

You might hear people say that China is a threat to you, or that China isn't a threat to you, or that China is somehow the perfect foil to your Western way of life and a constant reminder of what else is possible on our fair Earth. Let me be the first to tell you – they are wrong. Have they ever built a wall? Can they dunk without jumping? Have they ever invented anything in their life? No, they haven't. They don't know China.

If they did, they would tell you that this is not an issue of two inevitably opposed historical ideologies growing more and more similar until the line between them becomes a blur. They would tell you that this is not about two nations of equal power and potential, each representing what psychologists and novelists alike have both identified as the irreconcilable virtues of individualism and the social life. If it were about that, we would know. But China already thought that stuff, and China could care less.

America. America.

Colonel Sanders

These days, everyone seems to be caught up in a big fuss about China. As a warm-blooded American, there is no way to avoid all that Liberal chatter of "People's Republic" this and "New Superpower" that. Well now's the time to set the record straight. Yes, it's true that China's getting stronger, and yes, it's true that it's good at Ping Pong, but this doesn't mean that there's nothing this great nation can do about it. Overcoming these communists is well within our reach.

Despite what "experts" will tell you, this is not a complex, multilayered issue cemented in years of economic development and social change. This is about believing in the US of A and saluting the flag. This is about standing over the anti-capitalists. This is about America. America.

You may think that I just wrote America too many times, but I didn't. The truth is, you just didn't read it right. America. Say America like you are overcoming an obstacle, and if you still don't get it, then say it three times to yourself. It's somewhere between a powerful whisper and an intimidating growl. Okay, now we're on the same page. America.

See, to say no to China, all you have to do is love this country as much as Chevrolet does. No spin here, China is starting to one-up us left and right. They're taking all the great things this country is known for, and pretending like they're better at it. For starters, nobody is better at capitalism than we are – after all, this nation invented it. America.

If that doesn't convince you, then how about some fact: everyone else bases their currency on the dollar bill. The Chinese yuan isn't even worth a fifth of the dollar. That means more Chinese goods for us, and only dollars for them. How does that trade deficit feel China? Answer: not too good. China thinks it's so great with their yuan, but all it does is make America actually yawn. See how America makes puns with Chinese legal tender? America.

Our pessimistic citizens seriously need to stop worrying, seriously. With a few simple changes, America can make sure it stays on top.

Our pessimistic citizens seriously need to stop worrying, seriously. With a few simple changes, America can make sure it stays on top. First, America needs to add some floors to the Sears Tower. Number two, and most important, is calling dibs on the moon. You can bet your bottom dollar that China is scheming for it. Sure, claiming the moon is going to mean more deficit spending to get colonies started up, but deficit spending is what makes this great nation great. All America has to do is make sure America doesn't sell it's debt to China anymore and America will be all set. America.

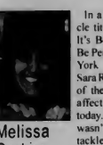
There's no better way to accelerate American values upward than to strap them to a rocket. We'll rename the moon the second sweetest name ever, America II. America II will be even freer than America (if that's even possible) because we won't have to obey Earth's laws of gravity. America doesn't even need gravity. America.

If you're still not convinced, then take a look at history. China historically runs around the historical Dynastic Cycle. China seems so great for a while, and then eventually gets big-headed. Thinking they're the center of the world, they begin to decay and fall to ruin. China is the only country where this phenomenon has ever occurred, ever. The signs of the end of the Dynastic Cycle are easy to spot: There is some environmental disaster, along with a poor leader and usually some civil unrest. All we Americans have to do is keep our eyes on China and wait for the omens. America.

Say no to China, because saying no to China is saying yes to yourself and yes to America. This country needs cynics about as much as we need fast trains. We don't need them, China does. America.

If you're reading this now and still can't say no to China, then you're probably mute. Get that checked in a hospital, but make sure you're not in China trying to find a hospital, because China's really big. America.

An off target article



Melissa Garber

In a front page article titled, "For Girls, It's Be Yourself, and Be Perfect Too," New York Times writer Sara Rimer struck one of the biggest issues affecting education today. Perhaps Rimer wasn't intending to tackle anything in her puff piece about the plight of wealthy attractive girls, but it was hard to ignore the underlying issue – the role economics plays in the disparity between our nation's public schools.

In Dec. 2005, Congress cut $13.7 billion from education spending, marking the first time in decades such a cut has been made on education. Now more than ever, public schools around the country are routinely being under-funded and understaffed.

Yet for the girls profiled in Rimer's piece, who attend the affluent Newton North High School, these budget issues are unheard of. Just six miles west of Boston, Newton is a wealthy suburb where the median house price is $730,000 – in this community, it's fairly safe to say that typical education concerns fall under a much different genre.

Some girls don't even have the means to take the SAT's more than once much less spend hundreds on tutoring.

The trials and tribulations of Newton North senior Esther Mobley are the centerpiece of Rimer's article. Rimer's writes that Mobley is: "a standout in Advanced Placement Latin and honors philosophy/literature who can expound on the beauty of the subjunctive mood in Catullus and on Kierkegaard's existential choices. A writer whose junior thesis for Advanced Placement history won Newton North's top prize. An actress. President of her church youth group."

What Mobley isn't, she explains, is an athlete, which apparently is her biggest setback.

Rimer notes that girls like Mobley, "struggle to navigate the conflicting messages they have been absorbing, if not from their parents then from the culture, since elementary school. The first message: Bring home A's. Do everything. Get into a top college – which doesn't have to be in the Ivy League, or one of the other elites like Williams, Tufts or Bowdoin, but should be a 'name' school," and, "The second message: Be yourself. Have fun. Don't work too hard."

For girls in the rest of the country, the story is much different. Instead, many are juggling school work with jobs, substandard public education facilities, a turbulent home life, lack of parental support, and if accepted how to pay for the rising costs of college tuition – for them, this is the norm.

While Mobley can decide against taking a SAT prep course because as she explains, "Why do I deserve a leg up?" Some girls don't even have the means to take the SAT's more than once much less spend hundreds on tutoring.

But the girls at Newton North are not the norm. In fact, in Rimer's piece they are labeled "amazing girls," the criteria being that they are smart, well-rounded and as Kat Jiang, one of Mobley's peers noted in the piece, "effortlessly hot."

Jiang disturbingly explained, "It's out of style to admit it, but it is more important to be hot than smart."

While the pressure is on at Newton North to be an "amazing girl," for the rest of the country life gets more complicated than looking good and getting accepted into an Ivy or equally as good a private school.

With America having the widest gap between the rich and poor in the industrialized world, it's hard to imagine how an article detailing the struggles of the upper class is relevant.

Five hundred and thirty-two words are spent describing Mobley's relationship status, single thanks to the advice of mom, Grey's anatomy character Cristina, who Mobley explains, "when she's taking off her scrubs, she's always wearing cute lingerie," and fashion – True Religion jeans are what's trendy at Newton North, according to Mobley.

Rimer's approach to her subjects is superficial and her article isolating. She addresses the "profound anxiety in the young people, but perhaps even more so in their parents, about the ability of the next generation to afford to raise their families in a place like Newton."

But according to the U.S. Census, the real median household income in America in 2005 was $46,326. Meaning the average American could not even afford to live in Newton, and it's doubtful their children's biggest concern will be affording to live in a place like Newton as adults.

There are thousands of high schools through out the country, with thousands of seniors preparing for college. Why Newton North? Why Esther Mobley? How is a wealthy pretty girls' teen angst newsworthy?

Where is the story explaining that in America, Newton North is the exception in public education? There certainly is a story at Newton North, but it is not in the struggles of the privileged.

Refuting the RIAA

Michael Dennis

With the recent announcement that the Recording Industry Association of America has issued a new wave of letters to college campuses across the country, fear was stricken into the hearts of students everywhere. After all, it's been postulated by survey after survey that the majority of undergrads download, so one could assume that a lot of individuals have put themselves in harm's way. On the surface, file sharing appears to be a classic case of "everybody else is doing it, so why shouldn't I?" This may be true in a lot of ways; admittedly, it's easier to explain away your musical law-bending when you can confidently turn to the person next to you and chat it up about your favorite torrent tracker.

But dig a little deeper and the downloading phenomenon starts looking more and more like a technological sea change, one led by a new generation that's grown tired of the old way of doing things. That old way is perpetuated by the aforementioned RIAA, the much maligned grandpappy of the music scene.

The recording industry remains the only industry that continuously pursues legal action against its own consumers, which would lead one to wonder if there will be anyone left to buy its products after the dust has settled. It labels downloaders as thieves and categorizes downloading as stealing. It takes a general drop in total sales, which could potentially be attributed to anything from a declining economy to a constant rise in CD prices, and haphazardly and defiantly insists that it's due to illicit downloads (with nary a relevant statistic to back it all up).

And it uses the "struggling artist" image to front the moral battle against file sharing, despite the fact that – as a result of a brutally draconian business model – no one is responsible for starving more artists than record companies. But in spite of its shoddy logic and lack of reasoned arguments, the RIAA has successfully managed to put downloaders on the defensive through the use of sheer aggression and crafty rhetoric.

But, believe it or not, there are credible and relatively neutral individuals out there who have managed to systematically dismantle the RIAA's claims. In 2004, Felix Oberholzer-Gee of the Harvard Business School and Koleman S. Strumpf of the University of North Carolina conducted a detailed analysis of the file sharing phenomenon, which still stands as perhaps the most well-known study on the subject thus far. Over a period of time, they studied what they claim to be "a dataset containing 0.01 percent of the world's downloads" and compared this data directly to music sales records in the United States over the same period of time, in order to test the theory (put forth by record companies) that file sharing directly impacts record sales in a negative fashion.

There are credible and relatively neutral individuals out there who have managed to systematically dismantle the RIAA's claims.

They conducted a thorough empirical analysis using a painstakingly complex set of mathematical formulas and data – in other words, this wasn't your everyday straw poll of 20-somethings. They eliminated the problem of relying on individuals to provide anecdotal data as related to their downloading habits, something that can lead to less-than-straightforward answers. Rather than coming in with preconceived notions and hastily proving them, they dove into a monstrously large cluster of data and looked for some dots to connect.

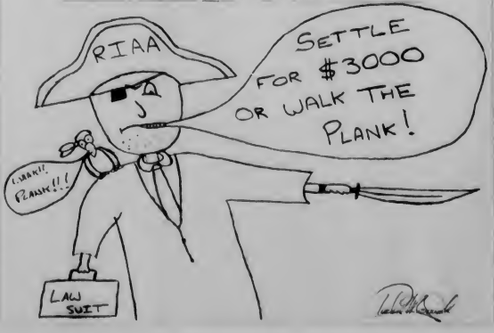
Connect the dots they did – and then some. As a result of their study, Oberholzer and Strumpf emphatically declared that "downloads have an effect on sales which is statistically indistinguishable from zero" and that their findings were "inconsistent with the claims that file sharing is the primary reason for the recent decline in music sales."

"Even in the most pessimistic specification," they state, "$5,000 are needed to displace a single sale." Furthermore, their results led them to believe that "file sharing primarily serves to increase total music consumption." In other words, if you're one of the millions who finds yourself downloading music not to completely replace your purchases, but rather to expand your horizons and discover new music (other than what's being offered by the Billboard charts), take heart. You're onto something.

Oberholzer and Strumpf aren't alone either; numerous other examples of academic studies on the subject are out there. Though few have come to equally comprehensive conclusions, there are some researchers that make claims to the contrary, viewing file sharing as a potential threat to record sales. But do a quick search through an academic database and it's plain to see that the majority of researchers have drawn conclusions that overwhelmingly paint file sharing as, at worst, a nuisance.

These recent findings are significant because they offer a direct antidote to the tactics of the RIAA, which aim to marginalize downloaders and paint them out as being on the fringes of society. There's a reason why they use words like theft and piracy. Thieves and pirates tend not to be nice people. But these aren't black market arms dealers we're talking about here – they're college students.

And while all of this may not offer much comfort to those who open their mailbox tomorrow to find a cheery greeting from the RIAA, it's certainly a start.



THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

SUMMER, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Matthews and Reynolds rock the Mullins

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

April 23, 2007

Although he's never been known as the shy type while on stage, Dave Matthews took extra advantage of the intimate setting Saturday night at the University of Massachusetts Amherst's Mullins Center to share his thoughts on a variety of topics with the crowd.

Matthews and guest, Tim Reynolds, played a mostly acoustic 26-song set to a packed Mullins. The entire venue was open despite the original belief that it was going to be split down the middle - similar to when it hosts theater performances. The show was an opportunity for fans to witness the wide array of talents both Matthews and Reynolds possess.

Recurring themes of Matthews' between-song stories included "dazzling" the crowd with guitar changes, his train ride from Boston and more somber topics such as the War in Iraq.

The pair touched on just about every studio album Matthews and his full-time band, Dave Matthews Band, has released while also featuring tracks from his 2003 solo release, "Some Devil."

They took the stage shortly after 8 p.m. as most of the crowd was still filing in and, with Matthews seated and Reynolds standing to his right, played "Bartender" as the opener. That came as little shock because the song was the opener in 12 of 14 shows they played on tour last month in Europe.

Before getting into his first story, Matthews promptly thanked the crowd for coming out, which is per usual at his shows. Then Matthews informed the crowd that he'd eaten Indian or Thai food for dinner, he couldn't remember which it was, and warned he'd probably burp throughout the concert.

He then played two songs back-to-back, "Dodo" and "Stay or Leave," from "Some Devil." The former is the disc's lead track while the latter is a fan-favorite and the crowd acknowledged it with loud cheers as Matthews played the opening chords.

Love is the theme of many DMB recordings with one of the most popular being Saturday's fourth song, "Crush." It was also the first time in the evening that Reynolds displayed his superb guitar playing. The end of "Crush" is usually a full-band jam, but Reynolds filled the space nicely with a solo using a guitar slide on his left hand to distort the guitar's sound by making it whine.

With the most audible shouting coming from the men in the stands ("We love you Dave," was a favorite), Matthews launched into his feelings on the "man' voice." He said the "fellas" in attendance were just expressing their emotions and told the crowd, "Don't be mad at the fellas," which was met with roaring laughter.

He then explained the next song, "Old Dirt Hill (Bring Beat Back)" -the only song played off DMB's latest album, 2005's "Stand Up" - was about growing up and having to act older.

After playing a nice rendition of "Grace is Gone," the steady stream of "Some Devil" tracks continued with "So Damn Lucky" and "Gravedigger."

Being an interesting character anyway, Matthews was in rare form Saturday, explaining he wasn't himself because he had a fever, though he admittedly hadn't officially taken his temperature yet.

"I have a temperature, don't judge me," he said to widespread laughter just before "So Damn Lucky."

But the concert turned on a serious note before "Gravedigger" when Matthews shared something that was bothering him. It was a story about a wounded soldier in Iraq who was discharged from the military without a pension because it was discovered he had depression problems. Matthews then became visibly angry

See MULLINS on page 8

COLLEGIAN

The Mullins Center is not only home to UMass' division 1 hockey and basketball teams, but the 6,000+ seat arena also plays host to many concerts throughout the year. Dave Matthews and Tim Reynolds played to a packed house this April.

Interview with the 'Insomnic': Attell

By Ryan McAskill
Collegian Staff

October 12, 2006

Comedian Dave Attell, best known for the Comedy Central show "Insomniac" in which he traveled from city to city to seek out late night fun, makes a stop at The Comedy Connection Hukelau in Chicopee, Mass. tomorrow night for two shows starting at 7:30 p.m.

In a phone conversation Wednesday, Attell spoke about his career, drinking, the future of "Insomniac" and his Myspace page.

Ryan McAskill: What drove you to do stand-up?

Dave Attell: When you're a fan of comedy you want to try it. I was a shy kid growing-up and wasn't a performer I just tried it out at open-mic nights to see if it would stick.

RM: Your material has been called blue collar and very adult. How does it relate to college students?

DA: I drink a lot and college people drink so that helps. I mean, college people put Comedy Central on the map because of shows like South Park and The Daily Show, it's just a matter of getting them out to the comedy clubs. In this era of YouTube where you can sit at home with no pants on and watch a guy jump into a bucket of AIDS, it's about getting people out to the clubs. Not so much for me but for the guys that are just starting out.

RM: Speaking of Comedy Central, are we going to see any more "Insomniac with Dave Attell"?

DA: No, that's done.

RM: Was it your decision to stop doing the show or the networks?

DA: Mine. I wanted to keep doing longer specials but they wanted a TV series.

RM: Drinking, sex and smoking are a huge part of your material. Do

See ATTELL on page 8

Student gallery explores love

University art gallery features exhibit on 'What is Love'

By Amanda Mitchell
Collegian Staff

April 20, 2007

Love, the four letter word that means so much to so many people, and yet is almost impossible to eloquently define in words. For centuries, artists have tried to express the complexities behind the nearly indescribable word. Yesterday the University Gallery opened an exhibit displaying a collection of modern artists' attempts to do just that.

On display from yesterday's opening until Jun. 3, the gallery is exhibiting "What is Love?," a mixed-media collection of photographs, paintings, and silk-screens, among others. It is the result of work done throughout the spring semester by curator Julie Thomson and Professor Mario Ontiveros' Art History seminar, "On Love and Loss in Art, History, and Practice."

According to Thomson, who is a graduate student finishing this spring; the theme of the exhibit directly correlates to the discussions that took place in Ontiveros' class. She said readings and discussions also greatly influenced the selection of the individual works included in the exhibit.

"It's not often that the University gets to display work from it's permanent collection because it takes so much time and research to put together," Thomson said. "This was a wonderful opportunity to really put together something great."

The display takes the viewer through several of the underlying concepts present in the emotion of love. Important to the exhibit is the understanding that love encompasses

See LOVE on page 8

Sylvan Snack Bar offers tasty options

By Olga Deshchenko
Collegian Staff

April 27, 2007

As dinner time approaches on a rainy evening, students reluctantly give in to the demanding growls of their stomachs and set out on an unpleasant walk to the Dining Commons. However, the residents of McNamara have the option of avoiding getting wet and still enjoying a tasty meal by simply heading down to the basement of their building. The bright, soft blue hallway leads students to a small, but cozy eatery, The Sylvan Snack Bar.

In the corner next to the tables, a television set is showing "That 70s Show." For those seeking another form of entertainment while eating or waiting for food, a variety of magazines are also available. Like a successful fusion of a kitchen and a comfortable living room, the Sylvan Snack Bar provides a relaxing and pleasant atmosphere for its customers. And as for the food, to call it a "Snack Bar" is almost misleading: the multiplicity of food choices exceeds this eatery's modest name by far.

"We offer a variety of food including cold cut, veggie and breaded chicken subs, pizza bagels, garlic bread, pretzels, wraps, salads, ice cream and quesadillas," said Co-Manager Stephanie Hovagimian. "Although some of our food comes frozen and fully cooked, we prepare everything on site with our microwave, oven, crock pots and quesadilla makers."

Out of the eight student-run food businesses on campus, the Sylvan Snack Bar is the oldest, having opened its doors to customers in 1971. It is a non-profit business that is entirely student managed and operated. The Sylvan Snack Bar and other student-run businesses on campus have consultants, but they do not have co-manager status. The consultants create the budget and help with finance management, according to Hovagimian.

The Sylvan Snack Bar currently employs 12, full-time UMass undergraduate co-managers who find their involvement with the eatery to be worthwhile and rewarding.

"I love being part of a student-run business. It is such a great experience and has helped me better understand what running

See SYLVAN page 8

COLLEGIAN

The Sylvan Snack Bar has the cure for any snack attack, be sure to take a break from the DC and try the Sylvan Snack Bar this fall.

Mixed reaction for Dylan

By Morgan-Ann Rouseau
Collegian Staff

November 17, 2006

On Wednesday night The Mullins Center welcomed a long-awaited performance by folk-rock legend Bob Dylan. The venue was home to a mixed compilation of old and young, both of which were disappointed and enthralled at the experience of Dylan's worn-out yet overwhelming presence.

First there was a performance by the Raconteurs, in which White Stripes front man Jack White led the way with an all-out performance of energy and experimental rock. The audience seemed pleased, but because the crowd was composed of such a diverse age-range their outlandishly heavy performance wasn't entirely embraced.

At around 8 p.m. the lights lowered, and finally the legendary musician, followed by his band, stepped on stage. They started off with "Leopard-Skin Pill-Box Hat." The musicians were adorned in somewhat formal matching attire; two piece suits, broad rimmed top hats and black leather shoes. It was classy on top of classy for Wednesday's show.

Dylan opened on the keyboard, and to the dismay of many, he stayed on it the whole time, never once picking up a guitar. When one thinks of Dylan, a certain timeless image, mostly in the form of a poster, comes to mind - a young man, curly haired and handsome, stands with a guitar in his hands and a harmonica strapped to his torso. Even though his once charming voice has been blown and tattered in the wind, it's a double blow to be denied his first-rate guitar playing.

The band behind him didn't accomplish the feat it seemed determined to do - it didn't drown out Dylan's worn vocals. Although there's no denying that the instrumentalists accompanying him know how to make good music, it's obvious that they can't replace what Dylan's lost. Within the first moments of singing, there was an awkward shift of body weight throughout the venue. This adoring audience had prepared itself for something unsure (and in the realm of "bad"), but for many, what came from his lips was harsher than expected. A silent goodbye to what we yearned for was shared throughout the crowd exactly as Dylan's second song made its greeting.

At least there was the harmonica - although it was secured to the skinny body of a microphone rather than that of Dylan. At times his harmonica playing seemed strained as the usual riffs fell short of what his older recordings have achieved. Still, it was a feature reminiscent of what he's made familiar and distinct to his music, and so it was welcomed by the audience.

The set went on to include songs like, "Tweedle Dee and Tweedle Dum," "Cold Irons Bound," old-time classic "The Lonesome Death of Hattie Carol," and "John Brown." After thirteen songs and before any acknowledgement of the crowd, Dylan stepped off-stage, followed by his band. As holds true with tradition, the crowd clamored with applause and eventually rhythmic stomping in the hopes of enticing the aged icon back to the spot-light. Like any well suited gentlemen, the request was promptly granted.

Dylan and his boys came back with the well-known "Lenny Bruce," after which the overdue self-introduction was delivered, with little more than a "thank you friends" from Mr. Dylan. Luckily they went on to play two more encore songs, and finally ended with the enduring classic, "Like a Rolling Stone."

Unsettlingly, the song's identity took a few moments before it sank in; the once soft roughness of his voice was gone, taking with it any familiarity before reaching the ever-living lyrics, "?About having to be scrounging for your next meal/How does it feel?"

Granted, at this show he wasn't what we remembered or wished to expect. But that doesn't mean the value of his lifework is lost. For some, it's easy to say, "Seeing him now would ruin it for me," and others can't help but ask, "Why is he still doing this if he can no longer do it well?"

In truth it seems a mystery why he keeps on keeping on. But if Dylan decides to put on a performance, fans who've savored his poetic songs over the years know it's impossible not to make your presence known to the man who will forever be a rolling stone.

"Even though his once charming voice has been blown and tattered in the wind, it's a double blow to be denied his first-rate guitar playing."

Read the Collegian all year for the latest concert reviews!
OR
Join our staff and review the best in local music and arts.

New 'Call of Duty' tanks competition

By J.M. Friedman
Collegian Staff

November 11, 2006

According to the television, it's time for the holidays. While nature disagrees, we get 60-degree freebies after Thanksgiving, along with the constant reminder that video game season has entered full swing. The sight of that tiny man with the futuristic machine gun unloading into the giant robot-alien has been commonplace recently. They're out there, and if you know about Wiis and PS3s, not to mention something about an Xbox 360, then that image is probably ingrained in your skull. This December, next generation consoles, meet Generation X.

Last year, the definitive successor to the first-person WWII shooter legacy was Activisions' "Call of Duty 2." This season brings the third installment to the series, complete with marked improvements in aesthetics and minor alterations to the gameplay. If you liked killing scores of Nazis last year, chances are "Call of Duty 3" will once again satisfy.

Infinity Ward, the original developers of the franchise, passed the reigns to Treyarch, in order to get a head start on the fourth Call of Duty. Visually speaking, Treyarch produced nothing short of a masterpiece. The first game in the series to be entirely designed for the Xbox 360's capabilities, cutting-edge eye candy is abundant. Particle effects and dynamic lighting allow rising smoke to mingle with rays of sunshine through holes in a bombed out ceiling. Changing focus between short and long distances in succession produces an uncanny blurring effect, while long blades of grass move independently in the wind. The level of detail in every object is truly remarkable.

Explosions, ricochets, echoes - they all do the graphics justice. Outstanding digital audio definitely adds to the intensity of war. While verbal commands and sound bytes get repetitive, hearing frantic German voices around the bend never gets old.

Adding more vehicles to the single player campaign mode allows for a nice change of pace. Additionally, Treyarch implemented an entirely new physics engine that allows for destructible environments, so that box you're hiding behind may not be there in another 30 seconds. "Branching mission paths" allow for a sense of freedom as the player decides which route is most appropriate to accomplish the task at hand. Despite looking and sounding fantastic, CD3 had more noticeable flaws than CD2. While you can survive grenade blasts mere feet away, jumping over a chair or short wall can be frustratingly problematic. Fellow computer soldiers will endlessly fire at the enemy through a ceiling or wall, and dead bodies at times mysteriously float in space.

CD2 was the most played game on Xbox live last year, and this time around they have made improvements. Class-based game play and larger maximums on team size mean more fun for online players.

"Call of Duty 3" takes place in the weeks following the allied invasion of Normandy, as you participate in American, British, Canadian, and Polish campaigns. The Canadian and Polish campaigns are a nice change of pace, but there is really little emotional investment in the characters as you bounce around from campaign to campaign. Furthermore, all fighting takes place in France and culminates in the liberation of Paris, so there is no major change in scenery as there was in previous installments.

The overriding feel of "Call of Duty 3" is the same as its predecessors. The controls are identical, as is the tactic and style of the single player mode. While there were next-generation steps in aesthetics and minor additions in the gameplay, the fun factor may have taken a step back. With the genre getting flat and overdone, there seems to be a lot of "going through the motions" for the player, while bugs and hiccups offset the brilliance of the graphics and sound. At the end of the day, if you liked "Call of Duty 2," the third one will occupy too much of your time.

UMass Theater Prof. publishes book on history of clothing trends

By Sydney Towne
Collegian Staff

December 4, 2006

On the average college campus, the prevailing attire is ruled more by comfort than by class. It's almost startling to see a skirt after Labor Day, and those present before that first Monday in September can verge on the obscene. Indeed the wardrobes of college students, male and female alike, are a blur of jeans and sweats.

Clothing intended for class, a social life or working out are often differentiated only by the length of ownership, and perhaps the smell. But the casual and gender neutral nature of modern clothing is over 100 years in the making, according to Patricia Campbell Warner, author of the new book "When the Girls Came Out to Play."

As a theater professor at UMass, Warner seems to have found a home for her love of clothing, past and present. Warner teaches primarily about the importance of costuming in giving any play or movie adequate depth, but her depth of knowledge and passion for clothing are expanded from representations of life to reality.

On a recent November afternoon at the University of Massachusetts Amherst campus, Warner agreed to talk about a book she seems deservingly proud of.

"All the thoughts I have been carrying in my head for many, many years are in this book," Warner said.

It is within the theater department that Warner seems to have found a home. It's there she says, "I teach the history of dress" not only to thespians, but to students from all departments and all five colleges. About the clothing of those varied students she said she tries "not to make value judgments." Overall about modern clothes she says, "I love that they are comfortable, that they allow us to do the things we want to do. That's what my book is about."

"When the Girls Came Out to Play" is indeed about the evolution of sportswear from foreign concept to wardrobe staple. A book 20 years in the making, Warner said, "I think the book is a better book because I waited." Detailed within is a complete history of the activities and clothing of women throughout the late 19th and entire 20th centuries."

Warner draws on the technological developments of the Industrial Revolution as an example of how the mass production of clothing, and subsequently the mass marketing of it, made for more streamline looks for both men and women. The Industrial Revolution, she argues, also affected the way the average American's time was spent.

As work began to be confined, the concept of leisure time arose and with it a need for clothing that allowed ease of movement and durability. Beginning with croquet and expanding to skating and tennis, women were gradually allowed to participate in these social activities and, therefore, began to need clothing that was appropriate as well.

Warner's book adds to this analysis a wealth of details about the contributions of women's colleges, World War I, popular magazines and sewing machines. She makes a point to provide interesting details and an unexpectedly generous amount of photos and drawings, adding color to what could have otherwise been merely a textbook chronology of women's clothing.

The ease with which Warner uses female sportswear to explain American culture and vice versa, makes a connection seem obvious. She said, however, that "People take clothes for granted?nothing expresses society and where society is more than the clothing people wear."

Although her contributions can be found in many anthologies on dress and costuming including the "Encyclopedia of Clothing and Fashion," this is her first solo work. Warner explained, "Yes, I've written chapters?but no, it is a very different feeling. It made me feel good to finally get it done." This book, "the one that I published is the one I've lived with for twenty years." She is not, however, without topics for subsequent books.

The first of two planned is about a subject she knows well; clothing and movies. It is the focus of her class "Plays to Movies: Costume Interpretation." She feels the need to explore it more fully because as she said, "I realize that no one ever got it right," and perhaps because her inner critic needs a voice. About costumes in period movies Warner said, "I have a tendency to roll my eyes."

The second appears to embrace an autobiographical side of Warner that this book merely hinted at - clothing of the 1950s. A child of that era she said, "You can't help but remember your own clothes in any way but autobiographical."

When a woman loves and respects fashion as much as the exquisitely accessorized Warner does, it makes sense that any study of modern clothing would have to include her own interactions with it. Personal stories about the embarrassment of mid-century gym clothes pepper "When the Girls Came Out to Play."

The decision to include not only her own, but her peer's opinions of the clothing they were forced to wear, was a delightful one. It added humor and gave the women about whom it was written a voice.

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

UMASS STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
Helping students protect their rights for over 30 years.
Free Legal Advice, Referrals,
Representation & Counseling for UMASS Students
Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes
Student & Worker Rights, Family & Criminal Law
Call 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center
Visit our website:
www.umass.edu/rso/slso
slso@stuaf.umass.edu

SUPERCUTS® every time®
WELCOME NEW STUDENTS

$11.95
ADULT HAIRCUT
(reg. $13.95 or more)
SUPERCUTS®
Coupon valid only at participating locations. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. One coupon per customer. Present coupon prior to payment of services. ©2007 Supercuts, Inc. Printed U.S.A.
Offer expires 09/1/07
Amherst Plaza
181 University Drive, Amherst, MA
(413) 259-1135
Come in and receive a free bottle of Paul Mitchell's Awapuhi shampoo
(while supplies last)

Dave Matthews Band plays intimate show at the Mullins

MULLINS from page 6

when some audience members began shouting during the somber story.

Matthews' mood seemed to change after the story, as he kept going back to it, but it was hard to tell if it was for the worse because he and Reynolds continued the stellar performance for another two hours.

Overall the set was very similar to the Friday night's affair in Boston, but one song did make a surprise appearance in Amherst. "The Stone" was only played one time during DMB's 2006 Summer Tour and, sensing the rarity of hearing it, the crowd erupted when Matthews and Reynolds began playing.

The next few songs included two from his solo release, "Lie in Our Graves" from DMB's most popular album, "Crash," and the unreleased "Sister." Matthews has said at previous shows that "Sister" is about his own sibling, Jane, because she helped him get over writer's block by telling him to just write some lyrics.

It's not the only song dedicated to Matthews' sister. DMB also has one track titled, "The Song that Jane Likes," simply because Jane likes the song.

Matthews then left the stage, giving way to an amazing Reynolds guitar solo entitled, "Stream." The crowd stood and cheered as Reynolds played for nearly 10 minutes with little time to breath. The noise was compounded when he broke in an interpolation of Led Zeppelin's classic, "Kashmir." At the end, Reynolds got down on both knees and bowed to deafening applause from the crowd.

Numerous times throughout the show, Matthews expressed the fact he was honored to share the stage with his good friend. Reynolds and Matthews have known each other since DMB's inception in the early '90s. Since the two haven't toured together since 2003, it was believed there was a falling out of sorts, but the recent Europe tour and this mini U.S. tour have effectively disbanded that notion.

After "Cornbread," the next two songs were met with tremendous approval from the audience and the discussions between featured funny ramblings courtesy of Matthews. Before playing Neil Young's "Down by the River," Matthews said he liked the song because it was "weird."

"It's a gangster song, but it's not, but it is," he said - the song is about a man who shoots his lover.

He then continued his recent trend of playing some cover songs mixed in with his own - seven covers were played by DMB during a two-night stop in Las Vegas in late March - with his version of "The Maker." Matthews described it as a "quiet song" and a "hymn."

The energy brought on by Reynolds' solo returned for the show's stretch run as the crowd really got into old favorites "Jimi Thing," "Don't Drink the Water," "#41" and "Dancing Nancies."

Again Matthews had the crowd in stitches with a story just before "Don't Drink the Water." He shared his views on farting in such public places as the gym. Matthews said it infuriated him when people farted during the rare occasions he works out. He then described his bulldog's flatulence as sounding like "a pack of lions."

Seeing as though "Don't Drink the Water" is a serious song about the taking over of Native American lands by the United States in the 19th century, Matthews said he needed to pause after telling the funny fart story. That proved easier said than done as someone across the arena informed the more than 8,000 in attendance that he just farted.

"If I can smell that all the way down here I will have nothing but admiration for you," Matthews joked.

After leaving the stage briefly, just Matthews returned for the start of the encore. Then for the only time all night he picked up an electric guitar and played a short quiet jam before performing the title track from "Some Devil."

Reynolds returned for "Little Thing," "Where Are You Going" and another old favorite, "Two Step."

The Mullins Center concourse was buzzing after the show with many people expressing nothing but amazement of the show's quality. For those who witnessed a Dave and Tim show for the first time Saturday night, it was definitely something they want to experience again in the future.

Snack shop offers tasty options

SYLVAN from page 6

a business is all about," said Co-Manager Jenna Ranker. "We each have our roles that contribute to the wellness of the Sylvan Snack Bar, such as marketing committee and purchasing committee, and so much more. We have grown as a business and also as friends," she added.

The Sylvan Snack Bar is a favorite amongst many students who regularly step in for a delicious snack or meal. The employees of this student-run business not only try to satisfy their customers' taste buds, but also strive to offer them a fun place to hang out.

"We really value and try to create a friendly, community-based atmosphere at the Snack Bar," said Hovagimian. "We really want the Snack Bar to be a place where our peers can come not only to eat but to see their friends and relax at the end of the day."

The loyal fans of sandwiches and other snacks are gladly rewarded with promotions, such as the Sub Club Card and the soon arriving Frequent Buyer Card. A suggestion box also has its place next to the magazines where customers can leave a note with their thoughts on the Sylvan Snack Bar.

With the wide array of food items available, new customers might find themselves wondering what to try first. Co-Manager Tal Baron said this eatery is most known for its "world-famous" quesadillas.

"They [quesadillas] range in style from cheese, chicken, vegetable, barbeque or buffalo chicken so there is something for everyone," said Baron. "All quesadillas come with sour cream and salsa."

Always looking for ways to improve and expand the available meal options, the Sylvan Snack Bar is adding Pepperoni Pizza and a Meat Lovers' quesadilla to their menu. The Red-Sox themed Green Monster quesadilla, which will include lettuce, cucumbers, green peppers and jalapeños, is sure to be a hit once it finds its place on the menu.

The Sylvan Snack Bar does not just provide great food alternatives to its customers, but also allows a group of full-time undergraduate students to gain valuable experience in the art of running a small business.

"The major thing that sets us aside from other businesses," said Hovagimian, "is that we all have the same status: co-manager. We don't have a boss; instead, we have the dot-star committee which is responsible for holding co-managers accountable for failing to complete certain tasks or for going above and beyond what was expected of him or her," she explained.

Whether students head down to the Sylvan Snack Bar for the funky lighting, the entertaining reading material or the smell of appetizing food, customers are always welcome to hang out, eat or chat.

The Sylvan Snack Bar is open Sunday through Thursday from 7 p.m. to 1 a.m. It offers a YCMP menu and delivers to the Sylvan and North residential areas.

Love gallery opens

LOVE from page 6

loss, as well as relationships outside of exclusive partners. Upon entering the exhibit, one encounters a portrait of Jackie Kennedy at her husband, President John F. Kennedy's, funeral. Snapped by photographer, Elliott Erwitt, the face of Mrs. Kennedy is a simultaneous embodiment of love and anguish. The juxtaposition of emotions caught so clearly in real life sets the stage for the rest of the exhibit.

"Perhaps it's not best to start an installation about love with loss," said Thomson, "but this photograph is just so striking that I felt it would be a good place to start regardless."

In the first grouping of works, the topic of love of a partner is addressed. Photographed couples representing different types of partnerships, such as married and unmarried, proudly stand against the white wall. Next two artists render their own wives, abstracting the dimension of the couple. The viewer sees love between two people and then love from the artists' point of view.

Following the couples, friendships are presented as a different dimension of love. "The love you feel for a friend is much different than the love you would feel for a partner," Thomson said. "But it is still a kind of love."

In this section of the exhibit, the work of George Segal is displayed. In one particular piece that includes a silkscreen record cover, Segal pays tribute to artist Marcel Duchamp. According to a paper written by Thomson that was made available at the exhibit, Segal and Duchamp were acquaintances. Duchamp was also referenced in a piece done by Nam June Paik, suggesting a triangulation between the three men; a friendship in the name of the love of art.

Finally, the last section of the exhibit displays love as an abstract. Included is a photographed portrait of Lauro Morales, taken by Diane Arbus in 1970. Though the man, who is a Mexican dwarf, is alone in the photo, the photographer has entered an intimate space with her subject. The man is relaxed, reclined in a nearly nude position in his hotel room in New York City. The viewer has the feeling of sharing an intimate moment with the subject.

Also featured in this section is a woodcut print done by Wang Hui-Ming, once a professor at UMass. The print is titled "Poems in Wood" and resembles the personals section of a newspaper, while simultaneously consisting of sexually explicit and intimate poems, again suggesting two different views of love.

"What is Love?" takes the viewer through the many stages and definitions of love in the small exhibit room. And, although there are few words present, the representations of love depicted through the lives and eyes of others in the installation come together to form what could possibly be the most comprehensive definition of love available.

Comedian Dave Attell goes one-on-one with the Collegian

ATTELL from page 6

you have any advice for college student on those topics?

DA: Do them in order. Drink, have sex then smoke. Other than that I don't have any advice. I'm not a Dr. Phil type. I learned everything the hard way. Wear a condom and if it feels good, it's broken.

RM: Has a joke ever gotten you into hot water?

DA: Yea. Comics in general are going to do stuff that's inappropriate and politically incorrect. That's comedy.

RM: Every comic seems to have that story of an awful set or a bad night. What's yours?

DA: I have a lot of bad nights. There is a video on my Web site of a guy throwing a bottle at me. Some of them are my fault. I didn't read the room right or shouldn't have pushed that drunk as hard. The verbal conflict is fine. It's when they stand up and there is the moment of "Oh, this could get violent" when things go bad. No one in the audience is rising to help the comic either. They want to see what happens. It's like "Lost," who's in control?

RM: I was poking around your Web site and saw that you have a Myspace page. Do you actually look at it and run it?

DA: I do. I look at and try to respond to all the messages. Sometimes you sit down and realize you just wasted a day. It's good to spread the word and get your name out there but I think it's time we start using Myspace again for what it was originally intended ? hooking up.

RM: You write a column for Stuff magazine now called "Liquid Wisdom"?

DA: Not anymore. I did that for eight months and it was cool. I'm not a writer so this was like writing a college term paper again. Just kept putting it off and putting until the editor would call the day before the deadline and say, "Hey, where's your column?" "Oh, I just have to e-mail it over," then I'd put coffee on and write what ever was on my mind.

RM: You were a writer on Saturday Night Live back in the early '90s. You were relatively green still as a comic back then. What was that like?

DA: I only did it for one year [1993-1994] and I'm glad I did. It showed me a lot about the TV world, like if you get something on the air, for the next week, everyone wants to talk to you, buy you drinks, have sex. If you have nothing on, no one even notices you.

RM: Who makes you laugh?

DA: I like a lot of under-the-radar guys. Also, friends of mine like Ron White and Greg Giraldo. The funniest guy I know is Doug Stanhope. His act is what stand-up should be. Saying really inappropriate things and bringing the room to a very uncomfortable level.

RM: Some of them you have linked to your Web site, and I noticed that the links on it are all comedy except for one. What is The Wounded Warrior Project?

DA: It's a group that arose from veterans of past wars like Vietnam and Korea and they set it up to help soldiers in the military today that come back and have lost a limb or something. Our government helps treat them and helps with rehab, but after that they are basically on their own. Some of these guys don't have support systems. I'm not an expert on the project but I know they provide basic things like clothes. I've done USO shows in Afghanistan, Kuwait and Germany, and any time in Washington I visit the Walter Reed Army Medical Center. I'm not Britney Spears walking in there, but I do what I can. The Wounded Warrior Project is a great thing and everyone should donate to them.

RM: Where do you see yourself in five or 10 years?

DA: Probably in rehab ? no. I'd love to keep doing specials, I have some movie projects coming up and some TV stuff even though I'm not an actor. Most people don't realize that "Insomniac" was a reality show. If it was raining or no one was on the street we had to make things happen. Whatever I'm doing, I ju.. what to be in control.

RM: Anything you want to add to get people out to see you on Friday?

DA: Come out and have a great time and don't drink and drive.

Hey Mom and Dad!

It's important for you to stay informed on whats really going on at your son or daughter's new school.

So the Daily Collegian is making it easier than ever to keep up on UMass news that really matters.

Visit us online at

Dailycollegian.com

everyday.

Looking For Something To Do?

Atkins Farms Has Something For Everyone!

A unique country market nestled in one of the oldest apple orchards in New England. Atkins is just a short drive south from UMass on Route 116. You'll enjoy a unique shopping experience where old time service is an everyday treat. Sample some of New England's favorite foods or pick up a country gift as a keepsake.

Farm Fresh Produce
Country Bakery
Deli & Lunches
Take-Out Food
Specialty Foods
Homemade Fudge

Fresh Meat & Seafood
Ice Cream Shop
Sushi Bar
Full Service Florist
Fruit & Gift Baskets
Gift Department

Attention Parents!! Ask about our Student Special Care Packages

A great idea for parents far away from their busy, hard working, and hungry college student.

Birthday Cakes
Flowers, Balloons
Snack Paks
Get Well Paks
Mix & Match Paks
& many more!

Call for our brochure
(413) 253-9528 or
1-800-594-9537
Local Deliveries
Monday-Saturday

ATKINS FARMS
Country Market
Corner of Route 116 & Bay Road
South Amherst, MA 01002
(413) 253-9528 * www.atkinsfarms.com

"Results you can feel ... without the side effects."

• headaches • neck pain
• back pain • sports injuries
• auto injuries • and more...

Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractor

Participating provider for HMO's student insurance, Blue Cross, GIC, car insurance & most others

www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com

Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health

228 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
(near Bertucci's)
549-1500

NHL bound Quick leads UM

Sophomore goalie Jon Quick has already began his NHL career. Quick is the only goalie in UMass history with a NCAA tournament victory.

HOCKEY from page 12

evidently did not see the puck, shielded by the traffic in front.

"The third goal was definitely a challenge for us to maintain our composure and for us to stay upbeat," senior captain Matt Anderson said. "It was a big momentum shift and it became pretty challenging after that."

But before the rash of penalties began, Maine forward Teddy Purcell had the best scoring chance of the first period early in the frame. Fielding a rebound at the left faceoff circle, the freshman beat Quick, but his shot rang off the left post.

Two UMass penalties around the last five minutes of the period gave the Black Bears their first two-man advantage. Maine had several quality scoring opportunities on the 5-on-3 power play, none better than a one-timer from Purcell towards the end of the first penalty. The freshman secured the puck in the middle of the left faceoff circle and blasted a hard shot that almost beat Quick's outstretched right blocker.

The penalties kept coming in the second period, but both teams finally managed to get on the board. With Jarman and Purcell in the penalty box for matching minors, Maine scored its first goal by taking advantage of the open ice and the spread out UMass defense.

Surviving a scrum in the left corner, forward Josh Soares launched a centering pass to Tyler who was streaking toward the net. Quick made the initial save, but the deflection flipped over his right side and bounced into the net off the shoulder of a UMass defenseman.

Less than five minutes later, sophomore forward Alex Berry went to the penalty box for obstructing a Maine player in the defensive zone. Hamilton flipped the puck on goal from an awkward position to the left side of the net. The shot hit Quick in the head, caroming off the back of his facemask for the score.

The goal appeared to be an attempt by the Maine forward to get the puck on goal and to relieve himself of the pressure of two UMass defenders, while hoping to catch Quick off guard. But it was also the second example in less than five minutes of how in a sport like hockey, a lucky bounce can mean the difference between winning and losing.

The Minutemen needed to score to avoid going into the third down by two goals, especially after squandering a 5-on-3 power play in the middle of the period. The team finally put a puck past Bishop on the man advantage with less than two minutes left in the frame.

Senior forward Kevin Jarman handled the puck by the boards on the right side and passed to Anderson in the high slot. The senior captain briefly held the puck and launched a wrist shot, which slipped past Bishop's left shoulder.

Junior forward P.J. Fenton originally earned credit for the goal since it was difficult to determine if he tipped the puck on its way to the right side of the net.

"Before the period, I thought going in we had some momentum," Anderson said. "But I thought, especially at the end of the second period, we played pretty well."

But Maine's third goal in the early stages of the final period sealed the fate of the Minutemen, as they mustered very little offense during the next 10 minutes. Though the team had several good scoring opportunities during the last two minutes of regulation, in a last ditch effort to get back into the game.

Maine forward David de Kastrozza went to the penalty box for interference in the 19th minute. Cahoon promptly pulled Quick, giving his team a 6-on-4 advantage. The Minutemen moved the puck well during the power play, but could not slip anything passed goaltender Ben Bishop.

Their best look came on a slap-shot from senior forward Chris Capraro near the left faceoff circle. Bishop played the shot perfectly and made an energetic glove save to preserve the lead, a few seconds before time ran out on the Minutemen.

Despite being the apparent underdog as the four seed in region, the Mass Attack played a spectacular defensive game against No. 1 seed Clarkson on Friday. Posting his second career shutout, Quick paced the Minutemen with 33 saves, including 18 in the second period alone.

David Leggio was nearly as spectacular in net for the Golden Knights, turning away 37 total shots – a new school record. But the one shot he failed to stop cost his team the game.

Leggio's perfect play continued until the eighth minute of the overtime period, when he finally succumbed to pressure from the Minutemen's third line.

Forward Will Ortiz attempted to wrap the puck around the left side of the Clarkson net. The freshman lost control of the puck, but it ended up on the off hand of sophomore Jordan Virtue's stick on the edge of the right face-off circle. Virtue put a backhand shot into the chest of Leggio.

The Clarkson goaltender let the puck slip out from underneath his outstretched body, allowing senior forward Kevin Jarman to get his stick on the puck. He flipped the rebound into the upper region of the net before Leggio could react.

In an instant, a singular red light illuminated at the north end of the ice transformed a scoreless, hard-fought hockey game into a celebration for the Minutemen.

Even in a game of minimal scoring, each team had multiple genuine scoring chances in every period. But the deciding goal was one that was neither pretty nor a fluke – it was instead the result of hard work in front of the net.

"It becomes even more simple when the game gets into the late stages," Cahoon said. "And you knew that the last goal scored was either going to be the winning goal in overtime or if it's in regulation – a hard goal to overcome."

Yet the game seemed to follow the pattern of UMass dominating the first, Clarkson controlling play in the second and both teams having equal opportunities in the third and overtime periods.

The Maroon and White opened the game with strong forechecking and puck movement, resulting in a total of 13 shots on net. The Minutemen's best scoring chance came midway through the period. Senior forward Matt Anderson flipped a rebound from the left side of the net over the crossbar, despite beating Leggio.

The Clarkson goaltender let the puck slip out from underneath his outstretched body, allowing senior forward Kevin Jarman to get his stick on the puck. He flipped the rebound into the upper region of the net before Leggio could react.

In an instant, a singular red light illuminated at the north end of the ice transformed a scoreless, hard-fought hockey game into a celebration for the Minutemen.

Even in a game of minimal scoring, each team had multiple genuine scoring chances in every period. But the deciding goal was one that was neither pretty nor a fluke – it was instead the result of hard work in front of the net.

"It becomes even more simple when the game gets into the late stages," Cahoon said. "And you knew that the last goal scored was either going to be the winning goal in overtime or if it's in regulation – a hard goal to overcome."

Yet the game seemed to follow the pattern of UMass dominating the first, Clarkson controlling play in the second and both teams having equal opportunities in the third and overtime periods.

Lowe leads UM to first round NIT win

BASKETBALL from page 12

er and another floater in consecutive possessions.

"We don't go into games planning to have him score 19 points," Ford said on Lowe's performance. "He wasn't looking to score. We get in trouble when Chris is looking to score. Every shot he took tonight was a good shot, it was an open shot."

UMass ended the first half with plenty of momentum, but it was Alabama's Justin Tubbs that got the last laugh. Tubbs answered a Lasme block by knocking down a 3-pointer at the buzzer, cutting UMass' lead down to 41-40 at halftime.

The final few minutes of the first half went in favor of the Minutemen, thanks to Lasme's unwillingness to be stopped under the basket. Lasme scored nine of his 13 first-half points in the final seven minutes.

Back-to-back dunks by UMass' big man with 2:30 left gave the Minutemen a 31-30 lead, which they held onto until five minutes into the second half.

When all the drama was over, the Minutemen looked like a team that isn't just trying to get respect in the NIT, they're trying to win the whole thing.

"We had hopes of going to the NCAA Tournament, but things happen," Lowe said. "We moved on, and now we're in the NIT and we're going to make a run at it."

Wildcats no match for UMass

FOOTBALL from page 12

UMass' sophomore quarterback, Liam Coen, and running back Steve Baylark got the Minutemen rolling in the opening drive.

The Minutemen suffered a scare on the opening kickoff when Courtney Robinson fumbled on the return and E.J. Barthell recovered the ball at the Minutemen's 2-yard line. A false start moved UMass back to the 1-yard line before Coen and Baylark went to work.

Two Baylark rushes on the ensuing downs put UMass in a 3rd-and-7 jam, but Coen bailed his team out with a perfect pass to wideout Brandon London down the left sideline for a 22-yard gain and a first down.

From there, it was smooth sailing, as Baylark – on 2nd-and-5 from his own 30-yard line – turned a run up the middle into a 60-yard breakout play down the right sideline to the New Hampshire 10-yard line. Baylark caught a nine-yard Coen strike and pounded it into the end zone from the 1-yard line on the next play for the first score of the game.

"In the first half we come right down the field and score," Brown said. "I feel real good about our offense and the way we performed. I thought we did a good job of moving the football and creating balance."

Coen finished with 231 yards in the air, two touchdowns and one pick on 19-for-28 throwing.

Santos and the UNH offense put up 17 points in the first half, including a monstrous 87-yard run by Chad Kackert on the Wildcats' first play from scrimmage, tying the game at seven. The drive: one play, 87 yards, 40 seconds.

"As a defensive play-caller, you don't feel too good when [UNH] takes the first one 87 [yards] on you," Brown said. "I wasn't feeling very good at that point because we worked very hard to get off on the right foot on our first drive, and it kind of felt like I let the troops down.

"It's 7-7 and it's like starting the game over again," he added. "So you just start competing again. We were just a little late on the rotation and they executed the play very well."

UMass tight end Ian Jorgensen caught a Coen pass for a touchdown and a 14-7 lead at the 8:56 mark of the second quarter, but the Wildcats picked Coen on UMass' ensuing drive and started their possession at the Minutemen's 39-yard line.

Santos took full advantage and hit Levan in the right corner of the end zone for a touchdown after shedding a few tacklers to tie it up at 14-all. The Wildcats went into halftime with a 17-14 lead after kicker Tom Manning nailed a 41-yarder with no time left, and Brown changed the game plan for the second half.

"The decision at halftime was real simple: We're not letting [Santos] run around anymore," he said. "We're going to get after him. If it works, it works. If it doesn't, so be it."

It worked. The Wildcats didn't score in the second half and the Minutemen, after a late-game scare and Hatchell's dramatic knockdown, won the biggest game on the biggest stage.

"I couldn't be happier for our staff and our players," Brown beamed. "We've talked about having quality in all three phases, and all three phases – offense, defense and kicking – had a hand in this W today. It was just a great opportunity for our guys to play in a game of this magnitude."

Now it's on to Montana and the national semifinals with the biggest game in Division I Football Championship Series just one win away.

19th A-10 title comes to Amherst

SOFTBALL from page 12

Billikens an out. Morin swung away and rolled a ball toward SLU shortstop Brittany Schmidt. The ball took Schmidt deep into the hole before she could gather it. Schmidt held onto the ball as Morin touched first base without a throw. Molinari then tried to accomplish two things at once. With runners on first and second, she looked to move them both over with a bunt. But whenever Molinari lays down a bunt, she's looking for a hit.

She dropped the bunt directly in front of home plate and took off to first. An SLU defender picked up the ball and looked to third, but could do nothing with it. Molinari reached on a fielder's choice and the Minutewomen had the bases loaded for with no outs for Cullington.

Cullington's at-bat provided an array of motion. First there was disgust on Cullington's part. Early in the count, she swung and missed at a Gillette offering. The UMass slugger was visibly annoyed with herself and backed out of the box.

Humor followed disgust. After Cullington let a pitch pass for ball three, she tossed her bat toward the UMass bench and took off for first base. After realizing the count she walked backed to the plate as matter of factly as she could.

Things eventually worked out for the A-10 leader in home runs. The next pitch was an inside fastball and Cullington turned on it. She sent the pitch over the scoreboard just past the left-field fence and with it broke the UMass and A-10 single-season home run record with her 15th of the season.

"I had two strikes already and I wasn't going to let her get it by me again," Cullington said. "[Breaking the record] is awesome. I'm very thrilled to be remembered that way. It's just a relief. I don't need to think about homeruns. I don't have to get asked about it anymore. I'm thrilled to death, but what's more important that we won."

The grand slam gave UMass a 5-1 lead and the Minutewomen weren't done. Junior Lauren Proctor singled up the middle after Cullington's grand slam. Mollica moved her to second with a bunt. Acampora looked to bring Proctor home, but SLU pitcher Lorena Floccari, who replaced Gillette after the grand slam, jammed her, forcing a weak foul pop out to first baseman Appenfeller.

Almost out of the jam, Floccari threw two straight balls to Salato. Salato knew. Floccari had to throw a strike so she sat on the fastball. She got that fastball, just off the plate and lined by the second baseman, the ball hit the ground and took off straight through the right-center field gap to the wall. Proctor scored from second base and the Minutewomen took a 6-1 lead.

"I'm really sure where [the pitch] was," Salato said. "I think it was outside though. I see [Floccari's] ball really well. I had two balls and I was just thinking swing at the first strike. I saw it was outside and went with the pitch."

At inning's end, the Minutewomen led SLU 8-1. Balschmiter allowed two runs in the top of the fourth. The second run came around when Rachel Hoet turned on a pitch from Balschmiter. The ball hit the right-center field wall on the fly missing a home run by inches.

In the fifth inning, the Minutewomen had scary moment. First laced a pitch right back to Balschmiter. The ball struck her, getting a piece of her rib and hand. After she was down for several

EARRINGS • INCENSE • DRESSES • SKIRTS • RUGS
THE MERCANTILE HAS TAPESTRIES!
AND COOL POSTERS!
TheMercantile
Northampton 149 MAIN St. 584-1205
Amherst Carriage Shops 549-1396
Mon-Fri: 10-9 Sat: 10-6 Sun: 12-5
INCENSE • SHIRTS • RUGS • POSTERS • CHOPSTICKS • DOOR MATS
HAIR STICKS
GLOVES
THE MERCANTILE IS FULL OF FUN, AFFORDABLE GIFTS AND CLOTHES FROM AROUND THE WORLD!
INCENSE
EARRINGS
ACTION FIGURES
CANDLES
KISSI STONE
CARVED FIGURES
TheMercantile
Northampton 149 MAIN St. 584-1205
Amherst Carriage Shops 549-1396
Mon-Fri: 10-9 Sat: 10-6 Sun: 12-5

Is DOODLING your thing?

Why not put it to use?

Submit your comics to THE DAILY COLLEGIAN Comix Page and you could be published up to 5 times every week

Free Delivery to UMass Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		1	5					3
		7		6	8		9	4
					2
5		6			7		8
				5
	7		9			3		6
			2
2	5		8	4		1
7					9	8

andiamo

Quote of the Summer

"There's never enough time to do all the nothing you want."

-Calvin from Calvin and Hobbes

A College Girl Named Joe By Aaron Warner

Two Dudes By Aaron Warner

CAN ANYONE BUY ONE OF THESE LITTLE AD'S TO SELL SOMETHING IN THE PAPER?
SURE, DUDE. WHAT ARE YOU SELLING?
MY CAR. THE PARKING PERMITS ARE SO EXPENSIVE, I JUST NEED TO GET RID OF IT.
DUDE, YOU DON'T HAVE A CAR.
SWEET, DUDE. THAT WAS EASIER THAN I THOUGHT!

Welcome to Falling Rock National Park By Jason Shaler

Working at the Park beats me away from the sterile office environment
One summer I worked at an office. A co-worker used to say, "Every day is a little miracle."
It was a miracle I didn't strangle her
I have a way to deal with rage. Watch what I do to those deer.

The Family Monster By Josh Shaler

Most people use their trucks to get groceries and drop off dry cleaning
I have more ambitious plans
Felons, miscreants, ne'er-do-wells: look out!
I'll patrol the streets of this desert town
Me and my truck
You're not lacking purpose
No, but I am lacking a fourth tire

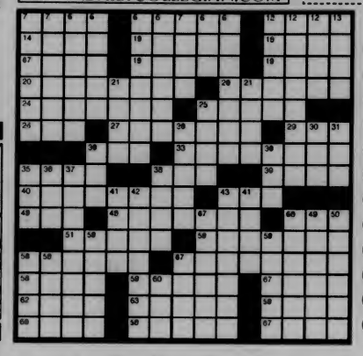
ACROSS
1 New Delhi wraparound
5 Tech fantasy
10 Leap
14 Fruit drinks
15 Lady of the house
16 Gobi's continent
17 Noisy disputes
18 Field of conflict
19 Become dull
20 Vases
22 Chin beard
24 Exposes
25 Cliburn's instrument
26 Nationality suffix
27 Infected patches of skin
29 Letters from the morgue
32 Gentleman
33 ___ sheepdog
35 As soon as
38 Building wing
39 Hear ye!
40 Cousin, e.g.
43 Boston or Chicago wear?
45 Be in the red
46 Left out
48 Baton Rouge sch.
51 Arbor Day month
53 Gradual breaking down
55 Thoroughfare
57 Act of retaliation
58 Egyptian bird
59 Taper off
61 Reason of ___
62 Long, straight and limp
63 Keepsake
64 Lift-off pressure
65 All-out feast
66 Bring to bear
67 Winds up

DOWN
1 "No Exit" dramatist
2 Is mad about
3 Made wool repairs
4 Magazine volume
5 Not as sizable
6 Loving stroke
7 Mid-month date
8 Wind machine
9 Dream up
10 Country with no major rivers
11 National newspaper
12 Distance unit
13 Washed-out
21 Isle near Java
23 Hop-drying kiln
25 Author of "Narabedla"
28 Ocean speck
30 Noon follower
31 Aulise tool
32 Bering or Roes
34 Smoked salmon
35 Spanish gold
36 Unused
37 Forest glade
38 Iniquitous
41 Rushed
42 Copy
43 Snake in the grass
44 Sink
47 Wobble
48 Pay attention
52 Annoying
54 Military blockade
56 Grain depository
58 Slope device
57 Fall cleanup tool
60 Emulate Ali

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is the best source for UMass-Amherst NEWS, OPINIONS, ARTS, SPORTS, and of course our COMICS PAGE!



It doesn't take much effort and it helps everyone out.

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You will meet a lot of new people tonight, but remember none of them.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
People like you for your looks but you can't let them take 'em from you, Never!

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Some say sneezing is really just brain diarrhea.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Don't believe anything anyone who uses big words ever says.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Treat yourself to something expensive. You probably deserve it.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Don't count on getting any work done in the next few days.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You will get a lot of attention for your unique haircut tonight.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
No, no, no, you can't ever be like Alf. It's just so hard because he's not coming back.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You're skills lie in that which you spend the most amount of your time on.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
The stars say you're a hot-headed beef cake. Prove 'em wrong.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You've got big feet. You know what that means. ...Big shoes

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Someone will give you a very cheesy gift today. Act like you like it.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
welcomes all new and incoming readers!
We wish you all an exciting summer and an excellent school year

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS | APARTMENT FOR RENT | EMPLOYMENT | HOUSE FOR RENT | LOST & FOUND | SERVICES

A Collegian classified is a great way to advertise to the 5 College Community. Call us at 545-3500 to place an ad in our paper. Or visit us at www.dailycollegian.com to submit your classified online!

TEXTBOOKS YOUR WAY

PICK UP IN-STORE OR SHIP TO YOUR DOOR!*

Shop the UMASS Bookstore website before you arrive in the fall - www.umass.bkstr.com

- Get access to the largest selection of used books first - used saves up to 25% over the price of new.
- Search for books by course number - not title
- Easy returns in-store if you need to later
- Plus the best selection of UMASS apparel and gifts!

*We cannot ship to campus mailboxes or dormitories.

UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619

Visit us online at www.umass.bkstr.com
efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS

SUMMER, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass defeats rival UNH in playoffs

COLLEGIAN

UMass wide receiver Brandon London stretches for six late in the second half of this playoff game. London signed with the NY Giants as an undrafted free agent shortly after the NFL draft.

UM downs UNH en-route to title game

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

December 4, 2006

The No. 3 Massachusetts football team, amidst an exuberant McGuirk Stadium crowd full of students, children, parents and alumni, won the most important football game on the University of Massachusetts campus in eight years on Saturday.

The Minutemen (12-1) triumphed, 24-17, over the New Hampshire Wildcats, an annual Atlantic 10 challenger and their fiercest rival.

Like in the two teams' last meeting in Durham, N.H., – in which UMass edged the Wildcats, 28-20 – Saturday's game came down to one final play.

UNH, down by a touchdown late in the fourth quarter, had a 4th-and-1 situation on the UMass 6-yard line with less than a minute left. Wildcats quarterback Ricky Santos dropped back, rolled out to his left and tried to float a pass to receiver Keith Levan running an out rout.

But UMass linebacker Jason Hatchell batted the pass down and stuffed the Wildcats with 29 seconds left in regulation to win the game – just like his older brother John did in New Hampshire one month ago.

"That was just a great football game," UMass coach Don Brown said. "I was looking around at the environment prior to the game, and I thought what a great testament to New England college football it was to have two great teams in this type of setting and this type of atmosphere."

The Minutemen dominated UNH in the first half of the teams' first meeting of the year, sending the Wildcats into halftime with a 21-3 deficit. This time around, it was a little different.

See FOOTBALL on page 9

Reversal of fortune

Maine turns the table, ends UMass' season

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

March 26, 2007

ROCHESTER, N.Y. – Although the Frozen Four is not in its immediate future, the Massachusetts hockey team established a new level of success for the program this season. Playing in the NCAA tournament for the first time in school history, the Mass Attack (21-13-5) defeated Clarkson (29-9-5) in the East Regional Semifinal, 1-0.

The team advanced to play Maine (23-14-2), for the fifth time in three weeks, with a trip to St. Louis on the line in the regional final. But the Black Bears enacted sufficient revenge after losing four straight to the Minutemen, winning 3-1.

"Our players certainly left everything on the ice," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "And they should be proud of themselves, how they grew as a program during the year. I congratulate our guys for the type of effort they've put forth throughout the year and making a game of this."

But it was ultimately uncharacteristic play in the form of a lack of offense and penalties that put the Minutemen at a disadvantage. They scored only two goals in the pair of games, a figure well below their season average of 2.89. The Maroon and White also committed eight penalties, allowing Hockey East's best power play to spend 16 minutes on the ice.

"As far as our game was concerned, I though we were a little off," Cahoon said. "We weren't playing quite as organized and playing with as much conviction as we've played with in the recent past."

COLLEGIAN

Rising UMass star Cory Quirk helped lead the Minutemen to the school's first every NCAA tournament appearance this season.

In accordance with its statistical prowess, the Maine special team units dominated the game. Not only did each of the three goals come on some form of special teams play, the Black Bear penalty kill successfully protected the net on all seven situations with a man down, including once with only three skaters.

However, it was a Maine power play in the third period that permanently swung the momentum in its favor. The Minutemen scored in the second period to trim the deficit to one. But the team allowed the lead to double after surrendering a 5-on-3 goal early in the third.

The CCHA-based officiating crew called junior forward Matt Burto for a hook in the defensive zone during the fifth minute. Just 46 seconds later, junior defenseman Mike Kostka joined Burto in the box after being whistled for slashing behind his own net.

Maine spent the first 45 seconds of the power play fluidly passing the puck around the offensive zone, hoping to catch sophomore goaltender Jon Quick out of position. Then defenseman Bret Tyler passed to Matt Duffy on the left side of the high slot. Duffy slapped a one-timer that slipped past Quick's outstretched right blocker. The goaltender

See HOCKEY on page 9

Watch for Lowe tide

Chris Lowe wins it in OT, UMass survives buzzer-beater

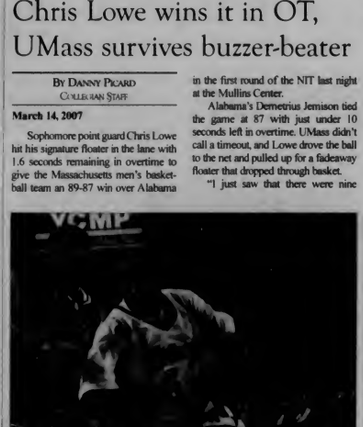
By Danny Picard
Collegian Staff

March 14, 2007

Sophomore point guard Chris Lowe hit his signature floater in the lane with 1.6 seconds remaining in overtime to give the Massachusetts men's basketball team an 89-87 win over Alabama in the first round of the NIT last night at the Mullins Center.

Alabama's Demetrius Jemison tied the game at 87 with just under 10 seconds left in overtime. UMass didn't call a timeout, and Lowe drove the ball to the net and pulled up for a fadeaway floater that dropped through basket.

"I just saw that there were nine seconds on the clock, so I just said, 'I'm going to just take this shot,'" Lowe said after the win.



COLLEGIAN

Chris Lowe was a key member of the first place Minutemen all season, he will be returning next season as a junior.

"That wouldn't have been exactly what I had drawn up," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "But it worked."

Lowe tied his career high of 19 points, but his clutch shot to end Tuesday night's game made the difference.

"UMass made the plays when they needed to make them," ALA coach Mark Gottfried said. "We just came up one play short."

The Minutemen travel to West Virginia to face the No. 1 seeded Mountaineers tomorrow night at 9 p.m. in the second round of the tournament.

It looked as though UMass had the game won in the final seconds of the second half, but Alabama guard Mykal Riley hit a deep 3-pointer at the buzzer to send the game into overtime tied at 83.

"That was just a slugfest," Ford said. "A lot of teams would wilt after seeing a 3-pointer go in like that at home. We thought we had the game, and a lot of teams would just give up, but we learned from our last outing versus Saint Louis."

The Billikens knocked the Minutemen out of the Atlantic 10 Tournament on Thursday in overtime, taking advantage of UMass' mysterious illness and eliminating its hopes at an NCAA Tournament bid.

"When we're healthy, we're not bad," Ford said. "It feels good to be healthy. It wasn't the prettiest game, but we made big defensive plays when we needed it, and we made big offensive plays when we needed it."

Alabama took its largest lead of the game when point guard Brandon Hollinger made a tip-in with 11:37 remaining in the second half. UMass battled back to tie it at 65 with eight minutes left after Lowe made a 3-point-

See BASKETBALL on page 9

COLLEGIAN

The UMass softball team will be going for their 20th A-10 title next spring.

Minutewomen continue to dominate

Maroon and White win 19th A-10 Championship

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

May 14, 2007

When the bottom of the third inning began during Saturday's Atlantic 10 Championship game, the Minutewomen and Saint Louis were deadlocked at 1. When it ended, the game was over.

The tournament host Minutewomen (37-12-1) defeated the Billikens (29-33) 9-3, clinching the program's 19th A-10 Championship and 13th in the last 14 years.

Throughout the tournament, a series of big innings propelled the Maroon and White toward victory. The trend continued on Saturday, a seven-run third inning gave UMass an 8-1 advantage.

SLU added two more in the fourth inning, but couldn't get any closer. UMass sophomore Brandice Balschmiter pitched a scoreless fifth, sixth and seventh to seal her third win of the weekend and the tournament's Most Outstanding Performer award.

Despite earning the distinction, Balschmiter struggled early in the championship game. An error by junior Stacy Cullington on a double steal by the Billikens allowed SLU's Annie Dillinger to score.

Dillinger reached on a fielder's choice after Shana Richard walked to lead the inning off. Allison Appenfeller followed with a groundball up the middle, shortstop Whitney Williams ranged to her left to collect the groundball, but put too much on the flip to second base. The ball sailed over the glove of Cullington and into center field. Senior Candice Molinari backed up the play keeping Appenfeller at first, but Dillinger continued on to third.

On the ensuing pitch, Appenfeller broke for second base. UMass catcher Jessica Serio threw down to second base. Upon Serio's release, Dillinger broke for home plate, but hesitated when Cullington intercepted the throw and headed back to third base. Cullington fired the ball to third to pick Dillinger off, but the throw got by third baseman Whitney Mollica and Dillinger headed home, scoring the day's first run.

Balschmiter struck out two of the next three batters to end the inning and the Billiken threat.

The Minutewomen tied the game in the next half inning. Senior Amanda Acampora ripped a 2-2 fastball to left-center field. The ball hit the top of the fence and Acampora rolled into second with a one-out double. Freshman Jill Andrews pinch ran for Acampora but wasn't on the bases too long. After battling to a full count, sophomore Samantha Salato blooped a pitch over the head of SLU second baseman Christy Ernst scoring Andrews from second to tie the game.

"[Salato] has really come on of late. I think the last couple weeks of the season she was giving us great at-bats," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said.

The pair of Minutewomen who committed the second-inning mistakes found themselves in the middle of the action again in the bottom of the third.

Williams led the inning off with a textbook piece of hitting. After SLU pitcher Stacy Gillette got two strikes on her, she took the 2-2 pitch down the left-field line for a double.

Down one, Sortino typically plays for the tie with a runner in scoring position. But when senior Amanda Morin stepped to the plate following Williams' double, Sortino refused to give the

See SOFTBALL on page 9